THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA ("Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber III, composed of Judges Dennis C. M. Byron, Presiding, Emile Francis Short, and Gberdao Gustave Kam ("Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the "Requête du Procureur pour l'émission d'une ordonnance de transfert de certains témoins détenus" ("Motion"), pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules") filed on 13 December 2005;

CONSIDERING the "Production d'une lettre de la Ministère de la Justice de la République du Rwanda", filed on 17 January 2006 ;

NOTING the resumption of the present trial scheduled on 13 February 2006;

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules as follows:

Introduction

1. The Prosecution requests the Chamber, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules, to order the temporary transfer of Witnesses with the pseudonyms HH, UB and AWB from Rwanda, where they are currently detained, to the United Nations Detention Unit (UNDF) in Arusha, Tanzania, so that they can testify in the present case.

Deliberations

2. Rule 90 bis (A) of the Rules gives the Chamber power to make an order to transfer a detained person to the Detention Unit of the Tribunal if his or her presence has been requested. Rule 90 bis (B) lays out the conditions to be met, as shown by the applicant, before such an order can be made:

(i) The presence of the detained witness is not required for any criminal proceedings in progress in the territory of the requested State during the period the witness is required by the Tribunal;

(ii) Transfer of the witness does not extend the period of his detention as foreseen by the requested State;

3. The Prosecution has exhibited a letter from the Minister of Justice in Rwanda dated 12 January 2006 confirming the availability of Witnesses HH, UB, AWB, to testify during the indicated period of the upcoming trial session, which is from 13 February 2006 to 17 March 2006. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that these witnesses are not required for criminal proceedings in Rwanda during that time and that the witnesses' presence at the Tribunal does not extend the period of their detention in Rwanda.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. ORDERS the Registar, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules, to temporarily transfer Detained Witnesses known by the pseudonyms HH, UB and AWB to the UNDF facility in Arusha, at an appropriate time prior to their scheduled dates to testify. Their return travel to Rwanda should be facilitated as soon as practically possible for each witness after the individual's testimony has ended.

II. REQUESTS the Governments of Rwanda and Tanzania to cooperate with the Registrar in the implementation of this Order.

III. REQUESTS the Registrar to cooperate with the authorities of the Governments of Rwanda and Tanzania; Ensure proper conduct during transfer and during detention of the witnesses at the UNDF; Inform the Chamber of any changes in the conditions of detention determined by the Rwanda authorities and which may affect the length of stay in Arusha.

CONSIDERING the "Dépôt d'information supplémentaire re : Requête du Procureur en vertu de l'article 90 bis du Règlement de procédure et de preuve", filed on 19 January 2006.

NOTING the resumption of the present trial scheduled on 13 February 2006;

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules as follows:

Introduction

1. The Prosecution requests the Chamber, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules, to order the temporary transfer of Witnesses with the pseudonyms ALG, GFA and GBU from Rwanda, where they are currently detained witnesses on provisional release, to the United Nations Detention Unit (UNDF) in Arusha, Tanzania, so that they can testify in the present case.

Deliberations

2. Rule 90 bis (A) of the Rules gives the Chamber power to make an order to transfer a detained person to the Detention Unit of the Tribunal if his or her presence has been requested. Rule 90 bis (B) lays out the conditions to be met, as shown by the applicant, before such an order can be made:

(i) The presence of the detained witness is not required for any criminal proceedings in progress in the territory of the requested State during the period the witness is required by the Tribunal;

(ii) Transfer of the witness does not extend the period of his detention as foreseen by the requested State;

3. The Prosecution has exhibited a letter from the Minister of Justice in Rwanda dated 12 January 2006 confirming the availability of Witnesses ALG, GFA and GBU, to testify during the indicated period of the upcoming trial session, which is from 13 February 2006 to 17 March 2006. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that these witnesses are not required for criminal proceedings in Rwanda during that time and that the witnesses' presence at the Tribunal does not extend the period of their detention in Rwanda.

4. With regards to the Prosecution's information that Witness UB is already in Arusha to testify in another case, the Chamber notes its prior decision in this case which already allowed for the transfer of Witness UB to Arusha.[1] As a result, the Chamber grants the extension requested for Witness UB's to remain in Arusha until the end of the individual's testimony in the present case.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. ORDERS the Registar, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules, to temporarily transfer detained witnesses on provisional release in Rwanda known by the pseudonyms ALG, GFA and GBU to the UNDF facility in Arusha, at an appropriate time prior to their scheduled dates to testify. Their return travel to Rwanda should be facilitated as soon as practically possible for each witness after the individual's testimony has ended.

II. REQUESTS the Governments of Rwanda and Tanzania to cooperate with the Registrar in the implementation of this Order.

III. REQUESTS the Registrar to cooperate with the authorities of the Governments of Rwanda and Tanzania; Ensure proper conduct during transfer and during detention of the witnesses at the UNDF; Inform the Chamber of any changes in the conditions of detention determined by the Rwanda authorities and which may affect the length of stay in Arusha.

Decision on Request for Extension of Time
27 January 2006 (ICTR-98-44-A)

(Original : English)

Appeals Chamber

Judges : Mohamed Shahabuddeen, Presiding Judge ; Mehmet Güney ; Liu Daqun ; Theodor Meron ; Wolfgang Schomburg

Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera – Extension of time, Showing of good cause : Missing of French translations – Motion granted

International Instrument cited :

Rules of Procedure and Evidence, rule 116 (B)

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "International Tribunal", respectively) is seized of the "Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of Decision on Judicial Notice (Rule 73 (C))", filed by the Prosecution on 9 December 2005 ("Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal"). The Appeals Chamber is also presently seized of the "Requête de M. Ngirumpatse aux fins d'extension du délai de réponse sur le 'Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of Decision on Judicial Notice'", filed on 16 December 2005 by the accused Mathieu Ngirumpatse ("Request" and "Accused", respectively).

2. In the Request, the Accused explains that he has not yet received French translations of several documents initially filed in English: the Prosecution's request for judicial notice filed before the Trial Chamber;[1] the responses of his co-accused to the judicial notice request and the Prosecution's reply; the Trial Chamber's Decision on Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice ("Impugned Decision", filed on 9 November 2005); the Prosecution's request for certification of that decision for interlocutory appeal; the responses of his co-accused to the certification request and the Prosecution's reply; the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal; and the response of his co-accused to the Prosecution's

[1] Motion for Judicial Notice of Facts of Common Knowledge and Adjudicated Facts, 30 June 2005.

Interlocutory Appeal. He requests those translations and asks for an extension in the deadline for filing his response to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal.[2]

3. Rule 116 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Tribunal allows for extensions of time upon a showing of good cause, and paragraph (B) of that Rule specifically provides that where

> "the ability of the accused to make full answer and Defence depends on the availability of a decision in an official language other than that in which it was originally issued, that circumstance shall be taken into account as a good cause".

4. Counsel to the Accused operates in French and not in English. It is clear that, in order to be able to make a full answer to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal, he needs access to French translations both of that Appeal itself and of the Impugned Decision from which the Prosecution is appealing. His present lack of access to these translations constitutes good cause for a reasonable delay in filing his response to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal.

5. The Accused has not demonstrated that access to translations of the other documents he requests – namely, the filings of the various parties before the Trial Chamber on the judicial notice and certification issues, as well as his co-accused's filing before the Appeals Chamber – is necessary to enable him to prepare his response to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal, or that lack of access to them otherwise constitutes good cause for a delay in filing his response. The Impugned Decision, as well the Trial Chamber's Certification of Appeal Concerning Judicial Notice ("Certification Decision", filed on 2 December 2005), summarize and decide upon the arguments set forth by the parties in their filings before the Trial Chamber, and provide all the necessary information to enable the Accused to complete his response. For this reason, and because there may be some dispute as to the scope of the certification for interlocutory appeal,[3] the Appeals Chamber will direct the Registry to ensure that the Certification Decision is translated, even though it was not specifically requested by the Accused. As to the filing of his co-accused Mr. Nzirorera on appeal, at least under the present circumstances, in order to prepare his own response it is not necessary for the Accused to review the responses of his co-accused. Ordinarily, those responses would have been due on the same day, and so it cannot be said that either co-accused is entitled to read the response of the other before preparing his own.

6. Although a reasonable extension of time is merited, the Accused has not justified his request for 17 days beyond the filing of the requested translations. Responses to interlocutory appeals are ordinarily due within 10 days of the appeal's filing,[4] so 10 days should be adequate time to enable the Accused to prepare his response after he has the necessary translations. The Appellant argues that he is entitled to a longer delay as compensation for delays to which he should have been entitled in the proceedings before the Trial Chamber, in light of the fact that he did not have the translations he needed at that stage.[5] This argument does not amount to good cause. It is a moot point at this stage whether the Accused should have had access to the translations during the briefing process before the Trial Chamber, and/or whether he should have received extensions of time at that stage. Even if the Trial Chamber had erred in those respects, its error could not be corrected by an extension of time being granted now.

[2] Request, para. 14.

[3] One of the co-accused has requested that some of the Prosecution's arguments on appeal be dismissed for exceeding the scope of the certification. See Joseph Nzirorera's Motion to Dismiss Issues of Interlocutory Appeal for Which Certification Was Not Granted, 13 December 2005.

[4] Practice Direction on Procedure for the Filing of Written Submissions in Appeal Proceedings Before the International Tribunal, part II (2) (applying this time limit in appeals as of right); ibid part III (2) (applying the same time limit in appeals granted by leave of the Appeals Chamber); ibid part I (applying the rules set forth by parts II and III mutatis mutandis in other interlocutory appeals).

[5] Request, para. 14.

7. Counsel to co-accused Édouard Karemera also operate in French, and Mr. Karemera's failure to file a timely response to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal may also be excused on the basis that the defence lacked access to necessary translations. Although Mr. Karemera has not filed a request for an extension of time, it is in the interests of justice to permit him to benefit from the extension being granted to Mr. Ngirumpatse, if he should choose to file a response.

8. For the foregoing reasons, the Request of the Accused is GRANTED in part. The Registry is DIRECTED to provide to the Accused and his co-accused, on an urgent basis, French translations of the Impugned Decision, the Certification Decision, the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal including its annexes, and the present decision. Starting from the date at which the last of these four translated documents is transmitted to the Accused as well as his co-accused Mr. Karemera, they will be permitted 10 days to file their responses to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal.

Order on Filing of Expert Report of Charles Ntampaka Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence 31 January 2006 (ICTR-98-44-T)

(Original : English)

Trial Chamber III

Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera – Extension of time, Expert report no completed – Prosecution ordered to provide the Chamber and the Defence of each of the Accused with a formal statement from Expert Witness

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber III, composed of Judges Dennis C M. Byron, Presiding, Emile Francis Short and Gberdao Gustave Kam (the "Chamber") pursuant to Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

NOTING the "Prosecutor's Notice of Delay in Filing Expert Report of Charles Ntampaka," filed on 19 December 2005 (the "Prosecutor's Notice") and Joseph Nzirorera's "Second Motion to Exclude Testimony of Charles Ntampaka," filed on 20 December 2005 ("Nzirorera's Motion");

NOTING the previous Decisions of this Chamber concerning the disclosure of the Report of Expert Witness Charles Ntampaka, dated 16 May 2005, 9 September 2005 and 12 December 2005, respectively, as well as this Chamber's "Order on Filing of Expert Report of André Guichaoua," dated 15 December 2005.

Introduction

1. On 16 May 2005, the Chamber ordered the Prosecution to disclose the statements of all expert witnesses the Prosecution intended to call to testify to the Chamber, and to the Defence of each of the Accused, by 15 August 2005.[1] In case of default of disclosure, the Prosecutor was ordered to provide the Chamber and the Defence with reasons and to indicate the revised date by which the disclosure would occur.

2. On 9 September 2005, being satisfied with the explanations provided by the Prosecution in its request for more time to fulfill its disclosure obligation; under Rule 94 bis (A) of the Rules, the Chamber granted the Prosecution's application For an extension of time to disclose the Expert Report of Mr. Charles Ntampaka.[2] The revised date – which date was proposed by the Prosecution – was 25 November 2005.

3. In its Decision of 12 December 2005, concerning a Motion by the Prosecution seeking a further extension of time for the disclosure of Mr. Ntampaka's Report, this Chamber extended the deadline for disclosure once more to 19 December 2005.[3] In that Decision, the Chamber also rejected an application, brought by the Defence for Nzirorera, to exclude Mr. Ntampaka's testimony in its entirety as a result of the delay.

4. On 19 December 2005, the Prosecution filed a further Notice of Delay concerning the disclosure of the Expert Report of Charles Ntampaka, seeking an extension of time to 28 February 2005. In its Notice, the reasons given by the Prosecution for Mr. Ntampaka's inability to complete his report within the timeframe stipulated relate to the Witness' competing professional commitments, administrative delays relating to the Witness' negotiation of a contract with the Tribunal, as well as difficulties in communication between the trial team and the Witness. The Prosecutor submits that "a further extension of time is requested until the end of February by which time the Prosecutor has been assured the report will be ready."[4] The Notice does not exhibit any correspondence between the Prosecution and the Witness concerning this issue.

5. As a result of the Prosecution's Notice of Delay, the Defence for Nzirorera filed a Motion to exclude the testimony of Professor Ntampaka in its entirety.

Deliberations

6. The Chamber notes that a significant period of time has lapsed since the date of this Chamber's first order for disclosure of the statement in question – 15 August 2005 – and the disclosure date now proposed by the Prosecutor – 28 February 2006. Further, this is the third request by the Prosecution for an extension of time in relation to the disclosure of the Expert Report of this Witness. Additionally, the Prosecution has made several requests for extensions of time in the deadlines for disclosure of expert witness report; set down by this Chamber. Notably, an application by the Prosecution for an extension of time in the deadline for the disclosure of the report of Expert Witness André Guicahoua is currently pending before this Chamber.

7. The Chamber is not satisfied, in the absence of a statement from the Expert Witness himself, that an extension of time is warranted, or that, if granted, the Witness would be in a position to comply with the order made by the Chamber. The Chamber recalls its Order of 15 December 2005 concerning the Prosecution's request for an extension of time in the deadline for the disclosure of the report of Expert Witness André Guicahoua which required a statement to be provided by the Witness himself, proposing a new deadline. The Chamber considers that a similar course of action is appropriate with respect to the delay in the disclosure of the report of Expert Witness Charles Ntampaka, following which the Chamber will be in a better position to rule on both the Prosecution and Defence Motions.

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules").

Introduction

1. On 16 May 2005, the Chamber ordered the Prosecution to disclose the statements of all expert witnesses the Prosecution intended to call to testify to the Chamber, and to the Defence of each of the Accused, by 15 August 2005.[1] In case of default of disclosure, the Prosecutor was ordered to provide the Chamber and the Defence with reasons and to indicate the revised date by which the disclosure would occur.

2. On 9 September 2005, being satisfied with the explanations provided by the Prosecution in its request for more time to fulfill its disclosure obligations under Rule 94 bis (A) of the Rules, the Chamber granted the Prosecution's application for an extension of time to disclose the Expert Report of Mr. André Guichaoua.[2] The revised date – which date was proposed by the Prosecution – was 25 November 2005.

3. On 8 November 2005, the Chamber granted the Prosecution's application for an extension of time to disclose the Expert Report of Mr. André Guichaoua, in part.[3] On this occasion, the extension of time had been sought on medical grounds. The Chamber, however, noted that the available materials did not disclose the need for an extension of time of the length sought by the Prosecution.[4] Accordingly, the new deadline for disclosure ordered was 12 December 2005.

[3] Prosecutor v. Edouard Karemera et. al, Decision Granting Extension of Time to File Prosecution Expert Report (TC), 8 November 2005.
[4] The Prosecution sought an extension of time to 6 January 2006.

4. On 8 December 2005, the Prosecutor filed a further Notice of Delay in relation to the Expert Report of Professor Guichaoua, requesting additional time to comply with the Chamber's Decision of 8 November 2005.

5. As a result of this application, the Defence for Nzirorera filed a Motion seeking the exclusion of Mr. Guichaoua's testimony on the basis of the further delay.

6. The Chamber was not satisfied, on the basis of the Prosecution's submissions, that a further extension of time should be granted. In that regard, on 15 December 2005, and as a result of the Prosecution's repeated requests for extensions of time in the filing of its expert witness statements under Rule 94 bis (A), the Chamber ordered that further information be provided directly by Expert Witness André Guichaoua in order for the Chamber to rule on both the Prosecution and Defence Motions. The deadline for compliance with the Order was 2 January 2006 (the "first Order"). Further, and in light of the Prosecution's repetitive failures to comply with the Chamber's deadlines, the Chamber ordered that the Prosecution should explain why a warning under Rule 46 of the Rules was not warranted (the "second Order").

7. This Decision, therefore, will address three questions flowing from the Prosecution's Notice of Delay, Nzirorera's Motion and the Chamber's first and second Orders of 15 December 2005. Firstly, should the Chamber now grant the extension of time requested by the Prosecution? If not, then should the Defence Motion to exclude the Witness' testimony in its entirety be granted? Lastly, has the Prosecution succeeded in showing why a warning under Rule 46 of the Rules is not warranted?

Discussion

Extension of Time and Exclusion of Evidence

8. With respect to the Chamber's first Order, the Prosecutor filed three documents dated 3, 4 and 19 January 2006, respectively, annexing email correspondence between the Prosecution and Mr. Guichaoua. Those emails outlined the competing professional obligations the Witness had faced at the end of the 2005 calendar year, as well as health problems he had had, and his obligations to attend a research mission in Africa in late 2005. Mr. Guichaoua also said that there had been some delay caused by the Prosecutor's office dispatching documents to him later than anticipated. Further, the Witness advised of the death of his father in late December 2005 and the impact that it had had on his work schedule. The Witness advised that he would not be able to submit his report until 20 February 2006 and that he expected to be in Arusha from 15 February 2006 for the purposes of testifying in another case before the Tribunal.

9. The Chamber is now satisfied, on the basis of all of the available material, that a further extension of time – to 20 February 2006 – should be granted. The Chamber notes that the Witness has not been able to comply with the deadline previously set forth by the Chamber for a number of reasons, both personal and professional. The Chamber also notes that, but for the Witness' reference to the Prosecution's late dispatch of certain documents, it does not appear that this further delay is attributable to the Prosecution's conduct. Despite this fact, however, the Chamber directs the Prosecution to take all necessary measures to ensure that the Witness is able to complete his Report in enough time for the Prosecution to comply with the Chamber's new order for disclosure.

10. In his separate Motion for the exclusion of Professor Guichaoua's testimony, Nzirorera submitted that, when a party fails to disclose by a date set by the Trial Chamber, the evidence should be excluded unless the Prosecution can show due diligence for its failure to comply with the Trial Chamber's order. This, the Defence submitted, is the standard set by the Appeals Chamber when deciding whether to consider evidence not produced on time pursuant to Rule 115.[5] In the Defence's submission, the Prosecution had failed to meet the standard for reconsideration of the Trial Chamber's

[5] Prosecutor v. Ntagerura et. al., Decision on Prosecution Motion for Admission of Additional Evidence, para. 9.

Decision of 8 November 2005, the only new consideration being that Professor Guichaoua had unilaterally decided not to complete his report on time.

11. It must follow, in light of the Chamber granting the Prosecution's request for a further extension of time, that the application for exclusion of evidence should be rejected. The Chamber also considers that, at this stage in the proceedings, it cannot be said that granting this further extension of time will offend the rights of the Accused guaranteed under Article 20 of the Statute. It must also be noted that the Chamber has the ability to manage the trial to ensure that a delay in disclosure will not manifest in unfairness to the Accused. If, when the Witness is called to testify, the Chamber is of the view that the Accused has still not had enough time to prepare or investigate and that this has resulted in unfairness to the Accused, it will then be open to the Chamber to consider exclusion of the Witness' evidence. It is clear that the exclusion of evidence is at the extreme end of a scale of measures available to the Chamber in addressing delay in disclosure. Consequently, the application for exclusion, at this stage in the proceedings, must be rejected.

Order to Show Cause

12. In response to the Chamber's second Order, the Prosecutor submits that no warning should be issued under Rule 46 (A). The Prosecutor contends that delays in filing expert reports are not wholly within his control and that his past submissions concerning deadlines and delays were made on the basis of the best available information at the time, and in good faith. He further submits that the delays were not deliberate or negligent and do not reflect a lack of respect for the authority of the Trial Chamber.

13. Rule 46 (A) of the Rules provides that a Chamber may, after a warning, impose sanctions against a Counsel if, in its opinion, his conduct remains offensive or abusive or obstructs the proceedings, or is otherwise contrary to the interests of justice. The Chamber is satisfied on the basis of the Prosecution's submissions and the available material that sufficient cause has been shown as to why a warning should not, at this stage, be administered under Rule 46 (A). In particular, the Chamber has had regard to the Prosecutor's submission that previous deadlines sought by the Prosecutor have been sought on the basis of the material available to him at the time and that his previous applications for extensions of time have been made in good faith. Whilst the Chamber also notes the reasons advanced by the Witness for the delay in finalising his report, the Chamber wishes to make clear to both the Prosecution and the Witness that any further request for an extension of time will be met with the utmost disapproval. In this regard, the Chamber directs the Prosecutor to take concrete steps to ensure that the Witness complies with his undertaking to submit the report by 28 February 2006. To this end, the Chamber is also of the view that a copy of this Decision should be served upon the Witness.

FOR THOSE REASONS

THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS the Prosecution's Motion for an extension of time in relation to the disclosure of the statement of Expert Witness André Guichaoua;

II. ORDERS:

a. That the said statement be disclosed to the Defence of each of the Accused and to the Chamber by 28 February 2006; and

b. That the Registry serve a copy of this Decision upon Expert Witness André Guichaoua as soon as practicable; and

Introduction

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. The second trial session is scheduled to begin on 13 February 2006 with the continuation of the Prosecution's case. Trial Chamber III is seized of Joseph Nzirorera's Motion for Issuance of Subpoena to Witness T[1], the Prosecutor's Response[2] and Nzirorera's Reply brief[3]. Witness T is listed as a Prosecution witness who has been granted special protective measures by the Chamber.[4] Counsel for Joseph Nzirorera wishes to have an interview with Witness T prior to his appearance for testimony, but Witness T has refused to meet him. As a result, Joseph Nzirorera filed this Motion requesting the Chamber to issue a subpoena to Witness T for such an interview.

Discussion

2. Nzirorera claims that the requested interview with Witness T will allow him to properly prepare his case because he expects to elicit testimony from Witness T concerning a large number of speeches and interviews broadcast on the radio during the events in Rwanda in April-July 1994. Nzirorera argues that the meeting will allow him to sufficiently prepare for an effective cross-examination, which facilitates the equality of arms, and will alleviate unnecessary consumption of trial time. He also wishes to go beyond the scope of cross-examination to learn of information that Witness T may have regarding additional speeches and public statements not already on the record or in Witness T's statements. As such, he believes that a subpoena should be granted. To support his Motion, Nzirorera relies on the Appeals Chamber decision in the Halilovic case.[5] The Prosecution opposes the Motion.

3. The Appeals Chamber has stated that witnesses to a crime are neither the property of the Prosecution or the Defence, such that both sides have an equal opportunity to interview them. If the witness refuses to grant a request for an interview, either party may apply to the Chamber for appropriate relief pursuant to Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence;[6] which provides a Judge or a Trial Chamber with the power to issue a subpoena "for the purposes of an investigation or for the preparation or conduct of the trial." This includes the authority to > "require a prospective witness to attend at a nominated place and time in order to be interviewed by the Defence where that attendance is necessary for the preparation or conduct of the trial"[7]

so that ultimately the trial is informed and fair.[8]

4. Subpoenas are not to be issued lightly and must therefore satisfy, several requirements.[9] The requesting party must first demonstrate that it has made reasonable attempts to obtain the voluntary cooperation of the witness and of other third parties who may be involved; that the witness' expected testimony is necessary and appropriate for the conduct of the proceedings; and that the prospective witness can materially assist its case.[10] Further considerations for the issuance of a subpoena include the reasonable likelihood that an order would produce the degree of cooperation needed for the Defence to interview the witness, and that the purpose of the interview goes beyond the scope of cross-examination.[11] Finally, as the Appeals Chamber stated in the Halilovic case, the use of subpoenas as a judicial power to compel must be balanced with the need to serve the overall interests of the criminal process.[12]

5. The Chamber notes that Nzirorera has attempted to obtain Witness T's cooperation through the appropriate channels, and that both parties agree on the importance of Witness T's testimony in this case. However, the Chamber is of the view that Nzirorera has not adequately demonstrated that such a meeting will materially assist this case, and the Chamber does not find that such a meeting is necessary and appropriate for the conduct of the proceedings. The Chamber observes that Witness T met voluntarily with Counsel for Nzirorera on two occasions before he agreed to testify for the Prosecution. The Chamber expects that such meetings would have provided sufficient opportunity to gather any information necessary to materially assist his case. Furthermore, lengthy witness statements and documents concerning Witness T have already been disclosed and the witness has already testified in other trials before this Tribunal.

7. Consequently, having evaluated the particular circumstances of the case, the Chamber is of the view that the overall interests of the criminal process would not be served by an order issuing a subpoena for Nzirorera to meet with Witness T.

Decision on Prosecution Motion Seeking Extension of Time to File Applications Under Rule 92 bis
Rule 92 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence

Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera – Extension of time requested by the Prosecutor to file its application for admission of written statements in lieu of oral testimony, Potential effect of the Prosecutor' applications on the number of witnesses to be heard orally by the Chamber, Fact that the applications for admission of rape evidence in the form of written statements should have been filed does not banned the Prosecutor from requesting the admission of rape victim evidence in written form, Interests of justice – Motion denied

International Instrument cited :

Rules of Procedure and Evidence, rule 92 bis

Introduction

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. At an earlier stage, the Prosecution submitted a list of 216 witnesses and informed the Chamber that it will apply to have the testimonies of some of its witnesses supporting the rape charge admitted into evidence by sworn statements in lieu of oral testimony.[1] On 13 December 2005, the Chamber granted the Prosecution leave to remove 51 witnesses and to add Witness ADE to its witness list. In the same Decision, the Prosecution was ordered to file, no later than 10 January 2006, its arguments regarding the admission of the evidence of the rape witnesses in the form of a written statement in lieu of oral testimony, and to indicate which Prosecution witnesses could be removed as a result of the addition of Witness ADE's testimony.

2. The Prosecution now seeks an extension of time of the Chamber's deadline of 10 January 2006 for filing arguments concerning the admission of evidence of rape in written form, until there has been substantial evidence of rapes received by oral testimony.[2] The Defence for Nzirorera and for Ngirumpatse oppose the application.[3] Further, in an Interoffice-Memorandum dated 20 December 2005, the Prosecution states that it cannot indicate which Prosecution witnesses could be removed from the list as a result of the addition of Witness ADE and that it will only be in a position to do so after the witness has testified. The Chamber will now address these two issues.

Discussion

The Filing of Submissions under Rule 92 bis of the Rules

3. The Prosecution contends that it cannot rely on witness statements to anticipate the quality and reliability of the evidence to be given by the witnesses supporting the rape charge. Consequently, the selection process to determine which witness statements will be offered in written form can only be done after assessing the quantity and quality of evidence adduced orally before the Chamber. The Prosecution claims that the preparation of the defence will not be affected by the extension of time sought because the rape witnesses or victims are not anticipated to testify orally until late 2006. In its reply: the Prosecution presents a list of 21 out of 93 rape witnesses that it intends to call to testify.

4. The Defence for Nzirorera claims that since the Prosecution disobeyed the Chamber's Order by not making the required submission in time, it has waived its right to seek admission of the rape witness evidence pursuant to Rule 92 bis of the Rules.

5. When denying the Defence Motion seeking reduction of the number of Prosecution witnesses, the Chamber explicitly took into consideration the Prosecution's submission that the evidence of 86 of the 93 proposed witnesses to be heard on the charge of rape might be admitted in the form of a written statement in lieu of oral testimony in accordance with Rule 92 bis of the Rules.[4] Whereas the Chamber concluded that the Defence motion seeking reduction of the number of Prosecution witnesses was therefore premature, it considered that the Prosecution should file its motions under Rule 92 bis as soon as possible within a reasonable time-limit. In that ruling, the Chamber had already rejected the idea that such a date should follow a substantial record of evidence given orally in court. At this stage of the proceedings, the Prosecution must know its case and therefore he able to file its application for admission of written statements pursuant to Rule 92 bis of the Rules.

6. In addition, it must he noted that the Chamber has not prejudged the outcome of the Prosecution application for admission in the form of written statements in lieu of oral testimony. Since the witnesses in respect of whom the Prosecution seeks to file an application under Rule 92 bis must be listed on the Prosecution witness list: the filing of these applications could have an effect on the number of witnesses to be heard orally by the Chamber.

7. Due to these particular circumstances of the case, the Chamber reiterates that the applications for admission of rape evidence in the form of written statements should have been filed by 10 January 2006, as ordered. The Chamber nevertheless does not consider that the Prosecution is now barred from seeking the admission of rape victim evidence in written form. Such a conclusion would be contrary to the interests of justice.

8. While there is no doubt that the Prosecution should comply forthwith with the Decision of 13 December 2006, the Chamber is aware that the preparation and filing of these motions will require few days. For these reasons, the Chamber will exceptionally grant a brief extension of time to allow the Prosecution to comply with the Chamber's Order.

The Indication of Witnesses that Could Be Removed From the Prosecution Witness List

9. In its Decision of 13 December 2005, the Chamber concluded that the rights of the Accused will not be prejudiced by the addition of Witness ADE and that it was is in the interests of justice to add this witness to the witness list. As suggested by the Prosecution, the Chamber ordered that the Prosecution should notify the Chamber and the Defence which Prosecution witnesses could be removed from its witness list as a result of Witness ADE's testimony.

10. The Chamber is of the view that an indication by the Prosecution of the witnesses that could be removed from the witness list is not premature at this stage of the proceedings. Again, the Prosecution is expected to know its case before it goes to trial and therefore should now be in a position to comply with the Chamber's Order of 16 December 2005.

FOR THOSE REASONS THE CHAMBER

Introduction

1. The trial in this case commenced on 19 September 2005. During the testimony of Prosecution Witness Ahmed Mbonyunkiza at the first trial session, the Accused Joseph Nzirorera sought to obtain a statement of this witness made to the Rwandan judicial authorities. During the same session, the Prosecution was requested to submit proof of its best efforts made to obtain the Rwandan judicial records of another Prosecution witness, Witness HH, scheduled to be heard during the second trial session starting on 13 February 2006. Despite the efforts made by the Prosecution,[1] these documents were not obtained from the Rwandan authorities. As a result, the Chamber is now seized of "Joseph Nzirorera's Motion for Order for Production of Documents by the Governments of Rwanda and for Cooperation and for Consequential Orders",[2] the Prosecutor's Response[3] and Joseph Nzirorera's Reply Brief.[4] In his Motion, Joseph Nzirorera seeks the Chamber to order the Government of Rwanda to produce documents relating not only to Prosecution Witnesses Ahmed Mbonyunkiza and HH but also to other Prosecution witnesses. In addition, he moves the Chamber to postpone the testimony of all the witnesses listed in Annex 1 of his Motion until the reception of the documents sought.

2. The Defence Counsel for Mathieu Ngirumpatse has also seized the Chamber with a Motion entitled "Requête aux fins de communication des procédures rwandaises contre les témoins HH, ALG, UB et AWB".[5] It has requested the postponement of the testimony of Witnesses HH, ALG, UB, and AWB until the disclosure of their Rwandan judicial records, judgements and other pertinent documents.

Discussion

Request for Cooperation of the Rwandan Authorities

3. Joseph Nzirorera seeks the Chamber to issue, pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute of the Tribunal ("Statute") and Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules"), an Order directing the Government of Rwanda to provide copies of the following documents pertaining to each of the Prosecution witnesses listed in Annex 1 to the Motion:

(A) All statements taken or received by the Rwandan authorities from the listed persons

(B) All documents containing any charges filed against the listed persons and judgement rendered

(C) All information from witnesses or victims which accuse the listed persons of crimes relating to events in 1994.

4. The Defence has attached a confidential Annex 1 to its Reply Brief, listing thirty seven Prosecution witnesses' names and pseudonyms in the current case believed to have been prosecuted in Rwanda and for whom judicial documents are missing. On the list, the names of six witnesses are not indicated. The Defence moves the Chamber to order the Prosecution to provide the identity of the six witnesses to the Rwandan authorities to enable them comply with the Chamber's Order.

5. Joseph Nzirorera submits that the Chamber should make an Order under Article 28 of the Statute to oblige the Rwandan authorities to disclose the required material encompassing for all of the Prosecution witnesses who lived in Rwanda after 1994 in order to avoid multiple Article 28 Orders and the disruption of trial sessions.

6. The Prosecution states that it is not in possession of a list of witnesses who made statements before the Rwandan authorities. It claims that all of its witnesses who have been prosecuted in Rwanda are known and it has requested their judicial records from the Rwanda authorities. The Prosecution contends that Joseph Nzirorera failed to first seek the assistance of the Rwandan Government through cooperative means.[6] In addition, the Prosecution asserts that the Defence Motion lacks specificity.

7. Article 28 (2) (c) of the Statute prescribes that States shall comply without undue delay with any request for cooperation issued by a Trial Chamber for the service of documents. Any request for production of documents, under Article 28 of the Statute, must (i) identify as far as possible the documents or information to which the application relates; (ii) set out succinctly the reasons why such documents are deemed relevant to the trial; and (iii) explain the steps taken by the applicant to secure the State's assistance.[7] Further, it must be noted that the Trial Chambers of this Tribunal have concluded that disclosure of judicial records is not merely for the benefit of the preparation of the Defence but it is also required to assist the Chambers in their assessments of witnesses' credibility pursuant to Rule 90 (G) of the Rules.[8]

8. In the present case, the Chamber is of the view, that among all of the documents requested by the Defence, only the statements taken or received by the Rwandan authorities from the listed Prosecution witnesses and judgements rendered against them have been sufficiently defined. The Chamber is of the view that the list of Prosecution witnesses attached to Joseph Nzirorera's Motion sufficiently identifies those witnesses whose material is sought. However, the Prosecution should provide to the Rwanda authorities the names of the six witnesses, for whom only pseudonyms were given. The Chamber is of the view that the statements taken or received by the Rwandan authorities from the listed persons and the judgments sought are necessary and relevant for a fair determination of the credibility of the witnesses concerned. The Chamber also finds that Joseph Nzirorera, by the letters addressed to Office of the Prosecution and the Special Representative of Rwandan Government, and the meetings held with the latter, has demonstrated that he has taken all reasonable efforts to obtain the judicial records requested. However, with regard to the documents containing charges filed against the listed persons and information from witnesses or victims which accuse the listed Prosecution witnesses of crimes relating to events in 1994, the Chamber finds that the material requested is not adequately precise for a request of cooperation of the Rwandan authorities.

9. Consequently, the Chamber finds that the Defence has met the requirements of Article 28 of the Statute regarding all statements taken or received by the Rwandan authorities and the judgements rendered against the listed persons.

10.The names of the six protected witnesses whose pseudonyms are AWE, BDW, BDX, BGD, BIS, and BIT should be provided to the Rwandan authorities. In addition, since the Witnesses HH, UB, ALG, AWB, GFA, and GBU are going to be called during the next trial session, the cooperation of the said authorities is necessary in the earliest possible time.

Consequential orders

11. Joseph Nzirorera requests the Chamber to delay the testimony of Witness HH who is scheduled to testify in the next trial session. Joseph Nzirorera recalls that Witness HH acknowledged making false statements by lying to the Prosecution investigators in 1998. He affirms that Witness HH judicial records should contain false statements. The Prosecution acknowledges that Witness HH's prior statements were either incomplete or untruthful but opposes any request for postponement.

12. Joseph Nzirorera is also asking the Chamber to postpone the testimony of the witnesses listed on Annex 1 until the disclosure of all the required Rwandan judicial records to enable him to prepare his defence adequately. Mathieu Ngirumpatse also requests the Chamber to postpone the testimony of Witnesses HH, ALG, UB, and AWB to enable him to prepare the cross-examination of the witnesses.

13. The Chamber is of the view that the overall interest of the proceedings in this case would not be served by an order delaying the testimonies of some Prosecution witnesses scheduled to testify during the next trial session before the Chamber, even if their judicial records are not disclosed before they testify. They can be recalled at a later stage of the proceedings, if necessary.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS in part "Joseph Nzirorera's Motion for Order for Production of Documents by the Government of Rwanda and for Consequential Orders" and Mathieu Ngirumpatse "Requête aux fins de communication des procédures rwandaises contre les témoins HH, ALG, UB et AWB";

III. REQUESTS the cooperation of the Government of Rwanda to provide the Registry with:

(A) All statements taken or received by the Rwandan authorities from the persons whose names are specified in the confidential Annex to the present Decision and the six names specified by the Prosecution; and

(B) All judgements rendered against the listed persons.

IV. ORDERS the Registry to redact the names, addresses, locations and other identifying information as may appear in Witnesses AWE, BDW, BDX, BGD, BIS, and BIT statements or other material disclosed in accordance with Paragraph 11 of the Chamber's Order on Protective Measures for Prosecution witnesses of 10 December 2004;

V. REQUESTS the Government of Rwanda to provide the Registry with all statements taken or received by the Rwandan authorities from Witnesses HH, UB, ALG, AWB, GFA, and GBU no later than 6 March 2006;

VII. DIRECTS the Registrar to serve this request for cooperation, including the Confidential Annex, on the relevant authorities of the Government of Rwanda;

VIII. DENIES the remainder of the Motions in their entirety.

Introduction

1. On 16 May 2005, this Chamber ordered the Prosecution to disclose the statement of Prosecution Witness Charles Ntampaka to the Defence of each of the Accused by 15 August 2005.[1] In response to requests for extensions of that deadline by the Prosecution on two occasions, the Chamber extended the deadline twice: the first extension being to 25 November 2005,[2] and the further extension being to 19 December 2005.[3]

2. On 19 December 2005, the Prosecution filed a Motion[4] seeking a further extension of time concerning the disclosure of Mr. Ntampaka's Report, as a result of which the Defence for Nzirorera filed a Motion[5] seeking the exclusion of the witness' evidence in its entirety. The Prosecution advanced reasons for the further request in its Motion, but the Chamber was not satisfied on the basis of the material before it that an extension of time should be granted or that the witness would be in a position to comply with any order made by the Chamber, if it was granted. Accordingly, it ordered Mr. Ntampaka himself to provide a statement, advancing reasons for the further delay and proposing a deadline by which he would be able to submit his Report.[6] The Chamber stated that it would rule on both the Prosecution and Defence Motions once its Order had been complied with.

3. On 7 February 2006, the Prosecutor filed a document in compliance with the Chamber's Order of 31 January 2006,[7] annexing correspondence between the Prosecutor and Mr. Ntampaka, which proposed a filing deadline of 20 March 2006 for the filing of the Report. The Prosecutor had also filed a document concerning Mr. Ntampaka's Report on 31 January 2006,[8] simultaneously with the filing of the Chamber's Order of that same date. As a result of these filings, the Defence for Ngirumpatse filed a Mémoire[9] agreeing to the ordering of a new deadline of 20 March 2006, but seeking certain other declarations from the Chamber.

Discussion

4. Pursuant to Rule 94 bis of the Rules, "the full statement of any expert witness called by a party shall be disclosed to the opposing party as early as possible".[10] Previously, on the basis of material placed before it, this Chamber has made determinations as to what was the earliest possible date by which the Prosecution could disclose Mr. Ntampaka's Report, and has then ordered accordingly. The Prosecution has not been able to comply with the previous Orders made by the Chamber. The Chamber now considers whether, on the basis of the new material before it, a new deadline should be ordered as to the earliest date possible by which Mr. Ntampaka's Report can now be disclosed.

5. The Chamber has carefully reviewed the correspondence from the expert witness submitted by the Prosecutor. In general, the filings disclose the fact that the witness must consult the Prosecution's archives in Arusha prior to being able to finalise his report. To that end, travel dates on which Mr. Ntampaka will come to Arusha have been proposed, as have been the dates on which the witness and the Prosecutor will meet to discuss the final form the Report should take. Most importantly, the witness himself proposes the dates during which he will be able to consult the Prosecution's archives – between 28 February 2006 and 12 March 2006 – following which, he advises, he will be able to file the Report on 20 March 2006.

6. The Chamber is now satisfied, on the basis of the constraints communicated by the witness and the Prosecution and the deadline self-imposed by Mr. Ntampaka, that a further extension of time – to 20 March 2006 – is warranted.

7. In the light of the Chamber granting the application for a further extension of time, the Chamber considers that Nzirorera's application to exclude Mr. Ntampaka's testimony in its entirety should be rejected. Ngirupmpatse did not join Nzirorera in making such an application. The Chamber notes that, at this stage in the proceedings, it cannot be said that granting this further extension of time will infringe the rights of the Accused guaranteed under Article 20 of the Statute. Furthermore, the Chamber has the ongoing ability to manage the trial to ensure that a delay in disclosure will not manifest in unfairness to the Accused. If, when the witness is called to testify, the Chamber is of the view that the Accused has still not had enough time to prepare for the cross-examination of Mr. Ntampaka, or to investigate in order to challenge the matters contained in his Report, and that this has resulted in unfairness to the Accused, it will then be open to the Chamber to consider exclusion of the witness' evidence. It is clear that the exclusion of evidence is at the extreme end of a scale of measures available to the Chamber in addressing delay in disclosure.

8. Finally, the Chamber wishes to make clear to both the Prosecution and the witness that any further request for extension of time will be met with the Chamber's utmost disapproval. It also directs the Prosecution to take concrete steps to ensure that Mr. Ntampaka complies with his own undertaking to submit his Report by 20 March 2006. To this end, the Chamber is of the view that a copy of this Decision should be served upon the witness.

Introduction

1. The first trial session in this case was held from 19 September to 28 October 2005, with the Prosecution calling Witnesses G and GFJ. Prosecution Witness T was initially scheduled to be called during that first trial session but was not actually heard.

2. On 23 February 2005, the Chamber requested a State[1] to provide its assistance so that all the parties in the current proceedings could be served, as soon as possible, with the following documents pertaining to Witness T:[2]

> (i) copies of all documents on the investigation and prosecution of this Witness which contain a description of the charges being investigated or lodged against this Witness or any facts upon which those charges are based ; and
> (ii) copies of any statement made by this Witness before the judicial or law enforcement authorities of the State.

3. In early September 2005, the Prosecutor made an independent request for the abovementioned documents under his power to seek assistance of State authorities in the collection of evidence.[3] Having obtained these documents, the Prosecution made two applications, one filed inter partes and the other one filed ex parte, moving the Chamber to allow partial disclosure of the documents under Rule 66 (C) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules").[4] Both the Defence for Nzirorera and Ngirumpatse opposed the applications and requested immediate disclosure of all the material received from the State.[5]

4. On 12 October 2005, as a result of an additional communication made by the authorities of the State, the Prosecution requested the Chamber to permit redacted disclosure of a statement of Witness T taken on 29 September 2005, but served in edited form on the Defence on 7 October 2005.[6] The Defence for each Accused opposed the Motion and requested to obtain an un-redacted version of that statement.[7]

5. In a separate Motion, the Defence for Nzirorera moved the Chamber, pursuant to Rule 7 bis of the Rules, to request the President of the Tribunal to report the failure of the State to cooperate with the Tribunal following the Decision of 23 February 2005 to the United Nations Security Council.[8] The Prosecution responded that this Motion was moot since the requested file was disclosed by the State to the Prosecution and an application was made for disclosure in part under Rule 66 (C) of the Rules.[9]

6. On 14 October 2005, the Chamber considered that the Prosecution Motions under Rule 66 (C) of the Rules concerned the authorities of the State and that these authorities may also be able to provide important assistance to the chamber.[10] These authorities were therefore invited to make submissions on the Prosecution Motions under Rule 66 (C)[11] and on the Defence application to report the State to the Security Council.[12] These submissions were filed on 3 December 2005.

7. The Chamber is now in a position to deal with the Defence Motion to report to the United Nations Security Council, and the submissions regarding disclosure in part of documents related to Witness T.

Deliberations

Request to Report the State to the United Nations Security Council

8. In its Motion, the Defence for Nzirorera claims that the State has failed to comply with the Decision of 23 February 2005 requesting its cooperation to provide certain documents relating to Witness T to the parties in this case. It is submitted that the authorities provided the requested material to the Prosecution but not to the Defence which the Prosecution now applies to be only partially disclosed pursuant to Rule 66 (C). Accordingly, the Defence requests the President of the Tribunal to report this failure to the United Nations Security Council.

9. The Prosecution explains that, during the course of a mission in Europe, it found out that the authorities of the State had serious concerns regarding the disclosure of the material sought, including the fact that Witness T's Counsel strongly objected to any disclosure in a letter dated 15 September 2005. Consequently, the Prosecution offered the authorities of the State the opportunity to deliver Witness T's judicial record in its entirety to the Chamber and to request the Chamber to make a fair determination regarding its disclosure pursuant to Rule 66 (C) of the Rules. The Prosecution was of the view that such action would expedite the proceedings and address concerns expressed by the State regarding public disclosure of the material.

10. In their submissions, the authorities of the State emphasize its obligation and willingness to cooperate with the Tribunal. The State, however, explained that full disclosure of Witness T's judicial records would be contrary to the applicable domestic law and would also infringe on Witness T's right to a fair trial as he is currently in judicial proceeding before the State. Full disclosure of the material to the Defence could prejudice the security of certain witnesses specifically identified in the documents. The authorities of the State express the view that the suggestion made by the Prosecution in its applications under Rule 66 (C) for partial disclosure of Witness T's judicial records will satisfy both its obligation to cooperate with the Tribunal and to protect its own security interests. They conclude that due to, among other things, security reasons, the documents contained in Witness T's judicial record can only be partially disclosed to the Defence.

11. Rule 7 bis of the Rules provides that

> "where a Trial Chamber or a Judge is satisfied that a State has failed to comply with an obligation under Article 28 of the Statute relating to any proceedings before that Chamber or Judge, the Chamber or Judge may request the President to report the matter to the Security Council".

A State is, however; permitted to rely on exceptional circumstances, including security interests, to be relieved of its obligation to cooperate with the Tribunal.[13]

[11] Prosecution Motions under Rule 66 (C) for material within the Dossier of a certain State to be reviewed in camera by the Trial Chamber and ruled not diselosable, filed inter partes and ex parte an 26 September 2005; and Prosecution Motion to Permit the Redacted Disclosure of the Statement of Witness T taken by the authorities of a State on 29 September 2005, and served in edited form on the Defence on 7 October 2005, filed ex parte on 12 October 2005.

[12] Motion to Report Government of a certain State to United Nations Security Council filed on 20 September 2005.

12. In the present case, it is clear that the authorities of the State had difficulties, including security reasons, to comply with the Decision of 23 February 2005 and was of the view that their position could be represented to the Chamber via another organ of the Tribunal, the Prosecutor's Office. The Chamber also finds that, in its applications, the Prosecution fairly represented the State's concerns and did not intend to frustrate the disclosure of the material. This procedure is not the most appropriate one to comply with an Order to cooperate with the Tribunal. However, the Chamber is of the view that, in these particular circumstances, the authorities have not failed to comply with their obligations under Article 28 of the Statute. The Defence Motion to report the State to the United Nations Security Council falls therefore to be rejected.

13. The Chamber has now to determine whether the disclosure in part, as proposed by the Prosecution and supported by the State, can be granted.

Request for Partial Disclosure

14. The Prosecution has divided the material into three sets of CDS : (1) (CD 1) Material that can be disclosed and was effectively disclosed in redacted form to the Defence on 26 September 2005, containing contents of statements of Witness T to judicial police officers of the State; (2) (CD 2) Material to be reviewed under Rule 66 (C); and (3) (CD 3) Interna1 legal correspondence and bills for the investigation. The Prosecution moves the Chamber to order that the material contained in CD2, which is divided into 4 sub-sets of CDS (CD2A, 2B, 2C and 2D), is not subject to disclosure until the trial of Witness T is completed. It is submitted that full disclosure of the material contained in CD2 could violate Witness T's right to fair trial. The Prosecution contends that the material contained in CD3 is classified as internal documents falling within the ambit of Rule 70 of the Rules, and is not subject to disclosure.

15. In a third Motion, the Prosecution moves the Chamber to permit redacted disclosure of Witness T's statement taken by the authorities of the State on 29 September 2005, and served in edited form on the Defence on 7 October 2005. It claims that un-redacted disclosure of this statement may prejudice the fair trial of Witness T,

16. The Defence for Nzirorera argues that all the material in the Prosecution's possession should be disclosed forthwith to allow it to complete its investigation before Witness T testifies. Should the Chamber determine the need for an in camera inspection, the Defence submits that the Chamber could nevertheless order the disclosure of exculpatory material under Rule 68 (A) of the Rules. Alternatively, if the Chamber concludes that any of the material should be withheld until after the trial of Witness T is completed, the Defence requests that the testimony of Witness T be delayed until his tria1 in the State is concluded and the objection to disclosure has become moot.

17. The Defence for Ngirumpatse claims that the Prosecution abusively intercepted the documents and has withheld them, prejudicing its ability to cross-examine Prosecution witnesses. It requests that the Chamber deny the Motion, order the Prosecution to disclose all of the documents and adjourn the hearing of the Prosecution witnesses for 60 days, allowing the Defence to examine the documents. In the alternative, the Defence requests the Chamber to postpone the testimony of Witness T and of other Prosecution witnesses, in particular Witnesses G, ALG, UB and GFJ until after the trial of Witness T and complete disclosure by the Prosecution, or exclude their testimony altogether,

18. Rules 66 (C) and 68 (D) of the Rules provide for an exception to the Prosecution disclosure obligations under Sub-Rules 66 (A), (B) and 68 (A) if the disclosure "may prejudice further or ongoing investigations, or for any other reason may be contrary to the public interests or affect the security interests of any State", Rule 70 (B) of the Rules provides that

"if the Prosecutor is in possession of information which has been provided to him on a confidential basis and which has been used solely for the purpose of generating new evidence, that initial information and its origin shall not be disclosed by the Prosecutor without the consent of the person or entity providing the initial information and shall in any event not be given in evidence without prior disclosure to the accused".

19. After reviewing the documents sought for non-disclosure, the Chamber is particularly concerned that Witness T receives a fair trial. The Chamber is persuaded that it must balance the rights of the Accused with those of Witness T to receive fair trials in their respective criminal proceedings.

20. The Chamber finds that there is likelihood that some of the documents contained in CD2 A, B, C and D if disclosed to the Defence before Witness T's trial, may violate that right and therefore be contrary to the public interests. In the present case, the Accused has already received substantial disclosure regarding Witness T's testimony and has access to other relief with regard to the documents contained in CD2 at a later stage in these proceedings. The Chamber is therefore of the view that the documents contained in CD2 should not be subject to disclosure at this stage.

21. The Chamber however adopts the Prosecution's suggestion, agreed to by the authorities of the State that some statements made by Witness T contained in CD2B may be disclosed now in a redacted form and will not affect the public interests. Under these circumstances, disclosure of these statements, in a redacted form, should be made

22. In addition, the Chamber needs further information before deciding whether disclosure of Witness T's immigration files contained in CD2D could be ordered. In that regard, the Chamber has already requested the cooperation of the State in a separate Order and will reserve its ruling on that matter.[14]

23. The Chamber notes that all of the documents contained in CD3, except for one report, concern Witness T's criminal proceedings in the State The report is also contained in CD2A, which may be disclosed at a later stage. The other documents in CD3 were provided to the Prosecution by the authorities of the State on a confidential basis and therefore should not be disclosed without the consent of the State in accordance with Rule 70 (B) of the Rules. It must be further noted that these documents are not likely relevant to the preparation of the Defence in this case.

24. In order to preserve the right of Witness T to a fair trial and the public interests, the Chamber is also of the view that the Prosecution is permitted to maintain the redaction of Witness T's statement taken on 29 September 2005, served on the Defence on 7 October 2005.

Delay or Exclusion of Witness Testimony

25. The Chamber notes that following the latest information provided by the Prosecution,[15] Witness T will not be called to testify during the second trial session which started on 13 February 2006 as originally planned. The testimony bas not yet been rescheduled. In light of these particular circumstances, neither the exclusion nor the postponement of Witness T's testimony is warranted. The Chamber extends this reason to the request to exclude the testimony of certain Prosecution witnesses, in particular Witnesses G, ALG, UB and GFJ. Exclusion of evidence is at the extreme end of a scale of measures available to the Chamber in addressing any prejudice to the rights of the Accused. The Defence has not show, at this stage, the existence of any prejudice that would justify such an extreme remedy.

26. In response to Ngirumpatse's request to postpone the testimony of certain witnesses, the Chamber reminds the Defence that it has already denied the postponement of Witness G and Witness GFJ's testimony who were heard during the first trial session in September 2005. The Chamber is of the view that the right of the Defence to cross-examine the Prosecution witnesses will not be impaired if material is withheld from the Defence pursuant to this Decision. In addition, the Chamber has already specified that, if the need arises, witnesses could be recalled to testify on significant matters that arise in the course of the proceedings. At this stage, the interests of the justice would not be served by an order delaying the testimonies of some Prosecution witnesses.

27. Finally, it must be noted that in their submissions of 3 December 2005, the authorities of the State note that Witness T's Counsel agreed that his letter dated 15 September 2005 explaining his opposition to the full disclosure of Witness T's judicial records, could be disclosed to the parties in the instant case.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. DENIES Joseph Nzirorera's Motion to Report the Government of a certain State to the United Nations Security Council;

II. DENIES the Defence requests for exclusion or postponement of the testimony of Witness T or of any other Prosecution witnesses;

III. GRANTS in part the Prosecution Motions;

IV. ORDERS that the documents pertaining to Witness T, contained in CD 2 annexed to the Second Prosecution Motion, should not be disclosed at this stage;

V. ORDERS that the documents pertaining to Witness T's judicial records, contained in CD 3, should not be disclosed without the consent of the State, except the report, which is also contained in CD2A, which could be disclosed after Witness T's trial;

VI. RESERVES its ruling with respect to the Witness T's immigration files;

VII. AUTHORIZES the Prosecution to maintain the redaction of Witness T's statement taken on 29 September 2005, served in edited form on the Defence on 7 October 2005;

VIII. REQUESTS the Registry to disclose to the Defence the letter dated 15 September 2005 written by Counsel for Witness T,[16] annexed to the Prosecution Motion under Rule 66 (C) for material within the Dossier of a certain State to be reviewed in camera by the Trial Chamber and ruled not disclosable, filed ex parte on 26 September 2005. Introduction

1. On 15 February 2006, the Chamber denied the Defence's request to report the Government of a certain State to United Nations Security Council[1] and granted in part the related Prosecution Motions Under Rule 66 (C).

2. On 20 February 2006, Joseph Nzirorera and Mathieu Ngirumpatse filed motions for certification to appeal the Decision.[2] The Prosecution opposes both motions.[3]

Decision on Defence Motion to report Government of a Certain state to UNSC and on prosecution Motions Under Rule 66 (C) of the Rules)", filed on 20 February 2006 (...).

Discussion

3. Relying on a Bagosora Decision, Joseph Nzirorera contends that Trial Chamber I granted the certification to appeal its Decision on whether the Prosecution could have access to immigration records of Defence witnesses for impeachment purposes.[4] He submits that the same situation applies in the present case and the resolution of this issue by the Appeals Chamber will allow him to obtain the material in time for his use in cross-examining Witness T.

4. Joseph Nzirorera is of the view that the Chamber should also verify whether the requesting party has shown that the appeal could succeed, in addition to the clear standard required for certification.[5] According to him, the Chamber made some errors of law in the impugned Decision. The Chamber held that security concerns are a valid ground for a State not to comply with Article 28 of the Statute. Referring to the Blaskic case, he submits that the State must comply and could request protective measures to protect its national security interests.[6]

5. Joseph Nzirorera stresses that the Government of the State never filed any objection to the disclosure of the material requested. The Chamber erred in relying on an unofficial letter from a Prosecutor as the position of the Government of the State.

6. Moreover, Joseph Nzirorera submits that in the Chamber's ruling of 23 February 2005 following a Defence motion pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute, it was affirmed that the Prosecutor's request to use Rule 66 (C) was of no interest to him and inadmissible.[7] The Prosecutor got the same material from the State Prosecutor and applied the same Rule 66 (C) to withhold some documents. The Chamber erred in allowing an unlawful interference by the Prosecutor with the Article 28 procedure.

7. In addition, he claims that the Chamber valued the fair trial rights of Witness T over the rights of Joseph Nzirorera and those of his Co-accused.

8. According to Joseph Nzirorera, the Chamber could have ordered the disclosure of the documents with some protective measures, including an order forbidding the Defence to contact the witnesses revealed by the disclosure. Alternatively, the Chamber could have postponed the testimony of Witness T until the completion of his trial.

9. Mathieu Ngirumpatse argues that while the Chamber found that the Prosecution did not comply with its obligation, it refused to apply the consequence of its analysis but rather dismissed the Defence motions. The Prosecution's non-compliance with its obligations under Rule 66 (A) (ii) is systematic and tends to be strategic. Mathieu Ngirumpatse contends that the Chamber is creating a culture of impunity in favour of the Prosecution while penalizing the Defence. The Defence rights cannot be freely and fully exercised if the material is not disclosed in its entirety 60 days before the testimony of a witness, thereby affecting the fair and expeditions conduct of the proceedings. Moreover, the immediate resolution of this issue will allow the Chamber and the parties to hear the Prosecution witnesses in accordance with the rights of the Defence to cross-examine them with full knowledge of the case.

[7] Karemera et al., Décision relative à la requête de Joseph Nzirorera aux fins d'obtenir la coopération du Gouvernement d'un certain Etat (TC), 23 février 2005, para. 6.

10. The Prosecution is of the view that that both applications do not meet al1 the requirements of Rule 73 (B) and therefore have to be dismissed.

11. Rule 73 (B) provides that Decisions rendered under Rule 73 motions are without interlocutory appeal, except on the Chamber's discretion for very limited circumstances provided for in that Rule. Certification to appeal may be granted if both conditions stipulated by Rule 73 (B) are satisfied: the applicant must show (i) how the impugned Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect a fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and (ii) that an "immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings".

12. Having reviewed the applicants' Motions, the Chamber considers that the Defence has failed to show how the Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect a fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial. The Chamber recalls that the respect of the rights of the Defence to cross-examine the Prosecution witnesses and the rights of the Accused to a fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings were considered in the impugned Decision of 15 February 2006. In this regard, it was specified that Prosecution witnesses could be recalled to testify at a later stage of the proceedings, if necessary.[8]

13. The Chamber also takes the view that the Defence did not prove that an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber of the issue will materially advance the proceedings.

14. Moreover, Joseph Nzirorera referred to some errors of law as a ground for certification to appeal a Chamber's Decision without showing how such an argument meets the conditions set out by Rule 73 (B) of the Rules. The Chamber notes that allegations of errors of law are not relevant in considering a motion on certification to appeal.[9]

15. The Chamber concludes that the conditions under Rule 73 (B) have not been satisfied and is therefore unable to grant certification to appeal the Impugned Decision.

FOR THE ABOVE MENTIONED REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Defence Motions on certification to appeal.

Decision on Requests for Disclosure of Witness T's Immigration Records
Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence
17 March 2006 (ICTR-98-44-T)

(Original : English)

Trial Chamber III

Judges : Dennis C. M. Byron, Presiding Judge ; Emile Francis Short ; Gberdao Gustave Kam

Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera – Prosecutor seeking to be relieved of its disclosure obligation, No objection of the judicial authorities of the relevant States to disclose Witness' immigration records – Motion partially granted

International Instrument cited :

Rules of Procedure and Evidence, rules 54 and 66 (C)

Introduction

1. Following a Defence application for orders to compel the Prosecution to disclose material relating to the testimony of Witness T, the Chamber requested a certain State[1] ("First State") to assist by providing documentation in its possession concerning the witness. In September 2005, the Prosecution received information from the First State, which included material from the witness' immigration files in another State[2] (the "Second State"). On 13 February 2006, the Chamber made an Order requesting the authorities of the First State to provide additional information specifically related to Witness T's immigration file.

2. On 15 February 2006, in its "Decision on Defence Motion to Report Government of a Certain State to United Nations Security Council and on Prosecution Motions under Rule 66 (C) of the Rules", the Chamber reserved its ruling on the question of whether the Prosecution must disclose Witness T's immigration records to the Defence, until it had received a response to its Decision of 13 February 2006 from the First State. The Chamber received the said Response on 13 March 2006.[3]

Discussion

3. The basis for the Prosecution seeking to be relieved of its obligation to disclose the records entirely or in redacted form under Rule 66 (C) of the Rules was that it would prejudice ongoing investigations or that it was contrary to the public interest of the First and Second States.

4. The Chamber notes from the Response of 13 March 2006 that the judicial authorities of the relevant States do not have any objection to the disclosure of Witness T's immigration records to the Parties, on the condition that the names of the witnesses mentioned in statement number 20041224 be redacted. Further, the Chamber has reviewed the immigration documents in question and does not find that the information contained in these documents would prejudice any ongoing investigation. Therefore, the Prosecution's argument is no longer applicable.

5. Finally, the Chamber notes that Joseph Nzirorera sought the same relief in his Confidential Motion to obtain the material from the Second State.[4] That Motion is now moot and is dismissed.

For the above mentioned reasons, the Chamber

I.C.T.Y. : Appeals Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Dario Kordić and Mario Čerkez, Decision on Request of the Republic of Croatia for Review of a Binding Order, 9 September 1999 (IT-95-14/1)

Introduction

1. The Defence has complained that, despite repeated efforts, certain documents have not yet been obtained from the Rwandan government pertaining to Prosecution witnesses. On 13 February 2006, the Chamber rendered its "Decision on Motions for Order for Production of Documents by the Government of Rwanda and for Consequential Orders" in which it granted in part the Defence Motions for the material requested which was sufficiently defined.

2. On 20 February 2006, Joseph Nzirorera and Mathieu Ngirumpatse filed motions for certification to appeal the said Decision on the issue of the material that the Chamber decided was not sufficiently defined.[1] The Prosecution opposes both motions.[2]

Discussion

3. Joseph Nzirorera seeks a certification to appeal the issue discussed in paragraph 8 of the impugned Decision which held that:

> "with regard to the documents containing charges filed against the listed persons and information from witnesses or victims which accuse the listed Prosecution witnesses of crimes relating to events in 1994, the Chamber finds that the material requested is not adequately precise for a request of cooperation of the Rwandan authorities".

4. Joseph Nzirorera argues that this denial of disclosure of charges will deprive the Defence of important information which can be used in its cross-examination of Prosecution witnesses to challenge their credibility.

5. Moreover, Joseph Nzirorera submits that the Chamber should also verify whether or not the requesting party has shown that the appeal could succeed.[3] He also argues that the Chamber made an error of law in determining that the documents sought did not meet the specificity required by the Appeals Chamber for Article 28, being whether the requested State can sufficiently identify the documents to disclose them to the requesting party.[4] He claims that the charging documents and statements of witnesses and victims are part of the dossier of the Prosecution witness whose prior statements were ordered to be disclosed by the Chamber and can be easily identified by the Rwandan authorities.

6. Mathieu Ngirumpatse argues that while the Chamber found that the Prosecution did not comply with its obligation, it refused to apply the consequence of its analysis but rather dismissed the Defence motions. The Prosecution's non-compliance with its obligations under Rule 66 (A) (ii) is systematic and tends to be strategic. Mathieu Ngirumpatse contends that the Chamber is creating a culture of impunity in favour of the Prosecution while penalizing the Defence. The Defence rights cannot be freely and fully exercised if the material is not disclosed in its entirety 60 days before the testimony of a witness, thereby affecting the fair and expeditions conduct of the proceedings. It claims that the immediate resolution of this issue will allow the Chamber and the parties to hear the Prosecution witnesses in accordance with the rights of the Defence to cross-examine them with full knowledge of the case.

7. The Prosecution contends that both applications do not meet all the requirements of Rule 73 (B).

8. Rule 73 (B) provides that Decisions rendered under Rule 73 motions are without interlocutory appeal, except on the Chamber's discretion for very limited circumstances provided for in that Rule. Certification to appeal may be granted if both conditions stipulated by Rule 73 (B) are satisfied: the applicant must show (i) how the impugned Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect a fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and (ii) that an "immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings". The Chamber considers that the two conditions set out above are cumulative and an applicant needs to satisfy both of them in order for the Chamber to exercise its discretion in favour of certification.

9. The Chamber recalls that the right of the accused to a fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings have been taken into account in the Impugned Decision of 13 February 2006. It was specified that, if need arises, Prosecution witnesses could be recalled to testify at a later stage of the proceedings.[5] The Chamber notes that the Defence counsels have failed to show how the Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect a fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings. In addition, it considers that the first requirement of the disjunctive first condition for certification to appeal having not been satisfied, there is no need to consider the alternative requirement i.e. whether the issue will affect the outcome of the trial.

10. Mathieu Ngirumpatse contends that the immediate resolution of this issue will prevent all disclosure problems and the renewal of Defence motions due to the violations of its rights without obtaining any sanction. It will also allow sanctioning efficiently these violations to prevent their repetition. In addition, the Chamber and the parties will hear the Prosecution witnesses in accordance with the rights of the Defence and the Accused to cross-examine them with a full knowledge of the case. Mathieu Ngirumpatse also argues that the remedy the Chamber always proposes consists in giving the opportunity to recall a witness for further cross-examination, if it becomes necessary. The immediate resolution of this issue may clarify such interpretation of the Rules.

11. The Chamber endorses the Tribunal's finding that disclosure of judicial records is not merely for the benefit of the preparation of the Defence but it is also required to assist the Trial Chambers in their assessments of witnesses' credibility pursuant to Rule 90 (G) of the Rules.[6] The Chamber has found in the Impugned Decision that > "the overall interest of the proceedings in this case would not be served by an order delaying the testimonies of some Prosecution witnesses scheduled to testify during the next trial session before the Chamber, even if their judicial records are not disclosed before they testify. They can be recalled at a later stage of the proceedings, if necessary".[7]

Consequently, Mathieu Ngirumpatse did show how an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber of the issue will materially advance the proceedings.

12. Moreover, Joseph Nzirorera refers to an error of law as a ground for certification to appeal the impugned Decision without showing how such an argumentation meets the requirements set out by

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized of the "Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of the Trial Chamber's Decision Given Orally on 16 February 2006 Regarding the Role of the Electronic Disclosure Suite in Discharging the Prosecution's Disclosure Obligations", filed on 6 March 2006 ("Appeal"). The Appeals Chamber is also presently seized of a request for an extension of time to reply to the Appeal pending the translation of the Prosecution's submissions into French, filed by Mathieu Ngirumpatse ("Motion for Extension of Time").[1]

2. Rule 116 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal allows for extensions of time upon a showing of good cause. As the Appeals Chamber has observed, counsel for Mr. Ngirumpatse work in French and not in English.[2] It is clear that, in order to be able to make a full answer to the Appeal, he needs access to French translations of the Appeal itself. The Appeals Chamber has recently determined in similar circumstances in this case that this constitutes good cause.[3] Although the Prosecution objects to Mr. Ngirumpatse's request,[4] the joint nature of the trial and the breadth of the Appeal necessitate the granting of a reasonable delay to allow for translation for his benefit.

3. For the foregoing reasons, the Motion for Extension of Time is GRANTED. The Registry is DIRECTED to provide to Mr. Ngirumpatse and his counsel, on an urgent basis, French translations of the Appeal and the present decision. Starting from the date on which the last of these translated documents is transmitted, Mr. Ngirumpatse will be permitted 10 days to file his response, if any, to the Appeal.

Introduction

1 The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. On 13 December 2005, the Chamber granted leave to add Witness ADE to the Prosecution witness list, but ordered the Prosecution to notify, no later than 10 January 2006, the Chamber and all the Accused which witnesses could be removed as a result of Witness ADE's testimony.

2. After that, the Prosecution submitted that it could not indicate which Prosecution witnesses could be removed from the list as a result of the addition of Witness ADE and that it would only be in a position to do so after the witness has testified.[1] On 12 January 2005, the Defence for Nzirorera filed a motion seeking the exclusion of the testimony of Witness ADE.

3. On 10 February 2006, considering the Prosecution's argument that it was premature to provide such information, the Chamber ruled that the Prosecution is expected to know its case before it goes to trial and should therefore be in a position to comply with the Chamber's Order of 16 December 2005.[2]

4. On 20 February 2006, the Prosecution filed confidential and to the attention of the Chamber only, a list of the witnesses which could be removed from the Prosecution's witness list as a result of Witness ADE's testimony.[3] As a result, the Defence for Ngirumpatse claims that the Prosecution has not complied with the Chamber's order and therefore that Witness ADE's testimony should be excluded.[4] Since Joseph Nzirorera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and the Prosecution's filing are interrelated, the Chamber will now consider them altogether.

Discussion

5. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes that it will consider Mathieu Ngirumpatse's Motion dated 27 February 2005, but filed on 28 February 2005.

6. The Defence for Nzirorera submits that the Chamber's order of 13 December 2005 was a condition precedent for Witness ADE to testify and since that condition was not fulfilled on 10 January 2006, Witness ADE's testimony should be excluded. The Defence for Ngirumpatse submits that the Prosecution's ex parte filing of 20 February 2006 is contrary to the Chamber's prior Orders of 13 December 2005 and 10 February 2006 and to Rule 73 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. It further argues that the Prosecution's witness list is an essential document and that the ex parte communication is tantamount to refusing to give a final witness list after over six months after the trial has started. The Defence for Ngirumpatse requests the Chamber to (1) find that the Prosecution has not complied with its requirement to inform the Chamber and the Defence which witnesses could be removed as a result of adding Witness ADE to the list; (2) find that the Prosecution did not comply with the Chamber's order of 10 February 2006; (3) retract, pursuant to Rule 54, its authorization to add Witness ADE to the witness list as a consequence.

7. To its filing of 20 February 2006, the Prosecution attached ex parte a list of seven witnesses that could be removed as a result of Witness ADE testimony. It claims three reasons for this filing only with the Chamber. First, in the Prosecution's view, the Defence may not prepare for evidence of these witnesses prior to ADE's testimony. There could be therefore delays in receiving their evidence if the Prosecution should decide to call them. Second, the Prosecution claims that the disclosure to the Defence of the witnesses that could be removed forces the Prosecution to reveal its strategy of which witnesses will be heard as a result of lack of confidence in ADE's testimony. Finally, in the Prosecution's view, if these witnesses find out that they may not be called for this reason, they might refuse to cooperate because of the characterization of their testimony. The Prosecution feels that despite court orders, this information travels quickly to witnesses and their reaction to these circumstances may have strong negative implications.

8. As a general rule, applications must be filed inter partes.[5] Such a rule finds its expression in the general principle of audi alteram partem. Ex parte applications are not necessarily contrary to the fairness of the proceedings where it is thought to be necessary in the interests of justice to do so: where the disclosure to the other party or parties in the proceedings of the information conveyed by the application, or of the fact the application itself, would be likely to prejudice unfairly either the party making the application or some person or persons involved in or related to that application.

9. In the present case, the Prosecution's arguments are not persuasive. It is clear that the purpose, for which the Chamber requested the Prosecution to disclose the names of the witnesses which may be removed following the testimony of ADE, was to assist the preparation of the Defence. The

[3] Prosecutor's Filing Pursuant to Trial Chamber III Decision of 10 February 2006 and 13 December 2005 concerning Prosecutor's List of Witnesses for the Trial.
[4] Mathieu Ngirumpatse's Mémoire is dated 27 February 2006, but has been filed on 28 February 2006. On the same date, he filed a request for extension of time for the Chamber to take into consideration his Mémoire. In addition, he filed another Mémoire requesting the Chamber to reconsider its Decision of 13 December 2005 and submitting the same arguments as the arguments developed in its first Mémoire.
[5] See: Karemera et al., Decision on Motion To Unseal Ex Parte Submissions and To Strike Paragraphs 32.4 and 49 from the Amended Indictment (TC), 3 May 2005.

Prosecution stated that it would be able to remove some of these witnesses, and the Chamber simply ordered it to notify the Chamber and the Defence, not to actually remove the witnesses as seen by its Order of 13 December 2005. At this stage, the Defence is still expected to prepare the evidence of all the witnesses listed on the Prosecution list. In addition, the Chamber decided that these witnesses who could be removed should not be called during the same session during which Witness ADE will testify. All the necessary steps have therefore been taken to avoid any delay in the proceedings.

10. The Chamber does not consider that the Prosecution's strategy can be jeopardized by such a disclosure to the Defence. In its reply to Joseph Nzirorera's Motion, the Prosecution clearly explains its intention and the possibility of abandoning some portions of the Indictment as pleaded, and therefore the evidence to be given by other witnesses, because ADE's evidence would be so compelling on other aspects of the Indictment.

11. The Chamber has sympathy for the Prosecutor's concern that some witnesses may decline to cooperate if they were informed that they could not be called. This argument should not prevent disclosure to the Defence but would facilitate better preparation of the defence.

12. For the foregoing reasons, the Chamber finds that the ex parte nature of the Prosecution's filing is inappropriate. The concern raised by the Prosecution as to dissemination of the information can be addressed by the filing being done confidentially.

13. The Chamber does not find however that the Accused suffered any prejudice in the present circumstances. The final Prosecution witness list, as set out in Rule 73 bis of the Rules, is the one filed by the Prosecution in accordance with the Chamber's Decision of 13 December 2005, which includes the seven witnesses that could be removed as a result of Witness ADE's testimony. The indication of which witnesses could be removed is only warranted to facilitate the Accused to better manage the preparation of their defence.

FOR THE ABOVE MENTIONED REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. DENIES Joseph Nzirorera's and Mathieu Ngirumpatse's Motions;

II. DENIES the Prosecution's application to file ex parte the list of witnesses that could be removed as a result of Witness ADE's testimony;

III. ORDERS that the confidential annex to the Prosecution filing of 20 February 2006 be disclosed forthwith and confidentially to the Defence of each Accused persons.

Edouard Karemera et al., Decision on Variance of the Prosecution Witness List, 13 December 2005 (ICTR-98-44)

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. The second trial session was completed on 17 March 2006 after hearing the third Prosecution witness. At the Status Conference held the same day, the parties agreed that the next trial session will take place from 15 May until 14 July 2006. The order of witnesses to be heard, including disclosure concerns, and the length of time for the examination of witnesses were discussed. Furthermore, the Chamber granted the parties leave to file further submissions and that the Prosecution did so on 22 March 2006.

Order of Appearance of Witnesses for the Next Trial Session

2. In its submissions,[1] the Prosecution provides a list of witnesses to be called for the next session. The Defence teams only discuss the date Witness T should start testifying and the scheduling of Witness ADE.

3. All parties agree that Witness T be called at the commencement of the next session. The Accused Mathieu Ngirumpatse however requests that Witness T should start his testimony on 22 May 2006 so that both his Counsel and Co-Counsel, who has other duties the week before, may be present to assist him. While the Prosecution expresses its preference to call this witness on 15 May 2006 for technical reasons, it does not actually object calling him a week later. After consultation with the Registry, the Chamber has been informed that video-link facilities will be available from 22 May until 9 June 2006. The authorities of the State where the witness will reside during his testimony also confirmed their availability to support the organization of the video-link during that period. In order to preserve the fairness of the trial and the rights of the Accused to examine the witness against him in accordance with Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute of the Tribunal, the Chamber is therefore of the view that Witness T should start testifying from 22 May 2006.

4. Each Accused submits disclosure issues regarding Witness ADE which would impair the preparation of his defence. The postponement of his testimony to the fourth session is therefore requested. The Prosecution acknowledges its possession of several witness statements concerning Witness ADE, which may be considered as exculpatory material to be disclosed in accordance with Rule 68 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, but maintains its intention to call ADE at the next trial session. The Prosecution had stated its intention to disclose the statements on the 14 of May 2006,[2] but finally refrained from doing so and moved, at the Status Conference, the Chamber to order, prior to any disclosure, the Defence not to reveal the identifying information contained in the statements. The Prosecution relied on its obligation under Rule 39 of the Rules to protect the security of informants and potential witnesses. The Defence Counsel considered that, in accordance with their ethical obligations as lawyers, they were already obliged not to disseminate protected information.

5. Whereas the Prosecution has the duty to present the best available evidence to prove its case, the Chamber must ensure a fair trial and conduct the proceedings with full respect for the rights of the Accused.[3] In the present case, Witness ADE is likely to be one of the most important prosecution witnesses. It is only recently that he has been added to the Prosecution witness list. Witness ADE statements have been disclosed.[4] It is not disputed that a redacted version of materials which may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the Accused or affect the credibility of Prosecution evidence have been disclosed only recently to the Defence although the next session is scheduled to commence on 15 May 2006. In those particular circumstances, the Chamber is of the view that scheduling this Witness for the next session could impair the fairness of trial and the rights of the Accused to have time and facilities to prepare their defence. The Prosecution is therefore requested to postpone the testimony of this witness and make the necessary arrangements to ensure the attendance of Witnesses T, ALG, XBM, ZF, GHK, GFA, HH and AWB as proposed in its submissions.

6. Rule 39 of the Rules provides that the Prosecutor may take > "all measures deemed necessary for the purpose of the investigation and to support the prosecution at trial, including the taking of special measures to provide for the safety of potential witnesses and informants".

This Rule must be read in conjunction with Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute and Rules 69 and 75 of the Rules which vest Chambers with exclusive authority to order protective measures. The application of Rule 39 of the Rules by the Prosecution could not constitute, as such, an impediment to disclosure of identifying information with respect to Prosecution witnesses.[5] Moreover, it has been found that redacted portions of the statement of a former witness, including identity of the witness, have to be disclosed under Rule 68 when it is inextricably connected with the substance of the statements.[6]

7. In the present case, the Chamber is of the view that the Prosecution should disclose forthwith an un-redacted version of any Rule 68 material in its possession regarding Witness ADE. Since the witness statements regarding ADE may contain sensitive information that could affect the security of these witnesses, the Defence and the Accused should be requested not to disseminate to the public and media any identifying information included in.

Length of Examination

8. The Prosecution submits that cross-examination should be limited and last no more than three times as long as the examination-in-chief. The Defence for Nzirorera objects to a strict mathematical application to the length of cross-examination since witnesses can be unpredictable. Both Defence for Ngirumpatse and Karemera express serious concerns about the duration of the examination until now and agree that time standards for both parties may facilitate and expedite the proceedings.

9. In the Chamber's view, there is value in fixing time standards for the witness examination, including in-chief, cross and re-direct examination. This will not preclude the Chamber from adopting a flexible approach and grant extensions of time where appropriate. In addition, the experience in the present case has shown that both parties are willing and able to comply with time-standards when decided by the Chamber without jeopardizing the presentation of their case or the rights of the Accused.

10. The Prosecution has provided an estimated length of examination-in-chief for each witness to be called during the next session. The Chamber will address these estimates in details and discuss them as well as other practice directives before the beginning of the next session.

11. However, the duration of Witness T's testimony could be addressed now. The parties requests between three to four weeks for the examination of this witness. It must be noted that, in the Bagosora case, a complex case concerning four co-Accused, the same witness testified for only six days. The Chamber is of the view that the parties may be able to better focus their examination of this witness, so that the examination-in-chief could be done within two days (considering five hours in court per day), seven days being devoted to cross-examination and a half day for the re-direct.

ACCORDINGLY, the Chamber

I. ORDERS that the third trial session shall start on 15 May 2006 until 14 July 2006;

II. ORDERS that the testimony of Witness T take place by video-link from 22 May 2006 for a period of approximately ten days, which could be reviewed as the evidence unfolds;

III. ORDERS that Witness ADE testimony be not called during the third trial session;

IV. ORDERS the Prosecution to make the necessary arrangements to ensure the attendance of Witness T, ALG, XBM, ZF, GHK, GFA, HH and AWB as proposed in its submissions

V. ORDERS the Prosecution to disclose forthwith an un-redacted version of exculpatory material in its possession regarding Witness ADE;

VI. ORDERS that the Defence and the Accused persons shall not share, reveal or discuss, directly or indirectly, any documents or any information contained in any documents, or any other information which could reveal or lead to the identification of any witness whose statement shall be disclosed as ordered above, to any person or entity other than the Accused, assigned Counsel or other persons working on the Defence team.

Rules of Procedure and Evidence, rules 66 (C), 68 (D) and 73 (A)

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. The Chamber is now seized of a Prosecutor's motion seeking, under Rules 66 (C) and 68 (D) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, permission for limited disclosure of information regarding payments and benefits provided to Prosecution Witness ADE and his family.[1] However, the Prosecutor did not provide the Chamber with the information and material sought to be kept confidential. He declares his willingness to submit to the Chamber in camera, and only to the Chamber, all the specifics not included in the disclosure already made to the Defence. The Accused Joseph Nzirorera contends that the Prosecutor's Motion should be denied on a technical ground because the Prosecution did not submit the material sought to be kept confidential as mandated by the Rules.[2]

2. When deciding whether the Prosecutor may be relieved from disclosure of material which may prejudice further or ongoing investigations, or may be contrary to the public interests or affect the security interests of any State, the Chamber must have access to the information and material that are sought to be kept confidential.[3] The fact that the Prosecutor did not directly make available to the Chamber the material does not as such prevent the Chamber from considering the merits of the application. In the present case, the Prosecutor offered to provide the information and material to be reviewed. At this stage, they should be therefore provided now to the Chamber only, in accordance with Rules 66 (C) and 68 (D) of the Rules.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

HEREBY ORDERS the Prosecutor to file by Monday 3 April 2006, with the Registry, confidentially, under seal and only to the attention of the Chamber, the information and material that are sought to be kept confidential.

The Appeals Chamber is also presently seized of a request for an extension of time to respond to the Appeal pending the translation of the submissions of both Mr. Nzirorera and the Prosecution into French, filed by Édouard Karemera on 24 March 2006 ("Motion for Extension of Time").[1]

2. Rule 116 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal allows for extensions of time upon a showing of good cause. A request must normally be filed within the prescribed time limits, which Mr. Karemera did not do. He also provides no explanation for this failure.

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized of the "Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of the Trial Chamber's Decision Given Orally on 16 February 2006 Regarding the Role of the Electronic Disclosure Suite in Discharging the Prosecution's Disclosure Obligations", filed on 6 March 2006 ("Appeal"). The Appeals Chamber is also presently seized of a request for an extension of time to respond to the Appeal pending the translation of the submissions of the Prosecution and Joseph Nzirorera into French, filed by Édouard Karemera on 24 March 2006 ("Motion for Extension of Time").[1]

2. Rule 116 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal allows for extensions of time upon a showing of good cause. A request must normally be filed within the prescribed time limits, which Mr. Karemera did not do. However, the Appeals Chamber has already granted Mr. Ngirumpatse's timely request for an extension of time to respond to the Prosecution's Appeal pending its translation into French.[2] The Appeals Chamber has on occasion permitted a co-accused to benefit from an extension of time granted to another based on a timely filed motion when it is in the interests of justice to do so.[3] Given the joint nature of the trial and the breadth of the Prosecution's Appeal, the Appeals Chamber finds it in the interests of justice to excuse Mr. Karemera's late filing in this matter and to benefit from the relief accorded to Mr. Ngirumpatse.

3. The Prosecution objects to Mr. Karemera's request by adopting the same arguments advanced and rejected in connection with Mr. Ngirumpatse's motion.[4] However, as the Appeals Chamber has recently observed, counsel for Mr. Karemera work in French, and not in English.[5] It is clear that, in order to be able to present a full answer to the Appeal, he needs access to French translations of the Appeal itself. The Appeals Chamber has already determined that this constitutes good cause for a reasonable extension of time in this case.[6] Mr. Karemera has not demonstrated, however, that access to the translation of the submissions of his co-accused Mr. Nzirorera is necessary to enable him to prepare his response to the Prosecution's Appeal, and the Appeals Chamber has refused such relief in the past.[7]

Disposition

For the foregoing reasons, the Motion for Extension of Time is GRANTED in part. The Registry is DIRECTED to provide to Mr. Karemera and his counsel, on an urgent basis, French translations of the Appeal and the present decision. Starting from the date on which the last of these translated documents is transmitted, Mr. Karemera will be permitted 10 days to file his response, if any, to the Appeal. The Registry is also DIRECTED to inform the Appeals Chamber of the date on which the translations documents are transmitted.

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. The Chamber is now seized of a Prosecutor's motion seeking, under Rules 66 (C) and 68 (D) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, permission for limited disclosure of information regarding payments and benefits provided to Prosecution Witness ADE and his family.[1] However, the Prosecutor did not provide the Chamber with the information and material sought to be kept confidential.

2. On 31 March 2006, the Chamber ordered the Prosecutor to file these documents by Monday 3 April 2006.[2] On that date, the Prosecutor filed a request seeking extension of time for filing the said documents until 28 April 2006. It explains that the Chief of Prosecutions, who handles this matter personally, is away from the seat of the Tribunal until24 April2006. The Defence for Nzirorera does not oppose the application.

3. The Chamber notes that Witness ADE is not going to be called to testify before the end of this year.[3] Considering the particular circumstances of the case and in the interests of justice, the Chamber is of the view that an extension of time is warranted to assure that the Prosecutor's filing will be completed.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

Introduction

1. THE APPEALS CHAMBER of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States Between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994 ("Tribunal")[1] in this decision resolves appeals filed by Joseph Nzirorera ("Appellant") against two decisions of Trial Chamber III ("Trial Chamber") of the Tribunal. Both decisions by the Trial Chamber address issues raised in "Joseph Nzirorera's Preliminary Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction: Joint Criminal Enterprise" ("Jurisdictional Motion"), which was filed on 4 May 2005.

2. In the Jurisdictional Motion, the Appellant asserted that the Tribunal lacks jurisdiction over

> "the charges relating to the extended form of joint criminal enterprise liability in the Amended Indictment".[2]

In support of this assertion, the Appellant first argued that the Tribunal lacks jurisdiction to convict an accused pursuant to the third category of joint criminal enterprise ("JCE") for crimes committed by fellow participants in a JCE of "vast scope".[3] Second, he argued that the Tribunal lacks jurisdiction to consider third category JCE liability when there is no "direct relationship" alleged between the accused and the physical perpetrators of the crime.[4] Third, he argued that the Tribunal lacks jurisdiction to impose liability for rape as a foreseeable consequence of a joint criminal enterprise to commit genocide.[5] Fourth, he argued that that the Tribunal lacks jurisdiction to impose liability for complicity in genocide as a foreseeable consequence of a JCE.[6]

3. On 5 August 2005, the Trial Chamber issued the "Decision on Defence Motion Challenging the Jurisdiction of the Tribunal – Joint Criminal Enterprise Rules 72 and 73 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence" ("First Impugned Decision"). That decision found no jurisdictional impediment to the imposition of third category JCE liability for crimes committed by participants in a vast JCE in which an accused has taken part.[7] The Trial Chamber did not explicitly address the Appellant's second assertion: that the Tribunal lacks jurisdiction to impose third category JCE liability when the Prosecution does not allege a "direct relationship" between the accused and the physical perpetrators of the crime. Rejecting the Appellant's argument about JCEs of "vast scope", however, the Trial Chamber characterized it as an argument that third category JCE liability can be imposed only when the JCE is "limited to a specific operation and a restricted geographical area, and where the Accused was not structurally remote from the actual perpetrators of the crimes."[8]

4. In the First Impugned Decision, the Trial Chamber deferred consideration of the final two arguments put forward in the Jurisdictional Motion.[9] On 14 September 2005, after hearing oral argument on these two issues, the Trial Chamber issued the "Decision on Defence Motions Challenging the Indictment as Regards the Joint Criminal Enterprise Liability" ("Second Impugned Decision").

5. In the Second Impugned Decision, the Trial Chamber held that there is no jurisdictional impediment to the imposition of liability for rape if it is a foreseeable consequence of a joint criminal enterprise.[10] The Trial Chamber, however, again declined to decide whether the Tribunal has jurisdiction to impose third category joint criminal enterprise liability for complicity in genocide.[11] As the indictment's charge of complicity in genocide is simply an alternative to its genocide charge, the Trial Chamber explained, there might, in the end, be no need to resolve that question in this case.[12]

6. After the Trial Chamber issued the First Impugned Decision, the Appellant filed a document asking the Appeals Chamber to determine that the question resolved by that decision – whether the Tribunal can impose third category JCE liability on an accused for crimes committed by fellow participants in a JCE of "vast scope" – was jurisdictional, and that therefore the Appellant could bring an interlocutory appeal against the Trial Chamber's resolution of the question.[13] In the same document, the Appellant also argued on the merits that the Trial Chamber had resolved the question incorrectly.[14]

7. The Prosecution filed a response[15] and the Appellant filed a reply.[16] Then, a three-judge Bench of the Appeals Chamber decided that the appeal was validly filed.[17] The three-judge Bench of the Appeals Chamber, however, decided that the Appellant would not be allowed to submit a new appellant's brief – as would normally be allowed when three judges of the Appeals Chamber determine that an issue satisfies the requirements for immediate appeal – because the First Defence Appeal argued the merits and greatly exceeded the permissible length for motions merely seeking a determination that an issue satisfies the requirements for immediate appeal.[18]

8. After the Trial Chamber issued the Second Impugned Decision, the Appellant filed a document asking the Appeals Chamber to determine that the question deferred by that decision – whether the extended form of joint criminal enterprise liability can attach to complicity in genocide – was jurisdictional, and that therefore the Appellant could bring an interlocutory appeal against the Trial Chamber's failure to resolve the question.[19] In the same document, the Appellant also argued that the Trial Chamber was obliged to resolve the question.[20] The Appellant added that, should it choose to address the question itself, the Appeals Chamber should determine that the Tribunal cannot impose liability for complicity in genocide as a foreseeable consequence of an extended JCE.[21] The Appellant

Decisions on many other types of motions are not subject to interlocutory appeal.
[14] First Defence Appeal, paras 20-87. Inferring that the Trial Chamber had decided to defer, until the end of the case, a decision on the whether a direct relationship between the accused and the physical perpetrator is necessary for third category joint criminal enterprise liability, the Appellant "decided not to take an interlocutory appeal on the second issue raised in the" Jurisdictional Motion. Ibid., fn. 7.

[18] Ibid., para. 7. The Prosecution subsequently filed the "Prosecutor's Brief Addressing the Merits in Relation to Joseph Nzirorera's 'Appeal of Decision Denying Preliminary Motion on Joint Criminal Enterprise'", 24 October 2005, in which it stated that it would rely on the First Prosecution Response's submissions on the merits of the Appellant's arguments about JCEs of vast scope. decided not to appeal the Second Impugned Decision's conclusion about third category joint criminal enterprise liability for rape.[22]

9. Again, the Prosecution filed a response,[23] and the Appellant filed a reply.[24] Then, a three-judge Bench of the Appeals Chamber decided that the Appellant could appeal the Trial Chamber's failure to determine whether the Prosecution could charge him with third category JCE liability for complicity in genocide.[25] This appeal was assigned to the same five-judge Bench of the Appeals Chamber assigned to hear the merits of the First Defence Appeal.[26]

10. The present decision therefore addresses two issues: (a) Whether the Tribunal has jurisdiction to impose third category JCE liability on an accused for crimes committed by fellow participants in a JCE of "vast scope"; and (b) Whether the Trial Chamber needed to decide if third category JCE liability can be imposed for complicity in genocide.

The First Defence Appeal

11. The Appellant submits that, in concluding that third category JCE liability can be imposed on an accused for crimes committed by fellow participants in a vast JCE, the Trial Chamber committed "three errors of law".[27] According to the Appellant, the Trial Chamber "erred when it relied upon the Milošević case as authority for a vast 'extended' joint criminal enterprise".[28] The Appellant also asserts that the Trial Chamber "erred in concluding that 'the scale of a joint criminal enterprise has [no] impact on such form of liability'".[29] Moreover, the Appellant submits, the Trial Chamber

> "erred by failing to consider whether the 'extended' form of joint criminal enterprise liability applied to vast enterprises in customary international law".[30]

The Appeals Chamber reviews de novo whether the Trial Chamber applied the correct law.[31]

12. The Tribunal has jurisdiction to consider only offences and modes of liability which both (a) are contemplated by its Statute, and (b) existed in customary international law at the time of the alleged actions under consideration or were proscribed by treaties forming part of the law to which the accused was subject at the time of the alleged actions under consideration.[32] Because the Appellant offers no cogent explanation for how the language of the Tribunal's Statute limits consideration of third category JCE liability to cases in which the JCE at issue is small, because the Appeals Chamber itself sees no such limitation in the Statute, and because the JCE mode of liability is grounded in customary international law rather than in any treaty, the crucial question raised by the First Defence Appeal is whether customary international law permits imposition of third category JCE liability on an accused for crimes committed by fellow participants in a JCE of "vast scope". On this question, the Appeals Chamber sees no merit in the Appellant's position.

13. In Prosecutor v. Tadić, the ICTY's Appeals Chamber concluded that customary international law recognizes the joint criminal enterprise mode of liability.[33] In so doing, the Appeals Chamber recognized three categories of JCE liability.[34] Under the first – or "basic"[35] – category, the accused can be held responsible for crimes that are intended consequences of the JCE, but which are physically committed by persons besides the accused.[36] The second category of JCE liability, which is not at issue in this appeal, is sometimes called "systemic" JCE liability, and is a variant of the first category.[37] Crucially, under the third – or "extended"[38] – category of JCE liability, the accused can be held responsible for crimes physically committed by other participants in the JCE when these crimes are foreseeable consequences of the JCE, even if the accused did not agree with other participants that these crimes would be committed.[39] In light of Tadić, then, there can be no question that third-category JCE liability is firmly accepted in customary international law.

14. Here, the Appellant does not suggest a lack of support in customary international law for imposition of first-category JCE liability for (agreed-upon) crimes committed by any participant in a vast JCE. Indeed, he concedes that the Justice and RuSHA cases, two major Nuremberg cases, involved vast criminal enterprises.[40] Nonetheless, the Appellant suggests that the Tribunal lacks jurisdiction to impose third category JCE liability for crimes committed by participants in a vast JCE – particularly those structurally or geographically remote from the accused – because the Appellant sees no evidence specifically showing that customary international law permits imposition of third category JCE liability for their crimes.[41]

15. The Appellant's argument reflects a misunderstanding of customary international law and its role in determining the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. For the Tribunal to convict an accused based on a particular mode of liability, there must be clear evidence that the mode of liability exists in customary international law[42] – in addition to being contemplated by the Statute, as discussed above.[43] Yet, "where a principle can be shown to be … established" in customary international law, "it is not an objection to the application of the principle to a particular situation to say that the situation is new if it

[41] Ibid., paras 58, 60, 75, 77. The Appellant's position rests in part on his belief that post-WWII cases provide no support for the application of third category JCE liability to the crimes of structurally remote JCE participants. In Rwamakuba v. Prosecutor, Case N°ICTR-98-44-AR72.4, Decision on Interlocutory Appeal Regarding Application of Joint Criminal Enterprise to the Crime of Genocide, 22 October 2004 ("Rwamakuba Decision"), para. 24, the Appeals Chamber observed that it would be a mistake to find with certainty that post-WWII cases, including the Justice and RuSHA cases, dealt only with the basic, and not the extended, form of joint criminal enterprise liability. Hence, the Appellant's assertion that post-WWII cases provide no support for the application of third category JCE liability to the crimes of structurally remote JCE participants is not necessarily consistent with the caselaw of the Tribunal.

[42] Prosecutor v. Milutinović et al., Case N°IT-99-37-AR72, Decision on Dragoljub Ojdanić's Motion Challenging Jurisdiction – Joint Criminal Enterprise, 21 May 2003, paras 10-11.

[43] See para. 12, supra.

reasonably falls within the application of the principle."[44] Hence, once the Tribunal has found that a mode of liability exists in customary international law, and once the Tribunal has identified the elements that need to be proven to establish that mode of liability under customary international law, the Tribunal can, consistently with customary international law, convict someone pursuant to the mode of liability whenever the facts demonstrate that its elements have been met.[45]

16. Here, as already mentioned, it is clear that there is a basis in customary international law for both JCE liability in general, and for the third category of JCE liability in particular. Moreover, though the Tribunal's Appeals Chamber and that of the ICTY have, in several cases dealing with different factual situations, explained the requirements for establishing different types of JCE liability,[46] not once has either Appeals Chamber suggested that JCE liability can arise only from participation in enterprises of limited size or geographical scope. Confirming that there is no geographical limitation on third-category JCE liability, the Tadić Judgement cited, as an example of when this type of liability may be imposed, a situation in which murders are committed as a foreseeable but unintended consequence of a JCE that seeks "to forcibly remove members of one ethnicity from their […] region".[47] Thus, the ICTY's Appeals Chamber has explicitly contemplated third category JCE liability for crimes stemming from region-wide JCEs.

17. The import of the section of the First Defence Appeal addressing the "impact" of the enterprise's "scale" is far from clear – in particular, it is unclear whether this section seeks to advance an argument based on the Tribunal's Statute or customary international law. In any event, this section appears to argue that it would be bad policy to permit third category JCE liability for crimes committed by participants in vast JCEs; according to the Appellant, permitting third category JCE liability for these crimes would turn JCE into a form of strict liability and produce unfair convictions.[48] The Appeals Chamber, however, considers fears about establishing strict liability to be unfounded. Third category JCE liability can be imposed only for crimes that were foreseeable to an accused.[49] In certain circumstances, crimes committed by other participants in a large-scale enterprise will not be foreseeable to an accused. Thus, to the extent that structural or geographic distance affects foreseeability, scale will matter, as the Appellant suggests it should.

18. Finally, the Appeals Chamber notes that, for purposes of this decision, it is irrelevant whether the Trial Chamber properly cited the Milošević case, or whether doing so was improper, as the Appellant alleges.[50] For the reasons explained in this decision, the Trial Chamber gave the correct answer to the question of law raised by the Appellant. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses the First Defence Appeal.

The Second Defence Appeal

19. In the Second Defence Appeal, the Appellant contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to reach a decision on whether the Tribunal has jurisdiction to convict an accused for complicity in genocide pursuant to an extended JCE theory. The Appellant observes that Rule 72 (A) of the Rules provides that motions which challenge jurisdiction must be "disposed of not later than sixty days after they were filed, and before the commencement of the opening statements". Though the Trial Chamber found that the Appellant's motion challenged the Tribunal's jurisdiction, the Appellant points out, the Trial Chamber failed to "dispose of the motion before the commencement of the opening statements".[51] According to the Appellant, the Trial Chamber's failure to decide on his motion "deprived [him] of his right not to be tried on a crime for which the Tribunal lacks jurisdiction".[52]

20. In response, the Prosecution first argues that the Trial Chamber, in ruling that extended JCE liability can be imposed for the crime of rape, and that JCE liability is not limited in "its application to any particular crime", implicitly rendered a decision on whether third category JCE liability can be imposed for complicity in genocide.[53] The Appeals Chamber disagrees. The Trial Chamber explicitly reserved its decision on complicity in genocide,[54] and the Trial Chamber cannot be held to have implicitly decided a question that it explicitly reserved.

21. The Prosecution's other arguments in response to the Second Defence Appeal are far from clear. In seeming contradiction to its argument that the Trial Chamber rejected the Defence's point about complicity in genocide, the Prosecution states that "unless the Trial Chamber can organise its work in such a way as to defer such a decision on a count" – like the complicity in genocide count – "that is only an alternative count, the Trial Chamber may have committed … error in this instance".[55] The Prosecution also suggests that in light of Rule 72 (A)'s text, "the question is whether the Appeals Chamber should return the matter to the Trial Chamber for a decision, or dispose of the issue itself".[56] Later, however, the Prosecution asserts that neither the Appeals Chamber nor the Trial Chamber has any reason to promptly decide the Appellant's challenge to the allegation of third category JCE liability for complicity in genocide; according to the Prosecution, a decision is unnecessary because the Appellant has been charged with complicity in genocide pursuant to other modes of liability as well, and because complicity in genocide is an alternative charge.[57]

22. To the extent that it suggests that the Trial Chamber can avoid deciding the Appellant's challenge now, the Prosecution is mistaken. Under Rule 72 (A) all motions challenging jurisdiction must be "disposed of" within 60 days and before the commencement of opening statements. Here, both the Trial Chamber[58] and the Appeals Chamber[59] have ruled that the Appellant's motion was jurisdictional. And while it is certainly possible that a jurisdictional motion might raise within it certain non-jurisdictional questions that the Trial Chamber could legitimately defer, this is not such a case: the question that the Appellant faults the Trial Chamber for deferring is a pure question of law concerning the limits of the Tribunal's jurisdiction to employ a mode of liability.

23. The Trial Chamber cannot avoid deciding the Appellant's motion simply because it pertains to an alternative charge, or because the count at issue alleges that the Appellant can be found guilty pursuant to several modes of liability. As already mentioned, the text of Rule 72 (A) makes clear that its time limits apply to all jurisdictional motions – including those challenging alternative counts and those challenging one of many modes of liability alleged in connection with an offence. This reflects each accused's right not to be tried on, and not to have to defend against, an allegation that falls outside the Tribunal's jurisdiction.

24. The Second Defence Appeal is therefore upheld.

Decision on Reconsideration of the Scheduling Order for the Next Trial Session Article 20 of the Statute of the Tribunal, Rule 73 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence 18 April 2006 (ICTR-98-44-T)

Rules of Procedure and Evidence, rule 73 ; Statute, art. 20

1. The second trial session in this case was completed on 17 March 2006 after hearing the third Prosecution witness. At the Status Conference held the same day, the parties agreed that the next trial session will take place from 15 May until 14 July 2006. On the basis of these discussions, the order of witnesses to be heard at the third trial session was addressed by the Chamber.[1] While the next session is scheduled to start on 15 May 2006, the Chamber decided that the testimony of Witness T should take place by video-link from 22 May 2006 in order to preserve the fairness of the trial and the rights of the Accused Ngirumpatse to examine the witness.

2. The Prosecutor now moves the Chamber to reconsider its prior Scheduling Order of 30 March 2006 and order that the testimony of Witness T take place by video-link starting on 15 May 2006.[2] He submits that it would be quite impracticable to have Witness T begin his testimony on 22 May 2006 for three reasons. First, the authorities of the State where the Witness will give his evidence agreed with the Prosecutor before the Chamber gave its Order that the video-link will commence on 15 May 2006. Second, since the Prosecutor's Trial team is working with limited manpower, he submits that the trial preparation will have to be re-arranged so that two attorneys will have to meet with Witness T the week before his testimony. As a result, those trial attorneys will not be available in Arusha to examine the other witnesses that are assigned to them and that are mentioned in the Scheduling Order. Finally, in the Prosecutor's view, it is highly improbable that Witness ALG could complete his testimony in five days, if it started on 15 May 2006, which means that Witness ALG's testimony will have to be suspended for the beginning of Witness T's testimony on 22 May 2006.

3. In his Response, Joseph Nzirorera suggests that the trial session be scheduled to commence on 22 May 2006.[3] In his view, this will solve the Prosecutor's problem as well as that of the Ngirumpatse team. He also suggests that a Status Conference or Working session be held during the week of 15 May 2006 to deal with disclosure issues, as well as any practice direction and time scheduling for witnesses. The Prosecutor replies that Joseph Nzirorera's suggestion is reasonable under the circumstances and that it seems to be a reasonable compromise to deal with logistical challenges faced by the parties.[4] Mathieu Ngirumpatse also supports Nzirorera's suggestion.[5] Conversely, he firmly opposes the Prosecutor's application to begin on the 15 May 2006 with Witness T since it could affect his rights.

4. As the Chamber already stated, the authorities of the State where Witness T will reside during his testimony already confirmed their availability to support the organization of the video-link from 22 May 2006.[6] Further, in his Reply, the Prosecutor acknowledges that this witness could start his evidence from that date. This issue is therefore solved and does not need to be reconsidered.

5. The trial in this case started de novo in September 2005 and, so far, the Chamber has heard only three Prosecution witnesses. While the Chamber has sympathy for the Prosecutor's current situation amongst his trial team, it also must guarantee the rights of the Accused to a fair trial, including the right to be tried without undue delay. The trial should therefore start on 15 May 2006 and the Prosecution should be ready to call his first witness from that date.

6. In addition, the Chamber is of the view that all disclosure issues should be dealt with now. The parties are expected to cooperate in good faith in that matter and are strongly encouraged to find a prompt solution to all issues that might delay the continuation of the trial.

ACCORDINGLY, the Chamber

Order for the Transfer of Prosecution Witnesses from Rwanda Article 28 of the Statute of the Tribunal and Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence 19 April 2006 (ICTR-98-44-A28)

Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera – Transfer of detained witness

International Instrument cited :

Rules of Procedure and Evidence, rules 54 and 90 bis ; Statute, art. 28

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. The third trial session is scheduled to start on 15 May 2006. In a Motion filed on 4 April2006, the Prosecutor requests the Chamber, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, to order the temporary transfer of Witnesses with the pseudonyms ALG, XBM and AWB from Rwanda, where they are currently on provisional release, to the United Nations Detention Unit (UNDF) in Arusha (United-Republic of Tanzania), so that they can testify in the present case during the next trial session. The Prosecutor contends that the requirements set out by Rule 90 bis of the Rules are met. He is awaiting a letter from the Rwandan Ministry of Justice confirming this affirmation. The Prosecutor further submits that none of these witnesses will be released by the Rwandan authorities during the period they will be detained at the UNDF.

2. Rule 90 bis (A) of the Rules gives the Chamber power to make an order to transfer a Detained person to the Detention Unit of the Tribunal if his or her presence has been requested. In the present case, the witnesses whom transfer is requested to Arusha are not detained in Rwanda but rather on provisional release, which implies that they remain free subject to restrictions to their freedom of movement. While Rule 90bis cannot therefore apply to those witnesses, their presence is requested to allow them to give evidence during the next trial session.

3. The Chamber is of the view that Witnesses ALG, XBM and AWB should temporarily be transferred to Arusha with the cooperation of the Rwandan authorities in accordance with Article 28 of the Statute of the Tribunal. In addition, since these witnesses are on provisional release in Rwanda, they will remain under the Tribunal's control and custody so that they can be returned back to Rwanda, as soon as each witness completes his or her testimony.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. REQUESTS, pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute, the Government of Rwanda to cooperate with the Tribunal to ensure the temporary transfer of witnesses known by the pseudonyms ALG, XBM and AWB to the UNDF facility in Arusha;

II. REQUESTS the Government of Tanzania to cooperate with the Registrar in the implementation of this Order;

II. ORDERS the Registrar, pursuant to Rule 54 of the Rules, to temporarily transfer these witnesses to the UNDF facility in Arusha, at an appropriate time prior to their scheduled dates to testify. Their return travel to Rwanda should be facilitated as soon as practically possible for each witness after each witness completes his or her testimony;

IV. REQUESTS the Registrar to cooperate with the authorities of the Governments of Rwanda and United-Republic of Tanzania; to ensure proper conduct during the transfer and during the detention of the witnesses at the UNDF; to inform the Chamber of any changes in the conditions which may affect the length of stay in Arusha.

I.C.T.R. : Trial Chamber, The Prosecutor v. André Ntagerura et al., Decision on Prosecution Motion for Admission of Additional Evidence, 10 December 2004 (ICTR-99-46)

Introduction

1. On 16 May 2005, this Chamber ordered the Prosecution to disclose the statement of Expert Witness André Guichaoua to the Defence of each of the Accused by 15 August 2005.[1] As a result of Prosecution requests for extensions of that deadline on three occasions, the Chamber extended the deadline: firstly to 25 November 2005;[2] secondly to 12 December 2005;[3] and, most recently, to 28 February 2006.[4]

2. During the trial proceedings in this case of 27 February 2006, the Prosecution drew to the attention of the Chamber, and the Defence, the fact that Professor Guichaoua's Report had been completed and would be dispatched that day by international courier, but that the filing of the Report would be delayed by a short time.[5] The Report was subsequently filed with the Registry, after which it was disclosed to the Defence between 7 and 9 March 2006.

3. On 10 March 2006, the Defence for Nzirorera and the Defence for Ngirumpatse filed Motions[6] seeking the exclusion of Professor Guichaoua's Report on the basis of the further delay occasioned. By Response dated 15 March 2006,[7] the Prosecution opposes both Motions.

Discussion

4. The Defence for Ngirumpatse relies upon Articles 19 and 20 of the Tribunal's Statute, as well as on Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, as a foundation for its Motion.

5. In support of its application, the Defence for Nzirorera outlines the history of this matter before the Chamber, submitting that the Prosecution's "chronic non-compliance" with the Trial Chamber's orders should be remedied by exclusion of the witness' testimony. Relying upon Appeals Chamber authority in the case of Ntagerura,[8] Nzirorera submits that, when a party fails to disclose by a date set by the Trial Chamber, the evidence should be excluded unless the Prosecution can show due diligence for its failure to comply with the Trial Chamber's order. Nzirorera further submits that the exclusion of the Report in its entirety is in the interests of a fair trial due to the length of the Report and the matters therein which must be investigated by the Defence.

6. The Prosecution opposes both Motions for exclusion of evidence, noting that such exclusion would be contrary to the interests of justice and judicial economy. It notes that neither Nzirorera nor Ngirumpatse raised any objections to the further delay when the matter was ventilated in open court. The Prosecution also notes that international courier delay resulted in the Report being received in Arusha on 5 March 2006, despite its dispatch on 27 and 28 February 2006, and that the additional delay was occasioned as a result of the Registry processing the Report for filing purposes.

7. As Annexures to its Response, the Prosecutor attaches relevant email correspondence between Mr. Guichaoua and the Registry. The first email from Mr. Guichaoua to the Registry notes that the first part of his Report had been dispatched by international courier to Arusha on 27 February 2006 and indicates that the supporting exhibits will be dispatched by international courier in the next 48 hours. The second email from Mr. Guichaoua to the Registry, dated 1 March 2006, advises the Registry that the supporting exhibits were dispatched by international courier the previous day. The reason for the delay advanced by Mr. Guichaoua in his email is difficulties he experienced in arranging his return ticket to France after his time spent in consultation with the Prosecutor in Arusha. He says that he needed to have access to the facilities available to him in France, prior to finalising the Report for dispatch. The delay in his return to France impacted upon his ability to finalise the Report within the timeframe stipulated.

8. The Chamber is of the view that the applications of Ngirumpatse and Nzirorera for exclusion of Mr. Guichaoua's testimony should be rejected. In reaching this conclusion, the Chamber has firstly taken into account the reasons advanced for the delay. In this respect, it is noteworthy that although the Report was served upon the Defence some seven to nine days after the deadline set in the Chamber's Order of 1 February 2006, part of the delay occasioned was due to the use of international courier services, and part of it was due to the time required by the Registry to process the material for filing purposes – both matters which were outside the Prosecutor's control. The Chamber further accepts that difficulties encountered by Mr. Guichaoua in arranging his return trip to France had some impact upon his ability to finalise his Report for its timely dispatch. Secondly, the Chamber has taken into account the extent to which the Accused's rights under Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute would be offended by the further delay of between seven and nine days, if indeed at all. As the Chamber has noted in its prior Decisions concerning the delay in disclosure of the reports of expert witnesses, the Chamber considers that it cannot be said that this delay will offend the rights of the Accused. The Chamber has an ability to manage the trial to ensure that the delay will not manifest in unfairness to the Accused – this includes being able to deal with the concerns raised by Nzirorera relating to the length of the Report and the matters requiring investigation, on an ongoing basis. In this sense, the Chamber wishes to make clear that the exclusion of evidence is a remedy which is at the extreme end of a scale of remedies at its disposition. Thirdly, the Appeals Chamber Decision relied upon by Nzirorera is factually distinguishable from the case before this Chamber. The Appeals Chamber Decision concerns the timeframe for the presentation of additional evidence before the Appeals Chamber under Rule 115 of the Rules, whereas the question before this Chamber relates to how it should deal with a party's non-compliance with an order made by it under Rule 94 bis of the Rules.

FOR THOSE REASONS

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. The second trial session was completed on 17 March 2006 after hearing the third Prosecution witness, Witness UB. During Witness UB's cross-examination, the Defence for Nzirorera referred to the report of his interviews of 26, 27, 28 and 29

April 2004 drafted by a Prosecution investigator.[1] The Defence for Nzirorera contended that there is a contradiction between this report and his testimony given in court.[2] As a result, it moved the Chamber to order the disclosure of the hand-written notes of the investigator for those statements, if they exist, which contradict this witness or at least, that they be produced for inspection, under Rule 66 (B) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. The Defence for Nzirorera submitted that the investigator's handwritten contemporaneous notes of his conversations with Witness UB are the best physical evidence of those meetings which make them necessary and material to the preparation of the defence.

2. The Prosecution opposed the Motion and argued that the investigator's report is a reflection of the investigator's recollection of his conversation with the witness. It submitted that beyond that, the Defence can speak to the investigator and even, call him as a Defence witness.[3]

3. Pursuant to Rule 89 (C) of the Rules and the jurisprudence of this Tribunal,[4] the Chamber has the discretionary power to admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value, to the extent that it may be relevant to the proof of allegations pleaded in the Indictment. It must be noted that the admissibility of evidence is not to be confused with the assessment of the weight to be accorded to the evidence.

4. In the present case, it is not disputed that the Accused was provided with a copy of the report of interviews with Witness UB on 26, 27, 28 and 29 April 2004 and that he had full opportunity to cross-examine the witness on their content.[5] It can be admitted that the investigator's report is a reflection of the investigator's recollection of his conversation with the witness. There is no need to order further disclosure of the investigator's hand-written notes, if they still exist. Finally, the Chamber observes that the weight to be attached to evidence given by Witness UB is an issue to be addressed by the Chamber at a later stage.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Nzirorera's Motion in its entirety.

I.C.T.Y. : Trial Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delalić, Decision on the Motion by the Accused Zejnil Delalić for the Disclosure of Evidence, 26 September 1996 (IT-96-21)

Introduction

1. Referring to the Prosecution's disclosure obligations under Rules 66 (B) and 68 (A) of the Rules, the Defence for Nzirorera[1] seeks an order obligating the Prosecution to disclose "information obtained from Juvénal Uwilingiyimana", including any statements taken from him, any reports of interviews conducted with him, and any investigator's notes containing information about him. Nzirorera contends that the information is material to the preparation of his defence under Rule 66 (B), in particular for the preparation of his cross-examination of Prosecution Witness Omar Serushago. Nzirorera also claims that the material constitutes exculpatory material which affects the credibility of Prosecution evidence under Rule 68 (A), in particular the proposed testimony of Serushago. The Defence for Ngirumpatse moves the Chamber for the same relief as Nzirorera.[2] The Prosecution opposes the Defence Motions, but proposes to offer Uwilingiyimana's statement in camera for review by the Chamber and for it to determine whether or not it ought to be disclosed,[3] an alternative supported by the Defence.

2. Omar Serushago may testify during the next trial session in this case, which is scheduled to begin on 15 May 2006, and to run until 14 July 2006. The Defence for Nzirorera expects, on the basis of material already disclosed to it,[4] that part of Serushago's testimony will relate to the allegation that former Rwandan Government Minister Juvénal Uwilingiyimana, and the Accused Joseph Nzirorera, jointly participated in the planning and execution of genocide in Rwanda in 1994.[5]

3. Uwilingiyimana, who is now deceased, was indicted by this Tribunal in June 2005.[6] The Defence for Nzirorera claims that it interviewed Uwilingiyimana on two occasions, during which interviews Uwilingiyimana provided information which directly contradicts the evidence to be given by [4] Nzirorera makes specific reference to specific allegations contained in Omar Serushago's Statements of 16 February 2005, 3 February 1998 and 12 February 1998, taken by the OTP, and his testimony in the Nahimana trial.

[5] The allegations contained in the statements, quoted by Nzirorera, are as follows:
In 1993, at an MRND meeting in Gisenyi stadium, Juvénal Uwilingiyimana took the floor and said that it was important to know that the Inyenzis were the enemies (OTP statement of 16 February 2005, p. 322).
In December 1993, Nzirorera and Uwilingiyimana led a meeting of the Interahamwe at the Meridien Hotel in Gisenyi at which Major Anatole Nsengiyumva was introduced as the new Army commander in Gisenyi. They promised the Interahamwe that arms would be distributed to them (OTP statement of 16 February 2005, p. 322).
In April 1994, Nzirorera and Uwilingiyimana harbored Serushago and Thomas Mugiraneza in their rooms at the Meridien Hotel after Serushago killed the sister of Colonel Ngungize. They later intervened with Ngungize so that the army and the Interahamwe could continue to work together to kill Tutsis (OTP statements of 3 February 1998; 12 February 1998, p. 562).
In April 1994, Uwilingiyimana called Serushago and instructed him to kill the wife of football coach Longin Rudaswinga. Serushago arrived at the residenc where she was staying, took her and showed her to Nzirorera and Colonel Nsengiyumva, and then took her to the cemetery to be killed (OTP statements of 3 February 1998; 12 February 1998, p. 569).
In June 1994, Uwilingiyimana and Nzirorera attended a meeting for raising funds to purchase arms to be used to kill Tutsis (Testimony in Nahimana trial, 16 November 2001, p. 41; statement of 16 February 2005, p. 322).

Juvénal Uwilingiyimana*, Case N°ICTR-2005-83-I, Decision on Prosecutor's Motion to Unseal the Indictment and Warrant of Arrest, 29 November 2005.

Serushago. Nzirorera claims that Uwilingiyimana must have provided information to the Prosecution consistent with that which he provided to the Defence. As Uwilingiyimana is now deceased, the Defence is unable to obtain a written statement from him, or to call him to testify. Therefore, one of the reasons for which the Defence seeks disclosure of the material is to decide whether to have any statement made by the deceased admitted under Rule 92 bis of the Rules.[7]

4. Whilst the Prosecution acknowledges its possession of at least one witness statement from Uwilingiyimana, which it offers for in camera review by the Chamber, it has rejected all previous written requests by the Defence to obtain any material concerning Uwilingiyimana.[8]

Discussion

In Camera Inspection

5. As a preliminary matter in the determination of the Defence Motions, the Chamber has considered whether to accept the Prosecution's offer to review a statement taken from Uwilingiyimana, in camera, for the purposes of determining whether or not it ought to be disclosed under Rule 68 of the Rules. The Chamber notes that this course of action is supported by the Defence in the absence of a determination by the Chamber that the material ought to have been disclosed, though Nzirorera seeks to widen the category of material to be inspected by the Trial Chamber to include "all information obtained from Mr. Uwilingiyimana not limited to formal statements taken from him".

6. Rules 66 and 68 impose an obligation upon the Prosecution to disclose materials falling within the ambit of those provisions. As the jurisprudence of this Tribunal indicates, the Prosecutor is responsible for making an initial determination about whether or not material ought to be disclosed under those provisions,[9] yet that determination can be interfered with by a Chamber if it is found that the Prosecution has erred in making such a determination. Once the Prosecution has made a determination that it is not under an obligation to disclose the material, and has communicated this view to the Defence, it is then for the Defence to demonstrate, by satisfying the criteria outlined in the jurisprudence, that the Prosecution has made an erroneous determination under either, or both, of the aforementioned provisions.

7. In the particular circumstances of this case, the Chamber considers it inappropriate to review the material in camera. The Chamber prefers to consider whether or not the Defence has demonstrated that the Prosecution has made an erroneous determination with respect to the material in question, through the satisfaction of the criteria outlined in the relevant jurisprudence. To that end, the Chamber must consider the merits of the application, based solely on the briefs of the Parties, as governed by Rule 73 of the Rules.

Whether Disclosure should be ordered under Rule 68 of the Rules

[7] Rule 92 bis, entitled "Proof of Facts Other Than by Oral Evidence" provides for circumstances under which a Trial Chamber may admit the evidence of a witness in the form of a written statement in lieu of oral testimony.

[8] By letter dated 23 December 2005, Nzirorera requested disclosure of "all reports, statements, or recordings of all interviews" with Juvénal Uwilingiyimana to the OTP. Nzirorera stated in his letter that he had "reason to believe that the material is exculpatory, relevant and necessary for the preparation of the defence… In addition, Mr. Nzirorera's defence team had interviewed Mr. Uwilingiyimana in the past and considered him a potential defence witness. Disclosure of the statements made to OTP is necessary to determine whether to seek to admit his evidence pursuant to Rule 92 bis." This request was rejected by the Prosecutor by letter dated 25 January 2006. The Prosecutor said, "Based on those conversations [with the Prosecutor's colleagues], and in light of my familiarity with the indictment against your client and the lines of defence that you have articulated, I have made the determination that the Prosecutor is not in possession of information from this witness that is exculpatory, relevant or necessary for the preparation of the defence… since his file does not contain exculpatory material, the Prosecutor will decline to disclose any portion of his file at this time."

[9] See, for example, Prosecutor v. Bagosora et al, ICTR Case N°98-41-T, Decision on Defence Request for Additional Disclosure of Investigative Reports and Statements, 25 August 2004, para. 6, concerning Rule 68.

8. Rule 68 of the Rules sets out the Prosecution's disclosure obligations in relation to exculpatory and other relevant material. Sub-Rule (A) places a duty upon the Prosecutor to disclose to the Defence any material which, in his actual knowledge, may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the accused or affect the credibility of Prosecution evidence. The timeframe stipulated is "as soon as practicable."

9. In order for the Defence to establish that the Prosecution has breached its disclosure obligations under Rule 68, and invoke an order from the Chamber that the material be disclosed, the Defence must: firstly, identify the material sought with the requisite specificity;[10] secondly, make a prima facie showing of the exculpatory or potentially exculpatory character of the materials requested;[11] and, thirdly, make a prima facie showing of the Prosecution's custody or control of the materials requested.[12] It has been held that information which contradicts that provided by a Prosecution witness is exculpatory within the meaning of Rule 68.[13]

10. The Chamber considers that the Defence has failed to satisfy the criteria invoking an interference with the Prosecution's determination under Rule 68 (A). In particular, the Chamber is not convinced that the Defence has presented prima facie evidence that the material sought is exculpatory within the meaning of the Rule. Nzirorera claims that Uwilingiyimana told him that the allegations of Omar Serushago were untrue. Other than his own assertions, Nzirorera relies upon a letter, purportedly from Juvénal Uwilingiyimana to the Prosecutor, the provenance of which has not been established, containing general allegations about misconduct of Prosecution investigators. It also contains an allegation, purportedly by Uwilingiyimana, that the testimony to be given by Omar Serushago is "rote". The Chamber is of the view that an allegation, purportedly by Uwilingiyimana, that Serushago's testimony before this Tribunal is "rote" is not sufficient to establish that the Prosecution has material which contradicts the testimony to be given by Serushago.

11. Nzirorera also claims that information from Uwilingiyimana is material to his cross-examination of Witnesses ADE and T and will raise issues concerning their credibility, though he does not provide any basis for such an assertion other than claiming that the material sought will expose Prosecution misconduct.[14] The Chamber is, therefore, presently unprepared to go behind the Prosecutor's assertion that his review of the material "presently suggests it is not exculpatory or undermining of other witnesses within the meaning of Rule 68."[15]

Whether Disclosure should be ordered under Rule 66 of the Rules

[14] With respect to Witness ADE, Nzirorera asserts that he was used as a 'tool' to encourage Uwilingiyimana to co-operate with the prosecution. No further basis or material is advanced to support this assertion. In relation to Witness T, Nzirorera asserts that Uwilingiyimana's information will expose the "Gestapo" tactics of the Prosecution in encouraging witnesses to turn against Nzirorera. Again no further basis or material is advanced to support this assertion.

[15] See letter from Prosecutor to Peter Robinson, dated 25 January 2006 (appearing as Annexure C to Nzirorera's Motion), as well as Prosecutor's Response, dated 1 February 2006, para. 5. See also "Prosecution Response to Nzirorera's Supplemental Motion for Stay of 13 February 2006 (Confidential), filed on 14 February 2006, para. 5.

12. Rule 66 of the Rules places an obligation upon the Prosecution to disclose certain materials falling within the ambit of that provision. Rule 66 (B) places an obligation upon the Prosecution, after receiving a request from the Defence,[16] to permit the Defence to "inspect any books, documents, photographs and tangible objects in his custody or control," which:

(1) are material to the preparation of the defence; or

(2) are intended for use by the Prosecutor as evidence at trial; or

(3) were obtained from or belonged to the accused.

13. The Defence submits that the "information provided by Mr. Uwilingiyimana" is material to the preparation of Nzirorera's defence. The Prosecution submits that sub-Rule (B) does not apply to material concerning a witness whom the Prosecution does not intend to call. In support of its position, the Prosecution submits that, as sub-Rule (A) refers to disclosure of witness statements of intended prosecution witnesses, Rule 66 (B) ought to be read in that context. Since the Prosecution has no intention of calling Juvénal Uwilingiyimana (as he is deceased), Rule 66 (B) does not apply to the material in question. The Defence argues that this is an incorrect interpretation of Rule 66 (B) and cites a number of decisions of the Tribunal wherein the Prosecution has been ordered to allow inspection of material under sub-Rule (B) which related to witnesses whom the Prosecution did not intend to call to testify.[17]

14. A simple reading of Rule 66 as a whole, as well as sub-Rule (B) in isolation, indicates that the Defence argument is the correct interpretation of sub-Rule (B). Rule 66 is entitled "Disclosure of Materials by the Prosecutor".[18] The Chamber considers that sub-Rules (A) and (B) are intended to cover separate categories of material; sub-Rule (A) referring to disclosure of statements of the accused and statements of witnesses, and sub-Rule (B) referring to inspection of other material not falling within the ambit of sub-Rule (A).

15. In order for the Defence to establish that the Prosecution has breached its disclosure obligations under Rule 66 and invoke an order from the Chamber that the material be made available for inspection, the Defence must, firstly, identify the material sought with the requisite specificity, and secondly, make a prima facie showing of the material's "materiality for the preparation of the Defence."[19] The materiality of the documents sought to be inspected may be determined by assessing whether they are necessary for the preparation of the cross-examination of a witness,[20] or by reference to the Indictment.[21] Furthermore, Rule 66 must be read in the context of Rule 70 which outlines materials exempt from Rule 66 disclosure. Pursuant to Rule 70 (A), reports, memoranda or other internal documents prepared by a party, its assistants or representatives in connection with the investigation or preparation of a case are not subject to disclosure under Rule 66.

16. In this case, the Chamber is of the view that the investigator's reports and/or notes sought by the Defence constitute "matters not subject to disclosure" pursuant to Rule 70 (A). Secondly, with respect to the specificity of the materials sought, the Chamber has noted, and has accepted, the Prosecution's assertion in open court that it is not in possession of any tape recordings and/or transcripts of interviews conducted between Uwilingiyimana and Prosecution investigators.[22] The Chamber is of the view that Nzirorera's references, throughout his Motion, to any or all "information obtained from Uwilingiyimana" lacks the specificity required under Rule 66. However, Nzirorera also seeks inspection of any statements taken from Uwilingiyimana, which request does have the requisite specificity. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution has admitted that it has in its possession at least one statement from Uwilingiyimana. The Chamber will therefore consider whether that statement is material to the preparation of the Defence.

17. In terms of materiality, Nzirorera submits that his inspection of the material is necessary for the preparation of his cross-examination of Serushago. The Prosecution does not actually respond to the merits of the Defence's application under Rule 66 (B) since the Prosecution says that, as a matter of law, Rule 66 (B) only applies to statements from witnesses whom it intends to call at trial. The Prosecution does, however, submit that Uwilingiyimana's statement is not material to any issue that the Defence has indicated that it wishes to put forth affirmatively, and that Nzirorera is "fishing" for material.

18. Whilst the Indictment against the Accused in this case does not specifically refer to Juvénal Uwilingiyimana as being part of the joint criminal enterprise of which the co-Accused were allegedly part, it states that the co-Accused were participants in the joint criminal enterprise with the following individuals and classes of persons:

> … (ii) political authorities at the national and regional level, including… (iii) influential businessmen, Akazu, and political party leaders affiliated with 'Hutu Power', including… (iv) leaders of the Interahamwe and Impuzaumpagambi political party 'youth wing' militias and the 'civil defense' program, including… The Prosecutor is unable to specifically identify each and every participant in the joint criminal enterprise."[23]

The allegations in the Indictment against Juvénal Uwilingiyimana put him within the aforementioned classes of persons. The Chamber also notes that the Indictment against Juvénal Uwilingiyimana specifically alleges that all three co-Accused in this case were the co-conspirators of Uwilingiyimana.[24]

19. The Chamber is of the view that Nzirorera has succeeded in establishing the prima facie materiality of the statement in the possession of the Prosecution from Uwilingiyimana. It is apparent from the passages in Serushago's statements, relied upon by the Defence for Nzirorera in its Motion, that Serushago will testify to specific allegations concerning Uwilingiyimana and Nzirorera which are relevant to specific paragraphs and counts in the Indictment against the co-Accused in this case.

20. The Chamber finds, therefore, that the criteria under Rule 66 (B) have been met by the Defence with respect to Uwilingiymana's statement. The Chamber also considers that any other material in the Prosecution's possession concerning Uwilingiyimana which does not fall within the ambit of the Rule 70 exception, and which relates to any allegations against the Accused linked with any paragraph or count in the Indictment, is material to the preparation of the Defence and should be disclosed.

FOR THOSE REASONS

Decision on Reconsideration of the Scheduling Order for the Next Trial Session Article 20 of the Statute of the Tribunal, Rule 73 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence 28 April 2006 (ICTR-98-44-T)

(Original : English)

Trial Chamber III

Judges : Dennis C. M. Byron, Presiding Judge ; Emile Francis Short ; Gberdao Gustave Kam

Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera – Modification a schedule decision, Video-conference testimony – Motion denied

Rules of Procedure and Evidence, rule 73 ; Statute, art. 20

1. The second trial session in this case was completed on 17 March 2006 after hearing the third Prosecution witness. At the Status Conference held the same day, the parties agreed that the next trial session will take place from 15 May until 14 July 2006. On the basis of these discussions, the order of witnesses to be heard at the third trial session was addressed by the Chamber.[1] While the next session is scheduled to start on 15 May 2006, the Chamber decided that the testimony of Witness T should take place by video-link from 22 May 2006 in order to preserve the fairness of the trial and the rights of the Accused Ngirumpatse to examine the witness.

2. The Prosecutor now moves the Chamber to reconsider its prior Scheduling Order of 30 March 2006 and order that the testimony of Witness T take place by video-link starting on 15 May 2006.[2] He submits that it would be quite impracticable to have Witness T begin his testimony on 22 May 2006 for three reasons. First, the authorities of the State where the Witness will give his evidence agreed with the Prosecutor before the Chamber gave its Order that the video-link will commence on 15 May 2006. Second, since the Prosecutor's Trial team is working with limited manpower, he submits that the trial preparation will have to be re-arranged so that two attorneys will have to meet with Witness T the week before his testimony. As a result, those trial attorneys will not be available in Arusha to examine the other witnesses that are assigned to them and that are mentioned in the Scheduling Order. Finally, in the Prosecutor's view, it is highly improbable that Witness ALG could complete his testimony in five days, if it started on 15 May 2006, which means that Witness ALG's testimony will have to be suspended for the beginning of Witness T's testimony on 22 May 2006.

3. In his Response, Joseph Nzirorera suggests that the trial session be scheduled to commence on 22 May 2006.[3] In his view, this will solve the Prosecutor's problem as well as that of the Ngirumpatse team. He also suggests that a Status Conference or Working session be held during the week of 15 May 2006 to deal with disclosure issues, as well as any practice direction and time scheduling for witnesses. The Prosecutor replies that Joseph Nzirorera's suggestion is reasonable under the circumstances and that it seems to be a reasonable compromise to deal with logistical challenges faced by the parties.[4] Mathieu Ngirumpatse also supports Nzirorera's suggestion.[5] Conversely, he firmly opposes the Prosecutor's application to begin on the 15 May 2006 with Witness T since it could affect his rights.

4. As the Chamber already stated, the authorities of the State where Witness T will reside during his testimony already confirmed their availability to support the organization of the video-link from 22 May 2006.[6] Further, in his Reply, the Prosecutor acknowledges that this witness could start his evidence from that date. This issue is therefore solved and does not need to be reconsidered.

5. The trial in this case started de novo in September 2005 and, so far, the Chamber has heard only three Prosecution witnesses. While the Chamber has sympathy for the Prosecutor's current situation amongst his trial team, it also must guarantee the rights of the Accused to a fair trial, including the right to be tried without undue delay. The trial should therefore start on 15 May 2006 and the Prosecution should be ready to call his first witness from that date.

6. In addition, the Chamber is of the view that all disclosure issues should be dealt with now. The parties are expected to cooperate in good faith in that matter and are strongly encouraged to find a prompt solution to all issues that might delay the continuation of the trial.

ACCORDINGLY, the Chamber

DENIES the Prosecutor's motion in its entirety.

appeal raises issues of whether the Trial Chamber provided Mr. Nzirorera with adequate time to prepare for cross-examination of a witness following the Prosecution's late disclosure of potentially exculpatory material that was relevant to that cross-examination as well as whether it applied the correct standard and followed proper procedures in declining to order additional disclosure.

Background

2. The trial in which this appeal arises is in the initial stages of the Prosecution case. The trial originally commenced on 27 November 2003 before a section of Trial Chamber III.[3] The Defence successfully challenged the composition of the Bench, and the Appeals Chamber ordered the trial to commence de novo.[4] The trial restarted on 19 September 2005,[5] and the Trial Chamber heard two witnesses during the first session, which lasted until 28 October 2005.

3. On 6 February 2006, before the commencement of the second trial session, Mr. Nzirorera requested the immediate disclosure of material relevant to the testimony of each of the witnesses scheduled to be heard during the upcoming session.[6] He claimed that the Prosecution had failed to provide these materials in violation of its obligations under Rules 66 (A) (ii) and 68 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal ("Rules").[7] As a remedy, he sought a sixty day stay of proceedings.[8]

4. In the Impugned Decision, the Trial Chamber agreed that the Prosecution had failed to comply with its disclosure obligations in respect of some of the material sought by Mr. Nzirorera.[9] However, it declined to stay the proceedings.[10] In addition, the Trial Chamber refused to order the production of other material, based on the Prosecution's undertaking that it either did not possess the documents or that they were not exculpatory.[11] Over Mr. Nzirorera's objection, the Trial Chamber commenced the testimony of Witness UB.[12] The testimony of Witness UB covered the entire second trial session, running from 16 February until 15 March 2006. The third trial session is scheduled to commence on 15 May 2006.

Discussion

A. Ground 1: Allegation that the Trial Chamber Erred in Failing to Provide a Remedy for Rule 66 and Rule 68 Violations It Found to Have Been Established

5. Under his first ground of appeal, Mr. Nzirorera focuses his submission on Rule 68 violations bearing on the testimony of Witness UB,[13] the only witness ultimately heard during the second trial session. These violations include the late disclosure of a judgement of a Rwandan court implicating

[10] Impugned Decision, pp. 8-10. The Appeals Chamber observes that, given the trial schedule, Mr. Nzirorera received the sixty day delay that he sought with respect to all witnesses other than Witnesses Mbonynkiza and UB, who have already testified.

Witness UB in killings[14] as well as statements of two individuals further incriminating the witness.[15] Mr. Nzirorera argues that, having found serious violations of the Prosecution's disclosure obligations, the Trial Chamber erred as a matter of law by failing to provide him with adequate time and facilities to prepare his defence in violation of his rights under Article 20 (4) (b) of the Statute.[16]

6. The Trial Chamber determined that, in the circumstances of the case, no prejudice resulted from the late disclosures because Mr. Nzirorera had some knowledge of the material, and the Prosecution provided the documents at the outset of the witness's testimony.[17] Mr. Nzirorera disagrees with this assessment and submits that he suffered prejudice because, in order to properly challenge Witness UB's credibility based on the material, he needed time to "digest" the material and to interview the individuals whose allegations underlie it.[18] In response, the Prosecution argues that Mr. Nzirorera had no right to a stay of proceedings in the circumstances of the case.[19]

7. The Prosecution's obligation to disclose potentially exculpatory material is essential to a fair trial.[20] However, not every violation of this important obligation implicates a violation of an accused's fair trial rights, warranting a remedy.[21] If a Rule 68 disclosure is extensive, parties are entitled to request an adjournment in order to properly prepare themselves.[22] The authority best placed to determine what time is sufficient for an accused to prepare his defence is the Trial Chamber conducting the case.[23]

8. Mr. Nzirorera raised the issue of his need for investigations arising from the late disclosure before the Trial Chamber.[24] In the Impugned Decision, the Trial Chamber expressly considered the impact of the late disclosure on Mr. Nzirorera's ability to prepare for Witness UB's testimony and determined that the late disclosure would not interfere with an effective cross-examination.[25] Furthermore, the Trial Chamber noted that it would provide appropriate additional relief on a case-by-case basis and indicated that it might be appropriate to recall the witness if further investigations warranted additional cross-examination.[26] In the present circumstances, the Appeals Chamber cannot say that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in declining to stay the proceedings. The Appeals Chamber considers that in long and complicated cases, it is necessary for a Trial Chamber to exercise its discretion to control the progress of the proceedings as appropriate, provided that it does not encroach on fair trial rights.[27]

9. Mr. Nzirorera contends that the Trial Chamber rejected his request for a stay of proceedings solely based on an erroneous reading of an oral decision in the Karera case.[28] Mr. Nzirorera notes that, in the Karera case, the Trial Chamber postponed the cross-examination of Witness UB, who also appeared in that trial, based on late disclosure.[29] However, he submits that in the Impugned Decision, the Trial Chamber erroneously described the holding in Karera as providing for the recall of the witness.[30] The Appeals Chamber does not accept Mr. Nzirorera's contention that the Trial Chamber reached the Impugned Decision on the basis of such a reading of the Karera decision. In refusing to stay the proceedings, the Trial Chamber engaged in a case-specific analysis of the impact of the late disclosure on Mr. Nzirorera's ability to cross-examine Witness UB.[31] The Trial Chamber also noted that it had a range of other possible remedies at its disposal, including postponing or excluding the witness's testimony.[32] Only then, did the Trial Chamber proceed to make its observations about the Karera decision.[33]

10. Mr. Nzirorera also contends that recall, as an exceptional measure, is an insufficient remedy.[34] The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that the adequacy of this remedy in this instance has not been tested given that Mr. Nzirorera has not yet sought to recall the witness. In addition, at this stage, it is also entirely unclear what evidentiary value, if any, the Trial Chamber will place on Witness UB's testimony in light of the existing cross-examination or further evidence and submissions provided during the proceedings.

11. Accordingly, this ground of appeal is dismissed.

B. Ground II: Allegation that the Trial Chamber Erred in Setting an Unreasonable Threshold for Proof of Rule 68 Violations It Did Not Find Had Been Established

12. Under his second ground of appeal, Mr. Nzirorera submits that the Trial Chamber erred in refusing to order the disclosure of additional material in the Prosecution's possession pertaining to Witnesses Mbonyunkiza, UB, GFA, and GBU.[35] He claims that members of his Defence team interviewed a number of individuals who acknowledged providing statements to the Prosecution which, in the Defence's view, contradicted the anticipated testimony of Prosecution witnesses about specific events.[36] In refusing to order disclosure of this material, Mr. Nzirorera argues that the Trial Chamber set an unreasonably high threshold for proof of a Rule 68 violation by requiring the Defence to have actual knowledge of the contents of the material in question before ordering disclosure.[37]

13. To establish a violation of the Rule 68 disclosure obligation, the Defence must (i) establish that additional material exists in the possession of the Prosecution; and (ii) present a prima facie case that the material is exculpatory.[38]

[38] Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement, para. 262; Kordić and Čerkez Appeal Judgement, para. 179; Brđanin Decision, p. 3.

14. The Prosecution admitted taking statements from some of the individuals, as alleged by the Defence, but did not consider the material to be exculpatory.[39] The Trial Chamber accepted a representation to this effect from the Prosecution, noting that the Defence did not refute it.[40]

15. Mr. Nzirorera claims that, in accepting this representation, the Trial Chamber failed to consider the history of the Prosecution's Rule 68 violations in this case, the Prosecution's "misguided view" of its Rule 68 obligations, as well as the likelihood that a witness to an important event who was not being called by the Prosecution would possess information which affected the credibility of its witness, describing the same event.[41] The Prosecution responds that it was open to the Trial Chamber to accept its representations.[42]

16. The Appeals Chamber can identify no error on the part of the Trial Chamber in declining to order the disclosure of the material in question. The responsibility for disclosing exculpatory material rests on the Prosecution, and the determination of what material meets Rule 68 disclosure requirements is primarily a facts-based judgement, falling within the Prosecution's responsibility.[43]

17. The Appeals Chamber cannot fault the Trial Chamber for requesting Mr. Nzirorera to provide an "evidentiary basis" for his claims that the material fell within the scope of Rule 68, contrary to the assertions of the Prosecution.[44] The Trial Chamber is entitled to assume that the Prosecution is acting in good faith.[45] The Appeals Chamber observes that Mr. Nzirorera supported his assertion that the Prosecution possessed exculpatory material based on the representations of his counsel recounting interviews with individuals who claimed that they provided the Prosecution with contradictory accounts of certain events.[46] Although the Trial Chamber would have been within its discretion to order the Prosecution to disclose the material in question on the basis of such representations, the Appeals Chamber cannot conclude that it abused its discretion in declining to do so.

18. The Appeals Chamber also does not agree that, in reaching its decision, the Trial Chamber failed to adequately consider the history of disclosure violations in this case.[47] The Trial Chamber expressly stated that it had been requested to draw various inferences from prior disclosure disputes, which Mr. Nzirorera raised during oral argument.[48] Moreover, in accepting the Prosecution's representations, the Trial Chamber emphasized that the administration of justice depended on the integrity of the Prosecution and indicated its willingness to consider sanctions if the Prosecution declarations were inaccurate.[49]

19. Accordingly, this ground of appeal is dismissed.

20. Finally, under his third ground of appeal, Mr. Nzirorera submits that the Trial Chamber erred by refusing to inspect the disputed material in camera.[50] The Appeals Chamber observes, however, that Rule 68 (D) requires inspection in camera of materials only where the Prosecution seeks to be relieved of its disclosure obligation as a result of possible prejudice to ongoing investigations, or because disclosure may be contrary to the public interest or the security interests of a state. Given that the Prosecution has the primary responsibility to make disclosure determinations under Rule 68,[51] the Appeals Chamber does not find any error on the Trial Chamber's part in declining to inspect the documents in camera.

21. Accordingly, this ground of appeal is dismissed.

Disposition

22. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber DISMISSES the Nzirorera Appeal in all respects and DISMISSES his motion for a stay of proceedings pending the disposition of the appeal as moot.

Introduction

1. The Prosecutor moves the Chamber to order special protective measures for Witness ADE[1], by hearing his testimony via video-link, in closed session, and restricting disclosure of documents and information relating to the said witness. The motion was supported by additional oral arguments on the alleged security problems of Witness ADE, in response to a request from the Chamber.[2]

[2] T. 17 March 2006, Status Conference (Closed session).

2. The Prosecutor contends that Witness ADE is unwilling to travel to Arusha due to fears for his safety stemming from his position as an AKAZU insider; that his expected testimony is important as he will be adducing evidence on the alleged functioning of the "AKAZU", one of the groups alleged in the indictment to have been included in the joint criminal enterprise with the three Accused; and that hearing the testimony via video-link is in the interests of justice and will not compromise the Accused's right to a fair trial.

Discussion

Video-Link Testimony

3. The Defence for Nzirorera and for Ngirumpatse oppose the Motion.[3] They agree that the testimony of Witness ADE is important but contend that this should be a reason for ensuring the witness' attendance in Arusha to facilitate cross-examination and proper assessment of the witness' credibility. They stress that there is no factual justification regarding any fear for the safety of Witness ADE and the Tribunal should be able to provide the same security guarantees in Arusha as in The Hague. They argue that the Prosecutor is confusing the personal interest of Witness ADE with the interests of justice and that any agreement made between Witness ADE and the Prosecutor assuring the witness that his testimony will take place via video-link usurps the function of the Chamber and should not be considered.

4. The Chamber's preference is that Witness ADE should be heard at the Tribunal's seat in Arusha, a principle enshrined in Rule 90 (A) of the Rules. However, this principle does not preclude a witness from testifying by video-link where it is in the interests of justice, as established by this Tribunal's jurisprudence. Although the Rules do not expressly provide for the taking of direct trial testimony via video-link, Trial Chambers of this Tribunal have held that such testimony may be ordered under either Rules 54 or 75.[4] In making such a determination, the Chamber will consider the importance of the testimony; the inability or unwillingness of the witness to attend; and whether a good reason has been adduced for the inability or unwillingness to attend.[5]

5. The Chamber notes that the Prosecutor and the Defence are in agreement that the evidence of Witness ADE is important. Since Witness ADE is alleged to be an insider of the "AKAZU" with information about its operation and functioning, the Chamber accepts that his evidence is undoubtedly important to the Prosecutor's case. On the basis of the submissions made by the Prosecutor, the Chamber accepts that Witness ADE's concerns about his security in Arusha are well founded and genuine. The Chamber recalls that in its Decision relating to special protective measures for Witnesses G and T, it rejected the contention raised by the Defence, that the use of a video-link could impair its ability to assess the credibility of a witness' testimony, and restates that with respect to the Defence arguments concerning limitations on its ability to observe the demeanour of Witness ADE and to challenge his credibility, the Chamber is of the view that these matters are not affected by his testimony by video-link.[6]

6 The Defence refers to the Zigiranyirazo case in which the Trial Chamber was concerned by the ability to accurately assess the testimony and demeanour of a witness who is testifying by video-link and finally expressed the wish to hear Witness ADE uninterrupted and in person at the location where the witness resides.[7] The Chamber notes that the same Trial Chamber has rendered a Decision allowing a Prosecutor Witness to testify via video-link.[8] Previously, this Chamber had taken Witnesses G and T testimonies by video-link.[9] In the present case, this Chamber is of the view that the taking of Witness ADE's testimony by video-link will neither impair the Chamber's assessment of his credibility nor infringe the Accused's rights under Article 20 (4) (e) of the Statute of the Tribunal.[10] It is satisfied that it is in the interests of justice to order the taking of the testimony by video-link.

7. Accordingly the alternative defence request that the Chamber hear Witness ADE's testimony by sitting in The Hague, in the presence of the Accused and their Counsel is rejected.

Closed Session

8 The Chamber considers that due to the protective orders presently in place for Witness ADE, discussions of these particular requests should take place in closed session. The Chamber is of the view that all hearings concerning the planning and scheduling of the video-link testimony and/or concerning the details of the special protective measures already in place for Witness ADE, including his movements, are excluded from the public and the press and remain confidential. However, depending on the circumstances, and on a case-by-case basis, the Chamber will consider whether parts of Witness ADE's testimony should be heard in closed session.

Restrictions on disclosures

9 The Prosecutor also asks the Chamber to order that the Defence Counsel and the Accused shall not disclose any documents or information relating to Witness ADE to anybody, including other Defence teams, except the persons working in the Defence teams in the present case, and that no identifying information regarding ADE be disclosed to the public. The Chamber recalls that this measure is already covered by Order Number 5 of the Chamber's Decision of 10 December 2004 granting protective measures for all witnesses.[11] There is no need to make a new determination on this point as the said Decision is still in force.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS in part the Prosecutor's Motion, and

II. ORDERS as follows:

a) That the testimony of Witness ADE shall be taken via a secure audiovideo transmission link, and be broadcast live to the seat of the Tribunal in Arusha, in the presence of all the parties;

Introduction

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. The Amended Indictment charges Édouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera with genocide committed by means of a joint criminal enterprise. In the alternative, it charges the Accused persons with complicity in genocide also committed by means of a joint criminal enterprise.[1]

2. On 5 September 2005, the parties were heard on a preliminary motion challenging the applicability of joint criminal enterprise liability to complicity in genocide.[2] The Chamber found that this challenge was premature, because the count of complicity in genocide was pleaded as an alternative to the count of genocide. In the Chamber's view, in the event that the count of genocide was proved, the issue would become moot. The Chamber's deliberations on the matter were therefore reserved.[3] Following Joseph Nzirorera's successful interlocutory appeal of this Decision, the Appeals Chamber ordered the Trial Chamber to render a decision on whether the Appellant could be tried for complicity in genocide under an extended joint criminal enterprise theory.[4]

Discussion

3. Joseph Nzirorera, joined by Ngirumpatse and Karemera, argues that complicity in genocide is a form of liability and, as such, cannot be committed through a joint criminal enterprise since the latter is also a form of accomplice liability.[5] They therefore contend that there is no jurisdiction to prosecute complicity through the extended form of joint criminal enterprise.

4. The Prosecution denies that complicity in genocide is a mode of liability and it submits that complicity in genocide must be considered as a separate crime.[6] In its view, a person can therefore be found guilty of complicity in genocide through the extended form of joint criminal enterprise if the other member of the joint criminal enterprise is an accomplice in genocide, if that was a natural and foreseeable consequence of the enterprise, and if the accused was both aware of this, and with that awareness, participated in the enterprise.[7]

5. Joint criminal enterprise does not appear expressly in the Statute nor in the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. This legal concept appeared for the first time in the Tadić Appeals Judgment of 15 July 1999.[8] According to established jurisprudence, joint criminal enterprise is considered as a form of participation in a crime coming from the word committing contained in Article 7(1) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for former Yugoslavia and Article 6 (1) of this Tribunal's Statute.

As the Appeals Chamber recently reiterated, it is clear that there is a basis in customary international law for joint criminal enterprise liability.[9] It is also well established that joint criminal enterprise can apply to the crime of genocide.[10]

6. Conversely, complicity in genocide is explicitly provided for Article 2 (3) of the Statute.[11] Chambers have defined complicity as referring to

> "all acts of assistance or encouragement that have substantially contributed to, or have had a substantial effect on, the completion of the crime of genocide".[12]

7. Contrary to the Prosecution's assertion, jurisprudence of both ad hoc Tribunals has determined that complicity is one of the forms of criminal responsibility that is applicable to the crime of genocide, and not a crime itself.[13] There is no need for this Chamber to reiterate this explicit finding of the Appeals Chamber, which has been constantly applied by Trial Chambers of both ad hoc Tribunals on this matter.[14]

For the purpose of this Statute, « genocide » means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such:
(a) Killing members of the group;
(b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;

8. Whereas the genocide is the crime, joint criminal enterprise and complicity in genocide are two modes of liability, two methods by which the crime of genocide can be committed and individuals held responsible for this crime. It is therefore impossible to plead that complicity in genocide has been committed by means of a joint criminal enterprise. Complicity can only be pleaded as a form of liability for the crime of genocide.

9. Furthermore, since an individual cannot be both the principal perpetrator of a particular act and the accomplice thereto, it is well recognized that complicity must be pleaded as an alternative form of responsibility.[15]

10. In the present case, the Chamber will therefore consider the count of complicity as a pleading of a specific form of participation in the crime of genocide alternatively to the forms pleaded under the count of genocide. In that regard, there is no need to file a new Amended Indictment.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS the Defence Motions in part;

II. DECIDES that there is no jurisdiction to prosecute complicity through the form of a joint criminal enterprise; and

III. DECIDES that the Amended Indictment against the Accused must be understood as pleading complicity in genocide as an alternative form of participation in the crime of genocide.

While Judge Short agrees with the outcome of the decision, he will be filing a Separate Opinion.

N°IT-02-60-T, Judgment (TC), 17 January 2005, para. 684. The Trial Chamber further noted that "in this case, the Prosecution, when submitting the elements of complicity in genocide, explicitly referred to it as a form of liability and not as a crime".

[15] Bagilishema Judgment (TC), para. 67: In the Chamber's view, genocide and complicity in genocide are two different forms of participation in the same offence. The Chamber thus concurs with the opinion expressed in Akayesu that "an act with which an Accused is being charged cannot, therefore, be characterized both as an act of genocide and an act of complicity in genocide as pertains to this accused. Consequently, since the two are mutually exclusive, the same individual cannot be convicted of both crimes for the same act". Therefore, the Chamber finds that an accused cannot be convicted of both genocide and complicity in genocide on the basis of the same acts.

Separate Opinion of Judge Short on Complicity in Genocide and Joint Criminal Enterprise Theory
Articles 2 and 6 (1) of the Statute and Rule 72 of the Rules of Procedure of Evidence
23 May 2006 (ICTR-98-44-T)

Separate Opinion of Judge Short

1. I support the conclusion reached in the Decision of 18 May 2006 to the extent that it upheld the Defence submission that the Accused in this case cannot be tried for complicity in genocide under an extended form of joint criminal enterprise ('JCE'). However, I am unable to agree with part of the reasoning in that Decision. I also disagree with the scope of the ruling.

2. First, I am of the view that the Chamber's Decision should have been limited to a consideration of the question which the Appeals Chamber directed it to answer, and which was the subject of the Defence preliminary motions which ultimately became the subject of Nzirorera's appeal. That narrow question relates to whether or not the Accused in this case can be tried for complicity in genocide under an extended joint criminal enterprise theory.[1] Findings with respect to the pleading of complicity and JCE in general were not necessary for the Decision.

3. In the course of their preliminary motions concerning this question, as well as during the oral hearing of 5 September 2005, the Accused argued against pleading complicity in genocide pursuant to a theory of extended JCE on two different grounds. The first ground was a theoretical one, namely, that since both complicity in genocide and JCE are modes of liability, they cannot be pleaded together, since it would amount to pleading that a mode of liability (complicity in genocide) had been committed by means of a JCE. The second ground was a factual one relating specifically to the Count of complicity in genocide in the Indictment against the co-Accused (Count four). With respect to this leg of the Defence argument, the Accused argued that it is factually impossible for the Prosecution to prove the allegations concerning complicity in genocide and extended JCE together, as pleaded in the Indictment.

4. The Decision of 18 May 2006 was based upon findings made with respect to the first of the aforementioned arguments – that since complicity in genocide is a mode of liability, another mode of liability (JCE) cannot be pleaded with respect to it.

5. I have reviewed the relevant provisions of the Statute, as well as the jurisprudence relied upon in the Decision, and I am unable to reach the same conclusion with respect to the status of complicity in genocide. Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute of the Tribunal outline the subject matter jurisdiction of this Tribunal – genocide, crimes against humanity, and violations of common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II thereto, respectively. Article 2 (1) vests jurisdiction in the Tribunal with respect to the crime of genocide, as defined in paragraph 2, or any of the other acts outlined in paragraph 3 of that Article. Paragraph 3 provides:

> The following acts shall be punishable:
> (a) Genocide;
>
> (b) Conspiracy to commit genocide;
>
> (c) Direct and public incitement to commit genocide;

[1] Karemera et al. v. Prosecutor, Case N°ICTR-98-44AR72.5 and ICTR-98-44-AR72.6, Decision on Jurisdictional Appeals: Joint Criminal Enterprise (AC), 12 April 2006, para. 25 (c).

(e) Complicity in genocide.[2]

It is clear that the so-called "acts" referred to in Articles 2 (3) (a) and (b) – genocide and conspiracy to commit genocide – are individual crimes. So are "attempt to commit genocide" and "direct and public incitement to commit genocide", which are inchoate offences. However, the contention with respect to the status of complicity in genocide, mentioned in paragraph 3 (e), arises as a result of an overlap between "complicity" in Article 2 (3) (e) of the Statute and forms of accomplice liability in Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[3]

6. The Decision of 18 May 2006 found that "complicity is one of the forms of criminal responsibility that is applicable to the crime of genocide, and not a crime itself", and that this was an "explicit finding" of the Appeals Chamber.[4] In reaching such a finding, the Decision relied upon a number of decisions of the ad hoc Tribunals which, it said, made such a determination.

7. I do not agree with that interpretation of the jurisprudence. In my view, none of the Appeals Chamber jurisprudence relied upon in the Decision as authority for the proposition that complicity is one of the forms of criminal responsibility that is applicable to the crime of genocide, and not a crime itself, makes such an explicit finding. However, it is conceded that such an explicit statement of law was made concerning the status of complicity in genocide in the Blagojevic and Jokic case:

> Since complicity in genocide, as recently reiterated by the Krstic Appeal Chamber, is a form of liability of the crime of genocide and not a crime itself, Article 7 (3) cannot but refer to the crime of genocide.[5]

This statement was made by a Trial Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, and, in my view, relied upon passages of the Krstic Appeals Chamber Decision[6] which did not make such a categorical finding. The remaining Trial Chamber jurisprudence touching upon this issue is inconsistent and in no way categorical in its treatment of complicity in genocide.[7]

8. In my view, complicity in genocide has the indicia of a criminal offence, whilst encompassing a particular mode of liability. It is often charged as an alternative count to the count of genocide, as in the Indictment in this case, and can result in a finding of guilt for "complicity in genocide". In the case of Semanza, for example, the Accused, who was charged with Counts of genocide and complicity in genocide in the alternative, was found not guilty of genocide and convicted of complicity in genocide.[8] It certainly cannot be said that the Accused in that case was convicted of a mode of liability. I am therefore of the view that the term "complicity in genocide" referred to under Article 2 (3) (e) is a crime (genocide) to which a particular mode of criminal responsibility is attached (complicity, or accomplice liability).

9. In my view, however, the question of whether or not the Accused in this case can be tried on a Count of complicity in genocide under an extended joint criminal enterprise theory cannot be resolved by attempting to place complicity in genocide within a 'crime' or 'mode of liability' category. It is clear from the jurisprudence of both Tribunals that a count of "complicity in genocide" has come to refer to accomplice liability for the crime of genocide – that is, aiding, abetting, or otherwise assisting a principal offender in the commission of one or more of the acts proscribed by Article 2 (2).[9] Furthermore, stating that the term "complicity in genocide" under Article 2 (3) (e) refers to a mode of liability does not resolve the issue concerning whether or not an extended form of JCE can be pleaded with it.

10. Instead, I am of the view that it is preferable to resolve this question by reference to the Indictment in this case – that is, by addressing the second leg of the Defence argument that it is factually impossible for the Prosecution to prove the allegations of complicity in genocide committed by means of extended form JCE liability, as outlined in the Indictment. In order to do so, it is necessary to set out the relevant provisions of the Amended Indictment.

11. Paragraph four of the Amended Indictment in this case, whilst attributing Article 6 (1) responsibility to the Accused for the crimes referred to in Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute, states that the term "committing" in the Indictment also refers to participation in a JCE a co-perpetrator. Paragraph five of the Indictment then goes on to set out the allegation concerning the Accused's participation in a JCE. It also states that the purpose of the JCE was "the destruction of the Tutsi population in Rwanda through the commission of crimes in violation of Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute…" Paragraph six outlines the alleged participants in the JCE, including the Accused, certain named individuals, and classes of persons.

12. Paragraph seven of the Indictment states that the crime[10] of complicity in genocide (Count four), amongst others, was within the object of the JCE. It goes on to state that the crime of complicity in genocide was the natural and foreseeable consequence of the execution of the object of the JCE and that the accused were aware that this crime was the possible outcome of the execution of the JCE. This is therefore the main statement of the allegation that the co-Accused committed complicity in genocide by virtue of the fact that the commission of that crime, by others, was a natural and foreseeable consequence of their participation in a JCE.

13. Count four, complicity in genocide, is charged as an alternative crime to Count three, genocide. Under Count four, the Accused (the accomplices) are alleged to have instigated or provided the means to other persons (the principal offenders) to commit genocidal acts. Paragraphs 34 to 66 of the Indictment contain the substance of the allegations against the Accused with respect to their Article 6 (1) or 6 (3) responsibility for the crime of genocide, or alternatively, form the basis of the case against them with respect to their Article 6 (1) liability for complicity in genocide. The anomaly in this pleading is that, rather than outlining the acts of the Accused's co-perpetrators, which result in criminal responsibility attaching to the Accused by virtue of the extended form of JCE, paragraphs 34-66 contain, for the most part, allegations concerning the acts of one or more of the co-Accused in this case. This pleading with respect to complicity in genocide is entirely inconsistent with the way in which extended form JCE liability is pleaded in the Indictment.

14. Furthermore, a problem arises in terms of the underlying offence in both cases – the purpose of the joint criminal enterprise, and the unintended but foreseeable crime giving rise to extended form

[9] Those are:
(a) Killing members of the group;
(b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;
(c) Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part;
(d) Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group;
(e) Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.
with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such.

[10] The Indictment contemplates 'complicity in genocide' as a 'crime', and makes several references to it being as such.

joint criminal enterprise liability – being genocide. The Indictment establishes that the purpose of the JCE entered into by the Accused was the destruction of the Tutsi population through the commission of genocidal acts outlined in Article 2 (2), amongst other things.[11] The third or "extended" category of joint criminal enterprise liability allows conviction of a participant in a joint criminal enterprise for certain crimes committed by other participants in the joint criminal enterprise, even though those crimes were outside the common purpose of the enterprise, if he or she intended to further the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise and the crime was a natural and foreseeable consequence of that common purpose.[12] The third form of JCE liability is therefore intended to cover the commission of a crime or crimes which were outside the common purpose of the enterprise. The inconsistency, in this case, is that both the purpose of the JCE, and Count four, contemplate the offence of genocide, even though Count four contemplates the commission of that offence through a particular mode of liability. In my view, the extended form of JCE was not intended to cover this type of scenario. Rather, it was meant to attach liability to the Accused for offences not contemplated by the agreement, but nonetheless foreseeable.

SITTING as Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED of the "Motion for Disclosure of Closed Session Transcripts and Exhibits Under Seal for Certain Defence Witnesses", filed by the Defence for Nzirorera on 2 May 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. Joseph Nzirorera, an Accused in the trial of The Prosecutor v. Karemera et al., requests disclosure pursuant to Rule 75 (G) (i) of the closed session transcripts and exhibits filed under seal in respect of seven Defence witnesses heard in the present case: BDR-1, LIG-1, NR-1, LM-1, BZ-1, LK-2 and YD-1. These witnesses are said to have been called to rebut the testimony of Prosecution Witnesses ZF and XBM, both of whom are also about to testify for the Prosecution in the Karemera et al. trial.[1]

2. Confidential inter partes material may be disclosed to a party in another case provided that the applicant demonstrates that it "is likely to assist that applicant's case materially, or […] there is a good chance that it would." This standard can be met by showing that there is a factual nexus between the two cases.[2]

3. Nzirorera submits that he wishes to confront Witnesses ZF and XBM with contradictory testimony offered by the seven Defence witnesses in this case, and that he needs to know their identities and the content of their closed session testimony for this purpose. The Chamber accepts that there is a good chance that this information would materially assist the Defence. Moreover, disclosure would place the Defence on an even footing with the Prosecution, which under an Appeals Chamber decision of October last year, has access to this material for the purpose of discharging its obligation to identify and disclose exculpatory information which might be heard in other trials.[3]

4. Disclosure orders of this kind routinely require that the party in receipt of the confidential material shall be bound, mutatis mutandis, by the applicable witness protection orders.[4] The Chamber is concerned, however, that those conditions may not be sufficient in the present circumstances. The record does not show whether any particular sensitivities or witness protection interests might be engaged by broader disclosure of these witnesses' identities. The present case is distinguishable in that respect from two recent disclosure decisions, in which it was apparent that the witnesses in question had already revealed their participation as protected witnesses in the first proceedings to Defence counsel in the second proceedings.[5]

5. In similar circumstances, the Appeals Chamber has additionally required that the party in receipt of the confidential material:

[1] The first four are said to be relevant to the testimony of Witness ZF, whereas the last three are germane to Witness XBM.

[2] Blagojević and Jokić, Decision on Momčilo Perišić's Motion Seeking Access to Confidential Material in the Blagojević and Jokić Case (AC), 18 January 2006, para. 4; Prosecutor v. Galić, Decision on Momčilo Perišić's Motion Seeking Access to Confidential Material in the Galić Case (AC), 16 February 2006, para. 3 (with further references).

[3] Bagosora et al,. Decision on Interlocutory Appeals of Decision on Witness Protection Orders (AC), 6 October 2005, paras. 44-46. Parity of access is an argument for disclosure: Prosecutor v. Blagojević and Jokić, Decision on Motions for Access to Confidential Materials (AC), 16 November 2005, para. 11 ("The Prosecution has access to those filings, and given Mr. Nikolić's demonstration of the nexus between the two cases, the principle of equality of arms supports giving Mr. Nikolic a similar chance to understand the proceedings and evidence in the Blagojević and Jokić case and evaluate their relevance to his own case"); Bagosora et al., Decision on Zigiranyirazo Motion for Disclosure of Closed Session Testimony of Witness DM-190 (TC), 16 May 2006, para. 5. The applicant has not here argued that the requested testimony is exculpatory. If that were the case, as suggested by the Appeals Chamber, the information would be automatically disclosable under Rule 75 (F). Bagosora et al, Decision on Interlocutory Appeals of Decision on Witness Protection Orders (AC), 6 October 2005, paras. 44-45. In fact, access by the Prosecution team in Karemera et al. to protected Defence witness information in the Bagosora et al. case enables it to comply with its obligations under Rule 68 to disclose exculpatory material. This is not to suggest that the material actually is exculpatory, but simply that the record does not show whether this more direct avenue of disclosure has been pursued.

[4] See e.g. Bagosora et al., Decision on Motion By Nzirorera for Disclosure of Closed Session Testimony of Witness ZF (TC), 11 November 2003, p. 3.

[5] Rwamakuba, Decision on Bagosora Motion for Disclosure of Closed Session Testimony of Witness 3/13 (TC), para. 5 (witness already scheduled to appear as a protected witness in the second proceedings); Bagosora et al., Decision on Zigiranyirazo Motion for Disclosure of Closed Session Testimony of Witness DM-190 (TC), 16 May 2006, para. 5 (witness had met with Defence counsel in second proceedings and expressed willingness to testify as a protected witness).

shall not, without express leave of the Appeals Chamber based on a finding that it has been sufficiently demonstrated that third-party disclosure is necessary for the preparation of the defence of the Applicant:

(a) disclose to any third party, the names of witnesses, their whereabouts, transcripts of witness testimonies, exhibits, or any information which would enable them to be identified and would breach the confidentiality of the protective measures already in place;

(b) disclose to any third party, any documentary evidence or other evidence, or any written statement of a witness or the contents, in whole or in part, of any non-public evidence, statement or prior testimony; or

(c) contact any witness whose identity was subject to protective measures.[6]

Counsel may use the closed session testimony of the seven Defence witnesses in order to elicit responses to the substantive propositions therein, but may not disclose their identity, or information which likely would do so, to the Prosecution witnesses. The contrary would mean that the identity of a protected witness could be revealed to any other protected witness, a practice which would seriously undermine witness protection.

6. The Chamber authorizes the other Accused in the Karemera et al. trial to have the same access to this material, on the same conditions.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion;

DECLARES that the Nzirorera Defence and the Accused personally, and any other Accused and Defence team, shall be bound mutatis mutandis by the terms of the applicable witness protection orders upon receipt of the confidential material;[7]

ORDERS that in addition to the existing witness protection measures, the party in receipt of material under this order shall not, without express leave of this Chamber based on a finding that it has been sufficiently demonstrated that third-party disclosure is necessary for the preparation of the defence of the Applicant:

(a) disclose to any third party, the names of witnesses, their whereabouts, transcripts of witness testimonies, exhibits, or any information which would enable them to be identified and would breach the confidentiality of the protective measures already in place;
(b) disclose to any third party, any documentary evidence or other evidence, or any written statement of a witness or the contents, in whole or in part, of any non-public evidence, statement or prior testimony; or
(c) contact any witness whose identity was subject to protective measures.

Introduction

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. On 15 December 2005, at the Prosecution's request filed ex parte,[1] the Chamber granted the renewal and extension of the transfer of the detained witness Omar Serushago temporarily to the UNDF in Arusha until the completion of his testimony in the current trial.[2]

2. Following that Order, the Defence for Nzirorera moved the Chamber to unseal the Prosecution Motion to renew and extend transfer Order of Omar Serushago, filed ex parte on 8 December 2005.[3] It further moved the Chamber for an Order that no confidential ex parte motion can be filed by one party without notice of the fact of such filing to the other party at the time the filing is made. The Prosecution requested this motion to be denied in its entirety.[4]

Discussion

3. As this Chamber has stated several times in the present case,[5] as a general rule, applications must be filed inter partes. Ex parte applications are nevertheless appropriate, and even required, in certain circumstances. They are not necessarily contrary to the fairness of the proceedings. The fundamental principle is that

> "ex parte proceedings should be entertained only where it is thought to be necessary in the interests of justice to do so – that is, justice to everyone concerned – in the circumstances already stated: where the disclosure to the other party or parties in the proceedings of the information conveyed by the application, or of the fact the application itself, would be likely to prejudice unfairly either the party making the application or some person or persons involved in or related to that application."[6]

This Chamber has also held that the principle of audi alteram partem requires that filings be disclosed to the opposing party, absent a compelling reason not to do so.[7]

4. The Chamber is of the view that the law on the admission of ex parte filings is clear and guarantees the right of each party. The Chamber has decided and will continue to decide any ex parte filing on a case-by-case basis in accordance with that law. The Defence motion seeking a general declaration of law is not warranted.

5. In particular, in the Decision of 15 December 2005, the Chamber explicitly addressed the issue of the ex parte filing made by the Prosecution and accepted it to be in the interests of justice.[8]

6. The Defence has not submitted any argument to reconsider this Chamber's finding. The Chamber does not find any merit for reconsideration of this finding. The application to unseal the Prosecution Motion to Renew and Extend Transfer Order of Detained Prosecution Witness Omar Serushago, filed on 8 December 2005, falls therefore to be rejected.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Defence Motion in its entirety.

Interim Order on Defence Motion for Subpoena to Meet with Defence Witness NZ1 31 May 2006 (ICTR-98-44-T)

(Original : English)

Trial Chamber III

Judges : Dennis C. M. Byron, Presiding Judge ; Emile Francis Short ; Gberdao Gustave Kam

Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera – Subpoena issued only when the witness is uncooperative, Choose for alternative method to make the determination of the witness' willingness to participate in this case

International Cases cited :

I.C.T.Y.: Appeals Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Radislav Krstić, Decision on Application for subpoenas, 1 July 2003 (IT-98-33)

1. On 23 January 2006, Nzirorera moved, pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute of the Tribunal and Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, for the Chamber to issue a subpoena to Defence Witness NZ1[1] to meet with Counsel for the Accused and to the State[2] where he is located to cooperate in facilitating such a meeting. Nzirorera stated that the witness refuses to meet with him and that the witness had been contacted by the Prosecution in the past.

2. The Appeals Chamber in Krstic stated that where a prospective witness had been previously uncooperative with the defence, issuing a subpoena would only occur if the Chamber considered that it was reasonably likely that there will be cooperation if such an order were made.[3] However that Chamber also stated that such a determination may not be safely made by the Defence alone, and proposed some alternative suggestions such as requesting the assistance of the Prosecution or ordering a subpoena for the witness to appear before the Trial Chamber to discuss the importance of his cooperation to assist in producing a just result in the trial and that he will be afforded protection by the Tribunal if required.[4]

3. Due to the particular circumstances of this case, and the alleged position of the witness during the events in Rwanda in 1994, the Chamber finds it necessary to have an alternative method to make the determination of the witness' willingness to participate in this case before it decides the Motion. In accordance with Rule 33 of the Rules, the Chamber is of the view that the Registry may assist in that order.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. REQUESTS the Registry to make its best efforts to contact the witness and convey to him the Chamber's desire for his cooperation in this case and that if required, protective measures can be afforded to him. A report on these efforts should be made to the Chamber as soon as possible, but no later than 15 June 2006.

Protais Zigiranyirazo, Decision on the Prosecution Motion for Witness BPP to Testify by Video-link, 27 March 2006 (ICTR-2001-73)

Introduction

1. The third trial session in this case started on 15 May 2006. Prosecution Witness ADE will most likely be heard during the next trial session. On 3 May 2006, at the Prosecution's request, the Chamber granted this witness special protective measures, including hearing the witness' testimony by video-link.[1] Each co-Accused seeks now certification to appeal that Decision.[2] The Prosecution opposes these applications.[3]

Discussion

2. Rule 73 (B) of the Rules provides that Decisions rendered under Rule 73 motions are without interlocutory appeal. However, the Rule confers a discretion on the Chamber to grant certification to appeal when certain clearly delimited conditions are fulfilled: the applicant must show (i) how the impugned Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect a fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and (ii) that an "immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings".

3*. Each co-Accused claims that the requirements for a certification to appeal, as set out by Rule 73(B) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, are met. Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Edouard Karemera submit that a systematic authorization to hear the most important Prosecution witness via video-link affects the right of the co-Accused to cross-examine the witness. According to Mathieu Ngirumpatse, it would be as if the Chamber was ratifying the Prosecution's deal with its witness. Edouard Karemera claims that taking testimony via video-link diminishes the ability of the opposing party, to assess the witness' credibility. He also claims that the Trial Chamber did not take into account his arguments in the Decision of 3 May 2006. In Joseph Nzirorera's view, because of the importance of Witness ADE's testimony, taking the witness' testimony by video-link deprives him of the right to personally confront the witness, violates his right to adequate cross-examination and therefore his right to a fair trial. Each co-Accused further contends that a resolution by the Appeals Chamber will also materially advance the proceedings because if the Appeals Chamber ruled in their favor, they would be able to hear the witness live, while respecting the rights the Accused. In Joseph Nzirorera's view, a finding at a later stage that the Chamber erred will require taking the testimony anew, either before the Appeals Chamber or at a new trial. Joseph Nzirorera finally argues that a resolution by the Appeals Chamber may resolve an issue in which there are two directly contradictory decisions. The Accused makes reference to the Trial Chamber's Decision in the Zigiranyirazo case, where the Chamber denied the video-link motion to hear Witness ADE and found that it will benefit from the physical presence of the Accused.[4]

5. The two conditions set out in Rule 73 (B) are cumulative and are not determined on the merits of the appeal against the impugned Decision. The Appeals Chamber further stated that the certification to appeal must remain exceptional,[5] and even the absolute exception when deciding on the admissibility of the evidence.[6]

6. In the present case, the Chamber did not grant a blanket authorization that important Prosecution witnesses shall always be heard by video-link. On the contrary, it has considered each application to hear testimony by video-link on a case-by-case basis. The Accused will not be deprived of their right to confront the witness, nor to assess his demeanor and credibility, since they will cross-examine him from the seat of the Tribunal. Moreover, the Chamber was satisfied that it will be able to assess the witness' demeanor and credibility. The Chamber is not satisfied that the co-Accused have shown that the Impugned Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect a fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial.

7. Moreover, like the Trial Chamber in the Zigiranyirazo case, this Chamber made its own findings on its own assessment of the facts. There is no difference in the interpretation of the law made by the two Chambers but it is the application to each specific case which resulted in a different conclusion.[7] An Appeals Chamber ruling is therefore not warranted.

8. Finally, contrary to Karemera's assertion, the Chamber has not failed to take into consideration his arguments when dealing it decided the Prosecution's Motion for special protective measures for Witness ADE. As indicated by the reference at footnote 3 of the Impugned Decision, the Chamber considered each Defence argument, but since they were similar, there was no reason to repeat each of them in the text of the Decision. In any event, such argument would not satisfy the requirements to grant a certification to appeal.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Defence Motions.

(Original : English)

Trial Chamber III

Judges : Dennis C. M. Byron, Presiding Judge ; Emile Francis Short ; Gberdao Gustave Kam

Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera – Obligation of the Prosecutor to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the Indictment, Rights of the Accused to be entitled to a fair hearing and to be informed of the nature and cause of the charges against him and to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence – Motion partially granted

I.C.T.Y. : Appeals Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Zoran Kupreškić, Judgement, 23 October 2001 (IT-95-16)

Introduction

1. Count Five of the Amended Indictment charges Édouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera with being part of a joint criminal enterprise of which rape as a crime against humanity was a natural and foreseeable consequence of its object.[1]

2. On 28 February 2006, Witness UB testified about the commission of sexual crimes against a particular individual. Joseph Nzirorera objected to the admission of this evidence in support of Count five since no prior notice of these facts had been given in the Indictment. Instead, he submitted, the evidence should be admitted for the limited purpose of proving that rapes were committed in Rwanda, during the relevant period.

3. After the Chamber deferred ruling on this issue because it was premature at this stage, and should be dealt with at the end of the Prosecution case, Nzirorera made a Motion for a Bill of Particulars, for the Prosecution to provide a list of the names of individuals, whose identity is known, on which evidence will be led and that the Prosecution intends to hold his client responsible for their rape or sexual assault.

4. The Prosecution responded that the Chamber had already found Count Five to be properly pleaded in the Indictment. It submitted that to prove Count Five, the Prosecution only has to lead evidence on whether rape and sexual assault was widespread and systematic in Rwanda during 1994 and that the Accused have responsibility for those acts as part of the joint criminal enterprise. It claimed that there could be a similar request for all of the murders charged in the Indictment, which is not possible.

Discussion

[1] On 23 February 2005, the Prosecutor filed an Amended Indictment. A new Amended Indictment dated 24 August 2005 was filed on 25 August 2005 pursuant to the Chamber's Decision on Defects in the Form of the Indictment of 5 August 2005. See also para. 7 of the Amended Indictment.

5. In the Kupreskic Appeals Chamber Judgment, the Court held that the rights of the Accused to be entitled to a fair hearing and to be informed of the nature and cause of the charges against him and to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence, require the Prosecution to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the Indictment.[2] The amount of detail required, depends on the nature of the Prosecution's case:

> "there may be instances where the sheer scale of the alleged crimes makes it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity in such matters as the identity of the victims and the dates for the commission of the crimes". [3]

6. In its Decision on Joint Criminal Enterprise of 14 September 2005, the Chamber ruled in accordance with the established case-law, and in particular, with the above-mentioned principles set out in the Kupreskic case, finding that the particulars of the acts of rape encompassed by Count Five were not material facts which had to be pleaded in the Indictment.[4] However, the Chamber also found that such particulars were important for the preparation of the Defence, and noted that the details of the acts of rape had been disclosed through 143 witness statements in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief.

7. In relation to the present Motion, the Chamber finds that, pursuant to the aforementioned jurisprudence, and in light of this Chamber's Decision of 14 September 2005, the Indictment in this case contains sufficient information to inform the Accused of the nature of the charges against them.

8. The Chamber further notes that the details of the sexual violence to which Witness UB testified, and which formed the substance of this application, are found in his statement of interview dated 10 February 2004. This included details concerning the identity of the victim. Although the Prosecution is not required to identify each individual who has been the victim of rape or sexual violence in order to meet it obligations under the jurisprudence, the Prosecution must give notice of details to the extent that those details are within its knowledge. In this instance, timely notice was given concerning the identity of the victim in question which was sufficient for the Defence to be adequately prepared for its cross-examination of Witness UB.

9. Consequently, if the Prosecution has information regarding the names and details of witnesses and victims of rape or sexual violence upon which evidence will be led at trial and which is not contained in the witness statements that have already been disclosed to the Defence, then that information must be disclosed. In addition, for the fairness of the trial, it is in the best interests of the Prosecution to assist with the preparation of the Defence, as it has done here, through timely disclosure of details in a witness statement.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Defence Motion in part;

ORDERS the Prosecution to disclose the known details of the witnesses and victims of rape and sexual violence upon which evidence will be lead at trial which have not already been disclosed in witness statements;

DENIES the remainder of the Motion.

Édouard Karemera et al., Separate Opinion of Judge Short on Complicity in Genocide and Joint Criminal Enterprise Theory, 23 May 2006 (ICTR-98-44)

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized of the "Prosecutor's Motion for Determination that the Interlocutory Appeal as of Right May Proceed Immediately, For Leave to File a Written Brief on the Merits of the Appeal, and for a Scheduling Order", filed on 30 May 2006 ("Prosecution Motion"). The Prosecution Motion relates to a Trial Chamber decision and a separate opinion of Judge Short, issued in English, addressing the question of whether complicity in genocide is a form of criminal liability or a separate crime.[1]

2. The Appeals Chamber is also presently seized of two requests, filed respectively by Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Édouard Karemera, seeking an extension of time to respond to the Prosecution Motion pending the translation of the Prosecution Motion as well as Judge Short's separate opinion into French.[2]

The Prosecution has not yet responded to this motion. However, in accord with paragraph 18 of the Practice Direction on Procedure for the Filing of Written Submissions in Appeal Proceedings before the Tribunal, 16 December 2002, the Appeals Chamber does not find that the Prosecution would be prejudiced by taking this decision prior to the expiration of the period normally allowed for a response.

3. Rule 116 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal allows for extensions of time upon a showing of good cause. The Appeals Chamber has previously observed that counsel for Mr. Karemera and Mr. Ngirumpatse work in French, and not in English.[3] The Appeals Chamber considers that, in order to be able to present a full answer to the Prosecution Motion, they need access to French translations of the Prosecution Motion as well as Judge Short's separate opinion.[4] The Appeals Chamber has already determined that this constitutes good cause for a reasonable extension of time in this case.[5]

Disposition

4. For the foregoing reasons, the requests of Mr. Karemera and Mr. Ngirumpatse for an extension of time are GRANTED. The Registry is DIRECTED to provide to Mr. Karemera and Mr. Ngirumpatse and their counsel, on an urgent basis, French translations of the Prosecution Motion, Judge Short's separate opinion, and the present decision. Starting from the date on which the last of these translated documents is transmitted, Mr. Karemera and Mr. Ngirumpatse will be permitted 10 days to file their responses, if any, to the Prosecution Motion. The Prosecution may then file its reply within four days of the filing of the responses. The Registry is also DIRECTED to inform the Appeals Chamber of the date on which the translated documents are transmitted.

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively), is seized of the "Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of Decision on Judicial Notice (Rule 73 (C))", filed by the Prosecution on 12 December 2005 ("Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal").

I. Procedural History and Filings of the Parties

2. On 30 June 2005, the Prosecution filed before Trial Chamber III its "Motion for Judicial Notice of Facts of Common Knowledge and Adjudicated Facts" ("Prosecution's Motion"). In the Motion, the Prosecution requested, pursuant to Rule 94 of the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules"), that the Trial Chamber take judicial notice of six purported "facts of common knowledge", as well as a further 153 purported "adjudicated facts" extracted from the Judgements in the Akayesu, Kayishema and Ruzindana, Rutaganda, Kajelijeli, Musema, Nahimana et al., Ndindabahizi, Niyitegeka, Ntakirutimana and Semanza cases.

3. In its "Decision on Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice" ("Impugned Decision"), filed on 9 November 2005, the Trial Chamber took judicial notice of two of the six "facts of common knowledge, took judicial notice of another "fact of common knowledge" in modified form, and denied the remainder of the Prosecution's Motion. The Prosecution sought certification to appeal the Decision in accordance with Rule 73 (C) of the Rules. The Trial Chamber granted certification in its "Certification of Appeal concerning Judicial Notice", filed on 2 December 2005 ("Certification"). The Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal was filed accordingly on 12 December.[1]

4. One of the Accused, Joseph Nzirorera, filed "Joseph's Nzirorera's Motion to Dismiss Issues of Interlocutory Appeal for Which Certification Was Not Granted" on 13 December 2005 ("Nzirorera's Motion"), seeking to confine the scope of the interlocutory appeal to the single issue on which, Mr. Nzirorera argued, the Trial Chamber had granted certification to appeal. The Prosecution filed a response to this motion on 15 December 2005,[2] and Mr. Nzirorera filed a reply to this response on 16 December 2005.[3] In addition, on 16 December 2005, Mr. Nzirorera filed his "Respondent's Brief" ("Nzirorera's Response") responding to the interlocutory appeal on its merits. The Prosecution filed its reply to this response on 20 December 2005.[4]

5. In both its Response to Nzirorera's Motion and its Reply to Nzirorera's Response, the Prosecution argues that it was improper for Mr. Nzirorera to file both a motion to dismiss the interlocutory appeal and a separate response to that interlocutory appeal. It contends that a respondent to an interlocutory appeal is entitled to only one response, into which should be incorporated any arguments for the dismissal of the appeal. The Prosecution asks the Appeals Chamber to treat Nzirorera's Motion, being the first filed, as his response, and thus to disregard Nzirorera's Response.[5] Mr. Nzirorera has given no answer to these arguments.

6. The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Prosecution that Mr. Nzirorera was only entitled to file a single response. According to paragraph 2 of the Practice Direction on Procedure for the Filing of Written Submissions in Appeal Proceedings Before the Tribunal,[6] the response to an interlocutory appeal filed as of right shall both "state whether or not the appeal is opposed and the grounds therefore" and "set out any objection to the applicability of the provision of the Rules relied upon by the Appellant as the basis for the appeal". That is, the response should both address the merits of the appeal and include any procedural arguments for its dismissal. Nzirorera's Motion set forth an objection to the applicability of Rule 73 (B) of the Rules as a basis for the appeal, by contending that the appeal exceeds the scope of the certification granted under that Rule. It should have been included as part of the response.

7. However, the Appeals Chamber nonetheless finds that it is in the interests of justice in the exceptional circumstances of this case to consider the arguments raised in both Nzirorera's Motion and Nzirorera's Response. This is for two reasons. First, there may arguably have been a good faith basis for Mr. Nzirorera's counsel to believe (albeit wrongly) that the above-cited provision of the Practice Direction did not apply to interlocutory appeals certified by a Trial Chamber, an issue the Appeals

[1] Rule 73 (C) requires a party to file its interlocutory appeal within seven days of the filing of a decision certifying the appeal. Because Friday, 9 December 2005 was an official holiday at the Tribunal in Arusha, where the appeal was filed, the deadline was the following Monday, 12 December 2005.

Chamber had not previously decided.[7] In light of that fact, to set aside Nzirorera's Response entirely – and thus consider the merits of the issues raised on appeal without any argument from Mr. Nzirorera – would be a disproportionate remedy for the violation of the Rules.

8. Second, the Prosecution's own appeal filing has violated the Practice Direction on the Length of Briefs and Motions on Appeal,[8] which provides in paragraph I (C) (2) (a) (i) that the "motion of a party wishing to appeal where appeal lies as of right will not exceed 15 pages or 4500 words, whichever is greater." In submitting a 28-page filing (plus appendices), the Prosecution relies instead on paragraph I (C) (2) (d).[9] But that paragraph applies to cases in which the Appeals Chamber has either ordered or expressly permitted the parties to file "briefs" on the merits of an interlocutory appeal – that is to say, where the Appeals Chamber has determined that the issues are sufficiently complex to justify submissions longer than those allowed by the ordinary provisions of subparagraphs (a) and (c). No such order or leave has been granted in this case. None of the Accused has objected to the Prosecution's appeal on this basis, which means that the Appeals Chamber is not obligated to grant relief.[10] In light of the fact that the Accused have now all responded to the Prosecution's appeal, the important issues raised by the appeal, and the fact that – like Mr. Nzirorera – the Prosecution might conceivably have been confused by the applicability of the various provisions of the practice direction, the Appeals Chamber determines that the fairest approach is to accept the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal as validly filed. Doing so provides another reason that, in fairness to Mr. Nzirorera, the arguments in Nzirorera's Response should not be disregarded.

9. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber permits Mr. Nzirorera to separate the response authorized by paragraph 2 of the Practice Direction on Written Submissions into two separate filings (Nzirorera's Motion and Nzirorera's Response), and will thus consider the arguments included in both filings. The Prosecution's replies to these two separate filings are thus also permissible as they are, in essence, a two-part version of the reply authorized by paragraph 3 of that Practice Direction. The Appeals Chamber will not, however, consider the submissions contained in Mr. Nzirorera's Reply Supporting Nzirorera's Motion. There is no provision in the Practice Direction for further submissions by an appellee in response to the appellant's reply, and the above-discussed reasons do not provide a basis for permitting Mr. Nzirorera to file one.

10. The Appeals Chamber delayed its consideration of this appeal because it was awaiting the responses of the other Accused, Édouard Karemera and Mathieu Ngirumpatse, both of which were filed on 22 May 2006.[11] These filings were made several months after the above-described filings were completed because of lengthy delays in the completion and transmission of several translations ordered by the Appeals Chamber.[12] Both of the Responses complied with the deadline set by the [7] The Practice Direction on Written Submissions distinguishes between appeals that lie "as of right" and those that lie "only with the leave of a bench of three judges of the Appeals Chamber". Appeals that have been certified by a Trial Chamber – pursuant to a procedure established by amendment to the Rules after the Practice Direction's issuance – are not specifically mentioned, but the Appeals Chamber considers that, after the required certification has been issued, they lie "as of right", in that they are authorized by Rule 73 (B) of the Rules and the appellant need not apply to the Appeals Chamber for further leave to file them. In any event, the provisions of the Practice Direction governing the content of a response are the same for all categories of interlocutory appeal. See ibid. paras 2, 5.

II. Scope of grounds for which certification of appeal has been granted

11. The Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in law when it refused to take judicial notice, as facts of common knowledge under Rule 94 (A) of the Rules, of four facts, namely, facts 1, 2, 5 and 6 appearing in Annex A to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal. The Prosecution further alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in its refusal to take judicial notice, as adjudicated facts under Rule 94 (B), of 147 facts appearing in Annex B to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal.[13] The Prosecution does not challenge the Trial Chamber's refusal to take judicial notice of six other facts.[14]

12. The Accused Joseph Nzirorera claims that this Appeal exceeds the scope of the Certification. He contends that certification for interlocutory appeal was granted only on the legal question whether judicial notice can be taken of adjudicated facts that go directly or indirectly to the guilt of the accused.[15]

13. Under Rule 73 (B) of the Rules, a Trial Chamber may certify a decision on a motion for interlocutory appeal if, in its view, the decision "involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial" such that "immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings". The certification decision is discretionary: Rule 73 makes no provision for interlocutory appeal as of right.[16] The Appeals Chamber has recognized that, as a corollary of the Trial Chamber's discretion concerning whether to certify an interlocutory appeal in the first place, it also has the discretion to limit the scope of the interlocutory appeal to particular issues.[17] The Trial Chamber's Certification thus dictates the possible scope of the Appeals Chamber's decision. The Appeals Chamber is, therefore, called upon to interpret the scope of the Certification.

14. The text of the Certification is unfortunately less than crystalline on this point. In paragraph 3 the Certification acknowledges that the Prosecution advanced "a number of issues ..., all of which, it submits satisfy both criteria to invoke an exercise of the Chamber's discretion under Rule 73 (B)". It proceeds:

> 4. One of the issues raised by the impugned Decision which the Prosecution submits satisfies the criteria to invoke an exercise of the Chamber's discretion is the Chamber's refusal to take judicial notice of a number of facts, as adjudicated facts, on the basis that they might go directly or indirectly to the guilt of the Accused, notably in relation to the pleading of their participation in a joint criminal enterprise. It submits that, if interpreted widely, no fact could be judicially noticed as, presumably, most facts introduced by the Prosecution will go towards proving, either directly or indirectly, the guilt of the accused.
> 5. The Chamber is of the view that this issue satisfies both criteria for certification. …

[16] This is in contrast to Rule 72 (B) (i), which provides for a right to interlocutory appeal of decisions on preliminary motions concerning jurisdiction.
[17] See Nyiramasuhuko v. Prosecutor, Case N°ICTR-98-42-AR73, Decision on Pauline Nyiramasuhuko's Request for Reconsideration, 27 September 2004, para. 7.

FOR THOSE REASONS THE CHAMBER GRANTS certification of an interlocutory appeal under Rule 73 (B) from the Chamber's "Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice", dated 9 November 2005.[18]

No further reference is made to the other issues regarding which certification of appeal was requested. Thus, on the one hand, the rationale of the Trial Chamber for certifying an interlocutory appeal relies on only one issue; however, on the other hand, the disposition does not purport to limit the certification to that issue.

15. In the Appeals Chamber's view, although it is plausible to read to the Certification as limited only to one issue, it is more likely that the Trial Chamber intended no such limit. First, the Trial Chamber explicitly referred in paragraph 3 of its decision to the "number of issues" on which the Prosecution sought certification. It would be strange for it then to proceed to discuss one of those issues in detail, and then simply to ignore all of the other issues entirely – unless, that is, the Trial Chamber considered that its resolution of the one issue made it unnecessary to resolve the others because the one issue alone was enough to justify certification of the entire appeal sought. Moreover, as the Prosecution observes,[19] the reasoning given by the Trial Chamber for certification concerned, as a general matter, the potential usefulness of judicial notice in making the trial proceedings more expedient; this reasoning applied equally well to the other issues presented by the Prosecution.[20] In these circumstances, had the Trial Chamber intended simply to deny certification on the other issues, for it to do so simply by omitting discussion of those issues, without a word of explanation, might have run afoul of the requirement that it provide a reasoned basis for its decision.[21]

16. It is not illogical or impermissible for a Trial Chamber to grant certification to appeal an entire decision on the basis of one issue which, in its view, satisfies the Rule 73(B) criteria. To the contrary, such an approach is consistent with the text of that Rule, which requires only that the Trial Chamber identify "an issue" satisfying certain criteria in order to certify interlocutory review of a decision, but does not state that the review must be limited to the identified issue. Thus, although the Appeals Chamber has found that the Trial Chamber can limit review to the issue(s) that it has found to specifically satisfy the Rule 73 (B) criteria, it is not obligated to do so.

17. This approach is consistent with Rule 73's objective of advancing the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings. Interlocutory appeals under Rule 73 interrupt the continuity of trial proceedings and so should only be allowed when there is a significant advantage to doing so – that is, when, in the Trial Chamber's judgement, there is an important issue meriting immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber. But once one such issue is identified and an interlocutory appeal is certified, allowing the Appeals Chamber to resolve related issues at the same time may cause little additional interruption and may ultimately serve the goals of fairness and expeditiousness.

18. Mr. Nzirorera argues that in a previous interlocutory appeal that he brought in this case, the Appeals Chamber confined the scope of the certification to the issue expressly identified by the Trial Chamber.[22] That situation, however, was different from the one presented here. As here, the Trial Chamber had not specified whether the certification it granted to appeal a decision extended only to the issue it discussed (the competence of ad litem judges to confirm indictments) or also to an unmentioned issue (the sanctions it had imposed against Mr. Nzirorera's counsel for bringing the underlying motion).[23] So, as here, the Appeals Chamber was left to infer the Trial Chamber's intent

[18] Certification, paras. 4-5.
[19] Reply to Nzirorera's Motion, para. 7.
[20] See Certification, para. 5.
[21] The Statute of the International Tribunal applies this requirement to judgements on the merits, see Article 22 (2), but the Appeals Chamber has also applied it to decisions on motions. See, e.g., Prosecutor v. Haradinaj et al., Case N°IT-04-84-AR65.2, Decision on Lahi Brahimaj's Interlocutory Appeal Against the Trial Chamber's Decision Denying His Provisional Release, 9 March 2006, para. 10.

from its context and reasoning. But there, it was clear from context that the Trial Chamber had not meant to certify the issue of sanctions – for just a minute or two later, in the same oral hearing, the Trial Chamber rejected Mr. Nzirorera's attempt to appeal another sanction that had been issued against counsel. It held that "an appeal against financial sanctions is not grounds for an interlocutory appeal, in the sense that the decision to impose financial sanctions does not involve an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and the resolution by the Appeals Chamber will not materially advance the proceedings."[24] In light of that statement, it was clear that the Trial Chamber did not intend to permit interlocutory appeals of financial sanctions. Moreover, the reasoning that the Trial Chamber gave for permitting interlocutory appeal on the ad litem judges issue had no relation to the sanctions issue. This is unlike the position in the present case; here, as noted above, the Trial Chamber's rationale for allowing the Appeals Chamber to resolve the proper scope of judicial notice on an interlocutory basis applied equally to all the parts of the Prosecution's appeal.

19. Nor do the other decisions Mr. Nzirorera cites support his position. In Nyiramasuhuko v. Prosecutor,[25] the Trial Chamber had been seized of two separate requests for certification of appeal. It granted both certifications in separate decisions. Erroneously, the Appellant later filed an appeal only with regard to one of the certifications, assuming that the Appeals Chamber would also rule on the related issues certified in the other Trial Chamber decision. The Appeals Chamber, however, held that because no appeal had been filed concerning the second certification, it was not seized of the second issue and could not rule on it. In Prosecutor v. Bizimungu et al.,[26] the Prosecutor had submitted several requests for reconsideration of defence witness protection measures with regard to each of the four accused. Three of these requests had been denied by the Trial Chamber and certification for appeal been granted. The fourth request was yet to be decided by the Trial Chamber. The Appeals Chamber, in deciding the Prosecution's interlocutory appeal with regard to the three requests already decided, unsurprisingly held that it would be premature at that stage to decide the issues raised in the fourth request.

20. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber holds that the Trial Chamber intended to grant certification to appeal the Impugned Decision with respect to all of the issues raised by the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal. Mr. Nzirorera's Motion is therefore denied.

21. Notwithstanding this determination, the Appeals Chamber will not, in considering an interlocutory appeal that extends beyond the issues that the Trial Chamber found to specifically satisfy the Rule 73 (B) standard, address matters in which its consideration will not, in fact, materially advance the proceedings. The Appeals Chamber notes the related argument of Mr. Karemera that the Prosecution has as a general matter failed to demonstrate errors invalidating the Trial Chamber's decision or occasioning a miscarriage of justice within the meaning of Article 24 (1) of the Statute.[27] Although the Article 24 (1) standard applies specifically to post-trial appeals from final Trial Chamber decisions, it is likewise true that in interlocutory appeals, even where certification under Rule 73 (B) has been granted, it is not the Appeals Chamber's practice to pass on purported errors that are inconsequential.[28] The Appeals Chamber will keep this standard in mind in addressing the individual allegations of error raised by the Prosecution.

III. Judicial Notice of Facts of Common Knowledge

22. Rule 94 (A) states: "A Trial Chamber shall not require proof of facts of common knowledge but shall take judicial notice thereof." As the Trial Chamber correctly noted,[29] this standard is not discretionary – if a Trial Chamber determines that a fact is "of common knowledge", it must take judicial notice of it. As the Appeals Chamber stated in the Semanza Appeal Judgement:

> As the ICTY Appeals Chamber explained in Prosecution v. Milošević, Rule 94 (A) "commands the taking of judicial notice" of material that is "notorious." The term "common knowledge" encompasses facts that are not reasonably subject to dispute: in other words, commonly accepted or universally known facts, such as general facts of history or geography, or the laws of nature. Such facts are not only widely known but also beyond reasonable dispute.[30]

23. Whether a fact qualifies as a "fact of common knowledge" is a legal question. By definition, it cannot turn on the evidence introduced in a particular case, and so the deferential standard of review ordinarily applied by the Appeals Chamber to the Trial Chamber's assessment of and inferences from such evidence has no application. Mr. Nzirorera suggests that the Appeals Chamber should defer to the Trial Chamber's discretion as to "admissibility of evidence" and "the manner in which facts are to be proven at trial".[31] But the general rule that the Trial Chamber has discretion in those areas is superseded by the specific, mandatory language of Rule 94 (A); as noted above, the Trial Chamber has no discretion to determine that a fact, although "of common knowledge", must nonetheless be proven through evidence at trial. For these reasons, a Trial Chamber's decision whether to take judicial notice of a relevant[32] fact under Rule 94 (A) is subject to de novo review on appeal.

24. The Prosecution sought judicial notice under Rule 94 (A) with respect to six purported facts of common knowledge. Its request was granted with respect to Facts 3 and 4 (Rwanda's status as a party to various treaties), but denied with respect to the other facts, although the Trial Chamber did take judicial notice of Fact 1 in modified form. The Prosecution's contentions on appeal as to facts 1, 2, 5, and 6 are considered here in turn.

Fact 1 – Status of Hutu, Tutsi and Twa as Ethnic Groups

25. The Prosecution sought judicial notice of the following fact: "Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994, citizens native to Rwanda were severally identified according to the following ethnic classifications: Tutsi, Hutu and Twa."[33] The Trial Chamber instead took judicial notice of "the existence of the Twa, Tutsi and Hutu as protected groups falling under the Genocide Convention", noting that such a classification was consistent with the Tribunal's jurisprudence and that the groups were "stable and permanent".[34] The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber should have used the designation "ethnic" in order to comport with the Appeal Judgement in Semanza. Although the Prosecution correctly states that the Semanza Appeal Judgement recognized that the Tutsi were an "ethnic" group, it has not attempted to show that the formulation that was instead chosen by the Trial Chamber has any potential to prejudice the Prosecution or render the proceedings less fair and expeditious. The Appeals Chamber can see no potential for such consequences, as the Trial Chamber's formulation equally (or perhaps even more clearly) relieves the Prosecution's burden to introduce evidence proving protected-group status under the Genocide Convention. The Appeals Chamber thus [32] As Mr. Nzirorera suggests, see Nzirorera's Response, para. 41, a Trial Chamber is not obligated to take judicial notice of facts that are not relevant to the case, even if they are "facts of common knowledge". Of course, it remains the case that the Trial Chamber "shall not require proof" of such facts, see Rule 94(A), since evidence proving an irrelevant fact would in any event be inadmissible under Rule 89 (C) of the Rules. Cf. Prosecutor v. Hadzihasanović and Kubura, Case N°IT-01-47-T, Final Decision on Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts, 20 April 2004 (holding that "before taking judicial notice of these four Definitively Proposed Facts the Chamber is obliged to verify their relevance, pursuant to Rule 89 (C) of the Rules"). Relevance determinations are circumscribed by various standards of law, but within the appropriate legal framework the Trial Chamber enjoys a margin of discretion.

need not consider whether the Trial Chamber erred in choosing not to adopt the Prosecution's formulation; nor, given that the Accused have not appealed, need it consider whether it erred in concluding that protected-group status was a fact of common knowledge. The Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal as to this point is dismissed.

Facts 2 and 5 – The Existence of Widespread or Systematic Attacks

26. As Fact 2, the Prosecution sought judicial notice of the following:

> The following state of affairs existed in Rwanda between 6 April 1994 to 17 July 1994: There were throughout Rwanda widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification. During the attacks, some Rwandan citizens killed or caused serious bodily or mental harm to person[s] perceived to be Tutsi. As a result of the attacks, there were a large number of deaths of persons of Tutsi ethnic identity.[35]

The Trial Chamber declined the Prosecution's request, stating that the notice sought concerned

> "a legal finding which constitutes an element of a crime against humanity. The Prosecutor has an obligation to prove the existence of such an attack whenever he alleges that a crime against humanity occurred. The Chamber considers that judicial notice therefore cannot be taken of it."[36]

For essentially the same reasons, the Trial Chamber also refused to take judicial notice of Fact 5, namely: "Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994 in Rwanda there was an armed conflict not of an international character."[37]

27. The Prosecution argues on appeal that the Trial Chamber should have followed the Semanza Appeal Judgement in recognizing these facts as being "of common knowledge". In response, Mr. Nzirorera argues that these facts were reasonably disputable and should be proved with evidence, citing various pre-Semanza Trial Chamber decisions declining to take judicial notice of them.[38] He notes that in Semanza, unlike in this case, the "widespread or systematic" nature of the attacks had not been disputed by the accused.[39] Mr. Ngirumpatse advances similar arguments and adds that it is disputable whether the attacks were committed solely against Tutsis and on the basis of ethnicity[40] and whether the conflict was in fact non-international.[41] Mr. Nzirorera and Mr. Karemera both argue that the "widespread and systematic" and "non-international" characterizations are legal rather than factual in nature and are thus not subject to judicial notice.[42]

28. The Appeals Chamber in Semanza stated:

> As these passages suggest, the Trial Chamber struck an appropriate balance between the Appellant's rights under Article 20 (3) and the doctrine of judicial notice by ensuring that the facts judicially noticed were not the basis for proving the Appellant's criminal responsibility. Instead, the Chamber took notice only of general notorious facts not subject to reasonable dispute, including, inter alia: that Rwandan citizens were classified by ethnic group between April and July 1994; that widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification occurred during that time; that there was an armed conflict not of an international character in Rwanda between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994; that Rwanda became a state party to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (1948) on 16 April 1975; and that, at the time at issue, Rwanda was a state party to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and their additional Additional Protocol II of 8 June

> 1977. The Appeals Chamber finds that these judicially noted facts did not relieve the Prosecution of its burden of proof; they went only to the manner in which the Prosecution could discharge that burden in respect of the production of certain evidence which did not concern the acts done by the Appellant. When determining the Appellant's personal responsibility, the Trial Chamber relied on the facts it found on the basis of the evidence adduced at trial.[43]

29. Thus, the Appeals Chamber has already held that the existence of widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification, as well as the existence of a non-international armed conflict, are notorious facts not subject to reasonable dispute. Therefore, the Trial Chamber was obliged to take judicial notice of them, since judicial notice under Rule 94 (A) is not discretionary. Moreover, the reasons it gave for not doing so were unfounded. It is true that "widespread and systematic attack against a civilian population" and "armed conflict not of an international character" are phrases with legal meanings, but they nonetheless describe factual situations and thus can constitute "facts of common knowledge". The question is not whether a proposition is put in legal or layman's terms (so long as the terms are sufficiently well defined such that the accuracy of their application to the described situation is not reasonably in doubt).[44] The question is whether the proposition can reasonably be disputed. Neither the Trial Chamber nor any of the Accused has demonstrated any reasonable basis for disputing the facts in question.

30. Likewise, it is not relevant that these facts constitute elements of some of the crimes charged and that such elements must ordinarily be proven by the Prosecution.[45] There is no exception to Rule 94 (A) for elements of offences. Of course the Rule 94 (A) mechanism sometimes will alleviate the Prosecution's burden to introduce evidence proving certain aspects of its case. As the Appeals Chamber explained in Semanza, however, it does not change the burden of proof, but simply provides another way for that burden to be met. The Appeals Chamber notes that the practice of taking judicial notice of facts of common knowledge is well established in international criminal law[46] and in domestic jurisdictions.[47] Such facts include notorious historical events and phenomena, such as, for instance, the Nazi Holocaust, the South African system of apartheid, wars, and the rise of terrorism.[48]

31. The Appeals Chamber further considers that there is no reasonable basis for disputing the remainder of Fact 2: during the 1994 attacks, "some Rwandan citizens killed or caused serious bodily or mental harm to person[s] perceived to be Tutsi. As a result of the attacks, there were a large number of deaths of persons of Tutsi ethnic identity." These facts are not only consistent with every judgement so far issued by the Appeals and Trial Chambers of this Tribunal, but also with the essentially universal consensus of historical accounts included in sources such as encyclopaedias and history books.[49] They are facts of common knowledge.

32. For these reasons, the Trial Chamber erred in failing to take judicial notice of Facts 2 and 5 under Rule 94 (A).

Fact 6 – Genocide

33. The Prosecution sought judicial notice of the following fact: "Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994, there was a genocide in Rwanda against the Tutsi ethnic group."[50] The Trial Chamber rejected this request. It explained that in order to obtain a genocide conviction, the Prosecution must establish the Accused's individual involvement and mental state, and reasoned:

> As a result, it does not matter whether genocide occurred in Rwanda or not, the Prosecutor must still prove the criminal responsibility of the Accused for the counts he has charged in the Indictment. Taking judicial notice of such a fact as common knowledge does not have any impact on the Prosecution's case against the Accused, because that is not a fact to be proved. In the present case where the Prosecutor alleges that the Accused are responsible for crimes occurring in all parts of Rwanda, taking judicial notice of the fact that genocide has occurred in that country would appear to lessen the Prosecutor's obligation to prove his case.[51]

34. On appeal, the Prosecution argues that the occurrence of genocide in Rwanda in 1994 is a universally known fact – as evidenced by, inter alia, United Nations and government reports, books, news accounts, and the Tribunal's jurisprudence – and, although not itself sufficient to support a genocide conviction, is certainly relevant to the context in which individual crimes are charged.[52] It further argues that taking judicial notice of this fact would not be unfair to the Accused or inconsistent with the Prosecution's burden of proof.[53] In response, Mr. Ngirumpatse argues that to take judicial notice of genocide would prejudge the accusations against the Accused and violate their right to confront their accusers.[54] Mr. Karemera argues that the existence of genocide is a legal determination inappropriate for judicial notice, and that to take judicial notice of it would violate the presumption of innocence.[55] Mr. Nzirorera contends that the Trial Chamber correctly found that the existence of genocide was not relevant to the matters to be proven at trial; that it requires a legal conclusion; and that the practice of the Tribunal has established that it is a matter to be proven with evidence.[56]

35. The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Prosecution: the fact that genocide occurred in Rwanda in 1994 should have been recognized by the Trial Chamber as a fact of common knowledge. Genocide consists of certain acts, including killing, undertaken with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such.[57] There is no reasonable basis for anyone to dispute that, during 1994, there was a campaign of mass killing intended to destroy, in whole or at least in very large part, Rwanda's Tutsi population, which (as judicially noticed by the Trial Chamber) was a protected group. That campaign was, to a terrible degree, successful; although exact numbers may never be known, the great majority of Tutsis were murdered, and many others were raped or otherwise harmed.[58] These basic facts were broadly known even at the time of the Tribunal's establishment; indeed, reports indicating that genocide occurred in Rwanda were a key impetus for its establishment, as reflected in the Security Council resolution establishing it and even the name of the Tribunal.[59] During its early history, it was valuable for the purpose of the historical record for Trial Chambers to gather evidence documenting the overall course of the genocide and to enter findings of fact on the basis of that evidence. Trial and Appeal Judgements thereby produced (while varying as to the responsibility of particular accused) have unanimously and decisively confirmed the occurrence of genocide in Rwanda,[60] which has also been documented by countless books,[61] scholarly articles,[62] media reports,[63] U.N. reports and resolutions,[64] national court decisions,[65] and government and NGO reports.[66] At this stage, the Tribunal need not demand further documentation. The fact of the Rwandan genocide is a part of world history, a fact as certain as any other, a classic instance of a "fact of common knowledge".

36. Notably, the Trial Chamber's decision does not contest any of this; indeed, even the Accused have not claimed that genocide might not have occurred in Rwanda in 1994. Instead the Trial Chamber provides two other, oddly contradictory reasons not to take judicial notice: first, that whether genocide occurred is not relevant to the case that the Prosecution must prove; and second, that recognizing it would improperly lighten the Prosecution's burden of proof.[67] The first can be readily dismissed. Whether genocide occurred in Rwanda is of obvious relevance to the Prosecution's case; it is a necessary, although not sufficient, part of that case. Plainly, in order to convict an individual of genocide a Trial Chamber must collect evidence of that individual's acts and intent. But the fact of the nationwide campaign is relevant; it provides the context for understanding the individual's actions. And, indeed, the existence of the genocide may also provide relevant context for other charges against the Accused, such as crimes against humanity. It bears noting that if the overall existence of genocide were not relevant to the charges against individuals, then Trial Chambers would not be permitted under Rule 89 to admit evidence pertaining to it either. Yet, as Mr. Nzirorera documents in his Response, they have consistently done so, and the Appeals Chamber has held that this is proper.[68]

37. The second part of the Trial Chamber's reasoning has been addressed already in the context of Facts 2 and 5 above. As the Semanza Appeal Judgement made clear, allowing judicial notice of a fact of common knowledge – even one that is an element of an offence, such as the existence of a "widespread or systematic" attack – does not lessen the Prosecution's burden of proof or violate the procedural rights of the Accused. Rather, it provides an alternative way that that burden can be satisfied, obviating the necessity to introduce evidence documenting what is already common knowledge. The Prosecution must, of course, still introduce evidence demonstrating that the specific events alleged in the Indictment constituted genocide and that the conduct and mental state of the Accused specifically make them culpable for genocide. The reasoning under Facts 2 and 5 also dispenses with the objection of the Accused that the genocide characterization is legal in nature; Rule 94 (A) does not provide the Trial Chamber with discretion to refuse judicial notice on this basis. In this respect the term "genocide" is not distinct from other legal terms used to characterize factual situations, such as "widespread or systematic" or "not of an international nature", which the Appeals Chamber in Semanza already held to be subject to judicial notice under Rule 94 (A).

38. For these reasons, the Trial Chamber erred in refusing to take judicial notice of Fact 6.

III. Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts

39. Rule 94 (B) of the Rules provides:

> "At the request of a party or proprio motu, a Trial Chamber, after hearing the parties, may decide to take judicial notice of adjudicated facts or documentary evidence from other proceedings of the Tribunal relating to the matter at issue in the current proceedings."

Taking judicial notice of adjudicated facts under Rule 94 (B) is a method of achieving judicial economy and harmonizing judgements of the Tribunal while ensuring the right of the Accused to a fair, public and expeditious trial.[69]

40. Although governed by some of the same principles, judicial notice under Rule 94 (B) is different in nature from judicial notice under Rule 94 (A). Adjudicated facts are different from facts of common knowledge (although there is some overlap in the categories). There is no requirement that adjudicated facts be beyond reasonable dispute. They are facts that have been established in a proceeding between other parties on the basis of the evidence the parties to that proceeding chose to introduce, in the particular context of that proceeding. For this reason, they cannot simply be accepted, by mere virtue of their acceptance in the first proceeding, as conclusive in proceedings involving different parties who have not had the chance to contest them.

41. Thus, there are two crucial differences between the two provisions. One is built into the Rule: whereas judicial notice under Rule 94 (A) is mandatory, judicial notice under Rule 94 (B) is discretionary, allowing the Trial Chamber to determine which adjudicated facts to recognize on the basis of a careful consideration of the accused's right to a fair and expeditious trial. The principles guiding and limiting the exercise of that discretion have been developed through jurisprudence and are discussed below.

42. The second difference is established by the Tribunal's jurisprudence, and concerns the consequences of judicial notice: whereas facts noticed under Rule 94 (A) are established conclusively, those established under Rule 94 (B) are merely presumptions that may be rebutted by the defence with evidence at trial.[70] The Appeals Chamber reiterates that judicial notice does not shift the ultimate burden of persuasion, which remains with the Prosecution. In the case of judicial notice under Rule 94 (B), the effect is only to relieve the Prosecution of its initial burden to produce evidence on the point; the defence may then put the point into question by introducing reliable and credible evidence to the contrary. This approach is consistent with practice in national jurisdictions: whereas judicial notice of facts of common knowledge may be treated as conclusive,[71] the final adjudication of facts in judicial proceedings is treated as conclusively binding only, at most, on the parties to those proceedings (res judicata).[72]

43. The Prosecution sought judicial notice under Rule 94 (B) of 153 adjudicated facts. The Trial Chamber rejected this request in full, and the Prosecution appeals with respect to 147 of the facts. The Prosecution, the Accused, and the Trial Chamber have not proceeded in their analysis one by one through these facts, and the Appeals Chamber will not do so either. It will instead address the two major reasons given by the Trial Chamber for refusing to take judicial notice and consider whether each constitutes a legitimate reason to so refuse under Rule 94 (B). In doing so, the Appeals Chamber bears in mind that "a Trial Chamber's exercise of discretion will only be overturned if the challenged decision was (1) based on an incorrect interpretation of governing law; (2) based on a patently incorrect conclusion of fact; or (3) so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the Trial Chamber's discretion".[73] The piecemeal analysis of each proposed adjudicated fact is a matter best left to the Trial Chamber on remand.[74]

44. The Appeals Chamber will thus consider the Trial Chamber's conclusions that (a) certain facts implicate the guilt of the accused and therefore were not subject to judicial notice; and (b) certain others were improperly taken out of context or combined to produce facts not actually adjudicated. The other reasons given by the Trial Chamber for declining to take judicial notice of other adjudicated facts need not be considered here, either because they have not been appealed by the Prosecution[75] or because, in the case of Fact 153, the issue is rendered moot by the Appeals Chamber's disposition concerning the sixth "fact of common knowledge" above.[76]

A. Facts Implicating the Guilt of the Accused

45. The Trial Chamber declined to take judicial notice of some facts because they "may go directly or indirectly to the guilt of the Accused, notably in relation with the pleading of their participation in a joint criminal enterprise".[77] The Prosecution claims that the Trial Chamber's refusal to take judicial notice on this basis amounts to an "over-broad interpretation of principle that is at odds with the object and purpose" of Rule 94 (B).[78] It explains that that purpose is precisely to enable the adjudication of an accused's criminal responsibility in a more expeditious way, and that to categorically exclude all findings relating to that responsibility severely impairs the attainment of that objective; every fact relevant to a trial will bear "directly or indirectly" on the accused's responsibility.[79]

[79] Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal, para. 62. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal is confusing on this point, as in paras 53 and 63 it appears to accept the Blagojević formulation. However, the Appeals Chamber understands the Prosecution to be arguing for a narrow interpretation of the Blagojević formulation – essentially, excluding only facts that are sufficient to establish the accused's criminal responsibility. See ibid. para. 63 ("Here, however, proof, either by evidence or judicial notice, of the existence of a joint criminal enterprise is not proof of the criminal responsibility of the Accused, who must still be shown to have participated in it.").

46. Mr. Nzirorera argues in response that the Trial Chamber's reasoning was consistent with that of other ICTR and ICTY Trial Chambers, which have consistently declined to take judicial notice of facts bearing on criminal responsibility.[80] He and Mr. Ngirumpatse each further argue that, in the context of joint criminal enterprise allegations, facts relating to the existence of a joint criminal enterprise or the conduct of its members are directly related to the criminal responsibility of the accused and thus are not subject to judicial notice.[81] Mr. Karemera argues that to adopt the Prosecution's position would undermine the presumption of innocence by allowing criminal responsibility to be established without evidence.[82]

47. As Mr. Nzirorera notes, in Semanza the Appeals Chamber made reference to the need to ensure "that the facts judicially noticed were not the basis for proving the Appellant's criminal responsibility". This reference was made in the context of a discussion of Rule 94 (A), and the Appeals Chamber did not discuss the implications for Rule 94 (B). In both contexts, however, it remains the case that the practice of judicial notice must not be allowed to circumvent the presumption of innocence and the defendant's right to a fair trial, including his right to confront his accusers. Thus, it would plainly be improper for facts judicially noticed to be the "basis for proving the Appellant's criminal responsibility" (in the sense of being sufficient to establish that responsibility), and it is always necessary for Trial Chambers to take careful consideration of the presumption of innocence and the procedural rights of the accused.

48. The Appeals Chamber, however, has never gone so far as to suggest that judicial notice under Rule 94 (B) cannot extend to facts that "go directly or indirectly" to the criminal responsibility of the accused (or that "bear" or "touch" thereupon). With due respect to the Trial Chambers that have so concluded,[83] the Appeals Chamber cannot agree with this proposition, as its logic, if consistently applied, would render Rule 94 (B) a dead letter. The purpose of a criminal trial is to adjudicate the criminal responsibility of the accused. Facts that are not related, directly or indirectly, to that criminal responsibility are not relevant to the question to be adjudicated at trial, and, as noted above, thus may neither be established by evidence nor through judicial notice.[84] So judicial notice under Rule 94 (B) is in fact available only for adjudicated facts that bear, at least in some respect, on the criminal responsibility of the accused.[85]

49. How can this observation be reconciled with the presumption of innocence? First, as noted above, judicial notice under Rule 94 (B) does not shift the ultimate burden of persuasion, but only the initial burden of production (the burden to produce credible and reliable evidence sufficient to bring the matter into dispute). Analogously, in the context of alibi evidence, for instance, the accused bears the burden of production with respect to a matter centrally related to the guilt of the accused; yet this shift does not violate the presumption of innocence because, as the Appeals Chamber has repeatedly recognized, the prosecution retains the burden of proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.[86]

50. Notwithstanding this point, there is nonetheless reason for caution in allowing judicial notice under Rule 94 (B) of facts that are central to the criminal responsibility of the accused – for ordinarily [85] In theory, there is one exception to this statement: facts bearing on the Tribunal's jurisdiction but not (directly or indirectly) on the accused's criminal responsibility under international law, such as the location of the territorial boundaries of Rwanda, or the Rwandan citizenship of a person accused of committing a serious violation of international humanitarian law in a neighbouring State. This category is quite limited, however, and it has never been suggested that the scope of Rule 94 (B) should be limited to such facts.

[86] See, e.g., Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement, paras 40-41; Niyitegeka Appeal Judgement, paras 60-61.

in criminal cases the burdens of production and persuasion are on the prosecution. Although the latter always remains on the prosecution, even shifting the former has significant implications for the accused's procedural rights, in particular his right to hear and confront the witnesses against him.[87] The Appeals Chamber considers that as a result an exclusion from judicial notice under Rule 94 (B) is appropriate, but one narrower than that adopted by the Trial Chamber: judicial notice should not be taken of adjudicated facts relating to the acts, conduct, and mental state of the accused.

51. There are two reasons that this category of facts warrants complete exclusion, while other facts bearing less directly on the accused's criminal responsibility are left to the Trial Chamber's discretion. First, this interpretation of Rule 94 (B) strikes a balance between the procedural rights of the Accused and the interest of expediency that is consistent with the one expressly struck in Rule 92 bis, which governs the proof of facts other than by oral evidence – another procedural mechanism adopted largely for the same purpose as was Rule 94.[88] Second, there is also a reliability concern – namely, there is reason to be particularly skeptical of facts adjudicated in other cases when they bear specifically on the actions, omissions, or mental state of an individual not on trial in those cases. As a general matter, the defendants in those other cases would have had significantly less incentive to contest those facts than they would facts related to their own actions; indeed, in some cases such defendants might affirmatively choose to allow blame to fall on another.

52. As to all other adjudicated facts relating to the criminal responsibility of the accused, it is for the Trial Chambers, in the careful exercise of their discretion, to assess each particular fact in order to determine whether taking judicial notice of it – and thus shifting the burden of producing evidence rebutting it to the accused – is consistent with the accused's rights under the circumstances of the case. This includes facts related to the existence of a joint criminal enterprise and the conduct of its members other than the accused – and, more generally, facts related to the conduct of physical perpetrators of a crime for which the accused is being held criminally responsible through some other mode of liability. Contrary to the contentions of Mr. Nzirorera and Mr. Ngirumpatse, there is a distinction between such facts and those related to the acts and conduct of the accused themselves. In the Galić case, in the context of Rule 92 bis, the ICTY Appeals Chamber considered and rejected an argument similar to that raised by the Accused here:

> The appellant emphasises that Rule 92 bis excludes from the procedure laid down any written statement which goes to proof of the acts and conduct of the accused as charged in the indictment. He says that, as the indictment charges the appellant with individual criminal responsibility - > as having aided and abetted others to commit the crimes charged, and
>
> as the superior of his subordinates who committed those crimes,
>
> the acts and conduct of those others and of his subordinates "represent his own acts". The appellant describes those "others" as "co-perpetrators", and he says that the "acts and conduct of the accused as charged in the indictment" encompasses the acts and conduct of the accused's co-perpetrators and/or subordinates. This argument was rejected by the Trial Chamber.
> The appellant's interpretation of Rule 92 bis would effectively denude it of any real utility. That interpretation is inconsistent with both the purpose and the terms of the Rule. It confuses the present clear distinction drawn in the jurisprudence of the Tribunal between (a) the acts and conduct of those others who commit the crimes for which the indictment alleges that the accused is individually responsible, and (b) the acts and conduct of the accused as charged in the indictment which establish his responsibility for the acts and conduct of those others. It is only a written statement which goes to proof of the latter acts and conduct which Rule 92 bis (A) excludes from the procedure laid down in that Rule.[89]

[87] Statute of the International Tribunal, art. 20 (e). For similar reasons, Article 20 (d), referring to the right of the accused to be tried in his or her presence, is also implicated by the practice of resolving facts fundamental to the guilt of the accused in other trials where the accused is not present.

[88] Rule 92 bis (in paragraphs (A) and (D) limits admission of witness statements and transcripts from other proceedings to matters "other than the acts and conduct of the accused as charged in the indictment". The Appeals Chamber has interpreted this phrase as extending to the mental state of the accused. See Prosecutor v. Galić, Case N°IT-98-29-AR73.2, Decision on Interlocutory Appeal Concerning Rule 92 bis (C), 7 June 2002, paras 10-11 ("Galić Decision").

The Appeals Chamber considers this analysis equally applicable in the Rule 94 (B) context.

53. Thus, the Trial Chamber erred to the extent that it found that, under Rule 94 (B), it is categorically impermissible to take judicial notice of facts relating directly or indirectly to the defendant's guilt, including facts related to the existence and activity of a joint criminal enterprise.[90] It should instead assess the particular facts of which the Prosecution seeks judicial notice to determine (a) whether they are related to the acts, conduct, or mental state of the Accused; and (b) if not, whether under the circumstances of the case admitting them will advance Rule 94 (B)'s objective of expediency without compromising the rights of the Accused.

B. Facts Taken Out of Context or Improperly Combined

54. The Trial Chamber declined to take judicial notice of adjudicated facts 86 through 110 because they were "taken out of context and put together to build new facts which have not been adjudicated."[91] The Prosecution contends that this was an error in fact and in law, because the facts have been adjudicated and because there is no legal requirement that facts be placed "in context".[92] It observes, stating five examples, that the adjudicated facts as set out in its request for judicial notice were drawn essentially verbatim from other Trial Judgements.[93] Mr. Ngirumpatse responds that the Trial Chamber's approach was correct because the "facts" at issue are not true facts but instead subjective assertions not subject to judicial notice.[94] Mr. Nzirorera and Mr. Karemera do not respond specifically to these arguments.[95]

55. As to the legal error asserted by the Prosecution, the Appeals Chamber finds no error. A Trial Chamber can and indeed must decline to take judicial notice of facts if it considers that the way they are formulated – abstracted from the context in the judgement from whence they came – is misleading or inconsistent with the facts actually adjudicated in the cases in question. A fact taken out of context in this way would not actually be an "adjudicated fact" and thus is not subject to judicial notice under Rule 94 (B). This is the principle that the Appeals Chamber infers that the Trial Chamber meant to follow in its refusal to take judicial notice of facts "taken out of context".

56. However, because of the lack of further explanation for its conclusion in the Trial Chamber's opinion – and given the examples to the contrary provided in paragraph 67 of the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal, which need not be reproduced here – the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that all of the facts in question were taken out of context, or improperly combined, in a way that made them inconsistent with the judgements from which they were drawn. The Trial Chamber should reconsider the matter on remand and provide an explanation for its conclusions.

However, given the lack of any discussion of the particular facts in the Impugned Decision, the Appeals Chamber understands it to have, in essence, taken the former approach.

1. On 15 March 2006, Joseph Serugendo pleaded guilty before this Tribunal. On 8 June 2006, Trial Chamber I delivered the Judgment and Sentence against him. The same day, that Trial Chamber granted the Prosecution's Urgent Motion for the Deposition of Joseph Serugendo,[1] due to Mr. Serugendo's health condition, which has been described as a terminal illness. Since then Mr. Serugendo has been taken to Nairobi, Kenya for medical treatment.

2. On several occasions, the Prosecution has expressed its intention to call Mr. Serugendo as a witness in this trial and on 20 June 2006, it made an oral motion to add Mr. Serugendo to its witness list.

3. Defence Counsel for Nzirorera, supported by the Defence for Ngirumpatse and Karemera, made an oral application on 19 June 2006 for Mr. Serugendo to testify in front of this Chamber, as soon as

4. The Chamber needs to be apprised of Mr. Serugendo's current state of health. Specifically, the Chamber requests information regarding the physical and psychological ability of Mr. Serugendo to testify or to make a deposition, and which practical arrangements could be made in that order, including the possibility to use video-link facilities from Mr. Serugendo's location. In accordance with Rule 33 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, the Chamber is of the view that the Registrar may assist in this matter.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I.C.T.Y. : Trial Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Slobodan Milosović, Order on Defence Application for Re-Admission of Witness Henning Hensch, 9 May 2005 (IT-02-54)

Introduction

1. On 15 December 2005, the Prosecution submitted a Motion to be relieved from its obligations under Rules 66 and 68 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence to disclose information in its possession regarding payments and benefits paid to Witness ADE and his family. The document, which the Prosecution wishes to withhold, is an un-redacted budget for the payments and benefits paid to the family of Witness ADE signed by the Prosecutor himself on 27 October 2005. This document was disclosed to the Defence in a redacted form on 15 December 2005.

Discussion

2. As a preliminary matter, the Prosecution requests sanctions to be imposed against Counsel for Nzirorera for not filing his response to the present Motion as confidential. It is the Chamber's view that in the normal course of proceedings, all submissions from the Parties are to be filed publicly unless the content warrants confidential filing.[1] The Chamber finds that the response does not contain any confidential information and denies the request for sanctions.

3. Nzirorera further argues as a preliminary matter that the Motion should be denied on a technical ground because the Prosecution did not submit the material sought to be kept confidential as mandated by the Rules. In its Interim Order of 31 March 2006, the Chamber found that "[t]he fact that the Prosecutor did not directly make available to the Chamber the material does not as such prevent the Chamber from considering the merits of the application".[2] It requested this information from the Prosecution, and it was provided to the Chamber ex parte on 4 May 2006. Consequently, this matter is now moot.

4. Regarding the merits of the Motion, the Prosecution acknowledges that it has provided certain payments and benefits for Witness ADE and his family. While the Prosecution claims that this material is not exculpatory, it wishes to withhold from the Defence detailed financial information in a budget form of payments and benefits paid to Witness ADE and his family seeking the application of Rules 66 (C) and 68 (D) of the Rules.

5. The Prosecution's submission is ambiguous. In the Chamber's view, in order for the Prosecutor to apply for relief from its disclosure obligations pursuant to Rules 66 and 68, the material itself must already be determined by the Prosecution as material to the preparation of the defence or exculpatory material. The Chamber, therefore considers that this application is made under Rule 66 (C) or 68 (D) of the Rules as information that is material to the preparation of the defence or exculpatory.

6. As stated in Rules 66 (C) and 68 (D), the Prosecution may be relieved of its obligation to disclose information that is material to the preparation of the defence or is exculpatory if its disclosure would (1) prejudice further or ongoing investigations; (2) be contrary to the public interests; or (3) affect the security interests of any State.

7. The Chamber is not satisfied that the un-redacted budget submitted as a summary of benefits dated 4 May 2006 "may prejudice further or ongoing investigations, or for any other reasons which may be contrary to the public interest or affect the security interests of any State" to warrant limited disclosure pursuant to Rules 66 (C) and 68 (D). Although the Prosecution broadly states that the disclosure of the redacted material would prejudice further investigations and be contrary to the public interest, the Prosecution's only argument in that vein is that potential witnesses will use the disclosed information as a bargaining tool to cooperate with the Prosecution. The Prosecution focuses its submissions on its concerns for the safety of the witness, which is not a reason falling within the ambit of the exception provided by Rules 66 (C) and 68 (D). The Chamber further notes that the total amount paid to Witness ADE was disclosed to the Defence in the Decision of the Trial Chamber in the Zigiranyirazo case[3], and in the disclosure to the Defence in this case of 15 December 2005 and 11 May 2006.

8. While the Prosecution's request is denied, the Chamber nevertheless accepts the Prosecution's concern for future witnesses using the information as a bargaining tool and to protect Witness ADE from further public scrutiny, and therefore orders the disclosure of the un-redacted budget of payments and benefits paid to Witness ADE as submitted to the Chamber on 4 May 2006 to be filed confidentially through the Registrar and distributed to the Defence of each Accused in the present case.

9. The Chamber declines to evaluate Nzirorera's proposal that Rule 68 (D) of the Rules in itself contravenes the rights of the Accused, since the present application failed and the Rule is not being applied.

For the above mentioned reasons, the Chamber

DENIES the Prosecution Motion; and ORDERS the immediate disclosure of the un-redacted submission of 4 May 2006, to be filed confidentially.

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized with an interlocutory appeal filed by the Prosecution[1] against an oral decision of Trial Chamber III, rendered on 16 February 2006,[2] resolving a disclosure dispute between the parties.

[1] Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of the Trial Chamber's Decision Given Orally on 16 February 2006 Regarding the Role of the Electronic Disclosure Suite in Discharging the Prosecution's Disclosure Obligations, 6 March 2006 ("Prosecution Appeal"). Mr. Nzirorera responded in Respondent's Brief of Joseph Nzirorera and Motion to Strike, 13 March 2006 ("Nzirorera Response and Motion"). The Prosecution replied in Prosecutor's Reply to "Respondent's Brief of Joseph

2. In this decision, the Appeals Chamber considers whether the Trial Chamber erred as a matter of law in finding that the Prosecution may not rely on its Electronic Disclosure Suite ("EDS") to fulfill its disclosure obligations under Rule 68 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal ("Rules"). The EDS contains public or redacted versions of more than thirty-four thousand documents potentially relevant to all accused before the Tribunal.[3] The Prosecution has made this searchable database available to the defence in every case, in which counsel agree to its terms of use, so that it may be searched for exculpatory material.[4] In the view of the Prosecution, this system discharges its obligation under Rule 68, except for material "not, or not yet," included in the system, which material, the Prosecution claims, it will continue to search and disclose itself.[5] The Prosecution made these submissions before the Trial Chamber, when confronted by the Defence with material available in redacted form in the EDS, which it had not formally disclosed.[6] The Trial Chamber, however, found the Prosecution in breach of its Rule 68 disclosure obligations.[7] This interlocutory appeal ensued.

Background

3. On 6 February 2006, Mr. Nzirorera requested the disclosure of a number of statements relevant to several witnesses scheduled to be heard.[8] In support of his motion, he presented several redacted statements, which he had obtained, bearing markings associated with the Prosecution, to demonstrate that the Prosecution was in possession of documents that it had failed to disclose.[9]

4. During oral argument on the motion before the Trial Chamber, the Prosecution explained that many of the statements sought by Mr. Nzirorera were available in the EDS and asserted that Mr. Nzirorera had in fact already obtained them by searching the EDS.[10] The Prosecution further contended that the availability of this material in the EDS fulfilled its disclosure obligations under Rule 68.[11]

5. The Trial Chamber disagreed that availability of material on the EDS discharges the Prosecution's disclosure obligations and found that the Prosecution had failed to comply with its disclosure obligations.[12] It emphasized that:

Mr. Karemera and Mr. Ngirumpatse did not respond to the Prosecution Appeal after requesting and being granted an extension of time pending its translation into French, which was filed on 30 May 2006. See Decision on Édouard Karemera's Request for Extension of Time to Respond to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal, 4 April 2006; Decision on Request for Extension of Time, 24 March 2006.

So I don't know if the Court could enquire where Mr. Robinson is pulling this information from, but if it's coming from the EDS, the EDS is functioning in exactly the fashion that it was designed to.").

[12] Impugned Decision, p. 8.

> […] the existence of an electronic database created by the Office of the Prosecutor for storage and retrieval of documents, which allows the Defence to do its own searches for exculpatory material, does not relieve the Prosecution from its positive obligation to disclose all Rule 68 material in the possession of the Prosecution.[13]

The Trial Chamber, however, found that Mr. Nzirorera's possession of redacted forms of the documents mitigated much of the prejudice caused by the failure to disclose.[14]

6. On appeal, the Prosecution does not seek reversal of any of the Trial Chamber's individual findings regarding disclosure.[15] Rather, the Prosecution challenges exclusively the general finding that it may not discharge its Rule 68 disclosure obligations through the EDS, emphasizing the significant implications this conclusion has on its disclosure practices in this and other cases.[16]

7. The Prosecution explains that, upon completion,[17] its EDS will contain its entire evidence collection, except for confidential material.[18] Presently, it has thirty-four thousand documents, with several thousand more to be added, divided into three general categories: redacted witness statements, audio/video, and Prosecution evidence.[19] The database allows a user to perform text searches and then to view and print selected documents.[20] The Prosecution explains that the EDS is also accessible to defence counsel via the internet,[21] which Mr. Nzirorera disputes.[22] In addition, Mr. Nzirorera portrays a vastly different picture of the utility of the EDS, pointing to significant problems in locating relevant material in light of the fact that much of the material in the EDS is redacted.[23]

Discussion

8. The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erred as a matter of law in finding that it cannot discharge its disclosure obligations under Rule 68 by making the Prosecution evidence collection and other relevant materials accessible to the Defence through the EDS.[24] In identifying the Trial Chamber's alleged legal error, the Prosecution contends that the Trial Chamber failed to appreciate the searchable format of the EDS.[25] However, in the very same passage upon which the Prosecution relies in support of this proposition, the Trial Chamber clearly expressed that the EDS, "allows the Defence to do its searches for exculpatory material."[26] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber cannot agree that the Trial Chamber failed to appreciate this aspect of the EDS. Rather, in the view of the Appeals Chamber, the Prosecution appears to take issue with the Trial Chamber's finding that the Prosecution has a "positive obligation" to disclose Rule 68 material "in its possession" to individual accused.[27] The Attached to the Prosecution Appeal are several annexes containing materials that illustrate how the EDS works and how it can be used by Defence Counsel. Mr. Nzirorera seeks to strike the annexes and paragraphs 20 to 25 of the Prosecution Appeal, complaining that these paragraphs and annexes present material that was not before the Trial Chamber. See Nzirorera Response and Motion, paras. 2-4. With respect to paragraphs 20 to 25 of the Prosecution Appeal, the Appeals Chamber denies Mr. Nzirorera's request. In the circumstances of this case, the Appeals Chamber does not find the submissions in these paragraphs problematic, as the description provided in the Prosecution Appeal is materially the same, for the purposes of this decision, as the much more general one given to the Trial Chamber. See T. 13 February 2006 pp. 10-12, 19. The Appeals Chamber, however, grants Mr. Nzirorera's request with respect to the annexes. These annexes contain additional evidence, which may only be admitted in accordance with the procedure laid out in Rule 115.

Appeals Chamber, however, can identify no legal error on the part of the Trial Chamber in holding that the Prosecution has a positive obligation to disclose exculpatory material in its possession.

9. The Prosecution's obligation to disclose exculpatory material is essential to a fair trial.[28] The Appeals Chamber has always interpreted this obligation broadly.[29] The positive nature of this obligation and its significance stem from the Prosecution's duty to investigate, which the Appeals Chamber has explained runs conterminously with its duty to prosecute.[30] In particular, the Appeals Chamber recalls that one of the purposes of the Prosecution's investigative function is > "to assist the Tribunal to arrive at the truth and to do justice for the international community, victims, and the accused."[31]

The responsibility for disclosing exculpatory material rests on the Prosecution alone, and the determination of what material meets Rule 68 disclosure requirements is primarily a fact-based judgement, falling within the Prosecution's responsibility.[32] In other words, the Prosecution has a distinct obligation to participate in the process of administering justice by disclosing to the Defence, as required by Rule 68 (A), material which it actually knows "may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the accused or affect the credibility of the Prosecution evidence". This responsibility is crucial to the analysis.

10. Bearing these principles in mind, the Prosecution must actively review the material in its possession for exculpatory material[33] and, at the very least, inform the accused of its existence.[34] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the Prosecution's Rule 68 obligation to disclose extends beyond simply making available its entire evidence collection in a searchable format. A search engine cannot serve as a surrogate for the Prosecution's individualized consideration of the material in its possession. As such, the Appeals Chamber can identify no legal error on the part of the Trial Chamber in finding that the EDS, as described by the Prosecution, fails to fulfil these important and expansive obligations.

The Appeals Chamber has recognized that the voluminous nature of materials "in the possession" of Prosecutor may give rise to delays in disclosure. It does not however excuse the Prosecution from reviewing it and assessing it in light of Rule 68. See, e.g., Blaskić Appeal Judgement, para. 300 ("… the voluminous nature of the materials in the possession of the Prosecution may result in delayed disclosure, since the material in question may be identified only after the trial proceedings have concluded."); Krstić Appeal Judgement, para. 197 ("The Appeals Chamber is sympathetic to the argument of the Prosecution that in most instances material requires processing, translation, analysis and identification as exculpatory material. Nevertheless, the Prosecution did take an inordinate amount of time before disclosing material in this case, and has failed to provide a satisfactory explanation for the delay.") (internal citation omitted). Moreover, the Appeals Chamber has explained the unity of the Office of the Prosecutor in discharging disclosure. See Bagosora Appeal Decision, paras. 42-46.

11. The Prosecution's reasoning includes the following two steps. First, it argues that paragraphs (A) and (B) of Rule 68 establish two distinct disclosure obligations covering different categories of materials: paragraph (A) applies to materials that the Prosecution actually knows may be exculpatory, while paragraph (B) applies more broadly to all "collections of relevant material", whether or not the Prosecution knows that they may be exculpatory. Second, it argues that when the Prosecution provides the defence with an electronic collection of relevant materials in satisfaction of its obligation under paragraph (B), that also satisfies its obligations under paragraph (A) with respect to any materials governed by paragraph (A) that may be found somewhere within the collection. The Appeals Chamber notes that while the first step of the Prosecution's argument appears to embrace a rather broad interpretation of the Prosecution's disclosure obligations, the second step would have the effect of curtailing them by making it unnecessary for the Prosecution to draw the attention of the Defence to the particular material that it actually knows may be exculpatory.

12. The Appeals Chamber observes several flaws in the Prosecution's reasoning. The Prosecution's obligation to disclose to the defence material that may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the accused or affect the credibility of Prosecution evidence is set forth in Rule 68(A).[35] It is only Rule 68 (A) that articulates which material is subject to disclosure under this rule and which obliges the Prosecution to disclose it. Rule 68 (B) does not establish a distinct disclosure obligation.[36] Rather, it simply provides for a possible modality of conveying exculpatory material to the defence, in an electronic format, after the Prosecution identifies it as "relevant material" which is subject to disclosure under Rule 68. This is supported by the plain language of sub-paragraph B of Rule 68 and by its drafting history, which focused on the technical feasibility of providing to the defence electronic versions of documents subject to Rule 68 disclosure.[37]

13. Thus, disclosure under Rule 68 (B) is merely the digital equivalent of disclosure under Rule 68 (A), consisting of the same material in searchable electronic form. For these reasons, for the Prosecution to seek to satisfy its Rule 68 obligations merely by granting the Defence access to an electronic database containing tens of thousands of documents, only a few of which it knows to be potentially exculpatory, is the equivalent of the Prosecution seeking to satisfy those obligations by giving the Defence a key to a storage closet containing the same tens of thousands of documents in paper form. In both cases, the Prosecution has for all intents and purposes buried the exculpatory materials, at least unless it notifies the Defence of the existence of such materials and provides a means by which the Defence can be reasonably expected to find them. Rule 68 (B) was not intended to facilitate this kind of evasion of the Prosecution's disclosure obligations. Indeed, its text makes clear that it is in no way intended to dilute or circumvent Rule 68 (A)'s requirements: it states that it is "without prejudice to paragraph (A)".[38]

14. The Prosecution's second principal argument on appeal is that, by creating the EDS and by making it searchable, its collection is now "reasonably accessible" to the defence, which is a

[35] Rule 68 (A) provides: "The Prosecutor shall, as soon as practicable, disclose to the Defence any material, which in the actual knowledge of the Prosecutor may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the accused or affect the credibility of Prosecution evidence."

[36] Rule 68 (B) provides: "Where possible, and with the agreement of the Defence, and without prejudice to Paragraph (A), the Prosecutor shall make available to the Defence, in electronic form, collections of relevant material held by the Prosecutor, together with appropriate computer software with which the Defence can search such collections electronically."

[37] Minutes of the Fourteenth Plenary Session (confidential), paras. 87-100.

[38] Indeed, this proviso makes it clear that even if the Prosecution were correct that Rule 68 (B) refers to a different category of materials than does Rule 68 (A), it would not follow that granting access to the EDS satisfies all of its disclosure obligations. Instead, it would simply mean that the Prosecution could use electronic disclosure to satisfy its obligation under Rule 68 (B) with respect to one category of materials, but would still be obligated to follow the traditional method of disclosure for the narrower category of materials subject to Rule 68 (A). Thus, the second step of the Prosecution's argument does not follow logically from the first.

recognized exception to its obligation to disclose.[39] By way of illustration, the Prosecution refers to Appeals Chamber jurisprudence indicating that transcripts of open session testimony are not subject to disclosure as they are "reasonably accessible".[40] Mr. Nzirorera disputes this claim, emphasizing the difficulty of identifying exculpatory material given the redacted nature of the documents on the EDS.[41] The Prosecution counters that Mr. Nzirorera's complaints are belied by his possession of material, which it surmises came from the EDS, thereby demonstrating its proper functioning.[42] The Appeals Chamber observes that it is not clear from the record how Mr. Nzirorera obtained the material he used to demonstrate that the Prosecution was in breach of its disclosure obligations.

15. The Appeals Chamber agrees that the Prosecution may be relieved of its Rule 68 obligation if the existence of the relevant exculpatory material is known to the Defence and if it is reasonably accessible through the exercise of due diligence.[43] On the basis of the record before it, however, the Appeals Chamber cannot find that the EDS makes documents reasonably accessible as a general matter, nor that the Defence can be assumed to know about all materials included in it. The determination whether given exculpatory information is reasonably accessible, and whether its existence is known to the Defence requires a careful examination of the relevant circumstances.[44] This is true for material on the EDS – especially given that, as Mr. Nzirorera notes, it may be difficult to recognize material as exculpatory if it is only available in redacted form – just as it is true for material not found on this system. The Appeals Chamber has not been asked to decide here whether the Prosecution satisfied its disclosure obligation with respect to any particular piece of information. The Appeals Chamber cautions the Prosecution, however, that just because it has placed a particular piece of material on the EDS, it has not necessarily made that piece of material "reasonably accessible" to any given accused. It might be helpful if the Prosecution either separates a special file for Rule 68 material or draws the attention of the Defence to such material in writing and permanently updates the special file or the written notice.

16. Finally, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Prosecution points to the practice of various Trial Chambers of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia concerning electronic disclosure.[45] The Appeals Chamber notes that the practice described in those cases differs from the Prosecution's proposed approach in this Tribunal.[46]

Disposition

17. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber DISMISSES the Prosecution Appeal in all respects.

I.C.T.Y. : Trial Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Slobodan Milosović, Order on Defence Application for Re-Admission of Witness Henning Hensch, 9 May 2005 (IT-02-54)

Introduction

1. The trial in the instant proceedings started on 19 September 2005. The Prosecution makes this motion, following several requests by the Defence, for conditional disclosure of (1) documents and witness statements relating to RPF acts of violence and "infiltration" in Rwanda between 1990 and 1994 ("RPF material"), and (2) other independent witness statements which may affect the credibility of Prosecution witnesses or be exculpatory pursuant to Rule 68 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Credibility Statements").[1] The Prosecution's condition for disclosing the RPF material is that the disclosure is done in a redacted format by not revealing the identities of the individuals who gave the statements, and for the Credibility Statements that the individuals who gave the statements and who are not presently the beneficiaries of any order for protective measures by a Trial Chamber, be given protective measures by this Chamber.

Discussion

Confidential Character of the Prosecution Motion

2. In his Response, Joseph Nzirorera moves first for an Order that the Prosecutor's Motion be filed publicly.[2] The Chamber notes that submissions from the Parties are to be filed publicly unless the content warrants confidential filing.[3] The Chamber has reviewed the content of the Motion and finds that it does not contain any protected information nor does the Prosecutor submit any argument in support of its confidential filing.[4] The Chamber is therefore of the view that this application is to be filed as public.

Application for Conditional Disclosure

3. The Prosecutor is willing to disclose certain RPF materials if it can be relieved of its obligation to disclose the identities of the individuals who made the statements pursuant to Rules 66 (C) and 68 (D) of the Rules as their disclosure may undermine Prosecution investigations that are still underway. Except for the statements of Witnesses DM80 and DM46 who are covered by an order for protective measures from the Bagosora case[5], the Prosecutor states that the witnesses who provided these materials are not subject to protective measures by any Trial Chamber of the Tribunal, even though he claims they are protected through Rule 39 of the Rules. Further, the Prosecutor requests that the Defence should not attempt to investigate the identities of the witnesses or share any of the information in the statements with anyone outside of the Defence team, except for the Accused himself. He also requests that the Chamber maintain the order for protective measures for Witnesses DM80 and DM46.

4. As for the Credibility Statements, although the Prosecutor only wishes to disclose them in a redacted format, if the Chamber orders their full disclosure, he requests that the Chamber protect the identities of the individuals who provided the information by extending its prior orders for protective measures from 10 December 2004 and in the Scheduling Order of 30 March 2006[6], to these witnesses.

The Prosecutor attached two affidavits to

In particular, the Prosecutor asks that the Defence notify the Prosecutor in writing and on reasonable notice if it wishes to contact one of these witnesses and such contact, if agreed to by the witness, should be facilitated through WVSS.

5. In support of the requests in this Motion, the Prosecutor relies on this Chamber's Scheduling Order of 30 March 2006 where the Chamber ordered the Rule 68 (A) witness statement material concerning Witness ADE to be disclosed in an unredacted format but ordered the Defence and the Accused not to disseminate any of the included identifying information so as to protect the security of the witnesses. In his Reply[7], the Prosecutor further relies on the recent decision in the Zigiranyirazo case where the Trial Chamber extended its orders of protective measures to witnesses who were not expected to testify at trial but who made statements to the Prosecutor which may contradict one of the Prosecutor's witnesses, based on the interests of protecting the witnesses in question and in the interests of justice as a whole[8]. The Prosecutor also submitted as Annexes to this Motion, a declaration of one of his investigators from May 2005 detailing the security situation in Rwanda, which remains highly precarious and unpredictable, and an affirmation from another investigator dated March 2006 that the details in the first declaration remain current.

6. Joseph Nzirorera opposes the Motion only to the extent that he believes that the Prosecutor's Rule 68 (A) obligations require the provision of completely unredacted witness statements to the Defence. He also opposes the requirement that he notify the Prosecutor if he wishes to interview any of these witnesses and that WVSS facilitate the interview because as this Chamber has already ruled, they are not property of either party and have not been designated as Prosecution witnesses.[9]

7. Concerning the Prosecutor's request to be relieved of its obligation to disclose the identities of the individuals who provided the RPF material pursuant to Rules 66 (C) and 68 (D) of the Rules, the Chamber notes that these rules provide an exception to the Prosecutor's obligation to disclose information which may affect the credibility of Prosecution witnesses, be exculpatory, or material to the preparation of the Defence when it is might prejudice further or ongoing Prosecution investigations, be contrary to the public interest or affect the security interests of any State. Furthermore, these rules prescribe that when making such an application the Prosecutor shall provide the Trial Chamber with the information or materials sought to be kept confidential. The Chamber is of the view that an exception to the Prosecutor's obligation to disclose information should only be given on a case-by-case basis after consideration of the Prosecutor's submissions in each case. In the instant case, no information or material has been given to the Chamber, nor has any specific argument been made for the Chamber to make this order.

8. The Chamber has already decided that Rule 68 (A) mandates the disclosure of identifying information with respect to Prosecution witnesses,[10] when their identity is inextricably connected with the substance of the statements.[11] The Chamber acknowledges that Rule 39 of the Rules allows the Prosecution to take special measures to provide for the safety of potential witnesses and informants including requesting an order from a Trial Chamber or a Judge. As stated in prior Decisions, the application of this Rule could not constitute, as such, an impediment to disclosure of identifying information with respect to Prosecution witnesses".[12] Accordingly, since the identity of the individuals support the allegation of risks faced by the witnesses, and argues that the protective measures order could be extended to persons who were interviewed by him.

who gave statements regarding the RPF material and the individuals who gave the Credibility Statements are indeed related to the content of the statements, they should be disclosed to the Defence.[13]

9. The Chamber however agrees that the Credibility Statements and the statements concerning the RPF Material may contain sensitive information, which could affect the security of the individuals who gave the statements. To adequately protect those individuals, the Chamber is of the view that the Defence and the Accused should be requested not to disseminate to the public and media any of their identifying information and that should the individuals agree to an interview with the Defence, after notifying the Prosecution, the Witnesses and Victims Support Section of the Tribunal (WVSS) shall take all necessary arrangements to facilitate the interview.

10. Following the established jurisprudence, Rule 75 (F) of the Rules provides a mechanism for routine disclosure and obviates the need for individualized applications to the Chambers.[14] It also provides that Defence to whom the disclosure is being made must be informed of the nature of the protective measures ordered in the first proceedings. In the present case, there is therefore no need for the Chamber to order the maintenance of protective measures already ordered for Witnesses DM80 and DM46.

II. GRANTS the Prosecutor's Motion in part; and accordingly,

III. ORDERS that the Defence for each Accused and the Accused persons shall not share, reveal or discuss, directly or indirectly, any documents or any information contained in any documents, or any other information which could reveal or lead to the identification of any person whose statement shall be disclosed pursuant to this decision, to any person or entity other than the Accused, assigned Counsel or other persons working on the Defence team;

IV. ORDERS that the Defence for each Accused shall notify the Prosecution in writing, on reasonable notice, and the Witnesses and Victims Support Section of the Tribunal (WVSS) if it wishes to contact any person who submitted a statement to the Prosecution related to the RPF material or a Credibility Statement, who are not subject to a Trial Chamber's protective orders. Should the person concerned agree to the interview, WVSS shall immediately undertake all necessary arrangements to facilitate the interview;

V. DENIES the remainder of the Prosecutor's Motion.

Introduction

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. Seven Prosecution witnesses have been heard so far. Joseph Nzirorera now moves, pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute of the Tribunal and Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence for the Chamber to issue a subpoena to prospective Defence Witnesses NZ1, NZ2 and NZ3 to meet with his Counsel and to the State where they are located to cooperate in facilitating such meetings because the witnesses have refused to meet with his Counsel on their own volition.[1]

2. The Prosecution objects to Joseph Nzirorera's applications on the basis that all of the relevant information concerning the merits has been filed ex parte. It requests that the motions be denied, or in the alternative, that the Chamber order the disclosure of the ex parte information and allow the Prosecution five days to further respond to the disclosed information.

3. To support his applications, Joseph Nzirorera filed ex parte annexures including the identifying information of the prospective witnesses, an account of the facts to which the witnesses could testify and that could be material to his defence, and documents showing the unwillingness of the witnesses to meet with Nzirorera's Counsel. The ex parte filing regarding Witness DNZ1 was however inadvertently disclosed by the Registry to the Prosecution.[2] As a result of an additional Motion filed by Nzirorera, the Chamber decided to deal with the ex parte character of the confidential annex and the remedies sought by the Defence when it rules on the merits of the Defence motion regarding Defence Witness NZ1.[3]

4. Furthermore, on 31 May 2006, the Chamber considered that, due to the particular circumstances of the case, the Registrar's assistance was required to determine the willingness of Witness DNZ1 to participate in this trial.[4] As a result, the Registrar submitted that

> "no contact could be made directly with the witness as his Counsel has peremptorily asserted that his client was unwilling to cooperate with the Tribunal".[5]

Discussion

Ex Parte Filings of Defence Annexes

5. The Chamber is now ready to rule on the Prosecution's request for disclosure of ex parte filings and the Defence's application for subpoena prospective witnesses.

6. Applications may be filed ex parte when they are necessary in the interests of justice, that is, where the disclosure to the other party in the proceedings of the information conveyed by the application would be likely to prejudice unfairly either the applicant or some person involved in or related to that application.[6]

7. Under the specific circumstances of the case, the Chamber considers that the disclosure of the identity of prospective Defence Witness DNZ1 could have prejudiced unfairly Joseph Nzirorera since it could have affected the right of the Accused to prepare his defence. This ex parte filing should therefore not have been disclosed to the Prosecution. However, since, as discussed hereinafter, a subpoena directed to prospective Witness DNZ1 is not warranted in the present case, the Chamber does not find that the Accused suffered any prejudice and that any remedy is therefore needed.

8. The situation regarding prospective witnesses DNZ2 and DNZ3 is different since they are protected Prosecution witnesses in other proceedings before this Tribunal.[7] According to the relevant protective orders which remain applicable even if these witnesses have already testified, the Defence must give reasonable notice to the Prosecution of its intention to contact these witnesses.[8] The Defence filing indicating the identifying information of prospective witnesses DNZ2 and DNZ3 should therefore have been disclosed to the Prosecution. In light of the ruling below, the Chamber does not consider that additional time is required for the Prosecution to file further reply to the Defence Motion.

Applications for Subpoena of Prospective Defence Witnesses

9. Rule 54 of the Rules permits the issuance of > "orders, summonses, subpoenas, warrants and transfer orders as may be necessary for the purposes of an investigation or for the preparation or conduct of the trial".

This Rule encompasses the Chamber's power to require a prospective witness to attend at a nominated place and time in order to be interviewed when the requesting party shows that (i) it has made reasonable attempts to obtain the voluntary cooperation of the witness, (ii) the witness' testimony can materially assist its case and (iii) the witness' testimony must be necessary and appropriate for the conduct and the fairness of the trial.[9]

10. According to this Tribunal's jurisprudence, a subpoena order however is not to be issued lightly. When deciding whether the applicant has met the evidentiary threshold, the Chamber may also consider whether the information the applicant seeks to elicit through the use of subpoena is obtainable through other means.[10] The Appeals Chamber furthermore held that that a subpoena should be issued if "it is at least reasonably likely that an order would produce the degree of cooperation needed for the defence to interview the witness."[11]

11. In the present case, the Chamber is satisfied that the Defence has made reasonable attempts to obtain the voluntary cooperation of prospective Witnesses DNZ1, DNZ2 and DNZ3.

12. The Chamber has carefully reviewed the nature and the scope of the information that could be given by these witnesses. The Chamber is not convinced that the information that Witness DNZ1 could provide according to Joseph Nzirorera could not be obtained through other means and is therefore necessary for the conduct and the fairness of this trial. In addition, in light of the Registrar's

At the direction of the Trial Chamber or a Judge thereof, and with the consent of such Protected Person or the parents or guardian of such person if that person under the age of 18 years, to an interview by the Defence, the Prosecution shall undertake the necessary arrangements to facilitate such contact.

submissions that the witness is firmly unwilling to cooperate with the Tribunal,[12] it is unlikely that a subpoena will produce the degree of cooperation needed for the Defence Counsel for Nzirorera to interview this witness. There is therefore no ground for issuing a subpoena with respect to prospective Witness DNZ1.

13. Joseph Nzirorera believes that Defence Witnesses DNZ2 and DNZ3 could provide rebuttal evidence to some Prosecution evidence, because they were said to be present at a certain meeting chaired by Nzirorera but they did not mention it in prior statements. Nzirorera submits that these witnesses could confirm they never attended this meeting as alleged by a Prosecution witness. According to the Accused, when the Defence is not fully aware of the nature and relevance of the testimony of a prospective witness but has a reasonable belief that the witness can materially assist in the preparation of its case, it is in the interests of justice to allow the Defence to meet the witness and assess his testimony.[13]

14. In the Chamber's view, the mere omission of a meeting in a statement does not necessarily imply that these witnesses did not attend it. Furthermore, even if these witnesses confirm that they did not attend this meeting, Nzirorera does not show how such evidence could materially assist in the preparation of his case. At the utmost, it could provide foundation to impeach a Prosecution witness but could not provide evidence that Nzirorera did not attend the meeting. The Chamber also notes that other persons were said to be present at this meeting.[14] Prospective Witnesses DNZ 2 and DNZ 3 are therefore not the only potential source of information. Again, a subpoena should not be issued lightly and must be balanced with the interests of justice. In light of the above-mentioned, the Chamber does not find that a subpoena for prospective Witnesses DNZ 2 and DNZ 3 is warranted.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS in part the Prosecution's application for disclosure of the ex parte annex to the Defence Motion to subpoena DNZ2 and DNZ3, and accordingly

II. ORDERS the Defence for Nzirorera to disclose to the Prosecution the identity of prospective Defence Witnesses DNZ2 and DNZ3, III. DENIES Joseph Nzirorera's Motions in their entirety.

The Prosecutor, Decision on Request for Review, 30 June 2006 (ICTR-96-14)

Introduction

1. The proceedings in the instant case started on 19 September 2005. On 9 March 2006, the Chamber delivered an Oral Decision on Joseph Nzirorera's Motion for Inspection of Non-Rule 68 Material allowing the Accused to inspect some statements in the Prosecution's possession provided by Célestin Sezibera, Djuma Babizunturo, and Grégoire Niyimanzi.[1] After having reviewed these statements, Joseph Nzirorera contends that they contradict the testimony of Prosecution Witness UB, and consequently the Prosecutor's original representations that the statements were not exculpatory were incorrect. This application is for remedial measures as a result of the Prosecution's breach of its obligations to disclose exculpatory material under Rule 68 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.[2] The Prosecutor opposes the Motion.[3]

Discussion

2. The Chamber recalls that the Prosecutor has a positive and continuous obligation under Rule 68 (A) of the Rules to disclose, as soon as practicable, to the Defence any material which, in his actual knowledge, may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the Accused or affect the credibility of the Prosecutor's evidence. If the Accused wishes to show that the Prosecutor is in breach of these obligations, it must identify specifically the materials sought, present a prima facie showing of its probable exculpatory nature, and prove the Prosecutor's actual knowledge of the materials requested.[4]

3. In his Motion, Joseph Nzirorera details the differences between the statements of Célestin Sezibera, Grégoire Niyimanzi and the testimony of Witness UB. He mainly contends that in their statements, Sezibera and Niyimanzi did not mention a meeting chaired by Nzirorera in April 1994, while Witness UB testified that both Sezibera and Niyimanzi were present at that meeting.

4. The Chamber has reviewed the statements signed by Grégoire Niyiramanzi on 18 June 2003 and by Célestin Sezibera on 9 November 2005. However, according to the jurisprudence of this Tribunal, the mere omission of a reference to a meeting in a statement does not mean that these witnesses could not have attended it or that this meeting could not have taken place.[5]

5. In the light of the foregoing, the Chamber concludes that Joseph Nzirorera has failed to demonstrate a violation of Rule 68 (A) of the Rules by the Prosecutor in this respect. Consequently, the Chamber finds it unnecessary to consider the remedial measures sought by Joseph Nzirorera.

For the above mentioned reasons, the Chamber

DENIES the Defence Motion in its entirety.

Édouard Karemera et al., Order of the Presiding Judge Assigning a Bench of Three Judges Pursuant to Rule 72 (E) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, 1 June 2006 (ICTR-98-44)

1. This Bench of three Judges of the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Bench" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized of the "Prosecutor's Motion for Determination that the Interlocutory Appeal as of Right May Proceed Immediately, For Leave to File a Written Brief on the Merits of the Appeal, and for a Scheduling Order", filed on 30 May 2006 ("Prosecution Motion").

Discussion

2. This matter is before the Bench pursuant to Rule 72 (E) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal ("Rules")[1] in order to determine whether the appeal is capable of satisfying the criteria under Rule 72 (D) which delimits the types of jurisdictional challenges which may proceed as of right. Rule 72 (D) provides:

> For purposes of paragraphs (A) (i) and (B) (i), a motion challenging jurisdiction refers exclusively to a motion which challenges an indictment on the ground that it does not relate to:
> (i) any of the persons indicated in Articles 1, 5, 6 and 8 of the Statute;

[1] Order of the Presiding Judge Assigning a Bench of Three Judges Pursuant to Rule 72 (E) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, 1 June 2006. Rule 72 (E) presently provides: "An appeal brought under paragraph (B) (i) may not be proceeded with if a bench of three Judges of the Appeals Chamber, assigned by the presiding Judge of the Appeals Chamber, decides that the appeal is not capable of satisfying the requirements of paragraph (D), in which case the appeal shall be dismissed."

(ii) the territories indicated in Articles 1, 7 and 8 of the Statute;

(iii) the period indicated in Articles 1, 7, and 8 of the Statute; or

(iv) any of the violations indicated in Articles 2, 3, 4 and 6 of the Statute.

3. The Prosecution Motion challenges a Trial Chamber decision holding that the theory of joint criminal enterprise cannot apply to a charge of complicity in genocide since complicity in genocide is itself a mode of liability and not a crime.[2] The Prosecution submits that in so holding the Trial Chamber erred in law since complicity in genocide, specified in Article 2 (3) (e) of the Statute, is a crime and not just a mode of liability.[3] In addition, the Prosecution requests leave to file written briefs in conformity with the requirements of paragraph C (2) (d) (1) of the Practice Direction on the Lengths of Briefs and Motions on Appeal ("Practice Direction") and for a scheduling order.[4]

4. Mr. Nzirorera does not oppose the Prosecution Motion.[5] He requests that the translation requirements of Mr. Karemera and Mr. Ngirumpatse be taken into account in making the scheduling order.[6] Mr. Karemera and Mr. Ngirumpatse have not filed a response.[7] The Prosecution has not filed a reply.

5. Having considered the parties' submissions, the Bench finds that this appeal involves a question of jurisdiction within the meaning of Rule 72 (D) (iv) of the Rules as it relates to the violations indicated in Articles 2 and 6 of the Statute and that, as such, it satisfies the requirements to proceed as of right. In light of this conclusion, the Bench authorizes the parties to file written submissions pursuant to paragraph C (2) (d) (1) of the Practice Direction. In setting out a scheduling order for this appeal, the Bench is mindful that in order to be able to present a full answer, Mr. Karemera and Mr. Ngirumpatse need French translations of the Prosecution's appeal brief.[8]

Disposition

6. For the foregoing reasons, the Prosecution Motion, Judge Schomburg dissenting, is GRANTED. The Prosecution is DIRECTED to file its brief no later than 28 July 2006. The Registry is DIRECTED to provide to Mr. Karemera and Mr. Ngirumpatse and their counsel, on an urgent basis, French translations of the Prosecution's brief and the present decision. Mr. Karemera, Mr. Ngirumpatse, and Mr. Nzirorera may file their responses within ten days from the date on which the French translation of the last of these documents is served on them respectively. The Prosecution may reply to any response within four days. The Registry is also DIRECTED to inform the Appeals Chamber of the date on which the translated documents are served on the parties.

Judge Shomburg appends his dissenting opinion*.

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized of an interlocutory appeal,[1] filed by the Prosecution, against a decision of Trial Chamber III.[2] In relation to this appeal, the Appeals Chamber is also seized with a motion filed by the Prosecution to withdraw its appeal.[3]

Background

2. On 12 April 2006, the Appeals Chamber ordered the Trial Chamber to consider in the first instance Joseph Nzirorera's jurisdictional challenge to the pleading of joint criminal enterprise in a count of complicity in genocide.[4] As a consequence, the Trial Chamber issued a decision on 18 May 2006 holding that the Prosecution could not pursue a count of complicity in genocide through the theory of joint criminal enterprise because complicity in genocide was a mode of liability and not a separate crime.[5] The Prosecution then sought leave to appeal the Trial Chamber's decision as of right.[6]

3. On 14 July 2006, a Bench of three judges of the Appeals Chamber, Judge Schomburg dissenting, determined that the Prosecution's appeal could proceed as of right and set forth a briefing schedule for the parties.[7] The Prosecution has not yet filed its appeal brief. Instead, it now seeks leave to withdraw the appeal.[8] The Prosecution submits that, "upon careful re-assessment of the situation", it no longer views this appeal as necessary in the circumstances of this case.[9] Though it still maintains its legal position that complicity in genocide is a separate crime, the Prosecution states that considerations of judicial economy do not justify pursuing the present appeal.[10]

Disposition

4. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, a party may withdraw an appeal or a particular ground of appeal simply by giving notice and need not necessarily provide any further justification.[11] While it would have been preferable for the Prosecution to carefully assess its position prior to filing the appeal, the Appeals Chamber sees no reason to require it to pursue an appeal it no longer finds necessary in the context of this case. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber GRANTS the Prosecution's motion to withdraw its appeal and DECLARES the appeal moot.

Order for the Transfer of Prosecution Witnesses from Rwanda Article 28 of the Statute of the Tribunal and Rule 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence 13 September 2006 (ICTR-98-44-T)

(Original: French)

Trial Chamber III

Judges : Dennis C. M. Byron, Presiding Judge ; Emile Francis Short ; Gberdao Gustave Kam

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. The fourth trial session is scheduled to start on 23 October 2006. The Prosecutor now requests the Chamber, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, to order the temporary transfer of witnesses with the pseudonyms ALG, HH, GK, GGK and GBU, who are currently detained or on provisional release in Rwanda, to the United Nations Detention Facilities (UNDF) in Arusha (United-Republic of Tanzania), so that they can testify in the present case during the next trial session.[1]

2. Rule 90 bis (A) of the Rules gives the Chamber power to make an order to transfer a detained person to the Detention Unit of the Tribunal if his or her presence has been requested. Rule 90 bis (B) stipulates the conditions that an applicant must satisfy before such an order can be made:

> (i) The presence of the detained witness is not required for any criminal proceedings in progress in the territory of the requested State during the period the witness is required by the Tribunal;
> (ii) Transfer of the witness does not extend the period of his detention as foreseen by the requested State;

3. The Prosecution has exhibited a letter from the Rwandan Prosecutor General addressed to the Rwandan Minister of Justice and a letter from the Rwandan Ministry of Justice confirming the availability of Witnesses ALG, HH, GK and GGK to be transferred temporarily to Arusha during the period 23 September to 21 December 2006.[2] The Chamber is satisfied that these witnesses are not required for criminal proceedings in Rwanda during that time and that the witnesses' presence at the Tribunal will not extend the period of their detention in Rwanda.

4. According to the letter form the Rwandan Prosecutor General, Witness GBU is on provisional release. Rule 90 bis cannot apply to him since he remains free in Rwanda subject to restrictions to his freedom of movement. His presence is nonetheless requested to allow him to give evidence during the next trial session. The Chamber is of the view that this witness should temporarily be transferred to Arusha with the cooperation of the Rwandan authorities in accordance with Article 28 of the Statute of the Tribunal.

> I. GRANTS the Prosecution Motion as follows:
>
> II. REQUESTS, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules, the Registrar to temporarily transfer detained witnesses known by the pseudonyms ALG, HH, GK and GGK to the UNDF facility in Arusha, at an appropriate time prior to their scheduled dates to testify during the period 23 October to 15 December 2006.
> III. REQUESTS, pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute, the Government of Rwanda to cooperate with the Tribunal to ensure the temporary transfer of witness known by the pseudonym GBU to [1] Prosecutor's Motion filed on 14 July 2006 and Prosecutor's Supplemental filing filed on 5 September 2006.

[2] Prosecutor's Supplemental filing filed on 5 and 11 September 2006.

Arusha at an appropriate time prior to his scheduled dates to testify during the period 23 October to 15 December 2006;

IV. REQUESTS the Registrar to make all the necessary arrangements to implement this Decision and to ensure that the return travel of Witnesses ALG, HH, GK, GGK and GBU to Rwanda is facilitated as soon as practically possible for each witness after the individual's testimony has ended;

V. REQUESTS the Governments of Rwanda and United-Republic of Tanzania to cooperate with the Registrar in the implementation of this Order;

IV. REQUESTS the Registrar to cooperate with the authorities of the Governments of Rwanda and United-Republic of Tanzania; to ensure proper conduct during the transfer and during the detention of the witnesses at the UNDF; to inform the Chamber of any changes in the conditions which may affect the length of stay in Arusha.

Edouard Karemera et al., Decision on Édouard Karemera's Request for Extension of Time to Respond to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal, 4 April 2006 (ICTR-98-44)

1. The third session of the trial in the instant case concluded on 14 July 2006. On 11 September 2006 the Prosecutor filed a Motion for a Scheduling Order and for Practice Directives for the Duration of the Trial in order to organise the trial in light of the Tribunal completion strategy.[1] On that same date the Prosecutor filed its Consolidated Response to the Defence Submissions on the Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts.[2]

2. By two motions filed on 18 and 25 September 2006 respectfully, Édouard Karemera requested the Chamber to grant him an extension of time to respond, running from the date of receipt of the translation into French of the said motions.[3] Referring to the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, the Statute of the Tribunal and to "consistent" case law of the Appeal Chamber, the Defence contends that the said translation is crucial to guaranteeing the Accused's right to a just and fair trial.[4]

3. In recent decisions rendered on the basis of Rule 116 of the Rules, which explicitly allows for extension of time limits,[5] the Appeals Chamber granted certain requests by the Accused to extend time. In the instant case, the Appeals Chamber considered that Counsel to Édouard Karemera operates in French and not in English. The Appeals Chamber held that, in order to be able to make a full answer to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal, the Defence Counsel needs access to French translations of these documents. The Appeals Chamber further held that the lack of access to these translations constitutes good cause, within the meaning of Rule 116 of the Rules, for a reasonable delay in responding to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal.[6] In each case, the Appeals Chamber held that the respondent must demonstrate good cause for an extension of time, and in particular, that access to translation of certain documents is necessary to enable him to prepare his response to the initial motion.[7] Where such is not demonstrated, a request to extend time would be denied.[8]

4. Defence Counsel are representing the Accused before this Tribunal. Therefore, trial documents must first be understood by them since otherwise the rights of the Accused as set out in Article 20 (4) of the Statute and interpreted by the Tribunal's case law would be impaired.[9] In this regard, the Chamber notes the Tribunal's practice of assigning defence teams composed of bilingual counsel or legal assistants in order to limit delays in proceedings resulting from the lack of access to translations.[10] Thus, a trial document not available in a language understood by the Accused should not serve as pretext for requesting an extension of time, in particular when Defence Counsel are capable of properly assisting the Accused.

(A) The Appeals Chamber may grant a motion to extend a time limit upon a showing of good cause.

[10] See, for instance, The Prosecutor v. Aloys Simba, Case N°ICTR-01-76-I, Decision on Defence Request for Protection of Witnesses (TC), 25 August 2004, para. 1.

5. Therefore, the Chamber is bound to consider the instant requests in light of these practices and, as the Appeals Chamber itself has ruled and directed, any extension of time should take into account the circumstances of the instant case and the grounds pleaded by the moving party.

6. In the instant case, the Chamber has on several occasions noted that Édouard Karemera's Defence team includes a bilingual French-English legal assistant and that both Lead Counsel and Co-Counsel understand English and are capable of working in that language.[11] Moreover, it should be recalled that the date of filing of response to the Prosecutor's motion for judicial notice of facts of common knowledge and adjudicated facts was determined on consent by the parties.[12]

7. In the Chamber's view, the Accused therefore has sufficient assistance to enable him to understand the motions in question. The Chamber also notes that a draft translation of the Prosecutor's motions has just been served on the parties. The fact that the Defence does not have the certified translation of the motions filed by the other party in the instant case in no way relieves it of its obligation to file its reply within the five-day time limit prescribed in Rule 73 (E) of the Rules. No extension of time on this basis could therefore be allowed.

8. The Chamber expresses some concern regarding the repeated requests to extend time, which are filed, without justification, at the expiration of time for filing of Édouard Karemera's response to the pending motions. Such practices affect the effective management of proceedings. Defence Counsel are urgently called upon to ensure that such repeated and last-minute requests do not undermine the administration of justice and the Accused's basic rights, including his right to be tried within a reasonable timeframe.

9. However, since a brief extension of time would not affect the resumption of proceedings on 23 October 2006 and considering the importance of the Prosecutor's two motions, the Chamber is prepared to partially grant Édouard Karemera's requests.

FOR THESE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. PARTIALLY GRANTS Édouard Karemera's requests to extend time; and

II. AUTHORISES the Defence Counsel for each of the Accused to file responses to the Prosecutor's Motion for a Scheduling Order and for Practice Directives for the Duration of the Trial and the Prosecutor's Consolidated Response to Defence Submissions on the Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts no later than 2 October 2006; and the Prosecution to file its reply no later than 6 October 2006, with effect from the date of filing of the Defence responses.

I.C.T.R. : Trial Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Edouard Karemera et al., Order for the Transfer of Prosecution Witnesses From Rwanda, 13 September 2006 (ICTR-98-44)

1. On 13 September 2006, as a result of a Prosecution's Motion, the Chamber requested the Government of Rwanda to cooperate with the Tribunal to ensure the temporary transfer of a Prosecution Witness GBU to Arusha at an appropriate time prior to his scheduled dates to testify during the fourth trial session 23 October to 15 December 2006.[1] At that time, according to the information provided to the Chamber, the witness was on provisional release and Rule 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, which gives the Chamber power to make an order to transfer a detained person to the Detention Unit of the Tribunal if his or her presence has been requested, could not apply.

2. Since then, the Prosecution was informed that Witness GBU has been re-arrested and is currently in detention in Rwanda. It therefore requests the Chamber to order his temporary transfer, as a detained witness, to the UNDF facility in Arusha.[2]

3. According to a letter from the Rwandan Ministry of Justice exhibited by the Prosecution, Witness GBU is available to be transferred temporarily to Arusha during the relevant period.[3] The Chamber is satisfied that this witness is not required for criminal proceedings in Rwanda during that time and that his presence at the Tribunal will not extend the period of their detention in Rwanda. In conformity with the requirements set out in Rule 90 bis (B) of the Rules, the witness can therefore be temporarily transferred to the Tribunal's Detention Facility.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. The next trial session is scheduled to start on 23 October 2006. On 13 February 2006, following Joseph Nzirorera's application, the Chamber requested the cooperation of the Government of Rwanda to provide, by 6 March 2006, the Registry with statements taken or received by the Rwandan authorities from and judgements rendered against 37 Prosecution witnesses.[1]

2. On 22 May 2006, noting that none of the requested records had been provided, Defence for Nzirorera moved the Chamber, pursuant to Rule 7 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, to request the Tribunal's President to report the failure of the government of Rwanda to comply with its obligation under Article 28 of the Tribunal's Statute to the United Nations Security Council.[2] It claims that lack of access to prior Prosecution witnesses' statements, while the Government of Rwanda cooperates with the Prosecution, amounts to a denial of equality of arms, guaranteed under Article 19 of the Statute.[3] To support its application, the Defence relies upon an Appeals Chamber Decision in the case of Prosecutor v. Blaskic that outlined the procedure to be followed when a State fails to comply with a Trial Chamber's order.[4] The Prosecution took no position on the propriety of referring this matter to the President and relied upon the Chamber's discretionary power on that matter.[5] But in the Prosecution's view, it does not appear that the Rwandan authorities are unwilling to cooperate; rather, from the Prosecution's experience when requesting documents from the Rwandan authorities, it would appear that they often encounter logistical challenges in locating the relevant documents dispersed throughout the country, depending on the prefecture and commune of origin of the witness, reviewing them and keeping track of those already forwarded or remain outstanding.[6]

3. Rule 7 bis of the Rules provides that

> "where a Trial Chamber or a Judge is satisfied that a State has failed to comply with an obligation under Article 28 of the Statute relating to any proceedings before that Chamber or Judge, the Chamber or Judge may request the President to report the matter to the Security Council".

4. This Rule provides a Chamber with discretionary power to decide whether to request the President to report any State's failure to cooperate with the Tribunal to the Security Council.[7]

5. In the present case, the Rwandan authorities have provided some of the documents sought. On 11 July 2006, the Parquet Général of Rwanda forwarded a bundle of documents concerning Witnesses ANU, GBU, GFA, GFG and GNK to the Tribunal's Witnesses and Victims Support Section in Kigali. These documents reached the Registrar's Office in Arusha on 17 July 2006, where they were indexed and translation priorities were identified.[8] They were subsequently distributed to the parties on 19 July 2006. This communication by the Rwandan authorities was not accompanied by any letter indicating how they had complied with the Chamber's Decision of 13 February 2006 and, particularly, no information was provided as to the absence of the other material requested.

[8] See Registrar's Office filing made on 19 July 2006.

6. The Chamber finds some relevancy in the Prosecutor's representation of the Rwandan context, which is not actually challenged by the Defence, and is satisfied that the circumstances of the case do not show any unwillingness of the Rwandan authorities to cooperate with the Tribunal. It is appropriate at this stage to determine the reasons why the material sought was only disclosed in part and no material was disclosed at all regarding some of the witnesses concerned by the Chamber's Decision. It is noted that the Defence does not object to the Prosecution's suggestion that further efforts be made to convince the Rwandan government to completely comply with the Chamber's Decision of 13 February 2006.[9]

7. The Defence, however, claims that it is reasonable for the Prosecution not to call any of the witnesses who are subjects of the Chamber's request for cooperation until the issue is resolved. In the Chamber's view, there is no need at this stage to rule on the order of appearance of the Prosecution witnesses called to testify during the next trial session, even if some of them are affected by the request made to the Rwandan authorities.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. DENIES the Defence Motion in its entirety;

II. REQUESTS, pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute, the Rwandan authorities to explain as soon as possible and no later than 13 October 2006, how they complied with the Chamber's Decision of 13 February 2006, and, where appropriate, to provide the reasons why some material sought was not disclosed.

Edouard Karemera et al., Decision on Prosecution Motion Seeking Extension of Time to File Applications under Rule 92 bis, 10 February 2006 (ICTR-98-44)

1. The trial in this case commenced on 19 September 2005. On 13 December 2005, at the Prosecution's request, the Chamber granted leave to remove 51 witnesses from the Prosecution witness list and to add one witness, Witness ADE, to the same list.[1] Following this Decision, the Prosecution also notified to the Chamber and the Defence the pseudonyms and the name of six witnesses whose evidence would have been rendered unnecessary if ADE testified and could therefore be removed from its list.[2]

2. The Prosecution now moves the Chamber to grant leave to remove 10 other witnesses, including Witness ADE.[3] It further confirms the removal of the six other witnesses, who were to be removed subject to Witness ADE's testimony. The Defence for Nzirorera and for Ngirumpatse do not oppose this request. The Defence for Karemera did not file any response to the Prosecution's motion.

3. Rule 73 bis (E) of the Rules states that > "[a]fter the commencement of Trial, the Prosecutor, if he considers it to be in the interests of justice, may move the Trial Chamber for leave to reinstate the list of witnesses or to vary his decision as to which witnesses are to be called".

Pursuant to the established jurisprudence, this Rule provides that a list of witnesses may be varied if the Chamber considers it to be in the interests of justice.[4]

4. The Prosecution witness list is currently composed of more than 160 witnesses, including 72 witnesses whom the Prosecution seeks admission of their evidence in the form of a written statement or transcript of prior testimony in lieu of oral testimony.[5] In the Chamber's view, the removal of 16 witnesses from the Prosecution witness list will contribute to expedite the proceedings and is therefore in the interests of justice.

ACCORDINGLY, THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS the Prosecution Motion to remove witnesses known by the pseudonyms ADE, AFQ, AHJ, AKX, BIT, BW, CR, GBV, GDG, GFG, GGG, GGK, GJQ, IV and NNZ as well as Marc Nees; and

II. ORDERS that the amended version of the Prosecution Witness List be filed according this Decision by 4 October 2006.

Introduction

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. Prosecution Witness UB came to testify during the second trial session, which took place between 16 February and 15 March 2006.

2. In August 2006, the Defence for Nzirorera learnt that Witness UB gave two statements to Rwandan authorities, which allegedly contain information inconsistent with the witness' testimony in this case and were not disclosed to the Defence.[1] It also became aware for the first time that this witness testified in a Rwandan trial.[2] The Defence claims that despite a specific request, the Prosecution has declined to use its best efforts to obtain these documents because the witness has already completed his testimony.[3] The Defence therefore requests the Chamber, pursuant to Rule 98 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, to order the Prosecution to use its best efforts to obtain and disclose the above-mentioned statements and Witness UB's testimony in the said case.

Deliberations

[1] Joseph Nzirorera's Motion to Compel Best Efforts to Obtain and Disclose Statements and Testimony of Witness UB, filed on 13 September 2006: statements dated 12 May 1998 and 22 February 2000.
[2] Ibidem.
[3] The Defence refers to correspondence between Counsel for Nzirorera and Prosecutor's Office.

3. Rule 98 provides that a "Trial Chamber may proprio motu order either party to produce additional evidence. It may itself summon witnesses and order their attendance." This provision gives the Chamber discretion to make such an order to the Prosecution.[4]

4. The Chamber recalls that on 13 February 2006, following Joseph Nzirorera's application, the Government of Rwanda was requested to cooperate with the Tribunal in order to provide statements taken or received by the Rwandan authorities from and judgements rendered against 37 Prosecution witnesses, including Witness UB.[5]

5. Later, noting that none of the requested records had been provided, the Defence for Nzirorera filed a motion moving the Chamber to request the Tribunal's President to report the government of Rwanda to the United Nations Security Council for its failure to cooperate with the Tribunal.[6] On 11 July 2006, the Rwandan authorities responded to that request and communicated some material to the Chamber, none of which related to Witness UB.[7] In its Decision of 2 October 2006, the Chamber observed that the Rwandan authorities cooperated with the Tribunal by providing some of the documents requested, and denied the Defence's application.[8] The Chamber further requested the Rwandan authorities to explain as soon as possible how they complied with the Chamber's Decision of 13 February 2006, and, where appropriate, to provide the reasons why some material sought was not disclosed.

6. In the light of these circumstances, the Chamber does not see why it should exercise its discretion to order the Prosecution to obtain documents, which it has already requested from the Rwandan authorities in a prior Decision. The Chamber expects the Defence not to file repetitive motions seeking the same relief as has been done in this instance.[9]

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Defence Motion.

1. The Defence for Nzirorera responded that it did not oppose the application but requested that the Motion be filed publicly.[1]

2. The Chamber notes that, on 2 October 2006, the Prosecution did disclose the requested material.[2] The Defence Motion has therefore become moot.

Introduction

1. The proceedings in the instant case commenced on 19 September 2005. Prosecution Witnesses ZF and XBM were called to testify during the third trial session which started on 15 May 2006.

2. Throughout their testimony, the Defence for Nzirorera raised objections on the admissibility of some parts of their evidence and requested the exclusion of certain parts of the witnesses' evidence. The Defence for Karemera and Ngirumpatse also expressed concerns about the way in which the Prosecution evidence had been led in the light of the allegations set forth in the Indictment, and they supported Nzirorera's objections. The Prosecutor opposed the Defence objections and submitted that adequate notice of the disputed evidence was given in the Indictment, Pre-Trial Brief, including the summary of the witnesses' evidence, and in the witnesses' statements. Considering that these objections raised similar and significant factual and legal issues relating to the charges against the Accused persons, the Chamber considered it more appropriate to address them together in a written decision.

3. In addition to these specific objections, at the end of the trial session the Defence requested the exclusion of Witness XBM's testimony in its entirety and for sanctions against the Prosecution as a result of the late disclosure of a statement taken from the witness in 2005.

Discussion

4. The present section will firstly discuss the request to exclude Witness XBM's testimony in its entirety, and then address the other objections raised by the Defence.

1. Defence Request for Exclusion of Witness XBM's Testimony and Sanctions against the Prosecution

5. On 5 July 2006, while Witness XBM was still testifying in the current proceedings, the Prosecution disclosed to the Defence a statement taken from the witness by ICTR investigators stationed in Kigali on 6 September 2005. The Defence for Nzirorera, joined by the Defence for Karemera and Ngirumpatse,[1] claimed that such a late disclosure was a clear violation of the Prosecution's obligation to disclose copies of the statements of all witnesses it intends to call to testify at trial no later than 60 days before the date set for trial, as prescribed under Rule 66 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. It therefore requested the exclusion of XBM's testimony in its entirety and for sanctions to be imposed against the Prosecution under Rule 46 (A) of the Rules.[2] Prosecution Counsel acknowledged the late disclosure but explained that he had only become aware of the existence of the document when the witness had mentioned it for the first time in court the day before. He said that the failure to disclose was a mistake.[3]

6. Exclusion of evidence is at the extreme end of a scale of measures available to the Chamber in addressing delay in disclosure and violation of the rights of the Accused.[4]

7. In the present case, the Defence has not shown that it has suffered any prejudice from the late disclosure of the witness' statement which would justify such an extreme remedy. The Defence had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness on this specific statement and its alleged inconsistencies with his evidence given in court.[5] Consequently, even if the Defence suffered prejudice from the late disclosure, the Chamber is of the view that the appropriate remedy was granted. It must also be noted that witness' statements had already been disclosed to the Defence in a timely manner, such that the Defence had been given information on his anticipated evidence and issues affecting his credibility.[6] Under these specific circumstances, the Chamber is satisfied that the fair trial of the Accused was not compromised by the late disclosure of the witness' statement. The Defence's application seeking the exclusion of Witness XBM's testimony in its entirety therefore falls to be rejected.

8. The Chamber is of the view that no sanction under Rule 46 of the Rules is warranted against the Prosecution. Contrary to the Defence's assertion, the situation at hand is distinguishable from when the Chamber issued a warning against the Prosecution due to its failure to disclose material related to Witness T.[7] At that time, while the Defence was requesting full disclosure of material concerning Prosecution Witness T and complaining about breach in the Prosecution's disclosure obligations, the Prosecution repeatedly claimed that it had complied with its obligations. However, it later acknowledged that, upon further investigation, it realised that the disclosure was not actually complete. The Chamber found that such behaviour showed a lack of diligence in the Prosecution's compliance with its obligations, which obstructed the proceedings and was contrary to the interests of justice.[8] However, in the present situation, as soon as the Prosecution became aware of the document concerning Witness XBM, it endeavoured to find it and then disclosed it forthwith to the Defence. It acknowledged that this failure was due to a mistake and stated that it was ready to be sanctioned if the Chamber found it appropriate.[9] The Prosecution is presumed to have discharged its obligations in good faith.[10] In the light of these circumstances, and in the absence of any showing to the contrary, the Chamber has no reason to believe that the Prosecution acted in bad faith or lacked due diligence in discharging its duties in this instance.

9. The Chamber deems it necessary to recall the applicable principles of law with respect to the issues at stake; it will then apply these principles to the specific objections raised by the Defence in the present case.

2.1. Applicable Law

10. The oral objections raised by the Defence raised two kinds of legal issues on the applicable law: first, concerning the charges against an accused; second, concerning the admissibility of evidence.

(i) Applicable Law Concerning the Charges against an Accused

11. Article 17 (4) of the Tribunal's Statute and Rule 47 (C) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence require the Prosecution to set forth in the indictment a concise statement of the facts of the case and of the crime(s) with which the suspect is charged. This obligation must be interpreted in light of the rights of the accused to a fair trial, to be informed of the charges against him, and to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence.[11] According to the jurisprudence of both ad hoc Tribunals, this imposes an obligation upon the Prosecution to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the indictment, but not the evidence by which such material facts are to be proven:[12] the indictment has to fulfil the fundamental purpose of informing the accused of the charges against him with sufficient particularity to enable him to mount his defence.[13]

12. Whether particular facts are "material" depends upon the nature of the Prosecution case. The Prosecution's characterisation of the alleged criminal conduct and the proximity of the accused to the underlying crime are decisive factors in determining the degree of specificity with which the Prosecution must plead the material facts of its case in the indictment in order to provide the accused with adequate notice.[14] Where the Prosecution alleges that an accused personally committed the criminal acts in question, it must, so far as possible, plead the identity of the victim, the place and approximate date of the alleged criminal acts, and the means by which they were committed "with the greatest precision."[15] Less detail may be acceptable if the "sheer scale of the alleged crimes makes it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity in such matters as the identity of the victims and the dates for the commission of the crimes."[16] Where it is alleged that the accused planned, instigated, ordered, or aided and abetted the alleged crimes, the Prosecution is required to identify the "particular acts" or "the particular course of conduct" on the part of the accused which forms the basis for the charges in question.[17] If the Prosecution relies on a theory of joint criminal enterprise, then the Prosecutor must plead the purpose of the enterprise, the identity of the participants, and the nature of the accused's participation in the enterprise.[18]

13. Failure to set forth the specific material facts of a crime constitutes a defect in the indictment. On occasion, material facts are not pleaded with the requisite degree of specificity in an indictment because the necessary information was not in the Prosecution's possession.[19] In this context, it must be emphasised that the Prosecution is expected to know its case before proceeding to trial and may not rely on the weakness of its own investigations in order to mould the case against the accused as the trial progresses.[20] A defect in the indictment may also arise because the evidence turns out differently than expected. In these circumstances, the Chamber must consider whether a fair trial requires an amendment of the indictment, an adjournment, or the exclusion of evidence outside the scope of the indictment.[21]

14. In addition, according to the established jurisprudence of this Tribunal, a defect in the indictment may be cured where the accused has received timely, clear, and consistent information from the Prosecution which resolves the ambiguity or clears up the vagueness.[22] As the Appeals Chamber stated, "« curing » is likely to occur only in a limited number of cases."[23] Only material facts which can be reasonably related to existing charges and do not lead to a "radical transformation" of the Prosecution's case may be communicated in such a manner.[24] In making this determination, Chambers have looked at information provided through the Prosecutor's Pre-Trial Brief or its opening statement. As the Appeals Chamber emphasises, these are not the sole methods by which an indictment can be cured.[25] Depending on the circumstances, the list of witnesses the Prosecution intends to call at trial, containing a summary of the facts and charges in the indictment as to which each witness will testify, including specific references to counts and relevant paragraphs in the indictment, may serve to put the accused on notice. The Appeals Chamber also held that "the mere service of witness statements or of potential exhibits by the Prosecution pursuant to the disclosure requirements does not suffice to inform an accused of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial."[26] This rule recognizes that, in light of the volume of disclosure by the Prosecution in certain cases, a witness statement will not, without some other indication, adequately signal to the Accused that the allegation is part of the Prosecution case.[27] The Appeals Chamber, nevertheless, held that a witness statement, when taken together with the unambiguous information contained in the Pre-Trial Brief and its annexes, may be sufficient to cure a defect in an indictment.[28]

15. When deciding whether a defective indictment has been cured, the essential question is therefore whether, depending on the specific circumstances of each case, the accused was in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her and to confront the Prosecution's case.[29] In addition, where a Chamber considers that a defective indictment has been subsequently cured by the Prosecution, it should further consider whether the extent of the defects in the indictment materially prejudices an accused's right to a fair trial by hindering the preparation of a proper defence.[30]

(ii) Admissibility of Evidence

16. The Rules of Procedure and Evidence govern the proceedings.[31] The Chamber is not bound by national rules of evidence and may, in cases not otherwise provided for in the Rules, apply rules of evidence which will best favour a fair determination of the matter before it and are consonant with the spirit of the Statute and the general principles of law.[32]

17. Rule 89 (C) of the Rules provides that "[a] Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value". The Appeals Chamber has constantly ruled that this Rule provides a Chamber with broad discretion to admit relevant hearsay evidence. The fact that the evidence is hearsay does not necessarily deprive it of probative value, but it is acknowledged that the weight or probative value to be afforded to that evidence will usually be less than given to the testimony of a witness who has testified under oath and who has been cross-examined, although even this will depend upon the infinitely variable circumstances which surround hearsay evidence.[33]

18. As a general rule, the admissibility of evidence should not be confused with the assessment of weight to be accorded to that evidence, an issue to be decided by the Trial Chamber after hearing the totality of the evidence.[34]

19. To be admissible, the "evidence must be in some way relevant to an element of a crime with which the Accused is charged."[35] According to Appeals Chamber, when it has been found that a material fact has not been sufficiently pleaded in the indictment, this alone does not render the evidence inadmissible.[36] The evidence can be admitted to the extent that it may be relevant to the proof of any allegation sufficiently pleaded in the indictment.[37]

20. When deciding on the admissibility of evidence, the Chamber must also guarantee the protection of the rights of the Accused as prescribed by Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute. The Chamber therefore has inherent power to exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial.[38]

2.2. Application to the Defence Oral Objections in the Present Case

21. Under the following sections, the Chamber will address each of the Defence objections in relation to the testimonies of Witnesses ZF and XBM in the light of the above-mentioned principles.

(i) On the Objections raised by the Defence Relating to Witnesses ZF's Testimony

22. The Defence for Joseph Nzirorera argued that some aspects of Witness ZF's testimony are material facts not pleaded in the Indictment. It also contended that in some instances, his evidence was not reliable, had no probative value and that its admission would be prejudicial to Joseph Nzirorera. It therefore requests the Chamber to exclude the portions of Witness ZF's testimony pertaining to:

a. Those who were members of the réseau zéro network;[39]

b. Meetings held by Ngirumpatse in Gisenyi from 1992 to late 1993 and meetings of military and civilian authorities at a certain location throughout 1990-1994;[40]

c. Nzirorera's presence at a distribution of weapons after 6 April 1994.[41]

a. Evidence on Members of Réseau Zéro Network

23. Witness ZF testified to the existence of a secret telecom network called réseau zéro which was used by members of President Habyarimana's inner circle.[42] The witness described those people using different names depending on the considered periods; sometimes they were called "the Abakozi, the workers" and sometimes "the dragons." He explained that there was a relationship between the réseau zéro and the Akazu, the presidential circle which included people who came from the same part of the country as the President, especially Ruhengeri and Gisenyi. Since the President needed additional support, the Akazu group progressively included people whom he considered to be trustworthy from other regions in the country. This extended group was then called "the dragons."[43]

24. The Defence for Nzirorera objected to the admission of the evidence on the réseau zéro and its members. It argued that this material fact was not pleaded in the Indictment, and its source was not reliable enough or had no sufficient probative value for it to be admitted.[44] The Prosecutor replied that the evidence adduced regarding réseau zéro would be used to prove the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide and since being part of a communication network is not criminal, per se, it need not to be pleaded in the Indictment. Regardless, the Prosecutor contended that sufficient notice of these facts was given to the Accused through the witness' 1998 statement and "a number of disclosures."[45]

25. The identity of participants to a conspiracy to commit genocide and the participation of the Accused with others in a specific group conspiring to commit genocide are material facts which have to be pleaded in the Indictment. The Chamber notes that there is no reference to the réseau zéro and its membership in the Indictment. The Pre-Trial Brief only contains a footnote where it is said that "[s]ociologist André Guichaoua and historian Alison Des Forges, as well as several factual witnesses, will comment that Joseph Nzirorera, whether actually by deed or only by reputation, was associated with the […] "Reseau Zero" that planned and executed political assassinations as a method of social control."[46] Nowhere in Witness ZF's summary of his evidence attached to the Pre-Trial Brief, or in the opening statement is there any reference to this network and its members. Contrary to the Prosecutor's assertion, in the light of the volume of disclosure, a witness statement cannot, without some other indication, adequately signal to the Accused that the allegation is part of the Prosecution case.

26. The Chamber concludes that the vagueness of the Indictment in relation to the existence and the participation of the Accused in the "réseau zero" has not been cured by timely, clear and consistent notice.

27. However, the Chamber is of the view that Witness ZF's evidence is relevant to the proof of other allegations sufficiently pleaded in the Indictment, and in particular the existence of groups affiliated with the alleged "Hutu Power", including the Akazu. Contrary to the Defence's contention, the Chamber considers that this hearsay evidence can be admitted and the extent of its probative value does not substantially outweigh the need to ensure a fair trial. The Chamber recalls that the weight to be attributed to the evidence is a different issue to be assessed at a later stage.

28. Consequently, the Chamber finds that Witness ZF's evidence on réseau zero is inadmissible to prove the material fact that the Accused participated in this network since they were not put on notice of this allegation. The witness' testimony on this issue is admissible only to the extent that it is related to the existence of the Akazu, as pleaded in the Indictment.[47]

b. Meetings held by Ngirumpatse from 1992 to late 1993 and meetings of military and civilian authorities at a certain location throughout 1990-1994 in Gisenyi

29. Witness ZF testified that Ngirumpatse held two meetings at the MRND palace in the Gisenyi préfecture during 1992 and 1993, where the conduct of the Interahamwe militia in the Gisenyi préfecture, their discipline, their support to the Rwandan armed forces and to the Gisenyi gendarme were discussed.[48] The witness also testified to five meetings held at a certain location in the same préfecture between 1990 and 1994.[49] According to the witness, Nzirorera attended one of these meetings, in the second half of 1992, and said that "a Tutsi would not succeed in their unimaginable dream, and that he agreed with [Colonel Bagosora] that they should not be left to go on with their plan."[50] Apart from that meeting,[51] the witness did not provide much detail as to the content of the other meetings and only indicated the main participants, which did not include the presence of any of the Accused.

30. The Defence for Nzirorera objected to the admission of these portions of Witness ZF's evidence arguing that these meetings are material facts not contained in the Indictment or Pre-Trial Brief and that sufficient notice had not been given to the Accused.[52] In response, the Prosecutor referred to paragraphs 23 and 24 of the Indictment for the meetings held by Ngirumpatse, but provided no specific references for the meetings at a certain location in Gisenyi between 1990 and 1994.[53] He claimed that the Defence was adequately put on notice since the meetings were mentioned in the Pre-Trial Brief,[54] the summary of the witness' anticipated evidence attached to the Pre-Trial Brief, witness statements and Witness ZF's will-say statement.[55]

31. The Chamber notes that nowhere in the Pre-Trial Brief or opening statement is there a reference to a 1990 meeting in Gisenyi. The Accused were not adequately put on notice that this material fact was part of the case against them. In addition, the Prosecution acknowledged that "the 1990 meeting [was] negligible" and "[was] simply to provide a narrative structure for the evidence."[56] There is therefore no reason to admit the evidence of Witness ZF pertaining to a meeting held at a certain location in Gisenyi in 1990 and it should be excluded.[57]

32. Paragraphs 23 and 24 of the Indictment allege that the Accused persons participated in meetings "over the course of several years leading up to and including 1994".[58] Some specific meetings are also pleaded in the subsequent paragraphs of the Indictment.[59] There is, however, no reference to the meetings held by Ngirumpatse at the MRND palace in the Gisenyi prefecture during 1992 and 1993 and to the meetings at a certain location in the same préfecture 1990 and 1994. The Pre-Trial Brief contains references to meetings from 1992. At paragraph 37, it is said that "GFA, GBU, ZF, among others, will recount that starting in mid-1992, around the same time that the first legitimate multi-party government of Dismas Nsengiyaremye was introduced, MRND leaders at the national, regional and local levels began to organize meetings in their communities." Paragraph 41 of the Pre-Trial Brief specifically mentions that meetings were held at various locations in Gisenyi from the beginning of 1992 "where notable MRND figures at the regional and national levels gathered to plan their strategies." Paragraph 141 of the Pre-Trial Brief also contains a reference to several meetings held sometime in 1992 in Gisenyi in certain military camps and "that participants included Nzirorera." The summary of Witness ZF's anticipated testimony annexed to the Pre-Trial Brief mentions that the witness will testify to meetings between 1992 and 1994 held in Gisenyi, including in military camps; it enumerates the participants therein, including Nzirorera and Ngirumpatse, and briefly describes the content of these meetings; there are also clear references to specific paragraphs and charges of the Indictment to which those facts correspond. This clear information is consistently confirmed in the witness' statements disclosed prior to the beginning of the trial.[60] In that respect, it must be noted that the Defence acknowledged that the statements describe the meetings in considerable detail.[61]

33. In the Chamber's view, considering the unambiguous information contained in the Pre-Trial Brief, including the summary of Witness ZF's anticipated testimony, the witness statements adequately signalled to the Accused that the allegations on the said meetings were part of the Prosecution case. The Chamber further notes that the Pre-Trial Brief and the numerous witness statements were filed a long time before Witness ZF's testimony.[62]

34. Under these circumstances, the Chamber concludes that the Accused were given timely, clear and consistent notice that the alleged meetings were part of the Prosecution's case against them. The Chamber is also of the view that the Defence has had reasonable opportunity to investigate these allegations. The extent of the defects in the Indictment does not materially prejudice the Accused's right to a fair trial. Accordingly, the Defence objection is dismissed.

[58] Indictment, paras. 23 and 24:

23. Over the course of several years leading up to and including 1994, particularly after 1992, Édouard KAREMERA, Mathieu NGIRUMPATSE, and Joseph NZIRORERA agreed among themselves, and with the individuals identified in paragraphs 6 (i)-(iv), meeting severally at various locations on disparate occasions in the context of their political party and official government activities, to plan and prepare the destruction of Rwanda's Tutsi population, particularly the killing of persons identified as Tutsi and committed acts in furtherance of this agreement.

Prior to 8 April 1994

Formation of the Interahamwe; meetings and public speeches; financing, military training, stockpiling of firearms and weapons distributions for militias:

24. Over the course of 1993 and 1994 Édouard KAREMERA, Mathieu NGIRUMPATSE, and Joseph NZIRORERA agreed among themselves, and with others, and collectively undertook initiatives that were intended to create and extend their own personal control, and that of the MRND Steering Committee, over an organized, centrally commanded corps of militiamen that would respond to their call to attack, kill and destroy the Tutsi population.

[61] T. 16 May 2006, p. 56.

[62] The Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief was filed on 27 June 2005, more than 10 months prior to Witness ZF's testimony.

c. Nzirorera's presence at a distribution of weapons after 6 April 1994

35. The Defence for Nzirorera requested that Witness ZF's evidence pertaining to the presence of the Accused at a distribution of weapons in late 1993 or early 1994 be excluded since this information does not appear in the Indictment.

36. The Indictment does not plead this specific event but refers to Joseph Nzirorera's direct participation in the distribution of weapons.[63] The summary of the anticipated testimony of ZF attached to the Pre-Trial Brief indicates that the witness will testify to distribution of weapons at certain military camps in Gisenyi in 1993 and will recount that "after 6 April 1994 weapons brought in from abroad were distributed to militiamen to reinforce the 42nd battalion, […] and that this distribution took place in Nzirorera's presence." This unambiguous information was consistently mentioned in the witness' statements disclosed well in advance to the commencement of the trial.[64]

37. In the Chamber's view, the Accused had timely, consistent, and clear notice that the alleged distribution of weapons to which ZF gave evidence was part of the Prosecution's case against them. The Chamber notes that, during his testimony in court, the witness could not recall the exact dates of the distribution of weapons. This is an issue to be addressed when assessing the evidence. Since the Defence has had reasonable opportunity to investigate these allegations, the extent of this defect in the Indictment does not materially prejudice the Accused's right to a fair trial. Accordingly, the Defence objection is rejected.

(ii) On the Objections raised by the Defence Relating to Witnesses XBM's Testimony

38. The Defence for Nzirorera, joined by the Defence for Ngirumpatse and Karemera,[65] objected to the admission of the following evidence adduced during Witness XBM's testimony:

a. A ceremony relating to the installation of Radio RTLM antenna and subsequent distribution of weapons;[66]

b. A meeting at the Mutura communal office in January 1994;[67]

c. A meeting held at the Meridien Hotel in May 1994;[68]

d. Nyundo Massacre.[69]

39. With respect to each of these events, XBM's evidence consisted of a description how the military authorities mobilized and requested the collaboration of civilians and how the civilians cooperated in the attacks against Tutsi population.

40. The Defence argued, and the Prosecution did not dispute, that these material facts were not, as such, contained in the Indictment or in the Pre-trial Brief. The Chamber, however, accepts the Prosecution's contention that this evidence is relevant to show the collaboration between military officials and civilians.[70] This allegation is unambiguously part of the Prosecution's case according to the Indictment, the Pre-trial Brief and the summary of the anticipated testimony of several witnesses annexed thereto.[71] Particularly, the summary of the anticipated evidence of Witness XBM indicates that the witness "will testify about cooperation between soldiers and civilians prior [to] and during the massacres". This unambiguous information is confirmed in the statement of Witness XBM which was disclosed as supporting material to the amendment of the Indictment in December 2004, more than a year before the witness testified.

41. The Chamber notes that Witness XBM did not testify that any of the Accused were present at these events. Under these circumstances, the Chamber is satisfied that a restricted admission of this evidence will not infringe upon the rights of the Accused to a fair trial.

42. Witness XBM's evidence concerning the ceremony of installation of Radio RTLM antenna in late 1993 and the subsequent distribution of weapons, Mutura communal office meeting in January 1994, a meeting held at the Meridien Hotel in May 1994 and the Nyundo Massacre is therefore admissible for the sole purpose of showing the collaboration between civilians and military officials.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. DENIES the Defence Motion for exclusion of Witness XBM's testimony in its entirety and for sanctions against the Prosecution;

II. GRANTS IN PART the Defence oral objections on some parts of the testimonies of Witnesses ZF and XBM and DECIDES as follows:

1. Witness ZF's evidence on réseau zero is inadmissible to prove the material fact that the Accused persons participated in this network for absence of notice. The witness' testimony on réseau zero is admissible only to the extent that it is related to the existence of the Akazu;

2. Witness XBM's evidence concerning the ceremony of installation of Radio RTLM antenna in late 1993 and the subsequent distribution of weapons, Mutura communal office meeting in January 1994, a meeting held at the Meridien Hotel in May 1994 and the Nyundo Massacre is admissible for the sole purpose of showing the collaboration between civilians and military officials.

Tihomir Blaškić, Judgement, 29 July 2004 (IT-95-14) ; Appeals Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Dario Kordić and Mario Čerkez, Judgement, 17 December 2004 (IT-95-14/2)

Introduction

1. The proceedings in the instance case commenced on 19 September 2005. In a motion filed on 5 April 2006, the Prosecution indicated its willingness to disclose RPF materials as requested by the Defence for Nzirorera but moved the Chamber to "be relieved of its obligation to disclose the identities of the individuals who made the statements."[1] On 4 July 2006, the Chamber granted in part this application ruling that the identity of the individuals who gave statements regarding the Revolutionary Patriotic Front ("RPF") material should be disclosed to the Defence, but also ordered protective measures in view to protect their security.[2]

2. Subsequently, the Prosecution disclosed, in redacted form, to the Defence for each Accused four witness' statements, including those of Witnesses DM46 and DM80, and a copy of a report pertaining to RPF activities.[3]

3. In the meantime, the Defence for Nzirorera filed a Motion moving the Chamber to order the Prosecution to disclose documents and witness statements relating to RPF acts of violence and infiltration in Rwanda between 1990 and 1994. It also requests the Chamber to sanction the Prosecution for its failure to comply with the Chamber's Decision of 4 July 2006.[4] The Prosecution opposes the Motion.[5]

Deliberations

(1) Defence Request for Disclosure of Exculpatory Material

4. The Defence argues that documents and witness statements relating to RPF acts of violence and infiltration in Rwanda between 1990 and 1994 are exculpatory material falling within the ambit of Rule 68 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. In the Defence's view, the material sought is sufficiently identified and its disclosure is vital for its case as such evidence provides justification for the road blocks, civil defence system and tends to prove that the acts of the Accused were legitimate responses to actual infiltration and acts of violence by the RPF. It submits that the exculpatory character of the material has already been accepted by the Trial Chamber in Bagosora case and is equally applicable here.[6] It also claims that the Prosecution has acknowledged possession of other witness statements besides those which it has disclosed. The Defence concludes that the requirements set forth by this Chamber's prior decisions for ordering the disclosure of the material under Rule 68 are therefore met in the present case. The Prosecution responds that its trial team periodically reviews its database for RPF material using the criteria offered by the Defence but denies having found other material that should be disclosed.

5. Rule 68 (A) of the Rules provides that the Prosecution has an obligation to disclose, as soon as practicable, to the Defence "any material, which in the actual knowledge of the Prosecutor may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the accused or affect the credibility of Prosecution evidence." The determination as to whether material has to be disclosed under Rule 68 "is primarily a facts-based judgement, failing within the responsibility of the Prosecution,"[7] which is presumed to discharge its obligation in good faith.[8]

6. According to the established jurisprudence of this Tribunal, if the Defence claims that the obligation to disclose material under Rule 68 has been violated, it must: (i) identify the material sought with reasonable specificity; (ii) establish that the material is in the custody or control of the Prosecution; and (iii) make a prima facie showing of the exculpatory or potentially exculpatory character of the materials requested.[9] Information will be exculpatory if it tends to disprove a material fact alleged against the accused, or if it undermines the credibility of evidence intended to prove to material facts.[10]

7. As the Trial Chamber I in the Bagosora et al. noted, the exculpatory character of the material sought "depends on the nature of the charges and evidence heard against the accused".[11] It concluded that some specific information on RPF activities could be exculpatory in the light of the charges against the accused in that specific case. It also held that "evidence of RPF activities which have only a remote connection to the crimes alleged against the Accused is not exculpatory", and found that "evidence of RPF operations at times or places unrelated to the crimes alleged against this Accused is not exculpatory."[12] The Trial Chamber I's rulings were based on a case-by-case basis and did not contain any general statement on the exculpatory character of RPF materials. That same Chamber further held that

> Although some of the material within the category defined by the Defence may be exculpatory, this does not justify an order for disclosure of the entire category. […] Disclosure of an entire category of documents will only be ordered under Rule 68 where the category is accurately tailored to the exculpatory content.[13]

8. In the present case, it cannot be excluded that some information concerning RPF activities may be exculpatory to the extent that it is relevant to the crimes alleged against the Accused or to the evidence adduced during the Prosecution's case. This information may, for instance, assist the Chamber in understanding some of conduct and acts about which testimony was heard. The Defence's request, however, lacks specificity as to the material desired. It generally refers to all evidence in the hands of the Office of the Prosecutor concerning "RPF acts of violence and infiltration in Rwanda between 1990 and 1994." Such a request is too vague and could encompass evidence of RPF activities which have only remote connection or even no connection at all to the crimes alleged against the Accused and which therefore would have no exculpatory character. The Defence's request is not sufficiently tailored to the exculpatory content of the material sought. The Rule cannot be used freely as a means to obtain information from the Prosecution and then subsequently to determine whether it can be used or not.[14] The Defence's motion for disclosure of exculpatory material falls therefore to be rejected.

(2) Defence Request for Disclosure of Statement in Un-Redacted Form and for Sanctions Against the Prosecution

9. The Defence for Nzirorera requests disclosure of statements in un-redacted form arguing that, in order to use the exculpatory information, it needs to know the identity of the persons making the statements.[15] It shares with the Prosecution concerns about the perils faced by the witnesses with information concerning the RPF's crimes who are likely to want to cooperate with the Defence and thus undertakes not to take any action that could jeopardize their security; it has no objection to contacting these witnesses under the auspices of the Witnesses and Victims Support Section.[16] The Defence further requests the Chamber to impose sanctions, pursuant to Rule 46 (A), for violating the Chamber's Decision of 4 July 2006. It claims that sanctions are the only measures which can put an end to the impunity with which the Prosecution has violated its disclosure obligations in this case which are delaying and obstructing the trial on a continuous, ongoing basis.[17]

10. The Prosecution submits that "its trial team" has determined the existence of two additional witness statements but has disclosed them to the Defence in redacted form in order to avoid any prejudice to ongoing investigations and protect the security of its informants.[18]

11. As this Chamber and the Appeals Chamber clearly stated, the Prosecution's obligation to disclose exculpatory material is essential to a fair trial.[19] One of the purposes of the Prosecution's investigative function is "to assist the Tribunal to arrive at the truth and to do justice for the international community, victims and the accused."[20] The Appeals Chamber has also explained the unity of the Office of the Prosecutor in discharging disclosure obligations considering that the Prosecution teams are all representatives in the same Office of the Prosecutor.[21]

12. In the light of these principles, the Prosecution's contentions that "[its] trial team is not aware of any other materials that should be disclosed pursuant to Rules 66 (B) and 68 (A)" and that "the review did not identify [the two above-mentioned] statements since they were deemed to be sub judice in the Bagosora et al. trial" are unsatisfactory.[22] The Prosecution must actively review the material in the possession of the Office of the Prosecutor, and not only the documents in possession of this trial team, and, at the very least, inform the accused of the existence of exculpatory material.[23]

13. In its Decision of 4 July 2006, the Chamber also considered that

> "since the identity of the individuals who gave statements regarding the RPF material and the individuals who gave the Credibility Statements are indeed related to the content of the statements, they should be disclosed to the Defence."[24]

The Prosecution acknowledges this prior order but claims that the disclosure of these witnesses' identities would expose them to grave danger and that it must use its power under Rule 39 which allows the Prosecution to take special measures to protect the safety of potential witnesses and informants. It invites the Chamber to balance the Defence's request with the Prosecutor's interest to preserve the integrity of his ongoing investigation.

14. As stated in prior decisions, Rule 39 of the Rules could not constitute, as such, an impediment to disclosure of identifying information with respect to Prosecution witnesses.[25] However, when the Prosecution fears that potential witnesses or informants may be in danger or at risk or that disclosure of material may prejudice further or ongoing investigations, it may apply to the Chamber for specific measures in accordance with the Statute and the Rules.[26] Specifically, Rule 68 (D) of the Rules provides for an exception to the Prosecution disclosure obligations of exculpatory material if the disclosure "may prejudice further or ongoing investigations, or for any other reason may be contrary to the public interests or affect the security interests of any State." When applying for such exemption, the Prosecution is expected to provide the Chamber with the information or materials sought to be kept confidential.[27] The Chamber will grant such kind of request only on a case-by-case basis after consideration of the Prosecutor's submissions in each case.

15. In the Prosecution's response, no information or material has been given to the Chamber, nor has any specific argument been made for the Chamber to make an order under the exception provided by Rule 68 (D). In its Decision of 4 July 2006, the Chamber has already issued measures to protect the security of the individuals who gave the statements.[28] If the Prosecution seeks further measures, it must apply forthwith to the Chamber. Apart from the statements of Witnesses DM80 and DM46,[29] disclosure of exculpatory material in redacted form is therefore not permitted at this stage, as acknowledged by the Prosecution.

16. Rule 46 (A) of the Rules provides that > a Chamber may, after a warning, impose sanctions against a counsel if, in its opinion, his conduct remains offensive or abusive, obstructs the proceedings, or is otherwise contrary to the interests of justice. This provision is applicable mutatis mutandis to Counsel for Prosecution.

17. In its oral Decision of 24 May 2006, the Chamber found a lack of diligence in the Prosecution's compliance with its disclosure obligations.[30] It concluded that this obstructed the proceedings and was contrary to the interests of justice and imposed a warning against the Prosecution. In the situation at hand, the Chamber finds, and the Prosecution does not even dispute, that the Prosecution's conduct in disclosing statements in redacted form is in breach of the prior Chamber's Decision of 4 July 2006. Such misconduct is unacceptable; it remains offensive, obstructs the proceedings and is contrary to the interests of justice. The Chamber therefore finds that a sanction should be imposed against the Prosecution, by formally drawing the attention of the Prosecutor himself, as the disciplinary body, to this misconduct.[31]

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

Introduction

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. During the third trial session, the Defence for each Accused requested the disclosure of a statement of Prosecution Witness HH taken by the authorities of a certain State.[1] The Prosecution acknowledged that this statement should be disclosed, as a prior statement of a witness intended to be called during the fourth trial session, and in accordance with Rule 66 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.[2] The Chamber, however, noted that the document was part of the investigatory file of Witness T communicated by the State and for which it had already been ruled that it could not be disclosed to the Defence due to the public interest.[3] It therefore decided to make a further request of the authorities of the State to file submissions on the specific issue and to inform the Chamber as to whether the statement could be disclosed, in a whole or in part, to the Defence in the present case.[4]

[1] T. 2 June 2006. Due to specific protective measures applicable in the instant case, the name of the State is specified in the Confidential Annex to the present Decision placed under seal.

2. On 5 October 2006, the Registrar informed the Chamber that the State had filed a submission in accordance with the Chamber's Decision of 7 June 2006.[5] This submission was filed under seal, confidentially, and exclusively with the Chamber. In a separate Motion, the Defence for Nzirorera requests that this document be unsealed forthwith.[6] The Chamber will begin by addressing this issue and then turn to the application for disclosure of the witness' statement.

Deliberations

Motion to Unseal Confidential Annexes

3. In the Chamber's view, the State's correspondence attached to the Registrar's submissions filed on 5 October 2006 does not contain information the disclosure of which to the Parties in the case would cause any prejudice or be contrary to the interests of justice. The Chamber further notes that the Parties were already served with the State's submission made in December 2005, which is reproduced in the current correspondence. This document, however, contains information concerning a protected witness that should not be disseminated to the public.[7] The Chamber is therefore of the view that the attachment to the Registrar's submission can be disclosed to the Defence but must remain confidential to the public.

4. In addition to requesting to unseal the annex to the Registrar's submission of 5 October 2006, the Defence for Nzirorera claims that the Chamber has yet to rule on its Oral Motion to unseal the confidential annex to the Chamber's Decision of 7 June 2006, requesting the further cooperation of the State.[8]

5. Contrary to the Defence's assertion, the Chamber has already ruled on this application and decided that "the confidentiality was a necessary incident of consistency with [its] previous orders."[9] This annex was attached to facilitate the State's cooperation: it contains the name of the State, the physical description (including the exact title and reference) of the document sought for disclosure, and the Chamber's request to be informed on whether the document can be disclosed in whole or in part in the present case. There is therefore no fair trial issue at stake, and unsealing the document to the Defence should not be entertained since it contains information which is part of the State investigative file which is subject to non-disclosure at this stage.[10]

Motion for Disclosure of Witness HH's statement

6. Rule 66 (C) of the Rules provide for an exception to the Prosecution obligation to disclose prior statements of a witness it intends to call at trial under Sub-Rules 66 (B) (ii) if the disclosure

> "may prejudice further or ongoing investigations, or for any other reason may be contrary to the public interests or affect the security interests of any State".

7. In the present case, the State expresses the view that the requested statement cannot be disclosed, at this stage, to the Defence for the Accused persons. It reiterates its prior position expressed in its submission dated 2 December 2005, which was communicated to the Chamber as a result of a request for cooperation concerning the same material.[11] In that prior submission, the State relied upon, among other things, security reasons, and explained that full disclosure of Witness T's judicial records would be contrary to the applicable domestic law and would also infringe on Witness T's right to a fair trial as the witness is currently in judicial proceeding before the State. It also submitted that full disclosure of the material to the Defence could also prejudice the security of certain witnesses specifically identified in the documents.

8. As already stated in its Decision of 15 February 2006, the Chamber is concerned that Witness T receives a fair trial and must balance the rights of the Accused with those of Witness T to receive fair trials in their respective criminal proceedings.[12]

9. The Chamber finds that there is likelihood that the document requested, if disclosed to the Defence before Witness T's trial, may violate his right to a fair trial and therefore be contrary to the public interest. It must be also noted that the document sought for disclosure is only composed of six pages of questions and answers and that the Accused have already received substantial disclosure regarding Witness HH and his anticipated testimony, which provides them with adequate facilities for the preparation of their defence and the cross-examination of the witness.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. DECIDES, pursuant to Rule 66 (C) of the Rules, that the statement of Witness HH taken by the authorities of a certain State should not be disclosed at this stage;

II. GRANTS in part the Defence Motion to Unseal the Attachment to the Registrar's Submission of 5 October 2006,[13] and accordingly

III. REQUESTS the Registry to reclassify this Attachment confidential to the public and to disclose it only to the parties in the instant case.

Introduction

1. The proceedings in the instant case commenced on 19 September 2005. The Defence for Nzirorera contends that throughout the trial, the Prosecution has repeatedly interfered with the right of the Accused to interview Prosecution witnesses who consent to meet with Counsel for the Accused before they give testimony.[1] To support its motion, the Defence refers to various events where it sought to meet, or met, with a Prosecution witness at a time immediately before the witness was called to testify in court. It therefore requests the Chamber to reconsider and amend its prior Order on Protective Measures for Prosecution Witnesses of 10 December 2004[2] to avoid these problems recurring in the future. In response, the Prosecution also expresses concerns regarding the current method that is employed by the Defence for interviewing of Prosecution witnesses and although it agrees with the Defence that the regime needs revision, it presents alternative suggestions.[3]

Deliberations

2. According to the established jurisprudence, a Chamber has the inherent power to reconsider its decisions when (i) a new fact has been discovered that was not known to the Chamber at the time it made its original Decision, (ii) there has been a material change in circumstances since it made its original Decision, or (ii) there is reason to believe that its original Decision was erroneous or constituted an abuse of power on the part of the Chamber, resulting in injustice thereby warranting the exceptional remedy of reconsideration.[4]

3. In the present case, the Defence Motion was filed in the particular context of the Defence's previous requests to meet with a Prosecution witness just before or during his or her testimony in court. The meetings were requested by the Defence so it could show the witness any documents intended to be used during cross-examination in order to save time in court.[5] The Prosecution does not dispute that it intervened during those meetings but submits that it had no choice in order to avoid any misrepresentation to, or coercion of the witness to obtain the witness' co-operation.

4. The Chamber accepts that these incidents may be considered, to a certain extent, as a material change in circumstances that has occurred since its original Decision on Protective Measures for Prosecution Witnesses and therefore may require reconsideration of that Decision.

5. The Defence suggests eight orders for the Chamber to adopt that would have the effect of helping the witness to understand the reasons for meeting Defence Counsel prior to his or her testimony; eliminate the appearance that the Prosecution is discouraging the witness from meeting and speaking with Defence Counsel; and expedite the proceedings by allowing the witnesses to be shown documents intended to be used during cross-examination in order to save time in court.[6] The [5] See: Defence Motion.

[6] The Defence suggests the following orders:
1. The defence shall notify the WVSS in writing, upon reasonable notice, of its wish to contact a protected victim or prosecution witness.
2. WVSS shall make arrangements for the witness to meet defence counsel and provide notice to the prosecution of the time and place of the meeting and an opportunity to be present.
3. At the commencement of the meeting, before asking any questions about the substance of the witness' proposed testimony, defence counsel should ask the witness if he or she consents to be interviewed by the defence prior to giving testimony.
4. If the witness does not consent, the meeting shall be terminated.
5. If the witness consents, he or she should be asked by defence counsel whether the witness wishes to meet with defence counsel with or without the presence of a representative from the prosecution.
6. If the witness requests to meet with defence counsel without the presence of a representative of the prosecution, that representative should depart from the meeting.

Prosecution responds that the Chamber must preserve both the rights of the accused to a fair trial and the integrity of the process and therefore suggests that the witness should be informed by an impartial and independent legal officer, that he or she has the right to decide whether to be interviewed by the Defence and is not obliged to explain its refusal to anyone. It opposes the Defence's suggested order that the Defence Counsel make the request of the witness for consent to be interviewed by the Defence prior to giving testimony.[7] In its reply, the Defence does not object in principle to the presence of a legal officer to referee and document pre-trial meetings with the witnesses,[8] but insists that the Defence Counsel should have an opportunity to explain its reasons for the meeting to the witness before the witness decides whether to participate.

6. Article 19 and 20 of the Tribunal's Statute guarantee the rights of the accused to a fair and expeditious trial, including his or her rights of to have adequate time and facilities to prepare his or her defence and to examine and have examined a witness against him or her. The Chamber must further ensure that the proceedings are conducted with full respect for these rights and with due regard for the protection of victims and witnesses.[9] When appropriate, protective measures can be ordered for the protection of the victims and witnesses.[10]

7. According to the Appeals Chamber, each party has the right to interview a potential witness.[11] "Witnesses to a crime are the property of neither the Prosecutor nor the Defence; both sides have an equal right to interview them."[12] In particular, the Appeals Chamber stated that

> Given that during cross-examination the Defence can elicit from the Prosecution witness information which is relevant to its own case and goes beyond the scope of the Prosecution's examination-in-chief, the Defence may have a legitimate need to interview this witness prior to trial in order to properly prepare its case.[13]

It also considered that

> "[t]he Trial Chamber should have examined whether the Defence has presented reasons for the need to interview these witnesses which went beyond the need to prepare a more effective cross-examination."[14]

8. The right to contact and interview a potential witness is, however, not without limitation.[15] The Chamber must ensure that there is no interference with the course of justice and that the witness does not feel coerced or intimidated. To this end, Trial Chambers have required that a witness formally consent to meet with the requesting party.[16] The assistance of the Registry, in particular of the Witnesses and Victims Support Section ("WVSS"), has often been requested to help in that determination.[17] If a witness for any reason declines to be interviewed, the requesting party does not have the power to compel the person to attend an interview or to respond to any question.[18] If the requesting party wishes to compel an unwilling person to submit to a pre-trial interview, then it may seek the assistance of the Chamber to issue a subpoena and any other order pursuant to Rule 54 of the Rules.

9. In the Chamber's view, in light of the prior experience in this case and since a witness is the property of neither the Prosecutor nor the Defence, when the Defence seeks to contact a Prosecution witness in the future, WVSS should make the necessary arrangements for this meeting to take place and provide its assistance where necessary. It must be noted that the presence of a representative of the Prosecution to such a meeting should not interfere with the right of the Defence to interview a consenting witness. The Chamber is, however, not persuaded that the presence of a representative of WVSS is necessary for each interview, nor is there any need to rule in detail on how the interview should proceed, including whether the Defence is entitled to ask the witness whether he or she consents to the meeting, as requested by both parties. The particular circumstances referred to in their submissions concern situations where the Defence sought to interview a witness at the outset of his or her testimony in court. There has been no allegation of any difficulty during meetings when the witness was not about to give evidence in court. In any event, the parties are at liberty to file specific requests seeking the assistance of the Chamber in particular circumstances.

10. The Chamber is particularly concerned that allowing either Counsel to meet a witness for the opposite party at the outset of the witness' testimony in court may interfere with the course of the proceedings and the interests of justice. It has the potential of delaying the proceedings and destabilizing the witness immediately prior to his or her testimony. Consequently, while each party has the right to interview a witness, requests for a meeting between the Defence and a Prosecution witness at the outset of his or her testimony should only be made on giving good reason why the application was not made earlier. In that respect, the Chamber notes that the Defence's request to meet the witness at the outset of his or her testimony with the view of showing documents intended to be used in court does not go beyond the need to prepare more effective cross-examination and does not constitute good reason to override the risks of having such a meeting.

11. In its reply, the Defence requests the disclosure of investigatory reports concerning Witness AWB's refusal to testify to show that the Defence did nothing to discourage the witness' participation in the trial.[19] The Chamber does not intend to make any finding on this issue. There is no reason to order the requested disclosure. The Chamber further takes note of the Prosecution's intention to disclose any material falling within the ambit of Rules 66 (B) or 68 if and when continuing investigations reveal information relevant to the case.[20]

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

The Prosecution filed this delayed response because it did not take note of the Nzirorera's motion for disclosure of Witness AWB material which was incorporated in the Defence's Reply related to Joseph Nzirorera's Motion for Reconsideration of Witness Protection Order. The Defence submits that this late filing should not be considered by the Chamber.

Should the witness or potential witness concerned agree to the interview, or the parents or guardian of that person, if that person is under the age of 18, WVSS shall immediately make all necessary arrangements for the witness to meet with the Defence and provide sufficient notice to the Prosecution of the time and place of the meeting. Except under exceptional circumstances, such meeting shall not take place at the outset of the witness' testimony in court. Where appropriate, WVSS may facilitate the interview.

Introduction

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. On 12 July 2006, the Chamber denied the Defence request for subpoenas to meet with potential Defence Witnesses DN1, DN2, and DNZ3 ("Impugned Decision").[1] The Defence for Nzirorera now applies to the Chamber for certification to appeal that decision. The Prosecution opposes the Motion.

Discussion

2. The Defence submits that, according to the Appeals Chamber Judgement in the Tadic case,

> "[a Trial] Chamber shall provide every practicable facility it is capable of granting under the Rules and Statute when faced with a request by a party for assistance in presenting its case."[2]

It claims that by denying the Defence's motions to issue subpoenas for DNZ1, DNZ2 and DNZ3, the Chamber failed in its duty to provide those facilities, thereby jeopardizing his right to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses who may be able to rebut the testimony of prosecution witnesses pursuant to Article 20 (4) (e) of the Tribunal's Statute.

3. The Chamber notes that the Appeals Chamber has held that

> "[t]he Chambers are empowered to issue such orders, summonses, subpoenas, warrants and transfer orders as may be necessary for the purposes of an investigation or for the preparation or conduct of the trial."[3]

[3] Prosecutor v. Tadić, Case N°IT-94-1-A, Judgement (AC), 15 July 1999, para. 52 (emphasis added).

This, however, does not mean that a Chamber must grant all requested facilities by a party because it alleges that it needs assistance. The Chamber must exercise its discretionary power in accordance with the Rules and the Statute. As stated in the Impugned Decision, the Appeals Chamber has determined specific criteria following the outline in the Statute and the Rules, for a Chamber to issue a subpoena and to require a prospective witness to attend at a nominated place and time in order to be interviewed.[4] When an Accused is seeking this particular facility, the Chamber must determine whether it can be granted in accordance with the Statute and the Rules.

4. The Defence argues that the requirements set out for granting certification are met in the instant situation. It also submits that when deciding to grant certification, the Chamber should consider the merits of the appeal against the Impugned Decision as recognized by the Trial Chamber in the Bagosora case.[5]

5. Rule 73 (B) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence provides that a decision rendered on Rule 73 motions are without interlocutory appeal except on the Chamber's discretion for the very limited circumstances stipulated in Rule 73 (B). The Trial Chamber has discretion to grant certification when:

> (1) the decision involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial; and
> (2) an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings.

6. The moving party must demonstrate that both requirements of Rule 73 (B) are satisfied, and even then, certification to appeal must remain exceptional.[6]

7. This Chamber has already decided that the merits should not be considered when addressing an application to certification.[7] Other Trial Chambers have taken the same position.[8] The Chamber is also of the view that the Defence has improperly relied on the Bagosora Chamber's view on this issue. In a recent decision not cited by the Defence, the Trial Chamber in the Bagosora case has also clarified its position on the question whether a Trial Chamber is barred from considering the merits of an appeal in deciding whether leave for that appeal should be granted. It considered that:

> The correctness of a decision is a matter for the Appeals Chamber, should certification be granted. In this sense, it is certainly true that a Trial Chamber is not concerned with the correctness of its own decision when determining whether to grant leave to appeal. On the other hand, Trial Chambers do have a responsibility to screen out requests for certification with no prospect of success and which, accordingly, would not "materially advance the proceedings.[9]

"The Bizimungu Chamber agreed that whether there was an error of law or abuse of discretion is not an issue to be considered by the Trial Chamber in its determination of a certification to appeal. It emphasized, however, that the word "significant" in the first prong of the Rule, intends the exclusion of minor or trivial issues that arise in the course of the trial; Prosecutor v. Nyiramasuhuko et al., Case N°ICTR-98-42-T, Decision on Prosecutor's Motion for Certification to Appeal the Decision of the Trial Chamber Dated 30 November 2004 on the Prosecution Motion for Disclosure of Evidence of the Defence (TC), 4 February 2005, para. 11; Prosecutor v. Miloševic, Case N°IT-02-54-T, Decision on Prosecution Motion for Certification of Trial Chamber Decision on Prosecution Motion for Voir Dire Proceeding (TC), 20 June 2005, para. 4.

8. In the light of these principles, the Chamber will now determine whether the Defence has shown that both requirements under Rule 73 (B) are met.

9. The Defence submits that the Impugned Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings because the right of the Accused to a fair trial, and in particular his right to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses pursuant to Article 20 (4) (e) of the Statute, is greatly jeopardized by the Chamber's denial of access to potential witnesses who may be able to rebut the testimony of prosecution witnesses. To support its application, the Defence relies upon prior Decisions rendered by this Tribunal in the Bagosora et al. and Nyiramasuhuko cases, as well as a Decision from the Special Court in Sierra Leone.[10] It asserts that the issue at hand is similar to the issues faced in those cases. The Defence also cites other cases that have certified issues concerning the admission and exclusion of evidence, also asserted to be much like the issue at hand, and which have the effect of excluding important potential Defence evidence at the trial.

10. The Defence believes that the resolution of the issue of the Defence obtaining access to potential witnesses by the Appeals Chamber will materially advance the proceedings because this issue is likely to recur as the Defence will request access to more potential Defence witnesses and it will obtain certainty on this issue early in the Prosecution's presentation of evidence and before the Defence begins presenting its case. Should certification be denied and the Trial Chamber be found incorrect in an appeal from a final judgement, the Defence asserts that a new trial would be required to hear the Defence witnesses who had not been originally compelled to testify, thereby significantly delaying the proceedings. The Defence also argues that the potential testimonies are so clearly relevant that since the Chamber did not exercise its power to order a subpoena in this case it is unlikely that it will ever exercise it. Therefore review of the decision will materially advance proceedings.

11. In the Impugned Decision, there has been no general denial of the right of the Accused to examine a witness. Neither has there been a blanket refusal to order subpoenas for all potential witnesses who may rebut the testimony of Prosecution witnesses. The Chamber recalls that the Impugned Decision was not concerned with the attendance of witnesses at the trial. It related only to a request to compel attendance at out-of-court interviews. The Chamber was seized of specific requests concerning three potential witnesses and made its ruling on the basis of the information provided by the Defence with respect to these witnesses. No general conclusion can be drawn from the Impugned Decision as to how the Chamber will decide a future motion for subpoena. The Accused is free to submit further requests for subpoenas for out-of-court interviews or to compel their attendance in court when the need arises in this case, which the Chamber will evaluate on a case-by-case basis.

12. The Chamber also finds that the Defence misplaces reliance on several decisions, which it analogizes to the present case and uses to support the claim that the issue in question affects the Accused's right to a fair trial. What distinguishes those cases to the present case is that they all concern issues with a broad scope and a general statement of law which affect a large category of documents or witnesses. The Impugned Decision cannot affect a large category of witnesses, nor does it involve a general statement of law because the evaluation of each request for subpoena was done on a case-by-case basis, and included an exercise of the Chamber's discretion.

13. The Chamber rejects Nzirorera's reliance on the decision from the Special Court for Sierra Leone, which certified a decision from the Trial Chamber after it denied the request to issue a subpoena to call the President of Sierra Leone to testify. In that case, the Trial Chamber was divided in its opinion, the very first considering the issue of pre-testimony interview subpoenas at the Special Court which it claimed would likely arise again, with the majority decision, a concurring opinion, and a dissenting opinion. It was for these reasons that the Trial Chamber certified its decision.[11] This Tribunal has issued other decisions on subpoenas for pre-testimony interviews and the jurisprudence has enunciated that ultimately, the decision to order a subpoena remains discretionary, but also promulgated criteria when the issuance of a subpoena would be appropriate which the unanimous Chamber in this case took into consideration in the Impugned Decision.

14. Consequently, the Defence failed to show that the Impugned Decision involved an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial. Without satisfying the first requirement needed to grant certification to appeal, the Chamber need not continue its analysis and denies the Defence Motion on that basis.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Defence Motion in its entirety.

Introduction

1. The proceedings in the instant case commenced on 19 September 2005. The fourth trial session started on 26 October 2006 with the continuation of the Prosecution's case. On 6 November 2006, the Defence sought the admission of 10 UNAMIR Situation Reports issued in April 1994 as Defence exhibits during the cross-examination of Prosecution Witness ALG.[1] The Prosecution objected to the admission through that witness and rather moved the Chamber to admit all the UNAMIR Situation Reports as exhibits so that they can be used as documents sent by the UNAMIR to the United Nations

Head Quarters in New York and when necessary during the examination of a witness.[2] The Chamber decided to reserve its ruling and invited the parties to file their written submissions thereto by the following day.[3] These submissions were filed by each party on 8 November 2006.[4]

2. Before addressing the specific issue of admission into evidence of the 10 UNAMIR documents, the Chamber will generally deal with the rules governing the admission of evidence.

Deliberations

Rules Governing the Admission of Evidence

3. The Defence for Nzirorera submits that authentication is the first hurdle of admissibility; then even if a document is authentic, it must be relevant before being admitted as an exhibit at the trial. In the Defence's view, the admission of exhibits should be done in connection with the testimony of witnesses.[5] The Defence for Nzirorera also contends that "it is up to each party to determine how much evidence to present behind its documentary evidence so as to give it more weight". In its view, the Chamber should not filter the admission of authentic and relevant documents, but should determine the weight to be given to the exhibits during its deliberations after it has heard all of the evidence.

4. According to Rule 89 of the Rules, the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence govern the proceedings.[6] The Chamber is not bound by national rules of evidence and may, in cases not otherwise provided for in the Rules, apply rules of evidence which will best favour a fair determination of the matter before it and are consonant with the spirit of the Statute and the general principles of law.[7] The Chamber has also broad discretion under Rule 89 (C) of the Rules to admit any evidence provided on the basis of two criteria only: the evidence must be relevant and have probative value. While a Chamber always retains the competence under Rule 89 (D) to request verification of the authenticity of evidence obtained out of court,

> "to require absolute proof of a document's authenticity before it could be admitted would be to require a far more stringent test than the standard envisioned by Sub-rule 89 (C)".[8]

According to the Appeals Chamber, at the stage of admissibility, only the beginning of proof that evidence is reliable, namely, that sufficient indicia of reliability have been established, is required for evidence to be admissible.[9]

5. Trial Chambers of both ad hoc Tribunals have held that documents need not be recognized by a witness in order to have probative value.[10] There is no prohibition on the admission of evidence simply

[6] Rule 89 of the Rules reads as follows:
(A) The rules of evidence set forth in this Section shall govern the proceedings before the Chambers. The Chambers shall not be bound by national rules of evidence.
(B) In cases not otherwise provided for in this Section, a Chamber shall apply rules of evidence which will best favour a fair determination of the matter before it and are consonant with the spirit of the Statute and the general principles of law.
(C) A Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value.

on the grounds that the purported author of that evidence has not been called to testify, and Trial Chambers have permitted the admission of documentary evidence even though not submitted by or through a witness. This practice is consistent with Rule 89 (A) of the Rules according to which Trial Chambers are not bound by any national rules of evidence. Furthermore, as the Trial Chamber noted in the Blaskic Judgement, the proceedings are conducted by professional Judges who can admit a given piece of evidence and then evaluate it to determine its due weight, having regard to the circumstances in which it was obtained, its actual contents and its credibility in light of all the evidence tendered.[11]

6. If a witness declares that he or she recognises a document, and the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the document is relevant and has probative value, it can be admitted through that witness.[12] However, where a witness states that he or she does not recognise a document that is not presented as a prior inconsistent statement of the witness, it cannot be admitted through the witness.

7. Finally, the admission into evidence does not in any way constitute a binding determination as to the authenticity or trustworthiness of the document. These are to be assessed by the Chamber at a later stage in the case when assessing the probative weight to be attached to the evidence.[13]

Admission of UNAMIR Documents

8. The Defence for Nzirorera moves the Chamber to admit 10 UNAMIR Situation reports[14] through Witness ALG. It contends that these documents are authentic and relevant by some connection with the testimony of the witness. The Prosecution responds that these reports cannot be offered into evidence through Witness ALG and cannot be used to impeach the witness as he knows nothing about them. It submits that these documents, however, are relevant to the Indictment and probative of some historical background and therefore suggests preparing a comprehensive file of all relevant UNAMIR situation reports, properly indexed in chronological order, to cover the period 1 January through 19 July 1994. In the Prosecution's view, the Chamber may then determine their probative value by weighing their contents in relation to the testimony of witnesses who specifically comment on a particular situation report, or who comment on a particular portion of a particular situation report. The Defence for each Accused oppose the Prosecution's suggestion. They submit that each party should only tender the UNAMIR documents that are relevant to their own case and that they will choose in the context of the testimony of the Prosecution and Defence witnesses.

9. In the present case, there is no dispute that the UNAMIR Situation Reports marked for identification[15] are relevant to the case and present sufficient indicia of reliability to be admissible. The Chamber, however, is not satisfied that the Defence has shown that the documents can be admitted through the witness as he did not recognise the documents and did not adopt their contents. The 10 UNAMIR Situation Reports marked for identification cannot therefore be entered through Witness ALG.

10. In the Chamber's view, UNAMIR documents could be admitted through the author of the documents, a person who knows of the documents or could speak to their contents. In that respect, the Chamber notes that both Prosecution and Defence for Nzirorera agree that the next Prosecution Witness, Frank Claeys, will be able to speak to their content and therefore to offer them into evidence.

11. The Chamber is also of the view that UNAMIR Documents could be admitted without being tendered during the examination of a witness, provided that the moving party shows, for each document, its relevancy and probative value. In that respect, it is noteworthy that Trial Chamber I in the Bagosora et al. case, quoted by the Defence for Nzirorera, granted the admission of official United Nations correspondence arising from the UNAMIR peacekeeping mission in Rwanda in 1994 without being recognized by a witness.[16]

12. The Prosecution's suggestion to provide the Chamber with a bundle of UNAMIR documents so that the Chamber determines which document has probative value is not appropriate. For evidence to be admissible, each party must demonstrate its relevance and probative value.

Guidelines for the Admission of Evidence

13. The Chamber refers to the above principles governing the admissibility of documentary evidence and directs the parties are to take them into account when presenting or objecting to the admission of such evidence.

14. The Chamber further notes that the Defence for Nzirorera is not averse to informing the Prosecution in advance of the testimony of an upcoming witness whether it intends to object to a document to be offered through that witness. The Chamber considers that the expeditiousness of the proceedings may be enhanced if such a practice be systematically adopted by the parties.

15. The Defence for Nzirorera also requests that a document which is submitted for admission but rejected by the Chamber should be marked for identification so that it can be referred to by subsequent witnesses and will be available for examination by the Appeals Chamber to determine whether the Trial Chamber erred in refusing to admit such document.

16. In the Chamber's view, there is no need to adopt a general rule that each document which are referred to in court and are not admitted should be marked for identification. The Chamber will continue to decide on a case-by-case basis when marking for identification a document will be warranted, bearing in mind the transparency of the proceedings and the interests of justice. In any event, each document marked for identification will not be admitted until the Chamber makes a ruling on admissibility, either orally or in writing, at which point it will be given an official exhibit number.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. DENIES the Defence Motion to admit into evidence, through Witness ALG, 10 UNAMIR Situation Reports marked for identification ID. NZ 39 to 49;

II. DENIES the Prosecution's application to enter all the UNAMIR Documents into evidence;

III. REQUESTS the Parties to apply and take into consideration the rules governing the admission of evidence as stated above when seeking or objecting to the admission of evidence; and

IV. REQUESTS each Party to inform the opposite Party in advance of the testimony of an upcoming witness whether it intends to object to a certain exhibit to be offered through that witness.

Introduction

1. The proceedings in the instant case commenced on 19 September 2005. Prosecution Witness GK is scheduled to be called to testify during the fourth trial session between 26 October 2006 and 15 December 2006. The Defence for Nzirorera now moves the Chamber to exclude his forthcoming testimony as relief for the Prosecution's alleged serial violations of its disclosure obligations in the present case.[1] Should the Chamber decline to grant this remedy, the Defence requests an order for the cooperation of the Rwandan authorities in order to obtain some documents identified in a confidential annex to the Motion, and for the postponement of the cross-examination of Witness GK until those documents have been disclosed to the Defence. The Prosecution opposes the Motion in its entirety.

Deliberations

2. According to the Defence, since the Prosecution failed to disclose the testimony of Witness GK in the Ndindabahizi trial no later than 60 days before the date set for trial, it violated its disclosure obligations as prescribed under Rule 66 (A) (ii) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.[2] The Defence therefore contends that the forthcoming testimony of Witness GK should be excluded as an appropriate remedy for this failure.

3. The 60-day deadline prescribed by Rule 66 (A) (ii) of the Rules must be read in connection with the rights of the accused, and in particular with his or her right to have adequate time and facilities to prepare his or her case and to examine, or have examined, the witness against him or her.[3] Late disclosure will not necessarily offend the rights of the accused.[4] When the disclosure of material which could assist the Accused to impeach the testimony of a Prosecution witness is made so late that it has an impact on the fairness of the trial, different types of remedy have been utilized by Trial Chambers. The evidence could be excluded, the trial or the testimony could be postponed, the cross-examination of the witness could be deferred, or the witness could be re-called.[5] Exclusion of evidence is at the

[2] Rule 66 (A) (ii) reads as follows:
Subject to the provisions of Rules 53 and 69;
The Prosecutor shall disclose to the Defence:
[…] (ii) No later than 60 days before the date set for trial, copies of the statements of all witnesses whom the Prosecutor intends to call to testify at trial; upon good cause shown a Trial Chamber may order that copies of the statements of additional prosecution witnesses be made available to the Defence within a prescribed time.

extreme end of a scale of measures available to the Chamber in addressing delay in disclosure and violation of the rights of the accused.[6]

4. In the present case, the Defence has not shown, or even claimed, that Joseph Nzirorera has suffered any prejudice from the late disclosure of the witness' statement which would justify such an extreme remedy. In that respect, it must be noted that the document was disclosed more than three months before the witness was expected to testify and that other statements had already been disclosed to the Defence in a timely manner, such that the Accused had been given information on the anticipated evidence of the witness and issues affecting his credibility.[7]

5. The Defence also requests the exclusion of the anticipated testimony of Witness GK due to other incomplete disclosures. During a meeting held on 10 November 2006, it learned from Witness GK that he had provided "numerous signed statements and testimony about the 1994 events in Rwanda which have never been disclosed to the Defence".[8] The Defence recalls that following the Chamber's Decision of 14 September 2005, the Prosecution had to use its best efforts to obtain and disclose these materials.[9] In the Defence's view, the minimal best efforts that could have been expected from the Prosecution would have been to have interviewed the witness in advance of his testimony, and to have identified and collected the missing documents from the witness himself, who has them in Rwanda. The Defence concludes that the Prosecution has therefore once again violated a Chamber's order and that exclusion of the testimony of Witness GK is an appropriate remedy for the serial disclosure violations by the Prosecution in this case.

6. As a general rule, the Defence must first make its own independent efforts to secure evidence it wishes to use at trial other than exculpatory material in the possession of the Prosecution.[10] In that respect, it is admitted that the Defence may have a legitimate need to interview a witness prior to trial in order to properly prepare its case and has therefore the right to contact and interview a potential witness.[11]

7. Under Rules 98 or 54 of the Rules, a practice has also developed, subject to considerations of the interests of justice, of requiring the intervention of the Prosecution to obtain and disclose certain records, specifically the Rwandan judicial records of a Prosecution witness.[12] Trial Chambers have resorted to these provisions, for instance, when the information could be considered as material for the preparation of the Defence case or to determine the credibility of Prosecution witnesses.[13]

8. In other situations, Trial Chambers have requested, pursuant to Article 28 of the Tribunal's Statute, the assistance and cooperation of some States in order to obtain documents.[14] According to the established jurisprudence, a request to a Chamber to make such an order must set forth the nature of the information sought; its relevance to the trial; and the efforts that have been made to obtain it.[15]

9. Due to the particular circumstances of the case, the Chamber has used both its power under Rule 98 and Article 28 of the Statute to assist the Defence in the preparation of its case. On 14 September 2005, the Chamber first requested the Prosecution to use its best efforts to obtain and disclose statements made to Rwandan authorities and records pertaining to the criminal prosecution of Prosecution witnesses for whom such materials have not been fully disclosed.[16] Then, in February 2005, the Chamber requested the assistance of the Rwandan authorities to provide the Registry with all statements taken or received from some Prosecution witnesses, including GK, as well as judgements rendered by the Rwandan authorities against these witnesses.[17]

10. However, these decisions in no way undermined the Defence's obligation to prepare its case.[18] In the present situation, the Defence gives no reason why it did not previously meet with Witness GK while conducting its investigations when it could have obtained the said documents itself, nor does Counsel for Nzirorera allege that the witness refused to meet with him.

11. Moreover, according to various correspondences recently provided at the Chamber's request,[19] it appears that the Office of the Prosecutor, including the Prosecutor himself, made several efforts in order to obtain from the Rwandan authorities material concerning Witness GK. Recently, the Prosecution also undertook a further step to interview the witness concerning his judicial records, statements and testimonies he gave before Rwandan authorities.[20] As a result, three documents were collected from the witness and disclosed to the Defence.[21] It must be noted that it is only recently that the Defence has suggested that the Prosecution should interview some witnesses in order to obtain the information necessary to make a specific request for the documents to the Rwandan Government.[22]

12. The Chamber further notes that the Defence does not allege any prejudice resulting from the current situation. Exclusion of the forthcoming testimony of Witness GK is therefore not warranted.

13. In the alternative, the Defence moves the Chamber to request the cooperation of the Rwandan authorities in order to obtain the documents identified in a confidential annex to the Motion, and to postpone the cross-examination of Witness GK until those documents have been disclosed to the Defence.

14. Although the Defence met with the witness and therefore should have collected preliminary information as to the content of the documents sought, it does not show how they could be relevant to this trial. In addition, the Rwandan authorities have recently indicated that they are "willing to provide

15. Since the Defence does not show or allege any prejudice to the rights of the Accused or impact on the fairness of the trial, the Chamber does not find any reason to postpone the cross-examination of Witness GK. In any event, the Defence may draw the Chamber's attention to inconsistencies between the testimony of the witness before this Chamber and any declaration or record obtained subsequently. If prejudice can be shown from its inability to put these inconsistencies to the witness, the Defence may file a motion for him to be recalled.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER DENIES the Defence Motion in its entirety.

[1] Although the English translation of the motion is designated a motion for «review», Mr. Karemera in fact seeks reconsideration of the Appeals Chamber's decision, as is clear from the original motion, which was entitled "Demande en reconsidération de la décision de la Chambre d'Appel en date du 16 juin 2006 suite á l' appel interlocutoire du Procureur de la décision relative au constat judiciaire" 3 August 2006.

2. The Prosecution responded to each of the Motions,[2] and the Applicants replied.[3]

I. Background

3. On 16 June 2006, the Appeals Chamber issued the "Decision on Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of Decision on Judicial Notice" ("Decision on Judicial Notice"),[4] in which it ordered Trial Chamber III to take judicial notice of the following three facts:[5]

> (i) The following state of affairs existed in Rwanda between 6 April 1994 to 17 July 1994: There were throughout Rwanda widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification. During the attacks, some Rwandan citizens killed or caused serious bodily or mental harm to person[s] perceived to be Tutsi. As a result of the attacks, there were a large number of deaths of persons of Tutsi ethnic identity;
> (ii) Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994 in Rwanda there was an armed conflict not of an international character;
> (iii) Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994, there was a genocide in Rwanda against the Tutsi ethnic group.[6]

The Appeals Chamber also remanded the matter to the Trial Chamber for consideration of certain facts, in a manner consistent with the Decision on Judicial Notice.[7]

4. The Applicants now move the Appeals Chamber to reconsider the Decision on Judicial Notice. Mr. Karemera submits that reconsideration of the Decision on Judicial Notice is required in the interests of justice and to ensure full respect for the rights of the Defence, in keeping with the exigencies of international justice.[8] He requests that the Appeals Chamber rule de novo on the Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal and uphold the Trial Chamber's Decision of 9 November 2005.[9]

5. Nzirorera contends that taking judicial notice of controversial matters such as the occurrence of genocide, the existence of a widespread or systematic attack, and the nature of the armed conflict is the product of a clear error in reasoning, and accordingly requests the Appeals Chamber to determine that such matters are inappropriate for judicial notice.[10] Should the Appeals Chamber decline to make such a determination, Mr. Nzirorera requests a modification of the Decision on Judicial Notice to clarify that judicial notice of genocide does not include the existence of a plan or campaign of genocide, and to provide a margin of discretion to the Trial Chamber to determine whether the facts of

II. Discussion

6. The Appeals Chamber may reconsider a previous interlocutory decision under its inherent discretionary power if a clear error of reasoning has been demonstrated or if it is necessary to prevent an injustice.[13] Bearing this standard of review in mind, the Appeals Chamber will consider the alleged errors of law and miscarriages of justice advanced by the Applicants.

A. Alleged Errors of Reasoning

1. Facts of Common Knowledge

7. Karemera submits that the facts which the Appeals Chamber characterised as facts of common knowledge in the Decision on Judicial Notice are not irrefutable.[14] He argues that, in principle, judicial notice concerns only manifestly indisputable facts.[15] He states that in his trial, the testimonies of seven Prosecution witnesses do not support the Prosecution's theories on which the Appeals Chamber relied in the Decision on Judicial Notice.[16] He also argues that these facts are the subject of debate and disagreement among reasonable people, including highly renowned experts, some of whom have already testified before the Tribunal, such as Father De Souter, Professor Strizek, Professor Reyntjens, and Bernard Lugan,[17] and therefore judicial notice should not have been taken of them.[18] The Prosecution responds that these facts are a matter of common knowledge, reasonably irrefutable and not controversial.[19]

8. Appeals Chamber recalls that whether a fact qualifies as "a fact of common knowledge" under Rule 94 (A) is a legal question.[20] This determination does not turn on evidence introduced in a particular case.[21] Mr. Karemera's reference to witness testimonies and opinions of persons who, according to him, are renowned experts demonstrates no error of reasoning in the Decision on Judicial Notice.

2. The Nature of the Conflict

9. Mr. Karemera contends that the non-international character of the conflict is disputed in his case and therefore cannot be a fact of common knowledge.[22] In support of this contention, he notes that in other cases before the Tribunal there is evidence of an international conflict involving several countries.[23] He also refers to expert reports and publications which, in his view, establish the international character of the Rwandan conflict.[24]

10. The Prosecution responds that the publications cited by Mr. Karemera simply reiterate the relationship between the various countries and Rwanda before, during, and after the genocide[25] and that they do not qualify this conflict as international.[26]

11. The Appeals Chamber recalls that in the Decision on Judicial Notice, it relied on its findings in the Semanza Appeal Judgment where it held that the existence of a non-international armed conflict is a notorious fact not subject to a reasonable dispute.[27] The fact that there may have been evidence in other cases before the Tribunal which alluded to the conflict being of an international character and that some reports and publications may express a similar view does not demonstrate a clear error in holding that it is a fact of common knowledge that the conflict in Rwanda was of a non-international character. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber has already indicated above that whether a fact is one of common knowledge is a legal question, the answer to which does not turn on the evidence introduced in a particular case. The Appeals Chamber finds that Mr. Karemera has failed to show any error of reasoning on this point that would warrant reconsideration of the Decision on Judicial Notice.

3. Genocide

12. Mr. Karemera contends that the Appeals Chamber incorrectly interpreted Resolution 955[28] in relation to the taking of judicial notice of genocide in Rwanda.[29] He argues that while Resolution 955 may refer to genocide in Rwanda, it makes no reference to genocide against the Tutsi ethnic group, contrary to the Appeals Chamber's assertion.[30] Mr. Ngirumpatse argues that even if Resolution 955 states that there was genocide in Rwanda, this cannot render moot any debate before the Tribunal, as it would deprive the Tribunal of its jurisdiction to hear and decide cases, and force it to endorse decisions that are essentially political.[31] The Prosecution responds that in referring to Resolution 955, the Appeals Chamber was making reference to basic facts that were widely known and irrefutable, such as the vast campaign of killing intended to destroy in whole or in part Rwanda's Tutsi population.[32]

13. The Appeals Chamber recalls that in the Decision on Judicial Notice it reasoned as follows:

> The Appeals Chamber agrees with the Prosecution: the fact that genocide occurred in Rwanda in 1994 should have been recognized by the Trial Chamber as a fact of common knowledge. Genocide consists of certain acts, including killing, undertaken with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such. There is no reasonable basis for anyone to dispute that, during 1994, there was a campaign of mass killing intended to destroy, in whole or at least in very large part, Rwanda's Tutsi population, which (as judicially noticed by the Trial Chamber) was a protected group. That campaign was, to a terrible degree, successful; although exact numbers may never be known, the great majority of Tutsis were murdered, and many others were raped or otherwise harmed. These basic facts were broadly known even at the time of the Tribunal's establishment; indeed, reports indicating that genocide occurred in Rwanda were a key impetus for its establishment, as reflected in the Security Council resolution establishing it and even the name of the Tribunal. During its early history, it was valuable for the purpose of the historical record for Trial Chambers to gather evidence documenting the overall course of the genocide and to enter findings of fact on the basis of that evidence. Trial and Appeal Judgements thereby produced (while varying as to the responsibility of particular accused) have unanimously and decisively confirmed the occurrence of genocide in Rwanda, which has also been documented by countless books, scholarly articles, media > reports, U.N. reports and resolutions, national court decisions, and government and NGO reports. At this stage, the Tribunal need not demand further documentation. The fact of the Rwandan genocide is a part of world history, a fact as certain as any other, a classic instance of a "fact of common knowledge".[33]

14. Mr. Karemera's contention that the Appeals Chamber misinterpreted Resolution 955 is baseless. In the Decision on Judicial Notice, the Appeals Chamber referred to Resolution 955 in finding that "reports indicating that genocide occurred in Rwanda were a key impetus for its establishment" and that therefore the basic facts of the genocide "were broadly known even at the time of the Tribunal's establishment".[34] This resolution was one of the many authorities, which included trial and appeal judgments, that the Appeals Chamber relied upon in determining that the Trial Chamber erred in refusing to take judicial notice of the fact of the Rwandan genocide.

15. Mr. Karemera contends that the Appeals Chamber erred in law when it relied on Article 2 of the Tribunal's Statute to take judicial notice of the crime of genocide.[35] He questions, in light of this contention, whether it is possible to take judicial notice of a crime which requires a determination of the elements of actus reus and mens rea or whether these elements should be adduced from irrefutable evidence.[36] The Prosecution responds that Article 2 of the Statute was not used in support of the Decision on Judicial Notice but rather to define genocide and to determine its elements.[37]

16. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Mr. Karemera's contention on this point. There is a significant difference between the taking of judicial notice of the fact of genocide and the determination that an accused is individually criminally responsible for the crime of genocide. The former gives a factual context to the allegations of the crime of genocide. The latter requires a finding of whether the elements of the crime of genocide, such as actus reus and mens rea, exist in order to ascertain whether an accused is responsible for the crime. Consequently, the taking of judicial notice of genocide does not, in itself, go to the alleged conduct or acts of the Applicants as charged in the indictment.[38]

17. Mr. Nzirorera submits that the Appeals Chamber expanded the Prosecution's request from one of judicial notice that genocide occurred in Rwanda to judicial notice of a nationwide campaign of genocide.[39] He argues that it is one thing to believe that some people killed in Rwanda with the subjective intention of ridding the country of Tutsis, which would be sufficient for genocide. However, in his view, it is completely another matter, particularly in the trial of the country's leaders, to take judicial notice of a nationwide campaign of genocide.[40]

18. Mr. Nzirorera states that the theory of a nationwide campaign of genocide is being debated in cases before the Tribunal, and that in his case it has been disputed by Prosecution witnesses.[41] According to Mr. Nzirorera, it is incongruous to suggest that a plan or campaign of genocide is a fact of common knowledge when it was unknown to the Prosecution's own highly placed witnesses.[42]

19. The Prosecution responds that its request for judicial notice was clearly confined to the taking of judicial notice of the occurrence of genocide[43] and that the Appeals Chamber directed the Trial Chamber to take judicial notice of the occurrence of genocide in Rwanda in 1994.[44]

20. Mr. Nzirorera submits in reply that by taking judicial notice of genocide, the Trial Chamber may infer the existence of a plan and this inference will be aided by the language of the Decision on Judicial Notice which repeatedly refers to a nationwide campaign of genocide. He also argues that the Prosecution will now be in a position to assert that the taking of judicial notice of genocide infers the existence of a plan[45] and avers that this will lead to injustice, as the existence of a plan of genocide is not a matter of common knowledge.[46]

21. The Appeals Chamber recalls that in the Decision on Judicial Notice it directed the Trial Chamber to take judicial notice of the fact that between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994, there was genocide in Rwanda against the Tutsi ethnic group.[47] The taking of judicial notice of this fact does not imply the existence of a plan to commit genocide. The Appeals Chamber recalls that:

> [T]he existence of a plan or policy is not a legal ingredient of the crime of genocide. While the existence of such a plan may help to establish that the accused possessed the requisite genocidal intent, it remains only evidence supporting the inference of intent, and does not become the legal ingredient of the offence.[48]

It therefore follows that if the existence of a plan to commit genocide is vital to the Prosecution's case, this must be proved by evidence. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Mr. Nzirorera's submission that it expanded the Prosecution's request for judicial notice to include the existence of a plan to commit genocide.

4. Alleged Removal of the Trial Chamber's Discretion

22. Mr. Nzirorera submits that the Appeals Chamber erred in the Decision on Judicial Notice when it held that judicial notice under Rule 94 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules") is not discretionary.[49] He further contends that the Appeals Chamber erred in failing to allow the Trial Chamber the discretion not to take judicial notice of a fact of common knowledge given the late stage of the trial proceedings, which would be unfair to him and the other Applicants.[50] In support of these contentions, Mr. Nzirorera argues that even if the Appeals Chamber found a certain fact to be a fact of common knowledge, it does not necessarily follow that judicial notice of that fact must be taken in a particular case.[51] Should the Appeals Chamber maintain the Decision on Judicial Notice on its merits, Mr. Nzirorera requests modification of this Decision so as to leave discretion to the Trial Chamber to decline to take judicial notice of facts of common knowledge, if, considering the stage of the proceedings or other facts, it believes that it is unfair to do so.[52]

23. The Prosecution responds that the taking of judicial notice of facts of common knowledge is not discretionary.[53] It argues that it is incumbent on the Trial Chamber, under Rule 94 (A) of the Rules, to take judicial notice of the occurrence of genocide in Rwanda in 1994, as a fact of common knowledge.[54] It also argues that Mr. Nzirorera has not demonstrated that the Appeals Chamber erred in directing the Trial Chamber to take judicial notice of genocide as a fact of common knowledge.[55]

24. The Appeals Chamber recalls that in the Decision on Judicial Notice it determined that the Trial Chamber has no discretion to rule that a fact of common knowledge must be proved through evidence at trial.[56] This determination was based on an interpretation of Rule 94 (A) of the Rules. The express language of this rule does not allow the Trial Chamber the discretion to require proof of facts of common knowledge. Such discretion only exists for matters of judicial notice which fall within the ambit of Rule 94 (B) of the Rules, that is, adjudicated facts or documentary evidence from other proceedings of the Tribunal. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Mr. Nzirorera has failed to demonstrate an error in its interpretation of Rule 94 (A) of the Rules. The Appeals Chamber also finds no merit in his request for modification of the Decision on Judicial Notice.

B. The Alleged Necessity to Prevent an Injustice

25. Mr. Karemera submits that the taking of judicial notice affects the presumption of innocence, as it assumes that in the case of genocide the crime has already been proven before the outcome of the trial[57] and thus constitutes an "admission of guilt",[58] jeopardises his right to a fair hearing in accordance with Article 20 of the Statute of the Tribunal,[59] and significantly lessens the Prosecution's burden of proof.[60]

26. The Appeals Chamber recalls and emphasizes its statement in the Decision on Judicial Notice that > the practice of judicial notice must not be allowed to circumvent the presumption of innocence and the defendant's right to a fair trial, including his right to confront his accusers. Thus, it would plainly be improper for facts judicially noticed to be the "basis for proving the Appellant's criminal responsibility" (in the sense of being sufficient to establish that responsibility), and it is always necessary for Trial Chambers to take careful consideration of the presumption of innocence and the procedural rights of the accused.[61]

The Appeals Chamber also reiterates that judicially noticed facts do not relieve the Prosecution of its burden of proof.[62] The Appeals Chamber consequently finds no merit in the submission advanced by Mr. Karemera.

27. Mr. Karemera further submits that the Decision on Judicial Notice breaches the principle of inter partes proceedings and is inconsistent with the audi alteram partem doctrine.[63] He argues that the Decision on Judicial Notice affects all cases before the Tribunal without affording the parties in those cases the opportunity to present their submissions on these matters.[64] The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in this submission. Parties in other cases are not prevented from challenging the implication of the Decision on Judicial Notice in their respective cases in proceedings before their respective Trial Chambers.[65]

C. Conclusion

28. For the aforementioned reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Applicants have failed to demonstrate a clear error of reasoning in the Decision on Judicial Notice or that reconsideration of this

Introduction

1. The proceedings in the instant case commenced on 19 September 2005. The Prosecution now moves the Chamber to admit, pursuant to Rule 89 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, trial transcripts and accompanying exhibits from the sworn testimonies of Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera in the Bagosora et al. case.[1] The Prosecution explains that it has sought on several occasions to narrow the issues to be litigated in this trial by requesting admissions from the Accused of facts not in dispute, including admission of authenticity of certain documents that they have authored. It contends that certain admissions by the Accused during their testimony will conclusively address factual matters in this case that would otherwise require the testimony of additional witnesses, for example, obviating the need for evidence from a hand-writing analyst to address matters of authenticity of documents that are apparently non-contentious issues for the Accused in light of their testimony in the Bagosora trial.

2. None of the Accused objects to the admission of the transcript of their prior testimony on the Bagosora et al. case.[2] However, Mathieu Ngirumpatse requests that the Chamber does not admit the exhibits tendered during the testimony of his co-Accused, and Edouard Karemera opposes the admission of the exhibits entered during his own testimony. They submit that these exhibits were subject to various objections and consequently request the admission of these exhibits to be fully discussed in their trial before this Chamber. These objections are supported by Joseph Nzirorera

3. On 15 September 2006, following the Chamber's order,[3] the Registrar served certified copies of the trial transcripts and accompanying exhibits sought for admission upon the Chamber and the Parties.

Deliberations

4. According to Rule 89 of the Rules, the Chamber is not bound by national rules of evidence and may, in cases not otherwise provided for in the Rules, apply rules of evidence which will best favour a fair determination of the matter before it and are consonant with the spirit of the Statute and the general principles of law.[4] The Chamber also has a broad discretion under Rule 89 (C) of the Rules to admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value. Trial Chambers of both ad hoc Tribunals have held that documents need not be recognized by a witness in order to have probative value.[5] While a Chamber always retains the competence under Rule 89 (D) to request verification of the authenticity of evidence obtained out of court, only the beginning of proof that evidence is reliable, namely, that sufficient indicia of reliability have been established, is required for evidence to be admissible.[6] As the Appeals Chamber has also repeatedly emphasized,

> "[a]dmissibility of evidence should not be confused with the assessment of weight to be accorded by the Chamber to that evidence at a later stage".[7]

5. The Chamber notes that at the beginning of the testimony of each Accused, the Presiding Judge in the Bagosora et al. case reminded them that, according to Rule 90 (E) of the Rules, "[they] may refuse to make any statement which might tend to incriminate [them]".[8] The Accused persons did rely upon this Rule to refuse to answer certain questions. The Counsel for each of the Accused were also present during the proceedings and allowed to intervene when appropriate.

6. The authenticity and authorship of the exhibits were not disputed by the Accused persons and, except for one of them, were not subject to any objection from the Accused or their Counsel attending the proceedings. Exhibit P. 396, which is a page extracted from handwritten notes taken by Edouard Karemera during a Council of Ministers held on 17 June 1994, was the subject to an objection from Edouard Karemera supported by his Counsel. The Accused did not dispute that he was the author of the notes but submitted that the document touched upon the charges against him.[9] Relying upon his right to remain silent as set forth in Rule 90 (E) of the Rules, he refused to discuss the document in its entirety, but agreed to comment on one page which was the subject of the examination-in-chief by the Defence for Nsengiyumva and was subsequently admitted by the Bagosora Trial Chamber.[10]

7. After reviewing the transcripts and exhibits, the Chamber is satisfied that the sworn testimony of each Accused in the Bagosora et al. trial and the accompanying exhibits concern matters relevant to the case and which have probative value. Exhibits were an integral part of the testimony of the Accused persons since during their respective testimonies, they commented on some documents which were already admitted as exhibits or were subsequently admitted.

8. The Chamber does not consider that the admission of the transcripts and the accompanying exhibits will infringe upon the rights of the Accused. Each of them has acknowledged the authorship of the documents shown to them. The admission into evidence does not in any way constitute a binding determination as to the authenticity or trustworthiness of the documents and the weight to be attached to the evidence shall be determined at a later stage and after considering the evidence as a whole. Furthermore, as explained by the Prosecution, the admission is sought to prove authorship of the documents which the Prosecution had always intended to offer as part of its case. The Accused will also be able to fully discuss these documents during their trial if necessary.

I. GRANTS the Prosecution Motion; and

II. REQUESTS the Registrar to assign an exhibit number in the instant case to the certified copies of the transcripts of the sworn testimony given by Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera in the Bagosora et al. case as well as to the exhibits accompanying these testimonies which are described hereinafter.

Milutin Popović et al., Decision on Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts with Annex , 26 September 2006 (IT-05-88)

Introduction

1. On 9 November 2005, this Chamber ruled upon the Prosecution's request for judicial notice to be taken of six purported facts of common knowledge and 153 purported adjudicated facts.[1] It took judicial notice of three facts of common knowledge, pursuant to Rule 94(A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, and denied the remainder of the request.[2]

2. On 16 June 2006, the Appeals Chamber upheld, in part, the Prosecution's interlocutory appeal of that Decision, directing the Chamber to take judicial notice of certain facts of common knowledge, and to review its findings in the impugned Decision concerning certain purported adjudicated facts.[3]

[1] The 153 purported adjudicated facts were taken from the Nahimana et al., Kajelijeli, Kayishema and Ruzindana, Musema, Ntakirutimana, Niyitegeka, Akayesu, Rutaganda and Semanza Judgements.

[2] Prosecutor v. Édouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera ("Karemera et al."), Case N°ICTR-98-44-T, Decision on Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice (TC), 9 November 2005 ("Impugned Decision"). The facts in relation to which judicial notice was taken were Facts 3 and 4, as proposed by the Prosecution, as well as a slightly modified version of Fact 1. The substance of the denial was the denial of Facts 2, 5 and 6 as facts of common knowledge; and denial of the 153 purported adjudicated facts. Of the adjudicated facts, Fact 153 – that genocide was committed in Rwanda in 1994 against the Tutsi as a group – was pleaded alternatively as a fact of common knowledge and as an adjudicated fact. The Trial Chamber declined to take judicial notice of the fact on either basis.

[3] Respectively, Facts two, five and six; and Facts 1-30, 33-74, and 79-152 listed under Annex B of the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal. Karemera et al, Case N°ICTR-98-44-AR73(C), Decision on Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of Decision on Judicial Notice (AC), 16 June 2005 ("Appeals Chamber Decision").

3. At the Parties' request, the Chamber then issued a Scheduling Order, permitting them to file any further submissions they may have concerning the Trial Chamber's pending review of its findings on judicial notice of adjudicated facts.[4] The Parties duly complied.[5]

4. According to the Defence for Nzirorera, the Defence for each of the Accused agreed to divide their Responses so as each Accused would make submissions with respect to certain Facts only.[6] However, whereas the Defence for Nzirorera adhered to this delineation, the Defence for Ngirumpatse made submissions on almost each and every fact, and the Defence for Karemera made submissions on only some of the facts allocated to it under this division.

5. The Prosecution filed one single Response to all of the Defence submissions. It indicated that it abandoned its application with respect to 10 of the purported adjudicated facts,[7] so that only 137 purported adjudicated facts remain to be considered by the Trial Chamber.[8]

6. While the Chamber had completed its deliberations pertaining to the Appeals Chamber's remand and was in the final drafting process of its decision, the anticipated testimony of two Prosecution witnesses rendered necessary the delivery of two oral rulings indicating the Chamber's findings concerning certain facts. The Chamber specified that its written Decision on this matter would provide reasons for its ruling, and would be the authoritative statement of the Chamber's findings and reasoning concerning this issue. These rulings allowed the Prosecution to drastically shorten its examination-in-chief.

Deliberations

Preliminary Matter

7. The Defence of each of the Accused in this case requested the Appeals Chamber to reconsider, or alternatively, to clarify, its Decision. Pending the Decision of the Appeals Chamber on reconsideration, the Defence for Ngirumpatse asked the Chamber to defer its review of the judicial notice issues, submitting that such a deferral would be in the interests of justice and judicial economy.

8. This request for deferral has been rendered moot since, on 1 December 2006, the Appeals Chamber dismissed the motions for reconsideration in their entirety.[9]

Ngirumpatse sur la Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts", filed on 25 September 2006. On 27 September 2006, the Chamber granted the Defence an extension of time to reply to 2 October 2006 (see Karemera et al, Case N°ICTR-98-44-T, Décision Accordant une Prorogation de Délai de Réponse à Deux Requêtes du Procureur (TC), 27 September 2006). Édouard Karemera filed a Reply to the Prosecution Motion was filed on 1 October 2006.

[6] See Nzirorera's Supplemental Submission, para. 10. According to this submission, the Defence for Joseph Nzirorera was to address the facts taken from the Nahimana et al. and Kajelijeli Judgements; the Defence for Mathieu Ngirumpatse was to address the facts taken from the Akayesu, Rutaganda, and Semanza Judgements, and the Defence for Édouard Karemera was to address the facts taken from the Kayishema, Musema, Ntakirutimana, and Niyitegeka Judgements.

[7] Facts 14, 79-83, and 138-141 – see Prosecutor's Consolidated Response, para. 7.

[9] Prosecutor v. Karemera et al., Case N°ICTR-98-44-AR73(C), Decision on Motions for Reconsideration (AC), 1 December 2006, para. 28 and "Disposition".

9. The Trial Chamber will therefore begin by considering that part of the Appeals Chamber Decision which directed the Chamber to take judicial notice of certain facts of common knowledge. It will then go on to consider the adjudicated facts aspect of the Appeals Chamber Decision.

I. Facts of Common Knowledge – Rule 94 (A)

10. Rule 94 (A) of the Rules states: "A Trial Chamber shall not require proof of facts of common knowledge but shall take judicial notice thereof." This part of the rule is not discretionary;[10] rather Rule 94 (A) "commands the taking of judicial notice of material that is 'notorious'".[11] The term "common knowledge"

> "encompasses facts that are not reasonably subject to dispute: in other words, commonly accepted or universally known facts, such as general facts of history or geography, or the laws of nature".

11. The Appeals Chamber Decision found that this Chamber had erred in failing to take judicial notice of the following facts, which the Appeals Chamber said are facts of common knowledge:[12]

> (i) Fact 2 – "The following state of affairs existed in Rwanda between 6 April 1994 to 17 July 1994: There were throughout Rwanda, widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification. During the attacks, some Rwandan citizens killed or caused serious bodily or mental harm to person[s] perceived to be Tutsi. As a result of the attacks, there were a large number of deaths of persons of Tutsi ethnic identity."
> (ii) Fact 5 – "Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994 in Rwanda there was an armed conflict not of an international character."
> (iii) Fact 6 – "Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994, there was a genocide in Rwanda against the Tutsi ethnic group."

12. Whilst this Chamber only sought further submissions from the Parties on the question of judicial notice of adjudicated facts, the Defence for Ngirumpatse makes submissions concerning whether or not the Trial Chamber is bound to follow the Appeals Chamber's directive. It submits that there is no requirement in the Rules that the Trial Chamber is bound to follow the Appeals Chamber and that instead of carrying out the Appeals Chamber's directive, it should revisit the impugned Decision on the basis of the Appeals Chamber's findings.

13. This contention is, however, contrary to the established jurisprudence, and particularly the recent Appeals Chamber's Decisions. When a fact is considered as a fact of common knowledge, a Trial Chamber has no discretion and must take judicial notice thereof.[13] In the present case, the Appeals Chamber has determined that Facts 2, 5 and 6 are of common knowledge and accordingly, directed the Trial Chamber to take judicial notice thereof.[14]

14. In the case of Bizimungu et al., Trial Chamber II also considered that "a determination by the Appeals Chamber that any given fact is one of common knowledge and of which judicial notice should be taken under Rule 94 (A) is binding upon all Trial Chambers".[15]

15. The Chamber therefore takes judicial notice of Facts 2, 5 and 5 as facts of common knowledge, pursuant to Rule 94 (A) of the Rules.

II. Adjudicated Facts – Rule 94 (B)

16. Rule 94(B) of the Rules provides:

> At the request of a party or proprio motu, a Trial Chamber, after hearing the Parties, may decide to take judicial notice of adjudicated facts or documentary evidence from other proceedings of the Tribunal relating to the matter at issue in the current proceedings.

17. In its Decision of 16 June 2006, the Appeals Chamber remanded the judicial notice matter to the Trial Chamber for further consideration of the majority of the purported adjudicated facts on the basis of two findings.

18. The Appeals Chamber firstly found that

> "the Trial Chamber erred to the extent that it found that, under Rule 94 (B), it is categorically impermissible to take judicial notice of facts relating directly or indirectly to the defendant's guilt, including facts related to the existence and activity of a joint criminal enterprise."[16]

In so doing, the Appeals Chamber also recognised the need for caution in allowing judicial notice of adjudicated facts which were central to the criminal responsibility of the accused. It stated that the Trial Chamber should assess the particular facts of which judicial notice is sought to determine, firstly, whether they are related to the acts, conduct, or mental state of the accused; and, secondly, if not, whether under the circumstances of the case admitting them will advance the objective of expediency without compromising the rights of the accused.[17]

19. The Appeals Chamber secondly considered that a Trial Chamber "can and indeed must decline to take judicial notice of facts if it considers that the way they are formulated – abstracted from the context in the judgement from which they came – is misleading, or inconsistent with the facts actually adjudicated in the cases in question".[18] However, in the present case, the Appeals Chamber was not persuaded that Facts 86 through 110 were actually taken out of context, or improperly combined, in a way which made them inconsistent with the judgements from which they were drawn, as decided by this Chamber. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber directed the Chamber to reconsider the matter and provide an explanation for its conclusions.[19]

II.1. Applicable Law

20. Under Rule 94 (B) judicial notice of adjudicated facts is discretionary. Moreover, in order to invoke an exercise of its discretion, the Chamber must be satisfied that the fact in question relates to a matter at issue in the current proceedings.[20]

21. According to the Appeals Chamber,

> "[t]aking judicial notice of adjudicated facts under Rule 94 (B) is a method of achieving judicial economy and harmonising judgements of the Tribunal while ensuring the right of the Accused to a fair, public and expeditious trial".[21]

The Appeals Chamber also noted the consistency between taking judicial notice of adjudicated facts and the admission of written statements in lieu of oral testimony under Rule 92 bis of the Rules – both procedural mechanisms adopted "largely for the same purpose".[22]

22. The Appeals Chamber describes adjudicated facts judicially noticed under Rule 94 (B) as "merely presumptions that may be rebutted by the defence with evidence at trial."[23] The Appeals Chamber has clarified how this qualification can be reconciled with the presumption of innocence as follows:

> Judicial notice does not shift the ultimate burden of persuasion, which remains with the Prosecution. In the case of judicial notice under Rule 94 (B), the effect is only to relieve the Prosecution of its initial burden to produce [credible and reliable] evidence on the point; the defence may then put the point into question by introducing reliable and credible evidence to the contrary.[24]
> Analogously, in the context of alibi evidence, for instance, the accused bears the burden of production with respect to a matter centrally related to the guilt of the accused; yet this shift does not violate the presumption of innocence because, as the Appeals Chamber has repeatedly recognized, the prosecution retains the burden of proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.[25]

23. Trial Chambers of both this Tribunal and the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia ("ICTY") have laid down some guiding principles when deciding whether or not to take judicial notice of purported adjudicated facts. They are consistent with the recent directives given by the Appeals Chamber's in its Decision of 16 June 2006. These principles, which are not exhaustive, can be summarized as follows:

- When ruling on the matter, the Chamber must examine the purported fact in the context of the original judgement.[26]
- With regard to the meaning of the term "adjudicated facts", the jurisprudence outlines a number of requirements before a fact can be considered to be truly adjudicated:
  - A fact sought to be judicially noticed must be distinct, concrete and identifiable.[27]
  - A fact in relation to which judicial notice is sought must be in the same or a substantially similar form to how it was expressed by the original Chamber.[28] Facts altered in a substantial way by the moving party cannot be considered to have been truly adjudicated.[29] However, as the Trial Chamber recently noted in the Popović Decision, a minor inaccuracy or ambiguity can be cured proprio motu by the Trial Chamber. This is discretionary, and should introduce no substantive change to the proposed fact. "[T]he purpose of such correction should be to render the formulation consistent with the meaning intended by the original Chamber."[30]

- Facts proposed for judicial notice must constitute factual findings and must not include legal characterisations.[31]
- A fact cannot be considered as adjudicated in circumstances where those facts are or might be subject to pending appeal.[32]

• Judicial notice under Rule 94(B) cannot be taken of facts which attest to criminal responsibility of the accused.[33] According to the Appeals Chamber, judicial notice should therefore not be taken of facts relating to the acts, conducts and mental state of the accused.[34] This exclusion does not apply to acts and conduct of other persons for which the accused is alleged to be responsible.[35] Such persons may include, for instance, alleged subordinates whose criminal conduct the accused is charged with failing to prevent or punish, persons said to have participated with the accused in a joint criminal enterprise, and persons the accused is alleged to have aided and abetted.[36]

• Once the Chamber is satisfied that the facts sought for admission are truly adjudicated facts and do not relate to the acts, conduct and mental state of the Accused, it is called upon to invoke an exercise of its discretion for the purpose of expediting the proceedings, only in circumstances where admitting such facts will not compromise the rights of the Accused, including his or her right to a fair and expeditious trial, to hear and confront the witnesses against him or her.[37] In that respect, Trial Chambers of this Tribunal and of the ICTY have considered, in the particular context of their case, that facts which are core issues should not be judicially noticed.[38] Where a certain fact concerns a core issue in the case, the taking of judicial notice of that fact may place such a significant burden on the Accused to produce rebuttal evidence that it would jeopardise the Accused's right to fair trial.[39] Considering the interests of justice and the particular circumstances of the case at hand, Trial Chambers have also declined to take judicial notice of adjudicated facts in circumstances where evidence has already been heard on the subject matter of the fact sought to be judicially noticed.[40]

Galić,* Case N°IT-98-29-AR73.2, Decision on Interlocutory Appeal Concerning Rule 92 bis (C) (AC), 7 June 2002, paras. 10-11. In the extract of the Decision quoted, the Appeals Chamber considered whether the exclusion from admission under Rule 92 bis of any written statement which "goes to proof of the acts and conduct of the accused as charged in the indictment" also mandated the exclusion of any written statement going to proof of the acts and conduct of other persons for whose conduct the accused was alleged to be liable by reason of a joint criminal enterprise theory, or accomplice liability. The Appeals Chamber considered that such an interpretation would denude Rule 92 bis of any real utility, and that it would be inconsistent with the purpose and terms of the Rule. The Karemera Appeals Chamber considered that this analysis was equally applicable to Rule 94 (B).

II.2. Facts sought for Judicial Notice

24. Generally the Defence for the Accused dispute the accuracy of the facts sought for admission or their character as adjudicated facts. They also contend that some of the facts relate to the acts, conduct and mental of the Accused or of other persons for which the Accused are alleged to be responsible. In their views, the admission of the purported adjudicated facts will seriously impair the rights of the Accused in various ways and will not contribute to the objective of expediency.

25. The Chamber will now consider whether judicial notice should be taken of the 136 purported adjudicated facts in the light of above-mentioned principles and each party's submissions. In order to facilitate the reading of this Decision, it must be noted that the Chamber will not systematically recall each argument submitted by the Parties with respect to each fact, when it has already been addressed.

1. Facts 1 to 9 (Akayesu Judgement)

26. The Prosecution requests the Chamber to take judicial notice of nine facts taken from the Akayesu Judgement.[41]

27. These facts are relevant to matters at issue in the current proceedings and do not relate to the acts, conduct and mental state of the Accused persons in this case. After reviewing Facts 1 to 9 in the context of the Judgement, the Chamber is also satisfied that they are truly adjudicated facts. Specifically and contrary to Ngirumpatse's assertions, Facts 1 and 8 are similar to how they were expressed in the original Judgement, and Fact 3 does not contain a characterisation of an essentially legal nature.

28. Furthermore, the Defence for Ngirumpatse and the Defence for Karemera request the Chamber not to take judicial notice where the original Trial Chamber has made the particular finding on the basis of the testimony of only one witness.[42] They contend that this deprives the Accused of the same right which has been afforded to the accused person in the case from which the fact has been taken and an opportunity to raise reasonable doubt in the Prosecution's case.

29. Under Rule 89 of the Rules and according to the established jurisprudence of this Tribunal, corroboration of evidence is not required: a Chamber may rely on a single witness' testimony as proof of a material fact.[43] A Chamber also has a broad discretion to admit hearsay evidence, even when it cannot be examined at its source and when it is not corroborated by direct evidence.[44] The Chamber will therefore not exclude the admission of an adjudicated fact solely because the original Chamber made its finding on the basis of the evidence of only one witness.

[42] The Defence for Karemera also raises this point. Facts 1, 2, 3, 7, 10-24, 36, 41-51, 60, 67, 68, 79, 82, 84, 85, 110, 116-123, 125, 126, 132, 134-141, 144, 145, 148 and 150.

[44] See for e.g.: Prosecutor v. Jean-Paul Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-A, Judgement (AC), 1 June 2001; Gacumbitsi Appeal Judgement.

30. In view of the particular circumstances of the case, the Chamber is satisfied that taking judicial notice of Facts 1 to 9 will contribute to the objective of expediency while not compromising the rights of the Accused. The Chamber, however, deems it necessary to cure certain minor inaccuracies concerning Fact 9.

2. Facts 15, 65 to 68, 144 and 145 (Semanza Judgement)

31. The Prosecution seeks judicial notice of facts taken from the Semanza Judgement (Facts 15, 65 to 68, 144 and 145).[45]

32. These facts are relevant to matters at issue in the current proceedings and do not relate to the acts, conduct and mental state of the Accused persons in this case. Contrary to Ngirumpatse's assertion, the Chamber is also satisfied that these facts are truly adjudicated facts and are in a substantially similar form to how they were expressed by the original Chamber.

33. The Defence for Ngirumpatse also submits that the Chamber should decline to take judicial notice of Facts 15, 67, 144 and 145 in relation to which the original Chamber did not specify the evidence upon the basis of which the factual finding was made. In its view, where there is lack of transparency, the Accused in this case are unable to bring evidence to rebut those findings.

34. The Chamber has reviewed these facts in the context of the Judgement and does not share the Defence's contention. The Semanza Chamber explicitly describes how it assessed and took into consideration the evidence adduced in that trial, including the alibi evidence.

35. Considering the circumstances of the case, the Chamber is of the view that taking judicial notice of Facts 15, 65 to 68 and 144 to 145 will contribute to the objective of expediency without compromising the rights of the Accused.

3. Facts 16 to 24 and 31 to 64 (Kajelijeli Judgement)

36. Under Facts 16 to 24 and 31 to 64, the Prosecution moves the Chamber to take judicial notice of facts extracted from the Kajelijeli Judgement.[46]

37. Whereas the Defence for Nzirorera concede that none of these facts relates to the acts, conduct and mental state of the Accused, the Defence for Ngirumpatse submits that certain facts must be excluded from admission because they comprise the acts and conduct of the Accused,[47] notably because some of these facts concern the actions of the Interahamwe which, according to the Indictment, are imputed to the Accused.[48] Furthermore, it submits that the Chamber should decline to take judicial notice of facts concerning the synonymous use of the words 'Tutsi' "enemy", "accomplices of the enemy", "infiltrators", "accomplices of the RPF", "inyenzi", "inkotanyi" for similar reasons.[49]

38. The Chamber is of the view that the facts sought for admission are relevant to matters at issue in the current proceedings. Furthermore, none of them can be said to relate to the acts, conduct and mental state of the Accused in this case.

[49] Facts 19, 34, 35, 42, 43, 49, 52, 54, 55, 57, 58, 61, 64.

39. However, some of them directly describe the acts and conducts of Kajelijeli,[50] who according to the Indictment in the present case, is alleged to having directly acted under the instructions of Nzirorera. Paragraph 62 of the Indictment alleges that on 6 or 7 April 1994, or both, Joseph Nzirorera participated in certain decisions taken at a meeting at the residence of Nzirorera's mother in Busogo secteur with Juvenal Kajelijeli, amongst others, and ordering the attack and killing of Tutsi population in Mukingo and Nkuli communes. It is further alleged that Kajelijeli executed the decisions taken by Joseph Nzirorera.[51]

40. While judicial notice can be taken of acts and conducts of persons for which an accused is alleged to be responsible, the Chamber finds that Facts 19, 40, 50-53, 55-56, 60, 62 and 63 sought for admission are so proximate and central to the criminal responsibility of Joseph Nzirorera following the allegations pleaded in the Indictment that it would compromise the rights of the Accused if judicial notice was taken of these facts.

41. The Chamber finds that Facts 34, which states that killings of the Tutsi in Mukingo commune "were not spontaneous reaction of the Hutu populace to the death of the President", touches upon a core issue in the instant case. It has been the consistent Prosecution's theory that the Accused in this case had pre-planned the genocide throughout Rwanda, and the Defence has repeatedly given notice of its intention to rely on the defence that the killings were a spontaneous reaction of the Hutu population. According to the Appeals Chamber, "if the existence of a plan to commit genocide is vital to the Prosecution's case, this must be proved by evidence".[52] Under these circumstances, the Chamber is of the view that it is in the interests of justice to hear oral evidence on this particular issue.

42. With respect to Fact 18,[53] the Prosecution submits that the question of whether there were "widespread attacks" is a question of fact, which having been found proved, can lead to a legal finding. It also submits that, since the Appeals Chamber has found as a fact of common knowledge that there were "throughout Rwanda widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification" and rape is one such method of attacking a population, it is proper for the Trial Chamber to take judicial notice of this fact. In the Chamber's view, that rapes and sexual assaults were committed in the course of a widespread attack upon the Tutsi civilian population may be considered as a characterisation of an essentially legal nature, which should be left to the ultimate determination of the Trial Chamber. The Chamber therefore declines to take judicial notice of Fact 18.

43. Considering the context of the Kajelijeli Judgement, the Chamber is not satisfied that Facts 36 to 38 reflect the factual findings of the Trial Chamber in the Kajelijeli Judgement.[54] They therefore [53] Fact 18 sought for admission reads as follows: "These rapes and sexual assaults were committed in the course of a widespread attack upon the Tutsi civilian population".

[54] Fact 36 is extracted from para. 404 of Kajelijeli Judgement, which reads as follows:
The Chamber notes in particular the detailed and reliable account of Prosecution Witness GBH, who stated that the Accused "was the one who gave instructions to the young people who had to do anything. He supervised them and gave them orders… The young people in question were the Interahamwe." Witness GBH also testified that "a man of his position as a bourgmestre could [have] had the power to stop or lock the young people wearing uniform, engaged in training, singing and dancing." This testimony was further corroborated by Prosecution Witness GBE, who provided testimony that the Accused never bothered the Interahamwe even when they were "molesting or harassing" people, though as bourgmestre he was both able and obliged to do so. The Chamber finds that these testimonies present a clear picture of the Accused's close association with, and control over, the Interahamwe. The Chamber consequently finds that the Accused was a leader of Interahamwe with control over the Interahamwe in Mukingo commune, and that he also had influence over the Interahamwe of Nkuli commune from 1 January 1994 to July 1994.
Fact 37 is extracted from para. 426 of Kajelijeli Judgement, which reads as follows:
Notwithstanding the fact that the Chamber in its previous findings [Part III, Section H] stated that the Accused was a leader of the Interahamwe, the youth wing of the MRND, the Chamber finds, on the basis of the evidence, that there is inconclusive evidence to establish that the Accused was either (a) a registered member of the new MRND, established by the July 1991 Statute; (b) a member of the prefectural committee or a member of the prefectural congress of this party. The aforesaid notwithstanding, the Chamber finds that the Accused was closely associated with the new MRND and its leadership and that, cannot be considered as adjudicated facts and it is therefore appropriate to decline to take judicial notice of them.

44. The Chamber agrees with the Defence that Facts 35, 47 and 48 are vague and not distinct, concrete and identifiable to be judicially noticed. The Chamber is also of the view that Fact 64 may be ambiguous and does not fairly translate how this finding was expressed by the original Chamber.[55] For this reason, it will not be judicially noticed.

45. Conversely, Facts 16, 17, 20 to 24, 33, 41 to 46, 49, 54, 57, 58, 59, and 61 are truly adjudicated facts. In particular and contrary to the assertions made by the Defence for Nzirorera and the Defence for Ngirumpatse, Facts 17, 33, 43, 59 are distinct, concrete and identifiable, and Fact 44 does not include a legal characterisation.

46. As already mentioned, the Chamber is also satisfied that Facts 16, 17, 20 to 24, 33, 41 to 46, 49, 54, 57, 58, 59, and 61 do not relate to the acts, conduct and mental state of the Accused persons in this case. In that respect, the Chamber notes that Facts 41 to 46 concern a different meeting to the one which the Indictment alleges that Nzirorera attended and do not contain any allegation that Nzirorera was present at that meeting. This was a meeting held by Kajelijeli on the evening of 6 April 1994 at the Canteen next to the Nkuli bureau communal. The Chamber is satisfied that these facts are not too proximate to the Accused.

47. The Defence for Nzirorera, however, objects to their admission submitting that in different ways, it will compromise the rights of the accused and that it will not advance the objective of expediency.

48. According to the Defence, Witnesses ANP and GBU, upon the basis of whose testimony certain factual findings were made by the Kajelijeli Trial Chamber, have been found to have committed perjury, and therefore taking judicial notice of facts which are based on the testimony of those witnesses would compromise the Accused's rights.

49. The Chamber notes that Witnesses ANP and GBU were two of several witnesses upon whom the Trial Chamber relied in making the findings from which the adjudicated facts are proposed. The Defence's argument in that respect therefore falls to be rejected.

especially from January 1994 to mid-July 1994, he was actively involved in many activities of this party in Mukingo commune and the neighbouring areas. He may as well have been a member of the MRND party.
Fact 38 is extracted from Para. 400 of Kajelijeli Judgement, which reads as follows:
The Chamber finds that by 6 April 1994 the Accused was actively involved in the training of the Interahamwe. This is evidenced in the eye witness testimony of Prosecution Witness GBH, who stated that the Accused was "seen in the company of the young people while they trained on a football field using the guns, wooden guns." Corroborating evidence is found in the testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses GDD and GAO, both of whom gave similar and largely consistent testimonies of the Accused's involvement in the training of the Interahamwe. Witness GDD, a former member of the Interahamwe, testified that the Accused and other politicians solicited him to train young Interahamwe recruits. Witness GAO, another former member of the Interahamwe, also confirmed that when the Accused was bourgmestre he [the Accused], together with others, gave Interahamwe military training. Witness GAO also testified that the Accused would come to the training grounds every morning, and that the Accused told Interahamwe to complete their training quickly so that he [the Accused] could send them to the volcanoes to fight against the "Inkotanyi, the Inyenzi." The Chamber notes in particular, the testimony of Prosecution Witness GAP who stated that the Accused was the leading instructor "responsible for political ideology". Although there are minor ambiguities among them regarding the timing of various training activities of the militia in Mukingo commune and the neighbouring areas, the Chamber finds their testimonies consistent and establish beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused did actively participate in the training of Interahamwe in Mukingo commune. The Chamber finds, however, that there is insufficient evidence that the Accused organized these trainings.

[55] See Kajelijeli Judgement, par. 625:
After careful consideration of all the evidence regarding the massacre at the Ruhengeri Court of Appeal on or around 14 April 1994, the Chamber finds that the Accused played a vital role as an organizer and facilitator of the Interahamwe and other attackers. He did this by procuring weapons, rounding up the Interahamwe and facilitating their transportation to the Ruhengeri Court of Appeal by supplying them with petrol. The Interahamwe were to assist in killing the Tutsis who had been taken from Busengo sub-prefecture in Ndusu Commune and left at the Ruhengeri Court of Appeal, and who had until that point been successfully resisting attacks by the local militia.

50. The Defence for Nzirorera contends that the testimony already heard by this Chamber of Witness BTH is a bar to the taking judicial notice of certain facts.

51. As previously mentioned, considering the interests of justice and the particular circumstances of the case, some Trial Chambers have declined to take judicial notice of adjudicated facts in circumstances where evidence has already been heard on the subject matter of the fact sought to be judicially noticed.[56] The fact of a Trial Chamber having heard testimony on a particular fact is, however, not an absolute bar to the taking of judicial notice of that fact. The Chamber must determine whether, having already heard testimony on a particular fact, taking judicial notice of that fact will advance the objective of expediency without compromising the rights of the Accused. Relevant considerations to this determination may include, for example, how much evidence has been heard on a particular fact, how much evidence is still to be heard with respect to the particular fact, how directly a witness has testified on a particular fact, and whether the relevant witness testimony corroborates or contradicts the fact proposed for judicial notice.

52. In the present case, the Chamber has considered the facts allegedly precluded from judicial notice by virtue of Witness BTH's testimony, and is of the view that only Fact 39 should be excluded on this basis in the interests of justice. There might be indeed some divergence with the testimony of Witness BTH on the same fact. Contrary to Nzirorera's assertion, the fact that Witness BTH testified that Kajelijeli was acting at the direction of Nzirorera, does not affect the conclusion that Facts 16, 17, 20 to 24, 33, 41 to 46, 49, 54, 57, 58, 59, and 61 do not relate to the acts, conduct and mental state of the Accused.

53. The Defence for Nzirorera also submits, since the Trial Chamber in Kajelijeli found that the Prosecution had failed to prove its allegation that Kajelijeli conspired with Nzirorera and others,[57] it would be unfair to take judicial notice of selective findings of the Trial Chamber which help the Prosecution.[58] The Chamber is of the view that this argument, on the contrary, favours the admission of Facts 16, 17, 20 to 24, 33, 41 to 46, 49, 54, 57, 58, 59, and 61 since the Kajelijeli Trial Chamber did not find that Nzirorera and Kajeljeli were co-conspirators.

54. The Defence for Nzirorera also makes several individual submissions on why taking judicial notice of certain facts will not advance the objective of expediency. Firstly, he submits, Facts 23 and 24 involve events in Kinigi commune which are not included in the Amended Indictment, and are not the subject of testimony from any proposed witness on the Prosecution's Witness List. The Defence for Nzirorera submits that, since it will be required to adduce evidence to refute events in Kinigi and Nkuli communes, the purpose of expediency will not be advanced. Secondly, with respect to Facts 41 to 50, the Defence submits that these facts are based on findings from the testimony of Witness GDD, who has since died, and that no other witness on the Prosecution's Witness List will testify to these events. It claims that in these circumstances, to take judicial notice of these facts will deprive Nzirorera of his right to cross-examination on matters which are strongly disputed, and will not promote expediency since there are no witnesses whose testimony would not otherwise be needed or whose testimony would be shortened by the taking of judicial notice. The Prosecution acknowledges that Witness GDD has died since his testimony in the Kajelijeli case, but says that the Defence will still be able to rebut the facts by calling other witnesses and that there will be other witnesses who will testify about the events in these communes whose evidence can be challenged.

55. The Chamber is satisfied that both the Indictment and the Pre-trial Brief make specific mention of massacres in Ruhengeri prefecture, within which Kinigi commune is located. Furthermore, in the Pre-trial Brief, specific mention is made of Mukingo commune and other communes which neighbour

Kinigi and Nkuli. Having considered the circumstances of the present case, the Chamber is of the view that taking judicial notice of Facts 16, 17, 20 to 24, 33, 41 to 46, 49, 54, 57, 58, 59, and 61 will advance the objective of expediency without compromising the rights of the Accused. Concerning Facts 33 and 54, the Chamber deems it necessary to cure minor inaccuracies (see Annexure to the present Decision)

56. Finally, Facts 31 and 32 have not been appealed, and therefore were not remanded to the Chamber for further consideration. The findings of the Chamber on those facts in the Decision of 9 November 2005 still stand.

4. Facts 25 to 30 and 146 to 152 (Rutaganda Judgement)

57. Under Facts 25 to 30 and 146 to 152, the Prosecution seeks judicial notice of facts taken from the Rutaganda Judgement.[59]

58. The Defence for Ngirumpatse submits that Facts 27 to 30, 147, 151 and 152 must be excluded from admission because they comprise the acts and conduct of the Accused, or the acts of the Interahamwe that can be imputed to the Accused in this case. Furthermore, it contends that the Chamber should decline to take judicial notice of facts concerning the synonymous use of the words 'Tutsi' "enemy", "accomplices of the enemy", "infiltrators", "accomplices of the RPF", "inyenzi", "inkotanyi" for similar reasons.[60]

59. The Chamber is satisfied that the purported facts taken from the Rutaganda Judgement concern a matter at issue in the current proceedings and none of them relates to the acts, conduct and mental state of the Accused persons in this case. However, Facts 151 and 152 are so central to the allegations against the Accused in this case, that it is preferable to hear viva voce evidence on these matters. The Chamber therefore declines to take judicial notice of them.

60. The Chamber also declines to take judicial notice of Fact 150 on the ground of vagueness, and of Facts 148 and 149 because the Chamber is not persuaded that their admission will promote the objective of expediency.

61. Considering the context of the Judgement, Facts 25 to 30 and 146 and 147 are truly adjudicated facts and are in a substantially similar form to how they were expressed in the original Judgement. Considering the rights of the Accused and the interests of justice, their admission will contribute to expediting the proceedings. The Chamber, however, has cured certain minor inaccuracies proprio motu, so as to enable the taking of judicial notice of those facts in a form which does not contain any ambiguity (see Annexure to this Decision; Facts 25 and 28).

5. Facts 10 to 12, 88 to 90, 92, 99 to 103, 105 to 107, 124, 127 to 131, 133, 134 to 137 (Niyitegeka Judgement); Facts 13, 86, 87, 91, 93, 94, 104, 111, 112, 113 (Musema Judgement); Facts 69, 71, 74, 84, 85, 95 to 98, 109, 110, 114, 115 (Kayishema Judgement); and Facts 70, 72, 73, 108, 116 to 123, 125, 126, 132 (Ntakirutimana Judgement)

62. The Prosecution moves the Chamber to take judicial notice of a series of facts extracted from the Niyitegeka, Musema, Kayishema and Ntakirutimana Judgements,[61] which, among other things concerns attacks on Muyira Hill, in the Bisesero area, on 13 and 14 May 1994.

Elizaphan and Gérard Ntakirutimana*, Case N°ICTR-96-10 and ICTR-96-17-T, Judgement and Sentence (TC), 21 February 2003.

63. The Defence for Ngirumpatse and the Defence for Karemera submit that these Facts extracted from the Niyitegeka Judgement must be excluded because they comprise the acts, conduct and mental state of the Accused persons or concern the acts of the Interahamwe that could be imputed to the Accused in this case. They also claim that some of them are vague or taken out of context of the original Judgement.

64. The Chamber declines to take judicial notice of Fact 84 on the basis that, absent the meaning provided by the context of Facts 79 to 83, in respect of which the Prosecution abandoned its application, the fact is devoid of meaning.

65. After reviewing the remaining facts in the context of their original Judgement, the Chamber considers that they are accurate reproductions of the original Chamber's findings from which they were extracted and are truly adjudicated facts which are relevant to matters at issue in the current proceedings. Contrary to the Defence's assertions, the Chamber is also satisfied that none of them concerns the acts, conduct or mental state of the Accused in this case.

66. The Defence for Ngirumpatse and the Defence for Karemera request the exclusion of facts where the original Trial Chamber has made the particular finding on the basis of the testimony of only one witness. Furthermore, the Defence for Karemera submits that judicial notice of Facts 86 to110 should be denied on the basis that those facts are the subject of reasonable dispute. In its view, since Appeals Judge Lennart Aspergen did not find certain facts pertaining to this incident proven beyond reasonable doubt in his Separate Opinion to the Musema Judgement, these facts are the subject of reasonable dispute. The Defence for Karemera also contends that, since Witness HR's testimony, upon whose testimony factual findings were made in the Musema Judgement, was disregarded by another Trial Chamber, judicial notice should not be taken of Facts 86 to 107.

67. The Chamber has already indicated that according to the established jurisprudence, a Chamber may rely on a single witness' testimony as proof of a material fact.

68. The Niyitegeka Trial Chamber explicitly stated that Witness HR was a credible witness, and accepted his testimony.[62] The Appeals Chamber found the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness HR to be "detailed and careful", and found no error in the Trial Chamber having relied on his testimony.[63] Furthermore, in the Musema trial, Witness HR was one of the witnesses upon whom the Trial Chamber relied in making the findings underpinning other facts.[64] The Trial Chamber expressly stated that it found the cross-examination of the witness in no way impaired his credibility, and that his evidence was reliable. The Appeals Chamber did not question the evaluation of this witness by the Trial Chamber.[65]

69. While the Chamber considers that issues of witness credibility in an original judgement may mitigate against judicial notice of an adjudicated fact, the Chamber is of the view that this depends upon the particular fact in question and the totality of the circumstances surrounding that finding. The question for the Chamber is whether the taking of judicial notice of the fact will compromise the rights of the Accused. The Chamber notes that a witness may be found to be credible by one finder of fact, and not by another. The Chamber also notes that a witness may be found to be telling the truth in a case against one accused, and not in another. The Chamber is not satisfied, with respect to the particular facts proposed for adjudication and said to be tarnished by issues of witness credibility that the rights of the Accused would be compromised. In addition in the present situation, the facts the admission of which is disputed by the Defence were adjudicated by four different Trial Chambers which also heard various witnesses.

[65] Musema Appeals Chamber Judgement, paras. 77-100.

70. In these circumstances, the Chamber is satisfied that taking judicial notice of Facts 10 to 12, 88 to 90, 92, 99 to 103, 105 to 107, 124, 127 to 131, 133, 134 to 137, 13, 86, 87, 91, 93, 94, 104, 111, 112, 113, 69, 71, 74, 85, 95 to 98, 109, 110, 114, 115, 70, 72, 73, 108, 116 to 123, 125, 126, 132 is the interests of justice and will promote expediency in this case, without compromising the rights of the Accused.

6. Facts 142 and 143 (Nahimana Judgement)

71. The Prosecution seeks judicial notice of two facts taken from the Nahimana Judgement (Facts 142 and 143).[66] It claims that while the case is pending appeal, these two facts are not the subject to the appeal and may be judicially noticed. Relying upon the Separate Opinion of His Honour Judge Shahabuddeen, it submits that judicial notice can be taken of adjudicated facts in cases pending appeal, provided that the particular facts in question do not form part of the appeal.[67]

72. The Chamber notes that one of the Appellants in the Nahimana case, Jean-Bosco Barayagwiza, is requesting the annulment of the Judgement on the basis that the proceedings were conducted in his absence. Furthermore, he is alleging a lack of independency of the Tribunal and lack of impartiality of the Judges.[68]

73. In light of these grounds of appeal, the Chamber considers that the Appeals Chamber Judgement has the potential to impact all factual findings of the Trial Chamber Judgement, including the facts sought for judicial notice. Under these circumstances, Facts 142 and 143 cannot be considered to have been finally adjudicated and cannot therefore be judicially noticed.

General Assessment of the Rights of Accused and Expediency of the Proceedings

74. The Defence for each Accused generally submits that taking judicial notice of the facts proposed for notice by the Prosecution compromises the rights of the Accused, including their rights to examine and have examined the witnesses against him. They also claim that the Rule's purpose of expediency will not be advanced, as required by the Appeals Chamber's ruling, since the Accused in this case will be obligated to call evidence to rebut each fact.

75. The Chamber wholly rejects this argument, for if it were to adopt the position, a Chamber could never find that taking judicial notice of any fact would promote expediency.

76. Considering the interests of justice and the entire circumstances of the case, the Chamber is satisfied that taking judicial notice of certain adjudicated facts, as detailed above, will promote expediency without compromising the rights of the Accused. Particularly, the Chamber is of the view that this Decision will not place such a significant burden on the Accused to produce rebuttal evidence that it would jeopardise their right to fair trial.[69] In terms of expediency of the proceedings, the Chamber expects the Prosecution to comply with its stated intention to streamline the presentation of its evidence and to reduce the number of witnesses it intends to call as a result of admission of adjudicated facts.

77. However, it is necessary to state that judicial notice is neither taken of the specific order in which these facts have been placed by the Prosecution in its Motion, nor of the headings under which those facts have been placed by the Prosecution. The Chamber takes judicial notice of the facts individually, as extracted from the original Judgements in which the findings were made (for details see Annexure A to this Decision).

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS the Prosecution Motion in part, and hereby

Annexure A - Adjudicated Facts Judicial Noticed

As explained in this Decision, in some instances the Chamber took judicial notice of adjudicated facts subject to amendments deemed necessary to cure minor inaccuracies or ambiguities. These amendments are highlighted in bold hereinafter when appropriate.

1	During the events of 1994, Tutsi girls and women were subjected to sexual violence, beaten and killed on or near the bureau communal premises, as well as elsewhere in the commune of Taba. Hundreds of Tutsi, mostly women and children, sought refuge at the bureau communal during this period and many rapes took place on or near the premises of the bureau communal.	Akayesu, par. 449.
2	A woman was taken by Interahamwe from the refuge site near the bureau communal to a nearby forest area and raped there. She was also raped repeatedly on two separate occasions in the cultural center on the premises of the bureau communal, once in a group of fifteen girls and women and once in a group of ten girls and women.	Akayesu, par. 449.
3	Women and girls were selected and taken by the Interahamwe to the cultural center to be raped. Two Interahamwes took a woman and raped her between the bureau communal and the cultural center.	Akayesu, par. 449.
4	A woman was taken from the bureau communal and raped in a nearby field. Three women were raped at Kinihira, the killing site near the bureau communal, and another woman found her younger sister, dying, after she had been raped at the bureau communal.	Akayesu, par. 449.
5	Many other instances of rape in Taba took place outside the bureau communal – in fields, on the road, and in or just outside houses.	Akayesu, par. 449.
6	Other acts of sexual violence took place on or near the premises of the bureau communal – the forced undressing and public humiliation of girls and women.	Akayesu, par. 449.
7	Much of the sexual violence took place in front of large numbers of people, and all of it was directed against Tutsi women.	Akayesu, par. 449.
8	With regard to all rape and sexual violence which took place on or near the premises of the Taba bureau communal, the perpetrators were all Interahamwe.	Akayesu, par. 450.
9	Interahamwe are also identified as the perpetrators of many rapes which took place outside the bureau communal.	Akayesu, par. 450.
10	On 28 June 1994, near the Technical Training College, on a public road between Charroi Naval and Kibuye, Niyitegeka ordered Interahamwe to undress the body of a woman who had just been shot dead, to fetch and sharpen a piece of wood, which he then instructed them to insert into her genitalia.	Niyitegeka, paras. 316 and 273.
11	This act was then carried out by the Interahamwe, in accordance with his instructions.	Niyitegeka, par. 316.
12	The body of the woman, with the piece of wood protruding from it, was left on the roadside for some three days thereafter. Niyitegeka referred to the woman as "Inyenzi" by which he meant to refer to Tutsi.	Niyitegeka, par. 316.
13	Within the area of Gisovu Tea Factory, Twumba Cellule, Gisovu Commune, Musema ordered the rape of Annunciata Mujawayezu, a Tutsi woman, and the cutting off of her breast to be fed to her son. She was in fact killed.	Musema, paras. 805 and 828.

15	On 13 April 1994 at approximately 10:00 a.m. Semanza directed a group of people to rape Tutsi women before killing them. Victim A was raped by one of the men in the group and that her cousin, Victim B, was taken outside and killed by two other men from the group.	Semanza, par. 261.
16	Ntenzireyerimye and Uyamuremye, members of the Interahamwe, mutilated a Tutsi girl named Nyiramburanga by cutting off her breast and then licking it, on the morning of 7 April 1994 in Rwankeri cellule.	Kajelijeli, par. 678.
17	Members of the Interahamwe, including Interahamwe from Mukingo commune and neighbouring areas committed rapes and sexual assaults in the Ruhengeri Préfecture between 7 and 10 April 1994.	Kajelijeli, par. 683.
20	The Interahamwe pierced Joyce's side and sexual organs with a spear, and then covered her dead body with her skirt.	Kajelijeli, par. 677.
21	A Tutsi woman was raped by members of the Interahamwe in Busogo Parish and in Kabyaza cellule on 7 April 1994, after having been stopped at a roadblock.	Kajelijeli, par. 679, 918.
22	The handicapped daughter of a Tutsi woman was raped and killed by members of the Interahamwe in Rukoma Cellule, Shiringo Secteur on 7 April 1994.	Kajelijeli, par. 680, 919.
23	A Tutsi woman was raped and sexually mutilated by members of the Interahamwe in Susa secteur, Kinigi commune on 7 April 1994.	Kajelijeli, par. 681, 920.
24	A Tutsi woman was raped by members of the Interahamwe in Susa secteur, Kinigi Commune on 10 April 1994.	Kajelijeli, par. 682, 921.
25	Many of the refugees who escaped or survived the attack at ETO (École Technique Officielle, in Kicukiro sector, Kicukiro Commune) headed in groups towards the Amahoro Stadium.	Rutaganda, paras. 262 and 300.
26	Some women were taken forcibly from the group and subsequently raped.	Rutaganda, par. 300.
27	Flanked on both sides by Interahamwe, approximately 4,000 refugees were then forcibly marched to Nyanza.	Rutaganda, par. 300.
28	At Nyanza, an attack took place on 11 April, in the late afternoon and into the evening. Many were killed in this attack.	Rutaganda, par. 301.
29	The Interahamwe then began killing people with clubs and other weapons.	Rutaganda, par. 301.
30	Some girls were selected, put aside, and raped before they were killed. Clothing had been removed from many of the women who were killed.	Rutaganda, par. 301.
33	On 7 April 1994 many Tutsi men, women and children were attacked and massacred at a place of shelter within the Mukingo commune, in this case the place known as Munyemvano's compound in Rwankeri cellule.	Kajelijeli, par. 597.
41	There was a meeting on the evening of 6 April 1994 following the death of the President, at the Canteen next to the Nkuli bureau communal.	Kajelijeli, par. 469.
42	Kajelijeli seized the leading role in the meeting, and addressed those persons present – who were all of Hutu ethnic origin. And he said to them "[Y]ou very well know that it was the Tutsi that killed – that brought down the Presidential plane. What are you waiting for to eliminate the enemy?"	Kajelijeli, par. 469.
43	By "the enemy", a witness present understood Kajelijeli to mean the Tutsi ethnic group.	Kajelijeli, par. 469.

4 4	After receiving information from Sendugu Shadrack that there were no weapons available to attack the population, Kajelijeli left the meeting with Deputy Brigadier Boniface Ntabareshya.	Kajelijeli, par. 469.
4 5	When he returned he informed those present that Major Bizabarumana had agreed to provide them with "equipment" at the commune the following morning.	Kajelijeli, par. 469.
4 6	Kajelijeli also promised to bring Interahamwe reinforcements from Mukingo commune for the attack on Kinyababa cellule.	Kajelijeli, par. 469.
4 9	Augustin Habiyambere and Sendugu Shadrack led an attack on the morning of the 7 April 1994, following the delivery of weapons from Mukamira camp in which approximately 100 young militants, including youth from Nkuli commune; recruits from Mukingo led by the CDR President from the Gitwa secteur, Iyakaremye; a group from the Rukoma Mountains; forces from Mukamira; and soldiers in civilian attire from IGA, attacked and killed approximately 12 families of Tutsis, numbering approximately 80 people, residing in Kinyababa cellule in Nkuli commune.	Kajelijeli, par. 487.
5 4	The attack at Busogo Hill, Rwankeri cellule, Mukingo commune, claimed the lives of many Tutsis.	Kajelijeli, paras. 544 and 549.
5 7	The Interahamwe attackers involved in the attack at Munyemvano's compound used traditional weapons, guns and grenades to slaughter their Tutsi victims.	Kajelijeli, par. 597.
5 8	There was a killing of a large number of Tutsis at the Convent at Busogo Parish on the morning of 7 April 1994. The number of bodies buried the following day is an indicator that approximately 300 people died in the attack.	Kajelijeli, par. 604.
5 9	Members of the Interahamwe were involved in the attack.	Kajelijeli, par. 604.
6 1	At the Ruhengeri Court of Appeal, Interahamwe, who were all Hutus, killed about three hundred Tutsis.	Kajelijeli, par. 622.
6 5	Tutsi civilians were killed at Musha church by soldiers, gendarmes, and Interahamwe militiamen on 13 April 1994. Semanza participated in this attack by gathering Interahamwe to take part in the attack and by directing the assailants to kill Tutsi refugees.	Semanza, par. 206.
6 6	In April 1994 there were attacks on mostly Tutsi, civilian refugees on Mwulire Hill.	Semanza, par. 224.
6 7	Semanza participated in the killings of Tutsi refugees on Mwulire Hill on 18 April 1994.	Semanza, par. 228.

1 28	At that meeting, Niyitegeka distributed the weapons to group representatives for use in killings in Bisesero.	Niyitegeka, par. 225.
1 29	Niyitegeka stated that the attack would take place the next day in Bisesero.	Niyitegeka, par. 225.

1 30	Niyitegeka presented the attack plan on a blackboard: a circle with "Bisesero" written in the circle. Around this circle were written the names of the designated leaders of each group of attackers and the points of departure for the five groups of attackers, which were Karongi, Rushishi, Kiziba, Gisiza and Murambi.	Niyitegeka, par. 225.
1 31	Niyitegeka encouraged people to participate in the attack, and was himself a leader for the Kiziba group.	Niyitegeka, par. 225.
1 33	This plan was carried out in the attack at Kiziba the next day against Tutsi in Bisesero, which attack was led by Niyitegeka and resulted in many victims amongst the Tutsi refugees.	Niyitegeka, par. 225.
1 34	On or about 18 June, Niyitegeka attended a meeting in the canteen of Kibuye Prefectural Office where he promised to supply gendarmes for the next day's attack and urged bourgmestres and others to do all they could to ensure participation in the attacks so that all the Tutsi in Bisesero could be killed. Another attack took place the next day as planned.	Niyitegeka, par. 229.

1 36	The Interahamwe were chanting: "Exterminate them, flush them out of the forest", meaning the Tutsi.	Niyitegeka, par. 232.
1 37	Niyitegeka told the audience that he had come so they could pool their efforts in overcoming the enemy, that is, the Tutsi, and promised they would get his contribution in due course. He promised that not less than a hundred Interahamwe would assist in the attacks against the Tutsi.	Niyitegeka, par. 232.
1 44	On 8 April 1994 in the morning, Semanza met Rugambarara and a group of Interahamwe in front of a certain house in Bicumbi commune. Semanza told the Interahamwe that a certain Tutsi family had not yet been killed, that no Tutsi should survive, and that the Tutsis should be sought out and killed.	Semanza, par. 271.
1 45	Later the same day, the Interahamwe searched a field near the house of the family mentioned by Semanza, found four members of that family, and killed them.	Semanza, par. 271.
1 46	As from an unspecified date in mid-April, a roadblock was erected by Interahamwe on the Avenue de la Justice near a traffic light not far from the entrance to the Amgar Garage at the Cyahafi Sector boundary, in Nyarugenge Commune of the Kigali-ville Préfecture.	Rutaganda, par. 225.
1 47	At the said roadblock, the Interahamwe checked the identity cards of those who crossed it and detained those who carried identity cards bearing the "Tutsi" ethnic reference or were otherwise considered as "Tutsi" because they had stated that they were not in possession of an identity card.	Rutaganda, par. 225.

Introduction

1. The trial in this case commenced on 19 September 2005, with the Prosecution calling its first witnesses. Pursuant to Count Five of the Indictment, the Accused are charged with the commission of the crime of rape as a crime against humanity.[1] It is not alleged that the Accused personally physically perpetrated the alleged rapes, but rather that they are responsible for the crime of rape by virtue of their superior responsibility[2] for those who physically perpetrated the rapes or, alternatively, by virtue of an extended form joint criminal enterprise theory.[3]

2. On 4 July 2005, the Prosecution disclosed the statements of 143 witnesses who, it was proposed, would testify on the issue of rape and sexual assault, as pled in Count Five of the Indictment. On 13 December 2005, the Chamber granted the Prosecution's request to remove fifty of those witnesses from its List, and ordered the Prosecution to file any motion seeking the admission of evidence in written form in lieu of oral testimony, as provided for by Rule 92 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, by 10 January 2006.[4] That deadline was subsequently extended to 20 February 2006.[5]

3. On that date, the Prosecution filed a Motion[6] seeking the following relief:

- The admission into evidence of the written statements of 63 purported rape witnesses, in lieu of them testifying orally, pursuant to Rule 92 bis (A) of the Rules.
- The admission into evidence of the transcripts of evidence of eight purported rape witnesses[7] in previous proceedings before this Tribunal, in lieu of them testifying orally, pursuant to Rule 92 bis (D) of the Rules.

4. The Prosecution submits that, in the event that the Chamber requires the witnesses in relation to whom it is seeking the admission of their evidence in written form to appear in person for the purposes of cross-examination, the Prosecution prefers to call each witness to give his or her evidence orally, in its entirety. In addition to the aforementioned evidence which it is seeking to have admitted in written form, the Prosecution intends to call 21 witnesses to give evidence on Count Five, orally.

5. The Motion is opposed by the Defence for Joseph Nzirorera,[8] as well as by the Defence for Mathieu Ngirumpatse, which adopts the submissions of the Nzirorera Defence.[9] In addition to opposing the Motion on its merits, the Defence seeks two further forms of relief: firstly, for the Chamber to grant the Defence an extension of time to respond fully to the merits of the Motion, in order for it to be able to investigate the material sought to be admitted with a view to establishing its unreliability; and, secondly, for the Chamber to exclude the evidence of all 72 witnesses and to make an order for the reduction of the Prosecution Witness List, accordingly, on the ground that an excessive number of witnesses is being proposed in relation to Count Five of the Indictment.

[2] Paragraph 70 of the Indictment alleges that the rapes were so widespread and systematic that the Accused knew or had reason to know that the Interahamwe and other militiamen were about to commit them or that they had committed them; that they had the material capacity to halt or prevent the rapes, or punish or sanction the perpetrators; but that they failed to do so.

[3] Paragraph 69 (and 7) of the Indictment alleges that the rapes were the natural and foreseeable consequence of the object of the joint criminal enterprise to destroy the Tutsi as a group, and that the Accused were aware that rape was the natural and foreseeable consequence of the joint criminal enterprise in which they knowingly and wilfully participated. See also paragraphs 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 14, 15 and 16 of the Indictment which also outline the general allegations of the joint criminal enterprise and relate to Count Five.

However, by Corrigendum dated 3 October 2006, the Prosecution withdrew its application for the admission of the evidence of one of those nine witnesses – Witness FAF (a.k.a. Applicable Law

General Requirements

6. Rule 92 bis of the Rules, entitled "Proof of Facts Other Than by Oral Evidence", bestows a discretionary power upon a Trial Chamber to admit, in whole or in part, the evidence of a witness in the form of a written statement (Sub-Rule (A)), or, where the witness has previously given evidence in proceedings before this Tribunal, in the form of a transcript of that evidence (Sub-Rule (D)), in lieu of oral testimony, on the condition that it goes to proof of a matter other than the acts and conduct of the accused as charged in the indictment.

7. In relation to written statements only, a further threshold requirement is provided for by Rule 92 bis (B), which outlines the formal requirements for the admission of written statements under the Rule. Furthermore, and with respect only to written statements, the Chamber is guided in the exercise of its discretion by the criteria for and against admission, set out in Rule 92 bis (A) (i) and (ii), respectively, which are non-exhaustive lists. The factors enumerated include "any other factors which make it appropriate for the witness to attend for cross-examination", which is a factor against the admission of evidence in written form.[10]

8. In relation to the admission of written statements, or transcripts of prior trial testimony under Rule 92*bis*, the general requirements of relevance and probative value, applicable to all types of evidence under Rule 89 (C), must also be satisfied.[11] Finally, after making a determination that a written statement or transcript of previous trial testimony is admissible in written form, Sub-Rule 92 bis (E) bestows a further discretionary power upon the Chamber to admit the witness' evidence in whole or in part, and/or to require the witness to appear for cross-examination. The exercise of the Chamber's discretion under Rule 92 bis, must be governed by the right of the Accused to a fair trial, as provided for in Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute.

The meaning of the phrase "acts and conduct of the accused"

9. The meaning of the term "acts and conduct of the accused as charged in the indictment" has been defined by the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia ("ICTY"), particularly in relation to cases such as the one before the Chamber, in which the accused are charged with criminal responsibility for the physical acts of subordinates and/or co-perpetrators.

10. The jurisprudence states that the term is a plain expression and should be given its ordinary meaning: deeds and behaviour of the accused himself and not the acts and conduct of his co-perpetrators and/or subordinates.[12] The Appeals Chamber Decision in Galić is the leading Appeals Chamber authority on the interpretation of Rule 92 bis.[13] That Decision held that Rule 92 bis excludes the acts and conduct of the Accused as charged in the Indictment which establish his responsibility for the acts and conduct of others, but does not exclude the acts and conduct of others for which the [13] Prosecutor v. Galić, Case N°IT-98-29-AR73.2, Decision on Interlocutory Appeal Concerning Rule 92 bis (C) (AC), 7 June 2002. In fact the authority of the Galić Decision in relation to the meaning of the term "acts and conduct of the accused" was recently recalled by the Appeals Chamber in its Decision in this case concerning judicial notice. See Prosecutor v. Karemera et al., Case N°ICTR-98-44-AR73(C), Decision on Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of Decision on Judicial Notice, 16 June 2006, para. 52.

Accused is alleged to be responsible, for example, the acts and conduct of his co-perpetrators or subordinates.[14]

11. According to the jurisprudence, Rule 92 bis (A) (and by analogy Rule 92 bis (D)) excludes any written statement (or transcript) which goes to the proof of any act or conduct of the accused upon which the prosecution relies to establish: (1) that the accused personally physically perpetrated any of the crimes charged himself or herself; or (2) that he planned, instigated or ordered the crimes charged; or (3) that he otherwise aided and abetted those who actually did commit the crimes in their planning, preparation or execution of those crimes; or (4) that he was a superior to those who actually did commit the crimes; or (5) that he knew or had reason to know that those crimes were about to be or had been committed by his subordinates; or (6) that he failed to take reasonable steps to prevent such acts or to punish those who carried out those acts.[15]

12. The proximity to the accused of the acts and conduct which are described in the written statement or transcript is relevant to the exercise of the Trial Chamber's discretion in deciding whether the evidence should be admitted in written form at all.[16] In cases alleging command responsibility and where the crimes charged involve widespread criminal conduct by the alleged subordinates of the accused, there is often but a short step from a finding that the acts constituting the crimes charged were committed by such subordinates to a finding that the accused knew or had reason to know that those crimes were about to be or had been committed by them.[17] In such cases, it may well be that the alleged subordinates of the accused are so proximate to the accused that

> "the evidence of their acts and conduct which the prosecution seeks to prove by a Rule 92 bis statement becomes sufficiently pivotal to the prosecution case that it would not be fair to the accused to permit the evidence to be given in written form".[18]

13. Where the Prosecution case is that an accused participated in a joint criminal enterprise, and is therefore liable for the acts of others in that joint criminal enterprise, Rule 92 bis also excludes any written statement or transcript which goes to proof of any act or conduct of the accused upon which the prosecution relies to establish that he had participated in that joint criminal enterprise, or that he shared with the person who actually did commit the crimes charged the requisite intent for those crimes.[19] Again, the proximity to the accused of the acts and conduct which are described in the written statement is relevant to the exercise of the Trial Chamber's discretion in deciding whether the evidence should be admitted in written form at all. Where the individual, whose acts and conduct are described in the statement or transcript is proximate to the accused and where the evidence is pivotal to the Prosecution case, the Trial Chamber may decide not to admit the statement or transcript at all.[20]

Cross-examination of the Witness

14. According to Rule 92 bis (A) (ii) (c), a factor against admitting evidence in the form of a written statement is whether there are any other factors which make it appropriate for the witness to attend for cross-examination. In the Galić case, the Appeals Chamber considered that in some instances,

> "the absence of the opportunity to cross-examine the maker of the statement would in fairness preclude the use of the statement in any event".[21]

15. In addition to considering the issue of cross-examination as relevant for the admission of a statement under Rule 92 bis (A), the Chamber has a discretionary power to decide whether to require the witness to appear for cross-examination, under Rule 92 bis (E). As the Galić Appeals Chamber said,

> … the fact that [a] written statement goes to proof of the acts and conduct of a subordinate of the accused or of some other person for whose acts and conduct the accused is charged with responsibility does, however, remain relevant to the Trial Chamber's decision under Rule 92 bis. That is because such a decision also involves a further determination as to whether the maker of the statement should appear for cross-examination [under Rule 92 bis (E)].

In that regard, the proximity to the accused of the acts and conduct which are described in the written statement sought to be admitted is also relevant to the exercise of the Trial Chamber's discretion in deciding whether to require the witness to appear for cross-examination.

16. The principal consideration for determining whether a witness should appear for cross-examination is the overriding obligation of a Chamber to ensure a fair trial under Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute. In that regard, among the matters for consideration are whether the statement or transcript goes to proof of a critical element of the Prosecution's case against the accused.[22] Cross-examination shall be granted if the statement touches upon a critical element of the Prosecution's case, or goes to a live and important issue between the parties, as opposed to peripheral or marginally relevant issue.[23]

Application of Rule 92 bis to the Material Before the Trial Chamber

17. The Chamber will now consider the substance of the materials sought to be admitted in the light of Rule 92 bis, the relevant jurisprudence, and the Parties' submissions.

18. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber finds that the formal requirements of Rule 92 bis (B) have been met with respect to all 63 statements sought to be admitted under Rule 92 bis (A). This finding is supported by the submissions of both Parties.

19. Having reviewed all of the material sought to be admitted, the Chamber notes that none of the rapes and/or sexual assaults alleged are alleged to have been physically perpetrated by any of the Accused in this case. Rather, all of the rapes and/or sexual assaults are alleged to have been physically perpetrated by Interahamwe and militiamen, and not by any of the Accused in this case.

20. However, according to the forms of liability pleaded in the Indictment (as outlined in paragraph one of this Decision, and the footnotes thereto) the evidence is to be relied upon to prove that rapes were committed on a widespread and systematic basis by the Accused's subordinates and/or co-perpetrators. These allegations are so pivotal to the Prosecution's case that it would be unfair to the Accused to permit the evidence to be given in written form without an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses.

21. The Prosecution Motion falls to be rejected. There is therefore no need for the Chamber to rule upon the Defence's application for extension of time in order to be able to conduct investigations with a view to making a factual demonstration of the unreliability of the material sought to be admitted.

Defence Motion for Order Reducing Prosecution Witness List Pursuant to Rule 73 bis (D)

22. The Defence submits that the Trial Chamber should exclude the evidence sought to be admitted under Rule 92 bis of the Rules, in its entirety, by means of an order pursuant to Rule 73 bis (D) of the Rules.[24] The Prosecutor opposes this application. It finds difficult to conclude that the testimony of 93 witnesses is excessive given the massive scale of the rapes alleged in the Indictment. It submits that, since the Indictment alleges the rape of Tutsi women and girls over the course of three months in five different préfectures, the proposed number of 93 witnesses amounts to an average of approximately six witnesses to testify to the rapes, per month, per préfecture[25] – a number which the Prosecutor contends is not excessive.

23. According to Rule 73 bis (D) of the Rules, the Trial Chamber or the designated Judge may order the Prosecutor to reduce the number of witnesses, if it considers that an excessive number of witnesses are being called to prove the same facts.[26]

24. In this case, the Trial Chamber has thus far declined the Defence's request for an order that the Prosecution reduce its Witness List.[27] In its Decision of 13 December 2005, the Chamber noted the Prosecution's intention to file a request seeking admission of written statements for 86 witnesses in lieu of their oral testimony, and therefore found that it was "premature for the Chamber to order the Prosecution to reduce the number of witnesses it intends to call."[28]

25. Now, as a result of the Chamber's finding in the present Decision rejecting the Prosecution's application for admission of written statements, the Prosecution Witness List will include 93 witnesses to be called to testify on the rape allegations. Considering the particular circumstances of the case, the Chamber is of the view that this number should be drastically reduced.

26. In order to justify the number of witnesses to be called to prove Count Five, the Prosecution offers a mode of calculation based on average of approximately six witnesses to testify to the rapes, per month, per préfecture.[29] Should this formula be strictly applied to the allegations as set forth in the Indictment, the Chamber notes that, contrary to the Prosecution's assertion, no more than some 36 witnesses only should be called to testify. The Indictment alleges the commission of rapes in each préfecture for a substantially reduced period than the Prosecutor claims: rapes were allegedly committed in Ruhengeri and Butare préfectures over a period of two weeks (respectively, from early to mid April; and from mid to late April); in Kigali-ville for one month (April); in Kibuye for two [24] Rule 73 bis (D) provides: "The Trial Chamber or the designated Judge may order the Prosecutor to reduce the number of witnesses, if it considers that an excessive number of witnesses are being called to prove the same facts".

[25] So that the calculation is six witnesses, multiplied by five préfectures, multiplied by three months (6 x 5 x 3), which equals a total of ninety witnesses. The Prosecution Witness List currently lists 93 witnesses on the Count of Rape as a Crime Against Humanity – 21 to be called to testify orally, and 72 in respect of whom this application is brought.
[26] See Bagosora et al., Case N°ICTR-98-41-T, Order for Reduction of Prosecutor's Witness List (TC), 8 April 2003: the Trial Chamber I ordered proprio motu the Prosecution to reduce its witness list from 235 to 100 witnesses.
[27] Prosecutor v. Karemera et al., Case N°98-44-T, Decision on Variance of the Prosecution Witness List, 13 December 2005, para. 20.
[28] Ibidem.

months (May and June) and in Gitarama for two months (April and May), and not over the course of three months in each préfecture as the Prosecution submits to justify a number of 93 witnesses.

27. The Chamber recalls that in its Decision of 13 December 2005, it denied the Defence's submission to reduce the witness list because, at that time, it received information from the Prosecution that only seven witnesses were supposed to be called to give oral evidence on Count Five of the Indictment, related to the rape allegations.[30] Then, the Prosecution indicated its intention to call 21 witnesses to give oral testimony on this Count and sought the admission of written statements of 72 witnesses on the premise that their evidence would be of a cumulative nature. The Chamber also recalls that the Prosecution has acknowledged on prior occasions that its list is too long and has expressed its intention to reduce the number of witnesses as the trial progresses. In that respect, the Prosecution's Motion for judicial notice was sought to reduce the evidence to be orally heard during this trial and, in its Decision of even date, the Chamber has taken judicial notice of adjudicated facts concerning rapes committed in Gitarama, Kibuye, Kigali-rural, Ruhengeri and Kigali-ville prefectures.

28. In view of the particular circumstances of the case, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution Witness List is excessive and should be drastically reduced with respect to the number of witnesses proposed to give evidence on Count Five of the Indictment. In reaching this conclusion, the Chamber has had regard to: (i) the number of witnesses currently proposed to be called on this Count; (ii) the factual elements that the Prosecution has to establish; (iii) the application of the Prosecution's own formula in submitting to the Chamber that the current number of witnesses is not excessive; (iv) that the use of excessive witnesses wastes judicial resources and time and compromises the administration of justice and the rights of the accused, and (v) that by Decision of even date, the Chamber has taken judicial notice of a number of adjudicated facts concerning rape and sexual assault.

FOR THOSE REASONS

THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Prosecution's Motion in its entirety; and hereby ORDERS the Prosecution, pursuant to Rule 73 bis (D) of the Rules, to drastically reduce the number of witnesses being called to give evidence of rape and sexual assault in relation to Count Five of the Indictment and to file, as soon as possible, with the Chamber, and disclose to the Defence of each of the Accused, a revised Witness List.

Introduction

1. The Defence for Joseph Nzirorera moves the Chamber, pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute of the Tribunal, to request the cooperation of the Government of Rwanda in obtaining "a copy of a videotape of MRND rallies in Gisenyi which was introduced during the trial of MRND President Wellars Banyi in Gisenyi…".[1]

Discussion

[1] Prosecutor v. Karemera et al., Case N°ICTR-98-44-T, "Joseph Nzirorera's Motion for Request for Cooperation to Government of Rwanda: MRND Videotape", 20 November 2006, para. 1. The Defence goes on to state that "[t]he tape is referred to in the judgement of the court delivered on 21 February 2001. Mr Banzi's case number is RP221/R/2000."

2. Article 28 of the Tribunal's Statute provides that States shall cooperate with the Tribunal in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violations of international humanitarian law. It further provides that States shall comply with any request for assistance or order issued by a Trial Chamber, including, inter alia, for the taking of testimony and production of evidence, without undue delay.[2]

3. According to the jurisprudence of this Tribunal, the criteria to be satisfied by the party seeking an order for State cooperation under Article 28 of the Statute are: (i) the party seeking the material must specifically identify, to the extent possible, the material sought; (ii) the party must articulate its relevance to the trial; and (iii) the party must show that its efforts to obtain the documents have been unsuccessful.[3]

4. The Chamber considers that the Defence for Nzirorera has identified the material sought with the requisite specificity. Furthermore, the Parties' filings demonstrate that both the Parties, and the Rwandan authorities, have a clear understanding of the material sought, and that it is, or has been, in existence.

5. The Chamber is also satisfied that that the material is relevant to the trial. The MRND meeting at Umuganda Stadium in October 1993 is alleged in paragraph 25.2 of the Indictment and has been the subject of the testimony of two Prosecution witnesses.[4] The Chamber notes that Prosecution Witness XBM referred to the videotape in question, and that he acknowledged having seen it, during his testimony before this Trial Chamber.[5] Therefore the Chamber considers that any recording of what actually transpired at the rally is relevant to the case before it.

6. Finally, the Chamber is satisfied that both the Prosecution and the Defence have made efforts to obtain the material through other avenues and that, to date, those efforts have been unsuccessful in securing a copy of the videotape.[6] The Chamber notes that the first evidence of efforts to secure this material was in May 2006, yet the videotape has not been obtained.

[6] As regards the Defence's efforts, the Chamber notes the correspondence between Nzirorera and the Rwandan authorities annexed to the Defence Motion in which the Defence requests a copy of the videotape: (1) Letter dated 10 August 2006 from Defence Counsel Peter Robinson to Rwandan Prosecutor General Martin Ngoga; and (2) Email dated 7 November 2006 from Defence Counsel Peter Robinson to Mr Ngoga's assistant. The Chamber also notes Mr Robinson's assertion that he met with Rwandan Prosecutor General Martin Ngoga, in Kigali, Rwanda, on 11 October 2006, during which meeting he again requested a copy of the videotape and was advised that a copy of the tape would be made available to him within a week, but that when he returned to collect it, he was told it was not ready.
As regards the Prosecution's efforts, the Chamber accepts the Prosecution's submissions that a request for the tape was first made on 31 May 2006 and again on 14 June 2006; that Prosecution investigators in Kigali reported that they had personally met Mr. Emmanuel Rukangira at the Kigali Prosecutor's Office and that he undertook to make the tape available as soon as it was located; that the same request was also made personally to the Rwandan Prosecutor General, Mr. Martin Ngoga; that the Prosecutor General confirmed that the tape had been sent to the Parquet General's Office in Kigali and that he was undertaking efforts to locate it; and that the Prosecution has since sent reminders to the Rwandan authorities, some of which correspondence is annexed to the Prosecution Response (email dated 24 November 2006). In the email of 24 November, from a Mohammed Ayat to the Prosecutor, the writer states that "the videotape seems to be in Mr. Emmanuel Rukangira's office (Emmanuel Rukangira is a Senior Prosecutor with National Jurisdiction). Unfortunately, Mr. Rukangira is currently on

7. Finding that the Defence has satisfied the criteria for a request to the Government of Rwanda, pursuant to Article 28 of the Statute, the Chamber considers that it is in the interests of justice to make such a request. Finally, with respect to the Prosecution's submission that the Office of the Prosecutor and the Rwandan authorities concerned have made good faith efforts to obtain the tape without success, and that there has been no reluctance or lack of cooperation on the part of the Rwandan authorities, the Chamber notes that no absence of good faith is implied in the Chamber formally seeking the cooperation of Rwandan authorities to secure a copy of the videotape in question. However, the Chamber considers that a formal request for the assistance of the Rwandan authorities may assist in expediting these inquiries.

FOR THOSE REASONS

THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Defence Motion; and hereby

Introduction

1. The proceedings in the instant case commenced on 19 September 2005. While the fourth trial session of the Prosecution's case was ongoing, the Defence for Nzirorera moved the Chamber to prohibit, with immediate effect, the Prosecution from "proofing" its witnesses before they testify.[1] To support its application, it relied upon a Decision rendered by Pre-Trial Chamber I of the International Criminal Court ("ICC") in the Dyilo case and requested the Chamber to apply the same standards.[2] The Defence for Ngirumpatse joins the application and the Prosecution opposes the Motion.[3]

Deliberations

2. In order to address the Defence Motions, the Chamber will first provide an analysis of the ICC Decision (1), then it will address the practice at the ad hoc Tribunals (2) and finally the practice of the Prosecution in this case (3).

1. Comments on the Dyilo Decision

3. On 8 November 2006, the Pre-Trial Chamber of the ICC ruled upon whether the practice of proofing witnesses as described by the Prosecution in the Dyilo case was admissible in proceedings before the ICC. In reaching its finding, the Pre-Trial Chamber applied the standards of applicable law as set out in Article 21 of its Statute.[4]

4. The Pre-Trial Chamber divided the notion of "witness proofing" as described by the ICC Prosecution in that case into two components of goals and measures. The Pre-Trial Chamber defined the first component, labelled "witness familiarization" by the Pre-Trial Chamber, as

> "a series of arrangements to familiarise the witnesses with the layout of the Court, the sequence of events that is likely to take place when the witness is giving testimony, and the different responsibilities of the various participants at the hearing".[5]

The Pre-Trial Chamber found that this first component, "witness familiarization", was not only admissible but also mandatory under the ICC Statute.[6] Furthermore, in the Pre-Trial Chamber's view,

The Defence for Nzirorera also orally requested the Chamber to take interim measures prohibiting witness proofing until such a time it will have delivered its decision. The Chamber denied this application for interim measures but reduced the time-limits for the Prosecution to file its response (see T. 14 November 2006).
[4] Dyilo Decision, paras. 7-9. ICC Statute, Article 21 (Applicable law):
1. The Court shall apply:
(a) In the first place, this Statute, Elements of Crimes and its Rules of Procedure and Evidence;
(b) In the second place, where appropriate, applicable treaties and the principles and rules of international law, including the established principles of the international law of armed conflict;
(c) Failing that, general principles of law derived by the Court from national laws of legal systems of the world including, as appropriate, the national laws of States that would normally exercise jurisdiction over the crime, provided that those principles are not inconsistent with this Statute and with international law and internationally recognized norms and standards.
2. The Court may apply principles and rules of law as interpreted in its previous decisions.
3. The application and interpretation of law pursuant to this article must be consistent with internationally recognized human rights, and be without any adverse distinction founded on grounds such as gender as defined in article 7, paragraph 3, age, race, colour, language, religion or belief, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, wealth, birth or other status.
[5] Dyilo Decision, para. 15.
[6] Dyilo Decision, paras. 14 and 15. These goals and measures encompass:
Assisting the witness testifying with the full comprehension of the Court proceedings, its participants and their respective roles, freely and without fear, through the following measures:
i. To provide the witness with an opportunity to acquaint him/herself with the Prosecution's Trial Lawyer and other whom may examine the witness in Court;

> "the [Witnesses and Victims Unit], in consultation with the party that proposes the relevant witness, is the organ of the Court competent to carry out the practice of witness familiarisation from the moment the witness arrives at the seat of the Court to give oral testimony".[7]

5. The Pre-Trial Chamber described the second component of the notion of witness proofing advanced by the ICC Prosecution as measures to review the witness' evidence

> "by inter alia (i) allowing the witness to read his or her statement, (ii) refreshing his or her memory in respect of evidence that he or she will give at the confirmation hearing, and (iii) putting to the witness the very same questions and in the very same orders as they will be asked during the testimony of the witness".[8]

The Pre-Trial Chamber found that this second component was not covered by any provision of the Statute, the Rules or the Regulations.[9] It also considered that the ICC Prosecution failed to prove that the goals and measures described under the second component of witness proofing were widely accepted as practice in international criminal law.[10] It observed that the Prosecution did not put forward any jurisprudence from the ICTR authorising the practice of witness proofing as defined by the Prosecution, and it considered that the sole ICTY Decision rendered in the Limaj case did not regulate in detail the content of the practice of witness proofing.[11] The Pre-Trial Chamber also considered that the Prosecution's submission that the practice of witness proofing as defined in the Prosecution Information is a special feature of proceedings carried out before international adjudicatory bodies due to the particular character of the crimes over which such bodies have jurisdiction is also unsupported.[12]

6. In accordance with Article 21 of its Statute, the Pre-Trial Chamber then sought to determine whether the second component of the definition could be embraced by

> "general principles of law derived by the Court from national laws of legal systems of the world including, as appropriate, the national laws of States that would normally exercise jurisdiction over the crime, provided that those principles are not inconsistent with this Statute and with international law and internationally recognized norms and standards".[13]

7. The Pre-Trial Chamber observed that this second component would be either unethical or unlawful in jurisdictions as different as Brazil, Spain, France, Belgium, Germany, Scotland, Ghana, England and Wales and Australia, whereas in other national jurisdictions, particularly in the United States of America, the practice of witness proofing along the lines advanced by the Prosecution is well accepted, and at times even considered professional good practice.[14] The Pre-Trial Chamber particularly emphasised that the second component of the practice as described by the ICC Prosecution would be in direct breach of the professional standards of the Code of Conduct of the Bar Council of England and Wales that the ICC Prosecution had expressly undertaken to comply with.[15] In light of these circumstances, the Pre-Trial Chamber concluded that > the second component of the definition of the practice of witness proofing advanced by the Prosecution is not embraced by any general principle of law that can be derived from the national laws of the legal systems of the world.[16] On the contrary, if any general principle of law were to be derived from the national laws of the legal systems of the world on this particular matter, it would be the duty of the Prosecution to refrain from undertaking the [above-mentioned] practice of witness proofing".[17]

8. In this Chamber's view, the process by which the Dyilo Chamber came to its decision is not based on a comprehensive knowledge of the established practice of the ad hoc Tribunals, which is justified by the particularities of these proceedings that differentiate them from national criminal proceedings, as explained hereinafter. This was also recently reiterated in the Milutinovic et al. case, where the Trial Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for Former Yugoslavia ("ICTY") denied a Defence application seeking the Chamber to apply the exact same standards set out in the Dyilo Decision.[18]

2. Practice of the Ad Hoc Tribunals and the Rights of the Accused

9. Both this Tribunal and the ICTY have consistently allowed the practice of pre-testimony interviews of witnesses for the better administration of justice, in the particular context of their proceedings, and to reduce any element of surprise to the Defence. This practice is in accordance with the Appeals Chamber's finding that each party has the right to interview a potential witness.[19]

10. The practice of witness familiarization not only poses no undue prejudice, but is also a useful and permissible practice.[20] As the Milutinovic Trial Chamber recently recalled, there is no reason for limiting witness familiarization to the Witnesses and Victims Support Section of the Tribunal.[21]

11. Although it has not been the subject of specific case-law at the ICTR, witness preparation has been recognized in the jurisprudence in relation to how the content of an interview with a witness is to be disclosed. The Prosecution has developed a practice of disclosing "will-say" or "reconfirmation statements" prior to the testimony of a witness. Contrary to Mathieu Ngirumpatse' assertions, this practice has been sanctioned by the Tribunal's jurisprudence.[22] In the Simba case, Trial Chamber I defined a will-say statement as

> "a communication from one party to the other party and the Chamber anticipating that a witness will testify about matters that were not mentioned in previously disclosed witness statements."[23]

Trial Chambers have considered that will-say statements are in conformity with the Prosecution's obligations under Rule 67 (D) of the Rules of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence which require each party to promptly notify the opposing party and the Chamber of the discovery and existence of additional evidence, information and materials that should have been produced earlier pursuant to the Rules.[24] The will-say statement generally supplements or elaborates on information previously disclosed to the Defence, but it may also bring new elements of which the Defence was not put on notice. Although it is not acceptable for the Prosecution to mould its case against the Accused in the course of the trial, it must be admitted that a witness may recall and add details to his or her prior statements. As explained by Trial Chamber I in the Bagosora et al. case

> […] witness statements from witnesses who saw and experienced events over many months which may be of interest to this Tribunal, may not be complete. Some witnesses only answered questions put to them by investigators whose focus may have been on persons other than the accused rather than volunteering all the information of which they are aware.[25]

12. While this practice cannot be considered as permission to train, coach or tamper a witness before he or she gives evidence, the content of these statements under Rule 67 (D) encompasses much of the elements described in the second component of witness proofing in the Dyilo Decision.

13. The ICTY has also developed a consistent practice of "witness proofing". An overview of recent proceedings before the ICTY shows that preparing witnesses, including the practice of putting questions to the witness concerning contradictions between prior statements, is an entire part of the proceedings.[26] In the Limaj et al. case, the Trial Chamber denied a Defence Motion seeking that the Prosecution cease "proofing" witnesses with immediate effect.[27] The Trial Chamber noted that the practice of proofing witnesses, by both parties, has been in place and accepted since the inception of the Tribunal. It also noted that "[i]t is a widespread practice in jurisdictions where there is an adversary procedure". The Limaj Chamber considered that this practice has a number of advantages for the due functioning of the judicial process.

14. Recently, in the Milutinovic et al. case, the Trial Chamber reaffirmed that > "discussions between a party and a potential witness regarding his or her evidence can, in fact, enhance the fairness and expeditiousness of the trial, provided that these discussions are a genuine attempt to clarify a witness' evidence".[28]

It considered that "the process by which the Dyilo Chamber came to its decisions [was] not applicable to [its] determination of the issue".[29] Considering the situation at the ICTY, which in view of the Milutinovic Chamber is radically different than the Dyilo case,[30] the Milutinovic Chamber found that "reviewing a witness' evidence prior to testimony is a permissible practice under the law of the Tribunal and, moreover, does not per se prejudice the rights of the Accused".[31]

15. Under these circumstances, this Chamber is satisfied that a practice of preparing witnesses before they testify has developed and has been sanctioned by both ad hoc Tribunals. Provided that it does not amount to the manipulation of a witness' evidence, this practice may encompass preparing and familiarizing a witness with the proceedings before the Tribunal, comparing prior statements made by a witness, detecting differences and inconsistencies in recollection of the witness, allowing a witness to refresh his or her memory in respect of the evidence he or she will give, and inquiring and disclosing to the Defence additional information and/or evidence of incriminatory or exculpatory nature in sufficient time prior to the witness' testimony. It is also admitted that "the practice of witness familiarization not only poses no undue prejudice, but is also a useful and permissible practice".[32]

16. In that respect, the Chamber notes that there are clear standards of professional conduct and ethics which apply to Prosecuting Counsel when conducting interviews. According to the Prosecutor's Regulations N°2, the members of the Office of the Prosecutor can be regarded as permanent officers of the court who are "to serve and protect the public interest, including the interests of the international community, victims and witnesses, and to respect the fundamental rights of the suspects and accused" and are "not knowingly to make an incorrect statement of material fact to the Tribunal or offer evidence which Prosecution Counsel knows to be incorrect of false".[33]

17. The practice of reviewing a witness' evidence prior to testimony is consistent with the specificities of the proceedings before the ad hoc Tribunals and may contribute to a proper administration of justice in different circumstances: crimes charged in the indictment occurred many years ago and, in many cases, witness interviews took place a long time ago; matters that were relevant during the course of the investigations may need to be reviewed in light of the case the Prosecution intends to present; there might be differences of perception between the Prosecution investigator and Counsel who is going to lead the witness' evidence in court; the duration of the proceedings and the time elapsed between prior testimonies may require further interviews with a witness before he or she testifies and reduce the effect of surprise to the Defence in cases where the witness recollects elements that were not previously disclosed.[34]

18. This positive effect of meeting a witness before he or she testifies was even acknowledged by the Defence in the present case. The Defence for Nzirorera has requested several times to meet with Prosecution witnesses in order to better prepare its cross-examination and expedite the proceedings.[35] A recent example is that it met with Prosecution Witness GK a few weeks before his anticipated testimony, after the witness had arrived at the Tribunal to testify, and questioned the witness about some discrepancies with testimony in another case and a prior statement.[36] The witness was given an opportunity to explain these discrepancies.

19. In its Motion, the Defence contends that the Prosecution's practice of witness proofing in this case has created many problems of late disclosure and admission of evidence outside the scope of the Indictment.

20. The Chamber is not persuaded that reviewing a witness' evidence prior to testimony necessarily contributes to adduce evidence on matters outside the scope of the Indictment. In any event, should a witness recall and add details to his or her prior statements during the review of his or her evidence, several remedies are possible such as providing additional time to the Defence for its preparation or, where appropriate, the exclusion of the evidence.[37] Each time, the Chamber will apply the appropriate remedy on a case-by-case basis in conformity with the rights of the Accused, including the right to be tried without undue delay. The Chamber, however, considers that the Prosecution should give notice at the earliest possible date of any additional information the witness is likely to provide during testimony.[38]

3. "Witness Proofing" in the Present Case

21. The Defence for Ngirumpatse claims that, in the present case, the witnesses are actually prepared to recite their testimonies in court that they learnt from the Prosecution. In its view, witness proofing amounts to tampering with the witness and moulding the evidence against the Accused. The Prosecution explicitly "rebuts any suggestion or implication that the pre-trial interview is used to train, coach, and tamper with or in any manner whatsoever, to mould its case against the Accused".

22. While the Defence may query and challenge how the Prosecution prepares its witnesses before he or she testifies, the allegations of tampering with witnesses made by the Defence of Ngirumpatse are serious allegations and making them without any evidence to support or justify them is discourteous at the very least. On the contrary, the Chamber notes that several witnesses have been cross-examined on the conduct of the pre-trial interview and there has been no evidential basis to support such allegations. There is, however, no need to expunge Ngirumpatse's submissions from the Tribunal's record as requested by the Prosecution.[39]

23. As the Pre-Trial Chamber of the ICC stated, the expression "witness proofing" may encompass various practices which are not necessarily unlawful.[40] Neither the Defence nor the Prosecution provide detailed information as to how the Prosecution prepares its witnesses in this case before calling them to testify. According to disclosures of will-say statements and notices under Rule 67 (D) in this case, the Chamber finds that there is a consistent practice by the Prosecution which consists of comparing statements made by a witness, detecting differences and inconsistencies in recollection of the witness, allowing a witness to refresh his or her memory in respect of the evidence he or she will give, inquiring and disclosing to the Defence additional information and/or evidence of incriminatory or exculpatory nature in sufficient time prior to the witness' testimony.[41] It is not shown by the Defence, nor does it transpire from the said disclosures that the Prosecution puts to the witness the exact questions to be asked during his or her testimony.

24. The Prosecution is presumed to act in good faith[42] and in accordance with standards of professional conduct and ethics. Failure by the Defence to show the contrary, the Chamber is not satisfied that any meeting held prior to the testimony of the witnesses were not in conformity with the established practice.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER DENIES the Defence Motions.

Introduction

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. During the third trial session, the Defence for each Accused and the Prosecution applied to call Joseph Serugendo as a witness for their respective cases.[1] The Chamber made no decision on these applications. At that time, there were serious concerns regarding Mr. Serugendo's health and whether or not it was possible or even feasible for him to testify.[2] The Registrar had already provided a medical report,[3] but the Chamber considered that it needed further information in order to address the parties' applications and it requested the Registrar to inform the Chamber and the parties of Mr. Serugendo's current state of health and physical and psychological ability to testify, including via video-link, or to make a deposition.[4]

2. On 26 June 2006, the Registrar informed the Chamber that the Medical Officer concluded that Mr. Serugendo was not in a condition to undergo an interrogation, either by live testimony or through a deposition.[5] At the last day of the third trial session, after the parties reiterated their requests, the Chamber noted that according to the last updated information provided by the Registrar, there had been no improvement in Serugendo's condition.[6] The Chamber therefore considered that no order could be made at that time.[7] On 22 August 2006, Joseph Serugendo succumbed to his illness and passed away.

3. The Prosecutor now requests the Chamber to admit an abridged statement ("Abridged Statement") from Joseph Serugendo pursuant to Rule 89 (C) or Rule 92 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.[8] On 27 June 2006, Prosecution Counsel accompanied by a judicial officer appointed by the Registry, met Mr. Serugendo who verified the content of his prior statement and also reviewed the Abridged Statement. This document consists of a bi-lingual composite text of 40 pages,[9] composed of extracts from an original statement of Joseph Serugendo which was disclosed to the parties on 12 June 2006.[10]

Discussion

Preliminary Issue- Witness List

4. On 30 May 2006, the Prosecution stated that it intended to make a motion to vary its witness list to include Mr. Serugendo. In an oral decision on the same day, the Chamber ordered that any application to add him to the witness list should be made forthwith.[11] On 13 June 2006, after learning that Mr. Serugendo was suffering from a fatal illness, the Defence for Nzirorera asserted its wish to have Mr. Serugendo testify on its behalf,[12] and made a motion on 19 June 2006 for him to be called as a Defence witness out of order.[13] In response to the Chamber's query, the Prosecution admitted that the decision had not yet been made to call Mr. Serugendo as a Prosecution witness due to the state of his health and potential quality of his testimony.[14] On 20 June 2006, the Prosecution made an oral motion to have Serugendo added to its witness list, and the Chamber deferred its decision until it received more information from the Registrar concerning Mr. Serugendo's health.[15] The Defence for Nzirorera did not oppose the motion and asked that it be granted.[16]

5. Since both parties were in agreement that Mr. Serugendo should testify and the Prosecution's eventual motion to add him to the witness list was not in controversy, the Chamber finds this issue should not prevent the full evaluation of the present Motion.

Admission Pursuant to Rule 92bis

6. The Prosecution claims that its application is motivated by a concern to make Serugendo's evidence available to this Trial Chamber "in whatever form possible". It submits that, in accordance with Rule 92 bis, the Abridged Statement excludes direct and indirect references to the acts or conducts of the Accused.

7. All three Accused oppose the Motion because there will be no cross-examination on matters so proximate to the Accused that its admission would be unfair. Specifically, the Defence points to specific paragraphs in the Abridged Statement that go to the acts and conducts of the Accused, making the statement ineligible for admission pursuant to Rule 92 bis.

8. Rule 92 bis provides that a witness statement can be admitted in lieu of oral testimony, if it satisfies certain criteria laid out in the Rule.[17] A threshold requirement is that the evidence must go to proof of the matter other than the acts and conduct of the Accused.[18] That is, a written statement upon which the prosecution relies to establish (a) that the accused committed (that is, personally physically perpetrated) any of the crimes charged himself or herself; or (2) that he planned, instigated or ordered the crimes charged; or (3) that he otherwise aided and abetted those who actually did commit the crimes in their planning, preparation or execution of those crimes; or (4) that he was a superior to those who actually did commit the crimes; or (5) that he knew or had reason to know that those crimes were about to be or had been committed by his subordinates; or (6) that he failed to take reasonable steps to prevent such acts or to punish those who carried out those acts.[19]

9. The Prosecution submits that the Abridged Statement deals with four substantive issues: RTLM as a vehicle of the MRND; The Structure of the Interahamwe za MRND; the role of the MRND in the Interim government; and the "pacification" tour of 10 April 1994", and that the Accused are not mentioned by name. Although that is accurate, perusal of the Abridged Statement indicates that the acts and conduct of the Accused are often the subject matter of its contents. Throughout the Abridged Statement, the Accused were implicitly referred to in a variety of ways, such as "certain personalities of the government and the MRND party"[20], "MRND Party Leadership"[21], "MRND authorities"[22], "Senior Officials of the MRND Party"[23], and "Interim Government"[24]. An Accused need not be specifically named for statements to be held as going to the acts or conduct of the Accused[25], and in this case, it is the Prosecution's assertions that the Accused committed the crimes charged "by using their power and authority as high level MRND political party leaders and their status as current or former ministers of government to recruit, indoctrinate, arm, train, and mobilize Hutu militiamen and ordinary Hutu citizens, mostly subsistence farmers, to attack, harm and destroy the Tutsi population of Rwanda during the period 1990 – 1994."[26] The Chamber finds that these expressions, found under each of the four substantive headings in Mr. Serugendo's statement, do go to the acts and conduct of the Accused.

10. As the Abridged Statement contains evidence which goes to the acts and conduct of the Accused, a threshold issue for admission pursuant to Rule 92 bis has not been met.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Prosecution Motion in its entirety.

INTRODUCTION

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. On 30 May 2005, while cross-examining Prosecution Witness T, the Defence for Nzirorera requested the Chamber to admit into evidence four documents described as follows: a speech of Minister Éliezer Niyitegeka on the 9th of April 1994; a communiqué of the Ministry of Interior on the 10th of May 1994; the speech of Minister Éliezer Niyitegeka on the 30th of April 1994; and a speech of the Minister of Justice on the 17th of May 1994.[1] These documents were, however, only available in Kinyarwanda. The Prosecution objected to the admission of the first document on the basis of relevance of the document to the witness' cross-examination.[2] The Chamber was unable to rule on the admission of the speeches tendered by the Defence for Nzirorera at that stage since the documents were only available in Kinyarwanda.[3] It therefore reserved its ruling, ordered the documents to be marked for identification and requested the assistance of the Registrar in order to obtain the translations.[4] The translations of the speeches are now available. The Chamber is therefore now in a position to rule on their admission.

3. After reviewing the documents sought for admission as well as the testimony of Witness T, the Chamber is satisfied that these documents are relevant to the issue of efforts to stop the killings to which Witness T testified in the instant case. The Chamber is also satisfied that these documents have probative value.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS the Defence Motion, and accordingly

II. ADMITS into evidence the documents marked for identification as ID. NZ16, ID. NZ17, ID. NZ18 and ID. Introduction

1. The trial in this case started on 19 September 2005. The Prosecution called Witness Ahmed Napoléon Mbonyunkiza as its first witness starting 20 September 2005 through 28 October 2005. On 14 October 2005, while the Chamber was also hearing the testimony of Prosecution Witness G who allegedly contradicted Witness Mbonyunkiza's testimony, the Defence for Nzirorera made an oral motion requesting that the Chamber order an investigation for false testimony of Witness Mbonyunkiza.[1] The Chamber denied the Motion stating that it was premature and that it cannot initiate an investigation every time there is a contradiction of testimony.[2] On 1 March 2006, while cross-examining Witness UB, the Defence for Nzirorera reiterated its application.[3] The Chamber reserved its ruling at that time.[4] After hearing all the testimony from the Prosecution witnesses who had testified to the same issues, the Defence for Nzirorera, joined by the Defence for Ngirumpatse, renewed its application for investigation of Witness Mbonyunkiza for false testimony.[5]

Discussion

2. The Defence for Nzirorera requests, pursuant to Rule 91 (B) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence that an amicus curiae be appointed to investigate the false testimony of Prosecution Witness Mbonyunkiza because some of his statements have been contradicted by the testimony of other Prosecution witnesses and will be contradicted by Defence witnesses in the future. It claims that Prosecution Witnesses G, UB and T contradicted Witness Mbonyunkiza's statement that Ngirumpatse spoke at weekly Wednesday meetings in February 1992 and advocated elimination the Tutsi; that Prosecution Witnesses G and T also contradicted Mbonyunkiza's testimony that it was Bikindi who introduced a song about eliminating the Tutsi at the meetings and that Gaspard Uwizigara attended the meetings and that axes were displayed and distributed at the meetings. It also asserts that Prosecution Witness UB denied that axes were used by the Interahamwe at the time. The Defence for Ngirumpatse joins in the Motion and alleges that Witness Mbonyunkiza lied about further events such as: that Ngirumpatse was the author of a grammar book; that meetings took place every Wednesday and that lists were generated confirming the presence of individuals at the meetings. On 2 November 2006, during the testimony of Prosecution Witness ALG, the Defence for Nzirorera requested the Chamber to consider the evidence of that witness as supplementary material in support of this Motion.[6]

3. The Defence asserts that the requirements set out under Rule 91 (B) of the Rules for an investigation in case of false testimony are met. To support its application, it relies upon an oral decision from the Appeals Chamber in the Kamuhanda case, where it alleges that the Appeals Chamber referred a matter for investigation of false testimony on far less evidence than exists against Witness Mbonyunkiza.

4. The Prosecution opposes the Motion and asserts that apparent contradictions do not automatically mean that a witness has deliberately given false testimony.[7]

5. Rule 91 (B) of the Rules bestows a discretionary power upon the Chamber such that if a Chamber has strong grounds for believing that a witness has knowingly and wilfully given false testimony, it may:

> (i) direct the Prosecutor to investigate the matter with a view to the preparation and submission of an indictment for false testimony;
> (ii) where the Prosecutor, in the view of the Chamber, has a conflict of interest with respect to the relevant conduct, direct the Registrar to appoint an amicus curiae to investigate the matter and report back to the Chamber as to whether there are sufficient grounds for instigating proceedings for false testimony.

6. In the Akayesu case, the Trial Chamber outlined the basic considerations for an order to investigate false testimony.[8] It considered that to constitute false testimony (a) the witness must make a solemn declaration; (b) the false statement must be contrary to the solemn declaration; (c) the witness must believe at the time the statement was made that it was false; and (d) there must be a relevant relationship between the statement and a material matter within the case. The statement must also have been made with intent to mislead the judge and to cause harm and the onus is on the pleading party to prove (a) the falsehood of the witness statements; (b) that the statements were made with harmful intent; or at least they were made by a witness who was fully aware that they were false; and (c) the possible bearing of the said statements on the judge's decision.[9]

7. In determining whether "strong grounds" exist that the witness gave false testimony, a Chamber must therefore find, on a case-by-case basis in the particular circumstances of each case, evidence of an intention to commit this offence. Contradictory evidence between witness' testimony is insufficient evidence to demonstrate that a witness intended to mislead the Chamber and to cause harm.[10] Instead, contradictory evidence is used when determining the probative value of the evidence presented by the parties during trial.[11]

8. The Chamber notes that in the Kamuhanda case referred to by the Defence, the Appeals Chamber not only "noted significant discrepancies in testimony given by the witnesses, which may amount to false testimony", but also "had been given reason to believe that there may have been attempts to pervert the course of justice with respect to this appeal in the form of the solicitation of false testimony".[12] They were therefore specific circumstances in that case for the Appeals Chamber to order the Prosecution to investigate the matter of alleged false testimony of a witness.[13]

9. In this case, the Defence alleges that Witness Mbonyunkiza made statements contradicted by other Prosecution witnesses and that will be contradicted by witnesses the Defence intends to call to testify. The Defence does not provide any details as to the content of the evidence of these potential Defence witnesses, and mostly does not adduce evidence of any harmful intent of Witness Mbonyunkiza to make a false testimony. As already recalled, mere contradictions or discrepancies between the testimonies of different witnesses do not, as such, constitute sufficient ground for believing that a witness has knowingly and wilfully given false testimony. Also the Defence has not shown that the requirements set forth by the Rule for ordering an investigation for false testimony have been met.

10. Furthermore, the fact that the Tribunal will close its business by a certain date and could not be able to prosecute witnesses for false testimony, as claimed by the Defence, is not a sufficient ground for ordering an investigation when there is no strong reasons for believing that a witness has knowingly and willfully given false testimony. The Chamber also does not accept the Defence contention that the Chamber should order an investigation for false testimony in the present case for the purpose of discouraging future witnesses from giving false testimony, when there are no strong grounds for believing any harmful intent of the witness concerned. In addition, the Appeals Chamber has already made it very clear to potential witnesses that the Tribunal will not tolerate false testimony before the Court, as well as the interference with the testimony of other witnesses who may appear before the Court.[14]

11. In any event, any alleged discrepancy in the testimony of Witness Mbonyunkiza will be addressed by this Chamber at a later stage when assessing the evidence adduced by each party in the present case as a whole. To make a finding now on allegedly contradictory evidence would be pre-judging the issues and is premature.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

Edouard Karemera et al., Decision on Defence Motion for Modification of Protective Order: Timing of Disclosure, 31 October 2005 (ICTR-98-44)

Introduction

1. During the testimony of Prosecution Witness BTH, on 20 June 2006, the witness alleged that he had been intimidated by the Defence for Joseph Nzirorera. He also stated that he was offered a sum of money by a relative of the Accused if he declined to testify for the Prosecution and/or agreed to testify on behalf of the Defence. The witness testified that he subsequently informed an employee of the Witness and Victim Support Section ('WVSS'), Kigali, of this offer, and wrote a letter about the matter which was left in the possession of WVSS, Kigali. Immediately following this testimony, the Defence for Joseph Nzirorera made an Oral Motion before the Chamber for an order for the disclosure of the said letter.[1] As a result, the Presiding Judge asked the witness for the name of the employee who received the letter and the date that it was written. Being satisfied that the witness gave sufficient information to identify the letter, the Chamber denied the Defence application.[2]

2. In a Further Submission, the Defence for Nzirorera submits that the Chamber has not yet ruled upon its oral motion.[3] It contends that this Motion, however, is now moot because the WVSS employee and his supervisor told Lead Counsel for Nzirorera that they had no recollection of having received such a letter, and that no such letter is in Witness BTH's file. The Defence further advises that he asked each of these persons to sign a statement to this effect, but that they both declined to do so.

3. In a response filed on 26 October 2006, the Prosecution provides a different account of events, and submits that the Motion has not been rendered moot. The Prosecution submits that the Senior Trial Attorney spoke with the WVSS employee concerned and that he found the employee's account of events to be consistent with that of Witness BTH.[4] It requests the Chamber to order WVSS to provide a written memorandum clarifying its position, or alternatively, that the WVSS employees concerned be ordered to appear before the Chamber to provide an explanation of the relevant matters concerning the letter.

Discussion

4. Although the Chamber has already decided to deny the Defence application for an order to disclose a letter given by Witness BTH to a WVSS employee, the Chamber has an inherent power to reconsider its decisions in view of new circumstances that were not known at the time it made its original Decision.[5]

5. In the present case, the Parties' subsequent filings concerning the existence or non-existence of the letter raise new circumstances that might be relevant to the credibility of the witness and show that the Defence may have difficulties in obtaining the document sought. The Chamber is also of the view that this issue could be addressed without calling a WVSS representative to testify orally as suggested by the Defence.[6]

6. Since the Prosecution is not in possession of the letter and the Registrar, through WVSS, indicates to have relevant information and have no objection in complying with any directive of the Trial Chamber concerning this issue,[7] the Chamber finds appropriate to request, pursuant to Rules 33 (B) and 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence,[8] the assistance of the Registrar.

LE TRIBUNAL PÉNAL INTERNATIONAL POUR LE RWANDA (le « Tribunal »),

SIÉGEANT en la Chambre de première instance III (la « Chambre »), composée des Juges Dennis C. M. Byron, Président, Emile Francis Short et Gberdao Gustave Kam ;

SAISI de la « Requête en certification d'appel » déposée le 14 Décembre 2005 par l'Accusé Édouard Karemera ;

CONSIDÉRANT la « Réponse du Procureur à la Requête d'Edouard Karemera pour certification d'appel de la « Decision on Variance of the Prosecution Witness List » rendue par la Chambre le 13 décembre 2005 », déposée le 15 décembre 2005 ;

STATUE comme suit, sur la base des mémoires écrits des parties, et conformément à l'Article 73 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »).

Introduction

1. La Chambre a rendu une « Decision on Variance of Prosecution Witness List » en date du 13 décembre 2005 (« Décision sur la liste de témoins du Procureur »). Dans cette décision, la Chambre a partiellement fait droit à la requête du Procureur et a rejeté les prétentions de la Défense dans leur entièreté. La Défense d'Édouard Karemera conteste à présent cette Décision et demande une certification d'appel. Le Procureur s'y oppose.

Discussion

2. La Défense d'Édouard Karemera estime que les droits fondamentaux de l'accusé, tel que prévus par les articles 17 (3) et 20 (4) (a) du Statut du Tribunal, sont systématiquement violés depuis le commencement du présent procès en faisant valoir que le Procureur introduit ses requêtes et s'exprime en anglais, une langue qui n'est pas connue d'Edouard Karemera. De plus, poursuit-elle, aucune des réponses introduites par les autres équipes de la Défense n'a été traduite en français. La Défense d'Édouard Karemera n'a donc pas pu répondre aux différents arguments des parties, faute d'avoir reçu leur traduction. Cette situation est préjudiciable pour l'accusé et remet en cause l'équité du procès. Par conséquent, la Défense d'Édouard Karemera demande que la Chambre accorde une certification d'appel contre la Décision 13 Décembre 2005.

3. Le Procureur soumet qu'Edouard Karemera n'a démontré ni que la question soulevée est susceptible de compromettre l'équité et la rapidité du procès ni que le règlement immédiat de cette question par la Chambre d'appel pourrait concrètement faire progresser la procédure. Elle demande donc à la Chambre de rejeter cette requête.

4. La Chambre note qu'aux termes des dispositions de l'article 73 (B) du Règlement deux conditions doivent être réunies pour qu'une certification d'appel soit accordée : le requérant doit démontrer (i) que la décision contestée touche une question à même de compromettre l'équité, la rapidité ou l'issue du procès, (ii) et que son règlement immédiat par la Chambre d'appel peut faire avancer la procédure.

5. La Chambre rappelle qu'elle a déjà rendu plusieurs décisions portant sur la question du lien entre la traduction des documents et l'équité du procès.[1] Dans lesdites décisions, la Chambre a constamment pris en compte le droit à un procès équitable et rappelé les règles applicables en vue de garantir les droits de l'accusé. Il revient à la Défense d'Edouard Karemera d'en tenir compte dans l'intérêt de l'accusé.

6. En l'espèce, la Chambre estime que la Défense n'a nullement démontré en quoi la décision contestée se rapporte à une question susceptible de compromettre l'équité, la rapidité ou l'issue du procès.

7. En outre, la Chambre est d'avis que la saisine immédiate de la Chambre d'appel ne contribuera pas à faire avancer la procédure.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

REJETTE la requête de la Défense en certification d'appel.

Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse et Joseph Nzirorera – Demande de prorogation, Démonstration de motifs valables : traductions françaises manquantes – Requête acceptée

Instrument international cité :

Règlement de Procédure et de preuve, art. 116 (B)

4. La Chambre d'appel du Tribunal pénal international chargé de juger les personnes accusées d'actes de génocide ou d'autres violations graves du droit international humanitaire commis sur le territoire du Rwanda et les citoyens rwandais présumés responsables de tels actes ou violations commis sur le territoire d'États voisins entre le 1er janvier et le 31 décembre 1994 (respectivement la « Chambre d'appel » et le « Tribunal international ») est saisie du recours du Procureur intitulé « Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of Decision on Judicial Notice (Rule 73 (C)) », déposé par le Procureur le 9 décembre 2005 (l'« Appel interlocutoire du Procureur »). La Chambre d'appel est également saisie de la « Requête de M. Ngirumpatse aux fins d'extension du délai de réponse au recours du Procureur intitulé "Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of Decision on Judicial Notice" » (la « requête »), déposée le 16 décembre 2005 par l'accusé Mathieu Ngirumpatse (l'« accusé »).

2. L'accusé précise dans la requête qu'il n'a pas encore reçu la traduction en français de plusieurs documents originaux rédigés en anglais, à savoir la requête du Procureur en constat judiciaire déposée devant la Chambre de première instance[1], les réponses de ses coaccusés à ladite requête et la réplique du Procureur, la Décision de la Chambre de première instance relative à la requête du Procureur en constat judiciaire (la « décision attaquée », déposée le 9 novembre 2005), la requête du Procureur en certification d'appel de la décision attaquée, les réponses de ses coaccusés à la requête en certification et la réplique du Procureur, l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur et la réponse de ses coaccusés à l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur. Il demande la traduction des documents susmentionnés et demande un report du délai imparti pour déposer sa réponse à l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur[2].

3. L'article 116 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve du Tribunal international permet une prorogation de délais justifiée par des motifs valables ; le paragraphe (B) du même article est ainsi libellé :

> « le fait que pour pouvoir répondre et se défendre correctement, l'accusé doive avoir accès à une décision dans une langue officielle autre que celle de l'original constitue un motif valable […] ».

4. La langue de travail du conseil de l'accusé est le français, non l'anglais. Il est évident que, pour pouvoir répondre de manière exhaustive à l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur, le Conseil doit pouvoir consulter le texte traduit en français du recours du Procureur et celui de la décision attaquée. Le fait qu'il n'ait pas toujours obtenu la traduction desdits documents constitue un motif valable de proroger le délai imparti pour le dépôt de sa réponse à l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur.

[1] Motion for Judicial Notice of Facts of Common Knowledge and Adjudicated Facts, 30 juin 2005.
[2] Requête, par. 14.

5. L'accusé n'a pas démontré que l'obtention de la traduction en français des autres documents – à savoir les pièces que les diverses parties ont déposées devant la Chambre de première instance en ce qui concerne le constat judiciaire et la certification, ainsi que celles déposées par ses coaccusés devant la Chambre d'appel – est nécessaire pour lui permettre de rédiger sa réponse à l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur ou que le fait de n'avoir pas reçu ladite traduction constitue un motif valable de proroger le délai imparti pour le dépôt de sa réponse. La décision attaquée et la certification d'appel de la décision relative au constat judiciaire (« Décision relative à la certification », déposée le 2 décembre 2005) statuent, après les avoir résumés, sur les arguments avancés par les parties dans les pièces déposées devant la Chambre de première instance et fournissent toutes les informations nécessaires à l'accusé pour préparer sa réponse. Pour cette raison, et du fait qu'il pourrait y avoir un désaccord sur l'étendue de la certification de l'appel interlocutoire[3], la Chambre d'appel chargera demandera au Greffe de faire traduire la décision relative à la certification alors même que l'accusé n'en a pas fait expressément la demande. En ce qui concerne le dépôt des pièces en appel du coaccusé Nzirorera, il n'est pas nécessaire pour l'accusé, tout au moins dans l'état actuel, d'examiner les réponses de ses coaccusés afin de préparer sa propre réponse. Normalement, ces réponses auraient dû être déposées à la même date ; on ne saurait donc affirmer que chaque coaccusé est habilité à prendre connaissance de la réponse des autres avant de préparer la sienne propre.

6. Une prorogation raisonnable du délai se justifie, mais l'accusé n'a pas établi la nécessité de proroger ce délai de 17 jours après le dépôt de la demande de traduction. Les réponses aux appels interlocutoires devant normalement être déposées dans les 10 jours qui suivent le dépôt de l'appel[4], une prorogation de 10 jours devrait donc suffire pour permettre à l'accusé de préparer sa réponse, une fois reçues les traductions requises. L'appelant affirme qu'il a le droit d'obtenir un délai plus long à titre de compensation pour la prorogation qu'il aurait pu obtenir de la Chambre de première instance, compte tenu du fait qu'il ne disposait pas, à ce stade, des traductions nécessaires[5]. Cet argument ne constitue pas un motif valable. Au présent stade, le point de savoir si l'accusé aurait dû disposer des traductions au moment de la préparation des mémoires devant la Chambre de première instance, et/ou s'il aurait dû obtenir une prorogation de délai à ce stade est une question sans objet. À supposer que la Chambre de première instance ait commis une erreur à cet égard, cette erreur n'aurait pas pu être corrigée par une prorogation de délai.

7. Le conseil du coaccusé Édouard Karemera utilise également le français comme langue de travail, et le dépôt tardif de sa réponse à l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur peut aussi s'expliquer par le fait que la Défense ne disposait pas des traductions requises. M. Karemera n'a pas déposé une requête en prorogation de délai, mais l'intérêt de la justice commande qu'il bénéficie de la prorogation consentie à M. Ngirumpatse, au cas où il choisirait de déposer une réponse.

8. Par ces motifs, la Chambre FAIT DROIT en partie à la requête de l'accusé. Elle ENJOINT au Greffe de fournir de toute urgence à l'accusé et à ses coaccusés la traduction en français de la décision attaquée, de la décision relative à la certification, de l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur, y compris ses annexes, et de la présente décision. À compter de la date à laquelle le dernier de ces quatre documents traduits aura été communiqué, l'accusé et son coaccusé M. Karemera disposeront d'un délai de 10 jours pour déposer leurs réponses à l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur.

Fait à La Haye (Pays-Bas), le 27 janvier 2006.

STATUE sur ladite requête en vertu de l'article 73 (A) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement ») comme suit :

Introduction

1. Le 16 mai 2005, la Chambre a enjoint au Procureur de communiquer à la Chambre et à la Défense de chacun des accusés, au plus tard le 15 août 2005, les déclarations de tous les témoins experts qu'il avait l'intention d'appeler à la barre[1]. Au cas où celles-ci ne seraient pas communiquées, le Procureur devait en expliquer la raison à la Chambre et à la Défense des accusés, et indiquer la date à laquelle elles le seraient.

2. Le 9 septembre 2005, estimant que le Procureur avait fourni des explications satisfaisantes pour solliciter un report de délais afin de s'acquitter de l'obligation de communication que lui impose l'article 94 bis (A) du Règlement, la Chambre a fait droit à la demande du Procureur aux fins de prorogation des délais de communication du rapport du témoin expert André Guichaoua[2]. La nouvelle date – proposée par le Procureur – a été fixée au 25 novembre 2005.

3. Le 8 novembre 2005, la Chambre a fait droit à une demande du Procureur aux fins de prorogation de délais en vue de la communication partielle du rapport d'expert de M. André Guichaoua[3]. Cette fois, la prorogation des délais a été sollicitée pour raisons médicales. La Chambre a cependant relevé que les pièces disponibles ne justifiaient pas la nécessité de proroger les délais de la durée demandée par le Procureur[4]. En conséquence, la nouvelle date limite a été fixée au 12 décembre 2005.

4. Le 8 décembre 2005, le Procureur a déposé une nouvelle notification de retard au sujet du rapport d'expert de M. Guichaoua et sollicité un délai supplémentaire pour se conformer à la décision rendue par la Chambre le 8 novembre 2005.

5. À la suite de cette demande, le conseil de Nzirorera invoquant ce nouveau retard, a déposé une requête visant à faire exclure le témoignage de M. Guichaoua.

6. La Chambre n'a pas été convaincue par les arguments du Procureur de la nécessité d'un nouveau report des délais. À cet égard, le 15 décembre 2005, à la suite des diverses demandes faites par le Procureur aux fins de prorogation du délai de dépôt de déclarations de témoins experts à charge en vertu de l'article 94 bis (A) du Règlement, la Chambre a décidé que le témoin expert André Guichaoua devrait lui fournir directement un complément d'information pour lui permettre de statuer sur les requêtes du Procureur et de la Défense. Le délai d'application de cette décision a été fixé au 2 janvier 2006 (la « première décision »). En outre, étant donné qu'à plusieurs reprises le Procureur n'a pas respecté les délais prescrits, la Chambre lui a enjoint d'en expliquer la raison sous peine de recevoir un avertissement en vertu de l'article 46 du Règlement (la « deuxième décision »).

[3] Le Procureur c. Édouard Karemera et consorts, Decision Granting Extension of Time to File Prosecution Expert Report (Chambre de première instance), 8 novembre 2005.
[4] Le Procureur a sollicité la prorogation des délais jusqu'au 6 janvier 2006.

7. La présente décision portera par conséquent sur trois questions découlant de la notification du Procureur, de la requête de Nzirorera et des première et deuxième décisions rendues par la Chambre le 15 décembre 2005. Premièrement, la Chambre devrait-elle accorder le report de délais sollicité par le Procureur ? Deuxièmement, si ce report n'était pas accordé, la Chambre devrait-elle alors faire droit à la requête de la Défense en exclusion du témoignage dans son intégralité ? Troisièmement, le Procureur a-t-il fourni des raisons valables pour lesquelles un avertissement en vertu de l'article 46 du Règlement serait injustifié ?

Délibération

Report de délais et exclusion du témoignage

8. Suite à la première décision de la Chambre, le Procureur a déposé trois documents datés respectivement des 3, 4 et 19 janvier 2006 et transmettant sous forme d'annexes des courriels échangés entre le Bureau du Procureur et M. Guichaoua. Ces messages relevaient les différents engagements professionnels que le témoin avait dû assumer fin 2005, ainsi que ses problèmes de santé et ses obligations au titre d'une mission de recherche en Afrique durant la même période. M. Guichaoua ajoutait que certains retards étaient survenus du fait que le Bureau du Procureur lui avait envoyé des documents plus tard que prévu. En outre, il mentionnait le décès de son père fin décembre 2005 et l'incidence de cet événement sur son programme de travail. Le témoin signalait qu'il ne serait pas en mesure de soumettre son rapport avant le 20 février 2006 et qu'il comptait être présent à Arusha à partir du 15 février 2006 pour faire une déposition dans le cadre d'un autre procès devant le Tribunal.

9. La Chambre estime maintenant, sur la base de l'ensemble des informations disponibles, qu'elle devrait accorder une nouvelle prorogation jusqu'au 20 février 2006. Elle retient que pour diverses raisons tant personnelles que professionnelles, le témoin n'a pas pu respecter les délais fixés antérieurement par la Chambre. Elle note également qu'en dehors de la mention, par le témoin, de l'envoi tardif de certains documents par le Procureur, le nouveau retard accusé ne semble pas imputable à ce dernier. La Chambre enjoint cependant au Procureur de prendre toutes les dispositions qui s'imposent afin que le témoin puisse achever son rapport à temps pour que le Procureur puisse respecter la nouvelle ordonnance de communication.

10. Dans sa requête tendant à faire exclure le témoignage de M. Guichaoua, Nzirorera fait valoir que la non-communication d'un élément de preuve à la date fixée par la Chambre de première instance devrait entraîner le rejet de cet élément de preuve, à moins que le Procureur ne montre que le non-respect de la décision de la Chambre n'est pas dû à son manque de diligence. La Défense soutient qu'il s'agit-là de la norme établie par la Chambre d'appel lorsqu'elle a eu à déterminer s'il fallait prendre en considération des moyens de preuve produits hors délais, en vertu de l'article 115 du Règlement[5]. Selon les arguments de la Défense, le Procureur n'a pas satisfait à cette exigence pour que la Chambre de première instance puisse revenir sur sa décision du 8 novembre 2005, le seul élément nouveau étant que M. Guichaoua a décidé unilatéralement de ne pas achever son rapport dans les délais prévus.

11. Le fait que la Chambre ait fait droit à la demande de nouveau report de délais soumise par le Procureur devrait entraîner le rejet de la demande tendant à faire exclure le rapport. La Chambre estime par ailleurs qu'on ne saurait affirmer, à ce stade de la procédure, que le fait d'accorder une nouvelle prorogation de délai portera atteinte aux droits de l'accusé prévus à l'article 20 du Statut. Il convient d'indiquer aussi que la Chambre est habilitée à gérer le procès de manière à garantir que le retard de communication ne se traduise pas par une injustice envers les accusés. Si, au moment où le témoin est appelé à la barre, la Chambre est d'avis que l'accusé n'a toujours pas eu suffisamment de temps pour se préparer ou mener des enquêtes et qu'il a subi un quelconque préjudice de ce fait, elle aura alors toute latitude pour envisager de rejeter le témoignage en question. Il est évident que l'exclusion de témoignages est une mesure extrême dans l'éventail des réparations dont elle dispose. Par conséquent, la demande faite à cet effet à ce stade de la procédure doit être rejetée.

Ordonnance de justification

12. En réponse à la deuxième décision de la Chambre, le Procureur soutient qu'aucun avertissement ne devrait lui être donné en vertu de l'article 46 (A) du Règlement. Il affirme que les retards accusés dans le dépôt des rapports d'expert ne dépendent pas entièrement de sa volonté et que ses précédentes conclusions en matière de délais et de retards ont été présentées sur la base des informations les plus fiables disponibles à la date considérée, et en toute bonne foi. Il estime par ailleurs que ces retards n'ont pas été causés de propos délibéré ou par négligence et qu'ils ne relèvent pas non plus d'un manque de respect pour l'autorité de la Chambre.

13. Selon l'article 46 (A) du Règlement, une Chambre peut, après un avertissement, prendre des sanctions contre un conseil, si elle considère que son comportement reste offensant ou injurieux, entrave la procédure ou va autrement à l'encontre des intérêts de la justice. La Chambre est convaincue, sur la base des arguments du Procureur et des informations disponibles, que des raisons valables ont été avancées pour expliquer pourquoi elle ne devrait pas, à ce stade de la procédure, adresser d'avertissement en vertu de l'article 46 (A). En particulier, la Chambre a tenu compte de l'argument du Procureur selon lequel les délais qu'il avait sollicités précédemment étaient fondés sur les informations en sa possession à la date considérée et que ces demandes avaient été faites en toute bonne foi. En prenant note également des raisons invoquées par le témoin pour expliquer le retard pris par l'achèvement de son rapport, la Chambre tient à préciser à l'intention tant du Procureur que du témoin que toute nouvelle demande de prorogation de délais se heurtera à sa désapprobation la plus vive. À cet égard, elle enjoint au Procureur de prendre des dispositions concrètes pour veiller à ce que le témoin respecte l'engagement qu'il a pris en vue de soumettre son rapport au plus tard le 28 février 2006. À cette fin, la Chambre estime que copie de la présente décision devrait être notifiée au témoin.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

I. FAIT DROIT à la requête du Procureur en prorogation de délais en vue de la communication du rapport du témoin expert André Guichaoua ;

II. ENJOINT

(a) Que le rapport en question soit communiqué à la Défense de chacun des accusés et à la Chambre au plus tard le 28 février 2006 ;

(b) Que le Greffe notifie copie de la présente décision au témoin expert André Guichaoua le plus tôt possible ;

III. REJETTE la requête de Joseph Nzirorera intitulée « Motion to Exclude Testimony of André Guichaoua » dans sa totalité.

1. Le 26 septembre 2006, le Procureur demandait à la Chambre d'autoriser la communication partielle de certains documents relatifs au témoin T en vertu de l'article 66 (C) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (« Règlement »). La Chambre a considéré qu'en vue de statuer sur cette requête, il était approprié de solliciter l'avis des autorités de l'Etat qui avaient communiqués ces documents au Procureur.[1]

2. Conformément à cette décision, les autorités dudit Etat ont déposé, le 3 décembre 2005, leurs soumissions relatives à la requête dont question. La Chambre a revu avec attention ces soumissions ainsi que les documents qui lui ont été soumis sous couvert de l'article 66 (C) du Règlement.

3. Bien que la Chambre soit satisfaite des informations fournies par cet Etat, elle est d'avis que des informations supplémentaires relatives à certains documents particuliers sont requis.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE, en vertu de l'article 28 du Statut du Tribunal et de l'article 54 du Règlement, PRIE les autorités de l'Etat dont le nom est précisé en annexe à la présente décision et placé sous scellés, de fournir, dans les meilleurs délais, les informations supplémentaires telles que décrites dans l'annexe confidentielle à la présente décision.

5. Dans une autre requête, la Défense de Nzirorera a demandé à la Chambre de prier le President du Tribunal, conformément à l'article 7 bis du Règlement, de rendre compte au Conseil de sécurité de l'ONU de l'inexécution par l'Etat en question de son obligation de coopérer avec le Tribunal suite à la décision du 23 fevrier 2005[1]. Le Procureur a répondu que cette requête était sans objet puisque l'Etat en question avait effectivement communiqué le dossier au Procureur, lequel avait demandé à la Chambre l'autorisation de le communiquer en partie à la Defense en vertu de l'article 66 (C) du Règlement[2].

6. Le 14 octobre 2005, la Chambre a estimé que les requêtes du Procureur déposées en vertu de l'article 66 (C) du Règlement visaient les autorités de l'Etat et que celles-ci seraient sans doute aussi en mesure de fournir une assistance importante à la Chambre[3]. Ces autorités ont donc été invitées à faire des observations sur les requêtes du Procureur présentées conformément à l'article 66 (C)[4] du Règlement, ainsi que sur une éventuelle saisine du Conseil de sécurité demandée par la Défense.[5] L'Etat en question a deposé ses observations le 3 décembre 2005.

7. La Chambre est à présent en mesure d'examiner la Requête de la Défense relative à la saisine du Conseil de sécurité de l'ONU, et les observations relatives à la communication partielle des documents afférents au témoin T.

Délibéré

Requête tendant à rendre compte au Conseil de sécurité de l'inexécution d'une obligation par un Etat

8. Dans sa Requête, la Défense de Nzirorera soutient que l'Etat ne s'est pas conformé à la décision du 23 février 2005 sollicitant sa coopération afin que les parties à la présente affaire puissent recevoir certains documents concernant le témoin T. Elle soutient que les autorités dudit Etat ont fourni au Procureur, mais pas à la Défense, les documents demandés, et que le Procureur demande à présent qu'ils soient communiqués partiellement en vertu de l'article 66 (C). C'est pourquoi elle prie le Président du Tribunal de rendre compte au Conseil de sécurité de l'ONU de l'inexécution de cette obligation.

9. Le Procureur indique que lors d'une mission en Europe, il a pu se rendre compte que les autorités de l'Etat en question étaient gravement préoccupées par la divulgation éventuelle des informations demandées du fait, en particulier, que dans une lettre datée du 15 septembre 2005, l'avocat du témoin T s'était vivement opposé à toute divulgation. Le Procureur a donc invité les autorités de l'Etat à remettre l'intégralité du dossier judiciaire du témoin T à la Chambre, qui se prononcerait équitablement sur la question de sa communication, conformément à l'article 66 (C) du Règlement. Selon le Procureur, cette démarche contribuerait à accélérer la procédure tout en répondant aux préoccupations exprimées par l'Etat quant à la divulgation publique des informations contenues dans ledit dossier.

10. Dans leurs observations, les autorités de l'Etat insistent sur l'obligation qui leur incombe de coopérer avec le Tribunal et leur volonté de le faire, en faisant toutefois observer que la communication intégrale du dossier judiciaire du témoin T non seulement serait incompatible avec la législation nationale en vigueur, mais porterait aussi atteinte au droit de l'interessé à un procès équitable, dans la mesure où celui-ci fait actuellement l'objet d'un procédure judiciaire. En outre, la communication intégrale de ces informations à la Défense pourrait nuire à la sécurité de certains témoins nommément mentionnés dans les documents. Les autorités de l'Etat estiment que la proposition du Procureur tendant à une communication partielle du dossier judiciaire du témoin T en vertu de l'article 66 (C) répondra à la fois à l'obligation qui leur incombe de coopérer avec le Tribunal et de protéger leurs propres interêts en matière de sécurité. Elles concluent que pour des raisons, entre autres, de securité, les documents figurant dans le dossier judiciaire du témoin T ne peuvent être que partiellement communiqués à la Défense.

11. Aux termes de l'article 7 bis du Règlement, > « lorsqu'une Chambre de première instance ou un Juge est convaincu qu'un Etat ne s'est pas acquitté d'une obligation au titre de l'Article 28 du Statut en rapport avec une affaire dont ils sont saisis, la Chambre ou le juge peut prier le Président d'en rendre compte au Conseil de sécurité ».

Toutefois, un Etat peut exciper de circonstances exceptionnelles, notamment des impératifs de securité, pour être délié de l'obligation de coopérer avec le Tribunal[6].

12. En l'espèce, il est indéniable que les autorités de l'État éprouvaient des difficultés, tenant notamment à des questions de sécurité, pour se conformer à la décision du 23 février 2005, et elles pensaient qu'un autre organe du Tribunal, en l'occurrence le Bureau du Procureur, pouvait le faire comprendre à la Chambre. La Chambre estime également que le Procureur a fidèlement rendu compte des préoccupations de l'État dans ses requêtes et qu'il n'avait nullement l'intention d'entraver la divulgation des documents. La présente affaire n'est pas la mieux indiquée pour demander à un État de se conformer à une injonction de coopérer avec le Tribunal. Toutefois, la Chambre estime qu'au vu de ces circonstances particulières, les autorités n'ont pas refusé de s'acquitter des obligations qui leur incombent en vertu de l'article 28 du Statut. La Requête de la Défense tendant à ce que l'affaire soit portée devant le Conseil de sécurité de l'ONU doit par conséquent être rejetée.

13. La Chambre doit à présent déterminer s'il y a lieu de faire droit à la proposition du Procureur, appuyée par l'État, de ne communiquer que partiellement les informations demandées.

Demande de communication partielle des informations

14. Le Procureur a divisé les documents en trois jeux de CD :

> 1) Premier jeu (CD1) : pièces susceptibles d'être communiquées, qui ont été effectivement notifiées à la Défense sous une forme caviardée le 26 septembre 2005, qui contiennent des éléments des déclarations que le témoin T a faites aux officiers de police judiciaire de l'État ;
>
> 2) Deuxième jeu (CD2) : piéces à examiner conformément à l'article 66 (C) du Règlement ;
> 3) Troisième jeu (CD3) : pièces de correspondance juridique interne et documents relatifs à l'enquête.

Le Procureur prie la Chambre de dire que les informations contenues dans le CD2, lui-même subdivisé en quatre sous-ensembles de CD (CD2A, 2B, 2C et 2D), ne peuvent être communiquées avant la fin du procès du témoin T, dans la mesure où la communication intégrale des informations contenues dans le CD2 pourrait porter atteinte au droit de ce témoin à un procès équitable. Le Procurcur soutient que les informations contenues dans le CD3 sont classifiées comme étant des documents internes rentrant dans le champ d'application de l'article 70 du Règlement et, à ce titre, n'ont pas à être communiquées.

15. Dans une troisième requête, le Procureur prie la Chambre de l'autoriser à communiquer une version caviardée de la déclaration du témoin T enregistrée par les autorités de l'État le 29 septembre 2005 et signifiée à la Défense sous une forme remaniée le 7 octobre 2005 car, fait-il valoir, la communication de cette déclaration sous une forme non caviardée pourrait compromettre l'équité du procès du témoin T.

16. La Defense de Nzirorera soutient que toutes les informations en la possession du Procureur doivent lui être communiquées sans délai afin qu'elle puisse achever son travail d'enquête avant la date prévue pour la déposition du témoin T. Elle affirme que si la Chambre venait à décider que l'examen desdites informations doit se faire à huis clos, la Chambre pourrait néanmoins ordonner la communication des éléments qui sont de nature à disculper l'accusé, en application de l'article 68 (A) du Règlement. Subsidiairement, si la Chambre juge qu'aucune information ne doit être divulguée avant la fin du procès du témoin T, la Défense demande que la déposition de l'interessé soit reportée jusqu'a ce que son procès dans l'Etat en question soit achevé et que l'opposition faite à la communication n'ait plus de raison d'être.

18. Les articles 66 (C) et 68 (D) du Règlement prevoient une exception à l'obligation de communication du Procureur visee aux paragraphes (A) et (B) de l'article 66 et au paragraphe (A) de l'article 68 dans le cas où la communication d'informations ou de pièces se trouvant en sa possession « pourrait nuire à de nouvelles enquêtes ou à des enquêtes en cours, ou pour toute autre raison pourrait être contraire à l'interêt public ou porter atteinte à la sécurité d'un Etat ». Aux termes de l'article 70 (B) du Règlement,

19. Après avoir examiné les documents à la divulgation desquels le Procureur est opposé, la Chambre doit veiller en particulier à ce que le témoin T bénéficie d'un procès équitable. Elle est persuadée qu'elle doit trouver un juste milieu entre le droit des accusés et celui du témoin T à un procès équitable dans le cadre des poursuites pénales engagées contre eux.

20. La Chambre estime qu'il est probable que la communication à la Défense de certaines informations contenues dans le CD2 A, B, C et D avant le procès du témoin T pourrait violer ce droit et donc être contraire à l'intérêt public. En l'espèce, un grand nombre de documents sur la déposition du témoin T ont déja été communiqués à l'accusé, lequel pourra solliciter d'autres mesures eu égard aux informations contenues dans le CD2 à un stade ultérieur de la procédure. La Chambre estime donc que les informations contenues dans le CD2 ne doivent pas être communiquées à ce stade.

22. Par ailleurs, la Chambre a besoin d'informations supplémentaires avant de se prononcer sur l'opportunité ou non d'ordonner la communication du dossier d'immigration du témoin T contenu dans le CD2D. A cet égard, elle a déjà demandé, dans une ordonnance distincte, la coopération de l'Etat, et elle réservé sa décision sur cette question.[7]

[7] Affaire Karemera et consorts, Ordonnance visant au dépôt des soumissions d'un Etat (Chambre de première instance III), 13 fevrier 2006.

23. Elle relève qu'à l'exception d'un rapport, toutes les informations contenues dans le CD3 ont trait aux poursuites pénales engagées contre le témoin T dans l'Etat en question. Ce rapport figure également dans le CD2A, qui pourra être communiqué à un stade ultérieur. Les autres documents figurant dans le CD3 ont été remis au Procureur par les autorités de l'Etat à titre confidentiel et ne doivent donc pas être divulgués sans le consentement de l'Etat, conformément à l'article 70 (B) du Règlement. Il convient en outre de noter que ces documents ne sont probablement pas pertinents pour la préparation de la Défense en l'espèce.

24. Afin de sauvegarder le droit du témoin T à un procès équitable et l'intérêt public, la Chambre estime également que le Procureur doit être autorisé à maintenir la version caviardée de la déclaration du témoin T recueillie le 29 septembre 2005 et notifiée à la Défense le 7 octobre 2005.

Ajournement ou exclusion de la déposition du témoin

25. La Chambre note que d'après les dernières informations fournies par le Procureur[8], le témoin T ne sera pas appelé à la barre durant la deuxième session du procès qui a debuté le 13 février 2006, comme prévu à l'origine. Aucune date n'a encore été fixée pour sa déposition. Compte tenu de ces circonstances particulières, ni l'exclusion ni l'ajournement de la déposition du témoin T ne se justifie. La Chambre étend ce raisonnement à la demande de la Défense tendant à exclure la déposition de certains témoins à charge, notamment les témoins G, ALG, UB et GFJ. Parmi l'éventail de moyens dont dispose la Chambre pour prévenir toute atteinte aux droits de l'accusé, le recours à l'exclusion d'un témoiguage constitue la mesure extrême. Or, au stade actuel, la Défense n'a pas démontré l'existence d'un quelconque préjudice qui justifierait le recours à une telle extrêmité.

26. En réponse à la demande d'ajournement de la déposition de certains témoins, faite par Ngirumpatse, la Chambre rappelle à la Défense qu'elle a déjà refusé le report de la déposition des témoins G et GFJ, qui ont été entendus durant la première session du procès en septembre 2005. Elle considère que la capacité de la Défense de contre-interroger les témoins à charge ne sera pas compromise si certaines informations ne lui sont pas communiquées en applications de cette décision. Qui plus est, elle a déjà indiqué expressement qu'au besoin les témoins pourraient être rappelés pour témoigner sur des questions importantes qui seraient soulevées au cours de la procédure. A ce stade, il ne serait pas dans l'interêt de la justice d'ordonner le report de la déposition de certains témoins à charge.

27. Il convient enfin de noter que dans leurs observations en date du 3 décembre 2005, les autorités de l'Etat font remarquer que le conseil du témoin T a accepté que sa lettre datée du 15 septembre 2005, dans laquelle il explique son opposition à la divulgation de l'integralité du dossier judiciaire du témoin T, soit communiquée aux parties en l'espèce.

PAR CES MOTIFS. LA CHAMBRE

4. Le Procureur dans sa réponse s'oppose[2] aux demandes formulées par la Défense[3].

Délibérations

5. La Chambre rappelle que lorsqu'une requête en inspection de documents et en communication des éléments de preuve à décharge est soumise aux termes des articles 66 (B) et 68 (A) du Règlement, la Défense doit clairement et suffisamment identifier les éléments que le Procureur a en sa possession ou sous son contrôle et pour lesquels l'inspection et la communication sont requises[4]. De plus, la Défense doit démontrer que les documents pour lesquels l'inspection est demandée serviront à sa préparation[5]. En référence à l'article 68 (A) du Règlement, la Défense doit en outre prouver le caractère disculpatoire ou potentiellement disculpatoire de ces éléments[6].

6. Dans la présente affaire, la Chambre relève que la Défense se contente de se référer aux articles 66 (B) et 68 (A) du Règlement sans que la démonstration de la réunion de leurs conditions d'application n'ait été faite.

7. Par conséquent, la Chambre ne saurait faire droit à la requête de la Défense.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

REJETTE la requête de la Défense.

Décision sur la requête d'Edouard Karemera aux fins de certification d'appel Article 73 (B) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve 10 mars 2006 (ICTR-98-44-R73B)

Instrument international cité :

Règlement de Procédure et de preuve, art. 66, 68 et 73 (B)

Introduction

1. Le 24 février 2006, la Chambre a rejeté la requête en inspection[1] de la Défense d'Édouard Karemera au motif qu'elle n'avait pas fait la démonstration de la réunion des conditions d'application des articles 66 (B) et 68 (A) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »). Celle-ci souhaite contester la décision, et demande en conséquence d'être autorisée à en interjeter appel[2]. Le Procureur s'oppose à cette requête en certification d'appel[3].

Discussion

2. La Défense d'Édouard Karemera soutient que la Décision de la Chambre ignore les développements faits dans sa requête du 17 décembre 2005. Elle estime avoir démontré que le Procureur détient l'original du fax envoyé de Kigali le 11 janvier 1994 par Roméo Dallaire et qu'il a l'obligation de le communiquer sur la base de l'article 66 du Règlement. En outre, la Défense d'Édouard Karemera affirme qu'elle a prouvé le caractère disculpatoire ou potentiellement disculpatoire des éléments de preuve demandés et notamment du discours de Léon Mugesera.

3. Elle relève que la Chambre s'est contentée de rappeler les critères d'application des articles 66 et 68 du Règlement sans étayer les motifs de son rejet. De plus, la Chambre n'a pas clairement distingué ces deux articles. Cette situation remet en cause l'équité et l'issue du procès et son règlement pourrait faire progresser la procédure. Par conséquent, la Défense d'Édouard Karemera demande que la Chambre accorde une certification d'appel contre la Décision du 24 février 2006.

4. Le Procureur estime que la Défense n'a pas démontré que la décision en cause a trait à des questions susceptibles de compromettre l'équité, la rapidité ou l'issue du procès. Elle ne prouve pas non plus de quelle manière le règlement immédiat de ces questions par la Chambre d'appel est à même de faire progresser la procédure.

5. La Chambre note qu'aux termes des dispositions de l'article 73 (B) du Règlement deux conditions doivent être réunies pour qu'une certification d'appel soit accordée : le requérant doit démontrer (i) que la décision contestée touche une question à même de compromettre l'équité, la rapidité ou l'issue du procès, (ii) et que son règlement immédiat par la Chambre d'appel peut faire avancer la procédure.

6. Dans la présente requête, la Défense ne démontre nullement en quoi la décision contestée se rapporte à une question susceptible de compromettre l'équité, la rapidité ou l'issue du procès. En outre, la Chambre est d'avis que la saisine immédiate de la Chambre d'appel ne contribuera pas à faire avancer la procédure.

7. Par ailleurs, la Chambre note que la Défense se contente d'arguer une erreur de droit dans la Décision du 24 février 2006, sans démontrer si une telle argumentation répond à l'une ou l'autre des conditions posées à l'article 73 (B) du Règlement. Cependant, la Chambre considère que l'allégation d'une erreur de droit en l'espèce n'est pas recevable au titre des dispositions pertinentes pour la certification d'appel.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

REJETTE la requête de la Défense en certification d'appel.

Édouard Karemera et consorts, Décision relative à la requête en prorogation de délais, 24 mars 2006 (ICTR-98-44)

1. La Chambre d'appel du Tribunal pénal international chargé de juger les personnes présumées responsables d'actes de génocide ou d'autres violations graves du droit international humanitaire commis sur le territoire du Rwanda et les citoyens rwandais présumés responsables de tels actes ou violations commis sur le territoire d'États voisins entre le 1er janvier et le 31 décembre 1994 (respectivement la « Chambre d'appel » et le « Tribunal ») est saisie de l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur intitulé Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of the Trial Chamber's Decision Given Orally on 16 February 2006 Regarding the Role of the Electronic Disclosure Suite in Discharging the Prosecution's Disclosure Obligations, déposé le 6 mars 2006 (l' « Appel »). Elle est aussi actuellement saisie d'une requête en prorogation de délais pour répondre à l'appel en attendant la traduction en français des écritures du Procureur et de Joseph Nzirorera, déposée par Édouard Karemera le 24 mars 2006 (la « Requête en prorogation de délais[1] »).

2. L'article 116 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve du Tribunal autorise les prorogations de délais si des motifs valables le justifient. La requête doit normalement être déposée dans les délais requis, ce que M. Karemera n'a pas fait. Toutefois, la Chambre d'appel a déjà fait droit à la requête aux fins d'extension du délai imparti pour répondre à l'appel du Procureur en attendant sa traduction en français, que M. Ngirumpatse a déposée dans les délais[2]. Il est arrivé à la Chambre d'autoriser un coaccusé à bénéficier d'une prorogation de délais accordée à un autre coaccusé qui avait déposé une requête dans les délais lorsque l'intérêt de la justice le commandait[3]. Étant donné que le procès est une jonction d'instances et compte tenu de l'ampleur de l'appel, la Chambre d'appel estime qu'il est dans l'intérêt de la justice d'excuser le dépôt tardif de la requête de M. Karemera en l'espèce et de le faire bénéficier de la mesure accordée à M. Ngirumpatse.

3. Le Procureur s'oppose à la requête de M. Karemera en faisant siens les arguments qui ont été avancés et rejetés dans le cadre de la requête de M. Ngirumpatse[4]. Toutefois, comme la Chambre d'appel l'a récemment fait observer, la langue de travail du conseil de M. Karemera est le français, et non l'anglais[5]. Il est évident que pour pouvoir répondre de manière exhaustive à l'Appel, le conseil doit être en mesure d'en consulter la version française. La Chambre d'appel a déjà jugé que cela constitue un motif valable de proroger le délai imparti en l'espèce[6]. M. Karemera n'a toutefois pas démontré que l'obtention de la traduction des écritures de son coaccusé, M. Nzirorera, est nécessaire pour lui permettre de rédiger sa réponse à l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur, et la Chambre d'appel a refusé d'accorder ce type de mesure par le passé[7].

Dispositif

Par ces motifs, la Chambre d'appel FAIT DROIT en partie à la Requête en prorogation de délais. La Chambre d'appel PRESCRIT au Greffe de fournir à M. Karemera et à son conseil, de toute urgence, la traduction française de l'Appel et de la présente décision. À compter de la date à laquelle le dernier de ces documents traduits lui aura été communiqué, M. Karemera disposera de 10 jours pour

Introduction

1. Dans la présente décision, la Chambre d'appel du Tribunal pénal international chargé de juger les personnes présumées responsables d'actes de génocide ou d'autres violations graves du droit international humanitaire commis sur le territoire du Rwanda et les citoyens rwandais présumés responsables de tels actes ou violations commis sur le territoire d'États voisins entre le 1er janvier et le 31 décembre 1994 (le «Tribunal »)[1] statue sur les appels interjetés par Joseph Nzirorera, ci après dénommé (l'« Appelant »), contre deux décisions rendues par la Chambre de première instance III ci après dénommée (la « Chambre de première instance») du Tribunal. Ces deux décisions portent sur des questions relatives à l'exception d'incompétence soulevées dans la requête intitulée Joseph Nzirorera's Preliminary Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction : Joint Criminal Enterprise dénommée (« Exception d'incompétence »), déposée le 4 mai 2005.

2. Dans son Exception d'incompétence, l'appelant affirme que le Tribunal n'est pas compétent pour connaître

> « des chefs d'accusation liés à la forme élargie de l'entreprise criminelle commune invoquée dans l'acte d'accusation modifié[2] ». [Traduction]

À l'appui de cette assertion, il affirme en premier lieu que le Tribunal n'est pas compétent pour déclarer un accusé coupable sur la base de la troisième forme de l'entreprise criminelle commune à raison de crimes commis par d'autres participants dans une entreprise criminelle de « grande ampleur »[3] [Traduction]. Deuxièmement, il estime que le Tribunal n'est pas compétent pour connaître de la forme de responsabilité découlant de la troisième catégorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune en l'absence de « lien direct » entre l'accusé et les auteurs effectifs des crimes visés[4]. Troisièmement, il affirme que le Tribunal n'a pas compétence pour retenir la responsabilité pour viol comme étant une conséquence prévisible d'une entreprise criminelle commune en vue de commettre le génocide[5]. Quatrièmement, il soutient que le Tribunal n'a pas compétence pour retenir la responsabilité de complicité dans le génocide comme étant une conséquence prévisible d'une entreprise criminelle commune[6].

3. Le 5 août 2005, la Chambre de première instance a rendu une décision intitulée Decision on Defence Motion Challenging the Jurisdiction of the Tribunal – Joint Criminal Enterprise Rules 72 and 73 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, ci-après dénommée « première décision contestée ». Elle a conclu qu'il n'existait aucun obstacle, en matière de compétence, à engager la responsabilité de l'accusé sur la base de la troisième forme de l'entreprise criminelle commune à raison de crimes commis par d'autres participants dans le contexte d'une entreprise criminelle commune de grande ampleur à laquelle il a pris part[7]. Elle ne s'est pas expressément prononcée sur la deuxième affirmation de l'appelant selon laquelle le Tribunal n'est pas compétent pour retenir la responsabilité au regard de la troisième catégorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune quand le Procureur n'allègue pas de « lien direct » entre l'accusé et les auteurs matériels du crime. Cependant, en rejetant l'argument de l'appelant en ce qui concerne l'entreprise criminelle commune de « grande ampleur », elle a estimé que la responsabilité découlant de la troisième catégorie d'entreprise criminelle commune ne pouvait être retenue que quand cette entreprise

> « est limitée à une opération donnée et à un lieu géographique précis où l'accusé n'était pas structurellement éloigné des auteurs matériels des crimes[8] » (traduction).

4. Dans la première décision contestée, la Chambre de première instance a renvoyé à plus tard l'examen des deux derniers arguments avancés dans l'Exception d'incompétence[9]. Le 14 septembre 2005, après avoir entendu les arguments des parties sur ces deux questions, elle a rendu la décision intitulée Decision on Defence Motions Challenging the Indictment as Regards the Joint Criminal Enterprise Liability, ci-après dénommée la « deuxième décision contestée ».

5. Dans la deuxième décision contestée, la Chambre de première instance a estimé que, du point de vue de la compétence, rien n'empêchait de retenir la responsabilité pour viol si ce crime est une conséquence prévisible de l'entreprise criminelle commune[10]. Là encore cependant, elle s'est refusée de se prononcer sur la question de savoir si le Tribunal était compétent pour engager la responsabilité de l'appelant pour complicité dans le génocide dans le contexte de la troisième catégorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune[11]. Le chef de complicité dans le génocide ayant été imputé simplement à titre subsidiaire dans l'acte d'accusation, elle a indiqué qu'il ne serait peut-être pas nécessaire, en fin de compte, de statuer sur la question[12].

6. Après que la Chambre de première instance a rendu la première décision contestée, l'appelant a déposé un document demandant à la Chambre d'appel de déterminer si la question tranchée par cette décision, (à savoir si le Tribunal était habilité à retenir la responsabilité d'un accusé pour des crimes commis par d'autres participants dans le contexte d'une entreprise criminelle commune de « grande ampleur »), relevait bien de la compétence de la Chambre de première instance, et que, par conséquent, l'appelant était en droit d'interjeter un appel interlocutoire contre cette décision[13]. Dans le même document, l'appelant a fait valoir, que sur le fond, la décision de la Chambre de première instance était erronée[14].

7. Le Procureur a déposé une réponse[15] et l'appelant une réplique[16]. Par la suite, la Chambre d'appel, siégeant en une formation de trois juges, a déclaré l'appel recevable[17]. Les juges ont toutefois indiqué que l'appelant ne serait pas autorisé à déposer un nouveau mémoire d'appel, comme ce serait normalement le cas quand une formation de trois juges de la Chambre d'appel décide qu'une question remplit les conditions d'un appel immédiat, étant donné que dans le premier appel de la Défense, il a L'article 72 (B) (i) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve, le (« Règlement ») prévoit qu'une partie a le droit d'interjeter appel des décisions relatives aux questions d'exception d'incompétence. Les décisions portant sur de nombreux autres types de requêtes ne sont pas susceptibles d'appel.

En inférant que la Chambre de première instance avait décidé d'attendre la fin du procès, avant de dire si une décision sur l'existence ou non de lien direct entre l'accusé et les auteurs effectifs des crimes visés était nécessaire pour retenir la responsabilité pénale au titre de la troisième catégorie d'entreprise criminelle commune, l'appelant a « décidé de ne pas interjeter appel de la deuxième question soulevée dans l'exception d'incompétence ». Ibid., note de bas de page n°7.

plaidé l'affaire au fond et largement excédé la longueur autorisée pour les requêtes déposées simplement en vue de déterminer si une question satisfait aux critères exigés pour un appel immédiat[18].

8. Après que la Chambre de première instance a rendu la deuxième décision contestée, l'appelant a déposé un document demandant à la Chambre d'appel de déterminer si la question dont l'examen a été reporté par cette décision, – la responsabilité découlant de la forme élargie de l'entreprise criminelle commune peut elle être retenue pour établir la complicité dans le génocide – relevait de la compétence du Tribunal et s'il était en droit de déposer un appel interlocutoire contre le non règlement de cette question par la Chambre[19]. Dans ce même document, il affirmait aussi que la Chambre avait l'obligation de statuer sur la question[20] et a ajouté que si elle choisissait de statuer elle-même sur la question, la Chambre d'appel devrait conclure que le Tribunal ne pouvait pas retenir la responsabilité pour complicité dans le génocide comme une conséquence prévisible de la forme élargie de l'entreprise criminelle commune[21]. Il a décidé de ne pas faire appel de la conclusion dégagée dans la deuxième décision contestée, au sujet de la troisième catégorie de responsabilité pour le crime de viol commis dans le contexte de l'entreprise criminelle commune[22].

9. Une fois encore, le Procureur a déposé une réponse[23] et l'appelant une réplique[24]. Une formation de trois juges de la Chambre d'appel a alors décidé que l'appelant était en droit de faire appel de la décision de la Chambre de première instance reportant l'examen de la question de savoir si le Procureur pouvait le poursuivre pour complicité dans le génocide dans le contexte de la troisième catégorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune[25]. L'examen de cet appel a été confié à la formation de cinq juges qui avait été saisie du premier appel de la Défense sur le fond[26].

10. La présente décision porte donc sur deux questions : (a) Le Tribunal est-t-il compétent pour retenir la responsabilité d'une personne au titre de la troisième catégorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune à raison de crimes commis par d'autres participants dans le contexte d'une entreprise criminelle commune de « grande ampleur » ?, et (b), la Chambre de première instance a-t-elle besoin

Le 26 octobre 2005, l'appelant a informé la Chambre d'appel qu'il ne déposerait pas de mémoire en réplique. de déterminer si la responsabilité pour complicité dans le génocide au titre de la troisième catégorie de l'entreprise commune peut être retenue ?

Le premier appel de la Défense

11. L'appelant soutient qu'en concluant que la responsabilité au titre de la troisième catégorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune peut être retenue contre un accusé pour des crimes commis par d'autres participants à une entreprise criminelle commune de « grande ampleur », la Chambre de première instance a commis « trois erreurs de droit[27] ». Il estime que c'est à tort qu'elle s'est fondée sur l'affaire Milošević en ce qui concerne l'entreprise criminelle commune de grande ampleur[28]. Il affirme aussi que la Chambre « a commis une erreur en déclarant que l'ampleur de l'entreprise criminelle commune n'a aucun effet sur cette forme de responsabilité[29] » (Traduction). De plus, il soutient que la Chambre « a commis une erreur en omettant de déterminer si, en droit international coutumier, la forme « élargie » de l'entreprise criminelle commune est applicable aux entreprises de grande ampleur[30]. La Chambre d'appel examine à nouveau si la Chambre de première instance a correctement appliqué le droit[31].

12. Le Tribunal est compétent pour connaître uniquement des infractions et formes de responsabilité qui, à la fois, sont (a) prévues dans le Statut et (b) existaient déjà dans le droit international coutumier au moment de la commission des crimes allégués ou qui étaient proscrites par des traités faisant partie intégrante des lois auxquelles était soumis l'accusé au moment où il perpétrait les actes allégués[32]. L'appelant n'ayant pas expliqué de manière convaincante dans quelle mesure le Statut du Tribunal limite l'examen de la responsabilité de la troisième catégorie aux affaires dans lesquelles l'entreprise criminelle commune est de moindre ampleur; étant donné que la Chambre d'appel n'y relève pas une telle restriction, que la forme de responsabilité découlant de l'entreprise criminelle commune trouve son fondement dans le droit international coutumier et non dans un traité, la question essentielle soulevée dans le premier appel de la Défense est celle de savoir si le droit international coutumier autorise à retenir la responsabilité d'un accusé au titre de la troisième catégorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune à raison de crimes commis par d'autres participants à une entreprise criminelle commune de « grande ampleur ». Sur cette question, la Chambre d'appel estime que l'argument de l'appelant est infondé.

la première[37]. Fondamentalement, sur la base de la troisième catégorie appelée la forme « élargie »[38] de responsabilité découlant de l'entreprise criminelle commune, l'accusé peut être tenu responsable de crimes dont les auteurs physiques sont d'autres participants quand ces crimes sont la conséquence prévisible de l'entreprise criminelle commune, même si l'accusé n'a pas passé d'accord avec ceux-ci en vue de leur commission[39]. À la lumière de l'affaire Tadić, il n'y a aucun doute que la troisième catégorie de responsabilité découlant de l'entreprise criminelle commune est fermement établie en droit international coutumier.

15. L'argument de l'appelant traduit une méconnaissance du droit international coutumier et du rôle qu'il joue dans la détermination de la compétence du Tribunal. Pour que le Tribunal retienne la responsabilité d'un accusé sur la base d'une forme particulière de responsabilité, il doit être clairement établi que cette forme de responsabilité existe en droit international coutumier[42] – et qu'en outre, elle est prévue par le Statut, comme indiqué plus haut[43]. Toutefois, « lorsqu'on peut démontrer qu'un principe a été ainsi ...établi », en droit international coutumier, « rien ne s'oppose à ce qu'il s'applique à une situation donnée même s'il s'agit d'une situation nouvelle, à condition qu'elle relève raisonnablement du champ d'application de ce principe[44] ». Ainsi, à partir du moment où le Tribunal a conclu à l'existence d'une forme de responsabilité en droit international coutumier et qu'il en a identifié les éléments qui doivent être établis à cette fin au regard dudit droit, il peut, sur cette base, déclarer une personne coupable en invoquant cette forme de responsabilité, chaque fois que les faits de l'espèce établissent que les éléments constitutifs sont réunis[45].

16. Comme indiqué auparavant, il est manifeste que le droit international coutumier sert de base à la responsabilité découlant de l'entreprise criminelle commune, en général, et à la troisième forme de cette responsabilité en particulier. De plus, bien que dans plusieurs affaires concernant des situations

factuelles différentes, la Chambre d'appel du Tribunal de céans et celle du TPIY aient indiqué les conditions requises pour déterminer différentes formes de responsabilité découlant de l'entreprise criminelle[46], ni l'une ni l'autre n'a jamais dit que cette responsabilité ne pouvait être retenue que pour des crimes commis dans le cadre d'entreprises criminelles d'ampleur ou d'étendue géographique réduites. Pour confirmer qu'il n'existe aucune limitation géographique en ce qui concerne la troisième catégorie de responsabilité découlant de l'entreprise criminelle commune, l'arrêt rendu dans l'affaire Tadić cite comme exemple de cas où cette responsabilité peut être imposée une situation dans laquelle les meurtres commis sont une conséquence prévisible mais non voulue d'une entreprise criminelle commune visant à « expulser par la force les membres d'un groupe ethnique de leur … région »[47]. La Chambre d'appel du TPIY a donc envisagé, de manière expresse, la troisième catégorie de responsabilité découlant de l'entreprise criminelle commune à raison de crimes commis à l'échelle de toute une région.

17. La partie du premier appel de la Défense portant sur l'« effet » de l'entreprise criminelle, est loin d'être claire – en particulier, on ne sait pas si la Défense fonde son raisonnement sur le Statut du Tribunal ou sur le droit international coutumier. En tout état de cause, l'argument avancé est qu'il serait inopportun d'admettre que la troisième catégorie d'entreprise criminelle commune soit retenue pour des crimes commis par des participants à une entreprise criminelle commune de grande ampleur. L'appelant estime que l'application de la troisième catégorie de la responsabilité découlant de l'entreprise criminelle commune transformerait l'entreprise criminelle commune en une forme de responsabilité absolue et donnerait lieu à des condamnations injustes[48]. La Chambre d'appel considère cependant que ces craintes sont infondées. La troisième catégorie de responsabilité découlant de l'entreprise criminelle commune ne peut être retenue que pour des crimes prévisibles aux yeux de l'accusé[49]. Dans certaines circonstances, l'accusé ne pourra pas prévoir les crimes commis par d'autres participants à l'entreprise de grande ampleur. Par conséquent, dans la mesure où l'éloignement structurel ou géographique influe sur la prévisibilité, l'ampleur de l'entreprise doit être prise en considération comme l'affirme l'appelant.

18. Enfin, la Chambre d'appel relève qu'aux fins de la présente décision, il importe peu que la Chambre de première instance ait invoqué à juste titre ou non l'affaire Milošević, ou qu'il ait été inopportun de le faire, comme l'affirme l'appelant[50]. Pour les raisons avancées dans la présente décision, elle estime que la Chambre de première instance a donné les réponses appropriées aux questions de droit soulevées par l'appelant. En conséquence, elle rejette le premier appel de la Défense.

Le deuxième appel de la Défense

19. Dans le deuxième appel de la Défense, l'appelant affirme que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur en ne statuant pas sur la question de savoir si le Tribunal est ou non compétent pour déclarer un accusé coupable de complicité dans le génocide au titre de la forme élargie d'entreprise criminelle commune. Il fait observer que l'article 72 (A) du Règlement prévoit que, s'agissant des exceptions d'incompétence, « la Chambre se prononce sur ces exceptions préjudicielles dans les soixante jours suivant leur dépôt et avant le début des déclarations liminaires ». L'appelant fait valoir qu'alors qu'elle a relevé que dans sa requête, il a contesté la compétence du Tribunal, la Chambre de première instance ne s'est pas « prononcée sur la requête avant le début des déclarations liminaires »[51] (traduction). En ne statuant pas sur sa requête, la Chambre « l'a privé de son droit de ne pas être jugé pour un crime qui ne relève pas de la compétence du Tribunal »[52] (traduction).

20. En réponse, le Procureur affirme tout d'abord qu'en déclarant que la responsabilité découlant de la forme élargie de l'entreprise criminelle commune pouvait être retenue pour le crime de viol et qu'elle ne « s'appliquait pas à un crime particulier » (traduction), la Chambre de première instance a implicitement tranché la question de savoir si la troisième catégorie de responsabilité dans l'entreprise criminelle commune pouvait être retenue pour complicité dans le génocide. La Chambre d'appel n'est pas de cet avis[53]. La Chambre de première instance ayant explicitement renvoyé à plus tard sa décision sur la complicité dans le génocide[54], on ne saurait conclure qu'elle a implicitement statué sur une question dont elle a reporté l'examen.

21. Les autres arguments avancés par le Procureur dans sa deuxième réponse sont loin d'être précis. Dans ce qui apparaît comme une contradiction de l'argument selon lequel la Chambre de première instance a rejeté la thèse de la Défense en ce qui concerne la complicité dans le génocide, le Procureur affirme que « à moins qu'une Chambre de première instance ne puisse organiser son travail de façon convenable en reportant à plus tard une telle décision se rapportant à un chef d'accusation »- comme celui de complicité dans le génocide – « qui est purement subsidiaire, la Chambre de première instance en l'occurrence a pu faire l'erreur que lui reproche l'appelant[55] ». Le Procureur affirme également, à la lumière du libellé de l'article 72 (A) du Règlement, que « la question est de savoir si la Chambre d'appel devrait remettre l'affaire à la Chambre de première instance afin qu'elle prenne une décision ou trancher la question elle-même[56] ». Plus loin, cependant, il affirme que ni la Chambre d'appel ni la Chambre de première instance n'ont de raison de statuer promptement sur le grief de l'appelant en ce qui concerne l'allégation relative à la troisième catégorie de responsabilité découlant de l'entreprise criminelle commune s'agissant de la complicité dans le génocide. Il estime qu'une décision n'est pas nécessaire car le chef de complicité dans le génocide a été également retenu contre l'appelant sur la base d'autres formes de responsabilité et que la complicité dans le génocide lui est imputée à titre subsidiaire[57].

22. C'est à tort que le Procureur affirme que la Chambre de première instance peut s'abstenir de statuer sur le grief de l'appelant au stade actuel. L'article 72 (A) du Règlement prévoit que la Chambre « se prononce » sur toutes les exceptions d'incompétence dans les soixante jours suivant leur dépôt et avant le début des déclarations liminaires. En l'espèce, la Chambre de première instance[58] et la Chambre d'appel[59] ont jugé que la requête de l'appelant portait sur la compétence du Tribunal. Certes, il est possible qu'une requête en incompétence du Tribunal soulève des questions qui ne portent pas sur la compétence dont la Chambre de première instance pourrait légitimement renvoyer l'examen à plus tard, mais tel n'est pas le cas : la question que l'appelant reproche à la Chambre de première instance d'avoir renvoyée à plus tard relève purement du droit et porte sur les limites de la compétence du Tribunal en ce qui concerne l'application d'une forme de responsabilité.

23. La Chambre de première instance ne peut s'abstenir de se prononcer sur la requête de l'appelant au simple motif que celle-ci porte sur un chef d'accusation subsidiaire, ou parce que le chef en question allègue que l'appelant peut être déclaré coupable au regard de plusieurs formes de responsabilité. Comme nous l'avons déjà mentionné, le libellé de l'article 72 (A) du Règlement indique clairement que le délai mentionné s'applique à toutes les requêtes d'incompétence– y compris celles mettant en cause des chefs subsidiaires ou contestant l'une des formes de responsabilité alléguées dans le cadre d'une infraction. Il en va du droit de chaque accusé de ne pas être jugé sur la base d'une allégation qui échappe à la compétence du Tribunal et de ne pas avoir à s'en défendre.

Décision relative à la révision du calendrier de la prochaine session du procès Articles 20 du Statut et 73 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve 18 avril 2006 (ICTR-98-44-T)

Instruments internationaux cités :

Règlement de Procédure et de preuve, art. 73 ; Statut, art. 20

1. La deuxième session du procès s'est achevée le 17 mars 2006 à l'issue de l'audition du troisième témoin à charge. Le même jour, les parties réunies en conférence de mise en état ont convenu que la prochaine session d'audiences se tiendrait du 15 mai au 14 juillet 2006. En se fondant sur leurs discussions, la Chambre a examiné l'ordre de comparution des témoins qui seraient entendus durant cette troisième session[1]. Celle-ci commencera en principe le 15 mai, mais pour préserver l'équité du procès et le droit de Ngirumpatse d'interroger le témoin T, la Chambre a décidé que la déposition de ce témoin aurait lieu par vidéoconférence à partir du 22 mai 2006.

2. Le Procureur demande à présent à la Chambre de revoir la décision portant calendrier qu'elle a rendue le 30 mars 2006 pour prescrire que la déposition du témoin T ait lieu par vidéo-conférence à partir du 15 mai 2006[2]. Il avance trois raisons pour lesquelles la date du 22 mai 2006 ne conviendrait vraiment pas à cette fin. Premièrement, avant que la Chambre ne rende sa décision portant calendrier,

[1] Le Procureur c. Édouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse et Joseph Nzirorera, affaire n°ICTR-94-44-T, Décision portant calendrier, 30 mars 2006 (la « décision portant calendrier »).
[2] Motion for Reconsideration of Scheduling Order Dated 30 March 2006, requête déposée le 3 avril 2006.

le Procureur et les autorités de l'État d'où la déposition serait faite avaient convenu que la vidéoconférence débuterait le 15 mai 2006. Deuxièmement, comme l'équipe du Bureau du Procureur chargée de la présente affaire a peu de membres, il faudrait réorganiser la préparation du procès pour permettre à deux substituts du Procureur d'avoir une entrevue avec le témoin T durant la semaine qui précède son audition. En conséquence, ces avocats généraux ne seront pas disponibles à Arusha pour interroger les autres témoins mentionnés dans la décision portant calendrier qui leur ont été assignés. Troisièmement, il est bien improbable que le témoin ALG puisse achever sa déposition en cinq jours si celle-ci doit commencer le 15 mai 2006. Il s'ensuit qu'elle devra être interrompue pour permettre à celle du témoin T de débuter le 22 mai 2006.

3. Dans sa réponse, Joseph Nzirorera demande de reporter l'ouverture de la troisième session du procès au 22 mai 2006[3], pour régler à la fois le problème du Procureur et celui de l'équipe de défense de Ngirumpatse. Il demande également qu'une conférence de mise en état ou une séance de travail soit tenue au cours de la semaine du 15 mai 2006 pour examiner les problèmes de communication de pièces, les directives pratiques à adopter s'il y a lieu et le calendrier des dépositions. Dans sa réplique, le Procureur juge que la proposition de Joseph Nzirorera est raisonnable, vu les circonstances, et qu'elle constitue un compromis satisfaisant pour résoudre les difficultés logistiques rencontrées par les parties[4]. Mathieu Ngirumpatse souscrit également à la proposition de Joseph Nzirorera[5] et s'oppose fermement à la demande du Procureur tendant à faire commencer le 15 mai 2006 par la déposition du témoin T, cette solution risquant de porter atteinte à ses droits.

4. Comme la Chambre l'a déjà dit, les autorités de l'État d'où le témoin T fera sa déposition ont confirmé qu'elles étaient en mesure de concourir à l'organisation de la vidéoconférence à partir du 22 mai 2006[6]. Au demeurant, le Procureur reconnaît dans sa réplique que le témoin T pourrait commencer à déposer à cette date. La question est donc résolue et ne doit plus être examinée.

5. En l'espèce, le procès s'est ouvert à nouveau en septembre 2005 et à ce jour, la Chambre n'a entendu que trois témoins à charge. Elle comprend la situation difficile que connaît l'équipe du Procureur, mais elle se doit aussi de préserver les divers éléments constitutifs du droit des accusés à un procès équitable, notamment le droit d'être jugés sans retard excessif. Il convient donc que les audiences reprennent le 15 mai 2006 et que le Procureur soit prêt à appeler son premier témoin à la barre à cette date.

6. Par ailleurs, la Chambre estime que tous les problèmes de communication de pièces doivent être réglés maintenant. Les parties sont censées coopérer de bonne foi dans ce domaine et la Chambre les engage fortement à résoudre au plus vite tout problème susceptible de retarder la reprise des débats.

PAR CES MOTIFS, la Chambre

Introduction

1. Le 16 mai 2005, la Chambre a ordonné au Procureur de communiquer à la Défense de chacun des accusés la déclaration du témoin expert André Guichaoua au plus tard le 15 août 2005[1]. À la suite des demandes du Procureur tendant à proroger le délai à trois reprises, la Chambre l'a prorogé comme suit : dans un premier temps jusqu'au 25 novembre 2005[2] ; puis jusqu'au 12 décembre 2005[3] ; et plus récemment jusqu'au 28 février 2006[4].

2. À l'audience en l'espèce du 27 février 2006, le Procureur a appelé l'attention de la Chambre et de la Défense sur le fait que le rapport du professeur Guichaoua était achevé et serait expédié ce jour-là par courrier international, mais que son dépôt serait légèrement retardé[5]. Le rapport a été déposé par la suite au Greffe, après quoi il a été communiqué à la Défense entre le 7 et le 9 mars 2006.

3. Le 10 mars 2006, la Défense de Nzirorera et celle de Ngirumpatse ont déposé des requêtes[6] tendant à l'exclusion du rapport du professeur Guichaoua en raison du retard supplémentaire accusé. Dans sa réponse en date du 15 mars 2006[7], le Procureur s'est opposé aux deux requêtes.

Délibération

4. À l'appui de sa requête, la Défense de Ngirumpatse invoque les articles 19 et 20 du Statut du Tribunal et l'article 54 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve, (le « Règlement »).

5. Pour fonder sa demande, la Défense de Nzirorera fait l'historique de cette question devant la Chambre, en soutenant que le « non-respect chronique » [traduction] des décisions de la Chambre de première instance par le Procureur doit être réparé par l'exclusion de la déposition du témoin. Se fondant sur les décisions de la Chambre d'appel en l'affaire Ntagerura[8], Nzirorera fait valoir que, lorsqu'une partie ne communique pas des éléments de preuve dans le délai imparti par la Chambre de première instance, ceux-ci doivent être exclus à moins que le Procureur ne montre que le non-respect de la décision de la Chambre de première instance n'est pas dû à son manque de diligence. Nzirorera soutient par ailleurs que l'intérêt d'un procès équitable commande que le rapport soit exclu dans son intégralité en raison de sa longueur et des questions qui y sont abordées sur lesquelles la Défense doit enquêter.

6. Le Procureur s'oppose aux deux requêtes tendant à l'exclusion des éléments de preuve, faisant observer qu'une telle exclusion ne servirait pas l'intérêt de la justice et l'économie judiciaire. Il fait remarquer que ni Nzirorera ni Ngirumpatse n'ont soulevé d'objections à la prorogation des délais lorsque la question a été débattue en audience publique. Le Procureur note également que le retard accusé dans la transmission du courrier international s'est soldé par la réception du rapport à Arusha le 5 mars 2006, alors qu'il a été expédié les 27 et 28 février 2006, et qu'un retard additionnel a été occasionné par les démarches entreprises au Greffe pour le dépôt dudit rapport.

7. À titre d'annexes à sa réponse, le Procureur joint la correspondance électronique pertinente entre M. Guichaoua et le Greffe. Il ressort du premier courriel adressé par M. Guichaoua au Greffe que la première partie de son rapport a été expédiée à Arusha par courrier international le 27 février 2006 et que les pièces à conviction l'étayant seraient expédiées par courrier international dans les 48 heures. Le second courriel de M. Guichaoua au Greffe en date du 1er mars 2006 notifie le Greffe de l'expédition la veille par courrier international des pièces à conviction. Pour expliquer le retard accusé, M. Guichaoua évoquait dans son courriel les difficultés qu'il avait rencontrées pour obtenir son billet de retour en France, à l'issue de ses consultations avec le Procureur à Arusha. Il dit qu'il lui fallait avoir accès aux facilités à sa disposition en France pour mettre la dernière main au rapport et l'expédier. Le fait qu'il soit arrivé en retard en France l'a empêché de terminer le rapport dans le délai imparti.

8. La Chambre estime que les demandes de Ngirumpatse et de Nzirorera tendant à l'exclusion de la déposition de M. Guichaoua doivent être rejetées. Pour arriver à cette conclusion, elle a d'abord tenu compte des raisons avancées pour expliquer ce retard. À cet égard, il convient de noter que bien que le rapport ait été communiqué à la Défense sept à neuf jours environ après le délai prescrit dans la décision de la Chambre de première instance du 1er février 2006, le retard a été occasionné, d'une part, par le recours aux services de courrier international et, d'autre part, par le temps requis par le Greffe pour traiter les documents en vue de leur dépôt – dans les deux cas, les circonstances étaient indépendantes de la volonté du Procureur. La Chambre admet également que les difficultés rencontrées par M. Guichaoua dans les démarches pour son voyage de retour en France l'ont quelque peu empêché de mettre la dernière main à la version définitive de son rapport en temps voulu afin qu'il soit expédié dans les délais. Deuxièmement, la Chambre s'est demandée dans quelle mesure, le cas échéant, un retard supplémentaire de sept à neuf jours porterait atteinte au droit des accusés garanti par les articles 19 et 20 du Statut. Comme l'a relevé la Chambre dans ses décisions antérieures relatives au retard accusé dans la communication de rapports de témoins experts, la Chambre estime qu'on ne peut pas dire que ce retard porterait atteinte aux droits des accusés. Elle est habilitée à gérer le procès de manière à garantir que le retard ne se traduise pas par une injustice envers les accusés – à ce titre, elle peut notamment statuer, à tout moment, sur les préoccupations exprimées par Nzirorera à propos de la longueur du rapport et des questions nécessitant des enquêtes. En ce sens, la Chambre tient à indiquer clairement que l'exclusion de témoignages est une mesure extrême dans l'éventail des réparations dont elle dispose. Troisièmement, la question tranchée dans l'arrêt de la Chambre d'appel sur lequel se fonde Nzirorera n'est pas comparable à la présente affaire. L'arrêt de la Chambre d'appel vise en effet le délai de présentation d'éléments de preuve supplémentaires devant la Chambre d'appel en vertu de l'article 115 du Règlement, alors que la question dont est saisie ici la Chambre porte sur la démarche à suivre en cas de non-respect par une partie d'une décision rendue en vertu de l'article 94 bis du Règlement.

PAR CES MOTIFS,

LA CHAMBRE

REJETTE les requêtes de Mathieu Ngirumpatse et de Joseph Nzirorera tendant à l'exclusion de la déposition de M. André Guichaoua.

1. La Chambre d'appel du Tribunal pénal international chargé de juger le spersonnes présumée sresponsables d'actes de génocide ou d'autres violations graves du droit international humanitaire commis sur le territoire du rwanda et les citoyens rwandais présumés de tels actes ou violations commis sur le territoire d'Etats voisins entre le 1er janvier et le 31 décembre 1994 (la « Chambre d'appel » et le « Tribunal », respectivement) est saisie d'un appel interlocutoire déposé par Joseph Nzirorera[1] contre la décision orale rendue par la Chambre de première instance le 16 février 2006[2] (la « décision contestée »). Cet appel soulève la question de savoir si la Chambre de première instance a donné à M. Nzirorera suffisamment de temps pour préparer le contre-interrogatoire d'un témoin, suite à la communication tardive par le Procureur d'informations susceptibles de le disculper et présentatn un intérêt dans le cadre dudit contre-interrogatoire, d'une part, et, d'autre part, si elle a appliqué le critère idoine et suivi les procédures appropriées en se refusant à ordonner la communication d'autres pièces.

Historique

2. Le procès dont découle cet appel n'en est encore qu'aux premières phases de la présentation des moyens à charge. Il a débuté le 27 novembre 2003 devant une section de la Chambre de première instance III[3]. La Défense a contesté, avec succès, la composition de la Chambre, et la Chambre d'appel a ordonné la reprise du procès de novo[4]. Le procès a repris le 19 septembre 2005[5], et durant la première session, qui a duré jusqu'au 28 octobre 2005, la Chambre de première instance a entendu les dépositions de deux témoins.

3. Le 6 février 2006, avant le commencement de la deuxième session du procès, M. Nzirorera a demandé la communication immédiate de documents se rapportant à la déposition de chacun des Mathieu Ngirumpatse a déposé un mémoire en appui à l'appel de Nzirorera. Voir Le Procureur c. Edouard Karemera et consorts, affaire n°ICTR-98-44-AR73.6, Mémoire de M. témoins qui devait normalement être cité au cours de la sessions à venir[6]. Il affirmait que le Procureur en violation de ses obligations en vertu des articles 66 (A) (ii) et 68 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve du Tribunal (le « Règlement »), ne lui avait pas communiqué ces documents[7]. A titre de réparation, il a demandé une suspension de la procédure de soixante jours[8].

4. Dans la décision contestée, la Chambre de première instance a reconnu que le Procureur avait effectivement manqué à ses obligations de communication s'agissant de certains documents demandés par M. Nzirorera[9]. Elle n'a toutefois pas accepté de suspendre la procédure[10]. En outre, elle a refusé d'ordonner la production d'autres documents, ajoutant ainsi foi à la déclaration du Procureur qui a affirmé soit qu'il ne possédait pas les documents soit que ceux-ci n'étaient pas de nature à disculper l'accusé[11]. Passant outre aux objections soulevées par M. Nzirorera, la Chambre de première instance commença l'audition du témoin UB[12], dont la déposition a duré toute la deuxième session du procès, à savoir du 16 février au 15 mars 2006. Le début de la troisième sessions est prévu le 15 mai 2006.

Examen

A. Motif 1 : Allégation selon laquelle la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur en refusant d'accorder une réparation pour les violations des articles 66 et 68 du Règlement qu'elle a constatées

5. Dans son argumentation sous ce premier motif d'appel, M. Nzirorera met l'accent sur les violations de l'article 68 en rapport avec la déposition du témoin UB[13], l'unique témoin, finalement, etendu durant la deuxième session du procès. Ces violations comprennent notamment la communication tardive d'un jugement rendu par un tribunal rwandais impliquant le témoin UB dans des massacres[14], et les déclarations de deux individus qui incriminenet davantage le témoin[15]. M. Nzirorera affirme que la Chambre de première instance, ayant conclu à de graves manquements du Procureur à ses obligations de communication, a commis une erreur de droit en refusant de lui accorder suffisamment de temps et de facilités pour préparer sa défense, en violation des droits qui lui sont garantis en vertu de l'article 20 (4) (b) du Statut[16].

6. La Chambre de première instance a déclaré que dans les circonstances de l'espèce, M. Nzirorera n'a subi aucun préjudice du fait de la communication tardive des pièces dans la mesure où il en avait plus ou moins connaissance et où le Procureur lui avait communiqué certaines pièces importantes dès le début de la déposition du témoin[17]. M. Nzirorera ne partage pas cette appréciation de la Chambre et soutient qu'il a subi un prejudice car, pour pouvoir mettre valablement en doute la crédibilité du témoin UB sur la base de ces documents, il avait besoin de temps pour les « assimiler » et interroger les individus sur les allégations desquelles ils reposent[18]. Le Procureur fait valoir que dans les circonstances de l'affaire, M. Nzirorera ne pouvait nullement prétendre à une suspension de la procédure[19].

[10] Ibid., p. 8 à 11. La Chambre d'appel fait observer que, compte tenu du calendrier du procès, M. Nzirorera a obtenu le report de soixante jours qu'il a demandé en ce qui concerne tous les témoins sauf Mbonyunkiza et UB qui ont déjà déposé.

[14] Appel de Nzirorera, par. 77. Le Procureur a communiqué ce jugement en kinyarwanda le 13 février 2006. A la demande de la Chambre de première instance, une traduction non officielle en français et en anglais en a été faite à la hâte pour les parties le 16 février 2006. Le jugement contient les allégations de 14 individus impliquant le témoin UB dans plusieurs massacres. Voir Appel de Nzirorera, par. 78 ; Décision contestée, p. 9 et 10. La Chambre d'appel relève que le Procureur a obtenu le jugement rwandais le 10 février 2006. Compte-rendu de l'audience du 13 février 2006, p. 13 à 15.

7. L'obligation du Procureur de communiquer les éléments susceptibles de disculper l'accusé est une condition essentielle d'un procès équitable[20]. Toutefois, une violation de cette importante obligation n'est pas nécessairement synonyme de violation des droits de l'accusé à un procès équitable ouvrant droit à réparation[21]. Si les documents dont la communication est sollicitée en vertu de l'article 68 sont nombreux, les parties sont en droit de demander une suspension du procès afin de pouvoir se préparer convenablement[22]. L'autorité la mieux placée pour déterminer le temps nécessaire à l'accusé pour préparer sa défense est la Chambre de première instance chargée de l'affaire[23].

8. M. Nzirorera a soulevé devant la Chambre de première instance la question de la nécessité d'enquêter suite à la communication tardive des documents en question[24]. Dans la Décision contestée, la Chambre a expressément exémibé l'incidence de la communication tardive de ces pièces sur l'aptitude de M. Nzirorera à se préparer pour la déposition du témoin UB, et elle a conclu que ce retard ne nuirait pas à sa capacité de le contre-interroger de façon efficace[25]. En outre elle a fait observer qu'elle accorderait une réparation additionnelle appropriée qui serait appréciée au cas par cas et indiqué qu'il conviendrait peut-être de rappeler le témoin di des enquêtes complémentaires justifiaient un contre-interrogatoire supplémentaire[26]. Dans les circonstances actuelles, la Chambre d'appel ne saurait dire que la Chambre de première instance a abuse de son pouvoir discrétionnaire en se refusant à suspendre la procédure. Elle estime que dans les affaires longues et complexes, la Chambre de première instance doit exercer son contrôle sur la procédure, selon que de besoin, étant entendu qu'elle ne doit pas porter atteinte au droit des parties à un procès équitable[27].

9. M. Nzirorera soutient que la Chambre de première instance a rejeté sa demande de suspension de la procédure uniquement sur la base d'une interprétation erronée d'une décision orale dans l'affaire Karera[28]. Il fait observer que dans cette affaire, la Chambre de première instance a reporté le contre-interrogatoire du témoin UB, qui comparaissait également dans le cadre de ce procès, en raison de la communication tardive des pièces[29]. Toutefois, il soutient que dans la décision contestée, la Chambre de première instance a estimé à tort, que la décision rendue dans l'affaire Karera prévoyait le rappel du témoin[30]. La Chambre d'appel n'accepte pas l'affirmation de M. Nzirorera selon laquelle la Chambre de première instance est parvenue à une décision contestée sur la base d'une interprétation erronée de la décision rendue dans l'affaire Karera. En l'espèce, en refusant de suspendre la procédure, la Chambre de première instance a analyse, dans le contexte de l'affaire, quelle incidence aurait le retard pris à communiquer les pièces sur l'aptitude de M. Nzirorera à contre-interroger le témoin UB[31]. Elle a également fait observer qu'elle avait à sa disposition un éventail d'autres mesures éventuelles, y compris le report ou l'exclusion de la déposition du témoin[32]. Ce n'est qu'ensuite qu'elle a formulé ses observations relativement à la décision Karera[33].

10. M. Nzirorera affirme également que le rappel du témoin à titre de mesure exceptionnelle, est une réparation insuffisante[34]. La Chambre d'appel fait toutefois observer que le caractère satisfaisant de cette réparation n'a pas été établi en l'espèce puisque M. Nzirorera n'a pas encore demandé à rappeler le témoin en question. En outre, à ce stade, il est absolument impossible de dire quelle valeur probante, le cas échéant, la Chambre de première instance va accorder à la déposition du témoin UB à la lumière du contre-interrogatoire en cours ou d'autres éléments de preuve et communication fournis durant la procédure.

11. Ce moyen d'appel est par conséquent rejeté.

B. Motif II : Allégation selon laquelle la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur en fixant un seuil excessif pour rapporter la preuve de violations de l'article 68, violations qui, selon elle, n'ont pas été établies

12. Sous ce deuxième motif d'appel, M. Nzirorera soutient que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur en refusant d'ordonner la communication d'éléments additionnels en la possession du Procureur et en se rapportant aux témoins Mnonyunkiza, UB, GFA, et GBU[35]. Il affirme que les membres de son équipe de la défense ont interrogé un certain nombre de personnes qui ont reconnu avoir fourni au Procureur des déclarations qui, de l'avis de la défense, contredisaient la déposition attendue ds témoins à charge sur des faits précis[36]. M. Nzirorera soutient qu'en refusant d'ordonner la communication de ces éléments, la Chambre de première instance a fixé des conditions très rigoureuses pour qu'une violation de l'article 68 soit établie, puisqu'elle demande que la défense connaisse effectivement la teneur des déclarations en question avant d'en ordonner la communication[37].

13. Pour établir une violation de l'obligation de communication en vertu de l'article 68, la défense doit : (i) établir qu'il existe d'autres éléments que ceux qui lui ont été communiqués et qu'ils sont en la possession du Procureur ; (ii) présenter un commencement de preuve accréditant l'idée que les éléments recherchés seraient susceptibles de disculper l'accusé[38].

14. Le Procureur a reconnu avoir recueilli des déclarations auprès de certaines personnes, comme l'a allégué la défense, mais il ne considère pas ces informations comme étant susceptibles de disculper l'accusé.[39] La Chambre de première instance a accepté les vues que le Procureur a exposées à cet effet, faisant observer que la défense ne les a pas réfutées[40].

15. M. Nzirorera soutient qu'en acceptant ces vues, la Chambre de première instance a négligé de prendre en considération l'historique des violations de l'article 68 par le Procureur dans la présente affaire, l'opinion « inexacte » que le Procureur se fait de ses obligations en vertu de l'article 68, ainsi que la probabilité qu'un témoin d'un fait important que le Procureur ne cite pas puisse posséder des informations qui entament la crédibilité des témoins à charge décrivant le même fait[41]. Le Procureur répond qu'il était loisible à la Chambre de première instance d'accepter ses observations[42].

16. La Chambre d'appel considère que la Chambre de première instance n'a commis aucune erreur en refusant d'ordonner la communication des éléments en question. Le Procureur a seul la charge de communiquer les éléments de preuve susceptible de disculper l'accusé et il lui appartient de déterminer, essentiellement sur la base des faits, quelles pièces remplissent les conditions posées par l'article 68[43].

17. La Chambre d'appel ne peut pas reprocher à la Chambre de première instance de demander à M. Nzirorera de fournir un « fondement probatoire » à l'appui de son allégation selon laquelle les éléments demandés entrent dans le champ d'application de l'article 68, contrairement aux affirmations du Procureur[44]. La Chambre de première instance est en droit de considérer que le Procureur s'acquitte de ses obligations de bonne foi[45]. La Chambre d'appel fait observer que M. Nzirorera s'est appuyé sur les déclarations de son avocat qui rappelait les entretiens qu'il avait eu avec des personnes qui prétendaient avoir fourni au Procureur des récits contradictoires de certains événements[46] pour affirmer que le Procureur avait en sa possession des éléments susceptibles de le disculper. S'il est vrai que la Chambre de première instance n'aurait pas outrepassé son pouvoir discrétionnaire en ordonannt au procureur de communiquer les informations en question sur la base de telles déclarations, la Chambre d'appel ne saurait conclure pour autant qu'elle a abusé de son pouvoir discrétionnaire en s'y refusant.

18. La Chambre d'appel ne partage pas l'opinion selon laquelle la Chambre de première instance, en prenant sa décision, n'a pas dûment pris en considération l'historique des violations touchant les obligations de communication en l'espèce[47]. La Chambre de première instance a expressément déclaré qu'il lui avait été demandé de tirer plusieurs conclusions des différends antérieurs relatifs à la communication des pièces, que M. Nzirorera a rappelés lors du débat oral[48]. En outre, en acceptant les déclarations du Procureur, la Chambre de première instance a insisté sur le fait que l'administration de la justice dépendait de l'intégrité du Procureur, et elle s'est déclarée prête à envisager des sanctions si les déclarations de celui-ci étaient inexactes[49].

19. Ce moyen d'appel est par conséquent rejeté.

C. Motif III : Allégations selon lesquelles la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur en refusant d'examiner les éléments litigieux à huis clos

20. Enfin, sous son troisième motif d'appel, M. Nzirorera soutient que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur en refusant d'examiner les éléments litigieux à huis clos[50]. La Chambre d'appel fait toutefois observer que, selon l'article 68 (D) du Règlement de procédure et depreuve, des informations ne doivent être examinées à huis clos que lorsque le Procureur demande à être dispensé de l'obligation de les communiquer, étant entendu que leur divulgation pourrait hypothèquer des enquêtes en cours, ou pourrait être contraire à l'intérêt public ou porter atteinte à la sécurité d'un Etat.

Introduction

1. Le Procureur prie la Chambre d'ordonner des mesures spéciales pour protéger le témoin ADE[1], en recueillant son témoignage à huis clos par voie de vidéoconférence et en imposant des restrictions à la communication des documents et des informations concernant ledit témoin. À l'appui de sa requête, il a fourni oralement des arguments supplémentaires sur les problèmes de sécurité qu'aurait ce témoin, en réponse à une question de la chambre[2].

[1] Requête confidentielle du Procureur pour une ordonnance de mesures spéciales de protection à l'égard du témoin ADE, déposée le 6 février 2006.

2. Le Procureur fait valoir que le témoin ADE a quelque réticence à se rendre à Arusha parce que, membre de l'AKAZU, il craint pour sa sécurité, que sa déposition attendue est importante parce qu'elle apportera des éléments de preuve sur le mode de fonctionnement présumé de l'« AKAZU », l'un des groupes cités dans l'acte d'accusation comme ayant pris part, de concert avec les trois accusés, à une entreprise criminelle commune et que l'audition du témoin par voie de vidéoconférence préserve l'intérêt de la justice et ne porte pas atteinte au droit de l'accusé à un jugement équitable.

Délibération

Témoignage par vidéoconférence

3. Les conseils de Nzirorera et de Ngirumpatse s'opposent à la requête[3]. Ils sont d'avis qu'il est important que le témoin ADE soit entendu, mais estiment que, pour ce faire, celui-ci doit se rendre à Arusha, afin qu'il puisse être contre-interrogé plus facilement et que sa crédibilité puisse être dûment appréciée. Ils relèvent que les craintes relatives à sa sécurité ne se justifient pas au regard des faits et que le Tribunal devrait être capable d'offrir les mêmes garanties de sécurité à Arusha qu'à La Haye. Ils estiment par ailleurs que le Procureur confond l'intérêt personnel du témoin avec l'intérêt de la justice, et que tout accord entre celui-ci et le Procureur, tendant à garantir au témoin que sa déposition se fera par vidéoconférence, empiète sur les attributions de la Chambre et doit être écarté.

4. La Chambre préfèrerait que le témoin soit entendu au siège du Tribunal à Arusha, ce qui constitue un principe consacré à l'article 90 (A) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »). Cependant, comme le montre la jurisprudence du Tribunal, ce principe n'empêche pas l'audition d'un témoin par vidéoconférence lorsque l'intérêt de la justice le commande. Même si le Règlement ne prévoit pas expressément l'audition de témoins par vidéoconférence, les Chambres de première instance du Tribunal de céans ont néanmoins déclaré qu'il était possible de recourir à cette solution sur le fondement soit de l'article 54 soit de l'article 75 du Règlement[4]. En rendant sa décision, la Chambre doit prendre en compte l'importance de la déposition, l'incapacité ou le refus du témoin de se présenter à l'audience et la question de savoir si des raisons valables ont été fournies pour justifier cette incapacité ou ce refus[5].

5. La Chambre note que le Procureur et la Défense conviennent de l'importance de la déposition du témoin ADE. Compte tenu du fait que celui-ci serait membre de l'«AKAZU » sur les activités et le mode de fonctionnement duquel il détiendrait des informations, la Chambre est d'avis que sa déposition est indéniablement importante pour la thèse du Procureur. Sur la base des arguments avancés par celui-ci, la Chambre admet que les craintes du témoin ADE quant à sa sécurité à Arusha sont bel et bien fondées et authentiques. Elle rappelle que, dans sa décision relative aux mesures spéciales de protection en faveur des témoins G et T, elle a rejeté l'objection soulevée par la Défense selon laquelle celle-ci ne serait plus en mesure de vérifier la crédibilité des témoins, en cas de recours à la vidéoconférence. Aux craintes de la Défense concernant sa moindre capacité à observer le comportement du témoin ADE afin de contester sa crédibilité, la Chambre répond que le témoignage par vidéoconférence ne lui portera pas préjudice[6].

6 La Défense renvoie à l'affaire Zigiranyirazo dans laquelle la Chambre de première instance s'inquiétait des moyens d'évaluer de manière précise les déclarations et le comportement du témoin entendu par vidéoconférence et a finalement exprimé le souhait d'écouter le témoin ADE sans interruption et en personne, dans son lieu de résidence[7]. La Chambre relève que la même Chambre a rendu une décision permettant à un témoin à charge de déposer par vidéoconférence[8]. La Chambre a, par le passé, entendu les témoins G et T par liaison vidéo[9]. Dans la présente affaire, elle estime que l'audition du témoin ADE par ce moyenne l'empêche pas d'évaluer sa crédibilité et ne porte pas atteinte aux droits de l'accusé préws à l'article 20 (4) (e) du statut[10]. Elle est convaincue que l'intérêt de la justice commande que le témoin soit entendu par voie de vidéoconférence.

7. En conséquence, la Chambre rejette la requête subsidiaire de la Défense la priant de siéger à La Haye pour entendre le témoin ADE, en présence des accusés et de leurs conseils.

Huis clos

8. La Chambre estime que, compte tenu des mesures actuellement prises pour assurer la protection du témoin ADE, l'examen de ces demandes particulières doit se faire à huis clos. Il importe que les débats portant sur la planification et le calendrier de la vidéoconférence et/ou sur les modalités des mesures spéciales mises en place pour ce témoin, concernant notamment ses déplacements, ne soient pas portées à la connaissance du public et de la presse et demeurent confidentiels. Toutefois, la Chambre décidera au cas par cas, en fonction des circonstances, si elle doit entendre certaines parties du témoignage à huis clos.

Restrictions imposées a la communication de documents et d'informations

9. Le Procureur prie également la Chambre d'ordonner aux conseils de la Défense et aux accusés de ne communiquer à personne aucun document ni aucune information concernant le témoin ADE, pas même à d'autres équipes de la Défense, sauf si les personnes intéressées assurent la défense dans la présente affaire. Aucune information permettant de l'identifier ne doit être rendue publique. La Chambre rappelle que cette mesure fait déjà l'objet du point n°5 de sa Décision du 10 décembre 2004 accordant des mesures de protection à tous les témoins[11]. Il n'est nul besoin d'y revenir, ladite décision étant toujours en vigueur.

PAR CES MOTIFS. LA CHAMBRE

FAIT DROIT en partie à la requête du Procureur ;

ENJOINT :

a) que le témoin ADE soit entendu par un système sécurisé d'audio et de vidéoconférence, sa déposition étant retransmise en direct au siège du Tribunal à Arusha, en présence de toutes les parties ;

b) que le Greffe prenne toutes les dispositions logistiques nécessaires à l'audition de ce témoin au moyen d'un système d'audio et de vidéoconférence sécurisé, et qu'il le fasse de manière confidentielle ;

c) Que l'interrogatoire complet du témoin, y compris le contre-interrogatoire par la Défense, se déroule à partir du siège du Tribunal à Arusha ;

d) Qu'un représentant de chacune des parties soit autorisé à être présent au lieu à partir duquel le témoin ADE sera entendu, et ceci pour la durée de sa déposition, et que le Greffe prenne, en toute confidentialité, toutes les mesures logistiques nécessaires pour garantir cette présence ;

e) Que les débats concernant la planification et le calendrier de la vidéoconférence se déroulent uniquement a huis clos ;

f) Que les modalités des mesures de protection spéciales déjà adoptées en faveur du témoin ADE, concernant notamment ses déplacements, ne soient pas rendues publiques ni débattues en audience publique.

Édouard Karemera et consorts, Separate Opinion of Judge Short on Complicity in Genocide and Joint Criminal Enterprise Theory, 23 mai 2006 (ICTR-98-44)

complicité dans le génocide est une forme de participation à la perpétration du crime ou un crime distinct[1].

2. La Chambre d'appel est également saisie de deux requêtes déposées respectivement par Mathieu Ngirumpatse et Edouard Karemera à l'effet d'obtenir le report du délai imparti pour répondre à la requête du Procureur jusqu'à ce que celle-ci et l'opinion individuelle du juge Short soient traduites en français[2].

3. L'article 116 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve du Tribunal autorise les reports de délai si la Chambre d'appel consièdre que des motifs valables le justifient. La Chambre d'appel a déjà relevé que la langue de travail des conseils de MM. Karemera et Ngirumpatse est le français et non l'anglais[3]. Elle estime dès lors que pour pouvoir répondre exhaustivement à la requête du Procureur, ils doivent disposer de la version française de celle-ci et de l'opinion individuelle du juge Short[4]. La Chambre d'appel a déjà jugé en l'espèce qu'il s'agissait d'un motif valable pour reporter un délai[5].

Dispositif

4. Par ces motifs, la Chambre d'appel ACCUEILLE les requêtes tendant au report de délai formées par MM. Karemera et Ngirumpatse. Elle ORDONNE au Greffe de fournir de toute urgence à MM. Karemera et Ngirumpatse, ainsi qu'à leurs conseils, la traduction française de la requête du Procureur, de l'opinion individuelle du juge Short et de la présente décision. A partir de la date de communication du dernier de ces documents, MM. Karemera et Ngirumpatse disposent d'un délai de 10 jours pour déposer, s'il y a lieu, leurs réponses à la requête du Procureur. Le Procureur est autorisé à présenter sa réplique dans les quatre jours suivant le dépôt de ces réponses. La Chambre d'appel ORDONNE également au greffe de l'informer de la date à laquelle les documents traduits auront été communiqués.

1. La Chambre d'appel du Tribunal pénal international chargé de juger les personnes présumées responsables d'actes de génocide ou d'autres violations graves du droit international humanitaire commis sur le territoire du Rwanda et les citoyens rwandais présumés responsables de tels actes ou violations commis sur le territoire d'États voisins entre le 1er janvier et le 31 décembre 1994 (respectivement la « Chambre d'appel » et le « Tribunal ») est saisie d'un recours intitulé Appel interlocutoire interjeté par le Procureur de la décision relative au constat judiciaire – Article 73 (C) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve, formé le 12 décembre 2005 (l'« Appel interlocutoire du Procureur » ou le « Recours interlocutoire du Procureur »).

I. Rappel de la procédure et des écritures des parties

2. Le 30 juin 2005, le Procureur a saisi la Chambre de première instance III (la « Chambre de première instance ») d'une requête intitulée Motion for Judicial Notice of Facts of Common Knowledge and Adjudicated Facts (la « Requête du Procureur »). Dans cette requête, il s'est fondé sur l'article 94 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve du Tribunal (le « Règlement ») pour demander que soit dressé le constat judiciaire de six faits qu'il considérait comme des « faits de notoriété publique » et de 153 autres qui, selon ses dires, avaient été « admis » par les juges dans d'autres affaires. Il avait extrait les 153 faits admis des jugements Akayesu, Kayishema et Ruzindana, Rutaganda, Kajelijeli, Musema, Nahimana et consorts, Ndindabahizi, Niyitegeka, Ntakirutimana et Semanza.

3. Par sa Décision relative à la requête du Procureur intitulée « Motion for Judicial Notice of Facts of Common Knowledge and Adjudicated Facts » (la « Décision contestée »), rendue le 9 novembre 2005, la Chambre de première instance a dressé le constat judiciaire de deux des six « faits de notoriété publique », ainsi que celui d'un troisième dont elle a préalablement modifié la formulation, et rejeté la Requête du Procureur pour le surplus. En vertu de l'article 73 (C) du Règlement, le Procureur a demandé l'autorisation d'interjeter appel de cette décision. La Chambre de première instance a fait droit à sa demande le 2 décembre 2005 par un acte intitulé Certification d'appel de la décision relative au constat judiciaire (la « Certification portant autorisation d'interjeter appel ») et le Procureur a interjeté appel le 12 décembre[1].

4. Joseph Nzirorera, un des accusés, a déposé le 13 décembre 2005 une requête intitulée Joseph Nzirorera's Motion to Dismiss Issues of Interlocutory Appeal for Which Certification Was Not Granted (la « Requête de Nzirorera ») pour demander que la Chambre d'appel limite le domaine de l'Appel interlocutoire du Procureur à la seule question sur laquelle porte, selon lui, l'autorisation de faire appel accordée par la Chambre de première instance. Le Procureur a répondu à cette requête le 15 décembre 2005[2] et Nzirorera a produit une réplique le 16 décembre 2005[3]. Le même jour, ce dernier a déposé d'autres écritures intitulées Respondent's Brief of Joseph Nzirorera (la « Réponse de Nzirorera ») dans lesquelles il répond à l'appel interlocutoire sur le fond. Le Procureur a présenté une réplique le 20 décembre 2005[4].

5. Le Procureur fait valoir dans sa réponse à la Requête de Nzirorera comme dans sa réplique à la Réponse de Nzirorera que celui-ci n'était pas en droit de déposer séparément une requête tendant à faire rejeter l'appel interlocutoire et une réponse au même appel. D'après lui, toute partie qui entend répondre à un appel interlocutoire n'a droit qu'à une seule réponse et doit y inclure tout argument militant contre l'appel en question. La Requête de Nzirorera étant l'acte que celui-ci a déposé en premier lieu, le Procureur demande à la Chambre d'appel de la considérer comme sa réponse à l'appel interlocutoire pour écarter la réponse proprement dite qu'il a produite le 16 décembre[5]. Nzirorera n'a pas répondu à ces arguments du Procureur.

6. La Chambre d'appel convient avec le Procureur que Nzirorera n'avait le droit de déposer qu'une seule réponse. Aux termes du paragraphe 2 de la Directive pratique relative à la procédure de dépôt des écritures en appel devant le Tribunal[6], lorsqu'un appel interlocutoire est de droit, la partie adverse indique dans sa réponse > « si elle s'oppose ou non audit appel et expos[e], le cas échéant, les raisons de cette opposition. La réponse énonce, en outre, toute objection à l'applicabilité de la disposition du Règlement sur laquelle l'Appelant a fondé son appel ».

Autrement dit, la réponse doit non seulement porter sur le fond du recours, mais aussi contenir tout argument d'ordre procédural militant pour le rejet dudit recours. Dans sa requête, Nzirorera s'oppose à ce que l'article 73 (B) du Règlement soit considéré comme un des fondements de l'appel interlocutoire, au motif que celui-ci outrepasse les limites de l'autorisation accordée en application de cette disposition. Un tel argument aurait dû faire partie de sa réponse.

7. La Chambre d'appel estime toutefois que, compte tenu des circonstances exceptionnelles caractérisant la cause, l'intérêt de la justice commande d'examiner les arguments présentés dans la Requête et la Réponse de Nzirorera. Deux raisons militent en faveur de ce point de vue. Premièrement, le conseil de Nzirorera a peut-être cru de bonne foi (bien que ce fût à tort) que la disposition de la Directive pratique relative au dépôt des écritures en appel citée plus haut ne s'appliquait pas aux appels interlocutoires autorisés par une Chambre de première instance, la Chambre d'appel n'ayant pas encore statué sur cette question[7]. Cela étant, la sanction serait disproportionnée à la violation des textes qu'il a commise si la Chambre d'appel écartait complètement la Réponse de Nzirorera et examinait donc sur le fond les questions soulevées en appel sans tenir compte d'un seul de ses arguments.

8. Deuxièmement, l'acte d'appel même du Procureur viole la Directive pratique relative à la longueur des mémoires et des requêtes en appel[8] dont la section (C) (2) (a) (1) se lit comme suit : « La requête d'une partie qui souhaite interjeter appel d'une décision pour laquelle un recours est de droit n'excède pas 15 pages ou 4 500 mots ». S'appuyant plutôt sur la section (C) (2) (d)[9] de cette directive, le Procureur a déposé un document dont l'original comprend 28 pages [et la traduction 27 pages], sans compter les annexes. Or, la disposition retenue par le Procureur ne s'applique qu'aux cas où la Chambre d'appel a ordonné aux parties ou leur a expressément accordé l'autorisation de déposer des « mémoires » sur le fond d'un appel interlocutoire, c'est-à-dire aux cas où la Chambre d'appel considère que la complexité des questions soulevées justifie le dépôt de conclusions plus volumineuses que celles autorisées par les dispositions de droit commun des alinéas a et c. La Chambre d'appel n'a ni ordonné ni autorisé cette mesure exceptionnelle en l'espèce. Aucun des accusés ne s'étant opposé à l'appel du Procureur sur cette base, la Chambre d'appel n'est pas obligée de sanctionner la violation des textes qu'il a ainsi commise[10]. Compte tenu du fait que tous les accusés ont déjà déposé leurs réponses à l'appel du Procureur, que cet appel soulève des questions importantes et que le Procureur – à l'instar de Nzirorera – se serait vraisemblablement mépris sur l'applicabilité des diverses dispositions de la directive pratique, la Chambre d'appel estime que la solution la plus équitable consiste à juger que l'Appel interlocutoire du Procureur a été valablement interjeté. Cette démarche offre une autre raison de ne pas faire abstraction des arguments exposés dans la Réponse de Nzirorera, par souci d'équité envers l'accusé.

[7] La Directive pratique relative au dépôt des écritures en appel distingue entre les recours qui sont « de droit » et ceux qui sont « soumis à l'autorisation d'une formation de trois juges de la Chambre d'appel ». Elle ne fait pas expressément état des recours autorisés par une Chambre de première instance (suivant une procédure qui a été créée dans le cadre d'une modification du Règlement après l'adoption de la directive). La Chambre d'appel estime cependant qu'une fois que la Chambre de première instance a donné le feu vert nécessaire, ces recours deviennent des recours « de droit », puisqu'ils sont autorisés par l'article 73 (B) du Règlement et les appelants n'ont pas besoin de solliciter une autorisation supplémentaire de la Chambre d'appel pour les former. Au demeurant, les dispositions de la directive pratique qui régissent le contenu des réponses sont les mêmes pour toutes les catégories d'appel interlocutoire. Voir la Directive pratique relative au dépôt des écritures en appel, par. 2 et 5.

9. Pour les raisons susmentionnées, la Chambre d'appel approuve le fait que Nzirorera a scindé la réponse autorisée par le paragraphe 2 de la Directive pratique relative au dépôt des écritures en appel en deux documents distincts (à savoir la Requête de Nzirorera et la Réponse de Nzirorera). Elle examinera par conséquent les moyens présentés dans les deux documents. La Réponse du Procureur à la requête de Nzirorera et la Réplique du Procureur à la réponse de Nzirorera sont dès lors aussi recevables en ce qu'elles constituent essentiellement une version en deux parties de la réplique autorisée par le paragraphe 3 de la Directive pratique relative au dépôt des écritures en appel. La Chambre d'appel ne prendra toutefois pas en compte les arguments présentés dans la Réplique tendant à étayer la requête de Nzirorera. En effet, aucune des dispositions de la directive pratique n'autorise un intimé à déposer des conclusions supplémentaires à la suite de la réplique de l'appelant et les raisons évoquées plus haut ne suffisent pas pour autoriser Nzirorera à le faire.

10. La Chambre d'appel a différé l'examen du recours du Procureur parce qu'elle attendait les réponses des autres accusés, à savoir Édouard Karemera et Mathieu Ngirumpatse, qui les ont finalement déposées le 22 mai 2006[11], soit plusieurs mois après les écritures susmentionnées. Cet intervalle s'explique par de longs retards pris dans la réalisation et la communication de plusieurs traductions que la Chambre d'appel avait ordonné de produire[12]. Les deux réponses ont été déposées dans le délai imparti par la Chambre d'appel dans sa Décision relative à la prorogation de délai (10 jours après la communication des traductions en question). Elles ne sont donc pas tardives. Le Procureur a produit une « réplique globale » à ces réponses le 25 mai 2006.

II. Éventail des motifs pour lesquels l'autorisation d'interjeter appel a été accordée

11. Dans son appel interlocutoire, le Procureur allègue que la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit en ce qu'elle a refusé de considérer quatre faits comme des faits de notoriété publique au sens de l'article 94 (A) du Règlement pour en dresser le constat judiciaire, à savoir les faits n°1, 2, 5 et 6 énoncés à l'annexe A de l'appel interlocutoire. Il allègue en outre qu'elle a commis une erreur de droit et de fait en ce qu'elle a refusé de considérer 147 faits énoncés à l'annexe B de son appel interlocutoire comme des faits admis par les juges dans d'autres affaires au sens de l'article 94 (B) du Règlement pour en dresser le constat judiciaire[13]. En revanche, il ne fait pas grief à la Chambre de première instance d'avoir refusé de dresser le constat judiciaire de six autres faits[14].

[12] Voir la Décision relative à la demande de prorogation, 27 janvier 2006 (la « Décision relative à la prorogation de délai »), par. 8 (qui prescrit que les réponses en question soient déposées dans un délai de 10 jours à compter de la date à laquelle « le dernier de […] quatre documents traduits aura été communiqué [à] l'accusé et [à] son coaccusé M. Karemera »). Les versions françaises des quatre documents visés ─ la Certification portant autorisation d'interjeter appel, la Décision relative à la prorogation de délai, l'Appel interlocutoire du Procureur et la Décision contestée ─ ont été déposées respectivement les 24 janvier, 7 février, 6 mars et 10 avril 2006. Toutefois, le Greffe a confirmé que la Décision contestée n'avait été communiquée aux conseils de Karemera et à ceux de Ngirumpatse que le 11 mai 2006. En application de la Décision relative à la prorogation de délai et de l'article 7 ter (B) du Règlement, la date butoir des réponses était donc le 22 mai 2006. Elles ont été déposées dans le délai imparti.

[14] Ibid., par. 5. Les faits en question sont énoncés aux paragraphes 31, 32 et 75 à 78 de l'annexe B de l'Appel interlocutoire du Procureur.

12. L'accusé Joseph Nzirorera estime que le recours du Procureur déborde le cadre défini dans la Certification portant autorisation d'interjeter appel. Selon lui, cette autorisation n'avait trait qu'à la question juridique de savoir s'il est permis de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits admis dans d'autres affaires qui touchent directement ou indirectement à la culpabilité de l'accusé [15].

13. Aux termes de l'article 73 (B) du Règlement, une Chambre de première instance saisie d'une requête tendant à faire accorder l'autorisation de former un recours interlocutoire contre une décision peut certifier à cet effet la décision en cause si elle estime que celle-ci « touche une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement l'équité et la rapidité du procès, ou son issue », à tel point que « son règlement immédiat par la Chambre d'appel pourrait concrètement faire progresser la procédure ». L'octroi de la certification est laissé à l'appréciation souveraine de la Chambre : l'article 73 du Règlement ne prévoit aucun appel interlocutoire de droit[16]. La Chambre d'appel a déjà reconnu que le pouvoir souverain d'appréciation de la Chambre de première instance qui lui permet de décider s'il convient d'autoriser un appel interlocutoire a pour corollaire la latitude de limiter le champ de l'appel interlocutoire à certaines questions[17]. En l'espèce, c'est donc la Certification de la Chambre de première instance portant autorisation d'interjeter appel qui dicte les questions que la Chambre d'appel peut trancher dans sa décision. En conséquence, la Chambre d'appel se doit d'interpréter le champ d'application de cette certification.

14. Malheureusement, le libellé de la Certification portant autorisation d'interjeter appel est loin d'être clair à ce sujet. Au paragraphe 3 de ce document, la Chambre de première instance reconnaît que le Procureur a mis en avant

> « un certain nombre de questions […] dont il estime qu'elles remplissent les deux critères requis pour justifier le recours au pouvoir discrétionnaire de la Chambre, en application de l'article 73 (B) du Règlement ».

Elle poursuit en ces termes :

> 4. L'un des points soulevés dans la décision contestée qui, aux dires du Procureur, justifie le recours au pouvoir discrétionnaire de la Chambre est le refus de celle-ci de dresser le constat judiciaire d'un certain nombre de faits, en tant que faits admis, au motif qu'ils porteraient directement ou indirectement sur la culpabilité des accusés, en particulier dans l'optique de leur participation alléguée à une entreprise criminelle commune. Le Procureur fait valoir qu'une interprétation large de cet argument conduirait à la conclusion qu'aucun fait ne devrait donner lieu à un constat judiciaire, étant donné que la majorité des faits présentés par le Procureur sont censés prouver directement ou indirectement la culpabilité des accusés.
> 5. De l'avis de la Chambre, ce point satisfait aux deux critères à remplir en vue d'une certification d'appel.
>
> PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE FAIT DROIT, en vertu de l'article 73 (B) du Règlement, à la demande de certification d'appel interlocutoire de la décision intitulée « Decision on Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice », rendue le 9 novembre 2005[18].

La Chambre de première instance ne fait nullement mention des autres questions pour lesquelles l'autorisation d'interjeter appel a été demandée. Il s'avère donc d'une part qu'elle s'est fondée sur une seule question pour autoriser l'appel interlocutoire et d'autre part que le dispositif de la Certification portant autorisation d'interjeter appel ne prétend pas limiter le champ d'application de l'autorisation à cette question.

[18] Certification portant autorisation d'interjeter appel, par. 4 et 5.

15. Selon la Chambre d'appel, même si on peut valablement conclure de l'examen de la certification que son champ d'application a été limité à une seule question, il est plus probable que la Chambre de première instance n'avait pas l'intention d'imposer cette limite. Premièrement, au paragraphe 3 de sa décision, elle dit expressément que le Procureur a sollicité l'autorisation d'interjeter appel pour « un certain nombre de questions ». Il serait étrange qu'elle examine par la suite une de ces questions dans le détail et fasse complètement abstraction des autres, à moins qu'elle n'ait jugé inutile de statuer sur celles-ci dès lors qu'elle avait tranché la première, la question réglée étant suffisante à elle seule pour justifier l'autorisation de former tout le recours envisagé. Par ailleurs, comme le fait remarquer le Procureur[19], le raisonnement suivi par la Chambre de première instance pour accorder la certification portait en général sur l'utilité que le constat judiciaire peut avoir dans l'accélération du procès. Ce raisonnement s'applique également bien aux autres questions soulevées par le Procureur[20]. Dans ces circonstances, à supposer que la Chambre de première instance ait voulu refuser purement et simplement d'autoriser l'appel sur les autres questions, sa démarche pourrait constituer un manquement à l'obligation de motiver sa décision si elle se bornait à omettre l'examen de ces questions, sans la moindre explication, pour exprimer son refus[21].

16. Il n'est ni illogique ni interdit qu'une Chambre de première instance accorde l'autorisation de faire appel de l'ensemble d'une décision sur la base d'une seule question qui, à son avis, satisfait aux critères prévus par l'article 73 (B) du Règlement. Bien au contraire, c'est une démarche conforme à la lettre de cet article qui demande uniquement que la Chambre de première instance recherche s'il y a « une question » remplissant certaines conditions déterminées pour accorder l'autorisation de faire réexaminer en cours de procès telle ou telle décision et n'impose pas l'obligation de limiter le réexamen de la décision à la question retenue. Ainsi, bien que la Chambre d'appel ait conclu que la Chambre de première instance pouvait limiter la possibilité de faire réexaminer ses décisions à la question ou aux questions qui, d'après elle, remplissent clairement les conditions fixées par l'article 73 (B), elle n'est pas tenue d'agir de la sorte.

17. Cet éclairage cadre avec le souci d'assurer l'équité et la rapidité du procès qui caractérise l'article 73 du Règlement. Les appels interlocutoires prévus par l'article 73 interrompent la procédure et ne doivent dès lors être autorisés que s'ils présentent un grand avantage, c'est-à-dire si la Chambre de première instance estime qu'il y a une question importante qui mérite d'être tranchée immédiatement par la Chambre d'appel. Mais une fois qu'une question de cette nature a été mise en évidence et un appel interlocutoire autorisé, le fait d'admettre que la Chambre d'appel règle par la même occasion certaines questions connexes à celle retenue ne risque guère de prolonger l'interruption de la procédure et peut au bout du compte contribuer à assurer l'équité et la rapidité recherchées.

18. Nzirorera fait valoir que saisie d'un recours interlocutoire qu'il avait formé avant celui du Procureur, la Chambre d'appel avait considéré que le champ d'application de l'autorisation d'interjeter appel était limité à la question expressément retenue par la Chambre de première instance[22]. Or, la situation n'était pas la même qu'en l'espèce. Comme en l'espèce, la Chambre de première instance n'avait pas précisé si l'autorisation qu'elle accordait pour que sa décision soit attaquée portait uniquement sur la question qu'elle avait examinée (celle de savoir si les juges ad litem étaient compétents pour confirmer des actes d'accusation) ou également sur une question non mentionnée (celle des sanctions infligées au conseil de Nzirorera à raison de la requête qui avait donné lieu à cette

[20] Voir la Certification portant autorisation d'interjeter appel, par. 5.
[21] Le Statut du Tribunal international ne prévoit cette obligation que pour les jugements rendus sur le fond (voir l'article 22.2), mais la Chambre d'appel la retient aussi pour les décisions relatives à des requêtes. Voir, par exemple, Le Procureur c. Haradinaj et consorts, affaire n°IT-04-84-AR65.2, Decision on Lahi Brahimaj's Interlocutory Appeal Against the Trial Chamber's Decision Denying His Provisional Release, 9 mars 2006, par. 10.
[22] Requête de Nzirorera, par. 9 à 13, citant la décision intitulée Decision of Interlocutory Appeals Regarding Participation of Ad Litem Judges, 11 juin 2004.

décision)[23]. Ainsi, comme en l'espèce, la Chambre d'appel était obligée de déduire l'intention de la Chambre de première instance des circonstances de la cause et du raisonnement de la Chambre. Par contre, il ressortait clairement des circonstances de la cause que la Chambre de première instance n'avait pas eu l'intention de certifier la question des sanctions, car juste une ou deux minutes plus tard, lors de la même audience contradictoire, elle avait rejeté la demande de Nzirorera qui tentait d'obtenir l'autorisation de former un recours contre une autre sanction infligée au conseil. Elle avait déclaré à cet égard qu'

Compte tenu de cette déclaration, il était évident que la Chambre de première instance n'avait pas eu l'intention d'autoriser des appels interlocutoires portant sur des sanctions financières. En outre, à la différence du cas présent, la raison avancée par la Chambre de première instance pour autoriser un appel interlocutoire sur la question des juges ad litem n'avait aucun rapport avec la question des sanctions. En l'espèce, comme il a été relevé plus haut, la raison pour laquelle la Chambre de première instance a accepté que la Chambre d'appel détermine en cours de procès les questions qui peuvent à bon droit faire l'objet d'un constat judiciaire est valable pour tous les points de l'appel du Procureur.

19. Les autres décisions invoquées par Nzirorera ne confortent pas sa thèse non plus. Dans l'affaire Le Procureur c. Nyiramasuhuko[25], la Chambre de première instance avait été saisie de deux demandes d'autorisation d'interjeter appel bien distinctes. Elle a fait droit à ces demandes dans deux décisions distinctes. Par erreur, l'appelant a tenu compte d'une seule des deux autorisations obtenues pour former son recours, présumant que la Chambre d'appel statuerait également sur les questions apparentées certifiées dans l'autre décision de la Chambre de première instance. La Chambre d'appel a jugé qu'aucun recours n'ayant été formé en vertu de la seconde autorisation, elle n'était pas saisie de la seconde question et ne pouvait donc pas statuer sur celle-ci. Dans l'affaire Le Procureur c. Bizimungu et consorts[26], le Procureur avait présenté plusieurs demandes tendant à faire réviser les mesures de protection des témoins à décharge pour chacun des quatre accusés. La Chambre de première instance a rejeté trois de ces demandes et accordé au Procureur l'autorisation d'interjeter appel. Elle ne s'était pas encore prononcée sur la quatrième demande. Statuant sur l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur en ce qui concerne les trois demandes déjà rejetées, la Chambre d'appel a déclaré, comme on pouvait s'y attendre, qu'il serait prématuré de trancher les questions soulevées dans la quatrième demande.

20. Compte tenu de ce qui précède, la Chambre d'appel juge que la Chambre de première instance entendait autoriser le Procureur à faire appel de la Décision contestée sur toutes les questions soulevées dans son recours interlocutoire. En conséquence, elle rejette la Requête de Nzirorera.

21. Il convient cependant de préciser que lorsqu'elle entreprend d'examiner un recours interlocutoire dont le champ ne se limite pas aux questions qui, d'après la Chambre de première instance, remplissent clairement les conditions prévues par l'article 73 (B) du Règlement, la Chambre d'appel ne s'intéresse pas aux sujets dont l'examen ne fera pas concrètement progresser la procédure. Elle relève à ce propos l'argument de Karemera selon lequel le Procureur n'a, dans l'ensemble, pas établi l'existence d'erreurs invalidant la décision de la Chambre de première instance ou ayant entraîné un déni de justice au sens de l'article 24 (1) du Statut[27]. S'il est vrai que l'article 24 (1) s'applique spécialement aux recours formés après le procès contre la décision finale de la Chambre de première instance, il n'en reste pas moins qu'en cas d'appel interlocutoire, même lorsque l'autorisation prévue par l'article 73 (B) du Règlement a été accordée, la Chambre d'appel n'a pas l'habitude de se prononcer sur des erreurs invoquées qui ne portent pas à conséquence[28]. Elle tiendra compte de ce principe lors de l'examen de chacune des allégations d'erreurs du Procureur.

III. Constat judiciaire de faits de notoriété publique

22. L'article 94 (A) du Règlement dispose que « [l]a Chambre de première instance n'exige pas la preuve de ce qui est de notoriété publique, mais en dresse le constat judiciaire ». Comme l'a relevé à juste titre la Chambre de première instance[29], l'application de cette règle n'est pas facultative : une fois qu'elle a conclu qu'un fait est « de notoriété publique », la Chambre de première instance doit en dresser le constat judiciaire. À ce propos, la Chambre d'appel a déclaré dans l'arrêt Semanza ce qui suit :

> Comme la Chambre d'appel du TPIY l'a précisé dans l'affaire Le Procureur c. Milošević, l'article 94 (A) du Règlement fait « obligation » de dresser le constat judiciaire d'informations « notoires ». L'expression « de notoriété publique » s'applique aux faits qui ne sont pas raisonnablement l'objet d'une contestation. En d'autres termes, il s'agit de faits communément admis ou universellement connus, tels que de grands faits historiques, des données géographiques ou les lois de la nature. Ces faits doivent non seulement être largement connus, mais aussi échapper à toute contestation raisonnable.[30] [traduction]

23. La question de savoir si un fait remplit les conditions requises pour être considéré comme un « fait de notoriété publique » est d'ordre juridique. Par définition, la réponse ne saurait dépendre des éléments de preuve versés au dossier dans telle ou telle affaire. En conséquence, bien que la Chambre d'appel ait l'habitude de se ranger à la manière dont la Chambre de première instance a apprécié les éléments de preuve et aux conclusions que celle-ci en a tirées lorsqu'elle réexamine les décisions de première instance, cette règle ne s'applique pas aux faits de notoriété publique. Selon Nzirorera, la Chambre d'appel devrait s'en remettre à la liberté d'appréciation de la Chambre de première instance en ce qui concerne l'« admissibilité des moyens de preuve » et « la façon dont les faits doivent être établis au procès[31] » [traduction]. Or, la disposition spéciale et impérative de l'article 94 (A) du Règlement l'emporte sur la règle générale qui confère à la Chambre de première instance un pouvoir souverain d'appréciation sur ces questions. Comme la Chambre d'appel l'a souligné plus haut, il n'est pas loisible à la Chambre de première instance de décider qu'un fait « de notoriété publique » sera obligatoirement établi par des éléments de preuve au procès. Pour ces raisons, toute décision par laquelle une Chambre de première instance statue sur l'opportunité de dresser le constat judiciaire d'un fait pertinent[32] en vertu de l'article 94 (A) du Règlement peut être réexaminée en appel.

24. Le Procureur avait demandé à la Chambre de première instance de dresser en vertu de l'article 94 (A) le constat judiciaire de six faits qui, selon lui, étaient de notoriété publique. Sa demande a été accueillie pour les faits n°3 et 4 (la qualité d'État partie à divers traités acquise par le Rwanda), mais rejetée pour les autres faits, à cette exception que la Chambre de première instance a dressé le constat judiciaire du fait n°1 après en avoir modifié la formulation. À présent, la Chambre d'appel va examiner les arguments avancés par le Procureur en appel au sujet des faits portant les numéros 1, 2, 5 et 6.

[32] Comme l'indique Nzirorera (voir la Réponse de Nzirorera, par. 41), une Chambre de première instance n'est pas tenue de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits qui ne se rapportent pas à l'affaire dont elle est saisie, même si ce sont des « faits de notoriété publique ». Reste, bien entendu, que la Chambre de première instance « n'exige pas la preuve » de tels faits [voir l'article 94 (A) du Règlement], puisque les éléments de preuve tendant à établir un fait sans intérêt seraient de toute façon inadmissibles au regard de l'article 89 (C) du Règlement. Voir Le Procureur c. Hadžihasanović et Kubura, affaire n°IT-01-47-T, Décision finale relative au constat judiciaire de faits admis dans d'autres affaires, 20 avril 2004 (qui précise que « la Chambre a pour obligation de vérifier, au regard de l'article 89 (C) du Règlement, la pertinence de ces quatre Faits Définitivement Proposés avant d'en dresser le constat judiciaire »). La vérification de la pertinence d'un fait est circonscrite par diverses règles de droit, mais, dès lors qu'elle s'effectue dans le cadre juridique approprié, la Chambre de première instance jouit d'une certaine marge d'appréciation.

Fait n° 1: Le fait que les Hutus, les Tutsis et les Twas constituaient des groupes ethniques

25. Le Procureur avait demandé que soit dressé le constat judiciaire du fait suivant : « Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, les citoyens rwandais autochtones étaient individuellement identifiés selon la classification ethnique suivante : Tutsis, Hutus et Twas[33] ». Au lieu de cela, la Chambre de première instance a dressé le constat judiciaire de « l'existence des Twas, des Tutsis et des Hutus comme groupes protégés au sens de la Convention sur le génocide », faisant observer que cette classification était conforme à la jurisprudence du Tribunal et que lesdits groupes se caractérisaient par « leur stabilité et leur permanence[34] ». Le Procureur fait valoir que la Chambre de première instance aurait dû employer le terme « ethnique » pour s'aligner sur l'arrêt Semanza. Il dit à juste titre que l'arrêt Semanza a reconnu que les Tutsis formaient un groupe « ethnique », mais ne tente pas de prouver que la formulation choisie par la Chambre de première instance risque de lui porter préjudice ou de rendre le procès moins équitable et rapide. Selon la Chambre d'appel, cette formulation n'est pas susceptible d'entraîner de telles conséquences, puisqu'elle dégage aussi (ou peut-être plus clairement encore) le Procureur de la charge de produire des éléments de preuve pour établir que le groupe tutsi était protégé au sens de la Convention sur le génocide. La Chambre d'appel n'a donc pas à rechercher si la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur en ce qu'elle a choisi de ne pas adopter la formulation du Procureur et – comme les accusés n'ont pas interjeté appel – conclu que la qualité de groupe protégé était un fait de notoriété publique. Cela étant, elle rejette l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur sur ce point.

Faits n°2 et 5 : Existence d'attaques généralisées ou systématiques

26. Le deuxième fait dont le Procureur avait sollicité le constat judiciaire est ainsi libellé :

> La situation suivante a existé au Rwanda entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994 : sur toute l'étendue du Rwanda, des attaques généralisées ou systématiques ont été dirigées contre une population civile en raison de son appartenance au groupe ethnique tutsi. Au cours de ces attaques, des citoyens rwandais ont tué des personnes considérées comme des Tutsis ou porté gravement atteinte à leur intégrité physique ou mentale. Ces attaques ont entraîné la mort d'un grand nombre de personnes appartenant à l'ethnie tutsie.[35]

La Chambre de première instance a rejeté la demande du Procureur, au motif que le constat sollicité avait trait à « une conclusion juridique qui constitue un élément d'un crime contre l'humanité », que « [c]haque fois qu'il allègue la commission d'un crime contre l'humanité, le Procureur doit fournir la preuve de l'existence d'une telle attaque » et qu'elle « estime en conséquence qu'il ne peut en être dressé un constat judiciaire[36] ». S'appuyant essentiellement sur les mêmes raisons, elle a aussi refusé de dresser le constat judiciaire du cinquième fait, à savoir qu' « entre le 1er janvier et le 17 juillet 1994, un conflit armé non international s'est déroulé au Rwanda[37] ».

27. Le Procureur soutient en appel que la Chambre de première instance aurait dû se conformer à l'arrêt Semanza qui reconnaît que ces faits sont « de notoriété publique ». Nzirorera répond qu'ils sont raisonnablement contestables et doivent être établis par des éléments de preuve. De plus, il cite diverses décisions antérieures à l'arrêt Semanza dans lesquelles les Chambres de première instance ont refusé d'en dresser le constat judiciaire[38] et relève qu'à la différence du cas présent, le caractère « généralisé ou systématique » des attaques n'a pas été contesté par l'accusé dans l'affaire Semanza[39].

Ngirumpatse avance des arguments similaires et ajoute qu'il est contestable non seulement que les attaques visées aient été perpétrées uniquement contre les Tutsis et en raison de leur appartenance ethnique[40], mais encore que le conflit ait vraiment revêtu un caractère non international[41]. Nzirorera et Karemera déclarent que les qualificatifs « généralisées et systématiques » et « non international » sont des éléments juridiques et non pas factuels et qu'ils ne sauraient donc faire l'objet d'un constat judiciaire[42].

28. Dans l'arrêt Semanza, la Chambre d'appel a dit ce qui suit :

> Comme l'indiquent ces extraits, la Chambre de première instance a trouvé un juste équilibre entre le droit reconnu à l'appelant par l'article 20 (3) du Statut et l'application de la théorie du constat judiciaire en s'assurant que les faits constatés judiciairement n'étaient pas de ceux qui serviraient à établir la responsabilité pénale de l'appelant. Elle n'a ainsi retenu que des faits notoires à caractère général qui ne sont pas l'objet d'une contestation raisonnable, notamment que les citoyens rwandais étaient classés par groupes ethniques entre le mois d'avril et le mois de juillet 1994, que des attaques généralisées ou systématiques dirigées contre une population civile en raison de son appartenance à l'ethnie tutsie ont été perpétrées dans la pays durant cette période, qu'un conflit armé ne présentant pas un caractère international s'est déroulé au Rwanda entre le 1er janvier et le 17 juillet 1994, que le Rwanda a adhéré à la Convention pour la prévention et la répression du crime de génocide de 1948 le 16 avril 1975 et qu'à l'époque visée, le Rwanda était un État partie aux Conventions de Genève du 12 août 1949 et au Protocole additionnel II du 8 juin 1977. La Chambre d'appel estime que le constat judiciaire ainsi dressé ne dégageait pas le Procureur de la charge de la preuve qui lui incombait. Il n'avait d'incidence que sur la manière dont le Procureur pouvait s'acquitter du volet de cette charge qui ne concernait pas les actes de l'appelant. Pour déterminer la responsabilité personnelle de l'appelant, la Chambre de première instance s'est fondée sur des faits qu'elle avait jugé établis à la lumière des éléments de preuve produits au procès.[43] [traduction]

29. Il en ressort que la Chambre d'appel a déjà jugé que l'existence d'attaques généralisées ou systématiques dirigées contre une population civile en raison de son appartenance au groupe ethnique tutsi et celle d'un conflit armé non international sont des faits notoires qui ne font pas l'objet d'une contestation raisonnable. La Chambre de première instance était donc tenue d'en dresser le constat judiciaire, d'autant plus que le constat visé par l'article 94 (A) du Règlement n'est pas laissé à son appréciation souveraine. Qui plus est, les motifs qu'elle a invoqués pour s'abstenir de le faire n'étaient pas valables. Certes, la notion d' « attaque généralisée et systématique dirigée contre une population civile » et celle de « conflit armé ne présentant pas un caractère international » ont une signification juridique, mais elles représentent des situations factuelles et peuvent ainsi constituer des « faits de notoriété publique ». Peu importe qu'une idée soit exprimée par des termes juridiques ou non (à condition que ces termes soient définis d'une manière suffisamment appropriée pour que nul ne puisse raisonnablement douter qu'ils s'appliquent au juste à la situation évoquée)[44]. L'important est de savoir si on peut raisonnablement la remettre en question. Ni la Chambre de première instance ni l'un des accusés n'ont fourni de bonnes raisons de contester l'exactitude des faits susmentionnés.

30. Dans le même ordre d'idées, il importe peu que ces faits caractérisent un des éléments constitutifs de certains des crimes retenus et que l'élément en question soit de ceux dont le Procureur est normalement tenu d'établir l'existence[45]. Les éléments constitutifs des infractions ne sont pas exclus du champ d'application de l'article 94 (A) du Règlement. À n'en pas douter, le mécanisme prévu par l'article 94 (A) allège parfois la charge de la preuve de certains points des accusations portées par le Procureur. Toutefois, loin de modifier la charge de la preuve, il fournit tout simplement au Procureur un autre moyen de s'en acquitter, comme l'a précisé la Chambre d'appel dans l'Arrêt Semanza. La Chambre d'appel relève que la pratique du constat judiciaire de faits de notoriété publique est bien établie en droit pénal international[46] et dans les juridictions nationales[47]. Parmi ces faits figurent des événements et phénomènes historiques notoires tels que l'holocauste perpétré par les nazis, le régime d'apartheid de l'Afrique du Sud, les guerres et la montée du terrorisme[48].

31. La Chambre d'appel considère également que rien n'autorise à contester l'exactitude du dernier volet du deuxième fait qui est ainsi libellé :

> « Au cours [des] attaques [perpétrées en 1994], des citoyens rwandais ont tué des personnes considérées comme des Tutsis ou porté gravement atteinte à leur intégrité physique ou mentale. Ces attaques ont entraîné la mort d'un grand nombre de personnes appartenant à l'ethnie tutsie ».

Ce volet cadre non seulement avec chacun des jugements et des arrêts rendus par le Tribunal, mais aussi avec les récits historiques presque tous concordants qu'on trouve dans des sources telles que les encyclopédies et les livres d'histoire[49]. Il est de notoriété publique.

32. Il s'ensuit que c'est à tort que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas dressé le constat judiciaire des faits n°2 et 5 en vertu de l'article 94 (A) du Règlement.

Fait n° 6 : Génocide

33. Le Procureur avait demandé à la Chambre de première instance de dresser le constat judiciaire du fait suivant : « Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, un génocide a été perpétré au Rwanda contre le groupe ethnique tutsi[50] ». La Chambre a rejeté cette demande. Ayant précisé que pour réussir à faire déclarer un accusé coupable de génocide, le Procureur doit établir le rôle que l'intéressé a joué dans le génocide et l'état d'esprit qu'il avait, elle a tenu le raisonnement reproduit ci-après :

> Par conséquent, qu'un génocide ait eu lieu ou non au Rwanda, le Procureur doit quand même établir la responsabilité pénale des accusés pour les chefs retenus dans l'acte d'accusation. Dresser le constat judiciaire d'un tel fait comme étant de notoriété publique n'a aucun effet sur les moyens à charge puisqu'il ne s'agit pas d'un fait à prouver. Dans le cas d'espèce, où le Procureur affirme que les accusés sont responsables de crimes commis à travers tout le Rwanda, le fait de dresser le constat judiciaire du fait qu'un génocide a eu lieu dans ce pays donnerait l'impression que la charge de la preuve qui incombe au Procureur est allégée.[51]

34. En appel, le Procureur soutient que le fait qu'un génocide s'est produit au Rwanda en 1994 est universellement connu – comme l'attestent, entre autres, des rapports établis par l'Organisation des Nations Unies et certains États, des ouvrages portant sur cette question, des comptes rendus publiés dans la presse et la jurisprudence du Tribunal – et que même s'il ne suffit pas en soi pour qu'un accusé soit déclaré coupable de génocide, il se rapporte sans aucun doute au contexte dans lequel le Procureur situe chacun des crimes retenus[52]. En outre, le Procureur estime que le constat judiciaire de ce fait ne constituerait pas une iniquité envers les accusés ni ne serait incompatible avec la charge de la preuve qui incombe au Procureur[53]. En réponse, Ngirumpatse déclare que le fait de dresser le constat judiciaire du génocide reviendrait à rendre un jugement prématuré sur les accusations portées contre les personnes poursuivies et violerait leur droit d'être confrontés avec leurs accusateurs[54]. Karemera fait valoir que l'existence du génocide est une conclusion d'ordre juridique, qu'elle ne se prête dès lors pas au constat judiciaire et que tout constat judiciaire du génocide porterait atteinte au principe de la présomption d'innocence[55]. Selon Nzirorera, c'est à juste titre que la Chambre de première instance a jugé que la question de l'existence du génocide ne présentait aucun intérêt pour les faits à établir lors du procès, elle ne peut être tranchée que par une conclusion juridique et il ressort des usages en vigueur au Tribunal que l'existence du génocide doit être établie par des éléments de preuve[56].

35. La Chambre d'appel partage l'avis du Procureur : la Chambre de première instance aurait dû reconnaître que le génocide perpétré au Rwanda en 1994 est un fait de notoriété publique. Le génocide consiste à commettre certains actes, notamment des meurtres, dans l'intention de détruire, en tout ou en partie, un groupe national, ethnique, racial ou religieux comme tel[57]. Nul ne peut valablement contester qu'il y ait eu en 1994 une campagne de massacres visant à détruire l'ensemble ou au moins une très grande fraction de la population tutsie du Rwanda qui (comme la Chambre de première instance l'a constaté judiciairement) était un groupe protégé. Cette campagne a été couronnée de succès dans une mesure épouvantable : on ne connaîtra peut-être jamais le nombre exact des victimes, mais l'immense majorité des membres du groupe tutsi ont été tués et de nombreux autres ont été violés ou ont de toute autre manière subi des atteintes à leur intégrité physique ou mentale[58]. Ces faits fondamentaux étaient largement connus, même à l'époque de la création du Tribunal. En effet, les rapports indiquant qu'un génocide s'était produit au Rwanda figurent parmi les éléments essentiels qui ont motivé sa création, comme il ressort de la résolution du Conseil de sécurité créant le Tribunal et même du nom de celui-ci[59]. Au cours des premières années d'existence du Tribunal, il était extrêmement utile – pour établir l'historique des événements – que les Chambres de première instance recueillent des éléments de preuve propres à les renseigner sur le déroulement général du génocide et dégagent des conclusions factuelles à la lumière de ces éléments de preuve. Les jugements et arrêts produits dans ces circonstances confirment tous et sans hésitation qu'un génocide s'est produit au Rwanda[60] (même s'ils diffèrent sur la responsabilité des divers accusés). Au demeurant, l'existence du génocide a été également établie par d'innombrables ouvrages[61], articles d'érudition[62], reportages[63], rapports et résolutions de l'ONU[64], décisions rendues par des juridictions nationales[65] et rapports produits par des États et des ONG[66]. Au stade actuel, il n'est pas nécessaire que le Tribunal exige des preuves supplémentaires. Le génocide rwandais est un fait qui s'inscrit dans l'histoire du monde, un fait aussi certain que n'importe quel autre. C'est un exemple classique de « faits de notoriété publique ».

36. De toute évidence, la décision de la Chambre de première instance ne conteste aucun des points de ce raisonnement. Les accusés même n'ont nullement dit qu'un génocide ne se serait pas produit au Rwanda en 1994. En fait, la Chambre de première instance présente deux autres raisons – curieusement contradictoires – de ne pas dresser de constat judiciaire : en premier lieu, l'existence d'un génocide ne présente aucun intérêt pour la thèse que le Procureur doit prouver ; en second lieu, en dresser le constat reviendrait à alléger indûment la charge de la preuve qui incombe au Procureur[67]. La première de ces raisons peut être facilement rejetée. Le fait de savoir si un génocide a eu lieu au Rwanda présente manifestement un intérêt pour la thèse du Procureur. C'est un des éléments nécessaires de cette thèse, même s'il ne suffit pas pour l'établir. De toute évidence, une Chambre de première instance n'est habilitée à déclarer une personne coupable de génocide que si elle a recueilli la preuve de ses actes et de son intention. Toutefois, la réalité de la campagne menée sur l'ensemble du territoire national entre en ligne de compte, car on y trouve des circonstances permettant de comprendre les actes de la personne considérée. Au demeurant, l'existence d'un génocide peut aussi fournir les circonstances nécessaires pour retenir d'autres chefs d'accusation contre la personne poursuivie, par exemple les crimes contre l'humanité. Il convient de relever que si l'existence générale du génocide n'avait aucun rapport avec les accusations portées contre telle ou telle personne, l'article 89 du Règlement n'autoriserait pas les Chambres de première instance à admettre les éléments de preuve tendant à l'établir. Or, comme Nzirorera l'a prouvé par certains documents dans sa réponse, les Chambres de première instance le font invariablement et la Chambre d'appel a déclaré que cette ligne de conduite était conforme aux règles[68].

37. La seconde raison avancée par la Chambre de première instance a déjà été examinée plus haut dans le cadre de l'analyse des faits n°2 et 5. Comme le précise l'arrêt Semanza, accepter de dresser le constat judiciaire d'un fait de notoriété publique – quand bien même ce fait serait un des éléments caractérisant une infraction, par exemple l'existence d'une attaque « généralisée ou systématique » – n'emporte pas allègement de la charge de la preuve incombant au Procureur ni ne constitue une violation des droits procéduraux des accusés. En fait, cela crée un autre moyen de s'acquitter de cette charge, en supprimant la nécessité de produire la preuve de ce qui est déjà de notoriété publique. Il va de soi que le Procureur demeure tenu d'établir non seulement que les divers faits énoncés dans l'acte d'accusation constituent un génocide, mais aussi que la conduite et l'état mental des accusés les rendent précisément coupables de génocide. Le raisonnement tenu lors de l'analyse des faits n°2 et 5 permet également d'écarter l'objection des accusés selon laquelle la qualification de « génocide » est une conclusion d'ordre juridique : l'article 94 (A) du Règlement ne confère pas à la Chambre de première instance le pouvoir souverain de rejeter une demande de constat judiciaire pour ce motif. Dans ce cadre, le terme « génocide » n'est pas distinct d'autres termes juridiques – par exemple les expressions « généralisé ou systématique » et « ne présentant pas un caractère international » – employés pour qualifier certains faits dont la Chambre d'appel a déjà dit dans l'arrêt Semanza qu'ils peuvent faire l'objet d'un constat judiciaire au sens de l'article 94 (A) du Règlement.

38. Il s'ensuit que la Chambre de première instance a refusé à tort de dresser le constat judiciaire du fait 6.

IV. Constat judiciaire de faits admis dans d'autres affaires

39. L'article 94 (B) du Règlement se lit comme suit :

Le fait de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits admis dans d'autres affaires en vertu de l'article 94 (B) du Règlement permet d'économiser les ressources du Tribunal et d'uniformiser ses jugements tout en garantissant le droit à un procès équitable, public et rapide dont jouissent les accusés[69].

40. Le constat judiciaire visé au paragraphe B de l'article 94 du Règlement est aussi régi par certains des principes énoncés plus haut, mais il se distingue de celui visé au paragraphe A par sa nature. Les faits admis dans d'autres affaires diffèrent des faits de notoriété publique (bien que ces deux catégories coïncident dans une certaine mesure). Le droit ne prescrit nullement de ne dresser le constat judiciaire de faits admis dans d'autres affaires que s'ils échappent à toute contestation raisonnable. Ce sont des faits qui ont été établis dans une affaire opposant des tiers à l'aide des éléments de preuve que ces tiers ont choisi de verser au dossier, dans les circonstances particulières de l'affaire considérée. Pour cette raison, on ne peut s'autoriser du simple fait qu'ils y ont été admis pour conclure qu'ils sont incontestables dans des procès concernant des parties étrangères à la première affaire qui n'ont pas eu la possibilité de les contester.

41. Il existe dès lors deux différences fondamentales entre les deux dispositions. La première ressort des termes mêmes de l'article 94 du Règlement : le constat judiciaire visé par le paragraphe A est obligatoire, tandis que celui visé par le paragraphe B est laissé à l'appréciation souveraine de la Chambre de première instance, ce qui l'autorise à déterminer les faits admis dans d'autres affaires qu'il convient de reconnaître, en tenant scrupuleusement compte du droit des accusés à un procès équitable et rapide. Élaborés par la jurisprudence, les principes orientant et limitant l'exercice du pouvoir souverain d'appréciation de la Chambre dans ce domaine seront examinés plus loin.

42. La seconde différence a été mise en lumière par la jurisprudence du Tribunal. Elle a trait aux conséquences du constat judiciaire : on considère que les faits constatés en vertu du paragraphe A de l'article 94 du Règlement sont irréfutablement établis, tandis que ceux établis par la mise en application du paragraphe B sont de simples présomptions que la Défense peut combattre par des éléments de preuve lors du procès[70]. La Chambre d'appel souligne à nouveau que le recours au constat judiciaire ne renverse pas la charge principale de la persuasion, cette charge continuant d'incomber au Procureur. Le constat judiciaire visé par le paragraphe B de l'article 94 n'a pour effet que de dégager le Procureur de sa charge initiale consistant à produire des éléments de preuve sur le point considéré : la Défense est habilitée à remettre ce point en question par la suite en versant au dossier des preuves contraires crédibles et fiables. Ce point de vue cadre avec les usages en vigueur dans les juridictions nationales : le constat judiciaire de faits de notoriété publique peut être considéré comme concluant[71], tandis que l'admission définitive de tel ou tel fait dans un procès par les juges saisis n'a, tout au plus, irréfutablement force obligatoire qu'à l'égard des parties à ce procès (principe de l'autorité de la chose jugée)[72].

Željko Mejakić, affaire n°IT-02-65-PT, Décision relative à la requête de l'Accusation aux fins de constat judiciaire en application de l'article 94 B) du Règlement, 1er avril 2004 (la « Décision Mejakić relative au constat judiciaire »), p. 4 ; Le Procureur c. Momčilo Krajišnik, affaire n°IT-00-39-T, Decision on Third and Fourth Prosecution Motions for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts, 24 mars 2005 (la « Décision Krajišnik du 24 mars 2005 relative au constat judiciaire »), par. 12 ; Le Procureur c. Duško Sikirica et consorts, affaire n°IT-95-8-PT, Décision relative à la requête de l'Accusation aux fins de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits admis dans d'autres affaires, 27 septembre 2000, p. 4.

43. Le Procureur avait demandé à la Chambre de première instance de dresser, en application de l'article 94 (B) du Règlement, le constat judiciaire de 153 faits admis dans d'autres affaires. La Chambre a rejeté cette demande dans son intégralité. Le recours du Procureur porte sur 147 des faits en question. Le Procureur, les accusés et la Chambre de première instance ne les ont pas analysés un par un. La Chambre d'appel ne le fera pas non plus. Elle s'intéressera plutôt aux deux principaux motifs avancés par la Chambre de première instance pour refuser de dresser le constat judiciaire sollicité et recherchera si chacun de ces motifs est valable au regard de l'article 94 (B). Ce faisant, la Chambre d'appel ne perd jamais de vue qu'une décision rendue par la Chambre de première instance dans l'exercice de son pouvoir souverain d'appréciation ne peut être infirmée que si elle « (1) repose sur une interprétation erronée du droit applicable, (2) repose sur une constatation manifestement erronée ou (3) est à ce point injuste ou déraisonnable qu'il y a eu erreur d'appréciation de la part de la Chambre de première instance[73] ». L'analyse de chacun des faits admis proposés est une question qu'il convient de renvoyer devant la Chambre de première instance s'il y a lieu[74].

44. Ainsi, la Chambre d'appel examinera les conclusions de la Chambre de première instance selon lesquelles (a) certains des faits visés accréditent la thèse de la culpabilité des accusés et ne pouvaient donc pas faire l'objet d'un constat judiciaire et (b) certains autres ont été indûment sortis de leur contexte ou mal réunis pour constituer des faits qui n'avaient nullement été admis dans les affaires considérées. Il n'est pas nécessaire d'examiner les motifs avancés par la Chambre de première instance pour refuser de dresser le constat judicaire des faits restants, soit parce que le Procureur ne les a pas inclus dans son recours[75], soit, s'agissant du fait n°153, parce que la question devient sans intérêt du moment que la Chambre d'appel a statué plus haut sur le sixième « fait de notoriété publique »[76].

[76] Le fait n°153 énoncé sous la rubrique des « faits admis dans d'autres affaires » est un fait alternatif qui ne devait être pris en considération qu'au cas où la Chambre de première instance refuserait de dresser le constat judiciaire du fait n°6

A. Faits accréditant la thèse de la culpabilité des accusés

45. La Chambre de première instance a refusé de dresser le constat judiciaire de certains faits au motif qu'ils peuvent « directement ou indirectement déterminer la culpabilité des accusés, surtout en ce qui concerne leur participation à une entreprise criminelle commune[77] ». Le Procureur fait valoir que ce raisonnement constitue « une interprétation de principe trop large, qui va à l'encontre de l'objet et du but » de l'article 94 (B) du Règlement[78]. Il souligne que le but de cette disposition est précisément d'aider les juges à se prononcer plus rapidement sur la question de la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé, que le fait d'exclure catégoriquement toutes les conclusions ayant trait à cette responsabilité entrave gravement la réalisation du but en question et que chaque fait présentant un intérêt pour un procès a « directement ou indirectement » une incidence sur la responsabilité de l'accusé[79].

46. Nzirorera répond que le raisonnement de la Chambre de première instance cadre avec celui d'autres Chambres de première instance du TPIR et du TPIY qui refusent systématiquement de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits concernant la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé[80]. Ngirumpatse et lui ajoutent que lorsqu'il est reproché à des accusés d'avoir participé à une entreprise criminelle commune, les faits relatifs à l'existence de cette entreprise ou à la conduite des personnes qui y auraient participé touchent directement à la responsabilité pénale des accusés et ne peuvent dès lors faire l'objet d'un constat judiciaire[81]. Selon Karemera, l'adoption du point de vue du Procureur porterait atteinte au principe de la présomption d'innocence en permettant de retenir sans preuves la responsabilité pénale des accusés[82].

47. Comme le fait remarquer Nzirorera, la Chambre d'appel a évoqué dans l'arrêt Semanza la nécessité de s'assurer que « les faits constatés judiciairement [ne sont] pas de ceux qui serviraient à établir la responsabilité pénale de l'appelant ». C'était dans le cadre de l'examen de l'article 94 (A) du Règlement. Elle n'a rien dit à propos de l'article 94 (B). Toutefois, il reste dans les deux cas que la pratique du constat judiciaire ne doit pas être autorisée si elle a pour effet de contourner la présomption d'innocence et le droit de l'accusé à un procès équitable, notamment son droit d'être confronté avec ses accusateurs. Il serait donc manifestement illicite que des faits dont le constat judiciaire a été dressé « [servent] à établir la responsabilité pénale de l'appelant » (c'est-à-dire soient suffisants pour retenir cette responsabilité). Les Chambres de première instance doivent toujours tenir dûment compte de la présomption d'innocence et des droits procéduraux de l'accusé.

48. La Chambre d'appel n'est cependant jamais allée jusqu'à affirmer que le constat judiciaire visé par l'article 94 (B) du Règlement ne saurait s'étendre à des faits qui peuvent « directement ou indirectement déterminer » la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé (ou qui « concernent » cette responsabilité ou y « touchent »). Avec tout le respect dû aux Chambres de première instance qui sont arrivées à cette conclusion[83], la Chambre d'appel ne peut souscrire à leur thèse, car l'application systématique du raisonnement qui la sous-tend rendrait l'article 94 (B) du Règlement lettre morte. Le but d'un procès pénal est de déterminer si l'accusé est pénalement responsable ou non. Les faits n'ayant aucun rapport – direct ou indirect – avec sa responsabilité pénale ne présentent pas d'intérêt pour la question qui doit être tranchée au procès et, comme la Chambre d'appel l'a relevé plus haut, ne peuvent donc être établis à l'aide d'éléments de preuve ni par voie de constat judiciaire[84]. Il s'ensuit que le constat judiciaire visé par l'article 94 (B) du Règlement n'est en réalité prévu que pour les faits admis dans d'autres affaires qui se rapportent, du moins à certains égards, à la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé[85].

49. Comment peut-on concilier cette conclusion avec la présomption d'innocence ? Comme il a été indiqué plus haut, le constat judiciaire visé par l'article 94 (B) du Règlement ne renverse pas la charge principale de la persuasion, mais uniquement la charge initiale de la production de la preuve (la charge de produire des éléments de preuve crédibles et fiables suffisants pour susciter une contestation). Cette situation présente une certaine analogie avec l'administration de la preuve de l'alibi, par exemple, où la charge de la production incombe à l'accusé alors que la question a fondamentalement trait à sa culpabilité. Or, ce renversement de la charge ne porte pas atteinte au principe de la présomption d'innocence, car, comme la Chambre d'appel l'a reconnu à maintes reprises, il ne dégage pas le Procureur de la charge d'établir la culpabilité de l'accusé au-delà de tout doute raisonnable[86].

50. Néanmoins, il existe des raisons de dresser avec circonspection le constat judiciaire visé par l'article 94 (B) du Règlement lorsque les faits considérés sont indispensables pour établir la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé, puisque la charge de la production de la preuve et celle de la persuasion incombent normalement au Procureur en matière pénale. La charge de la persuasion incombe toujours au Procureur, mais le renversement de la charge de la production de la preuve porterait aussi sensiblement atteinte aux droits procéduraux de l'accusé, notamment au droit d'entendre les témoins à charge et d'être confronté avec eux[87]. La Chambre d'appel estime qu'il convient dès lors d'exclure certains faits du champ d'application de l'article 94 (B) du Règlement, mais dans une mesure plus faible que celle adoptée par la Chambre de première instance. Précisément, il est interdit de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits admis qui ont trait aux actes, au comportement et à l'état mental de l'accusé.

51. Pour deux raisons, il est permis d'exclure totalement cette catégorie de faits et d'abandonner à l'appréciation souveraine de la Chambre de première instance les faits concernant moins directement la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé. Premièrement, l'interprétation de l'article 94 (B) adoptée en l'occurrence réalise entre les droits procéduraux de l'accusé et le souci de célérité un juste équilibre concordant avec celui expressément établi par l'article 92 bis du Règlement qui régit l'administration de la preuve des faits autrement que par l'audition d'un témoin, autre mécanisme procédural adopté surtout pour les mêmes raisons que dans le cas de l'article 94 du Règlement[88]. Deuxièmement, il se pose un problème de fiabilité, car on a des raisons de bien douter de l'exactitude de faits admis dans

[84] Voir supra, note 29.
[85] En théorie, la règle connaît une exception, à savoir les faits concernant la compétence du Tribunal qui n'ont pas (directement ou indirectement) trait à la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé en droit international, comme l'emplacement des frontières du Rwanda ou la citoyenneté rwandaise d'une personne accusée d'avoir commis une violation grave du droit international humanitaire dans un État voisin. Cette catégorie est toutefois assez restreinte et il n'a jamais été demandé de limiter le champ d'application de l'article 94 (B) à ces faits.
[86] Voir, par exemple, l'arrêt Kajelijeli, par. 40 et 41, et l'arrêt Niyitegeka, par. 60 et 61.
[87] Statut du Tribunal international, art. 20 (4) (e). Pour les mêmes raisons, on ferait aussi une entorse à l'article 20 (4) (d) qui garantit le droit de l'accusé d'être présent à son procès si on statuait sur des faits indispensables pour établir sa culpabilité dans d'autres procès auxquels il n'assiste pas.
[88] L'article 92 bis, en ses paragraphes A et D, limite l'admission des déclarations de témoin et des comptes rendus d'audience d'autres procès aux questions « autre[s] que les actes et le comportement de l'accusé tels qu'allégués dans l'acte d'accusation ». La Chambre d'appel interprète ce membre de phrase comme embrassant aussi l'état mental de l'accusé. Voir Le Procureur c. Galić, affaire n°IT-98-29-AR73.2, Décision relative à l'appel interlocutoire interjeté en vertu de l'article 92 bis (C) du Règlement, 7 juin 2002, par. 10 et 11 (la « Décision Galić »).

d'autres affaires lorsqu'ils concernent précisément les actes, les omissions ou l'état mental d'une personne qui n'était pas en cause dans ces affaires. En général, les personnes poursuivies dans les autres affaires seraient beaucoup moins enclines à contester ces faits que s'ils avaient trait à leurs propres actes. D'ailleurs, dans certains cas, ces accusés pourraient choisir délibérément de laisser incriminer autrui.

52. S'agissant de tous les autres faits admis touchant à la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé, il revient aux Chambres de première instance de les apprécier au cas par cas, en exerçant avec circonspection leur pouvoir d'appréciation, pour décider si le fait d'en dresser le constat judiciaire – et donc de reporter sur l'accusé la charge de produire la preuve contraire – serait compatible avec le respect des droits de l'accusé dans les circonstances de la cause. Il s'agit notamment des faits concernant l'existence d'une entreprise criminelle commune et la conduite des personnes autres que l'accusé qui y ont participé. Plus généralement, ce sont des faits liés à la conduite des auteurs matériels d'un crime imputé à l'accusé par le biais d'un autre mode de responsabilité. Contrairement à la thèse de Nzirorera et Ngirumpatse, il y a une différence entre ces faits et ceux qui se rapportent aux actes et au comportement des accusés mêmes. Statuant dans le cadre de l'article 92 bis du Règlement, la Chambre d'appel du TPIY a examiné et rejeté dans l'affaire Galić un argument semblable à celui que les accusés ont présenté en l'espèce :

> L'Appelant souligne que l'article 92 bis exclut de la procédure prévue toute déclaration écrite tendant à établir les actes et le comportement de l'accusé tels qu'allégués dans l'acte d'accusation. Il déclare qu'étant donné qu'aux termes de l'acte d'accusation, l'accusé voit sa responsabilité pénale individuelle engagée
> (i) pour avoir aidé et encouragé d'autres à commettre les crimes reprochés, et
>
> (ii) en tant que supérieur hiérarchique de ceux qui ont commis ces crimes,
>
> les actes et le comportement de ces autres et ceux de ses subordonnés « représentent ses propres actes ». L'Appelant qualifie les autres de « coauteurs », et déclare que l'expression « les actes et le comportement de l'accusé tels qu'allégués dans l'acte d'accusation » s'étend aux actes et au comportement des coauteurs et/ou des subordonnés de l'accusé. La Chambre de première instance a rejeté cet argument.
> Tel qu'interprété par l'Appelant, l'article 92 bis perdrait effectivement toute utilité pratique. Cette interprétation n'est compatible ni avec la finalité ni avec les termes du Règlement. Elle efface la nette distinction actuellement faite par la jurisprudence du Tribunal entre (a) les actes et le comportement d'autres personnes ayant commis les crimes dont l'accusé serait, aux termes de l'acte d'accusation, individuellement responsable et (b) les actes et le comportement de l'accusé tels qu'allégués dans l'acte d'accusation, qui établissent sa responsabilité pour les actes et le comportement des autres. Seuls les éléments relevant du dernier point sont exclus de la procédure prévue à l'article 92 bis (A)[89].

La Chambre d'appel estime que cette analyse est aussi valable dans le cadre de l'article 94 (B) du Règlement.

53. La Chambre de première instance a donc commis une erreur en ce qu'elle a conclu qu'il était formellement interdit dans le cadre de l'article 94 (B) du Règlement de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits ayant directement ou indirectement trait à la culpabilité de l'accusé, notamment ceux liés à l'existence et au fonctionnement d'une entreprise criminelle commune[90]. Elle devrait plutôt analyser les faits précis dont le Procureur demande le constat judiciaire pour déterminer (a) s'ils se rapportent aux actes, au comportement ou à l'état mental des accusés et (b), dans le cas contraire, si les circonstances de la cause autorisent à penser que leur admission apporterait la rapidité visé par l'article 94 (B) sans compromettre les droits des accusés.

[89] Décision Galić, par. 8 et 9.

B. Faits sortis de leur contexte ou mal réunis

54. La Chambre de première instance n'a pas voulu dresser le constat judiciaire des faits n°86 à 110 au motif qu'ils « ont été sortis de leur contexte et assemblés pour constituer de nouveaux faits qui n'[avaient] pas été admis[91] ». Selon le Procureur, il s'agit là d'une erreur de fait et de droit non seulement parce que ces faits ont été admis dans d'autres affaires, mais aussi parce que le droit n'exige nullement que les faits soient placés « dans leur contexte »[92]. Citant cinq exemples, le Procureur souligne que les faits admis énoncés dans sa requête en constat judiciaire ont été tirés presque textuellement de certains jugements[93]. Ngirumpatse répond que la Chambre de première instance a bien tranché la question, les « faits » litigieux étant des assertions subjectives qui ne peuvent faire l'objet d'un constat judiciaire et non pas de vrais faits[94]. Nzirorera et Karemera ne répondent pas spécialement aux arguments du Procureur sur ce point[95].

55. S'agissant de l'erreur de droit relevée par le Procureur, la Chambre d'appel juge qu'elle n'existe pas. Une Chambre de première instance peut et même doit refuser de dresser le constat judiciaire des faits dont elle est saisie si elle considère que leur formulation – hors de leur contexte exposé dans le jugement d'où ils ont été tirés – prête à confusion ou ne correspond pas aux faits réellement admis dans les affaires considérées. Un fait ainsi sorti de son contexte n'est pas réellement un « fait admis » et ne peut donc pas faire l'objet d'un constat judiciaire en vertu de l'article 94 (B) du Règlement. Tel est, selon la Chambre d'appel, le principe que la Chambre de première instance a voulu appliquer en refusant de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits « sortis de leur contexte ».

56. Toutefois, comme la Chambre de première instance n'a pas donné de plus amples explications sur sa conclusion, la Chambre d'appel n'est pas convaincue que tous les faits en question ont été sortis de leur contexte ou mal réunis de telle sorte qu'ils ne cadrent plus avec les jugements d'où ils ont été tirés, d'autant plus que des exemples tendant à prouver le contraire ont été fournis au paragraphe 67 de l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur. Il y a dès lors lieu de renvoyer la question devant la Chambre de première instance pour qu'elle l'examine à nouveau et motive ses conclusions.

1. La Chambre d'appel du Tribunal pénal international chargé de juger les personnes présumées responsables d'actes de génocide ou d'autres violations graves du droit international humanitaire commis sur le territoire du Rwanda et les citoyens rwandais présumés responsables de tels actes ou violations commis sur le territoire d'États voisins entre le 1er janvier et le 31 décembre 1994 (respectivement la « Chambre d'appel » et le « Tribunal ») est saisie d'un recours interlocutoire formé par le Procureur[1] contre une décision que la Chambre de première instance III a rendue oralement le 16 février 2006[2] pour trancher une question opposant les parties dans le domaine de la communication de pièces.

2. Dans la présente décision, la Chambre d'appel recherchera si la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit lorsqu'elle a conclu que le Procureur n'était pas autorisé à se servir de son système électronique de communication de pièces (« système EDS ») pour s'acquitter de l'obligation de communication mise à sa charge par l'article 68 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve du Tribunal (le « Règlement »). Le système EDS contient la version publique ou caviardée de plus de 34.000 documents susceptibles de concerner toutes les personnes traduites devant le Tribunal[3]. Le Procureur met cette base de données interrogeable à la disposition de la Défense dans chaque affaire si les conseils acceptent de se conformer aux conditions d'utilisation qu'il a définies, pour permettre à la Défense d'y rechercher des éléments de preuve à décharge[4]. Selon le Procureur, le système EDS est un moyen suffisant pour s'acquitter de l'obligation mise à sa charge par l'article 68 du Règlement, sauf dans le cas où les informations nécessaires « ne sont pas ou pas encore » dans le système. En ce qui concerne celles-ci, le Procureur souligne qu'il continuera de les rechercher lui-même pour les communiquer[5]. Il a avancé ces arguments devant la Chambre de première instance lorsque la Défense lui a présenté des pièces disponibles en version caviardée dans le système EDS qu'il ne lui avait pas officiellement communiquées[6]. Néanmoins, la Chambre de première instance a conclu qu'il avait manqué à l'obligation de communication prévue par l'article 68 du Règlement[7]. C'est pourquoi il a formé le recours sur lequel la Chambre d'appel statue à présent.

Rappel de la procédure

3. Le 6 février 2006, Nzirorera a demandé que le Procureur lui communique un certain nombre de déclarations faites par plusieurs témoins qui devaient comparaître[8]. À l'appui de sa requête, il a présenté plusieurs déclarations caviardées portant des marques faites par le Procureur pour démontrer que celui-ci possédait des documents qu'il n'avait pas communiqués[9].

4. Lors des débats qui ont eu lieu sur la requête devant la Chambre de première instance, le Procureur a précisé que bon nombre des déclarations demandées par Nzirorera se trouvaient

Nzirorera y a répondu par des écritures intitulées Respondent's Brief of Joseph Nzirorera and Motion to Strike, déposées le 13 mars 2006 (la « Réponse-requête de Nzirorera »). Le Procureur a produit une réplique intitulée Prosecutor's Reply to "Respondent's Brief of Joseph Nzirorera and Motion to Strike", responding to, "Prosecutor's Interlocutoly Appeal of the Trial Chamber's Decision Given Orally on 16 February 2006 Regarding the Role of the Electronic Disclosure Suite in Discharging the Prosecution's Disclosure Obligations" (la « Réplique-réponse du Procureur »). Karemera et Ngimmpatse n'ont pas répondu à l'Appel du Procureur, bien qu'ils aient sollicité et obtenu le report du délai imparti jusqu'à la production de sa traduction française qui a été déposée le 30 mai 2006. dans le système EDS et fait valoir que Nzirorera les avait en fait déjà obtenues en effectuant des recherches dans le système[10]. Il a ajouté que l'existence de ces pièces dans la base de données suffisait pour conclure qu'il s'était acquitté de l'obligation de communication prévue par l'article 68 du Règlement[11].

5. Rejetant cette thèse, la Chambre de première instance a jugé que le Procureur avait manqué à l'obligation de communication mise à sa charge[12]. À ce propos, elle a souligné ce qui suit :

> [...] l'existence d'une base de données électronique créée par le Bureau du Procureur pour la conservation et la récupération des documents, qui permet à la Défense de mener ses propres recherches pour des pièces disculpatoires, ne relève pas le Procureur de son obligation positive, à savoir communiquer toutes les pièces en sa possession conformément à l'Article 68[13].

Toutefois, la Chambre de première instance a estimé que le fait que Nzirorera ait en sa possession la version caviardée des documents visés atténuait dans une large mesure le préjudice causé par ce manquement à l'obligation de commnication[14].

6. En appel, le Procureur ne demande pas l'annulation des conclusions tirées par la Chambre de première instance de chacune des constatations qu'elle a faites sur la question de la communication de pièces[15]. Il ne conteste que la conclusion générale qui lui dénie le droit de se servir du système EDS pour s'acquitter de l'obligation de communication prévue par l'article 68 du Règlement et souligne les graves incidences que cette conclusion aurait sur ses méthodes de communication de pièces en l'espèce et dans d'autres affaires[16].

7. Le Procureur précise que lorsque l'installation de son système EDS sera achevée[17], cette base de données contiendra toute sa collection d'éléments de preuve, à l'exception des pièces confidentielles[18]. La base de données contient actuellement 34 000 pièces et plusieurs milliers d'autres y seront ajoutées. Ces pièces sont divisées en trois grandes catégories, à savoir les déclarations de témoin caviardées, les pièces audio et vidéo et les éléments de preuve à charge[19]. La base de données offre à l'utilisateur la possibilité de faire de la recherche sur texte

[18] Appel du Procureur, par. 24. Le Procureur illustre le fonctionnement du système EDS aux paragraphes 20 à 26 de son appel. Il a joint à l'appel plusieurs annexes qui contiennent des informations illustrant le fonctionnement du système EDS et indiquant comment les conseils de la Défense peuvent s'en servir. Nzirorera demande que soient supprimés ces annexes et les paragraphes 20 à 25 de l'Appel du Procureur, au motif qu'ils contiennent des informations qui n'avaient pas été présentées devant la Chambre de première instance. Voir la Réponse-requête de Nzirorera, par. 2 à 4. S'agissant des paragraphes 20 à 25 de l'Appel du Procureur, la Chambre d'appel rejette la demande de Nzirorera. Dans les circonstances de l'espèce, elle n'estime pas que les arguments présentés dans ces paragraphes font problème, car elle juge aux fins de la présente décision que les indications fournies dans l'Appel du Procureur sont essentiellement les mêmes que celles beaucoup plus générales données à la Chambre de première instance. Voir le compte rendu de l'audience du 13 février 2006, p. 12 et 13 ainsi que 22. La Chambre d'appel fait cependant droit à la demande de Nzirorera en ce qui concerne les annexes. Celles-ci contiennent des informations supplémentaires qui ne peuvent être admises que suivant la rocédure énoncée à l'article 115 du Règlement et d'afficher et imprimer les documents choisis[20]. Au dire du Procureur, les conseils de la Défense peuvent aussi consulter le système EDS par internet[21], mais Nzirorera le dément[22]. De plus, Nzirorera brosse un tableau de l'utilité du système EDS nettement différent de celui présenté par le Procureur et relève que l'utilisateur a d'énormes difficultés à y trouver les pièces nécessaires, nombre de documents figurant dans le système étant caviardés[23].

8. Selon le Procureur, la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit en ce qu'elle a conclu que le fait de mettre la collection de moyens à charge et d'autres pièces pertinentes à la disposition de la Défense par le biais du système EDS ne saurait être un moyen de s'acquitter de l'obligation de communication prévue à l'article 68 du Règlement[24]. Pour établir cette erreur, le Procureur déclare que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas fait grand cas de la forme du système EDS qui permet d'y effectuer des recherches[25]. Or, dans le passage même qu'il invoque à l'appui de son grief, la Chambre de première instance a clairement dit que le système EDS « permet à la Défense de mener ses propres recherches pour [se procurer] des pièces disculpatoires »[26]. En conséquence, la Chambre d'appel ne saurait convenir que la Chambre de première instance n'a pas fait grand cas de cet aspect du système EDS. En fait, d'après la Chambre d'appel, le Procureur semble s'insurger contre la conclusion de la Chambre de première instance selon laquelle il a l'«obligation incontestable » de communiquer à chaque accusé les informations visées par l'article 68 du Règlement qui sont «en sa possession »[27]. La Chambre d'appel ne voit pas en quoi la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit lorsqu'elle a jugé que le Procureur était incontestablement tenu de communiquer les éléments de preuve à décharge qui sont en sa possession.

9. L'obligation faite au Procureur de communiquer à la Défense les éléments de preuve à décharge est indispensable à l'équité du procès[28]. La Chambre d'appel a toujours donné une interprétation large à cette obligation[29]. Son incontestabilité et son importance découlent de l'obligation d'enquête incombant au Procureur qui, comme l'a précisé la Chambre d'appel, va de pair avec l'obligation d'engager des poursuites[30]. En particulier, la Chambre d'appel rappelle que si le Procureur a mission de mener des enquêtes, c'est, entre autres, pour « [aider] le Tribunal [à découvrir] la vérité et [à] rendre justice à la communauté internationale, aux victimes et aux accusés »[31]. [31] Règlement interne du Procureur n°2, par. 2 (h). En conséquence, la Chambre d'appel juge déconcertant le fait que le Procureur a dit devant la Chambre de première instance qu'il n'était en quelque sorte pas tenu de rechercher les éléments de preuve de nature à porter atteinte à la crédibilité des témoins à charge. Voir le compte rendu de l'audience du 13 février 2006, communiquer les éléments de preuve propres à disculper l'accusé n'incombe qu'au Procureur et il lui appartient de déterminer, essentiellement à la lumière des faits de la cause, les éléments qui remplissent les conditions de communication définies par l'article 68 du Règlement[32]. En d'autres termes, le Procureur est incontestablement tenu de participer au processus d'administration de la justice en communiquant à la Défense, conformément à l'article 68 (A) du Règlement, les éléments dont il sait effectivement qu'ils « sont de nature à disculper en tout ou en partie l'accusé ou à porter atteinte à la crédibilité de ses éléments de preuve à charge ». Cette responsabilité revêt une importance primordiale pour l'analyse.

10. Compte tenu des principes exposés ci-dessus, le Procureur doit activement examiner les éléments en sa possession pour rechercher si certains sont de nature à disculper les accusés[33] et, à tout le moins, informer ceux-ci de leur existence[34]. De l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, l'obligation de communication imposée au Procureur par l'article 68 du Règlement ne consiste pas seulement à mettre toute sa collection de moyens de preuve à la disposition de la Défense sous une forme permettant d'y faire des recherches. Un moteur de recherche ne saurait remplacer l'examen des éléments de preuve en sa possession que le Procureur est tenu de faire au cas par cas. Cela étant, la Chambre d'appel ne voit pas en quoi la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur de droit lorsqu'elle a conclu que le système EDS, tel qu'il a été décrit par le Procureur, ne remplit pas les amples conditions importantes rappelées plus haut.

11. L'argumentation du Procureur comprend deux volets. Premièrement, le Procureur soutient que les paragraphes (A) et (B) de l'article 68 du Règlement créent deux obligations de communication bien distinctes portant sur des catégories de pièces différentes : le paragraphe (A) concerne les éléments dont le Procureus sait effectivement qu'ils sont de nature à disculper l'accusé, alors que le paragraphe (B) s'applique de manière plus générale à toutes les « collections de documents pertinents » , y compris celles dont le Procureur ne sait pas s'ils sont de nature à disculper l'accusé. Deuxièmement, il estime que lorsqu'il met à la disposition de la Défense sous forme électronique une collection de documents pertinents pour s'acquitter de l'obligation créée par le paragraphe (B), cela emporte exécution de celle prévue par le paragraphe (A) en ce qui concerne tout élément régi par ledit paragraphe qu'on pourrait trouver dans la collection. La Chambre d'appel relève que le prernier volet de l'argumentation du Procureur semble adopter une interprétation plutôt large de l'obligation de communication qui lui incombe, tandis que le second aurait pour effet de restreindre cette obligation en supprimant la nécessité d'appeler l'attention de la Défense sur tel ou tel élément de preuve dont le Procureus sait effectivement qu 'il est de nature à disculper l'accusé.

La Chambre d'appel a reconnu qu'en raison du nombre considérable des pièces qui sont « en la possession » du Procureur, la communication peut prendre du retard. Cela ne relève cependant pas le Procureur de l'obligation de les examiner et de les apprécier à la lumière des critères définis par l'article 68 du Règlement. Voir, par exemple, l'Arrêt Blaskić, par. 300 (« Vu le nombre considérable de pièces détenues par le Procureur, la communication d'éléments à décharge peut prendre du retard puisqu'il arrive que ces éléments de preuve ne soient découverts qu'après la clôture du procès en première instance »), et l'Arrêt Krstić, par. 197 (« La Chambre d'appel n'est pas insensible à l'argument de l'Accusation selon lequel, dans la plupart des cas, les documents doivent d'abord être traités, traduits, analysés et identifiés comme éléments à décharge. On ne saurati s'attendre à ce que l'Accusation communique des éléments de preuve qu'elle n'a pas été en mesure, malgré toute sa bonne volonté, d'examiner et d'évaluer. Toutefois, la communication de documents en l'espèce a pris un retard excessif et l'Accusation ne s'en est pas expliquée de manière satisfaisante ») (note de bas de page interne non reproduite). En outre, la Chambre d'appel a déjà précisé que le Bureau du Procureur est un et indivisible dans l'exécution de l'obligation de communication. Voir la Décision Bagosora de la Chambre d'appel, par. 42 à 46.

[34] Voir l'Arrêt Krstić, par. 190 et 195.

12. La Chambre d'appel constate plusieurs failles dans l'argumentation du Procureur. L'obligation de communiquer à la Défense les éléments qui sont de nature à disculper en tout ou en partie l'accusé ou à porter atteinte à la crédibilité des éléments de preuve à charge est énoncée au paragraphe (A) de l'article 68 du Règlement[35]. Ce n'est que cette disposition qui précise les éléments que le Procureur doit communiquer dans ce cadre et lui fait obligation de les communiquer. Le paragraphe (B) ne crée pas une obligation de communication distincte[36] : il ne fait que prévoir la possibilité de communiquer à la Défense sous forme électronique les éléments de nature à disculper l'accusé, une fois que le Procureur a jugé qu'ils constituent des « documents pertinents » entrant dans le champ d'application de l'article 68 du Règlement, comme le confirment la lettre même du paragraphe en question et les travaux préparatoires à sa rédaction qui ont consisté essentiellement à rechercher s'il était techniquement possible de communiquer à la Défense les versions électroniques des documents entrant dans le champ d'application de l'article 68[37].

13. Il s'ensuit que la communication de pièces visée par le paragraphe (B) de l'article 68 n'est que l'équivalent numérique de celle visée par le paragraphe (A), les pièces en question étant les mêmes présentées sous une forme électronique permettant d'y faire des recherches. Ainsi, lorsque le Procureur cherche à s'acquitter de l'obligation mise à sa charge par l'article 68 en se bornant à offrir à la Défense la possibilité de consulter une base de données électronique contenant des dizaines de milliers de documents alors que ceux dont il sait qu'ils sont de nature à disculper l'accusé ne sont pas nombreux, cela revient à vouloir assumer cette obligation en donnant à la Défense la clé d'une armoire contenant la version papier de ces dizaines de milliers de documents. Dans les deux cas, le Procureur aurait en pratique enterré les éléments de preuve à décharge figurant dans la base de données, à moins qu'il n'informe la Défense de leur existence et ne lui fournisse un moyen de recherche autorisant à penser qu'elle les trouvera. Le paragraphe (B) de l'article 68 n'a pas été adopté pour aider le Procureur à se dérober ainsi à l'obligation de communication qui lui incombe. En effet, il ressort clairement de son libellé que cette disposition n'est nullement destinée à alléger ou à tourner l'obligation énoncée au paragraphe (A), puisqu'il y est précisé qu'elle s'applique « sous réserve du paragraphe (A) »[38].

14. Comme second moyen d'appel principal, le Procureur fait valoir que grâce à la création du système EDS et à sa présentation sous une forme permettant d'y effectuer des recherches, la Défense peut désormais « aisément avoir accès » à sa collection, ce qui est une exception reconnue à l'obligation de communication mise à sa charge[39]. A titre d'exemple, il cite la jurisprudence de la Chambre d'appel qui considère que les comptes rendus des dépositions faites en audience publique ne doivent pas être communiqués, puisqu'on peut « aisément [y] avoir accès »[40]. Nzirorera conteste cette affirmation et souligne que les documents figurant dans le système EDS étant caviardés, il est difficile de déterminer ceux qui sont de nature à disculper l'accusé[41]. Le Procureur réplique que le fait que Nzirorera possède des pièces qui, selon le Procureur, proviendraient du système EDS dément ses

[35] Le paragraphe A de l'article 68 du Règlement est ainsi libellé : «Le Procureur communique aussitôt que possible à la défense tous les éléments dont il sait effectivement qu'ils sont de nature à disculper en tout ou en partie l'accusé ou à porter atteinte à la crédibilité de ses éléments de preuve à charge ».

[38] De fait, il ressort clairement de cette réserve que quand bien même le Procureur serait fondé à soutenir que le paragraphe (B) de l'article 68 vise une catégorie d'éléments de preuve différente de celle régie par le paragraphe A, il n'en résulterait pas que le fait d'offrir à la Défense la possibilité de consulter le système EDS suffit pour satisfaire à toute l'obligation de communication prévue. Cela signifierait simplement que le Procureur peut communiquer des pièces par voie électronique pour s'acquitter de l'obligation mise à sa charge par le paragraphe (B) de l'article 68 en ce qui concerne une catégorie d'éléments de preuve, mais est toujours tenu de suivre la méthode traditionnelle de communication pour la faible catégorie d'éléments de preuve régie par le paragraphe (A). Il s'ensuit que le second volet de l'argumentation du Procureur ne s'inscrit pas dans le droit fil du premier.

[39] Appel du Procureur, par. 2 et 43 à 47. Dans le même ordre d'idées, le Procureur soutient que le système EDS répond à la raison d'être de l'obligation de communication mise à sa charge en supprimant l'avantage que lui donne son accès privilégié aux éléments de preuve. Voir l'Appel du Procureur, par. 38 à 42.

griefs et démontre que la base de données-fonctionne bien[42]. La Chambre d'appel relève que le dossier de l'affaire ne permet pas de savoir comment Nzirorera a obtenu les pièces qu'il a produites pour prouver que le Procureur avait manqué à l'obligation de communication mise à sa charge.

15. La Chambre d'appel convient que le Procureur peut être dégagé de l'obligation que lui impose l'article 68 du Règlement si la Défense est informée de l'existence des éléments de preuve à décharge considérés et si elle peut aisément y avoir accès pour peu qu'elle fasse preuve de toute la diligence voulue[43]. Le dossier dont la Chambre d'appel est saisie ne l'autorise cependant pas à conclure que le système EDS permet en général d'avoir aisément accès aux documents ni qu'il est permis de présumer que la Défense est au courant de toutes les pièces qui s'y trouvent. Pour déterminer si on peut aisément avoir accès à telle ou telle information de nature à disculper l'accusé et si la Défense est informée de son existence, il faut examiner minutieusement les circonstances de la cause[44]. Ce principe est valable non seulement pour les pièces qui ne se trouvent pas dans le système EDS, mais également pour celles qui y figurent, d'autant plus qu'il est sans doute difficile – comme l'a relevé Nzirorera – de reconnaître les éléments de preuve à décharge s'ils n'existent qu'en version caviardée. Il n'a pas été demandé à la Chambre d'appel de dire en l'occurrence si le Procureur avait satisfait à l'obligation de communication mise à sa charge en ce qui concerne tel ou tel élément d'information. La Chambre d'appel rappelle cependant au Procureur que le simple fait d'introduire une pièce dans le système EDS ne revient pas nécessairement à donner à tel ou tel accusé la possibilité d'y « avoir aisément accès ». Il serait utile que le Procureur crée un dossier spécial pour les pièces visées par l'article 68 du Règlement ou appelle par écrit l'attention de la Défense sur ces pièces et actualise régulièrement le dossier spécial ou la notification écrite.

16. Enfin, la Chambre d'appel constate que le Procureur me1 en avant la pratique suivie par diverses Chambres de première instance du Tribunal pénal international pour l'ex-Yougoslavie en matière de communication de pièces par voie électronique[45]. La Chambre d'appel relève que cette pratique diffère de la ligne de conduite qu'il propose au TPIR[46].

Edouard Karemera et consorts, Order of the Presiding Judge Assigning a Bench of Three Judges Pursuant to Rule 72 (E) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, 1er juin 2006 (ICTR-98-44)

1. La présente formation de trois juges de la Chambre d'appel du tribunal pénal international chargé de poursuivre les personnes présumées responsables d'actes de génocide ou d'autres violations graves du droit international humanitaire commis sur le territoire du Rwanda et les citoyens rwandais présumés responsables de tels actes ou violations commis sur le territoire d'Etats voisins entre le 1er janvier et le 31 décembre 1994 (respectivement la « Formation » et le « Tribunal ») est saisie de la Requête du Procureur tendant à ce que la Chambre d'appel dise que l'appel interlocutoire est de droit et peut être acceptée immédiatement, l'autorise à déposer un mémoire écrit sur le fond de l'appel et rende une ordonnance portant calendrier déposée le 30 mai 2006 (la « Requête du Procureur »).

Délibération

2. La présente requête est portée devant les juges en vertu de l'article 72 (E) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement ») du Tribunal[1] en vue de déterminer si l'appel satisfait aux exigences de l'article 72 (D) qui définit la catégorie d'objections qui peuvent être acceptées en droit. L'article 72 (D) est libellé comme suit :

Aux fins des paragraphes (A) (i) et (B) (i) [supra], l'exception d'incompétence s'entend exclusivement d'une objection selon laquelle l'acte d'accusation ne se rapporte pas :

[1] Order of the Presiding Judge Assigning a Bench of Three Judge Pursuant to Rule 72 (E) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, 1er juin 2006. L'article 72 (E) est actuellement libellé comme suit : « L'appel interjeté en application du paragraphe (B) (i) est rejeté si une formation de 3 juges de la Chambre d'appel, nommée par le Président du Tribunal, decide que le recours n'est pas susceptible de remplir l'une des conditions mentionnées au paragraphe (D) ».

(i) à l'une des personnes mentionnées aux articles 1, 5, 6, et 8 du Statut ;
(ii) aux territoires mentionnés aux articles 1, 7 et 8 du Statut ;
(iii) à la période mentionnée aux articles 1, 7 et 8 du Statut ;
(iv) à l'une des violations définies aux articles 2, 3, 4 et 6 du Statut.

3. La Requête du Procureur tend à contester une décision rendue par la Chambre de première instance selon laquelle la thèse de l'entreprise criminelle commune ne peut pas s'appliquer à une accusation de complicité dans le génocide, étant donné que la complicité dans le génocide constitue, en tant que telle, une forme de responsabilité et non un crime[2]. Le Procureur soutient que la Chambre a commis une erreur de droit, vu que la complicité dans le génocide, prévue à l'article 2 (3) (e) du Statut constitue un crime et pas simplement un mode de responsabilité[3]. Le Procureur demande également l'autorisation de dépser des mémoires écrits, conformément au paragraphe C (2) (d) (1) de la Directive pratique relative à la longueur des mémoires et des requêtes en appel (la « Directive pratique »), ainsi qu'une ordonnance portant calendrier[4].

4. Nzirorera ne s'oppose pas à la Requête du Procureur[5]. Il demande que l'ordonnance portant calendrier tienne compte des besoins de Karemera et Ngirumpatse[6] en matière de traduction[7]. Ceux-ci n'ont pas déposé de réponse, ni le Procureur en réplique.

5. Après avoir examiné les arguments de sparties, les juges considèrent que le présent appel concerne une question de compétence au sens de l'article 72 (D) (iv) du Règlement, puisqu'il vise les infractions énumérées aux articles 2 et 6 du Statut et que, de ce fait, il remplit les conditions pour être examiné en droit. En conséquence, les juge sautorisent les parties à déposer des conclusions écrites, conformément au paragraphe C (2) (d) (1) de la Directive pratique. En ce qui concerne l'ordonnance portant calendrier, les juges n'ignorent pas que pour pouvoir apporter une réponse exhaustive, Karemera et Ngirumpatse doivent disposer de la version française du mémoire d'appel du Procureur[8].

Dispositif

6. Pour les motifs qui précèdent, il est FAIT DROIT à la requête, le juge Schomburg ayant émis une opinion dissidente. Le Procureur est INVITE à déposer son mémoire au plus tard le 28 juillet 2006. Le Greffe est INVITE à fournir d'urgence à Karemera et Ngriumpatse, ainsi qu'à leurs conseils, la traduction en français du mémoire du Procureur et de la présente décision. Karemera, Ngirumpatse et Nzirorera pourront déposer leur réponse dans un délai de 10 jours à compter de la date à laquelle ils recevront respectivement la version française du dernier de ces documents. Le Procureur pourra déposer sa réplique à chacune des réponses dans un délai de quatre jours. Le Greffe est également CHARGE d'informer la Chambre d'appel de la date à laquelle les documents traduits auront été transmis aux parties.

Le juge Schomburg joint son opinion dissidente.

Opinion dissidente du Juge Schomburg au sujet de la Décision rendue en vertu de l'article 72 (E) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve relative à la validité de l'appel du Procureur concernant la thèse de l'entreprise criminelle commune appliquée à un chef de complicité dans le génocide 14 juillet 2006 (ICTR-98-44-AR72.7)

(Original : Anglais)

1. Je ne partage pas l'avis de la majorité des juges au sujet de la décision rendue ce jour faisant droit à la requête du Procureur. En effet, l'appel du Procureur ne satisfait pas aux exigences de l'article 72 (D) (iv) du Règlement. Le Tribunal est compétent pour statuer en l'espèce, indépendamment de la question de savoir si la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune s'applique ou pas et si l'accusation de complicité dans le génocide est qualifiée de crime ou de forme de responsabilité. L'appel n'est donc pas de droit.

2. Il n'appartient pas à la Chambre d'appel de statuer dès à présent sur des questions de droit qui doivent d'abord être tranchées par la Chambre de première instance compétente. C'est uniquement dans l'hypothèse où un appel serait formé sur cette qustion à l'issue du procès en première instance que la Chambre d'appel pourrait être appelée à se prononcer de manière définitive sur la question, en se fondant sur les conclusions et les considérations de la Chambre de première instance.

3. Trancher la question à ce stade reviendrait à accepter que l'examen d'une question de droit soit délégué de la juridiction de première instance compétente à la juridiction d'appel, ce qui pourrait de facto porter atteinte au droit fondamental d'interjeter appel d'un jugement en première instance. En outre, cela se traduirait par un abus de l'appel interlocutoire.

Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse et Joseph Nzirorera – Prorogation de délai, Rôle du greffier dans la traduction des documents – Requête partiellement acceptée

Instrument international cité :

Règlement de Procédure et de preuve, art. 3, 33 (B), 54 et 73

1. La troisième session du procès en la présente affaire s'est clôturée le 14 juillet 2006. Le 5 septembre 2006, le Procureur a déposé deux requêtes distinctes aux fins de faire admettre (1) une déclaration écrite en version abrégée de Joseph Serugendo, (2) des transcrits d'audience dans l'affaire Bagosora et consorts ainsi que des pièces à conviction y afférentes[1]. Il sollicite en outre que, dans l'hypothèse où il serait fait droit à sa seconde demande, la Chambre ordonne au Greffe de produire la version certifiée conforme des transcrits et pièces à conviction susmentionnés.

2. Par deux requêtes déposées le 8 septembre 2006, Mathieu Ngirumpatse demande à la Chambre une extension de délai de réponse aux requêtes précitées du Procureur, extension « adaptée à l'espèce et à la prochaine reprise du procès » et qui courrait jusqu'au 2 novembre 2006[2]. Il soutient qu'il doit disposer du temps nécessaire pour analyser ces requêtes et surtout leurs importantes annexes, et qu'il n'y pas d'urgence particulière à ce que la Chambre statue. Edouard Karemera, pour sa part, demande à ce que la Chambre fasse le nécessaire pour que les traductions en français des requêtes du Procureur soient disponibles et que, dans l'attente de leur réception, il lui soit accordé une extension de délai pour y répondre[3].

3. En vertu de l'article 3 du Règlement de procédure et preuve, le Greffier « prend les dispositions voulues pour assurer la traduction et l'interprétation dans les langues de travail ». La Chambre et le Greffe travaillent en étroite collaboration en vue de fournir la traduction des documents requis dans les meilleurs délais. Il n'est pas nécessaire d'ordonner au Greffe de prendre des mesures qu'il applique déjà. En outre, la Chambre note qu'en l'espèce, la traduction provisoire de l'une des deux requêtes du Procureur est déjà à la disposition des parties, et que la traduction de la seconde requête devrait être disponible dans les prochains jours.

4. En l'espèce, la déclaration écrite en version abrégée de Joseph Serugendo qui fait l'objet de la première demande du Procureur comporte 40 pages présentées sous forme de tableau présentant un texte en version bilingue (français-anglais).[4] Ce texte est tiré d'extraits de déclarations écrites antérieures du témoin faites à différentes dates, lesquelles ont été communiquées par le Procureur aux Conseils de la Défense et aux accusés le 12 juillet 2006.

5. Les documents qui font l'objet de la seconde demande du Procureur contiennent les témoignages sous serment d'Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse et Joseph Nzirorera dans l'affaire Bagosora et consorts ainsi que les pièces à conviction y afférentes. Le Procureur n'a pas déposé les versions papiers de ces documents mais les a communiquées aux Conseils de la Défense via courrier électronique. De l'opinion de la Chambre, il serait cependant plus approprié que la version certifiée conforme de ces documents soit dès à présent communiquée par le Greffe aux parties et à la Chambre.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

I. FAIT PARTIELLEMENT DROIT aux demandes de Mathieu Ngirumpatse et Edouard Karemera en prorogation de délai; et

II. AUTORISE les Conseils de la Défense de chaque accusés à déposer toute réponse à la requête du Procureur intitulée Prosecutor's Motion to Admit Witness Statement from Joseph Serugendo pursuant to Rule 89 (C) and 92 bis (B), au plus tard le 16 octobre 2006 ; et le Procureur à déposer toute réplique au plus tard le 20 octobre 2006 à dater du dépôt des réponses de la défense ;

III. PRIE le Greffier, en vertu des Articles 33 (B) et 54 du Règlement, de bien vouloir communiquer aux parties en l'espèce et à la Chambre, dans les meilleurs délais, les copies certifiées conformes, et dans les deux langues de travail, des transcrits du témoignage d'Edouard Karemera du 16 juin 2006, de Mathieu Ngirumpatse des 5 et 6 juillet 2005 et de Joseph Nzirorera des 16 mars et 12 juin 2006 dans l'affaire Bagosora et consorts ainsi que les pièces à conviction y afférentes.

IV. AUTORISE les Conseils de la Défense de chaque accusés à déposer toute réponse à la requête du Procureur intitulée Prosecutor's Motion to Admit Prior Sworn Trial Testimony of the Accused under Rule 89 (C), au plus tard 15 jours après la réception des copies certifiées conformes des documents susmentionnés ; et le Procureur à déposer toute réplique au plus tard 5 jours à dater du dépôt des réponses de la défense.

Edouard Karemera et consorts, Decision on Édouard Karemera's Request for Extension of Time to Respond to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal, 4 avril 2006 (ICTR-98-44)

1. La troisième session du procès en la présente affaire s'est clôturée le 14 juillet 2006. Le 11 septembre 2006, le Procureur a déposé une requête proposant un calendrier relatif à la présentation de la preuve dans la présente affaire ainsi que des directives pratiques en vue de l'organisation du procès compte tenu de stratégie de fin des travaux du Tribunal[1]. A la même date, le Procureur a déposé sa réponse unique aux soumissions des défenses quant à la demande de constat judiciaire[2].

2. Par deux requêtes respectivement des 18 et 25 septembre 2006, Edouard Karemera demande à la Chambre de lui accorder un délai de réponse à courir à compter de la réception de la traduction en français desdites requêtes[3]. Se référant aux Règlement de procédure et de preuve, au Statut du Tribunal et à la jurisprudence « constante » de la Chambre d'appel, il prétend que cette traduction est indispensable à la garantie de son droit à un procès juste et équitable[4].

3. Dans de récentes décisions prises sur la base de l'article 116 du Règlement qui prévoit explicitement cette possibilité[5], la Chambre d'appel a, en effet, fait droit à certaines demandes de l'Accusé en extension de délai. Elle a considéré qu'en l'espèce, le Conseil de la Défense d'Edouard Karemera travaille en français et non pas en anglais. Elle a conclut qu'en vue de pouvoir répondre aux appels interlocutoires, il était approprié que le Conseil de la Défense ait accès à la traduction française de ces documents. Elle a également estimé que l'absence de ces traductions constituait des motifs valables, au sens de l'article 116 dudit Règlement, pour accorder un délai raisonnable en vue de répondre à l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur[6]. Dans chaque cas, la Chambre d'appel exige la démonstration par le requérant de motifs valables à sa demande de prorogation et notamment que

[5] Règlement, article 116:
(A) La Chambre d'appel peut faire droit à une demande de report de délais si elle considère que des motifs valables le justifient.
(B) Le fait que pour pouvoir répondre et se défendre correctement, l'accusé doive avoir accès à une décision dans une langue officielle autre que celle de l'original constitue un motif valable au sens de cet Article.
[6] Le Procureur c. Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse et Joseph Nzirorera, Case N°ICTR-98-44-A (Karemera et al.), Decision on Request for Extension of Time (AC), 27 janvier 2006, par. 4 et 5; Karemera et al., Decision on Edouard Karemera's Request for Extension of Time to Respond to the Prosecution's Interlocutory Appeal (AC), 4 avril 2006, par. 3.

l'accès à la traduction dans sa langue de certains documents lui est nécessaire afin de lui permettre de répondre à la requête initiale[7]. A défaut de le faire, la prorogation de délai lui est refusée[8].

4. Les Conseils de la Défense représentent l'accusé dans la procédure devant ce Tribunal. Les actes de procédure doivent être compris d'abord par eux, sans aller à l'encontre des droits de l'accusé tels qu'inscrits à l'Article 20 (4) du Statut et interprétés par la jurisprudence de ce Tribunal[9]. A cet égard, la Chambre note la pratique du Tribunal consistant à recourir à des équipes de défense composée de conseils ou assistants juridiques bilingues en vue de limiter les ralentissements de la procédure liés à l'obtention de traductions[10]. Il ne saurait donc être pris prétexte de l'indisponibilité d'un acte de procédure dans la langue de l'accusé pour proroger les délais de la procédure, notamment lorsque les conseils sont aptes à assister adéquatement l'accusé.

5. La Chambre se doit donc d'examiner les présentes demandes à la lumière de ces principes et, comme la Chambre d'appel l'a elle-même déterminé et appliqué, toute extension de délai doit se faire tenant compte des circonstances de l'espèce et des motifs avancés par la partie requérante.

6. En l'espèce, la Chambre a déjà eu l'occasion de constater à plusieurs reprises que l'équipe de la Défense d'Edouard Karemera est composée d'une assistante juridique bi-lingue, français-anglais, et que tant le Conseil principal que le Co-conseil comprennent l'anglais et sont aptes à travailler dans cette langue[11]. En outre, il faut rappeler que la date de dépôt de réponse à la soumission du Procureur relative au constat judiciaire avait été fixée de commun accord avec les parties[12].

7. De l'avis de la Chambre, l'Accusé dispose par conséquent d'une assistance suffisante pour lui permettre de comprendre les requêtes dont question. La Chambre note également que la traduction provisoire des requêtes du Procureur vient d'être communiquée aux parties. Le fait que la Défense ne dispose pas de la version traduite de requêtes déposées par une autre partie en la présente affaire n'affecte en rien son obligation de déposer ses soumissions endéans un délai de cinq jours conformément à l'article 73 (E) du Règlement. Aucune prolongation de ce délai sur cette base ne pourrait dès lors être accordée.

8. La Chambre exprime une certaine préoccupation quant à des demandes répétitives d'extension de délai et présentées, sans aucune justification, à la date limite d'expiration pour le dépôt de réponse d'Edouard Karemera à des requêtes pendantes. Un tel comportement affecte une gestion efficace de la procédure. Les Conseils de la Défense sont vivement appelés à veiller à ce que de telles demandes répétitives et de dernière minute ne portent pas atteinte à une bonne administration de la justice et aux droits fondamentaux de l'Accusé, en ce compris à être jugé dans un délai raisonnable.

9. Cependant, dans la mesure où une brève prorogation de délai ne devrait pas affecter la reprise de la procédure fixée au 23 octobre 2006 et vu l'importance des deux requêtes du Procureur, la Chambre se déclare prête à faire partiellement droit aux demandes d'Edouard Karemera.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

1. 13 septembre 2006, à la suite d'une requête introduite par le Procureur, la Chambre a invité le Gouvernement rwandais à coopérer avec le Tribunal en vue du transfert temporaire du témoin à charge GBU qui devra être à Arusha en temps utile pour pouvoir déposer comme prévu pendant la quatrième session du procès allant du 23 octobre au 15 décembre 2006[1]. Selon les informations reçues par la Chambre, le témoin était alors en liberté provisoire ; l'article 90 bis du Règlement de procédure et de preuve, qui habilite la Chambre à ordonner le transfert d'une personne détenue au centre de détention du Tribunal quand sa présence est sollicitée, n'était donc pas applicable.

[1] Karemera et consorts, affaire n°ICTR-98-44-T, Order for the Transfer of Prosecution Witnesses From Rwanda, 13 septembre 2006.

2. Depuis lors, le Procureur a reçu des informations selon lesquelles le témoin GBU a de nouveau été arrêté et est actuellement détenu au Rwanda. Il prie par conséquent la Chambre d'ordonner son transfert temporaire, comme témoin détenu, au centre de détention des Nations Unies à Arusha[2].

3. Selon une lettre du Ministère rwandais de la justice présentée par le Procureur, le transfert temporaire de GBU à Arusha pourra se faire pendant la période sus-indiquée[3]. La Chambre s'est assurée que ce témoin n'était pas requis pour un procès pénal au Rwanda pendant cette période et que sa présence au Tribunal ne prolongerait pas la durée de sa détention dans ce pays. En vertu des dispositions de l'article 90 bis (B) du Règlement, le témoin peut donc être temporairement transféré au centre de détention du Tribunal.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

I. FAIT DROIT à la requête du Procureur ;

II. PRIE le Greffier, en vertu de l'article 90 bis du Règlement, de transférer temporairement le témoin détenu, connu sous le pseudonyme de GBU, au centre de détention des Nations Unies à Arusha, en temps utile pour pouvoir déposer comme prévu pendant la période allant du 23 octobre au 15 décembre 2006 ;

III. PRIE le Greffier de prendre les dispositions voulues pour faciliter le retour du témoin GBU au Rwanda dès que possible, une fois qu'il aura terminé sa déposition ;

IV. [sic] INVITE les Gouvernements rwandais et tanzanien à prêter leur collaboration au Greffe en vue de l'application de la présente décision ;

V. [sic] PRIE le Greffier de coopérer avec les autorités rwandaises et tanzaniennes pour veiller au bon déroulement du transfert et de la détention du témoin au centre de détention des Nations Unies et de porter à la connaissance de la Chambre tout changement de circonstances qui pourrait affecter la durée du séjour de l'intéressé à Arusha.

Introduction

1. Le procès en l'espèce s'est ouvert le 19 septembre 2005. Les témoins à charge ZF et XBM ont été appelés à la barre au cours de la troisième session du procès qui a débuté le 15 mai 2006.

2. Pendant les dépositions, la Défense de Nzirorera a soulevé des objections quant à l'admissibilité de certaines parties des témoignages et demandé l'exclusion de telle ou telle partie. La Défense de Karemera et celle de Ngirumpatse ont également exprimé leurs préoccupations sur les modalités de présentation des moyens à charge à la lumière des allégations formulées dans l'acte d'accusation et ont fait leurs les objections de la Défense de Nzirorera. Le Procureur s'est opposé à ces objections et a fait valoir que la Défense avait été dûment informée des moyens de preuve contestés à travers l'acte d'accusation, le mémoire préalable au procès, notamment le résumé des dépositions des témoins, et les déclarations de témoin. Estimant que les objections portaient sur des questions juridiques et factuelles importantes et similaires, se rapportant aux charges retenues contre les accusés, la Chambre a jugé qu'il valait mieux qu'elle statue par écrit.

3. En plus de ces objections particulières, la Défense a demandé, à la fin de la session, que la déposition du témoin XBM soit exclue dans sa totalité et que des sanctions soient prises contre le Procureur pour communication tardive d'une déclaration du témoin recueillie en 2005.

Délibération

4. Dans la présente section, la Chambre examine tout d'abord la demande tendant à faire exclure dans sa totalité la déposition du témoin XBM, avant de se pencher sur les autres objections soulevées par la Défense.

1. Demande de la Défense tendant à exclure la déposition du témoin XBM et à imposer des sanctions au Procureur

5. Le 5 juillet 2006, lors de la déposition du témoin XBM en l'espèce, le Procureur a communiqué à la Défense une déclaration de ce témoin recueillie le 6 septembre 2005 par les enquêteurs du TPIR basés à Kigali. La Défense de Nzirorera, appuyée par celles de Karemera et de Ngirumpatse[1], a fait valoir qu'une communication aussi tardive constituait la preuve que le Procureur avait manifestement manqué à l'obligation que lui imposait l'article 66 (A) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement ») de communiquer, au plus tard 60 jours avant la date fixée pour le début du procès, copie des dépositions de tous les témoins qu'il entend appeler à la barre. Elle a par conséquent demandé l'exclusion de la déposition du témoin XBM dans sa totalité et l'imposition de sanctions au Procureur conformément à l'article 46 (A) du Règlement[2]. Le Procureur a reconnu que la pièce avait été communiquée tardivement, mais a expliqué qu'il n'avait été informé de l'existence de ce document que la veille, après que le témoin l'eut mentionné pour la première fois. Il a déclaré que le défaut de communication était une erreur[3].

6. Parmi l'éventail de moyens dont dispose la Chambre pour remédier à la communication tardive de pièces et à la violation des droits de l'accusé, le recours à l'exclusion d'un témoignage est une mesure extrême[4].

7. En l'espèce, la Défense n'a pas montré que la communication tardive de la déclaration du témoin lui avait causé un préjudice qui justifierait le recours à cette mesure extrême. Elle a eu l'occasion de contre-interroger le témoin sur cette déclaration particulière et les incohérences qui existeraient entre la déclaration et la déposition à l'audience[5]. Par conséquent, même si la Défense avait subi un préjudice du fait de la communication tardive de cette pièce, la Chambre estime qu'il y a été remédié. Elle relève par ailleurs que les déclarations du témoin avaient déjà été communiquées à la Défense dans les délais, de sorte que la Défense a été informée de la déposition envisagée et des questions touchant la crédibilité de ce témoin[6]. Dans ces conditions, la Chambre est convaincue que la communication tardive de la déclaration du témoin n'a pas compromis l'équité du procès des accusés. La demande de la Défense tendant à exclure dans sa totalité la déposition du témoin XBM doit donc être rejetée.

8. La Chambre estime que rien ne justifie une sanction contre le Procureur sur le fondement de l'article 46 du Règlement. Contrairement aux affirmations de la Défense, le cas d'espèce diffère de celui qui a amené la Chambre à prononcer un avertissement contre le Procureur pour défaut de communication des pièces relatives au témoin T[7]. À l'époque, la Défense demandait que lui soient communiquées toutes les pièces concernant le témoin T et se plaignait de ce que le Procureur manquait à ses obligations de communication. Le Procureur quant à lui ne cessait de répéter qu'il s'était acquitté de ses obligations. Il reconnaîtra toutefois plus tard, après complément d'enquête, n'avoir effectivement pas communiqué toutes les pièces. La Chambre a jugé qu'un tel comportement dénotait un manque de diligence du Procureur face à ses obligations, ce qui entravait la procédure et allait à l'encontre des intérêts de la justice[8]. Dans le cas d'espèce par contre, dès qu'il a été informé de l'existence de la pièce concernant le témoin XBM, le Procureur s'est employé à la retrouver pour la communiquer immédiatement à la Défense. Il a reconnu que ce défaut de communication était une erreur et s'est déclaré prêt à en assumer les conséquences si la Chambre jugeait nécessaire de le sanctionner[9]. La Chambre présume que le Procureur s'est acquitté de ses obligations de bonne foi[10]. À la lumière de ce qui précède, et en l'absence de toute preuve du contraire, la Chambre n'a aucune raison de croire que le Procureur a fait preuve de mauvaise foi ou qu'il n'a pas exercé toute la diligence voulue pour s'acquitter de ses obligations en l'espèce.

2. Objections de la Défense à l'admission de certaines parties des dépositions des témoins ZF et XBM

9. La Chambre estime qu'il convient de rappeler les principes de droit applicables aux questions soulevées, principes qu'elle appliquera aux objections particulières soulevées par la Défense dans le cas d'espèce.

2.1. Droit applicable

10. Les objections orales de la Défense soulèvent deux questions relatives au droit applicable, la première concerne les accusations portées contre un accusé et la seconde l'admissibilité des éléments de preuve.

(i) Droit applicable aux accusations portées contre un accusé

11. Selon l'article 17 (4) du Statut et l'article 47 (C) du Règlement, le Procureur doit exposer succinctement dans l'acte d'accusation les faits en cause et le crime (ou les crimes) qui sont reprochés à l'accusé. Cette obligation doit être interprétée à la lumière du droit de l'accusé à un procès équitable, à être informé des accusations portées contre lui et à disposer du temps et des moyens nécessaires à la préparation de sa défense[11]. Selon la jurisprudence des deux Tribunaux ad hoc, le Procureur est tenu de présenter les faits essentiels qui fondent les accusations formulées dans l'acte d'accusation, et non les éléments de preuve qui doivent établir ces faits[12] : l'acte d'accusation doit remplir son objectif fondamental qui est d'informer l'accusé, avec suffisamment de précision, de la nature des accusations portées contre lui pour qu'il puisse préparer sa défense[13].

12. C'est la nature des moyens à charge qui détermine le caractère « essentiel » des faits. La qualification donnée par le Procureur au comportement criminel allégué et l'étroitesse du lien qui existerait entre l'accusé et les faits incriminés constituent des éléments décisifs pour déterminer le degré de précision avec lequel le Procureur doit exposer les faits essentiels de sa cause dans l'acte d'accusation afin d'informer suffisamment l'accusé[14]. Lorsque le Procureur reproche à l'accusé d'avoir personnellement commis des crimes, il doit, autant que possible, indiquer l'identité de la victime, le lieu et la date approximative des crimes allégués ainsi que leur mode d'exécution « avec la plus grande précision »[15] [traduction]. Une présentation moins détaillée peut être acceptée si,

Lorsqu'il reproche à l'accusé d'avoir planifié, incité à commettre, ordonné ou aidé et encouragé les crimes allégués, le Procureur doit préciser les « agissements » ou « la ligne de conduite » de l'accusé qui fondent les accusations portées contre lui[17]. S'il invoque la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune, il doit préciser le but de l'entreprise, l'identité des parties et la nature de la participation de l'accusé[18].

13. L'acte d'accusation est entaché de vice s'il ne précise pas les faits essentiels du crime. Il peut arriver que l'acte d'accusation ne présente pas les faits essentiels avec le degré de précision requis parce que le Procureur n'était pas en possession des informations nécessaires[19]. Dans ce contexte, il convient de souligner que le Procureur doit connaître son dossier avant d'aller au procès et ne devrait pas invoquer les lacunes de ses propres enquêtes pour justifier la modification des charges retenues contre l'accusé au fur et à mesure que le procès avance[20]. L'acte d'accusation peut également se trouver entaché de vice lorsque les dépositions prennent une tournure inattendue. Dans ce cas, la Chambre doit juger s'il convient, pour l'équité du procès, de faire modifier l'acte d'accusation, d'ajourner le procès ou d'exclure les éléments de preuve qui sortent du cadre de l'acte d'accusation[21].

14. De plus, selon la jurisprudence constante du Tribunal, l'acte d'accusation peut être purgé de ses vices si l'accusé a reçu du Procureur, en temps voulu, des informations claires et cohérentes qui lèvent toute ambiguïté et éliminent toute imprécision qui l'entacherait[22]. Comme la Chambre d'appel l'a relevé, « le nombre de fois qu'un acte d'accusation peut être "purgé" n'est pas illimité[23] » [traduction]. Seuls les faits essentiels pouvant raisonnablement se rapporter aux accusations retenues et n'entraînant pas une « transformation radicale » de la thèse du Procureur peuvent être communiqués de cette manière[24]. Avant d'adopter cette position, les Chambres ont examiné les informations fournies par le mémoire préalable au procès ou la déclaration liminaire du Procureur. Comme le souligne la Chambre d'appel, ces méthodes ne sont pas les seuls moyens de purger un acte d'accusation[25]. Selon les circonstances, l'accusé peut être informé par la liste des témoins que le Procureur entend appeler à la barre, accompagnée du résumé des faits et accusations énoncés dans l'acte d'accusation et sur lesquels porteront les dépositions des témoins, avec notamment des références précises aux chefs d'accusation et aux paragraphes pertinents de l'acte d'accusation. La Chambre d'appel a également déclaré que « les seules déclarations de témoin ou pièces à conviction potentielles fournies par le Procureur pour s'acquitter de ses obligations de communication ne peuvent suffisamment informer l'accusé des faits essentiels que le Procureur entend prouver au procès[26] » [traduction]. Elle reconnaît que, vu le volume des pièces communiquées par le Procureur dans certaines affaires, une déclaration de témoin ne peut, sans indication complémentaire, informer suffisamment l'accusé que l'allégation fait partie des moyens à charge[27]. La Chambre d'appel a néanmoins relevé qu'une déclaration de témoin lue à la lumière des informations claires contenues dans le mémoire préalable au procès du Procureur et ses annexes, peut suffire à purger un acte d'accusation vicié[28].

15. Pour déterminer si un acte d'accusation vicié a été purgé, la Chambre doit se demander si, au regard des circonstances particulières de l'espèce, l'accusé a raisonnablement été en mesure de comprendre la nature des accusations portées contre lui et de préparer sa défense[29]. De plus, lorsqu'elle estime qu'un acte d'accusation vicié a été purgé ultérieurement, elle devrait déterminer malgré tout si ces vices ont porté un préjudice substantiel au droit de l'accusé à un procès équitable en l'empêchant de préparer convenablement sa défense[30].

(ii) Admissibilité des moyens de preuve

16. L'admissibilité des moyens de preuve est régie par le Règlement de procédure et de preuve[31]. La Chambre n'est pas liée par les règles de droit interne régissant l'administration de la preuve et, dans les cas où le Règlement est muet, elle peut appliquer les règles propres à permettre, dans l'esprit du Statut et des principes généraux du droit, un règlement équitable de la cause[32].

17. Selon l'article 89 (C) du Règlement, « la Chambre peut recevoir tout élément de preuve pertinent dont elle estime qu'il a valeur probante ». La Chambre d'appel a constamment déclaré que cet article conférait à la Chambre de première instance toute latitude pour admettre une preuve indirecte pertinente. Le fait que la preuve est indirecte ne la prive pas nécessairement de sa force probante mais on admet que l'importance ou la valeur probante qui s'y attache sera habituellement moindre que celle accordée à la déposition sous serment d'un témoin qui peut être contre-interrogé, encore que même cela dépend des circonstances extrêmement variables qui entourent ce témoignage[33].

18. En règle générale, il ne faut pas confondre l'admissibilité d'un élément de preuve et l'évaluation de sa valeur probante, question qui doit être tranchée par la Chambre de première instance après audition de l'ensemble de la déposition[34].

19. Pour être admissible, l'élément de preuve doit, d'une manière ou d'une autre, se rapporter à un élément constitutif du crime imputé à l'accusé [35][traduction]. Selon la Chambre d'appel, le fait qu'un fait essentiel n'a pas été suffisamment précisé dans l'acte d'accusation ne suffit pas à rendre l'élément de preuve inadmissible[36]. Celui-ci peut être admis dès lors qu'il est susceptible d'étayer une allégation suffisamment précise de l'acte d'accusation[37].

20. Lorsqu'elle se prononce sur l'admissibilité d'un élément de preuve, la Chambre doit également s'assurer que les droits de l'accusé sont protégés conformément aux articles 19 et 20 du Statut. Elle dispose donc du pouvoir légitime d'exclure tout élément de preuve dont la valeur probante est largement inférieure à l'exigence d'un procès équitable[38].

2.2. Application des principes de droit susmentionnés aux objections orales soulevées par la Défense en l'espèce

21. Dans les paragraphes qui suivent, la Chambre examinera chacune des objections soulevées par la Défense au sujet des dépositions des témoins ZF et XBM à la lumière des principes de droit susmentionnés.

(i) Objections de la Défense à la déposition du témoin ZF

22. La Défense de Joseph Nzirorera soutient que certains aspects de la déposition du témoin ZF visent des faits essentiels dont il n'était pas question dans l'acte d'accusation. Pour elle, certaines parties de la déposition manquent de fiabilité et de valeur probante et leur admission causerait un préjudice à son client. Elle demande par conséquent à la Chambre d'exclure les parties de la déposition du témoin ZF portant sur :

a. Les membres du réseau zéro[39],

b. Les réunions organisées par Ngirumpatse à Gisenyi de 1992 à fin 1993 et les réunions tenues entre autorités civiles et militaires en un certain lieu entre 1990 et 1994[40], c. La présence de Nzirorera à une distribution d'armes qui aurait eu lieu après le 6 avril 1994[41].

a. Éléments de preuve portant sur les membres du réseau zéro

23. Le témoin ZF a déclaré qu'il existait un réseau de télécommunications secret appelé réseau zéro qu'exploitaient les membres du cercle restreint du Président Habyarimana[42]. Selon lui, ces personnes changeaient d'appellation au gré des circonstances, elles pouvaient un jour s'appeler « Abakozi, les travailleurs » et un autre « les dragons ». Le témoin a déclaré qu'il existait des liens entre le réseau zéro et l'Akazu, le cercle présidentiel qui regroupait des personnes originaires de la même région que le Président, particulièrement de Ruhengeri et de Gisenyi. Le Président ayant eu besoin d'un soutien plus large, le groupe Akazu s'est progressivement étendu aux personnes originaires d'autres localités du pays et que le Président considérait comme étant dignes de confiance. Le groupe ainsi élargi s'appelait « les dragons »[43].

24. La Défense de Nzirorera s'oppose à l'admission des éléments de preuve portant sur le réseau zéro et ses membres. Elle soutient que ce fait essentiel n'est pas traité dans l'acte d'accusation et que sa source n'est pas assez fiable ou suffisamment pourvue de valeur probante pour qu'il soit admis[44]. Le Procureur réplique que les éléments de preuve présentés sur le réseau zéro pourraient servir à établir l'accusation d'entente en vue de commettre le génocide, et étant donné que l'appartenance à un réseau de télécommunications ne constitue pas en soi un crime, ce fait n'avait pas besoin d'être traité dans l'acte d'accusation. Toutefois, le Procureur fait valoir que l'accusé en a suffisamment été informé par la déclaration faite par le témoin en 1998 et les « nombreuses pièces qui lui avaient été communiquées »[45] [traduction].

25. L'identité des parties à l'entente en vue de commettre le génocide et l'appartenance de l'accusé et d'autres personnes à un groupe précis dans le but de commettre le génocide constituent des faits essentiels qui doivent être traités dans l'acte d'accusation. La Chambre relève que l'acte d'accusation ne mentionne nulle part le réseau zéro et ses membres. Le mémoire préalable au procès ne contient qu'une note en bas de page dans laquelle on peut lire :

Ni le résumé de la déposition du témoin ZF joint au mémoire préalable au procès, ni la déclaration liminaire ne font référence à ce réseau et à ses membres. Contrairement aux affirmations du Procureur, une déclaration de témoin ne peut, vu le volume de pièces communiquées, suffisamment informer l'accusé qu'une allégation fait partie des moyens à charge si elle n'est pas accompagnée d'indications complémentaires.

26. La Chambre conclut qu'il n'a pas été remédié aux imprécisions de l'acte d'accusation sur l'existence du réseau zero et l'appartenance de l'accusé à ce réseau par des informations claires, cohérentes et communiquées en temps utile.

27. Elle estime toutefois que la déposition du témoin ZF est pertinente en ce qu'elle étaie d'autres allégations suffisamment précises de l'acte d'accusation, en particulier l'existence de groupes affiliés au mouvement dit « Hutu Power », notamment l'Akazu. Contrairement aux arguments de la Défense, la Chambre considère que cette preuve par ouï-dire est admissible et que sa valeur probante ne l'emporte pas nettement sur la nécessité d'assurer un procès équitable. Elle rappelle que le poids à accorder à un élément de preuve est une question différente qui sera tranchée à un stade ultérieur de la procédure.

28. En conséquence, la Chambre conclut que la déposition du témoin ZF portant sur le réseau zéro ne peut être admise pour établir le fait essentiel que les accusés appartenaient à ce réseau, dans la mesure où ceux-ci n'ont pas été informés d'une telle allégation. Cette déposition ne peut être admise que dans la mesure où elle établit l'existence de l'Akazu, comme le soutient l'acte d'accusation[47].

b. Réunions organisées par Ngirumpatse à Gisenyi de 1992 à fin 1993 et réunions tenues entre autorités civiles et militaires en un certain endroit de Gisenyi de 1990 à 1994 fourni beaucoup de détails sur les réunions en question et s'est contenté de donner la liste des principaux participants où ne figurait aucun des accusés.

29. À en croire le témoin ZF, Ngirumpatse a tenu deux réunions au palais du MRND dans la préfecture de Gisenyi en 1992 et 1993, où il était question du comportement des milices Interahamwe dans la préfecture de Gisenyi, de la discipline en leur sein et du soutien qu'elles devaient apporter aux forces armées rwandaises et à la gendarmerie de Gisenyi[48]. Le témoin a également déclaré que cinq réunions s'étaient tenues en un certain endroit de la même préfecture entre 1990 et 1994[49]. Selon lui, Nzirorera avait pris part à une de ces réunions dans le second semestre de 1992 et avait déclaré que « les Tutsis ne réussir[aient] pas leur rêve inimaginable, et qu'il [était] d'accord avec lui [le colonel Bagosora] pour ne pas les laisser [poursuivre leur plan][50] ». À part cette réunion[51], le témoin n'a pas

30. La Défense de Nzirorera s'est opposée à l'admission de ces parties de la déposition du témoin ZF au motif que les réunions qui y étaient évoquées constituaient des faits essentiels qui n'étaient visés ni dans l'acte d'accusation ni dans le mémoire préalable au procès, et que les accusés n'en avaient pas été suffisamment informés[52]. En réponse, le Procureur a invoqué les paragraphes 23 et 24 de l'acte d'accusation en ce qui concerne les réunions tenues par Ngirumpatse, mais n'a donné aucune référence précise s'agissant des réunions tenues en un certain endroit de Gisenyi entre 1990 et 1994[53]. Il a fait valoir que la Défense avait été suffisamment informée dans la mesure où les réunions étaient évoquées dans le mémoire préalable au procès[54], le résumé de la déposition envisagée joint au mémoire, les déclarations de témoin et le résumé de la déposition attendue du témoin ZF[55].

31. La Chambre relève que ni le mémoire préalable au procès ni la déclaration liminaire ne font état d'une réunion tenue à Gisenyi en 1990. Elle estime que les accusés n'ont pas été suffisamment informés que ce fait essentiel faisait partie des accusations portées contre eux. De plus, le Procureur a reconnu que « c'[étaient] des réunions négligeables [, et qu'i]l s'agissait en fait d'éclairer la preuve[56]». Rien ne justifie par conséquent l'admission de la déposition du témoin ZF portant sur une réunion qui se serait tenue en un certain endroit de Gisenyi en 1990. Cette déposition devrait être exclue[57].

Le paragraphe 41 fait particulièrement état des réunions organisées en divers lieux de Gisenyi dès le début de 1992, réunions « au cours desquelles des personnalités éminentes du MRND aux niveaux régional et national se sont retrouvées pour accorder leurs stratégies ». Le paragraphe 141 fait également référence à plusieurs réunions tenues en 1992 dans certains camps militaires à Gisenyi et dont « les participants comprenaient Nzirorera […] ». Le résumé de la déposition attendue de ZF joint

[58] Acte d'accusation, par. 23 et 24 :
23. Pendant une période de plusieurs années qui va jusqu'en 1994 inclusivement, notamment après 1992, Édouard KAREMERA, Mathieu NGIRUMPATSE et Joseph NZIRORERA se sont entendus entre eux et avec les personnes mentionnées aux alinéas i à iv du paragraphe 6, se réunissant séparément en divers lieux et à différentes occasions dans le cadre de leurs activités au sein du parti et de leurs activités officielles au sein du Gouvernement, pour planifier et préparer la destruction de la population tutsie du Rwanda, en particulier le massacre des personnes considérées comme tutsies. En outre, ils ont commis des actes tendant à l'exécution de cette entente.
Avant le 8 avril 1994 Création du mouvement Interahamwe ; réunions et discours publics ; financement et formation militaire des milices ; stockage d'armes à feu et distribution d'armes aux dites milices: 24. En 1993 et 1994, Édouard KAREMERA, Mathieu NGIRUMPATSE et Joseph NZIRORERA se sont entendus entre eux et avec d'autres personnes pour prendre collectivement des initiatives visant à établir et étendre leur contrôle personnel et celui du Comité directeur du MRND sur un corps de miliciens organisé et centralisé qui répondrait à leur appel lorsqu'ils demanderaient d'attaquer, de tuer et de détruire la population tutsie.

au mémoire préalable au procès indique que le témoin parlerait des réunions tenues entre 1992 et 1994 à Gisenyi, notamment dans des camps militaires, il cite les participants à ces réunions, dont Nzirorera et Ngirumpatse, et présente brièvement les sujets qui y ont été débattus. Le résumé indique aussi de manière claire les paragraphes et allégations spécifiques de l'acte d'accusation auxquels se rapportent ces faits. Ces informations claires ont été constamment confirmées dans les déclarations de témoin communiquées à la Défense avant le début du procès[60]. Il convient de relever à cet égard que la Défense a reconnu que ces déclarations de témoin décrivaient les réunions avec beaucoup de détails[61].

33. La Chambre estime qu'au vu des informations claires contenues dans le mémoire préalable au procès, notamment du résumé de la déposition attendue du témoin ZF, les accusés ont été suffisamment informés à travers les déclarations de témoin que les allégations fondées sur ces réunions faisaient partie de la thèse du Procureur. Elle relève en outre que le mémoire préalable au procès et les nombreuses déclarations de témoin ont été déposés bien avant que le témoin ZF ne fasse sa déposition[62].

34. Dans ces circonstances, la Chambre conclut que les accusés ont reçu, en temps utile, des informations claires et cohérentes indiquant que les réunions alléguées faisaient partie des accusations portées contre eux. Elle estime également que la Défense a eu l'occasion raisonnable d'enquêter sur ces allégations. L'ampleur du vice de l'acte d'accusation ne porte pas de préjudice substantiel au droit de l'accusé à un procès équitable. L'objection de la Défense est par conséquent rejetée.

c. Présence de Nzirorera à une distribution d'armes qui aurait eu lieu après le 6 avril 1994

35. La Défense de Nzirorera a demandé à la Chambre d'exclure la partie de la déposition du témoin ZF relative à la présence de l'accusé à une distribution d'armes qui aurait eu lieu fin 1993 – début 1994, au motif que cette information ne figurait pas dans l'acte d'accusation.

36. L'acte d'accusation ne vise pas ce fait précis, mais évoque la participation directe de Joseph Nzirorera à la distribution d'armes[63]. Le résumé de la déposition attendue du témoin ZF joint au mémoire préalable au procès indique que le témoin parlerait de la distribution d'armes qui a eu lieu dans certains camps militaires de Gisenyi en 1993 et dirait > « qu'après le 6 avril 1994, des armes importées de l'étranger ont été distribuées aux miliciens dans le but de renforcer le 42ème bataillon[…] et que cette distribution d'armes a eu lieu en présence de Nzirorera ».

Ces informations claires ont été constamment confirmées dans les déclarations de témoin communiquées à la Défense bien avant le début du procès[64].

37. Selon la Chambre, les accusés ont reçu, en temps utile, des informations claires et cohérentes indiquant que la distribution d'armes sur laquelle portait la déposition du témoin ZF faisait partie des accusations portées contre eux. Elle note qu'au cours de la déposition le témoin n'a pas pu se rappeler les dates exactes auxquelles la distribution d'armes avait eu lieu. Cette question sera examinée lors de l'évaluation de la déposition. La Défense ayant eu la possibilité raisonnable d'enquêter sur ces allégations, l'ampleur du vice de l'acte d'accusation ne porte pas de préjudice substantiel au droit des accusés à un procès équitable. L'objection de la Défense est par conséquent rejetée.

(ii) Objections de la Défense à la déposition du témoin XBM

38. La Défense de Nzirorera, appuyée par celles de Ngirumpatse et de Karemera[65], s'est opposée à l'admission des éléments de preuve ci-après invoqués lors de la déposition du témoin XBM :

a. La cérémonie d'installation de l'antenne de la RTLM et la distribution d'armes qui a suivi[66],

b. Une réunion tenue au bureau communal de Mutura en janvier 1994[67],

c. Une réunion tenue à l' Hôtel Méridien en mai 1994[68],

d. Les massacres perpétrés à Nyundo[69].

39. À propos des faits susmentionnés, le témoin XBM a expliqué comment les autorités militaires avaient mobilisé la population civile, sollicité sa collaboration, et comment celle-ci avait participé aux attaques lancées contre les Tutsis.

40. La Défense soutient, et le Procureur convient avec elle, que ces faits essentiels ne sont visés ni dans l'acte d'accusation, ni dans le mémoire préalable au procès. La Chambre retient toutefois l'argument du Procureur selon lequel ces éléments de preuve servent à établir qu'il existait une collaboration entre les autorités militaires et la population civile[70]. Cette allégation fait clairement partie de la thèse du Procureur si l'on considère l'acte d'accusation, le mémoire préalable au procès et le résumé des dépositions attendues de différents témoins joint en annexe[71]. Le résumé de la déposition attendue du témoin XBM indique particulièrement que « [l]e témoin fera un témoignage sur la coopération existant entre militaires et civils avant et pendant les massacres ». Cette information claire est confirmée dans la déclaration du témoin XBM communiquée en décembre 2004 comme pièce justificative à la modification de l'acte d'accusation, soit plus d'un an avant la déposition du témoin.

41. La Chambre note que le témoin XBM n'a pas déclaré que les accusés étaient présents lors de la commission de ces faits. Dans ces circonstances, elle est convaincue qu'une admission restreinte de ces éléments de preuve ne portera pas atteinte aux droits des accusés à un procès équitable.

42. La déposition du témoin XBM portant sur la cérémonie d'installation d'une antenne de la RTLM fin 1993 et la distribution d'armes qui a suivi, la réunion tenue au bureau communal de Mutura en janvier 1994, une réunion tenue à l'Hôtel Méridien en mai 1994 et les massacres perpétrés à Nyundo est par conséquent admissible dans le seul but de montrer qu'il existait une collaboration entre civils et autorités militaires.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LE TRIBUNAL

I. REJETTE la requête de la Défense tendant à exclure dans sa totalité la déposition du témoin XBM et à imposer des sanctions au Procureur,

II. ACCUEILLE EN PARTIE les objections soulevées oralement par la Défense à certaines parties de la déposition des témoins ZF et XBM et DÉCIDE comme suit :

1. La déposition du témoin ZF relative au réseau zéro ne peut être admise pour établir le fait essentiel que les accusés appartenaient à ce réseau, ceux-ci n'ayant pas été informés du fait. Cette déposition n'est admissible que dans la mesure où elle établit l'existence des liens entre le réseau et l'Akazu,

2. La déposition du témoin XBM portant sur la cérémonie d'installation d'une antenne de la RTLM fin 1993 et la distribution d'armes qui a suivi, la réunion tenue au bureau communal de Mutura en janvier 1994, une réunion tenue à l'Hôtel Méridien en mai 1994 et les massacres perpétrés à Nyundo est admissible dans le seul but de montrer qu'il existait une collaboration entre civils et autorités militaires.

III. REJETTE les objections orales de la Défense en leurs autres aspects.

Introduction

1. L'ouverture du procès en l'espèce a eu lieu le 19 septembre 2005. Dans une requête déposée le 5 avril 2006, le Procureur a indiqué qu'il était disposé à communiquer des pièces relatives au FPR comme l'avait demandé la Défense de Joseph Nzirorera, tout en priant la Chambre d'« être dispensé de l'obligation de révéler l'identité des auteurs des déclarations[1] » (traduction). Le 4 juillet 2006, la Chambre a fait droit en partie à la requête mais a ordonné que l'identité des auteurs des déclarations concernant le Front patriotique rwandais (« FPR ») soit communiquée à la Défense. Elle a en même temps prescrit des mesures de protection en faveur des témoins en vue d'assurer leur sécurité[2].

2. Par la suite, le Procureur a communiqué à la Défense de chacun des accusés une version caviardée de quatre déclarations de témoin, dont celles de DM46 et DM80, ainsi que copie d'un rapport portant sur les activités du FPR[3].

3. Entre-temps, la Défense de Nzirorera avait déposé une requête demandant à la Chambre d'ordonner au Procureur de communiquer les documents et les déclarations de témoin susceptibles d'établir que le FPR avait commis des actes de violence et qu'il avait infiltré la population rwandaise entre 1990 et 1994. Elle a également demandé des sanctions à l'encontre du Procureur qui ne s'était pas conformé à la décision rendue par la Chambre le 4 juillet 2006[4]. Le Procureur s'oppose à cette requête[5].

[5] Réponse du Procureur, déposée le 29 septembre 2006.

4. La Défense fait valoir que les documents et les déclarations de témoin alléguant d'actes de violence et d'infiltration commis par le FPR entre 1990 et 1994 constituent des éléments de preuve à décharge au sens de l'article 68 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »). Ces pièces sont suffisamment identifiées et leur communication est essentielle à la thèse de la Défense, dans la mesure où elles fournissent la justification des barrages et du système de défense civile et qu'elles tendent à prouver que les actes reprochés à l'accusé relevaient d'une réponse légitime à l'infiltration avérée du FPR et aux actes de violence commis par celui-ci. La Défense ajoute que, dans l'affaire Bagosora, la Chambre a déjà établi que ces pièces étaient de nature à disculper l'accusé, conclusion qui s'applique à l'espèce[6]. Toujours selon la Défense, le Procureur a admis être en possession de déclarations de témoin autres que celles qu'il a déjà communiquées. Elle en conclut que les critères que la Chambre a formulés dans ses précédentes décisions pour ordonner la communication de pièces en vertu de l'article 68 du Règlement sont donc réunis en l'espèce. En réponse, le Procureur indique que son équipe consulte régulièrement sa base de données à la recherche de documents sur le FPR en suivant les critères avancés par la Défense mais qu'il n'a en sa possession aucune pièce susceptible d'être communiquée.

5. L'article 68 (A) du Règlement prescrit que le Procureur

> « communique aussitôt que possible à la Défense tous les éléments dont il sait effectivement qu'ils sont de nature à disculper en tout ou en partie l'accusé ou à porter atteinte à la crédibilité de ses éléments de preuve à charge ».

« C'est au Procureur qu'il revient de déterminer, sur la base des faits », quelles sont les pièces qui remplissent les conditions fixées dans l'article 68[7], et celui-ci est présumé s'acquitter de ses obligations de bonne foi[8].

6. Selon la jurisprudence du Tribunal, pour établir une violation de l'obligation de communication en vertu de l'article 68, la Défense doit : (i) déterminer de manière précise les pièces dont elle souhaite la communication, (ii) établir que le Procureur a ces éléments en sa possession ou sous son contrôle, (iii) présenter un commencement de preuve accréditant l'idée que les éléments recherchés seraient susceptibles de disculper l'accusé[9]. Des éléments de preuve sont considérés comme étant de nature à disculper l'accusé si ceux-ci tendent à réfuter un fait matériel qui lui est reproché ou s'ils portent atteinte à la crédibilité des éléments censés étayer des faits essentiels[10].

7. Comme l'a relevé la Chambre de première instance I dans l'affaire Bagosora et consorts, la question de savoir si les éléments recherchés sont de nature à disculper l'accusé dépend « de la nature des charges retenues et des éléments de preuve obtenus à sa charge[11] » (traduction). Elle avait conclu que certaines informations spécifiques concernant les activités du FPR pourraient être susceptibles de disculper l'accusé, au vu des charges portées contre lui en l'espèce. Elle a ajouté que « les éléments de preuve relatifs aux activités du FPR mais qui n'ont qu'un rapport lointain avec les crimes allégués ne sont pas de nature à disculper l'accusé » (traduction). Elle a également estimé que « les éléments de preuve concernant les activités du FPR à des moments et à des lieux sans rapport avec les crimes allégués ne sont pas susceptibles de disculper l'accusé[12] ». Les décisions rendues par la Chambre de première instance I sont basées sur un examen au cas par cas et ne contiennent pas de déclaration d'ordre général pouvant laisser croire que les éléments concernant le FPR sont de nature à innocenter l'accusé. Cette même Chambre a encore estimé que

> Même si certains éléments de la catégorie indiquée par la Défense pourraient être de nature à disculper l'accusé, cela ne suffit pas à justifier que la Chambre ordonne la communication de toute la catégorie en question [...] La communication de toute la catégorie de documents ne sera ordonnée qu'en vertu de l'article 68 lorsque ladite catégorie est définie avec précision au regard des éléments à décharge qu'elle contient[13] (traduction).

8. En l'espèce, il n'est pas exclu que certaines informations concernant les activités du FPR soient de nature à disculper l'accusé, dans la mesure où elles ont un rapport avec les crimes qui sont imputés à celui-ci ou avec des éléments de preuve présentés par le Procureur. Ces informations permettraient à la Chambre de comprendre le contexte ou les circonstances dans lesquels ont été commis certains actes qui ont fait l'objet des dépositions entendues lors de la présentation des moyens à charge. Or, la Défense n'a pas défini avec suffisamment de précision les éléments recherchés. Elle se réfère, de manière générale, à toutes les informations que détient le Procureur au sujet « d'actes de violence et d'infiltration du FPR au Rwanda entre 1990 et 1994 » (traduction). La requête est trop imprécise et pourrait englober des éléments n'ayant qu'un lien éloigné ou même aucun rapport avec les crimes reprochés à l'accusé et qui ne sauraient donc être de nature à disculper celui-ci. La demande de la Défense n'a pas suffisamment circonscrit ce qui, dans les éléments recherchés, pourrait être de nature à innocenter l'accusé. Les articles du Règlement ne peuvent pas être utilisés librement comme moyen d'obtenir des informations du Procureur, puis de déterminer, a posteriori, si elles peuvent être utilisées ou non[14]. La demande de la Défense en vue de la communication d'éléments à décharge est donc à rejeter.

(2) Demande de la Défense tendant à obtenir la communication de déclarations de témoin non caviardées et des sanctions à l'encontre du Procureur

9. La Défense de Nzirorera demande que lui soient communiquées des déclarations de témoin en version non caviardée, arguant du fait qu'elle doit en identifier les auteurs pour pouvoir utiliser les éléments susceptibles de disculper l'accusé[15]. Elle partage cependant les craintes du Procureur au sujet des dangers que pourraient courir les témoins détenant des informations sur les crimes imputés au FPR et qui sont disposés à coopérer avec la Défense. C'est pourquoi elle s'engage à n'entreprendre aucune action susceptible de compromettre leur sécurité et ne voit aucun inconvénient à entrer en contact avec eux par le biais de la Section d'aide aux témoins et aux victimes[16]. La Défense demande par ailleurs que des sanctions soient imposées à l'encontre du Procureur en vertu de l'article 46 (A) du Règlement au motif qu'il a violé la Décision du 4 juillet 2006. Elle soutient que ce sont les seules mesures appropriées pouvant mettre fin à l'impunité avec laquelle le Procureur manque à ses obligations en matière de communication de pièces en l'espèce, provoquant des retards répétés et une obstruction continuelle au bon déroulement du procès[17].

10. Le Procureur fait valoir que l'équipe chargée du procès a confirmé l'existence de deux autres déclarations de témoin mais que celles-ci n'ont été communiquées à la Défense qu'en version caviardée, afin de ne pas compromettre les enquêtes en cours et pour garantir la sécurité de ses informateurs[18].

11. La Chambre de céans et la Chambre d'appel ont clairement rappelé que le respect par le Procureur de l'obligation qui lui est faite de communiquer à la Défense les éléments de preuve à décharge était indispensable à l'équité du procès[19]. Si le Procureur a mission de mener des enquêtes, c'est notamment pour « [aider] le Tribunal [à découvrir] la vérité et [à] rendre justice à la communauté internationale, aux victimes et aux accusés »[20]. Par ailleurs, la Chambre d'appel a également précisé que le Bureau du Procureur était un et indivisible dans l'exécution de l'obligation de communication, attendu que les équipes du Bureau du Procureur étaient toutes représentatives de ce service[21].

12. Compte tenu des principes exposés ci-dessus, la Chambre trouve non convaincant l'argument du Procureur selon lequel « l'équipe chargée du dossier n'a pas connaissance d'autres éléments devant être communiqués en vertu des articles 66 (B) et 68 (A) » et que « les recherches n'ont pas permis d'identifier lesdites déclarations du fait qu'elles font partie d'un dossier en cours, à savoir Bagosora et consorts » (traduction)[22]. Le Procureur doit activement examiner tous les éléments en sa possession et non pas seulement ceux dont s'occupe l'équipe chargée du procès et, à tout le moins, informer les accusés de l'existence d'éléments de nature à les disculper[23].

13. Dans la Décision du 4 juillet 2006, la Chambre a également estimé que « puisque l'identité des auteurs des déclarations relatives aux documents du FPR et celle des auteurs des déclarations intéressant la crédibilité sont effectivement liées à la teneur des déclarations, ces informations doivent être communiquées à la Défense »[24]. Le Procureur reconnaît cette décision mais fait valoir que révéler l'identité de ses témoins exposerait ceux-ci à de graves dangers et qu'il est donc amené à invoquer l'article 39 du Règlement, qui autorise le Procureur à prendre les mesures spéciales nécessaires à la sécurité d'éventuels témoins et informateurs. Il invite la Chambre à trouver le juste milieu entre la demande de la Défense et la nécessité pour lui de ne pas compromettre l'intégrité des enquêtes en cours.

14. Comme cela a été précisé dans des décisions antérieures, l'application de l'article 39 du Règlement ne constitue pas en soi un obstacle à la communication d'informations permettant d'identifier les témoins à charge[25]. Toutefois, lorsque le Procureur craint que des témoins potentiels ou des informateurs ne soient mis en danger ou n'encourent des risques éventuels ou que la communication de certains éléments pourrait compromettre des enquêtes en cours ou à venir, il peut demander à la Chambre d'ordonner les mesures spécifiques prévues par le Statut du Tribunal et par le Règlement[26]. Plus précisément, l'article 68 (D) du Règlement prévoit une exception à l'obligation de communication d'éléments susceptibles de disculper l'accusé dans le cas où une telle communication « pourrait hypothéquer des enquêtes en cours ou ultérieures, ou pourrait, pour toute autre raison, être contraire à l'intérêt public ou porter atteinte à la sécurité d'un État ». Lorsqu'il forme une requête en ce sens, le Procureur est tenu de fournir à la Chambre les informations ou pièces dont la confidentialité est demandée[27]. La Chambre n'accordera une telle dérogation qu'au cas par cas après examen des arguments présentés par le Procureur.

Il n'est indiqué nulle part dans le Statut ou dans le Règlement que les obligations du Procureur pourraient être limitées à des équipes particulières au sein du Bureau du Procureur, qui, dans la pratique du Tribunal, sont parfois appelées le « Procureur » dans une affaire donnée. Selon l'interprétation habituelle du texte et du contexte du Règlement, les obligations du Procureur lui incombent à lui seul en tant qu'individu qui peut ensuite déléguer au Bureau du Procureur, en tant qu'entité indivisible, le devoir de remplir ces obligations (Traduction).

15. Dans la réponse du Procureur, la Chambre n'a été saisie d'aucune information ou pièce ni d'aucun argument précis de nature à l'amener à rendre une ordonnance allant dans le sens de l'exception prévue par l'article 68 (D) du Règlement. Le 4 juillet 2006, la Chambre avait déjà prescrit des mesures de protection en faveur des auteurs des déclarations dont il est question[28]. Si le Procureur estime que d'autres mesures sont nécessaires, il doit en saisir la Chambre sur-le-champ. À l'exception des déclarations des témoins DM80 et DM46[29], la communication d'éléments à décharge sous forme caviardée n'est donc pas autorisée à ce stade, comme le reconnaît le Procureur.

16. L'article 46 (A) du Règlement est libellé comme suit :

> Une Chambre peut, après un avertissement, prendre des sanctions contre un conseil, si elle considère que son comportement reste offensant ou injurieux, entrave la procédure ou va autrement à l'encontre des intérêts de la justice. Cette disposition s'applique mutatis mutandis aux membres du Bureau du Procureur.

17. Dans sa décision orale rendue le 24 mai 2006, la Chambre a estimé que le Procureur n'avait pas fait preuve de diligence dans l'exécution de ses obligations en matière de communication[30], ce qui entravait le bon déroulement du procès et était contraire à l'intérêt de la justice, et a de ce fait adressé un avertissement au Procureur. La Chambre considère en l'espèce qu'en communicant les déclarations de témoin dans leur version caviardée, le Procureur a violé la décision qu'elle avait rendue le 4 juillet 2006, ce que celui-ci ne conteste même pas. Ce comportement est inacceptable, il reste offensant, entrave la procédure et va à l'encontre des intérêts de la justice. La Chambre estime donc devoir imposer une sanction au Bureau du Procureur, en appelant formellement l'attention personnelle du Procureur, en tant qu'organe de régulation, sur ce cas d'indiscipline[31].

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

I. REJETTE la demande de la Défense en vue de la communication d'éléments à décharge et de l'imposition de sanctions au Procureur ;

II. DROIT à la demande de la Défense tendant à obtenir la version non caviardée des déclarations qui ont été déjà communiquées le 29 septembre 2006 ;

Introduction

1. Le procès en l'espèce s'est ouvert le 19 septembre 2005. Le 12 juillet 2006, la Chambre a rejeté la requête de la Défense demandant que des injonctions à comparaître soient délivrées aux témoins à décharge potentiels DN1, DN2 et DNZ3 pour qu'elle puisse les rencontrer (la « Décision contestée »)[1]. La Défense de Nzirorera demande à la Chambre de l'autoriser à interjeter appel de cette décision. Le Procureur s'y oppose.

Discussion

2. La Défense fait valoir que, selon l'arrêt Tadiæ,

> « une Chambre [de première instance] est tenue, lorsqu'une Partie lui demande de l'aider à présenter sa cause, d'accorder toutes les mesures qu'elle est à même de fournir aux termes du Règlement et du Statut[2]. »

Elle soutient qu'en rejetant sa requête demandant que DNZ1, DNZ2 et DNZ3 soient enjoints à comparaître, la Chambre a failli à son obligation d'accorder de telles mesures, portant ainsi atteinte à son droit d'obtenir la comparution et l'interrogatoire de témoins susceptibles de réfuter les témoignages à charge, conformément à l'article 20 (4) (e) du Statut du Tribunal.

3. La Chambre de première instance relève que selon la Chambre d'appel,

Cela ne veut pas dire, cependant, qu'une Chambre doive accorder toutes les mesures demandées par une partie simplement parce qu'elle prétend avoir besoin d'aide. Elle doit exercer le pouvoir discrétionnaire que lui confèrent le Règlement et le Statut. Comme exposé dans la décision contestée, la Chambre d'appel a fixé, conformément aux dispositions du Statut et du Règlement, les conditions qui doivent être remplies pour enjoindre à un témoin potentiel de venir déposer à une date et en un lieu donnés[4]. Lorsque pareille mesure est demandée par un accusé, la Chambre doit apprécier si le Statut et le Règlement l'autorisent à l'accorder.

4. La Défense soutient qu'en l'espèce, les conditions requises pour la certification sont réunies. Elle ajoute que si elle décidait d'accorder la certification, la Chambre devrait examiner le fond de l'appel de la décision contestée, comme l'a conclu la Chambre de première instance en l'affaire Bagosora[5].

> 1) la décision contestée touche une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement l'équité et la rapidité du procès, ou son issue ; et
> 2) un règlement immédiat de la question par la Chambre d'appel pourrait concrètement faire progresser la procédure.

6. Il incombe à la partie requérante de démontrer que les deux conditions posées par l'article 73 (B) sont réunies, et même si elle le fait, la certification doit demeurer exceptionnelle[6].

7. La présente Chambre a déjà conclu que l'examen d'une demande de certification ne devrait pas tenir compte du fond de l'affaire[7]. D'autres Chambres de première instance ont adopté la même position[8]. La Chambre estime également que la Défense a mal interprété la position que la Chambre compétente a adoptée sur la question en l'affaire Bagosora. Dans une décision récente rendue en cette affaire, que la Défense n'a pas citée, la Chambre a précisé sa position quant à la question de savoir si, lorsqu'elle examine une demande d'autorisation d'interjeter appel, une Chambre de première instance doit ou non tenir compte du fond de l'affaire. Elle a conclu que :

Dans l'affaire Bizimungu, la Chambre a convenu que la question de savoir si la Chambre a commis une erreur de droit ou si elle a abusé de sa discrétion ne doit pas être examinée au moment d'autoriser ou non l'appel. Elle a souligné, cependant, qu'en employant le terme « sensiblement » dans la première condition, les rédacteurs de cet article entendaient exclure des questions sans intérêt particulier ou d'ordre secondaire qui pourraient être soulevées au cours du procès ; Le Procureur c. Nyiramasuhuko et consorts, affaire n°ICTR-98-42-T, Décision relative à la Requête du Procureur en certification d'appel de la Décision de la Chambre de première instance du 30 novembre 2004 relative à la Requête en communication des moyens à charge, 4 février 2005, par. 11 ; *Le Procureur c. > Lorsqu'il est fait droit à la demande de certification, c'est à la Chambre d'appel qu'il appartient de déterminer la validité de la décision. De ce point de vue, il ne fait aucun doute que ce n'est pas à la Chambre de première instance d'évaluer la validité de sa propre décision lorsqu'elle détermine s'il y a lieu de faire droit à une demande d'autorisation d'interjeter appel. Par ailleurs, les Chambres de première instance ont l'obligation d'écarter les demandes de certification qui n'ont aucune chance d'aboutir et qui, par conséquent, « ne pourrai[en]t pas concrètement faire avancer la procédure en l'espèce[9] » [traduction].

8. Sur la base des arguments exposés ci-dessus, la Chambre doit maintenant déterminer si la Défense a démontré que les deux conditions posées par l'article 73 (B) étaient satisfaites.

9. La Défense fait valoir que la décision contestée touche une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement l'équité et la rapidité du procès, parce que le droit de l'accusé à un procès équitable, et particulièrement son droit d'obtenir la comparution et l'interrogatoire de témoins conformément à l'article 20 (4) (e) du Statut est gravement compromis par le refus de la Chambre de lui donner accès à des témoins qui pourraient réfuter les dépositions à charge. Pour appuyer sa requête, la Défense se réfère à des décisions antérieures rendues par le Tribunal de céans dans les affaires Bagosora et consorts et Nyiramasuhuko et consorts, ainsi qu'à une décision rendue par le Tribunal spécial pour la Sierra Leone[10], affirmant que les questions qui y étaient posées étaient semblables à celle que la Chambre doit examiner en l'espèce. Elle cite également d'autres affaires où la Chambre compétente a statué sur l'admission ou l'exclusion de moyens de preuve, qui, affirme-t-elle, présentent beaucoup de ressemblances avec l'espèce et qui excluaient d'importants éléments de preuve à décharge au cours du procès.

10. Selon la Défense, en tranchant la question soulevée par la Défense concernant l'accès à des témoins potentiels, la Chambre d'appel pourrait concrètement faire avancer la procédure en l'espèce car il s'agit d'une question qui ne manquera pas de resurgir pour d'autres témoins à décharge potentiels. Il vaudrait donc mieux la clarifier au stade de la présentation des moyens de preuve à charge et avant que la Défense ne présente ses moyens. Si la demande de certification était rejetée et qu'à l'occasion d'un recours introduit contre le jugement final de la Chambre de première instance, la Chambre d'appel concluait qu'une erreur a été commise, un nouveau procès devrait s'ouvrir pour entendre les témoins à décharge qui n'auraient pas été appelés à témoigner, ce qui aurait pour effet de retarder la procédure. La Défense soutient en outre que les témoignages qu'elle demande sont si pertinents que si la Chambre n'a pas usé de son pouvoir discrétionnaire pour délivrer des injonctions en l'espèce, il est fort probable qu'elle ne le fera jamais. La révision de la décision permettrait donc de faire avancer concrètement la procédure.

11. Dans la décision contestée, la Chambre n'a pas catégoriquement privé l'accusé de son droit d'interroger un témoin, ni refusé absolument de délivrer des injonctions à comparaître pour tous les témoins potentiels susceptibles de réfuter les affirmations des témoins à charge. Cette décision ne portait d'ailleurs pas sur la comparution de témoins au procès, mais sur une demande d'injonction à comparaître en vue d'interrogatoires hors audience. La Chambre étant saisie de demandes relatives à trois témoins potentiels bien précis, elle a statué sur la base des informations que la Défense lui a fournies concernant ces témoins. Aucune conclusion générale ne peut être tirée de la décision contestée quant à la manière dont la Chambre statuerait sur une future requête portant sur des injonctions à comparaître. Il est loisible à l'accusé de demander la délivrance d'injonctions permettant d'interroger des témoins hors audience ou, le cas échéant, de les obliger à comparaître à l'audience, et la Chambre statuera au cas par cas.

12. La Chambre estime aussi que la Défense a tort d'invoquer plusieurs décisions rendues dans des cas qu'elle rapproche du sien pour soutenir que la question soulevée touche au droit de l'accusé à un procès équitable. La différence entre le cas présent et les autres c'est que ceux-ci portent tous sur des questions d'ordre général, ont donné lieu à un exposé du droit applicable, et concernent une vaste catégorie de déclarations et de témoins. Or, la décision contestée ne concerne pas une vaste catégorie de témoins et n'a pas donné lieu à un exposé du droit, parce que la Chambre a examiné chaque demande d'injonction au cas par cas en usant de son pouvoir discrétionnaire.

13. La Chambre rejette la référence de Nzirorera à la décision du Tribunal spécial pour la Sierra Leone, qui a certifié l'appel d'une décision rejetant une requête demandant qu'une injonction de comparaître soit délivrée au Président de la République. C'était la première fois que le Tribunal spécial avait à se prononcer sur la question des injonctions à comparaître pour interrogatoire préalable à la déposition et la Chambre a considéré qu'il était probable que la question se pose à nouveau. Son avis était partagé puisqu'elle a tranché à la majorité, sa décision ayant suscité une opinion concurrente et une opinion dissidente. C'est pour ces raisons que la Chambre de première instance a certifié l'appel de sa décision[11]. Le Tribunal spécial a délivré par la suite d'autres injonctions à comparaître pour interrogatoire préalable à la déposition et la jurisprudence a établi qu'en fin de compte, la décision de délivrer une injonction à comparaître relevait du pouvoir discrétionnaire ; elle a néanmoins fixé les conditions qui devraient être remplies pour qu'une injonction puisse être délivrée, ce que la Chambre a unanimement pris en compte lors de l'examen de la décision contestée.

14. En conclusion, la Chambre estime que la Défense n'a pas démontré que la décision contestée soulevait une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement l'équité et la rapidité du procès, ou son issue. Comme la première condition exigée pour faire droit à une requête en certification d'appel n'est pas satisfaite, la Chambre estime qu'il n'y a pas lieu de continuer son analyse et rejette la requête en conséquence.

PAR CES MOTIFS,

LA CHAMBRE rejette la requête dans son intégralité.

Fait à Arusha, le 30 octobre 2006.

Introduction

1. En l'espèce, le procès a débuté le 19 septembre 2005. Le 26 octobre 2006, la quatrième session du procès s'est ouverte avec la suite de la présentation des moyens à charge. Le 6 novembre 2006, pendant le contre-interrogatoire du témoin à charge ALG, la Défense a demandé que 10 rapports de situation de la MINUAR dressés en avril 1994 soient admis en tant que pièces à conviction à décharge[1]. Le Procureur s'est opposé à ce que ces rapports soient admis à l'occasion de la déposition de ce témoin, demandant plutôt à la Chambre de verser au dossier tous les rapports de situation de la MINUAR [les rapports que celle-ci envoyait au Siège de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à New York] pour qu'ils puissent au besoin, être utilisés lors de l'interrogatoire de tout témoin[2]. La Chambre a décidé de réserver sa décision et a invité les parties à déposer leurs écritures à ce sujet le lendemain[3], ce qu'elles ont fait le 8 novembre 2006[4].

2. Avant d'aborder la question du versement au dossier des 10 documents de la MINUAR, la Chambre examinera, de façon générale, les règles régissant l'admission de la preuve.

Règles régissant l'admission de la preuve

3. La Défense de Nzirorera fait valoir que la première condition de l'admissibilité c'est l'authenticité ; mais même si un document est authentique, il faut encore qu'il soit pertinent pour pouvoir être versé au dossier. Elle estime que l'admission des pièces devrait se faire dans le cadre des dépositions des témoins[5] et « qu'il revient à chaque partie de décider du nombre de témoins qu'elle présentera pour étayer sa preuve documentaire » [traduction]. À son avis, la Chambre ne devrait exclure aucune pièce authentique et pertinente mais déterminer le poids qu'il convient de lui accorder au moment où elle délibère, après avoir entendu tous les témoignages.

> «[d]emander des preuves irréfutables de l'authenticité d'un document avant de l'admettre au dossier reviendrait à imposer des critères beaucoup plus stricts que ceux envisagés par l'article 89 (C) »[8].

D'après la Chambre d'appel, pour qu'un élément de preuve soit admis, il suffit qu'il y ait un commencement de preuve de sa fiabilité, autrement dit que des indices de fiabilité suffisants aient été établis[9].

[5] La Défense s'appuie notamment sur deux décisions du Tribunal pénal international pour l'ex-Yougoslavie dans les affaires Prlić (13 juillet 2006) et Milutinović (10 octobre 2006).
[6] L'article 89 du Règlement se lit comme suit :
(A) En matière de preuve, les règles énoncées dans la présente section s'appliquent à toute procédure devant les Chambres. Celles-ci ne sont pas liées par les règles de droit interne régissant l'administration de la preuve.
(C) La Chambre peut recevoir tout élément de preuve pertinent dont elle estime qu'il a valeur probante.
(D) La Chambre peut demander à vérifier l'authenticité de tout élément de preuve obtenu hors audience.

5. Selon les Chambres de première instance des deux Tribunaux spéciaux, il n'était pas nécessaire qu'un témoin reconnaisse les documents présentés pour qu'ils aient une valeur probante[10]. Un élément de preuve ne peut pas être jugé inadmissible au seul motif que son auteur présumé n'a pas été appelé à la barre et il est arrivé aux Chambres de première instance d'admettre des preuves documentaires qui n'avaient pas été présentées par un témoin ou par l'intermédiaire d'un témoin. Une telle pratique va dans le sens de l'article 89 (A) du Règlement, aux termes duquel les Chambres de première instance ne sont pas liées par les règles de droit interne. En outre, comme l'a relevé la Chambre de première instance dans le jugement Blaskiæ, la procédure est menée par des juges professionnels, ayant les compétences requises pour admettre tel ou tel élément de preuve aux fins de se prononcer sur le poids à lui accorder, à la lumière des circonstances dans lesquelles il a été obtenu, d'en déterminer la teneur réelle et d'en apprécier la crédibilité au vu de l'ensemble des éléments de preuve présentés[11].

6. Lorsqu'un témoin déclare reconnaître un document dont la Chambre de première instance est convaincue qu'il est pertinent et qu'il a force probante, elle peut l'admettre par l'intermédiaire de ce témoin[12]. Toutefois, quand un témoin déclare ne pas reconnaître un document qui n'est pas présenté comme une déclaration antérieure contradictoire de ce témoin, le document en question ne peut être admis dans le cadre de la déposition en question.

7. Enfin, l'admission en preuve d'un document ne constitue en aucune façon une décision définitive sur son authenticité ou sa fiabilité. C'est à un stade ultérieur de la procédure que la Chambre doit en décider lorsqu'elle détermine le poids qu'il convient de lui accorder[13].

Admission des documents de la MINUAR

8. La Défense de Nzirorera prie la Chambre d'admettre 10 rapports de situation de la MINUAR[14] dans le cadre de la déposition d'ALG. Elle fait valoir que ces documents sont authentiques et que, comme ils ont un rapport avec la déposition du témoin, ils sont aussi pertinents. Selon le Procureur, ces rapports ne peuvent être admis en preuve par l'intermédiaire d'ALG et ne peuvent être utilisés pour saper sa crédibilité puisque ce témoin ne sait rien de ces documents. En revanche, il reconnaît que ces documents sont pertinents au regard de l'acte d'accusation et qu'ils peuvent avoir valeur probante quant au contexte historique. Il propose donc de constituer un jeu complet des rapports de situation de la MINUAR sur la période allant du 1er janvier au 19 juillet 1994 et de les classer par ordre chronologique. Ainsi, argumente-t-il, la Chambre pourra-t-elle déterminer leur valeur probante en comparant leur contenu aux dépositions qui évoquent tel ou tel rapport de situation ou tel ou tel passage d'un rapport de situation. La Défense de chacun des accusés s'oppose à la proposition du Procureur, affirmant que chaque partie ne devrait produire que les documents de la MINUAR qui sont pertinents au regard de sa cause, et les présenter dans le cadre des dépositions à charge ou à décharge.

9. Il ne fait aucun doute que les rapports de situation de la MINUAR cotés pour identification[15] sont pertinents en l'espèce et qu'ils présentent suffisamment d'indices de fiabilité pour être admissibles. Toutefois, la Chambre n'est pas convaincue que la Défense ait démontré que ces documents pouvaient être admis par l'intermédiaire du témoin puisque celui-ci ne les a pas reconnus et n'a pas souscrit à leur contenu. Les 10 rapports de situation de la MINUAR cotés pour identification ne peuvent être produits par l'intermédiaire du témoin ALG.

10. La Chambre estime que les documents de la MINUAR pourraient être produits par leur auteur, une personne qui en a connaissance ou qui pourrait parler de leur contenu. À ce propos, elle relève que le Procureur et la Défense de Nzirorera sont d'acccord pour dire que le prochain témoin à charge, Frank Claeys, sera en mesure de parler de leur contenu et qu'ils peuvent donc être proposés en preuve.

11. La Chambre estime aussi que les documents de la MINUAR pourraient être admis sans être produits pendant l'interrogatoire d'un témoin à condition que le requérant démontre la pertinence et la valeur probante de chaque document. Elle note à cet égard que la Chambre de première instance I dans l'affaire Bagosora et consorts, invoquée par la Défense de Nzirorera, a admis la correspondance officielle de l'Organisation des Nations Unies concernant la MINUAR pendant l'année 1994, sans qu'elle ne soit reconnue par un témoin[16].

12. La proposition du Procureur tendant à remettre à la Chambre un paquet de rapports de la MINUAR pour qu'elle détermine quel document a une valeur probante n'est pas acceptable. Pour qu'une preuve soit admise, c'est à la partie qui en demande l'admission qu'il appartient de démontrer sa pertinence et sa valeur probante.

Directives concernant l'admission de la preuve

13. La Chambre renvoie aux directives ci-dessus régissant l'admissibilité de la preuve documentaire et enjoint aux parties de s'y conformer lorsqu'elles demandent l'admission d'un tel élément de preuve ou qu'elles s'y opposent.

14. La Chambre relève en outre que la Défense de Nzirorera n'a pas d'objection à ce que le Procureur sache à l'avance son intention de s'opposer à un document qui sera produit par l'intermédiaire d'un futur témoin. Elle estime que la rapidité de la procédure y gagnerait si toutes les parties adoptaient une telle pratique.

15. La Défense de Nzirorera demande aussi qu'un document dont l'admission a été refusée par la Chambre soit coté pour identification, afin que les futurs témoins puissent s'y référer et que la Chambre d'appel puisse l'examiner afin de décider si la Chambre de première instance a commis une erreur en refusant de l'admettre.

16. La Chambre estime qu'il n'est pas nécessaire d'adopter une règle générale prescrivant l'attribution d'une cote à tous les documents qui, bien que mentionnés à l'audience, n'ont pas été admis. Elle continuera de décider au cas par cas s'il convient d'attribuer une cote d'identification, en gardant à l'esprit à la fois la transparence de la procédure et l'intérêt de la justice. En tout état de cause, un document coté pour identification ne sera pas admis avant que la Chambre n'en décide ainsi oralement ou par écrit, auquel cas une cote officielle lui sera attribuée.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

Introduction

1. En l'espèce, le procès a commencé le 19 septembre 2005. Le témoin à charge GK doit en principe comparaître à la quatrième session d'audiences, entre le 26 octobre et le 15 décembre 2006. La Défense de Nzirorera prie la Chambre d'exclure la déposition que ce témoin envisage de faire pour sanctionner le Procureur qui aurait manqué à maintes reprises à l'obligation de communication mise à sa charge en l'espèce[1]. Au cas où la Chambre refuserait d'accorder cette mesure, la Défense lui demande d'ordonner que les autorités rwandaises lui apportent leur coopération pour permettre d'obtenir certaines pièces indiquées dans un document confidentiel joint en annexe à la requête et que le contre-interrogatoire du témoin GK soit reporté jusqu'à ce que ces pièces aient été communiquées à la Défense. Le Procureur s'oppose à la requête dans son intégralité.

Délibération

2. Selon la Défense, du moment que le Procureur n'a pas communiqué au plus tard 60 jours avant la date fixée pour l'ouverture du procès en l'espèce la déposition faite par le témoin GK dans l'affaire Ndindabahizi, il s'est dérobé à l'obligation de communication mise à sa charge par l'article 66 (A) (ii) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve[2]. Dans ces circonstances, la Défense estime qu'il convient d'exclure la déposition que le témoin a l'intention de faire pour sanctionner ce manquement.

[1] Requête tendant à faire exclure la déposition du témoin GK ou solliciter la coopération du Gouvernement rwandais, déposée par Joseph Nzirorera le 13 novembre 2006.

[2] L'article 66 (A) (ii) se lit comme suit :
Sous réserve des dispositions des Articles 53 et 69:
Le Procureur communique à la défense :

3. Le respect du délai de 60 jours prescrit par l'article 66 (A) (ii) du Règlement doit être apprécié en tenant compte des droits de l'accusé et en particulier du droit de disposer du temps et des facilités nécessaires à la préparation de sa défense et d'interroger ou de faire interroger les témoins à charge[3]. Les retards dans la communication de pièces ne portent pas forcément atteinte aux droits de l'accusé[4]. Lorsque la communication de pièces pouvant aider l'accusé à discréditer la déposition d'un témoin à charge est faite si tardivement que l'équité du procès s'en ressent, les Chambres de première instance adoptent différents types de solutions. Elles peuvent écarter le témoignage, ajourner les débats ou la déposition, différer le contre-interrogatoire du témoin ou ordonner le rappel de celui-ci à la barre[5]. L'exclusion d'un témoignage est la dernière des mesures que la Chambre peut prendre pour sanctionner un retard dans la communication de pièces ou une violation des droits de l'accusé[6].

4. En l'espèce, la Défense n'a ni prouvé ni même prétendu que la communication tardive de la déclaration du témoin avait causé à Joseph Nzirorera un préjudice qui justifierait cette mesure extrême. À cet égard, il faut souligner que le document en question a été communiqué plus de trois mois avant la date prévue pour la comparution du témoin et que le Procureur avait déjà communiqué à la Défense d'autres déclarations en temps voulu, de sorte que l'accusé était informé de la déposition que le témoin avait l'intention de faire et des problèmes relatifs à sa crédibilité[7].

5. La Défense demande aussi à la Chambre d'exclure la déposition que le témoin GK entend faire parce que d'autres communications de pièces faites seraient incomplètes. Lors d'une entrevue qui a eu lieu le 10 novembre 2006, elle a appris de ce témoin qu'il avait fourni de « nombreuses dépositions et déclarations signées concernant les événements survenus en 1994 au Rwanda qui n'ont jamais été communiquée à la Défense[8] » [traduction]. Elle rappelle que la décision rendue par la Chambre le 14 septembre 2005, ordonnait au Procureur de tout mettre en œuvre pour obtenir et communiquer ces pièces[9]. Selon la Défense, le minimum auquel on aurait pu s'attendre de la part du Procureur aurait été d'interroger le témoin avant sa déposition, de déterminer les documents manquants et de les obtenir du témoin lui-même qui les a au Rwanda. La Défense en conclut que le Procureur a violé à nouveau une décision de la Chambre et que l'exclusion de la déposition du témoin GK est une mesure appropriée pour sanctionner la série de manquements à l'obligation de communication commise par le Procureur en l'espèce.

(ii) Au plus tard soixante jours avant la date fixée pour le début du procès, copie des déclarations de tous les témoins que le Procureur entend appeler à la barre. Une Chambre de première instance peut, à condition que le bien-fondé d'une telle mesure lui soit démontré, ordonner que des copies de déclarations de témoins à charge supplémentaires soient remises à la défense dans un délai fixé par la Chambre.

[7] Voir, par exemple, les déclarations et les autres pièces communiquées les 14 février et 23 mars 2005.

[8] Cette affirmation n'est pas contestée par le Procureur.

[9] Affaire Karemera et consorts, Décision relative aux requêtes de la Défense tendant à contraindre le Procureur à permettre l'examen de pièces et à s'acquitter de son obligation de communication et à demander aux témoins de fournir leurs dossiers judiciaires et d'immigration (Chambre de première instance), 14 septembre 2005, par. 11.

6. En général, la Défense doit d'abord s'employer seule à obtenir les éléments de preuve qu'elle souhaite utiliser au procès, à l'exception des pièces à décharge se trouvant en la possession du Procureur[10]. À cet égard, il est admis qu'elle peut légitimement avoir besoin d'interroger un témoin avant le procès pour bien préparer son dossier et qu'elle a donc le droit de prendre contact avec un témoin potentiel pour l'interroger[11].

7. En vertu des articles 98 et 54 du Règlement, s'est aussi créée une pratique qui consiste à demander au Procureur, sous réserve de l'intérêt de la justice, d'user de ses bons offices pour obtenir et communiquer certains documents, notamment les dossiers judiciaires rwandais des témoins à charge[12]. Des Chambres de première instance ont eu recours à ces dispositions dans les cas où, par exemple, les informations recherchées pouvaient être considérées comme nécessaires pour préparer la présentation des moyens à décharge ou pour apprécier la crédibilité des témoins à charge[13].

8. Dans d'autres situations, les Chambres de première instance ont sollicité, en vertu de l'article 28 du Statut du Tribunal, l'assistance et la coopération de certains États pour obtenir des documents[14]. Selon la jurisprudence constante, toute partie qui demande à la Chambre de prendre cette mesure doit préciser la nature des informations recherchées, l'intérêt qu'elles présentent pour le procès et les initiatives prises pour les obtenir[15].

9. En raison des circonstances particulières de l'espèce, la Chambre a fait usage des pouvoirs que lui confèrent l'article 98 du Règlement et l'article 28 du Statut pour aider la Défense à préparer les moyens à décharge. Le 14 septembre 2005, elle a d'abord demandé au Procureur de tout mettre en œuvre pour obtenir et communiquer les déclarations faites aux autorités rwandaises par les témoins à charge et les dossiers concernant les poursuites judiciaires engagées contre eux dans les cas où ces pièces n'avaient pas été intégralement communiquées[16]. Par la suite, en février 200[6], elle a sollicité l'assistance des autorités rwandaises en leur demandant de communiquer au Greffe toutes les déclarations de certains témoins à charge, y compris GK, qu'elles avaient recueillies ou reçues de ces témoins, ainsi que les jugements prononcés contre eux par les autorités rwandaises[17].

Blaškić, affaire n°IT-95-14, Arrêt relatif à la requête de la République de Croatie aux fins d'examen de la décision de la Chambre de première instance II rendue le 18 juillet 1997, 29 octobre 1997, par. 32.

[17] Affaire Karemera et consorts, Décision relative aux requêtes de la Défense tendant à faire demander au Gouvernement rwandais de communiquer des documents et à obtenir certaines mesures en conséquence (Chambre de première instance), 13 février 2006.

10. Toutefois, ces décisions ne relevaient nullement la Défense de l'obligation de préparer les moyens à décharge[18]. Dans le cas présent, la Défense ne dit pas pourquoi elle n'a pas eu d'entrevue avec le témoin GK lors de ses enquêtes, alors qu'elle aurait pu obtenir elle-même les documents recherchés à cette occasion. Le conseil de Nzirorera ne dit pas non plus que le témoin a refusé de s'entretenir avec lui.

11. Par ailleurs, selon diverses correspondances récemment communiquées à la demande de la Chambre[19], il s'avère que le Bureau du Procureur, y compris le Procureur lui-même, s'est employé à maintes reprises à obtenir des autorités rwandaises les pièces concernant le témoin GK. Ces derniers temps, le Procureur a pris une nouvelle initiative en interrogeant le témoin sur son dossier judiciaire ainsi que sur les déclarations et les dépositions qu'il avait faites devant les autorités rwandaises[20]. Par suite, trois documents ont été obtenus du témoin et communiqués à la Défense[21]. Il faut souligner que c'est tout récemment que la Défense a émis l'idée que le Procureur interroge des témoins afin d'obtenir les informations nécessaires pour adresser une demande précise de documents au Gouvernement rwandais[22].

12. La Chambre relève en outre que la Défense n'invoque aucun préjudice subi du fait de la situation actuelle. L'exclusion de la déposition envisagée par le témoin GK n'est donc pas justifiée.

14. La Défense s'est entretenue avec le témoin et aurait donc dû recueillir des informations préliminaires sur la teneur des documents recherchés, mais elle n'indique pas en quoi ceux-ci pourraient présenter un intérêt pour le procès en l'espèce. De plus, les autorités rwandaises ont récemment fait savoir qu'elles étaient disposées « à fournir à toute partie tous autres documents sur lesquels des précisions peuvent être apportées pour faciliter la vérification de leur existence[23] » [traduction]. Il n'y a donc pas lieu de rendre une décision tendant à solliciter l'assistance des autorités rwandaises à ce stade.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE REJETTE la requête de la Défense dans son intégralité

1. Le procès en l'espèce a commencé le 19 septembre 2005. Le Procureur demande maintenant à la Chambre d'admettre, conformément à l'article 89 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »), les comptes rendus d'audience des dépositions faites sous serment par Édouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse et Joseph Nzirorera en l'affaire Bagosora et consorts ainsi que les pièces y afférentes[1]. Le Procureur explique qu'il a essayé à plusieurs occasions de réduire le nombre de questions devant être plaidées en l'espèce en demandant aux accusés d'admettre les faits qui ne sont pas contestés, notamment l'authenticité de certains documents qui portent leur signature. Il affirme que certains aveux faits par les accusés au cours de dépositions antérieures permettront de trancher des questions factuelles soulevées en l'espèce, sans que l'on doive citer d'autres témoins, notamment un expert en écriture qui témoignerait pour confirmer l'authenticité des documents que, manifestement, les accusés ne contestent pas vu leurs dépositions à cet égard en l'affaire Bagosora.

2. Aucun des accusés ne s'oppose à l'admission des comptes rendus d'audience de leurs dépositions en l'affaire Bagosora et consorts[2]. Toutefois, Mathieu Ngirumpatse demande à la Chambre de ne pas admettre les pièces produites pendant la déposition de ses coaccusés et Édouard Karemera s'oppose à l'admission des pièces produites pendant sa propre déposition, faisant valoir que ces pièces ont suscité de nombreuses objections. Ils demandent donc que leur admission fasse l'objet d'une discussion détaillée au cours de leur procès devant la présente Chambre. Joseph Nzirorera appuie ces objections.

3. Le 15 septembre 2006, sur ordre de la Chambre[3], le Greffier a communiqué à la Chambre et aux parties les copies certifiées conformes des comptes rendus des audiences et les pièces à conviction y afférentes.

Délibération

4. Aux termes de l'article 89 du Règlement, la Chambre n'est pas liée par les règles de droit interne régissant l'administration de la preuve et peut lorsque le Règlement est muet, appliquer les règles d'administration de la preuve propres à permettre, dans l'esprit du Statut et des principes généraux du droit, un règlement équitable de la cause[4]. En vertu de l'article 89 (C) du Règlement, la Chambre jouit aussi d'un large pouvoir d'appréciation lui permettant de recevoir tout élément de preuve pertinent dont elle estime qu'il a valeur probante. Les Chambres de première instance des deux Tribunaux spéciaux ont déclaré qu'il n'était pas nécessaire qu'un témoin reconnaisse les documents présentés pour qu'ils aient une valeur probante[5]. Même si en vertu de l'article 89 (D) du Règlement, une Chambre peut toujours demander à vérifier l'authenticité de tout élément de preuve obtenu hors audience, seul un commencement de preuve sur sa fiabilité, à savoir l'existence d'indices de sa fiabilité, est nécessaire pour qu'il soit admissible[6]. Comme l'a souligné la Chambre d'appel à plusieurs reprises, > « il ne faut pas confondre la question de l'admissibilité d'un élément de preuve avec celle de l'appréciation du poids à lui accorder par la suite »[7].

5. La Chambre relève que le Président de la Chambre en l'affaire Bagosora et consorts a rappelé aux accusés, au début de leur déposition, conformément à l'article 90 (E) du Règlement, « qu'[ils] peuvent refuser de faire toute déclaration qui risquerait de [les] incriminer »[8]. Les accusés se sont effectivement appuyés sur cet article pour refuser de répondre à certaines questions. Les conseils de tous les accusés étaient également présents pendant le procès et ont pu intervenir au besoin.

7. Après examen des comptes rendus des audiences et des pièces y afférentes, la Chambre est convaincue que les dépositions faites sous serment par chacun des accusés en l'affaire Bagosora et consorts et les pièces y afférentes concernent des questions pertinentes en l'espèce et ayant une valeur probante. Les pièces faisaient partie intégrante des dépositions des accusés puisqu'au cours de leurs dépositions respectives, ils ont évoqué certains documents qui avaient déjà été admis comme pièces ou qui l'ont été par la suite.

8. La Chambre est d'avis que l'admission des comptes rendus des audiences et des pièces y afférentes ne portera pas atteinte aux droits des accusés. Chacun d'eux a reconnu être l'auteur des documents qui lui étaient montrés. L'admission en preuve ne constitue nullement une décision définitive sur l'authenticité et la fiabilité des documents et le poids qu'il convient d'accorder à chaque élément de preuve sera déterminé plus tard, après examen de l'ensemble de la preuve. Par ailleurs, comme il l'a expliqué, le Procureur demande l'admission de ces documents, qu'il a toujours eu l'intention de produire dans le cadre de ses moyens, pour établir l'identité de leurs auteurs. Au besoin, les accusés auront l'occasion de commenter ces documents au cours du procès.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

I. FAIT DROIT à la requête du Procureur ;

II. INVITE le Greffier à attribuer une cote aux copies certifiées des comptes rendus d'audiences des dépositions sous serment d'Édouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpates et Joseph Nzirorera

Introduction

1. Le 9 novembre 2005, la Chambre a statué sur une demande du Procureur tendant à faire dresser le constat judiciaire de six faits qualifiés par le Procureur de faits de notoriété publique et de 153 faits qui auraient été admis dans d'autres affaires[1]. Elle a dressé le constat judiciaire de trois faits de notoriété publique, en application de l'article 94 (A) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve, et rejeté le reste de la demande[2].

2. Le 16 juin 2006, la Chambre d'appel a accueilli en partie le recours interlocutoire formé par le Procureur contre la décision du 9 novembre 2005 et ordonné à la Chambre de première instance de dresser le constat judiciaire de certains faits de notoriété publique et de revoir les conclusions qu'elle avait tirées dans la décision contestée au sujet de certains faits présentés comme des faits admis[3].

3. À la demande des parties, la Chambre a ensuite rendu une ordonnance portant calendrier et les a autorisées à déposer, le cas échéant, toutes écritures supplémentaires concernant le projet de réexamen de ses conclusions sur la question du constat judiciaire des faits admis[4]. Les parties s'y sont scrupuleusement conformées[5].

4. Selon la Défense de Nzirorera, les conseils de tous les accusés avaient décidé d'un commun accord de diviser leurs écritures de sorte que les observations de chaque accusé ne portent que sur certains faits[6]. Or, si la Défense de Nzirorera s'est conformée à cette répartition des tâches, celle de Ngirumpatse a présenté des observations sur presque tous les faits et celle de Karemera n'a traité que de certains des faits qui lui étaient dévolus.

5. Le Procureur a déposé un seul mémoire pour répondre à toutes les observations de la Défense. Il a dit qu'il retirait 10 des faits présentés dans sa demande comme des faits admis[7]. En conséquence, la Chambre n'a plus à examiner que 137 de ces faits[8].

[1] Les 153 faits présentés comme des faits admis avaient été tirés des jugements Nahimana et consorts, Kajelijeli, Kayishema et Ruzindana, Musema, Ntakirutimana, Niyitegeka, Akayesu, Rutaganda et Semanza.

[2] Le Procureur c. Édouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse et Joseph Nzirorera (l'« affaire Karemera et consorts »), affaire n°ICTR-98-44-T, Décision relative à la requête du Procureur intitulée Motion for Judicial Notice of Facts of Common Knowledge and Adjudicated Facts (Chambre de première instance), 9 novembre 2005 (la « décision contestée »). Les faits dont le constat judiciaire a été dressé sont les faits n°3 et 4, tels que proposés par le Procureur, ainsi que le fait nº 1 qui a été au préalable légèrement modifié. Les faits rejetés sont essentiellement les faits n°2, 5 et 6 figurant sur la liste des faits de notoriété publique et les 153 faits qualifiés de faits admis. Des faits admis, le fait n°153 – selon lequel un génocide a été commis contre les Tutsis en tant que groupe au Rwanda en 1994 – avait été présenté à la fois comme un fait de notoriété publique et un fait admis, à charge pour la Chambre de retenir l'une des deux qualifications. La Chambre a refusé d'en dresser le constat judiciaire sous l'une ou l'autre de ces qualifications.

[3] Il s'agit des faits n°2, 5 et 6 dans le premier cas et des faits n°1 à 30, 33 à 74 et 79 à 152 repris à l'annexe B de l'appel interlocutoire du Procureur dans le second. Voir l'affaire Karemera et consorts, n°ICTR-98-44-AR73(C), Décision faisant suite à l'appel interlocutoire interjeté par le Procureur de la décision relative au constat judiciaire (Chambre d'appel), 16 juin 2006 (la « décision de la Chambre d'appel »).

Ngirumpatse sur la requête en constat judiciaire et en admission de faits et demande à la Chambre d'entendre les observations orales des parties au soutien de leurs écritures, déposé le 28 août 2006 ; Prosecutor's Consolidated Response to Defense Submissions on the Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts, déposée le 11 septembre 2006 (la « réponse globale du Procureur ») ; Mémoire en réplique de Joseph Nzirorera relatif au constat judiciaire , déposé le 14 septembre 2006 ; Mémoire en réplique pour M. Ngirumpatse sur la Prosecutor's Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts, déposé le 25 septembre 2006. Le 27 septembre 2006, la Chambre a prorogé jusqu'au 2 octobre 2006 le délai imparti à la Défense pour répondre à des écritures du Procureur. Voir l'affaire Karemera et consorts, n°ICTR-98-44-T, Décision accordant une prorogation de délai de réponse à deux requêtes du Procureur (Chambre de première instance), 27 septembre 2006. Le 1er octobre 2006, Édouard Karemera a déposé sa réplique à la réponse globale du Procureur.

[7] Faits n°14, 79 à 83 et 138 à 141. Voir la réponse globale du Procureur, par. 7.

[8] L'un d'eux, à savoir le fait nº 153, a été présenté aussi comme un fait de notoriété publique.

6. Lorsque la Chambre a achevé ses délibérations sur le renvoi fait par la Chambre d'appel et mettait la dernière main à la présente décision, la teneur des dépositions prévues par deux témoins à charge l'a obligée à rendre deux décisions orales pour se prononcer sur certains faits. Elle a précisé que la décision écrite qu'elle rendrait sur la question renvoyée fournirait les motifs de ces décisions orales et constituerai l'exposé officiel de ses conclusions et de son raisonnement sur cette question. Les décisions orales susvisées ont permis au Procureur d'abréger considérablement l'interrogatoire principal de ses témoins.

Délibération

Question préliminaire

7. La Défense de chacune des personnes accusées en l'espèce a demandé à la Chambre d'appel de revoir ou, à défaut, de préciser sa décision. En attendant que la Chambre d'appel statue sur cette demande, la Défense de Ngirumpatse a invité Chambre à surseoir au réexamen des questions relatives au constat judiciaire, faisant valoir que ce sursis servirait l'intérêt de la justice et favoriserait l'économie des ressources du Tribunal.

8. La demande de sursis est devenue sans objet, la Chambre d'appel ayant rejeté les requêtes en réexamen dans leur intégralité le 1er décembre 2006[9].

9. La Chambre de première instance commencera par examiner la partie de la Décision de la Chambre d'appel qui lui demande de dresser le constat judiciaire de certains faits de notoriété publique. Elle examinera ensuite le volet de cette décision relatif aux faits admis dans d'autres affaires.

I. Faits de notoriété publique – Article 94 (A) du Règlement

10. L'article 94 (A) du Règlement dispose que

> « [l]a Chambre de première instance n'exige pas la preuve de ce qui est de notoriété publique, mais en dresse le constat judiciaire ».

L'application de cette disposition n'est pas facultative[10]. Bien au contraire, l'article 94 (A) « fait "obligation" de dresser le constat judiciaire d'informations "notoires"[11] ». L'expression « de notoriété publique »

> « s'applique aux faits qui ne sont pas raisonnablement l'objet d'une contestation. En d'autres termes, il s'agit de faits communément admis ou universellement connus, tels que de grands faits historiques, des données géographiques ou les lois de la nature. »

11. Dans sa décision, la Chambre d'appel a estimé que la présente Chambre avait eu tort de ne pas dresser le constat judiciaire des faits suivants qui, de l'avis de la Chambre d'appel, sont des faits de notoriété publique[12] :

> i) Fait n°2 : « La situation suivante a existé au Rwanda entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994 : sur toute l'étendue du Rwanda, des attaques généralisées ou systématiques ont été dirigées contre une population civile en raison de son appartenance au groupe ethnique tutsie. Au cours de ces attaques, des citoyens rwandais ont tué des personnes considérées comme des Tutsis ou porté gravement atteinte à leur intégrité physique ou mentale. Ces attaques ont entraîné la mort d'un grand nombre de personnes appartenant à l'ethnie tutsie. »

ii) Fait n°5 : « Entre le 1er janvier et le 17 juillet 1994, un conflit armé non international s'est déroulé au Rwanda. »

iii) Fait n°6 : « Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, un génocide a été perpétré au Rwanda contre le groupe ethnique tutsi. »

12. La Chambre n'avait demandé aux parties de faire des observations supplémentaires que sur la question du constat judiciaire des faits admis, mais la Défense de Ngirumpatse s'est employée à déterminer si la Chambre de première instance était tenue de suivre les indications de la Chambre d'appel. À ce propos, elle soutient que le Règlement ne fait pas obligation à la Chambre de première instance de se conformer à l'avis de la Chambre d'appel et qu'au lieu de respecter les indications de celle-ci, la Chambre de première instance devrait revoir la décision contestée à la lumière des conclusions de Chambre d'appel.

13. Cet argument va à rebours de la jurisprudence constante, en particulier des récentes décisions de la Chambre d'appel. Dès lors qu'un fait est jugé de notoriété publique, la Chambre de première instance n'a aucun pouvoir d'appréciation à cet égard et doit en dresser le constat judiciaire[13]. En l'espèce, la Chambre d'appel a jugé que les faits n°2, 5 et 6 étaient des faits de notoriété publique et a demandé en conséquence à la Chambre de première instance d'en dresser le constat judiciaire[14].

14. Dans l'affaire Bizimungu et consorts, la Chambre de première instance II a, elle aussi, estimé que > « la décision de la Chambre d'appel de considérer qu'un fait est de notoriété publique et qu'un constat judiciaire doit en être dressé en vertu de l'article 94 (A) du Règlement s'impose à toutes les Chambres de première instance[15] ».

15. De ce chef, la Chambre dresse le constat judiciaire des faits n°2, 5 et 6 considérés comme des faits de notoriété publique, en application de l'article 94 (A) du Règlement.

II. Faits admis – Article 94 (B) du Règlement

16. L'article 94 (B) du Règlement se lit comme suit :

> Une Chambre de première instance peut, d'office ou à la demande d'une partie, et après audition des parties, décider de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits ou de moyens de preuve documentaires admis lors d'autres affaires portées devant le Tribunal et en rapport avec l'instance.

17. Dans sa décision du 16 juin 2006, la Chambre d'appel a renvoyé la question du constat judiciaire à la Chambre de première instance pour qu'elle examine à nouveau, à la lumière de deux conclusions dégagées par la Chambre d'appel, la majorité des faits présentés comme des faits admis.

18. En premier lieu, la Chambre d'appel a conclu que

notamment ceux liés à l'existence et au fonctionnement d'une entreprise criminelle commune[16] ».

Ce faisant, la Chambre d'appel a également reconnu la nécessité d'accueillir avec circonspection les requêtes en constat judiciaire de faits admis lorsque ces faits sont indispensables pour établir la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé. Elle a souligné que la Chambre de première instance doit analyser les faits précis dont le constat judiciaire est sollicité pour déterminer s'ils se rapportent aux actes, au comportement ou à l'état d'esprit des accusés et, dans le cas contraire si les circonstances de la cause autorisent à penser que leur admission apporterait la rapidité recherchée sans compromettre les droits des accusés[17].

19. En second lieu, la Chambre d'appel a estimé qu'une Chambre de première instance > « peut et même doit refuser de dresser le constat judiciaire des faits dont elle est saisie si elle considère que leur formulation – hors de leur contexte exposé dans le jugement d'où ils ont été tirés – prête à confusion ou ne correspond pas aux faits réellement admis dans les affaires considérées[18] ».

Toutefois, contrairement à la Chambre de première instance, elle n'était pas convaincue dans le cas présent, que les faits n°86 à 110 avaient été réellement sortis de leur contexte ou mal réunis de telle sorte qu'ils ne cadraient plus avec les jugements d'où ils avaient été tirés. Cela étant, elle a demandé à la Chambre de première instance d'examiner à nouveau la question et de motiver ses conclusions[19].

II.1. Droit applicable

20. Dans le cadre de l'article 94 (B) du Règlement, le constat judiciaire de faits admis est facultatif. En outre, la Chambre ne peut procéder à l'exercice de son pouvoir d'appréciation que si elle est convaincue que le fait considéré se rapporte à l'instance dont elle est saisie[20].

21. D'après la Chambre d'appel,

La Chambre d'appel a également relevé l'analogie qu'il y a entre le constat judiciaire de faits admis dans d'autres affaires et l'admission de déclarations écrites en lieu et place d'un témoignage oral en vertu de l'article 92 bis du Règlement, deux mécanismes d'ordre procédural adoptés « surtout pour les mêmes raisons[22] ».

22. La Chambre d'appel considère les faits admis constatés judiciairement en vertu de l'article 94 (B) comme de « simples présomptions que la Défense peut combattre par des éléments de preuve lors du procès »[23]. Elle a précisé comment cette exception qu'est le constat judiciaire pouvait se concilier avec la présomption d'innocence :

> Cette situation présente une certaine analogie avec l'administration de la preuve de l'alibi, par exemple, où la charge de la production incombe à l'accusé alors que la question a fondamentalement trait à sa culpabilité. Or, ce renversement de la charge ne porte pas atteinte au principe de la présomption d'innocence, car, comme la Chambre d'appel l'a reconnu à maintes reprises, il ne dégage pas le Procureur de la charge d'établir la culpabilité de l'accusé au-delà de tout doute raisonnable[25].

23. Des Chambres de première instance du Tribunal de céans et du Tribunal pénal international pour l'ex-Yougoslavie (« TPIY ») ont établi certains principes directeurs lorsqu'elles ont eu à décider s'il y avait lieu de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits présentés comme des fais admis. Ces principes cadrent avec les indications que la Chambre d'appel a données récemment dans sa décision du 16 juin 2006. Leur liste n'est pas exhaustive et ils peuvent se résumer comme suit :

- Lorsqu'elle statue sur la question, la Chambre doit examiner le fait visé dans le contexte du jugement d'où il a été tiré[26].
- En ce qui concerne le sens de l'expression « faits admis », la jurisprudence définit un certain nombre de conditions qu'un fait doit remplir pour être considéré comme ayant été réellement admis.
- Tout fait dont le constat judiciaire est sollicité doit être distinct, concret et identifiable[27].
- Il doit revêtir la même forme que celle sous laquelle la Chambre qui l'a admis l'a présenté ou une forme sensiblement approchante[28]. Des faits qui ont été sensiblement modifiés par la partie requérante ne sauraient être considérés comme des faits réellement admis[29]. Toutefois, comme la Chambre de première instance l'a relevé récemment dans la décision Popović, une Chambre de première instance peut, de sa propre initiative, corriger une inexactitude ou une ambiguïté mineure. La Chambre apprécie souverainement l'opportunité de la rectification et celle-ci ne doit apporter aucune modification substantielle au fait considéré. « Cette rectification doit avoir pour but de faire concorder la formulation du fait en question avec le sens qu'a voulu lui donner la Chambre qui l'a admis[30] » [traduction].

- Les faits dont le constat judiciaire est sollicité doivent être des conclusions factuelles et ne doivent contenir aucune qualification juridique[31].
- Un fait ne peut être considéré comme admis dans une autre affaire s'il est ou est susceptible d'être l'objet d'un appel[32].

• Le constat judiciaire prévu par l'article 94 (B) du Règlement ne peut être dressé si les faits visés attestent la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé[33]. D'après la Chambre d'appel, on ne doit dès lors pas dresser le constat judiciaire de faits qui se rapportent aux actes, au comportement et à l'état d'esprit de l'accusé[34]. Toutefois, cette exclusion ne s'applique pas aux actes et au comportement d'autrui dont l'accusé serait responsable[35]. Les personnes visées en l'occurrence sont, par exemple, les subordonnés de l'accusé dont la conduite criminelle lui est imputée parce qu'il ne l'a ni empêchée ni punie, les personnes qui auraient participé avec lui à une entreprise criminelle commune et celles qu'il aurait aidées et encouragées[36].

• Dès lors qu'elle est convaincue que les faits dont l'admission est sollicitée sont des faits réellement admis dans d'autres affaires et ne se rapportent pas aux actes, au comportement et à l'état d'esprit de l'accusé, la Chambre doit exercer son pouvoir d'appréciation pour accélérer la procédure, à condition que l'admission de ces faits ne soit pas de nature à porter atteinte aux droits de l'accusé, notamment à son droit à un procès équitable et rapide ainsi qu'à celui d'entendre et d'interroger les témoins à charge[37]. À cet égard, des Chambres de première instance du Tribunal de céans et du TPIY ont estimé, à la lumière des circonstances particulières des affaires dont elles étaient saisies, qu'il ne faut pas dresser le constat judiciaire de faits qui constituent des points fondamentaux de la cause[38]. Lorsqu'un fait se rapporte à un des points fondamentaux de la cause, en dresser le constat judiciaire risque d'imposer à l'accusé une charge de la preuve contraire si lourde que son droit à un procès équitable serait compromis[39]. S'autorisant de l'intérêt de la justice et des circonstances particulières de l'espèce, des Chambres de première instance refusent également de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits admis lors d'autres affaires dans les cas où des témoignages ont déjà été entendus sur l'objet du fait dont le constat judiciaire est sollicité[40].

Dans ces paragraphes, la Chambre d'appel avait examiné la question de savoir si le fait que l'article 92 bis prohibe l'admission de déclarations écrites « permettant de démontrer […] les actes et le comportement de l'accusé tels qu'allégués dans l'acte d'accusation » emportait l'obligation d'exclure aussi toute déclaration écrite tendant à prouver les actes et le comportement d'autres personnes dont l'accusé serait responsable du comportement par application de la théorie de l'entreprise criminelle commune ou de celle de la responsabilité du complice. Elle avait estimé qu'une interprétation allant dans ce sens ferait perdre toute utilité pratique à l'article 92 bis et serait incompatible avec la finalité et les termes de cet article. Dans l'affaire Karemera, la Chambre d'appel a considéré que cette analyse s'appliquait également à l'article 94 (B) du Règlement.

II.2. Faits dont le constat judiciaire est sollicité

24. Dans l'ensemble, les avocats des accusés contestent l'exactitude des faits dont l'admission est sollicitée ou la qualification de faits admis lors d'autres affaires qui leur a été attribuée. Ils soutiennent aussi que certains de ces faits se rapportent aux actes, au comportement et à l'état d'esprit des accusés ou à ceux d'autrui dont le Procureur juge les accusés responsables. Pour eux, l'admission des faits qualifiés par le Procureur de faits admis lors d'autres affaires portera gravement atteinte aux droits des accusés de plusieurs manières et ne favorisera pas la rapidité recherchée.

25. La Chambre va maintenant rechercher, à la lumière des principes rappelés ci-dessus et des arguments de chacune des parties, s'il y a lieu de dresser le constat judiciaire des 136 faits qualifiés de faits admis. Pour la commodité du lecteur, il convient de préciser que la Chambre ne rappellera pas systématiquement tous les arguments avancés par les parties sur chaque fait si celui-ci a déjà été examiné.

1. Faits n°1 à 9 (jugement Akayesu)

26. Le Procureur invite la Chambre à dresser le constat judiciaire de neuf faits repris du jugement Akayesu[41].

27. Ces faits présentent un intérêt pour l'instance et ne se rapportent pas aux actes, au comportement et à l'état d'esprit des personnes accusées en l'espèce. Ayant examiné les faits n°1 à 9 dans le contexte du jugement, la Chambre est également convaincue qu'ils constituent des faits réellement admis. Plus précisément, et contrairement à la thèse de Ngirumpatse, les faits n°1 et 8 ont été libellés de la même manière que dans le jugement d'où ils ont été tirés, et le fait n°3 ne contient aucune qualification essentiellement juridique.

28. La Défense de Ngirumpatse et celle de Karemera demandent à la Chambre de ne pas dresser de constat judiciaire dans les cas où la Chambre de première instance saisie à l'origine a tiré la conclusion considérée sur la foi d'un seul témoin[42]. Selon elles, dresser un constat judiciaire dans ces circonstances revient à priver l'accusé du droit dont avait bénéficié la personne poursuivie dans l'affaire d'où le fait en question a été tiré et de la possibilité de faire naître un doute raisonnable sur la thèse du Procureur.

29. Il ressort de l'article 89 du Règlement et de la jurisprudence constante du Tribunal de céans que la corroboration des témoignages n'est pas indispensable : une Chambre peut s'appuyer sur la Krajisnik, Decision on the Prosecution Motion for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts and for Admission of Written Statements of Witnesses Pursuant to Rule 92 bis, 10 mars 2003 ; affaire Bizimungu et consorts, Décision relative à la requête du Procureur en constat judiciaire de faits admis, 10 décembre 2004 ; décision Popović, par. 19.

[41] Il s'agit des faits n°1 à 9. Voir Le Procureur c. Jean-Paul Akayesu, affaire n°ICTR-96-4-T, Jugement, 2 septembre 1998, Recueil des ordonnances, décisions, jugements et arrêts du TPIR, 1998.
[42] La Défense de Karemera aussi soulève ce point. Il s'agit des faits n°1, 2, 3, 7, 10 à 24, 36, 41 à 51, 60, 67, 68, 79, 82, 84, 85, 110, 116 à 123, 125, 126, 132, 134 à 141, 144, 145, 148 et 150.

déposition d'un seul témoin pour conclure qu'un fait essentiel a été établi[43]. Elle dispose également d'une grande latitude pour admettre des preuves par ouï-dire, même lorsque ces preuves ne peuvent être examinées à la source ni n'ont été corroborées par des témoignages directs[44]. En conséquence, la Chambre ne refusera pas d'admettre un fait admis dans une autre affaire tout simplement parce que la Chambre saisie à l'origine a tiré sa conclusion sur la foi d'un seul témoin.

30. Compte tenu des circonstances particulières de l'espèce, la Chambre est convaincue que dresser le constat judiciaire des faits n°1 à 9 favorisera la rapidité recherchée sans pour autant compromettre les droits des accusés. Toutefois, elle juge nécessaire de corriger certaines inexactitudes mineures concernant le fait n°9.

2. Faits n°15, 65 à 68, 144 et 145 (jugement Semanza)

31. Le Procureur sollicite le constat judiciaire de certains faits tirés du jugement Semanza, en l'occurrence les faits n°15, 65 à 68, 144 et 145[45].

32. Ces faits présentent un intérêt pour l'instance et ne se rapportent pas aux actes, au comportement et à l'état d'esprit des personnes accusées en l'espèce. Contrairement à la thèse de Ngirumpatse, la Chambre est également convaincue que ces faits ont été réellement admis et qu'ils revêtent une forme sensiblement proche de celle sous laquelle ils ont été présentés par la Chambre saisie à l'origine.

33. La Défense de Ngirumpatse demande aussi à la Chambre de refuser de dresser le constat judiciaire des faits n°15, 67, 144 et 145, la Chambre saisie à l'origine n'ayant pas précisé les éléments de preuve sur lesquels elle s'est fondée pour tirer ses conclusions factuelles. À son avis, dans les cas où la transparence fait défaut, les personnes accusées en l'espèce ne peuvent pas produire les éléments de preuve nécessaires pour réfuter ces conclusions.

34. Ayant examiné ces faits dans le contexte du jugement, la Chambre ne souscrit pas à la thèse de la Défense. La Chambre saisie de l'affaire Semanza dit explicitement comment elle a évalué et pris en considération les éléments de preuve produits au procès, y compris ceux portant sur l'alibi.

35. Compte tenu des circonstances de l'espèce, la Chambre estime que dresser le constat judiciaire des faits n°15, 65 à 68, 144 et 145 favorisera la rapidité recherchée sans pour autant compromettre les droits des accusés.

3. Faits n°16 à 24 et 31 à 64 (jugement Kajelijeli)

36. Les faits n°16 à 24 et 31 à 64 dont le Procureur demande à la Chambre de dresser le constat judiciaire ont été tirés du jugement Kajelijeli[46].

37. La Défense de Nzirorera reconnaît qu'aucun de ces faits ne se rapporte aux actes, au comportement et à l'état d'esprit des accusés, mais celle de Ngirumpatse soutient que la Chambre doit en écarter certains parce que ceux-ci comprennent les actes et le comportement des accusés[47] et en particulier parce qu'il y en a qui concernent les actes des Interahamwe que l'acte d'accusation impute aux accusés[48]. Elle soutient en outre, que pour les mêmes raisons, la Chambre doit refuser de dresser le constat judiciaire des faits concernant l'emploi des désignations « tutsi », « ennemis », « complices de l'ennemi », « infiltrés », « complices du FPR », « inyenzi », « inkotanyi », etc. comme synonymes[49].

38. La Chambre estime que les faits dont l'admission est sollicitée présentent un intérêt pour l'instance et qu'on ne saurait dire que l'un d'entre eux se rapporte aux actes, au comportement et à l'état d'esprit des personnes accusées en l'espèce.

39. Toutefois, certains de ces faits donnent directement des détails sur les actes et le comportement de Kajelijeli[50] qui, d'après l'acte d'accusation établi en l'espèce, aurait directement agi sur les instructions de Nzirorera. En effet, il est allégué au paragraphe 62 de l'acte d'accusation que le 6 ou le 7 avril 1994, ou à ces deux dates, Joseph Nzirorera a participé avec Juvénal Kajelijeli, entre autres, aux décisions prises lors d'une réunion tenue chez sa mère dans le secteur de Busogo et que Joseph Nzirorera a ordonné d'attaquer et de tuer les membres de la population tutsie dans les communes de Mukingo et de Nkuli. Il est allégué en outre que Kajelijeli a mis à exécution les décisions prises par Joseph Nzirorera[51].

40. Il est permis de dresser le constat judiciaire d'actes et du comportement d'autrui dont un accusé serait responsable, mais la Chambre estime que les faits n°19, 40, 50 à 53, 55, 56, 60, 62 et 63 dont l'admission est sollicitée touchent tellement à la responsabilité pénale de Joseph Nzirorera et jouent un rôle si fondamental dans cette responsabilité – vu les allégations faites dans l'acte d'accusation – que les droits de l'accusé seraient compromis si le constat judiciaire en était dressé.

41. La Chambre juge que le fait n°34, selon lequel les massacres de Tutsis commis dans la commune de Mukingo « ne procédaient pas d'une réaction spontanée de la population hutue à la mort du Président », touche à une question clé en l'espèce. Le Procureur a toujours dit que les personnes accusées en l'espèce avaient planifié à l'avance le génocide dans l'ensemble du Rwanda et la Défense a fait savoir à maintes reprises qu'elle avait l'intention d'invoquer le fait que les massacres perpétrés étaient une réaction spontanée de la population hutue. D'après la Chambre d'appel, > « si l'existence d'un plan visant à commettre le génocide est indispensable pour que la thèse du Procureur prospère, elle doit être établi par des éléments de preuve[52] » [traduction].

Dans ces conditions, la Chambre estime que l'intérêt de la justice commande d'entendre des témoins en personne sur cette question particulière.

42. Concernant le fait n°18[53], le Procureur soutient que la question de savoir s'il y a eu des « attaques généralisées » est une question de fait et que dès lors que l'existence de ces attaques a été jugée établie, on peut en tirer une conclusion juridique. Il soutient également que la Chambre d'appel ayant considéré que le fait que

> « sur toute l'étendue du Rwanda, des attaques généralisées ou systématiques ont été dirigées contre une population civile en raison de son appartenance au groupe ethnique tutsie »

est un fait de notoriété publique et le viol étant une des méthodes employées pour attaquer une population, il convient que la Chambre de première instance dresse le constat judiciaire de ce fait. De l'avis de la Chambre, le fait que des viols et des violences sexuelles aient été commis dans le cadre d'une attaque généralisée dirigée contre la population civile tutsie peut être considéré comme une qualification essentiellement juridique, laquelle doit être laissée à l'appréciation souveraine de la Chambre de première instance. En conséquence, la Chambre refuse de dresser le constat judiciaire du fait n°18.

[53] Le fait n°18 dont l'admission est sollicitée se lit comme suit : « Les viols [et les violences sexuelles] en question ont été commis dans le cadre d'une attaque généralisée dirigée contre la population civile tutsie ».

43. Compte tenu du contexte du jugement Kajelijeli, la Chambre n'est pas convaincue que les faits n°36 à 38 correspondent aux conclusions factuelles dégagées par la Chambre de première instance dans ledit jugement[54]. Ces faits ne peuvent donc pas être considérés comme des faits admis dans une autre affaire. En conséquence, il y a lieu de refuser d'en dresser le constat judiciaire.

44. La Chambre partage l'avis de la Défense selon lequel les faits n°35, 47 et 48 sont vagues, qu'ils ne sont pas distincts, concrets et identifiables et qu'il n'y a donc pas lieu d'en dresser le constat judiciaire. En outre, elle estime que le fait n°64 est sans doute ambigu et que sa formulation ne rejoint pas celle adoptée par la Chambre saisie à l'origine[55]. Pour cette raison, elle n'en dressera pas le constat judiciaire.

45. À l'inverse, les faits n°16, 17, 20 à 24, 33, 41 à 46, 49, 54, 57, 58, 59 et 61 sont des faits réellement admis. Qui plus est, et contrairement aux assertions de la Défense de Nzirorera et de celle de Ngirumpatse, les faits n°17, 33, 43 et 59 sont distincts, concrets et identifiables et le fait n°44 ne contient aucune qualification juridique.

46. Comme indiqué plus haut, la Chambre est également convaincue que les faits n°16, 17, 20 à 24, 33, 41 à 46, 49, 54, 57, 58, 59 et 61 ne se rapportent pas aux actes, au comportement et à l'état d'esprit des personnes accusées en l'espèce. À cet égard, elle relève que les faits n°41 à 46 concernent une

La Chambre relève en particulier la déposition précise et fiable du témoin à charge GBH selon laquelle l'accusé était celui qui « donnait des instructions » aux « jeunes gens […] qui devaient faire quelque chose, […] les supervisait [et] leur donnait des ordres » et « les jeunes gens en question [étaient] des Interahamwe ». Selon le témoin GBH, tout homme jouissant de sa qualité de bourgmestre aurait pu faire cesser les agissements de ces jeunes gens en uniforme qui s'entraînaient, chantaient et dansaient ou mettre ceux-ci en prison. Cette déposition a été corroborée par le témoin à charge GBE qui a dit de l'accusé qu'il n'avait jamais inquiété les Interahamwe, même quand ils « molestaient ou harcelaient » les gens, alors qu'en tant que bourgmestre il avait à la fois le pouvoir et l'obligation de le faire. La Chambre estime que ces témoignages rendent clairement compte des liens étroits que l'accusé entretenait avec les Interahamwe et du contrôle qu'il exerçait sur ces derniers. Cela étant, la Chambre conclut que l'accusé était un des dirigeants des Interahamwe sur lesquels il exerçait un contrôle dans la commune de Mukingo et qu'il a également exercé une influence sur les Interahamwe de la commune de Nkuli du 1er janvier au mois de juillet 1994.
Le fait n°37 est tiré du paragraphe 426 du jugement Kajelijeli qui se lit comme suit :
Encore qu'elle ait conclu plus haut [chapitre III, section H] que l'accusé était dirigeant du mouvement Interahamwe, jeunesses du MRND, la Chambre considère que la preuve n'a pas été suffisamment rapportée que l'accusé était (a) militant inscrit sur les listes du MRND rénové issu des Statuts de juillet 1991; (b) membre du comité préfectoral ou du congrès préfectoral de ce parti. Ce nonobstant, elle considère que l'accusé entretenait des liens étroits avec le MRND rénové et ses dirigeants et qu'en particulier de janvier à la mi-juillet 1994, il a participé activement à de nombreuses activités de ce parti dans la commune de Mukingo et ses environs. Autant dire qu'il était militant du MRND.
Le fait n°38 est tiré du paragraphe 400 du jugement Kajelijeli qui se lit comme suit :
La Chambre conclut qu'au 6 avril 1994, l'accusé participait activement à l'entraînement des Interahamwe, comme il ressort de la déposition du témoin oculaire à charge GBH qui a dit l'avoir vu en compagnie de ces jeunes gens qui s'entraînaient sur un terrain de football avec des fusils en bois, déposition qui rejoint celles des témoins à charge GDD et GAO dont les récits similaires et largement concordants évoquent la participation de l'accusé à l'entraînement des Interahamwe. Le témoin GDD, ancien élément Interahamwe, a dit que l'accusé et d'autres hommes politiques l'avaient sollicité pour entraîner de jeunes recrues Interahamwe. Le témoin GAO, autre ancien élément Interahamwe, a également confirmé qu'alors qu'il était bourgmestre, l'accusé assurait la formation militaire des Interahamwe avec d'autres personnes, que l'accusé venait au terrain d'entraînement chaque matin, et qu'il avait dit aux Interahamwe de parachever rapidement leur formation pour qu'il [l'accusé] puisse les envoyer dans les volcans combattre les « Inkotanyi, les Inyenzi ». La Chambre relève en particulier la déposition du témoin à charge GAP selon laquelle l'accusé était le principal encadreur « chargé de l'idéologie politique ». Si elle relève des ambiguïtés mineures entre ces dépositions quant à l'époque des diverses séances d'entraînement de la milice dans la commune de Mukingo et ses environs, la Chambre estime que lesdites dépositions se recoupent et établissent, au-delà de tout doute raisonnable, que l'accusé a bel et bien participé activement à la formation des Interahamwe dans la commune de Mukingo. Toutefois, la Chambre conclut qu'il n'a pas été suffisamment établi que l'accusé a organisé ces entraînements.
[55] Voir le jugement Kajelijeli, par. 625 :
Ayant minutieusement examiné l'ensemble des éléments de preuve ayant trait au massacre perpétré à la Cour d'appel de Ruhengeri le 14 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, la Chambre conclut que l'accusé a joué un rôle primordial en ce sens qu'il a aidé et organisé les Interahamwe et les autres assaillants, et ce en leur procurant des armes, en rassemblant les Interahamwe et en leur donnant de l'essence pour faciliter leur transport à la Cour d'appel de Ruhengeri. Les Interahamwe devaient aider à tuer les Tutsis qui avaient été conduits de la sous-préfecture de Busengo, dans la commune de Ndusu, à la Cour d'appel de Ruhengeri et avaient jusque-là repoussé les assauts des milices locales.

réunion différente de celle à laquelle l'acte d'accusation reproche à Nzirorera d'avoir participé et qu'il n'y est pas dit que Nzirorera était présent à cette réunion. Il s'agit d'une réunion tenue par Kajelijeli dans la soirée du 6 avril 1994 à la cantine jouxtant le bureau communal de Nkuli. La Chambre est convaincue que ces faits ne touchent pas trop aux accusés.

47. La Défense de Nzirorera s'oppose cependant à leur admission, au motif que celle-ci compromettrait les droits des accusés à maints égards et ne favoriserait pas la rapidité recherchée.

48. Selon la Défense, il s'avère que les témoins ANP et GBU sur la foi desquels la Chambre de première instance saisie de l'affaire Kajelijeli a dégagé certaines conclusions factuelles ont fait de faux témoignages et le constat judiciaire de faits qui reposent sur la déposition de ces témoins compromettrait dès lors les droits des accusés.

49. La Chambre fait observer que les témoins ANP et GBU sont deux des nombreux témoins sur la foi desquels la Chambre de première instance concernée a dégagé les conclusions contenant les faits admis présentés. L'argument avancé par la Défense à cet égard doit donc être rejeté.

50. La Défense de Nzirorera soutient que vu la déposition faite par le témoin BTH devant la présente Chambre, il n'est pas permis de dresser le constat judiciaire de certains faits.

51. Comme il a été dit plus haut, s'autorisant de l'intérêt de la justice et des circonstances particulières de l'espèce, certaines Chambres de première instance refusent de dresser le constat judiciaire de faits admis lors d'autres affaires dans les cas où des témoignages ont déjà été entendus sur l'objet du fait dont le constat judiciaire est sollicité[56]. Cependant, le fait qu'une Chambre de première instance a entendu des témoignages sur tel ou tel fait n'interdit pas formellement d'en dresser le constat judiciaire. La Chambre doit déterminer si, du moment qu'elle a déjà entendu ces témoignages, le constat judiciaire du fait considéré favorisera la rapidité recherchée sans pour autant compromettre les droits de l'accusé. Au nombre des éléments d'appréciation dont elle dispose peuvent figurer, par exemple, l'ampleur des témoignages entendus sur le fait dont le constat judiciaire est sollicité, l'ampleur des témoignages qu'elle doit encore entendre sur ce fait, l'ampleur des informations de première main fournies par les témoins à ce propos et les éléments permettant de savoir si les dépositions de ces témoins corroborent ou contredisent le fait en question.

52. En l'espèce, la Chambre a examiné les faits qui, selon la Défense, ne sauraient faire l'objet d'un constat judiciaire en raison de la déposition du témoin BTH et elle estime que l'intérêt de la justice ne commande d'écarter que le fait n°39 sur cette base. Il pourrait effectivement y avoir des divergences avec la déposition du témoin BTH sur le même fait. Contrairement à ce qu'affirme Nzirorera, le fait que le témoin BTH a dit que Kajelijeli agissait sur les instructions de Nzirorera n'interdit pas de conclure que les faits n°16, 17, 20 à 24, 33, 41 à 46, 49, 54, 57, 58, 59 et 61 n'ont pas trait aux actes, au comportement et à l'état d'esprit des accusés.

53. La Défense de Nzirorera soutient aussi que la Chambre de première instance ayant conclu dans l'affaire Kajelijeli que le Procureur n'avait pas établi que Kajelijeli s'était entendu avec Nzirorera et d'autres personnes[57], il serait injuste de dresser le constat judiciaire de conclusions de cette Chambre triées sur le volet qui sont favorables au Procureur[58]. La Chambre estime que bien au contraire, cet argument milite en faveur de l'admission des faits n°16, 17, 20 à 24, 33, 41 à 46, 49, 54, 57, 58, 59 et 61, puisque la Chambre de première instance saisie de l'affaire Kajelijeli n'a pas jugé que Nzirorera et Kajelijeli étaient parties à une entente criminelle.

54. Par ailleurs la Défense de Nzirorera présente plusieurs arguments spécifiques pour expliquer pourquoi le constat judiciaire de certains faits ne favoriserait pas la rapidité recherchée. Premièrement, elle soutient que les faits n°23 et 24 concernent des épisodes survenus dans la commune de Kinigi qui n'ont pas été inclus dans l'acte d'accusation modifié et ne seront évoqués par aucun des témoins inscrits sur la liste des témoins à charge. Puisqu'elle devra produire des éléments de preuve pour réfuter les allégations portant sur les faits survenus dans les communes de Kinigi et de Nkuli, précise-t-elle, le constat judiciaire ne favoriserait pas la rapidité recherchée. Deuxièmement, elle souligne que les faits n°41 à 50 sont des conclusions tirées de la déposition du témoin GDD qui est mort depuis lors et qu'aucun autre témoin figurant sur la liste des témoins à charge ne parlera des épisodes en question. Dans ces circonstances, estime-t-elle, dresser le constat judiciaire des faits considérés reviendrait à priver Nzirorera de son droit au contre-interrogatoire sur des points très litigieux et ne favoriserait pas la rapidité du procès, puisqu'il n'y a aucun témoin dont la déposition deviendrait inutile ou serait abrégée du fait qu'un constat judiciaire aurait été dressé. Le Procureur reconnaît que le témoin GDD est mort depuis sa déposition dans l'affaire Kajelijeli, mais souligne que la Défense pourra toujours contester l'exactitude des faits en citant des témoins, que d'autres témoins viendront parler des épisodes qui se sont produits dans les communes susvisées et que la Défense pourra remettre en question leurs dépositions.

55. La Chambre est convaincue que l'acte d'accusation et le mémoire préalable au procès mentionnent expressément les massacres perpétrés dans la préfecture de Ruhengeri où se trouve la commune de Kinigi. En outre, le mémoire préalable au procès fait explicitement état de la commune de Mukingo et d'autres communes avoisinant celles de Kinigi et de Nkuli. Ayant examiné les circonstances de l'espèce, la Chambre estime que le constat judiciaire des faits n°16, 17, 20 à 24, 33, 41 à 46, 49, 54, 57, 58, 59 et 61 favoriserait la rapidité recherchée sans porter atteinte aux droits des accusés. Concernant les faits n°33 et 54, elle juge nécessaire de corriger certaines inexactitudes mineures qui les entachent (voir l'annexe jointe à la présente décision).

56. S'agissant enfin des faits n°31 et 32, la Chambre d'appel n'en avait pas été saisie et ne les a donc pas renvoyés à la Chambre de première instance pour qu'elle les examine à nouveau. Cela étant, les conclusions que la Chambre a tirées au sujet des faits dans la décision du 9 novembre 2005 restent valables.

4. Faits n°25 à 30 et 146 à 152 (jugement Rutaganda)

57. Les faits n[os] 25 à 30 et 146 à 152 dont le Procureur sollicite le constat judiciaire ont été tirés du jugement Rutaganda[59].

58. La Défense de Ngirumpatse soutient que les faits n°27 à 30, 147, 151 et 152 doivent être écartés, car ils comprennent les actes et le comportement des accusés ou les actes des Interahamwe qui peuvent être imputés aux accusés en l'espèce. Elle soutient en outre que pour les mêmes raisons, la Chambre doit refuser de dresser le constat judiciaire des faits concernant l'emploi des désignations « tutsi », « ennemis », « complices de l'ennemi », « infiltrés », « complices du FPR », « inyenzi », « inkotanyi » etc. comme synonymes[60].

59. La Chambre est convaincue que les faits qui auraient été tirés du jugement Rutaganda ont un rapport avec la présente instance et qu'aucun de ces faits ne se rapporte aux actes, au comportement et à l'état d'esprit des personnes accusées en l'espèce. Toutefois, les faits n°151 et 152 sont d'une importance si cruciale pour les allégations faites contre les personnes accusées en l'espèce qu'il est préférable d'entendre des témoins en personne sur ces points. En conséquence, la Chambre refuse d'en dresser le constat judiciaire.

[59] Le Procureur c Georges Rutaganda, affaire n°ICTR-96-3-T, Jugement et Sentence, 6 décembre 1999.
[60] Faits n°151 et 152.

60. Elle refuse également de dresser le constat judiciaire du fait n°150 parce qu'elle le juge vague et celui des faits n°148 et 149 parce qu'elle n'est pas convaincue que leur admission favoriserait la rapidité recherchée.

61. Vu le contexte du jugement d'où ils ont été tirés, les faits n°25 à 30, 146 et 147 sont des faits réellement admis et ils revêtent une forme sensiblement proche de celle sous laquelle ils avaient été présentés dans ledit jugement. En outre, tenant compte des droits des accusés et de l'intérêt de la justice, leur admission contribuera à accélérer le procès. Toutefois, la Chambre a rectifié de sa propre initiative, certaines inexactitudes mineures qui y figuraient, de manière à pouvoir dresser le constat judiciaire de ces faits sous une forme exempte de toute ambiguïté (Voir à l'annexe jointe à la présente décision les faits n°25 et 28).

5. Faits n°10 à 12, 88 à 90, 92, 99 à 103, 105 à 107, 124, 127 à 131, 133 et 134 à 137 (jugement Niyitegeka) ; faits n°13, 86, 87, 91, 93, 94, 104, 111, 112 et 113 (jugement Musema) ; faits n°69, 71, 74, 84, 85, 95 à 98, 109, 110, 114 et 115 (jugement Kayishema) ; et faits n°70, 72, 73, 108, 116 à 123, 125, 126 et 132 (jugement Ntakirutimana).

62. Le Procureur demande à la Chambre de dresser le constat judiciaire d'une série de faits extraits des jugements Niyitegeka, Musema, Kayishema et Ntakirutimana[61] qui concernent, entre autres, les attaques menées sur la colline de Muyira, dans la région de Bisesero, les 13 et 14 mai 1994.

63. Selon la Défense de Ngirumpatse et celle de Karemera, les faits extraits du jugement Niyitegeka doivent être exclus parce qu'ils comprennent les actes, le comportement et l'état d'esprit des accusés ou concernent les actes des Interahamwe qui pourraient être imputés aux personnes accusées en l'espèce. Au demeurant, estiment-elles, certains de ces faits sont vagues ou ont été isolés du contexte du jugement d'où ils ont été tirés.

64. La Chambre refuse de dresser le constat judiciaire du fait n°84, car ce fait n'a de sens que si on le rapproche des faits n°79 à 83 que le Procureur a finalement écartés de sa requête.

65. Ayant examiné les faits restants dans le contexte du jugement d'où ils ont été tirés, la Chambre estime qu'ils reflètent fidèlement les conclusions de la Chambre saisie à l'origine d'où ils ont été tirés et qu'ils sont des faits réellement admis qui présentent un intérêt pour l'instance. Contrairement à la thèse de la Défense, la Chambre est également convaincue qu'aucun de ces faits ne concerne les actes, le comportement ou l'état d'esprit des personnes accusées en l'espèce.

66. La Défense de Ngirumpatse et celle de Karemera demandent d'exclure les faits considérés dans les cas où la Chambre de première instance saisie à l'origine a tiré sa conclusion sur la foi d'un seul témoin. Par ailleurs, la Défense de Karemera dit qu'il y a lieu de refuser de dresser le constat judiciaire des faits n°86 à 110, car ceux-ci sont l'objet d'une contestation raisonnable. À son avis, puisque le juge Lennart Aspergen de la Chambre d'appel a estimé dans son opinion individuelle jointe au jugement Musema, que certains faits relatifs à l'épisode considéré n'avaient pas été prouvés au-delà de tout doute raisonnable, les faits en question sont l'objet d'une contestation raisonnable. La Défense de Karemera soutient également que la déposition du témoin HR sur la base de laquelle la Chambre saisie avait tiré ses conclusions factuelles dans le jugement Musema n'ayant pas été prise en considération par une autre Chambre de première instance, il convient de ne pas dresser le constat judiciaire des fait n°86 à 107.

Élizaphan et Gérard Ntakirutimana*, affaire n°ICTR-96-10 et ICTR-96-17-T, Jugement portant condamnation, 21 février 2003.

67. La Chambre a déjà rappelé qu'il est de jurisprudence constante qu'une Chambre peut s'appuyer sur la déposition d'un seul témoin pour conclure qu'un fait essentiel a été établi.

68. La Chambre de première instance saisie de l'affaire Niyitegeka a explicitement déclaré que le témoin HR était crédible et a admis sa déposition[62]. Par la suite, la Chambre d'appel a jugé que l'appréciation de la crédibilité du témoin HR faite par la Chambre de première instance était « minutieuse et empreinte de prudence » et que celle-ci n'avait commis aucune erreur en s'appuyant sur sa déposition[63]. En outre, dans l'affaire Musema, le témoin HR était l'un de ceux sur la déposition desquels la Chambre de première instance s'était appuyée pour dégager les conclusions d'où ont été tirés d'autres faits[64]. La Chambre de première instance a expressément déclaré qu'à son avis, le contre-interrogatoire de ce témoin n'avait nullement entamé la crédibilité de l'intéressé et que son témoignage était fiable. La Chambre d'appel n'a pas remis en cause l'appréciation de la crédibilité du témoin HR faite par la Chambre de première instance[65].

69. L'appréciation de la crédibilité d'un témoin dans un jugement peut empêcher de dresser le constat judiciaire d'un fait admis tiré de ce jugement, mais la Chambre estime que cela dépend du fait considéré et de l'ensemble des circonstances entourant la conclusion de la Chambre concernée. La question qui se pose à la Chambre est de savoir si le constat judiciaire des faits considérés compromettrait ou pas les droits des personnes accusées. La Chambre relève qu'un juge des faits peut conclure à la crédibilité d'un témoin là où un autre ne le trouverait pas crédible. Elle relève également que les juges peuvent conclure dans telle affaire qu'un témoin à charge dit la vérité et pas dans telle autre. La Chambre n'est pas convaincue qu'en ce qui concerne les faits présentés aux fins d'admission dont la Défense dit qu'ils sont viciés parce que le témoin n'est pas crédible, leur constat judiciaire compromettrait les droits des accusés. Qui plus est, les faits dont la Défense s'oppose à l'admission ont été admis par quatre Chambres de première instance différentes qui avaient aussi entendu divers témoins.

70. Dans ces conditions, la Chambre est convaincue que l'intérêt de la justice commande de dresser le constat judiciaire des faits n°10 à 12, 88 à 90, 92, 99 à 103, 105 à 107, 124, 127 à 131, 133, 134 à 137, 13, 86, 87, 91, 93, 94, 104, 111, 112, 113, 69, 71, 74, 85, 95 à 98, 109, 110, 114, 115, 70, 72, 73, 108, 116 à 123, 125, 126 et 132 et que ce constat judiciaire contribuerait à accélérer le procès en l'espèce sans compromettre les droits des accusés.

6. Faits n°142 et 143 (jugement Nahimana)

71. Le Procureur sollicite le constat judiciaire de deux faits tirés du jugement Nahimana, à savoir les faits n°142 et 143[66]. Il précise que l'affaire est pendante devant la Chambre d'appel, mais ces deux faits ne s'inscrivent pas dans l'objet du recours et la Chambre peut donc en dresser le constat judiciaire. Se fondant sur l'opinion individuelle du juge Shahabuddeen, il soutient que la Chambre de première instance peut dresser le constat judiciaire de faits admis dans des affaires pendantes devant la Chambre d'appel, à condition que ces faits n'entrent pas dans le champ de l'appel[67].

72. La Chambre relève que dans l'affaire Nahimana, l'un des appelants, en l'occurrence Jean-Bosco Barayagwiza, demande l'annulation du jugement au motif que le procès s'est déroulé en son absence. Il allègue en outre que le Tribunal n'est pas indépendant et que les juges ne sont pas impartiaux[68].

73. Vu ces moyens d'appel, la Chambre considère que l'arrêt de la Chambre d'appel pourrait avoir une incidence sur toutes les conclusions factuelles dégagées par la Chambre de première instance dans son jugement, y compris les faits dont le constat judiciaire est sollicité. Dans ces circonstances, les faits n°142 et 143 ne peuvent être considérés comme des faits définitivement admis et ne sauraient donc faire l'objet d'un constat judiciaire.

Appréciation générale des droits des accusés et rapidité du procès

74. La Défense de chacune des accusés soutient, d'une manière générale, que le constat judiciaire des faits présentés par le Procureur compromettrait les droits des accusés, notamment leurs droits d'interroger et de faire interroger les témoins à charge. Elle soutient également qu'il ne permettrait pas d'atteindre le but assigné à l'article 94 (B) du Règlement, à savoir l'accélération du procès, et irait donc à rebours de la décision de la Chambre d'appel, puisque les personnes accusées en l'espèce seraient obligées de produire des éléments de preuve pour établir l'inexactitude de chaque fait.

75. La Chambre rejette totalement cet argument, car toute Chambre qui y souscrirait ne pourrait jamais considérer que le constat judiciaire d'un fait, quel qu'il soit, contribuerait à accélérer le procès.

76. Prenant en considération l'intérêt de la justice et l'ensemble des circonstances de l'espèce, la Chambre est convaincue que le constat judiciaire de certains faits admis, indiqués plus haut, contribuerait à accélérer le procès sans compromettre les droits des accusés. En particulier, elle estime que la présente décision n'imposera pas aux accusés une charge de la preuve contraire si lourde que leur droit à un procès équitable sera compromis[69]. S'agissant de l'accélération du procès, la Chambre escompte que le Procureur abrégera la présentation des moyens à charge comme il a dit vouloir le faire et réduira le nombre des témoins qu'il a l'intention d'appeler à la barre en conséquence de l'admission en l'espèce des faits admis dans d'autres affaires.

77. Toutefois, il importe de préciser que la Chambre n'entend pas dresser le constat judiciaire de l'ordre dans lequel le Procureur a énoncé les faits considérés dans sa requête ni celui des sections dans lesquelles ces faits ont été classés. La Chambre dressera le constat judiciaire des faits retenus l'un après l'autre tels qu'ils ont été tirés des jugements dans lesquels les conclusions en question avaient été dégagées (pour plus de détails, voir l'annexe A jointe à la présente décision).

À cette occasion, Élizaphan Ntakirutimana a montré du doigt les réfugiés en fuite aux assaillants qui se sont mis à les pourchasser en chantant « Exterminez-les, recherchez-les partout. Tuez-les et finissez-en avec [eux], dans toutes les forêts ».	Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 594.
117	Élizaphan Ntakirutimana a participé à un convoi de véhicules conduisant des assaillants armés à la colline de Kabatwa à la fin de mai 1994 et dans le courant de la journée, sur la colline voisine de Gitwa, il a indiqué l'endroit où se trouvaient les réfugiés tutsis aux assaillants qui ont attaqué ceux-ci.	Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 607.
118	Trois réunions se sont tenues dans la ville de Kibuye en juin 1994.	Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 711 et 720.
119	La première a eu lieu vers le 10 juin dans la salle de réunion du bureau préfectoral. Elle a commencé entre 10 heures et 11 heures.	Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 711 et 720.
120	Y assistaient des Interahamwe et divers responsables, dont le préfet Kayishema, Ruzindana, Musema, Éliézer Niyitegeka, Gérard Ntakirutimana et les bourgmestres des communes avoisinantes de la région de Bisesero, qui avaient pris place à la première rangée.	Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 711 et 720.
121	Prenant la parole, Ruzindana a expliqué aux participants que la réunion avait pour objet de faire le point du massacre des Tutsis dans la région de Bisesero et de décider ce qu'il fallait encore faire pour en finir avec eux.	Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 711 et 720.
122	Gérard Ntakirutimana est lui aussi intervenu pour dire que la difficulté qu'ils éprouvaient à finir le travail tenait au fait qu'ils n'avaient pas assez d'armes à feu et de munitions. Comme les autres intervenants, Gérard Ntakirutimana s'est servi d'un microphone branché à des haut-parleurs.	Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 711 et 720.

123	Au cours de ces réunions, Gérard Ntakirutimana a aussi participé à la distribution d'armes, a discuté de la planification des attaques dans la région de Bisesero, s'est vu assigner un rôle dans les attaques et a rendu compte de leur réussite.	Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 720.
125	Une deuxième réunion s'est tenue au même lieu environ une semaine plus tard. Ouverte également entre 10 heures et 11 heures, elle a duré environ quatre heures.	Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 712 et 720.
126	Y ont assisté les mêmes responsables présents à la première réunion. Beaucoup d'autres personnes, dont des Interahamwe, étaient présentes dans la salle ou à l'extérieur.	Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 712 et 720.
132	Gérard Ntakirutimana a été affecté au « groupe de Ngoma » dont faisaient aussi partie Enos Kagaba et Mathias Ngirinshuti. Ce groupe devait attaquer Murambi.	Jugement Ntakirutimana, par. 712.
124	Niyitegeka a promis de fournir des armes pour tuer les Tutsis à Bisesero.	Jugement Niyitegeka, par. 225.
127	La réunion avait pour objet de permettre à Niyitegeka de répondre aux questions posées à la réunion précédente, notamment sur sa promesse de mettre à disposition des armes.	Jugement Niyitegeka, par. 225.
128	À cette réunion, Niyitegeka a distribué à des représentants de groupes d'assaillants des armes à utiliser dans les tueries prévues à Bisesero.	Jugement Niyitegeka, par. 225.
129	Niyitegeka a indiqué que l'attaque aurait lieu le lendemain à Bisesero.	Jugement Niyitegeka, par. 225.
130	Niyitegeka a exposé le plan de l'attaque en traçant sur un tableau noir un cercle à l'intérieur duquel il a écrit « Bisesero ». Autour du cercle étaient inscrits les noms des personnes désignées comme meneurs de chaque groupe d'assaillants et les points d'où devaient partir les cinq groupes d'assaillants, à savoir Karongi, Rushishi, Kiziba, Gisiza et Murambi.	Jugement Niyitegeka, par. 225.
131	Niyitegeka a encouragé les gens à participer à l'attaque, et a lui-même pris la tête du groupe de Kiziba.	Jugement Niyitegeka, par. 225.
133	Ce plan a été mis à exécution dès le lendemain, lors de l'attaque perpétrée à Kiziba contre des Tutsis à Bisesero, attaque qui a été dirigée par Niyitegeka et qui a fait de nombreuses victimes parmi les réfugiés tutsis.	Jugement Niyitegeka, par. 225.

13 4	Le 18 juin, ou vers cette date, Niyitegeka a assisté à la cantine du bureau préfectoral de Kibuye à une réunion au cours de laquelle il a promis de mettre à disposition des gendarmes aux fins de l'attaque prévue pour le lendemain et a exhorté les bourgmestres et d'autres personnes à faire tout leur possible pour assurer la participation de la population aux attaques afin que tous les Tutsis à Bisesero puissent être tués. Une autre attaque a été perpétrée le lendemain, tel que prévu.	Jugement Niyitegeka, par. 229.
13 5	Un jour en juin, vers 17 heures, Niyitegeka a pris la parole à une réunion organisée au bureau préfectoral de Kibuye, en présence de Kayishema, de Ruzindana, de nombreux Interahamwe et d'autres personnes.	Jugement Niyitegeka, par. 232.
13 6	Les Interahamwe chantaient : « Exterminons-les, chassons-les de la forêt ! », faisant ainsi référence aux Tutsis.	Jugement Niyitegeka, par. 232.
13 7	Niyitegeka a dit à l'auditoire qu'il était venu afin qu'ils conjuguent leurs efforts pour vaincre l'ennemi, c'est-à-dire le Tutsi, et a promis qu'ils recevraient sa contribution en temps opportun. Il a dit que pas moins de 100 Interahamwe leur prêteraient main-forte dans les attaques contre les Tutsis.	Jugement Niyitegeka, par. 232.
14 4	Le 8 avril au matin, Semanza a rencontré Rugambarara et un groupe d'Interahamwe devant une certaine maison sise dans la commune de Bicumbi. Il a dit aux Interahamwe qu'une certaine famille tutsie n'avait pas encore été tuée, qu'aucun Tutsi ne devait survivre et que les Tutsis devaient être recherchés et tués.	Jugement Semanza, par. 271.
14 5	Plus tard le même jour, les Interahamwe ont fouillé un champ situé près de la maison de la famille mentionnée par Semanza. Ils y ont trouvé quatre membres de ladite famille et les ont tués.	Jugement Semanza, par. 271.
14 6	À partir d'une date indéterminée à la mi-avril, un barrage routier a été établi par des Interahamwe sur l'avenue de la Justice, près d'un feu de signalisation, à proximité de l'entrée du garage Amgar, à la limite du secteur de Cyahafi, dans la commune de Nyarugenge, préfecture de Kigali-ville.	Jugement Rutaganda, par. 22[6].
14 7	Audit barrage, les Interahamwe ont vérifié les cartes d'identité des personnes qui y passaient, et ont procédé à l'arrestation des détenteurs de cartes d'identité portant la mention ethnique « Tutsi » ou des personnes qu'ils considéraient comme des Tutsis parce qu'elles déclaraient ne pas être en possession d'une carte d'identité.	Jugement Rutaganda, par. 22[6].

Introduction

1. Le procès en l'espèce s'est ouvert le 19 septembre 2005 par la présentation des premiers témoins à charge. Selon le chef n°5 de l'acte d'accusation, les accusés sont poursuivis pour viol constitutif de crime contre l'humanité[1]. Il ne leur est pas reproché d'avoir commis personnellement les viols qui leur sont imputés, mais d'en être responsables en leur qualité de supérieurs hiérarchiques[2] des auteurs matériels des viols en question ou, subsidiairement, d'avoir participé à une entreprise criminelle commune de forme élargie[3].

[1] Le Procureur c. Édouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse et Joseph Nzirorera («Karemera et consorts»), affaire nº98-44-I, acte d'accusation modifié du 24 août 2005.

[3] Au paragraphe 69 (ainsi qu'au paragraphe 7) de l'acte d'accusation, il est allégué que les viols étaient la conséquence naturelle et prévisible de l'objet de l'entreprise criminelle commune visant à détruire les Tutsis en tant que groupe, et que les accusés savaient que le viol était la conséquence naturelle et prévisible de l'exécution de l'entreprise criminelle commune à laquelle ils avaient sciemment et délibérément participé. Voir également les paragraphes 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 14, 15 et 16 de l'acte d'accusation qui décrivent les grands traits des allégations relatives à l'entreprise criminelle commune et se rapportent au cinquième chef d'accusation.

2. Le 4 juillet 2005, le Procureur a communiqué les déclarations de 143 témoins et informé la Chambre que leurs dépositions porteraient sur le viol et les violences sexuelles alléguées au chef n°5 de l'acte d'accusation. Le 13 décembre 2005, la Chambre de première instance a autorisé le Procureur à retirer 50 témoins de sa liste et lui a donné jusqu'au 10 janvier 2006[4] pour déposer une requête fondée sur l'article 92 bis du Règlement aux fins d'admission en preuve de déclarations de témoin écrites, en lieu et place de témoignages oraux. Ce délai a été par la suite prorogé jusqu'au 20 février 2006[5].

3. À cette date, le Procureur a déposé une requête[6] pour solliciter :

- L'admission des déclarations écrites de 63 témoins de viol, en lieu et place de leurs témoignages oraux, en vertu de l'article 92 bis (A) du Règlement.
- L'admission des comptes rendus des dépositions de huit témoins de viol[7] entendues dans le cadre d'autres procédures devant le Tribunal, en lieu et place de leurs témoignages oraux, en vertu de l'article 92 bis (A) du Règlement.

4. Le Procureur signale qu'au cas où la Chambre exigerait la comparution pour contre-interrogatoire des témoins dont l'admission des déclarations est demandée, il préférerait que chacun d'eux dépose directement au prétoire. En plus des déclarations écrites susvisées qu'il demande à faire verser au dossier, le Procureur compte appeler 21 témoins qui déposeront devant la Chambre au sujet du chef n°5 de l'acte d'accusation.

5. La Défense de Joseph Nzirorera s'oppose à la requête du Procureur[8], tout comme la Défense de Mathieu Ngirumpatse qui fait siens les arguments de Nzirorera[9]. En plus de s'opposer à la requête du Procureur quant au fond, celle-ci demande à la Chambre : premièrement, de proroger le délai imparti à la Défense pour répondre aux arguments du Procureur, afin de lui permettre de mener des enquêtes sur les pièces dont le versement au dossier est demandé en vue de démontrer qu'elles ne sont pas fiables, et deuxièmement, d'exclure les dépositions des 72 témoins et d'ordonner en conséquence que le Procureur raccourcisse la liste des témoins à charge, le nombre de témoins qu'il entend appeler pour étayer le chef n°5 étant excessif.

Droit applicable

Dispositions générales

6. L'article 92 bis du Règlement (Faits prouvés autrement que par l'audition d'un témoin) donne à la Chambre de première instance le pouvoir d'admettre, en tout ou en partie, les éléments de preuve

Voir aussi la réplique du Procureur intitulée « Prosecutor's Reply: Motion for Proof of Facts Other than by Oral Evidence Pursuant to Rule 92bis and Prosecutor's Response to Motion for Extension of Time » datée du 2 mars 2006.
[7] Il convient de noter qu'à l'origine le Procureur avait sollicité l'admission en preuve des dépositions antérieures de neuf témoins, en vertu de l'article 92 bis du Règlement. Toutefois, dans un rectificatif daté du 3 octobre 2006, il a retiré sa demande concernant l'un des neufs témoins – à savoir le témoin FAF (alias « TM » et « RJ ») – sa demande ne concerne donc plus que huit témoins.

présentés par un témoin sous la forme d'une déclaration écrite (paragraphe (A)) ou, lorsque le témoin a déjà déposé dans le cadre de procédures menées devant le Tribunal, sous forme de compte rendu du témoignage entendu (paragraphe (D)), en lieu et place d'un témoignage oral, à condition que cela permette de démontrer un point autre que les actes et le comportement de l'accusé tels qu'allégués dans l'acte d'accusation.

7. Le paragraphe (B) du même article, qui énonce les critères formels d'admission des déclarations écrites, ajoute une condition supplémentaire. Par ailleurs, et toujours dans le cadre des déclarations écrites, la Chambre est guidée dans l'exercice de son pouvoir d'appréciation par les critères justifiant l'admission ou s'y opposant prévus respectivement par les alinéas (A) (i) et (A) (ii) de l'article 92 bis du Règlement et dont la liste n'est pas exhaustive. Parmi les facteurs cités figure « tout autre facteur qui justifie la comparution du témoin pour contre-interrogatoire », qui est un élément s'opposant à l'admission en preuve de déclarations écrites[10].

Le sens de l'expression « actes et comportement des accusés »

9. L'expression « actes et comportement des accusés figurant dans l'acte d'accusation » a été définie par la Chambre d'appel du Tribunal pénal international pour l'ex-Yougoslavie (TPIY), notamment pour les cas où, comme en l'espèce, la responsabilité pénale des accusés est engagée à raison d'actes perpétrés par des subordonnés ou des coauteurs.

10. Selon la jurisprudence, c'est une expression claire qu'il faut comprendre dans son sens ordinaire, à savoir, qu'il s'agit des actes et du comportement de l'accusé lui-même et non des actes et du comportement de coauteurs et/ou de subordonnés[12]. La décision rendue par la Chambre d'appel dans l'affaire Galić fait autorité en matière d'interprétation de l'article 92 bis du Règlement[13]. Selon cette décision, l'article 92 bis du Règlement exclut les actes et le comportement de l'accusé figurant dans l'acte d'accusation qui établissent sa responsabilité pour les actes et le comportement d'autres personnes, mais n'exclut pas les actes et le comportement d'autres personnes pour lesquels l'accusé est présumé responsable, à savoir les actes et le comportement de coauteurs ou de subordonnés[14].

En fait, la Chambre d'appel a rappelé récemment dans la décision relative au constat judiciaire rendue en l'espèce, le fait que la Décision Galić est la référence en matière d'interprétation de l'expression « actes et comportement de l'accusé ». Voir Le Procureur c. Karemera et consorts, affaire nºICTR-98-44-AR73C), Décision faisant suite à l'appel interlocutoire interjeté par le Procureur de la décision relative au constat judiciaire, 16 juin 2006, par. 52.

11. Selon la jurisprudence, l'article 92 bis (A) du Règlement (et, par analogie, l'article 92 bis (D)) exclut toute déclaration écrite (ou tout compte rendu de témoignage) tendant à prouver les actes ou le comportement de l'accusé sur lesquels le Procureur se fonde pour établir : (1) que l'accusé a matériellement perpétré l'un quelconque des crimes qui lui sont reprochés ; ou (2) qu'il a planifié, incité à commettre ou ordonné lesdits crimes ; ou (3) qu'il a de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé leurs auteurs effectifs à les planifier, à les préparer ou à les exécuter ; ou (4) qu'il était le supérieur hiérarchique des auteurs effectifs de ces crimes ; ou (5) qu'il savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que ses subordonnés s'apprêtaient à les commettre ou l'avaient fait ; ou (6) qu'il n'a pas pris les mesures raisonnables pour empêcher que lesdits actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs[15].

12. Pour se prononcer sur l'admission d'éléments de preuve sous forme écrite en usant de son pouvoir discrétionnaire, la Chambre doit tenir compte de la proximité entre l'accusé et l'auteur des actes et du comportement décrits dans la déclaration écrite ou le compte rendu de témoignage[16]. Dans les cas où c'est la responsabilité de supérieur hiérarchique de l'accusé qui est engagée, et où les crimes reprochés impliquent un comportement criminel généralisé de la part de ses subordonnés (ou de personnes présumées telles), il n'y a souvent qu'un pas entre le fait de conclure que les actes constitutifs de ces crimes ont été commis par ces subordonnés et celui de dire que l'accusé savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que lesdits subordonnés s'apprêtaient à commettre ces crimes ou les avaient commis[17]. Il est alors possible que les subordonnés de 1'accusé (ou les personnes présumées telles) soient si proches de lui que

13. Dans la mesure où 1e Procureur affirme que l'accusé a participé à une entreprise criminelle commune et qu'il est donc responsable des actes commis par d'autres dans le cadre de celle-ci, l'article 92 bis (A) exclut également les déclarations écrites tendant à prouver tout acte ou comportement de l'accusé sur lequel 1e Procureur se fonde pour établir que 1'accusé a participé à l'entreprise criminelle commune, ou qu'il a partagé avec l'auteur effectif des crimes reprochés l'intention requise pour ces actes[19]. Là encore, pour se prononcer sur l'admission d'éléments de preuve sous forme écrite en usant de son pouvoir discrétionnaire, la Chambre doit tenir compte de la proximité entre l'accusé et l'auteur des actes et du comportement décrits dans la déclaration écrite. Lorsque la personne dont les actes et le comportement sont décrits dans la déclaration écrite ou le compte rendu est très proche de l'accusé et lorsque les éléments de preuve sont d'une importance cruciale pour la cause [du Procureur], la Chambre de première instance peut décider de ne pas admettre du tout la déclaration ou le compte rendu[20].

Contre-interrogatoire du témoin

14. Selon l'article 92 bis (A) (ii) (c) du Règlement, l'existence de tout autre facteur qui justifie la comparution du témoin pour contre-interrogatoire est un élément défavorable à l'admission d'éléments de preuve sous forme écrite. Dans l'affaire Galić, la Chambre d'appel a conclu que, dans certains cas, > « vu l'impossibilité de contre-interroger l'auteur de la déclaration, il serait de toute façon contraire à l'équité d'[utiliser celle-ci][21] ».

> … Quoiqu'il en soit, c'est à la Chambre de première instance qu'il revient de décider, dans le cadre de l'article 92 bis, si une déclaration écrite permet de démontrer les actes et le comportement d'un subordonné de 1'accusé ou de toute autre personne dont les actes et le comportement sont mis à la charge de 1'accusé. Elle devra en effet déterminer si l'auteur de la déclaration doit être contre-interrogé [en vertu de l'article 92 bis (E)].

Dans l'exercice de son pouvoir discrétionnaire, la Chambre doit décider s'il convient d'ordonner que le témoin comparaisse pour être contre-interrogé, en tenant compte de la proximité entre l'accusé et l'auteur des actes et du comportement décrits dans la déclaration écrite.

16. Le critère essentiel à appliquer pour déterminer s'il convient de faire comparaître un témoin pour le contre-interroger en vertu de l'article 92 bis du Règlement est de garantir à l'accusé un procès équitable conformément aux articles 20 et 21 du Statut. Pour cela, il faut rechercher, entre autres, si la déclaration écrite ou le compte rendu tend à prouver un élément crucial à charge[22]. Le droit de procéder au contre-interrogatoire des témoins sera accordé, si la déclaration porte sur un élément clé de la cause du Procureur ou sur une question controversée et primordiale entre les parties, et non sur une question secondaire ou peu pertinente[23].

Application de l'article 92 bis du Règlement aux éléments de preuve présentés à la Chambre de première instance

17. La Chambre examine la teneur des pièces dont l'admission est demandée à la lumière de l'article 92 bis du Règlement, des principes de droit applicables et des arguments des parties.

18. À titre préliminaire, elle conclut que les 63 déclarations dont l'admission est demandée en vertu de l'article 92 bis (A) du Règlement sont conformes aux normes formelles prescrites par l'article 92 bis (B) du Règlement. Cette conclusion est étayée par les arguments des deux parties.

[23] Ibid., par. 24.

20. Toutefois, selon les formes de responsabilité figurant dans l'acte d'accusation, (comme on l'a exposé au premier paragraphe de la présente décision et dans les notes en bas de page y afférentes), le Procureur s'appuiera sur ces pièces pour établir que les viols ont été commis de façon généralisée et systématique par les subordonnés des accusés et/ou les coauteurs. Ces allégations sont si cruciales pour la cause du Procureur qu'il ne serait pas équitable envers les accusés de permettre que ces éléments de preuve soient produits par écrit sans qu'ils aient la possibilité de contre-interroger les témoins.

21. La requête du Procureur doit être rejetée. Il est donc inutile que la Chambre statue sur la requête de la Défense tendant à faire proroger le délai de réponse qui lui est imparti pour répondre au Procureur en vue de prouver que les pièces dont l'admission est demandée ne sont pas fiables.

Requête de la Défense tendant à ordonner au Procureur de réduire le nombre de témoins à charge en vertu de l'article 73 bis (D)

22. La Défense affirme que la Chambre de première instance devrait exclure tous les éléments de preuve dont l'admission est demandée en vertu de l'article 92 bis du Règlement, en rendant une décision en vertu de l'article 73 bis (D) du Règlement[24]. Le Procureur s'oppose à cette requête. Il estime qu'on ne saurait qualifier d'excessif le nombre de témoins proposé, à savoir 93, les viols allégués dans l'acte d'accusation ayant été commis sur une grande échelle. Les viols de filles et de femmes tutsies imputés aux Interahamwe ont été commis sur une période de trois mois dans cinq préfectures différentes. On obtient donc une moyenne de six témoins par préfecture[25] et par mois, ce qui n'a rien d'excessif.

23. Selon l'article 73 bis (D) du Règlement, la Chambre de première instance, ou le juge désigné, peut inviter le Procureur à réduire le nombre de témoins appelés à la barre pour établir les mêmes faits[26], si ce nombre est tenu pour excessif.

24. En l'espèce, la Chambre de première instance a rejeté jusqu'à présent la requête de la Défense aux fins d'une ordonnance enjoignant au Procureur de réduire sa liste de témoins[27]. Dans sa décision du 13 décembre 2005, relevant l'intention du Procureur de déposer une demande en admission des déclarations écrites de 86 témoins en lieu et place de leurs dépositions, la Chambre a estimé qu'il était « prématuré de demander au Procureur de réduire le nombre de témoins qu'il entendait appeler à la barre[28] ».

25. La Chambre ayant jugé dans la présente décision qu'il y avait lieu de rejeter la requête du Procureur tendant à faire admettre les déclarations écrites, la liste des témoins à charge comprendrait

[24] L'article 73 bis (D) du Règlement est ainsi libellé : « Si la Chambre de première instance, ou le juge désigné, considère qu'un nombre excessif de témoins sont appelés à la barre pour établir les mêmes faits, elle peut inviter le Procureur à réduire ce nombre ».
[25] Ainsi, si on multiplie le nombre de témoins (6) par le nombre de préfectures (5) et par le nombre de mois (3) – (6 x 5 x 3), on obtient un total de 90 témoins. La liste des témoins à charge comporte actuellement 93 noms pour le chef de viol constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, dont 21 appelés à déposer à la barre et 72 qui font l'objet de la présente décision.
[26] Voir Le Procureur c. Bagosora et consorts, affaire nºICTR-98-41-T, Order for Reduction of Prosecutor's Witness List, 8 avril 2003 : la Chambre de première instance I a ordonné, de sa propre initiative, au Procureur de réduire sa liste de témoins, en en faisant passer le nombre de 235 à 100.
[27] Le Procureur c. Karemera et consorts, affaire nºICTR-98-44-T, Decision on Variance of the Prosecution Witness List, 13 décembre 2005, par. 20.
[28] Id.

93 personnes appelées à déposer au sujet des allégations de viol. Vu les circonstances de l'espèce, elle considère que ce nombre doit être considérablement réduit.

26. Pour justifier le nombre de témoins appelés pour établir le chef cinq, le Procureur propose une méthode de calcul basée sur une moyenne de six témoins de viols, par préfecture et par mois[29]. En appliquant strictement cette méthode aux allégations figurant dans l'acte d'accusation, la Chambre constate que, contrairement aux affirmations du Procureur, il ne faudrait appeler à la barre que quelque 36 témoins. L'acte d'accusation allègue la commission de viols dans chaque préfecture pendant des périodes substantiellement plus courtes que celles qu'indique le Procureur : des viols auraient été commis dans les préfectures de Ruhengeri et de Butare pendant deux semaines (respectivement, du début d'avril à la mi-avril et de la mi-avril à la fin d'avril) ; dans celle de Kigali-ville pendant un mois (avril); dans celle de Kibuye, pendant deux mois (mai et juin) et dans celle de Gitarama, pendant deux mois (avril et mai), et non pendant trois mois dans chaque préfecture comme le prétend le Procureur pour justifier le nombre de 93 témoins.

27. La Chambre rappelle que, dans sa décision du 13 décembre 2005, elle avait rejeté la requête de la Défense aux fins de réduction de la liste des témoins à charge car le Procureur l'avait alors informée de son intention de n'appeler que sept témoins à la barre pour déposer au sujet du chef n° 5 de l'acte d'accusation relatif aux allégations de viol[30]. Ensuite, le Procureur a dit qu'il entendait appeler 21 témoins à la barre pour déposer sur ce chef et a sollicité l'admission des déclarations écrites de 72 témoins, partant du principe que leurs témoignages seraient cumulatifs. La Chambre rappelle également que le Procureur a reconnu par le passé que sa liste de témoins était trop longue et qu'il a exprimé son intention d'en réduire le nombre au cours du procès. La requête aux fins de constat judiciaire du Procureur visait d'ailleurs à réduire le nombre de témoins appelés à déposer au procès et, dans la décision rendue à ce sujet, la Chambre a dressé le constat judiciaire de faits non contestés relatifs aux viols commis dans les préfectures de Gitarama, de Kibuye, de Kigali-rural, de Ruhengeri et de Kigali-ville.

28. Vu les circonstances de l'espèce, la Chambre conclut que la liste des témoins à charge est trop longue et devrait être considérablement réduite en ce qui concerne les témoins appelés à déposer au sujet du chef n°5 de l'acte d'accusation. Pour arriver à cette conclusion, elle a tenu compte : (i) du nombre de témoins que le Procureur se propose d'appeler à la barre relativement au chef n°5, (ii) des éléments factuels que le Procureur compte établir, (iii) de la formule que le Procureur lui-même a retenue pour démontrer à la Chambre que le nombre actuel de témoins n'était pas trop élevé ; (iv) du fait que le recours à un nombre excessif de témoins gaspille le temps et les ressources judiciaires, compromet la bonne administration de la justice et viole les droits de l'accusé et (v) du fait qu'elle a décidé de dresser le constat judiciaire d'un certain nombre de faits relatifs au viol et aux violences sexuelles.

REJETTE la requête du Procureur dans son intégralité,

ORDONNE au Procureur, en vertu de l'article 73 bis (D) du Règlement, de réduire considérablement le nombre de témoins à charge appelés à témoigner à la barre sur le viol et les violences sexuelles au titre du chef n°5 de l'acte d'accusation et de déposer, dans les plus brefs délais, une liste révisée des témoins à charge qu'il communiquera aux conseils des accusés.

Fait à Arusha, le 11 décembre 2006.

[29] Ainsi, si on multiplie le nombre de témoins (6) par le nombre de préfectures (5) et par le nombre de mois (3) – (6 x 5 x 3), on obtient un total de 90 témoins. La liste des témoins à charge comporte actuellement 93 témoins pour le chef de viol constitutif de crime contre l'humanité.

Introduction

1. La Défense de Joseph Nzirorera prie la Chambre de solliciter la coopération du Gouvernement rwandais, en vertu de l'article 28 du Statut du Tribunal, en vue d'obtenir une « copie d'une vidéocassette des réunions du MRND à Gisenyi dont il a été fait état au procès de Wellars Banzi, président du MRND à Gisenyi … »[1] [traduction].

Discussion

2. Aux termes de l'article 28 (1) du Statut,

> « [l]es États collaborent avec le Tribunal … à la recherche et au jugement des personnes accusées d'avoir commis des violations graves du droit international humanitaire ».

Conformément à l'article 28 (2),

3. Selon la jurisprudence du Tribunal de céans, la partie qui demande à une Chambre de délivrer une ordonnance pour obtenir la coopération d'un État en vertu de l'article 28 du Statut doit remplir les conditions suivantes : (i) définir avec précision les pièces demandées ; (ii) indiquer la pertinence desdites pièces par rapport à l'espèce ; (iii) établir que les efforts déployés pour obtenir celles-ci ont été infructueux[3].

4. La Chambre estime que la Défense de Nzirorera a dûment précisé la nature de la pièce visée. Par ailleurs, il ressort des écritures que les parties et les autorités rwandaises connaissent la pièce recherchée et que celle-ci existe ou a existé.

5. La Chambre est également convaincue que la pièce demandée est pertinente par rapport à l'espèce. Il est fait état, au paragraphe 25 (2) de l'acte d'accusation, du meeting organisé par le MRND au stade Umuganda en octobre 1993, et ce meeting a été au centre de deux dépositions à charge[4]. La Chambre relève que le témoin à charge XBM s'est référé à la vidéocassette en question dans sa déposition devant la présente Chambre[5] et a reconnu l'avoir vue. La Chambre conclut donc que tout enregistrement de ce qui s'est réellement passé durant ce meeting est pertinent par rapport à l'espèce.

6. Enfin, la Chambre est convaincue que le Procureur et la Défense ont déployé des efforts pour obtenir cette vidéocassette par d'autres moyens, mais sans résultat à ce jour[6]. La Chambre fait observer que les premiers efforts déployés pour obtenir cette pièce remontent à mai 2006, mais qu'à ce jour, celle-ci n'a pas été obtenue.

[5] Compte rendu de l'audience du 4 juillet 2006, p. 11.

[6] En ce qui concerne les efforts déployés par la Défense, la Chambre prend acte de la correspondance suivante échangée entre Nzirorera et les autorités rwandaises et annexée à la requête de la Défense tendant à obtenir une copie de la vidéocassette : (1) Lettre datée du 10 août 2006 adressée par M[e] Peter Robinson au Procureur général de la République rwandaise, Martin Ngoga ; (2) Courriel daté du 7 novembre 2006 adressé par M[e] Peter Robinson à l'adjoint de M. Ngoga. Elle note également que M[e] Robinson affirme avoir rencontré le Procureur général de la République rwandaise, Martin Ngoga, à Kigali le 11

7. La Chambre estime que la Défense a rempli toutes les conditions requises pour solliciter la coopération du Gouvernement rwandais en application de l'article 28 du Statut, et qu'il est dans l'intérêt de la justice de faire une telle demande. Enfin, le Procureur ayant fait valoir que des efforts avaient été déployés de bonne foi tant par le Bureau du Procureur que par les autorités rwandaises pour obtenir la vidéocassette visée mais qu'ils étaient demeurés vains, sans que les autorités rwandaises aient fait preuve de réticence ou refusé de coopérer, la Chambre relève qu'une demande officielle de la Chambre sollicitant la coopération du Gouvernement rwandais à l'effet d'obtenir une copie de ladite vidéocassette n'implique pas que celui-ci ait fait montre de mauvaise foi. La Chambre considère simplement qu'une telle demande officielle pourrait accélérer le cours des choses.

ACCUEILLE la Requête de la Défense ;

PRIE le Gouvernement rwandais, en application de l'article 28 du Statut du Tribunal, de déposer dans les meilleurs délais auprès du Greffe, pour communication à la Défense, une copie de la vidéocassette des meetings organisés par le MRND à Gisenyi, vidéocassette dont il aurait été fait état au procès du Président du MRND, Wellars Banyi, à Gisenyi (le jugement de cette affaire portant le n°RP221/R/2000 aurait été prononcé le 21 février 2001). Au cas où les autorités rwandaises ne seraient pas en mesure de donner suite à la demande de la Chambre, elles sont priées d'en informer le Greffe de manière circonstanciée d'ici au 31 janvier 2007 ;

CHARGE le Greffe de transmettre la présente demande de coopération aux autorités compétentes du Gouvernement rwandais ;

INVITE le Greffier à communiquer à toutes les parties à l'instance et à déposer auprès de la Chambre une copie de la vidéocassette aussitôt qu'elle aura été reçue.

Fait à Arusha, le 14 décembre 2006.

octobre 2006 et lui avoir à nouveau demandé une copie de la vidéocassette en question, à quoi il lui avait été répondu qu'elle lui serait remise une semaine plus tard. Mais lorsqu'il était passé pour la prendre, on lui avait dit qu'elle n'était pas prête.
En ce qui concerne les efforts déployés par le Procureur, la Chambre accepte les arguments du Procureur. Selon celui-ci, une première demande en vue d'obtenir la vidéocassette susvisée avait été déposée le 31 mai 2006, une autre le 14 juin 2006 ; les enquêteurs du Procureur à Kigali avaient rapporté qu'ils avaient rencontré M. Emmanuel Rukangira en personne au Bureau du Procureur de Kigali et que celui-ci s'était engagé à mettre la vidéocassette à leur disposition dès qu'elle aurait été trouvée ; la même demande avait été faite directement au Procureur général de la République, Martin Ngoga, lequel avait confirmé que ladite vidéocassette avait été adressée au Parquet général de Kigali et qu'il s'employait à la retrouver ; le Procureur avait depuis lors envoyé des rappels aux autorités rwandaises, dont certains étaient annexés à la réponse du Procureur (courriel daté du 24 novembre 2006). Dans le courriel qu'il a envoyé au Procureur le 24 novembre, un certain Mohammed Ayat écrit ce qui suit : « Il semblerait que la vidéocassette se trouve au cabinet de M. Emmanuel Rukangira (Emmanuel Rukangira est Procureur à compétence nationale). Malheureusement, M. Rukangira est actuellement en mission à l'étranger. Selon le Procureur général de la République adjoint, les autorités rwandaises acceptent de continuer à chercher la pièce requise pour la remettre à la Défense, au cas où elles la trouveraient » [traduction].

Introduction

1. Dans la présente affaire, le procès a commencé le 19 septembre 2005. Au cours de la quatrième session de la présentation des moyens à charge, la Défense de Nzirorera a demandé à la Chambre d'interdire, avec effet immédiat, que le Procureur procède à la préparation de ses témoins avant qu'ils ne déposent[1]. Elle a invoqué à l'appui de sa requête une décision rendue par la Chambre préliminaire I de la Cour pénale internationale (la « CPI ») dans l'affaire Dyilo et a invité la Chambre à appliquer les mêmes règles que celles qui sont en vigueur à la CPI[2]. La Défense de Ngirumpatse s'associe à cette requête tandis que le Procureur s'y oppose[3].

Délibération

2. Pour statuer sur les requêtes de la Défense, la Chambre commencera par analyser la décision de la CPI (1), puis elle abordera les usages en vigueur dans les Tribunaux ad hoc (2) et enfin elle examinera la pratique adoptée par le Procureur en l'espèce (3).

1. Analyse de la décision Dyilo

3. Le 8 novembre 2006, la Chambre préliminaire de la CPI susvisée s'est prononcée sur la question de savoir si la préparation de témoins à la déposition, telle que le Procureur de la Cour l'avait décrite dans l'affaire Dyilo, était une pratique admissible dans les procès intentés devant la CPI. Pour ce faire, elle s'est appuyée sur le droit applicable énoncé à l'article 21 du Statut de la CPI[4].

4. La Chambre préliminaire a scindé la notion de préparation de témoins, telle que le Procureur de la CPI l'avait décrite, en deux volets caractérisés par un certain nombre de buts et de mesures. Elle a défini le premier volet, dénommé « familiarisation du témoin », comme

[2] Cour pénale internationale, Le Procureur c. Thomas Lubanga Dyilo, affaire n°ICC-01/04-01/06, Décision relative à la préparation des témoins avant qu'ils ne déposent devant la Cour (witness familiarisation and proofing) (Chambre préliminaire), 8 novembre 2006, (la « décision Dyilo »).
[3] Voir la requête de Ngirumpatse déposée le 17 novembre 2006, les réponses du Procureur déposées les 16 et 20 novembre 2006, la réplique de Nzirorera déposée le 20 novembre 2006 et la réplique de Ngirumpatse déposée le 24 novembre 2006. La Défense de Nzirorera a aussi demandé oralement à la Chambre de prendre des mesures conservatoires tendant à interdire le récolement des témoins jusqu'à ce qu'elle rende sa décision. La Chambre a rejeté cette demande, mais elle a réduit le délai imparti au Procureur pour déposer sa réponse (voir le compte rendu de l'audience du 14 novembre 2006).
[4] Décision Dyilo, par. 7 à 9, et Statut de la CPI, article 21 (Droit applicable) :
1. La Cour applique :
a) En premier lieu, le présent Statut et le Règlement de procédure et de preuve;
b) En second lieu, selon qu'il convient, les traités applicables et les principes et règles du droit international, y compris les principes établis du droit international des conflits armés;
c) À défaut, les principes généraux du droit dégagés par la Cour à partir des lois nationales représentant les différents systèmes juridiques du monde, y compris, selon qu'il convient, les lois nationales des États sous la juridiction desquels tomberait normalement le crime, si ces principes ne sont pas incompatibles avec le présent Statut ni avec le droit international et les règles et normes internationales reconnues.
2. La Cour peut appliquer les principes et règles de droit tels qu'elle les a interprétés dans ses décisions antérieures.
3. L'application et l'interprétation du droit prévues au présent article doivent être compatibles avec les droits de l'homme internationalement reconnus et exemptes de toute discrimination fondée sur des considérations telles que l'appartenance à l'un ou l'autre sexe tel que défini à l'article 7, paragraphe 3, l'âge, la race, la couleur, la langue, la religion ou la conviction, les opinions politiques ou autres, l'origine nationale, ethnique ou sociale, la fortune, la naissance ou toute autre qualité.

Elle a estimé que le Statut de la CPI[6] non seulement autorisait ce premier volet, mais aussi l'imposait. De plus, selon elle, « l'Unité d'aide aux victimes et aux témoins est l'organe de la Cour compétent pour procéder, en consultation avec la partie se proposant de citer le témoin concerné, à la familiarisation des témoins à leur arrivée au siège de la Cour pour déposer[7]».

5. La Chambre préliminaire a défini le second volet de la notion de préparation de témoins à la déposition présentée par le Procureur de la CPI comme des mesures visant à passer en revue le récit du témoin, > « notamment : (i) en permettant au témoin de lire sa déclaration, (ii) en rafraîchissant sa mémoire concernant les éléments de preuve qu'il entend présenter à l'audience de confirmation des charges, et (iii) en posant au témoin exactement les mêmes questions que celles qui lui seront posées au cours de sa déposition, et ce, dans l'ordre dans lequel elles lui seront posées[8] ».

Elle a jugé que ce second volet n'était prévu par aucune disposition du Statut, du Règlement de procédure et de preuve ou du Règlement de la Cour[9]. Elle a également considéré que le Procureur de la CPI n'avait pas établi que les buts et les mesures caractérisant le second volet de la préparation de témoins à la déposition étaient largement reconnus en droit pénal international[10]. En outre, elle a relevé que le Procureur n'avait invoqué aucun précédent jurisprudentiel du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda (TPIR) autorisant la pratique de la préparation de témoins à la déposition telle qu'il l'avait décrite, et a estimé que la seule décision du Tribunal pénal international pour l'ex-Yougoslavie (TPIY) rendue dans l'affaire Limaj ne réglait pas en détail la question des composantes de la notion de préparation de témoins à la déposition[11]. Enfin, elle a estimé que le Procureur n'avait pas étayé son argument selon lequel la préparation de témoins à la déposition telle qu'il l'avait définie dans ses Observations, était est une particularité des procès intentés devant les organes judiciaires internationaux en raison de la nature particulière des crimes relevant de la compétence de ceux-ci[12].

6. En application de l'article 21 du Statut de la CPI, la Chambre préliminaire s'est ensuite employée à déterminer si le second volet de la définition pourrait s'inscrire dans le champ d'application des

[6] Décision Dyilo, par. 14 et 15. Le but et les mesures caractérisant ce premier volet sont énoncés comme suit :
Aider le témoin qui va déposer à bien comprendre comment fonctionne la Cour, qui sont les participants et quel est leur rôle, et ce, librement et sans crainte par l'adoption des mesures suivantes :
i. Offrir au témoin la possibilité de rencontrer le premier substitut du Procureur et tout membre de l'équipe de l'Accusation susceptible de l'interroger pendant l'audience;
ii. Familiariser le témoin avec la salle d'audience, les participants à la procédure portée devant la Cour et la procédure en question ;
iii. Rassurer le témoin s'agissant de son rôle dans la procédure ;
iv. Discuter avec le témoin des questions se rapportant à sa sécurité afin de déterminer s'il est nécessaire de demander la mise en œuvre de mesures de protection devant la Cour ;
v. Rappeler au témoin qu'il est légalement tenu de dire la vérité lors de sa déposition ;
vi. Expliquer la procédure régissant l'interrogatoire principal, le contre interrogatoire et l'interrogatoire supplémentaire.

incompatibles avec le […] Statut ni avec le droit international et les règles et normes internationales reconnues[13] ».

7. La Chambre préliminaire a fait observer que ce second volet serait contraire à la déontologie ou à la loi dans des pays aussi différents que le Brésil, l'Espagne, la France, la Belgique, l'Allemagne, l'Écosse, le Ghana, l'Angleterre, le pays de Galles et l'Australie, alors que dans d'autres pays, notamment aux États-Unis d'Amérique, la préparation de témoins à la déposition telle que la concevait le Procureur est bien acceptée, voire parfois considérée comme une bonne pratique professionnelle[14]. Elle a tout particulièrement souligné que le second volet de la notion, tel que le Procureur de la CPI l'avait décrit constituerait une violation flagrante des dispositions du code de déontologie du Conseil de l'ordre des avocats d'Angleterre et du pays de Galles que le Procureur s'était expressément engagé à respecter[15]. De ces circonstances, elle a tiré la conclusion suivante :

8. Selon la présente Chambre, le raisonnement par lequel la Chambre saisie de l'affaire Dyilo est parvenue à sa décision ne repose pas sur une connaissance approfondie des usages constants des Tribunaux ad hoc, lesquels se justifient par les particularités des affaires portées devant ces tribunaux qui les distinguent des affaires pénales nationales, comme la Chambre l'expliquera ci-après. Cette précision a été également apportée récemment dans l'affaire Milutinović et consorts où une Chambre de première instance du TPIY a rejeté une demande de la Défense tendant à la voir appliquer exactement les mêmes règles que celles qui avaient été énoncées dans la décision Dyilo[18].

2. Usages des Tribunaux ad hoc et droits de l'accusé

9. Le Tribunal de céans et le TPIY autorisent régulièrement les parties à s'entretenir avec les témoins avant leurs dépositions dans le cadre bien précis des affaires qui intéressent ces témoins pour assurer une meilleure administration de la justice, et veiller à ce que la Défense soit moins prise au dépourvu. Cette pratique cadre bien avec la conclusion de la Chambre d'appel qui a estimé que chaque partie avait le droit de s'entretenir avec un témoin potentiel[19].

10. Non seulement la familiarisation de témoins ne cause aucun préjudice injustifié, mais elle est utile et acceptable[20]. Comme l'a rappelé récemment la Chambre de première instance saisie de l'affaire Milutinoviæ, il n'y a aucune raison de réserver la familiarisation de témoins à la Section d'aide aux victimes et aux témoins du Tribunal[21].

11. Certes, la question n'a pas encore fait l'objet d'une décision spécifique au TPIR, mais la jurisprudence reconnaît la préparation de témoins lorsqu'elle traite des modalités de communication de la teneur d'un entretien accordé par un témoin. Le Procureur a pris l'habitude de communiquer à la Défense le résumé de la déposition que le témoin ferait ou ses « déclarations de confirmation » avant sa comparution. Contrairement aux affirmations de Mathieu Ngirumpatse, cette pratique est approuvée par la jurisprudence du Tribunal[22]. Dans l'affaire Simba, la Chambre de première instance I a défini le résumé préalable de la déposition du témoin comme > « une communication faite par une partie à l'autre et à la Chambre indiquant d'avance qu'un témoin déposera sur des questions qui n'étaient pas mentionnées dans les déclarations antérieures qui avaient été communiquées[23] ».

Les Chambres de première instance estiment que les résumés préalables des dépositions de témoin cadrent avec l'obligation mise à la charge du Procureur par l'article 67 (D) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement ») qui dispose que si l'une ou l'autre des parties découvre des éléments de preuve, informations ou documents supplémentaires qui auraient dû être produits plus tôt conformément au Règlement, elle en informe aussitôt l'autre partie et la Chambre de première instance[24]. En général, le résumé préalable de la déposition complète ou développe les informations déjà communiquées à la Défense, mais il peut également apporter des éléments nouveaux dont celle-ci n'avait pas connaissance. On ne peut accepter que le Procureur forge sa thèse au cours du procès, mais on doit reconnaître à tout témoin le droit de se remémorer des détails pour les ajouter à ses déclarations antérieures. Comme la Chambre de première instance I l'a précisé dans l'affaire Bagosora et consorts, > « […] des déclarations de témoins, qui ont vu et vécu des événements qui se sont déroulés sur de nombreux mois et sont susceptibles d'intéresser le Tribunal de céans, peuvent ne pas être complètes. En effet, certains témoins se sont bornés à répondre aux questions posées par les enquêteurs, qui s'intéressaient à d'autres personnes et non aux accusés ; ils ne leur ont donc pas donné spontanément tous les renseignements qu'ils détenaient[25] ».

13. La préparation de témoins à la déposition se fait aussi régulièrement au TPIY. Il ressort d'un panorama de certains procès qui se sont déroulés récemment devant le TPIY que la préparation de témoins, y compris le fait de les interroger sur des contradictions existant entre leurs déclarations antérieures, fait partie intégrante du procès[26]. Dans l'affaire Limaj et consorts, la Chambre de première

ATTENDU que l'Accusation a disposé d'un délai plus que suffisant pour effectuer tous les interrogatoires et procéder au récolement final de M. Nilolić, ainsi que pour communiquer à la Défense toute information nouvelle résultant de tels récolements avant sa citation à comparaître ; instance a rejeté une requête de la Défense tendant à faire ordonner au Procureur de cesser immédiatement de procéder au « récolement » des témoins[27]. Elle a relevé que les deux parties procédaient au récolement de témoins et que cette pratique était admise depuis la création du Tribunal. Elle a également relevé qu'il s'agissait « d'une pratique largement répandue dans les systèmes de droit où la procédure est accusatoire ». Enfin, elle a estimé que le récolement de témoins présentait un certain nombre d'avantages permettant d'assurer le bon fonctionnement de la justice.

14. Récemment, la Chambre de première instance saisie de l'affaire Milutinoviæ et consorts a réaffirmé que

Elle a estimé que la

> « voie suivie par la Chambre saisie de l'affaire Dyilo pour parvenir à sa décision ne pouvait être adoptée pour statuer sur la question[29] portée devant elle » [traduction].

Vu la situation du TPIY, qui à son avis est radicalement différente des circonstances de l'affaire Dyilo[30], elle a conclu que > « le fait de passer en revue le récit d'un témoin avant que celui-ci ne comparaisse est une pratique non seulement autorisée par le droit applicable au Tribunal, mais aussi qui ne porte pas en soi atteinte aux droits de l'accusé[31] » [traduction].

15. Dans ces circonstances, la présente Chambre est convaincue que la préparation de témoins à la déposition est une pratique qui existe déjà et est approuvée par les deux Tribunaux ad hoc. Cette pratique peut consister à préparer le témoin et à le familiariser avec le déroulement du procès devant le Tribunal, à comparer ses déclarations antérieures, à relever les divergences et les incohérences existant dans ses souvenirs, à lui rafraîchir la mémoire au sujet du récit qu'il fera et à rechercher des informations et /ou des éléments de preuve à charge ou à décharge supplémentaires pour les communiquer à la Défense en temps utile avant la comparution du témoin, à condition de ne pas donner lieu à la manipulation du récit du témoin. Il est également admis que « non seulement la familiarisation du témoin ne cause aucun préjudice injustifié mais elle est utile et acceptable[32] » [traduction].

« ne pas donner sciemment au Tribunal une version inexacte des faits pertinents ni présenter des moyens de preuve dont ils savent qu'ils sont fallacieux[33] ».

17. Le fait de passer en revue le récit d'un témoin avant sa comparution cadre avec les particularités des procès intentés devant les Tribunaux ad hoc et peut contribuer à une bonne administration de la justice dans différentes circonstances : les crimes retenus dans l'acte d'accusation ont été commis il y a des années et, dans de nombreux cas, les entrevues accordées par les témoins ont eu lieu il y a longtemps ; il est peut-être nécessaire de revoir, à la lumière des moyens de preuve que le Procureur entend produire, certains points qui présentaient un intérêt lors des enquêtes ; l'enquêteur du Bureau du Procureur et le substitut du Procureur qui interrogera le témoin à l'audience ne voient peut-être pas les choses de la même façon ; la durée de la procédure et le temps qui s'est écoulé entre les témoignages antérieurs imposent peut-être l'obligation d'avoir de nouveaux entretiens avec le témoin avant que celui-ci ne comparaisse, pour faire en sorte que la Défense soit moins prise au dépourvu dans les cas où le témoin se souvient de certains éléments d'information qui n'ont pas été communiqués[34].

18. Cet effet positif de l'entretien qu'une partie peut avoir avec un témoin avant sa déposition a été même reconnu par la Défense en l'espèce. La Défense de Nzirorera a demandé à plusieurs reprises l'autorisation de s'entretenir avec des témoins à charge pour mieux préparer le contre-interrogatoire de ceux-ci et accélérer la procédure[35]. Comme exemple récent, elle s'est entretenue avec le témoin à charge GK quelques semaines avant sa comparution, lorsque celui-ci est arrivé au Tribunal pour y déposer et l'a interrogé sur certaines divergences existant entre sa dernière version des faits et sa déposition dans une autre affaire ainsi qu'une déclaration antérieure[36]. Le témoin a eu l'occasion de faire la lumière sur ces divergences.

19. Dans sa requête, la Défense affirme que le récolement de témoins pratiqué par le Procureur en l'espèce a engendré de nombreux problèmes en ce qu'il a entraîné des communications tardives de pièces et l'admission d'éléments de preuve tendant à établir des faits qui n'avaient pas été annoncés dans l'acte d'accusation.

20. La Chambre n'est pas convaincue que le fait de passer en revue un témoignage avant la comparution du témoin contribue nécessairement à présenter des éléments de preuve sur des points absents de l'acte d'accusation. De toute façon, si un témoin se souvient de certains détails et les ajoute à ses déclarations antérieures lors de l'examen de son récit, plusieurs mesures de réparation peuvent être prises. Par exemple, on peut accorder à la Défense un temps de préparation supplémentaire, ou, s'il y a lieu, exclure l'élément de preuve concerné[37]. La Chambre déterminera, au cas par cas, la mesure appropriée en tenant compte des droits des accusés, notamment du droit d'être jugé sans retard excessif. Cependant, elle estime que le Procureur devrait, dès que possible, porter à la connaissance de la Défense toute information supplémentaire que le témoin pourrait fournir pendant sa déposition[38].

3. Préparation de témoins dans la présente affaire

21. La Défense de Ngirumpatse soutient qu'en l'espèce, les témoins sont en fait préparés pour venir réciter devant la Chambre la leçon qu'ils ont apprise du Procureur en guise de déposition. À son avis, la préparation de témoins est une forme de subornation de témoins et un moyen de forger des éléments de preuve à charge. Le Procureur > « réfute formellement tout argument tendant à soutenir ou à insinuer que l'entretien préalable au procès sert à entraîner, instruire et suborner le témoin ou de toute autre manière à forger les éléments de preuve à charge » [traduction].

22. La Défense peut mettre en doute et attaquer la manière dont le Procureur prépare ses témoins avant leurs dépositions, mais les allégations de subornation de témoins portées par la Défense de Ngirumpatse sont graves et il est à tout le moins discourtois de les avancer sans présenter le moindre élément de preuve pour les étayer ou les justifier. En fait, la Chambre relève que plusieurs témoins ont été contre-interrogés sur la façon dont s'était déroulé leur entretien préalable au procès avec le Procureur, et il n'existe aucun élément de preuve permettant d'étayer ces allégations. Il n'est cependant pas nécessaire de supprimer les conclusions de Ngirumpatse des dossiers du Tribunal comme le demande le Procureur[39].

23. Comme l'a déclaré la Chambre préliminaire de la CPI, l'expression « préparation de témoins » peut recouvrir diverses pratiques qui ne sont pas nécessairement contraires au droit[40]. Ni la Défense ni le Procureur n'ont expliqué d'une manière circonstanciée comment le Procureur prépare les témoins à charge avant de les appeler à la barre dans la présente affaire. Il ressort des résumés préalables de dépositions de témoins communiqués et des notifications faites en application de l'article 67 (D) du Règlement dans la présente affaire que le Procureur a coutume de comparer les déclarations faites par le témoin, de relever les divergences et les incohérences existant dans ses souvenirs, de lui rafraîchir la mémoire au sujet du récit qu'il fera et de rechercher des informations et/ou des éléments de preuve à charge ou à décharge supplémentaires pour les communiquer à la Défense en temps utile avant la comparution du témoin[41]. La Défense n'a pas établi que le Procureur posait au témoin exactement les mêmes questions qui lui seront posées lors de sa comparution. Les pièces communiquées ne portent pas non plus à le croire.

24. Le Procureur est présumé s'acquitter de ses obligations de bonne foi[42] et dans le respect des règles déontologiques. La Défense n'ayant pas prouvé le contraire, la Chambre n'est pas convaincue qu'une quelconque des entrevues qui ont eu lieu avant la déposition des témoins ne s'était pas déroulée conformément à la pratique constante.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE REJETTE les requêtes de la Défense.

Introduction

1. En l'espèce, le procès s'est ouvert le 19 septembre 2005. Pendant la troisième session d'audiences, la Défense de chacun des accusés et le Procureur ont demandé l'autorisation de citer Joseph Serugendo comme témoin à l'appui de leurs thèses respectives[1]. La Chambre ne s'est pas prononcée sur ces requêtes. À l'époque, l'état de santé de Serugendo était très préoccupant et on se demandait sérieusement s'il était en mesure de déposer et même s'il était réaliste d'envisager sa comparution[2]. Le Greffier avait déjà produit un rapport médical[3], mais estimant qu'elle avait besoin de plus amples informations pour statuer sur les requêtes des parties, la Chambre a demandé au Greffier d'informer les parties et elles-mêmes de l'état de santé le plus récent de M. Serugendo et de leur dire si celui-ci était physiquement et psychologiquement en mesure de comparaître, y compris par vidéoconférence, ou de faire une déposition hors audience[4].

2. Le 26 juin 2006, le Greffier a informé la Chambre que le médecin du Tribunal avait conclu que M. Serugendo n'était pas en mesure de subir un interrogatoire, que ce soit au prétoire ou dans le cadre d'une déposition hors audience[5]. Au dernier jour de la troisième session du procès, après que les parties eurent réitéré leurs demandes, la Chambre a fait observer qu'à en croire les plus récentes informations actualisées fournies par le Greffier, l'état de santé de M. Serugendo ne s'était pas amélioré[6]. Dans ces circonstances, elle a estimé qu'elle ne pouvait prescrire aucune mesure à ce moment[7]. Le 22 août 2006, Joseph Serugendo a succombé à sa maladie.

3. Le Procureur demande maintenant à la Chambre d'admettre une « déclaration abrégée » (la « déclaration abrégée ») de Joseph Serugendo en application de l'article 89 (C) ou de l'article 92 bis du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »)[8]. Le 27 juin 2006, le représentant du Procureur, accompagné d'un officier instrumentaire nommé par le Greffier, s'est entretenu avec M. Serugendo qui a vérifié à cette occasion la teneur de sa première déclaration et passé en revue la déclaration abrégée. Celle-ci est un texte bilingue de 40 pages[9], composé de passages de la déclaration initiale de Joseph Serugendo communiquée aux parties le 12 juin 2006[10].

Question préliminaire : la liste de témoins

4. Le 30 mai 2006, le Procureur a déclaré qu'il avait l'intention de former une requête aux fins de modification de sa liste de témoins pour y inclure M. Serugendo. Dans une décision rendue oralement le même jour, la Chambre a ordonné que toute requête visant à l'ajouter à la liste de témoins soit formée immédiatement[11]. Le 13 juin 2006, ayant appris que M. Serugendo était atteint d'une maladie incurable, la Défense de Nzirorera a exprimé le souhait de le citer comme témoin[12]. Le 19 juin 2006, elle a demandé par requête l'autorisation de l'appeler à la barre comme témoin à décharge sans respecter l'ordre réglementaire de présentation des moyens de preuve[13]. Interrogé par la Chambre, à ce sujet, le Procureur a admis qu'à cause de son état de santé et de la qualité que pourrait présenter sa déposition, la décision de citer M. Serugendo comme témoin à charge n'avait pas encore été prise[14]. Le 20 juin 2006, le Procureur a demandé oralement l'autorisation d'ajouter M. Serugendo à sa liste de témoins. La Chambre a décidé de surseoir à statuer jusqu'à ce que le Greffier lui fournisse de plus amples informations sur l'état de santé de M. Serugendo[15]. La Défense de Nzirorera ne s'est pas opposée à la requête et a demandé qu'elle soit accueillie[16].

5. Puisque les deux parties s'accordaient à dire que M. Serugendo devait déposer et que la requête finalement formée par le Procureur aux fins d'obtenir l'autorisation de l'ajouter à sa liste de témoins n'était pas contestée, la Chambre estime que cette question ne doit pas l'empêcher d'apprécier intégralement la requête sur laquelle elle statue à présent.

Admission en application de l'article 92 bis du Règlement

7. Les trois accusés s'opposent à la requête, au motif qu'ils ne pourront pas contre-interroger le témoin sur des questions qui les touchent de très près et que l'admission de la déclaration serait dès lors injuste. Plus précisément, la Défense relève des paragraphes précis de la déclaration abrégée qui portent sur les actes et le comportement des accusés, rendant ainsi la déclaration inadmissible en application de l'article 92 bis du Règlement.

8. L'article 92 bis du Règlement dispose qu'une déclaration de témoin peut être admise en lieu et place d'un témoignage oral si les conditions prévues par l'article sont réunies[17]. La première condition est que cet élément de preuve permette de démontrer un point autre que les actes et le comportement de l'accusé[18]. Autrement dit, il ne doit pas s'agir d'une déclaration écrite sur laquelle le Procureur se fonde pour établir (a) que l'accusé a personnellement commis l'un quelconque des crimes qui lui sont reprochés (c'est-à-dire qu'il en est l'auteur matériel), (b) qu'il a planifié, incité à commettre ou ordonné les crimes en question, (c) qu'il a de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé les auteurs matériels de ces crimes à les planifier, les préparer ou les exécuter, (d) qu'il était le supérieur hiérarchique des auteurs matériels de ces crimes, (e) qu'il savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que ses subordonnés s'apprêtaient à commettre ces crimes ou l'avaient fait, ou (f) qu'il n'a pas pris de mesures raisonnables pour empêcher que les actes incriminés ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs[19].

9. Le Procureur souligne que la déclaration abrégée traite de quatre questions fondamentales, à savoir la RTLM en tant qu'organe de communication du MRND, la structure du mouvement Interahamwe za MRND, le rôle du MRND dans le Gouvernement intérimaire et la tournée de « pacification » du 10 avril 1994, et que les accusés n'y sont pas mentionnés nommément. Ces précisions sont exactes, mais il ressort d'une lecture attentive de la déclaration abrégée que les actes et le comportement des accusés y sont souvent évoqués. Du début à la fin de la déclaration abrégée, les accusés sont implicitement désignés par différentes expressions telles que « certaines personnalités du gouvernement et du parti MRND[20] », « la hiérarchie [du MRND][21] », « les autorités du parti MRND[22] », « les hautes autorités du parti MRND[23] » et « le Gouvernement Intérimaire[24] ». Il n'est pas nécessaire qu'un accusé soit explicitement nommé pour qu'on considère qu'une déclaration se rapporte à ses actes et son comportement[25]. En l'espèce, le Procureur dit que les accusés ont commis les crimes qui leur sont imputés

La Chambre juge que ces expressions, qui se retrouvent dans chacune des quatre sections fondamentales de la déclaration de M. Serugendo, se rapportent effectivement aux actes et au comportement des accusés.

10. Puisque la déclaration abrégée contient des éléments de preuve qui se rapportent aux actes et au comportement des accusés, l'une des conditions essentielles d'admission prévues par l'article 92 bis du Règlement n'a pas été remplie.

Introduction

1. Le procès en l'espèce s'est ouvert le 19 septembre 2005. Le 30 mai 2005, durant le contre-interrogatoire du témoin à charge T, la Défense de Nzirorera ademandé à la Chambre d'admettre en preuve les quatre documents suivants : discours du Ministre Eliezer Niyitegeka du 9 avril 1994 ; communiqué du Ministère de l'intérieur daté du 10 mai 1994 ; discours du ministre Eliezer Niyitegeka du 30 avril 1994 ; et, discours du Ministre de la Justice du 17 mai 1994[1]. Ces documents n'étaient disponibles qu'en kinyarwanda. Le Procureur s'est opposé à l'admission du premier document dont il contestait la pertinence pour le contre-interrogatoire du témoin[2]. A ce stade, la Chambre n'a pas pu se prononcer sur l'admission des discours proposés par la Défense de Nzirorera, parce qu'ils n'étaient disponibles qu'en kinyarwanda[3]. Elle a donc sursis à statuer, ordonné que des cotes de référence leur soient attribuées pour identification et demandé au Greffier de faire en sorte qu'ils soient traduits. Les discours sont maintenant traduits. La Chambre est en mesure de statuer sur leur admission[4].

Discussion

2. Selon l'article 89 (C) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve, la Chambre de première instance peut recevoir tout élément de preuve pertinent dont elle estime qu'il a valeur probante. Comme la Chambre d'appel l'a souligné à maintes reprises « il ne faut pas confondre admissibilité d'un élément de preuve et appréciation de la valeur qu'il convient de lui accorder »[5]. 3. Après examen des documents dont l'admission est sollicitée et de la déposition du témoin T, la Chambre est convaincue de la pertinence de ces documents s'agissant de la question des efforts fournis pour arrêter les massacres, au sujet de laquelle le témoin T a déposé. Introduction

1. Le procès en l'espèce s'est ouvert le 19 septembre 2005. Le Procureur a cité, comme premier témoin, Ahmed Napoléon Mbonyunkiza, qui a déposé du 20 septembre 2005 au 28 octobre 2005. Le 14 octobre 2005, alors que la Chambre entendait le témoin à charge G, censé contredire le témoignage de Mbonyunkiza, la Défense de Nzirorera a oralement formé une requête priant la Chambre d'ordonner l'ouverture d'une enquête contre le témoin Mbonyunkiza pour faux témoignage[1]. La Chambre a rejeté cette requête au motif qu'elle était prématurée et qu'il était impossible d'ouvrir une enquête chaque fois qu'il y avait des dépositions contradictoires[2]. Le 1er mars 2006, durant le contre-interrogatoire du témoin UB, la Défense de Nzirorera a réitéré sa demande[3]. La Chambre a réservé sa décision[4]. Après avoir entendu tous les témoins à charge qui ont déposé sur les mêmes questions, la Défense de Nzirorera, appuyée par celle de Ngirumpatse, a de nouveau demandé qu'une enquête soit ouverte contre le témoin Mbonyunkiza pour faux témoignage[5].

Délibération

2. En vertu de l'article 91 (B) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »), la Défense de Nzirorera demande qu'un amicus curiae soit désigné pour instruire l'allégation de faux témoignage de Mbonyunkiza, dont certaines déclarations ont été contredites par d'autres témoins à charge et le seront par des témoins à décharge. Elle fait valoir que les témoins à charge G, UB et T ont contredit la déclaration du témoin Mbonyunkiza, dans laquelle il affirme que Ngirumpatse a pris la parole au cours des réunions qui se tenaient tous les mercredis en février 1992 et qu'il a prôné l'élimination des Tutsis ; que les témoins G et T ont aussi contredit l'allégation de Mbonyunkiza selon laquelle c'était Bikindi qui, pendant ces réunions, entonnait une chanson sur l'élimination des Tutsis, que Gaspard Uwizigara participait à ces réunions et que des haches auraient été exhibées et distribuées au cours de ces mêmes réunions. La Défense affirme aussi que le témoin à charge UB a nié que les Interahamwe aient utilisé des haches à ce moment. Se joignant à la requête, la Défense de Ngirumpatse allègue que le témoin Mbonyunkiza a menti sur d'autres faits, dont ceux disant notamment que Ngirumpatse serait l'auteur d'un livre de grammaire ; que des réunions se seraient tenues tous les mercredis et que des listes de présence auraient été dressées. Le 2 novembre 2006, pendant que le témoin à charge ALG déposait, la Défense de Nzirorera a demandé à la Chambre de considérer sa déposition comme un élément supplémentaire à l'appui de sa requête demandant l'ouverture d'une enquête[6].

3. La Défense affirme que les conditions prévues à l'article 91 (B) du Règlement pour qu'une enquête soit menée pour faux témoignage sont réunies. À l'appui de sa requête, elle invoque une décision rendue oralement par la Chambre d'appel en l'affaire Kamuhanda et ordonnant une enquête pour faux témoignage, alors qu'il y avait bien moins d'éléments de preuve que contre le témoin Mbonyunkiza.

4. S'opposant à la requête, le Procureur affirme que des contradictions apparentes ne signifient pas automatiquement qu'un témoin a délibérément fait un faux témoignage[7].

5. Aux termes de l'article 91 (B) du Règlement, la Chambre dispose d'un pouvoir d'appréciation lui permettant, si elle a de bonnes raisons de croire qu'un témoin a sciemment et volontairement fait un faux témoignage,

> (i) de demander au Procureur d'examiner l'affaire en vue de préparer et de soumettre un acte d'accusation pour faux témoignage ;
> (ii) si elle estime que le Procureur a un conflit d'intérêts pour ce qui est du comportement en cause, d'enjoindre au Greffier de désigner un amicus curiae qui instruira l'affaire et indiquera à la Chambre s'il existe des motifs suffisants pour engager une procédure pour faux témoignage.

6. Selon la Chambre de première instance en l'affaire Akayesu, les éléments constitutifs du faux témoignage[8] sont les suivants : (a) le témoin doit avoir fait une déclaration solennelle ; (b) le faux témoignage doit être contraire à la déclaration solennelle ; (c) le témoin doit croire, au moment où il fait sa déclaration, qu'elle est fausse ; (d) il doit exister une relation significative entre la déclaration et un élément matériel de la cause. La déclaration mensongère doit aussi avoir été faite dans l'intention de tromper le juge et de nuire ; il appartient à la partie requérante de prouver (a) que la déclaration du témoin était mensongère ; (b) que celle-ci a été faite dans l'intention de nuire ou tout au moins que le témoin avait pleinement conscience de sa fausseté ; (c) que celle-ci pouvait influer sur la décision du juge[9].

8. La Chambre relève qu'en l'affaire Kamuhanda citée par la Défense, la Chambre d'appel a non seulement « noté des différences notables dans les dépositions […] faites par les témoins qui, en fait, doivent être considérées comme de faux témoignages, » mais elle a aussi « eu des raisons de croire qu'il se pourrait qu'il y ait eu des tentatives […] d'entraver le cours de la justice en raison de sollicitations de faux témoignage[12] ». Il existait donc, dans cette affaire, des circonstances particulières autorisant la Chambre d'appel à ordonner au Procureur d'ouvrir des poursuites pour faux témoignage contre un témoin[13].

9. La Défense allègue en l'espèce que les déclarations du témoin Mbonyunkiza ont été contredites par d'autres témoins à charge et qu'elles seront aussi contredites par des témoins à décharge. Elle ne fournit aucun détail sur le contenu des éléments de preuve qui seront apportés par ces témoins à décharge potentiels, ni ne rapporte la preuve qu'en faisant ce faux témoignage, le témoin Mbonyunkiza avait l'intention de nuire. Comme nous l'avons déjà souligné, de simples contradictions ou divergences entre les dépositions des différents témoins ne constituent pas, en soi, une raison suffisante pour conclure qu'un témoin a sciemment et délibérément fait un faux témoignage. La Défense n'a pas non plus démontré que les conditions fixées par le Règlement pour ordonner une enquête pour faux témoignage étaient réunies.

10. Par ailleurs, le fait que le Tribunal clôturera ses activités à une certaine date et risque de ne pas être en mesure de poursuivre des témoins pour faux témoignage, comme le prétend la Défense, ne constitue pas un motif valable pour ordonner une enquête s'il n'y a pas de raisons suffisantes de croire qu'un témoin a sciemment et délibérément fait un faux témoignage. La Chambre n'accepte pas non plus l'argument de la Défense selon lequel elle devrait ordonner une enquête pour faux témoignage en l'espèce dans le but de décourager les faux témoignages en général, alors qu'aucune raison valable ne permet de croire à l'existence d'une quelconque intention de nuire de la part du témoin visé. En outre, la Chambre d'appel a déjà indiqué très clairement aux témoins potentiels que le Tribunal ne tolérerait pas de faux témoignages à l'audience ni de tentatives d'influencer d'autres témoins qui pourraient comparaître devant lui[14].

11. En tout état de cause, toutes les incohérences alléguées dans le témoignage de Mbonyunkiza seront examinées ultérieurement par la Chambre au moment de l'appréciation de tous les éléments de preuve présentés par chaque partie en l'espèce. Statuer sur l'allégation de témoignages contradictoires à ce stade de la procédure reviendrait à préjuger du fond de la question à l'examen et serait donc prématuré.

REJETTE la requête de la Défense dans son intégralité.

Fait à Arusha, 29 décembre 2006.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Judge Erik Møse, designated by the Trial Chamber, pursuant to Rule 73 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules");

BEING SEIZED OF the Defence "Requête de la Défense aux fins d'une ordonnance de mesures de protection des témoins à décharge", filed on 1 February 2006;

NOTING that the Prosecution has made no submissions;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. This motion for special measures protecting the identity of witnesses to be called on behalf of the Defence for Karera is brought under Articles 19 and 21 of the Statute and Rules 69 and 75 of the Rules. Pursuant to Article 19 of the Statute, the Tribunal must conduct the proceedings with due regard for the protection of victims and witnesses. Article 21 obliges the Tribunal to provide in its Rules for the protection of victims and witnesses. Such protection measures shall include, but shall not be limited to, the conduct of in-camera proceedings and the protection of the victim's identity. Rule 75 of the Rules elaborates several specific witness protection measures that may be ordered, including sealing or expunging names and other identifying information that may otherwise appear in the Tribunal's public records, assignment of a pseudonym to a witness, and permitting witness testimony in closed session. Subject to these measures, Rule 69 (C) requires the identity of witnesses to be disclosed to the Prosecution in adequate time for preparation.

2. Measures for the protection of witnesses are granted on a case by case basis. The jurisprudence of this Tribunal and of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia requires that the witnesses for whom protective measures are sought must have a real fear for the safety of the witness or her or his family, and there must be an objective justification for this fear. These fears may be expressed by persons other than the witnesses themselves. A further consideration is trial fairness, which favours similar or identical protection measures for Defence and Prosecution witnesses.[1]

3. The Defence for Karera has submitted that Defence witnesses do fear for their safety and that these fears are justified by the dangers and insecurities described in the reports attached as annexes to the Prosecution's Motion for Protective Measures for Victims and Witnesses to Crimes Alleged in the Indictment", filed on 24 November 2005. The Chamber follows previous decisions regarding protection for Defence witnesses and accepts the existence of these fears amongst Defence witnesses, and their objective justification.[2] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber finds that the conditions for ordering witness protection measures are satisfied.

4. The measures sought by the Defence for Karera are substantially identical to those previously ordered in respect of Prosecution witnesses in the present case. The interests of trial fairness and administrative simplicity strongly favour the adoption of identical measures, which are enumerated below in language customarily adopted in such orders.[3]

5. In particular, the Defence for Karera has requested that the Chamber order measures to protect the identity of Defence Witnesses KBA, BBM, YMK, YCK, BBA, KBG, wherever they reside and who have not affirmatively waived their right to protective measures. In conformity with established practice, the Chamber makes a general order. The Defence shall disclose unredacted information to the Prosecution thirty-five days prior to the commencement of the Defence case.

6. The request that the Prosecution provide the Defence with a list of all persons within the Office of the Prosecutor who shall have access to the protected information is denied. The Prosecutor is, of course, bound to ensure that confidential information is not disclosed by his Office to other persons; but the mechanism to prevent such disclosure, and the range of persons within his Office who have such access, rests within his sole discretion.[4]

HEREBY ORDERS that:

2. The names, addresses, whereabouts, and other identifying information concerning the protected witnesses shall be sealed by the Registry and not included in any public or non-confidential Tribunal records, or otherwise disclosed to the public.

3. In cases where the names, addresses, relations, whereabouts and other identifying information of the protected witnesses appear in the Tribunal's public records, this information shall be expunged from the said records and placed under seal.

4. The names and identities of the protected witnesses shall be forwarded by the Defence for Karera to the Registry in confidence, and they shall not be disclosed to the Prosecution unless otherwise ordered.

5. No person shall make audio or video recordings or broadcastings and shall not take photographs or make sketches of the protected witnesses, without leave of the Chamber or the witness.

6. The Prosecution and any representative acting on its behalf, shall notify the Defence for Karera in writing prior to any contact with any of its witnesses and, if the witness consents, the Defence for Karera shall facilitate such contact.

7. The Prosecution shall keep confidential to itself all information identifying any witness subject to this order, and shall not, directly or indirectly, disclose, discuss or reveal any such information.

8. The Defence for Karera may withhold disclosure to the Prosecution of the identity of the protected witnesses and temporarily redact their names, addresses, locations and other identifying information from material disclosed to the Prosecution. However, such information shall be disclosed by the Defence to the Prosecution thirty-five days prior to commencement of the Defence case, in order to allow adequate time for the preparation of the Prosecution pursuant to Rule 69 (C) of the Rules.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov, and Judge Florence Rita Arrey;

BEING SEIZED OF the Prosecution "Motion for Further and Better Alibi Particulars", filed on 23 January 2006; and the Corrigendum thereto, filed on 24 January 2006;

CONSIDERING the Defence Response, filed on 30 January 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Defence has notified the Prosecution of its intent to enter an alibi defence, describing the whereabouts of the Accused that contradict allegations in the Indictment, and disclosing the names of the witnesses who will provide the alibi testimony. The Prosecution complains that the notice of alibi is deficient in that the present physical addresses of the alibi witnesses have not been specifically identified.

Deliberations

2. Rule 67 (A) (ii) (a) requires the Defence to specify "the place or places at which the accused claims to have been present at the time of the alleged crime and the names and addresses of witnesses and any other evidence upon which the accused intends to rely to establish the alibi". The Appeals Chamber has ruled that Rule 67 (A) (ii) (a) does not require the Defence to produce all the evidence supporting the alibi, but that sufficient details must be given to "[allow] the Prosecution to organize its evidence and to prepare its case prior to the commencement of the trial on the merits".[1]

3. Rule 67 (A) (ii) (a) does not expressly require the Defence to provide the present physical address of each witness. The reference to "addresses" might, for example, refer to the witness's physical address at the time of the events; alternatively, it might require disclosure of a general address, such as the city or country of current residence. The Defence is not required to provide the present physical address of non-alibi witnesses under Rule 73 ter (B) (iii) (a). Adopting the position of a Prosecution team in another case, this Chamber has held that "the witness's activities in 1994, parentage and birthplace, and country of present residence" provide sufficient identifying information to allow the Prosecution to conduct its investigations.[2] It would seem anomalous to require the Defence to provide more detailed particulars about alibi witnesses than regular witnesses. Furthermore, the Defence witness protection order applicable in this case requires the Prosecution to contact Defence witnesses with the assistance of Defence counsel.[3] Under these circumstances, it is difficult to understand how the present physical address of these alibi witnesses would assist the Prosecution in making its investigations. In light of the witness protection concerns manifested by the Defence, the Chamber considers that "addresses of witnesses" must be considered as referring either to their address during the events to which they will testify, or requires only their present address in general terms, such as their city or country of residence. In the present case, the Defence has provided the addresses of the witnesses in 1994. Absent further argumentation from the Prosecution this is considered sufficient.

See also Kayishema and Ruzindana, Judgement (AC), 1 June 2001, para. 111 ("the purpose of entering a defence of alibi … is only to enable the Prosecution to consolidate evidence of the accused's criminal responsibility with respect to the crimes charged"). Contrary to the Prosecution's suggestion, the Defence is not obligated at this stage to disclose a full, complete and accurate account of the alibi defence. The Prosecution has referred to Semanza, Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Leave to Call Rebuttal Evidence and the Prosecutor's supplementary Motion for Leave to Call Rebuttal Evidence (TC), 27 March 2002, para. 12. However, this passage concerned the significance of advance notification of an alibi defence, rather than the content of such notification.

4. The Defence claims that the Prosecution, by attaching the notice of alibi, breached an agreement between the parties to keep the witness identifying information confidential. The motion, and its corrigendum, are filed as "strictly confidential". Only a limited number of ICTR staff have access to such documents, and witness identifying information is routinely filed with the Tribunal in this manner. Under these circumstances, no breach of confidentiality has occurred.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the motion.

We are not so concerned about location at the present time; merely a country of origin is satisfactory with respect to that. We don't need addresses or postal codes or phone numbers or anything of that sort. But with respect to 1994 and birth, what we really need is to get information down to at least the secteur level, the préfecture, commune, and secteur. And the purpose of that is simply to make sure that we're dealing with the same person. You heard me say this morning that when it came to this other fellow on the spelling list, there were some seven different persons that we know of that that could potentially have been. And this is common. There's a lot of similarity in names, and we need to have that kind of information to determine it. MR. PRESIDENT: Yes. Any problem with this? Should be no problem. So we just decide now that there is a need to provide this to the Prosecution. T. Decision on Motion for Further Particulars of Defence Witnesses and for Continuance of Trial
25 April 2006 (ICTR-2001-74-T)

(Original : English)

Trial Chamber I

Judges : Erik Møse, Presiding Judge; Sergei Alekseevich Egorov; Florence Rita Arrey

François Karera – Further particulars of witnesses – Continuance of trial – Absence of some relevant information, Identification of witnesses – Motion granted in part

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov, and Judge Florence Rita Arrey;

BEING SEIZED OF the Prosecution "Motion for Continuance of Trial Session, Pursuant to Rule 73 (A)", filed on 24 April 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. On 18 April 2006, the Prosecution filed a motion for disclosure of further and better particulars of Defence witnesses. The Chamber was informed that the Defence would follow up this motion. The Prosecution has now filed a new motion indicating that although on 21 April 2006 it received from the Defence further particulars of 18 witnesses, the information does not contain all the identifying details of the witnesses. In particular, the Prosecution requests the parentage and precise information concerning the birthplace and residence in 1994 of each witness.

Deliberations

2. The Chamber has examined the information provided by the Defence. It is correct, as argued by the Prosecution, that some relevant information is missing. The parentage of all 18 witnesses in Annexure A to the motion is missing. In addition, with respect to some witnesses, information is lacking concerning the sector, cellule, commune, and préfecture of their birthplace and/or whereabouts in 1994.

3. Previously, in its Decision on Motion for Further Alibi Particulars, dated 7 March 2006, the Chamber stated clearly which identifying details the Defence must provide in order to comply with the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. Consequently, the Chamber orders the Defence to provide these details with relation to all its witnesses.

4. The Chamber cannot see the basis for granting a continuance of the proceedings.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Prosecution motion insofar as it requests further particulars of Defence witnesses.

ORDERS the Defence to provide all the identifying information of Defence witnesses in accordance with the guidance in its decision of 7 March 2006.

REJECTS the Prosecution request for continuance of the trial session.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov, and Judge Florence Rita Arrey;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Extremely Urgent Defence Application for Testimony to be taken by Video-Conference", and the supplement thereto, filed on 5 and 12 May 2006, respectively;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. Defence Witnesses YMK, BBM, BBA and KMS reside in Europe and refuse to travel to Arusha. The Defence asks that they be allowed to testify via video-link from Brussels or The Hague. It bases its request on Rules 54 and 71 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules"), arguing that the interest of justice and the rights of the Accused justify hearing their testimonies in this manner. The Prosecution does not object to the motion.[1]

Deliberations

2. Testifying through video-conference is an exception to the general principle, articulated in Rule 90 (A) of the Rules, that witnesses "shall, in principle, be heard directly by the Chambers".[2] The Chamber may authorize testimonies by video-conference where it is in the interest of justice, based on a consideration of the importance of the testimony; the inability or unwillingness of the witness to attend; and when a good reason has been adduced for the inability or unwillingness to attend. Where the witness is unwilling to attend, his refusal must be genuine and well-founded, giving the Chamber reason to believe that the testimony would not be heard unless the video-conference is authorized.[3]

Importance of the Testimony

3. Witnesses YMK, BBA and BBM are alibi witnesses. The Defence submits that their evidence is important to its case. Witnesses YMK and BBA are expected to testify about the presence of the Accused in Ruhengeri in April 1994. Witness BBM will give evidence about the absence of the Accused from Cyivugiva cellule after 6 April 1994. The Chamber does not find that the evidence of these three witnesses is merely cumulative to the testimonies of other alibi witnesses called by the Defence so far. Consistent with the rights of the Accused under Article 20 of the Statute, the Chamber regards evidence which goes directly to prove the alibi of the Accused as important to the Defence case.

4. As for Witness KMS, the Defence has not shown that his evidence is essential to its case. Furthermore, the Defence indicated orally before the Chamber that Witness KMS may eventually be persuaded to travel to Arusha.[4]

Inability or Unwillingness to Attend

5. The Defence asserts that Witnesses YMK and BBA refuse to travel to Arusha out of fear for their personal safety. It claims the witnesses are mindful of "the recent apparent execution" in Brussels (Belgium) of a potential witness. Witness YMK initially agreed to testify in person, despite his fears, but retracted his consent due to two recent events which enhanced his apprehension: the Prosecutor's absence from an allegedly pre-arranged meeting with the witness; and a request from the Witnesses and Victims Support Section (WVSS) to advance his arrival. The Defence avers to have made repeated efforts to convince the witness to travel to Arusha, but in vain. The Chamber is aware of similar attempts by the WVSS. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that Witness YMK's fear is genuine and amounts to an unwillingness to attend.[5]

[5] In another case, this Chamber allowed a witness who refused to travel to Arusha due to fear for reprisals against her family, to testify via video-link. The Chamber was unable to assess whether the fear was objectively justified, but held that "the

6. Witness BBA's concerns for his personal safety are supplemented by his fear of loosing his livelihood. He claims that subsequently to testifying in Arusha in another ICTR trial, he nearly lost his job. The Chamber considers that practical inconveniences related to family or work, do not in themselves justify testimonies through video-link.[6] However, a loss of the source of income of a refugee who supports a family is more than a "practical inconvenience". Furthermore, the concerns of the witness are based on his own past experience. The Chamber accepts his reasons for refusing to travel to Arusha.

7. Witness BBM refuses to travel to Arusha as she suffers from fear of flying. Such fear may render a witness unable to attend proceedings in Arusha. The Defence undertook to provide, by 8 June 2006, a medical attestation confirming Witness BBM's condition but has not done so.[7] Consequently, the Chamber does not have a sufficient basis to conclude that the witness is unable to travel to Arusha and hence for allowing her to testify via video-link.[8]

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion with respect to Witnesses YMK and BBA;

DENIES the remainder of the motion.

ORDERS the Registry, in consultation with the parties, to make all necessary arrangements to facilitate the testimonies of Witnesses YMK and BBA via video-conference, from either Brussels or The Hague, and to videotape the testimonies for possible future reference by the Chamber.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA,

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov, and Judge Florence Rita Arrey;

BEING SEIZED OF the Karera "Requête de la Défense aux fins d'être autorisée à revoir la composition de sa liste de témoins", filed on 15 June 2006, the "Requête amendée de la Défense aux fins d'être autorisée à revoir la composition de sa liste de témoins", filed on 30 June 2006, the "Requête réamendée de la Défense aux fins d'être autorisée à revoir la composition de sa liste de témoins" as well as the "Réplique à la réponse du procureur à la requête amendée de la Défense aux fins d'être autorisée à revoir la composition de sa liste de témoins", both filed on 10 July 2006;[1]

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Responses, filed on 23 June and 6 July 2006;

[1] The Defence's initial motion of 15 June requested leave to add Witnesses NKZ, ZIH and YNZ to its witness list; the second Defence motion of 30 June added to those three Witnesses François-Xavier Bangamwabo, RUB, ZAD, ZAE, NVA and NVE; the third motion of 10 July revised its first two requests by removing Witnesses NVE, NVA, ZAD, ZAE and RUB, and adding Witness NSN, MVF and YAN.

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Defence requests to add to its witness list Witnesses NKZ, ZIH, YNZ, NSN, François-Xavier Bangamwabo, MVF and YAN, all of whom were only recently discovered as a result of investigations conducted following the close of the Prosecution case. According to the Defence, the proposed witnesses' evidence is material to its case and adding them at this stage would not prejudice the Prosecution.

2. The Prosecution contests the proposed additions.[2] Their testimony would be needlessly duplicative of testimony already given, and the Defence has not shown why adding these witnesses is required in the interests of justice or why they were not included earlier. The Prosecution accepts, however, that it is in the interest of justice to allow the Defence to include Witness YNZ in its witness list.

Deliberations

3. On 4 May 2006, the Defence began presenting its case. Rule 73 ter (E) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence allows the Defence to request to amend its witness list after the start of its case, "if it considers it to be in the interests of justice". In deciding such requests, the Chamber has been guided by considerations of the interests of justice and the existence of good cause.[3] Relevant factors considered were the materiality and probative value of the testimony in relation to existing witnesses and allegations in the Indictment; the complexity of the case; prejudice to the opposing party; justifications for the late addition of witnesses; and delays in the proceedings.[4]

4. According to the Defence, Witnesses NKZ and ZIH were present during the attacks on Ntarama church and school, and are able to provide direct testimony about the perpetrators. In particular, they will testify that the Accused neither participated in nor ordered the attacks. Witness YNZ will provide a first-hand account of utterances made by the Accused in Rushashi, rebutting allegations in the Indictment. The Chamber finds that the evidence of these three witnesses is material to the Defence case as it relates to charges in the Indictment. It constitutes direct evidence which appears to be probative concerning the Ntarama and Rushashi events, on which there is limited direct testimony for the Defence.

5. The Defence avers that Witness François-Xavier Bangamwabo observed the Accused on the campus of the National University of Rwanda in Ruhengeri (Nyakinama) in April 1994, that Witnesses YAN and MVF were also on the campus of Nyakinama in April 1994, and that their testimony is essential to the alibi defence that the Accused will present. The Chamber considers that Witness Bangamwabo's eyewitness testimony as to the Accused's alibi is material to the Defence case, as it is direct evidence tending to refute the charges in the Indictment. As to Witness YAN and MVF, however, the Defence has not explained how his testimony will refute the allegations in the Indictment. Their mere presence on the campus during the period in question is not sufficient to show its materiality or probative value.

6. Witness NSN will present testimony intended to refute the evidence and arguments of the Prosecution regarding the role of the Accused as sous-préfet in Kigali-Rural préfecture, particularly through testimony about the neutrality of the administration in Rwanda. The Chamber accepts that the evidence of this witness is material to the Defence case as it relates to an important basis of the allegations against the Accused.[5]

7. With the exception of one witness, all the Prosecution witnesses had completed their testimonies by 2 February 2006. The Chamber accepts that ongoing Defence investigations in April through July 2006 led to the discovery of these proposed new witnesses.

8. Six Defence witnesses did not testify during the May 2006 session. Accordingly, the Chamber authorised an additional session.[6] Adding five new Defence witnesses will not delay the trial, as these witnesses can testify during the forthcoming session.[7]

9. The Chamber recalls that, on 10 July 2006, the Defence disclosed all information pertaining to its new witnesses. Consequently, in conformity with the Chamber's order to disclose such material thirty-five days before the next trial session, the Prosecution has sufficient time to prepare its cross-examination and will not suffer any prejudice if the motion is granted.[8]

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Defence leave to vary its witness list adding Witnesses NKZ, ZIH, YNZ, François-Xavier Bangamwabo and NSN;

DENIES the Defence motions as to Witnesses YAN and MVF.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov, and Judge Florence Rita Arrey;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Motion of Defence for Additional Disclosure", filed on 24 August 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 25 August 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Defence requests the Chamber to order the Prosecution, pursuant to Rule 98 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, to use its best efforts to obtain and disclose certain confessions made by Defence Witnesses NKZ and ZIH to Rwandan authorities. The Defence also requests to re-call the witnesses in order to tender the sought confessions.

2. The two witnesses testified from 14 to 16 August 2006. During its cross-examination, the Prosecution tried to impeach them by using statements they had given to Rwandan authorities. In response, both witnesses referred to confessions they had made in Rwanda and stated that these documents were consistent with their testimony before the Chamber.[1] The Defence requested disclosure of these confessions. The Prosecution stated that it was under no such obligation and denied having the confessions.[2] With respect to Witness NKZ, the Defence requested that the Chamber order the Prosecution to produce the witness's confession, pursuant to Rule 98 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.[3] The Chamber denied the request.[4] It also recalled that each party is expected to investigate the judicial records of its own witnesses who have been subject to criminal proceeding, prior to calling them to testify.[5]

Submissions

3. The Defence argues that once the Prosecution accessed the witnesses' criminal files in Rwanda it should have produced all the statements therein in order to provide a "complete and accurate picture". According to the Defence, fairness requires the Chamber to ensure that the Defence obtains the confessions. The Defence had no obligation to request the confessions from Rwanda, and could not have imagined that their existence would become relevant to the proceedings. The Defence refrained from requesting materials out of fear that the witnesses might refuse to testify if the Rwandan authorities suspected that they were Defence witnesses before the ICTR.

4. The Prosecution argues that the motion is moot with regard to Witness NKZ, as the Chamber has already made an oral ruling in respect of this witness. The Defence was under an obligation to obtain the criminal files of its witnesses. Rule 98 does not provide a legal basis for the motion, as it is reserved for orders made pursuant to the Chamber's own initiative.

Deliberations

5. Rule 98 provides that a "Trial Chamber may proprio motu order either party to produce additional evidence. It may itself summon witnesses and order their attendance". The provision leaves it to the discretion of the Chamber whether to make such an order. Trial Chambers have resorted to this provision, for instance, when the information could be considered as material for the preparation of the Defence case or to determine the credibility of Prosecution witnesses.[6]

[5] Karera, T. 16 August 2006 pp. 26-27 ("The Chamber recalls that before any party presents a witness for trial, that party will have to consider whether the witness is useful to the presentation of its case. This goes for Prosecution witnesses as well as for Defence witnesses. When any of the witnesses presented is an accused or a convict, or is suspected of having been engaged in criminal proceedings or behaviour, then that party has to investigate any criminal antecedents of that witness. Again, this is the same for both parties. If that party is not successful in its investigation, it may, before calling that witness, seize the Chamber and argue that in spite of its best efforts it has not been able to obtain the documents, and the Chamber will then assist the party if there is a basis for that based on submissions. In such a motion, that party must show that it has made efforts to succeed. During the examination of the witness, the other party cross-examining the witness has the right to impeach that witness. It may use any document without any prior disclosure to the party that is presenting that witness. This is part of the general credibility exercise which any party would wish to perform; there is no disclosure obligation there. Then to the issue whether there is, according to the Defence - and that is their argument - that there should not be any selective submission of documents to the Court. The situation in this case is as follows: The OTP has explained that the 1998 confession, which has been referred to by the witness, is not in its possession. The Prosecution doesn't have it, and the Prosecution disputes that such a document exists. The Prosecutor is an officer of the court. The Chamber considers both parties as officers of the court. Based on this assessment, we cannot take this any further.")
[6] In Bagilishema, the Chamber ordered the Prosecution, pursuant to Rule 98, to produce written confessions of its witnesses, because "[t]he Chamber is of the view that the said written confessions could be material in evaluating the credibility of the said Prosecution witnesses". Bagilishema, Decision on the Request of the Defence for an Order for Disclosure by the

6. On 15 August 2006, this Chamber made an oral ruling to the effect that it would not exercise its discretion under Rule 98 in relation to Witness NKZ's confession.[7] The Chamber sees no reason to amend its decision.

7. Rule 98 does not give the parties any right to request additional evidence. It is for the Chamber to exercise its discretion.[8] The Chamber did not make any ruling with respect to Witness ZIH during the trial. The present motion was filed on 24 August 2006, one day after the close of the Defence case. Under these circumstances, the Chamber has decided to consider, in light of the motion, whether it shall make any decision proprio motu under Rule 98 in respect of this witness.

8. Witness ZIH has been accused of criminal activity in Rwanda. As mentioned in the Chamber's oral ruling of 16 August 2006, it was to be expected that the Defence should have investigated his criminal files prior to calling him to testify.[9] If encountering problems, the Defence could have requested the Chamber to order Rwanda, under Article 28 of the Statute, to provide documents pertinent to the witness's criminal file, including confessions, if any. But such an order requires that the party demonstrates first, that it has made reasonable attempts to obtain the requested documents without being successful, and second, describes with particularity the nature and relevance of the information.[10] However, it follows from the Defence submissions that it made a deliberate decision not to make inquiries into the files of these witnesses, based on its experience with fearful and reluctant witnesses. Under these circumstances, the Chamber will not exercise its discretion proprio motu. In making its decision, the Chamber has taken into consideration the purported contents of the confession, viewed in the context of the witness's testimony. It is also noted that the alleged confession does not have a direct bearing on the alleged role of the Accused during the events.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the motion.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov, and Judge Florence Rita Arrey;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Prosecutor's Motion for a View Locus in Quo", filed on 27 March 2006;

CONSIDERING the Defence Response, filed on 12 May 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Prosecution requests that the Chamber visit locations in Rwanda that are relevant to this trial, in particular, Nyamirambo sector in Nyarugenge commune; Ntarama secteur in Kanzenze commune; and Rushashi commune. Many of the disputed issues at trial relate to physical attributes of sites where the offences are alleged to have been committed. A site visit will therefore assist the Chamber in its assessment of issues of visibility, layout of buildings, distances between locations and correlative proximity of places. A first hand familiarization with the relevant locations will assist in the fair and expeditious determination of the case. The Defence concurs with the Prosecution motion, and requests to add another location to the visited sites, the Ruhengeri campus of the National University of Rwanda, which is relevant to its defence of alibi.

2. The motion was filed in March 2006, during the Prosecution case. This decision is rendered at the end of the presentation of the cases of both parties. In the present circumstances, this will best contribute to the discovery of the truth and determination of the case.[1]

Deliberations

3. Rule 4 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence provides that a "Chamber or a Judge may exercise their functions away from the Seat of the Tribunal, if so authorized by the President in the interests of justice". In accordance with the jurisprudence of the Tribunal, the Chamber must assess a request for a site visit on the basis of the particular circumstances in each case.[2] The Chamber recalls that the ability of some witnesses to observe the events about which they testified was disputed. These witnesses implicated the Accused in activities in Nyamirambo secteur, Ntarama secteur, and Rushashi commune. A visit to the locations from where these witnesses allegedly observed the events they described, could contribute to the discovery of the truth and determination of the case. It seems unlikely, however, that a visit to the Ruhengeri campus will advance the Chamber's evaluation of the evidence, especially since no criminal events were alleged to have taken place there.

4. The Chamber considers that a visit to Nyamirambo, Ntarama and Rushashi could be conducted within a period of three days. It should take place from 1 to 3 November 2006.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

REQUESTS the President to authorize the Chamber's exercise of its function away from the Seat of the Tribunal, pursuant to Rule 4 of the Rules; and if such authorization is granted,

LE TRIBUNAL PÉNAL INTERNATIONAL POUR LE RWANDA (le « Tribunal »),

SIÉGEANT en la personne du juge Erik Møse, désigné par la Chambre de première instance conformément à l'article 73 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »),

SAISI de la Requête aux fins d'une ordonnance de mesures de protection des témoins à décharge, déposée par la Défense le 1er février 2006,

CONSTATANT que le Procureur n'a pas soumis d'observations,

STATUE CI-APRÈS sur la requête

1. La requête en prescription de mesures spéciales de protection de l'identité des témoins qui seront appelés par la Défense de Karera a été présentée en vertu des articles 19 et 21 du Statut et 69 et 75 du Règlement. Aux termes de l'article 19 du Statut, le Tribunal veille à ce que la protection des victimes et des témoins soit dûment assurée au cours du procès. L'article 21 du Statut fait obligation au Tribunal de prévoir dans son Règlement des mesures de protection des victimes et des témoins. Ces mesures comprennent, sans y être limitées, la tenue d'audiences à huis clos et la protection de l'identité des victimes. L'article 75 du Règlement énumère plusieurs mesures concrètes de protection qui peuvent être prescrites, notamment la mise sous scellés ou la suppression, dans les dossiers du Tribunal, du nom de l'intéressé et autres indications permettant de l'identifier, l'emploi d'un pseudonyme pour désigner un témoin et la tenue d'audiences à huis clos. Sous réserve de ces mesures, l'article 69 (C) du Règlement prévoit que l'identité des témoins doit être divulguée au Procureur dans un délai lui accordant le temps nécessaire à sa préparation.

2. Les mesures de protection des témoins sont accordées au cas par cas. Selon la jurisprudence du Tribunal de céans et du Tribunal pénal international pour l'ex-Yougoslavie, les témoins en faveur desquels des mesures de protection sont demandées doivent éprouver une crainte réelle pour leur sécurité ou celle de leur famille, et cette crainte doit reposer sur des raisons objectives. Cette crainte peut être exprimée par des personnes autres que les témoins eux-mêmes. Un autre principe qui doit être pris en compte est celui de l'équité du procès, d'après lequel les témoins à décharge et à charge doivent bénéficier de mesures similaires ou identiques[3].

3. La Défense de Karera affirme que les témoins à décharge craignent pour leur sécurité et que leur crainte est justifiée par les dangers et l'insécurité dont font état les rapports joints à la requête intitulée « The Prosecutor's Motion for Protective Measures for Victims and Witnesses to Crimes Alleged in the Indictment (Pursuant to Article 21, Rules 54, 69, 73 and 75) » déposée le 24 novembre 2005. La Chambre se conforme aux décisions antérieures relatives à la protection des témoins à décharge et admet que les témoins à décharge éprouvent de telles craintes et que celles-ci reposent sur des raisons objectives[4]. Elle conclut donc que les conditions requises pour la prescription de mesures de protection des témoins sont réunies.

4. Les mesures demandées par la Défense de Karera sont dans une large mesure identiques à celles déjà accordées aux témoins à charge en l'espèce. Le souci de l'équité du procès et de la simplicité administrative milite fortement en faveur de l'adoption de mesures identiques, qui sont énoncées ci-dessous dans les termes utilisés habituellement pour ce genre de mesures[5].

5. La Défense de Karera demande en particulier que la Chambre prescrive des mesures de protection de l'identité des témoins à décharge KBA, BBM, YMK, YCK, BBA et KBG où qu'ils résident et qui n'ont pas expressément renoncé à leur droit de bénéficier des mesures de protection. Conformément à la pratique établie, la Chambre rend une ordonnance générale. La Défense communiquera au Procureur des informations non caviardées 35 jours avant le début de la présentation des moyens à décharge.

[5] Dans l'affaire Karera, les mesures de protection en faveur des témoins à charge sont prescrites dans la Décision relative à la requête du Procureur en prescription de mesures de protection des témoins, 1er décembre 2005.

6. La demande de la Défense visant à ce que le Procureur lui remette une liste de toutes les personnes au Bureau du Procureur qui auront accès à l'information protégée est rejetée. Le Procureur doit bien sûr veiller à ce que son personnel ne divulgue pas les informations confidentielles à d'autres personnes, mais la façon dont le Procureur s'assure de la non-divulgation de ces informations relève exclusivement de son pouvoir d'appréciation[6].

PRESCRIT LES MESURES SUIVANTES :

1. La Défense de Karera attribuera à chaque témoin pour lequel elle réclame le bénéfice de l'application de la présente ordonnance un pseudonyme par lequel celui-ci sera désigné dans les procédures devant le Tribunal, dans les communications ainsi que dans les discussions entre les parties et les relations avec le public.

2. Les noms, adresses et lieux de résidence des témoins protégés ainsi que tous autres renseignements permettant de les identifier seront placés sous scellés par le Greffe et ne figureront dans aucun dossier non confidentiel du Tribunal ou autrement accessible au public.

3. Au cas où les noms, adresses et lieux de résidence des témoins protégés ainsi que tous autres renseignements permettant de les identifier apparaîtraient dans les dossiers publics du Tribunal, ils devront être expurgés desdits dossiers et mis sous scellés.

4. La Défense de Karera communiquera au Greffe sous le sceau de la confidentialité l'identité des témoins protégés, ces renseignements n'étant pas communiqués au Procureur, sauf s'il en est décidé autrement.

5. Il est interdit de faire ou de diffuser des enregistrements sonores ou vidéo des témoins protégés ou de faire des photos ou des croquis de ceux-ci, sauf autorisation de la Chambre ou du témoin concerné.

6. Avant toute prise de contact avec un témoin à décharge, le Procureur ou un membre de son Bureau agissant en son nom devra aviser par écrit la Défense de Karera ; si le témoin y consent, la Défense prendra les dispositions nécessaires pour faciliter ce contact.

7. Le Procureur gardera confidentiellement en sa possession tous les renseignements permettant d'identifier un témoin visé par la présente décision et ne communiquera, ne discutera ni ne divulguera ces renseignements, directement ou indirectement.

8. La Défense de Karera pourra ne pas communiquer au Procureur l'identité de tous les témoins protégés et caviarder temporairement dans les documents qu'elle communiquera au Procureur leurs noms, adresses et lieux de résidence ainsi que tous autres renseignements permettant de les identifier. Elle devra toutefois communiquer ces renseignements au Procureur 35 jours avant le début de la présentation des moyens à décharge, afin d'accorder à celui-ci le temps nécessaire à sa préparation comme le prévoit l'article 69 (C) du Règlement.

François Karera – Précisions au sujet de témoins – Report de procès – Absence de certains éléments pertinents, Identification des témoins – Requête acceptée en partie

LE TRIBUNAL PENAL INTERNATIONAL POUR LE RWANDA (le « Tribunal »),

SIEGEANT en la Chambre de première instance I (la « Chambre »), composée des juges Erik Møse, Sergei Alekseevich Egorov et Florence Rita Arrey, SAISI de la requête du Procureur intitulée Motion for Continuance of Trial Session, Pursuant to Rule 73 (A), déposée le 24 avril 2006,

STATUANT CI-APRES SUR LA REQUETE

Introduction

1. Le 18 avril 2006, le Procureur a déposé une requête sollicitant la communication de renseignements complémentaires et plus précis au sujet des témoins à décharge. La Chambre a été informée que la Défense donnerait suite à ladite requête. Le Procureur a ensuite déposé une nouvelle requête dans laquelle il indique que, le 21 avril 2006, il a reçu de la Défense des informations supplémentaires au sujet de 18 témoins à décharge, mais que celles-ci ne précisent pas tous les éléments d'identification des témoins. Le Procureur veut en particulier savoir qui sont les parents des témoins et obtenir des informations précises concernant le lieu de naissance et le lieu de résidence de chaque témoin en 1994.

Délibération

2. La Chambre a examiné les informations fournies par la Défense. Il est vrai, comme l'affirme le Procureur, que certains éléments pertinents font défaut. Aucun renseignement n'est fourni au sujet des parents des dix-huit témoins énumérés à l'annexe A à la Requête. En outre, on ne dispose pas d'informations sur le secteur, la cellule, la commune et la préfecture de naissance de certains témoins et/ou leur lieu de séjour en 1994.

3. Antérieurement, dans sa décision intitulée Décision on Motion for Further Alibi Particulars datée du 7 mars 2006, la Chambre a clairement indiqué quels éléments d'identification du témoin la Défense devait fournir pour se conformer au Règlement de procédure et de preuve. En conséquence, la Chambre ordonne à la Défense d'apporter ces précisions relativement à tous ses témoins.

4. La Chambre ne voit pas sur quelle base elle accorderait un report de la procédure.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

FAIT DROIT à la requête du Procureur pour ce qui est d'obtenir des précisions supplémentaires au sujet des témoins à décharge ;

ORDONNE à la Défense de fournir tous les éléments d'identification des témoins à décharge conformément aux indications données dans sa décision du 7 mars 2006 ;

REJETTE la demande de report de la session du procès.

LE TRIBUNAL PENAL INTERNATIONAL POUR LE RWANDA,

SIEGEANT en la Chambre de première instance I, composée des juges Erik Møse, Président de Chambre, Sergei Alekseevich Egorov et Florence Rita Arrey,

SAISI d'une requête de la Défense intitulée Extremely Urgent Defence Application for Testimony to be taken by Video-Conference et du Supplément à cette requête déposés respectivement le 5 et le 12 mai 2006,

STATUE sur la requête de la Défense.

Introduction

1. Les témoins à décharge YMK, BBM, BBA et KMS résident en Europe et refusent de se rendre à Arusha. La Défense demande qu'ils soient autorisés à déposer par voie de vidéoconférence de Bruxelles ou de La Haye. Invoquant à ce propos les articles 54 et 71 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »), elle fait valoir que l'intérêt de la justice et les droits de l'accusé justifient l'audition de ces témoins par vidéoconférence. Le Procureur ne s'oppose pas à sa requête[1].

Délibération

2. La déposition par voie de vidéoconférence est une exception à la règle générale énoncée à l'article 90 (A) du Règlement qui dispose qu'« en principe les Chambres entendent les témoins en personne[2] ». La Chambre peut autoriser un témoin à déposer par voie de vidéoconférence lorsqu'il s'avère, à la lumière des éléments indiqués ci-après, que l'intérêt de la justice le commande : la déposition du témoin est importante, celui-ci ne peut pas ou ne veut pas comparaître au prétoire et des raisons valables ont été avancées pour justifier son incapacité ou sa réticence à comparaître au prétoire. Lorsque le témoin rechigne à comparaître au prétoire, son refus doit être réel et bien fondé, donnant ainsi à la Chambre des raisons de croire qu'il ne déposera pas si elle n'autorise pas la vidéoconférence[3].

Importance de la déposition

3. Les témoins YMK, BBA et BBM ont été cités à l'appui de l'alibi invoqué par la Défense qui fait valoir que leurs dépositions sont importantes pour son dossier. Les témoins YMK et BBA parleront en principe de la présence de l'accusé à Ruhengeri en avril 1994. Quant au témoin BBM, il établira que l'accusé ne se trouvait pas dans la cellule de Cyivugiza après le 6 avril 1994. La Chambre ne considère pas que les récits de ces personnes viennent simplement s'ajouter à ceux d'autres témoins déjà appelés par la Défense à l'appui de son alibi. Soucieuse du respect des droits de l'accusé consacrés par l'article 20 du Statut, la Chambre estime que toute déposition tendant directement à prouver l'alibi de l'accusé joue un rôle dans la présentation des moyens à décharge.

4. En ce qui concerne le témoin KMS, la Défense n'a pas démontré en quoi sa déposition est indispensable dans la présentation des moyens à décharge. En outre, la Défense a indiqué oralement à la Chambre que ce témoin pourrait finalement se laisser convaincre de se rendre à Arusha[4].

[4] Compte rendu de l'audience du 12 mai 2006, p. 8.

Incapacité ou réticence à comparaître

5. Selon la Défense, les témoins YMK et BBA refusent de se rendre à Arusha par crainte pour leur sécurité, d'autant plus qu'ils se rappellent l'« apparente exécution » d'un témoin potentiel perpétrée dernièrement à Bruxelles (Belgique). Au début, YMK avait accepté de témoigner en personne en dépit de ses appréhensions, mais il a changé d'avis à cause de deux événements récents qui ont aggravé ses craintes, à savoir l'absence du Procureur à un rendez-vous qu'il aurait donné au témoin et le fait que la Section d'aide aux victimes et aux témoins lui a demandé d'avancer son arrivée. La Défense affirme avoir essayé à plusieurs reprises de convaincre le témoin de se rendre à Arusha, mais en vain. La Chambre est informée de plusieurs tentatives similaires faites par la Section d'aide aux victimes et aux témoins. Elle en conclut que les craintes du témoin YMK sont réelles et qu'à cause de celles-ci, il est réticent à comparaître au prétoire[5].

6. S'agissant du témoin BBA, la crainte de perdre ses moyens de subsistance vient s'ajouter au fait qu'il a peur pour sa sécurité. En effet, il affirme qu'après avoir témoigné devant le TPIR à Arusha dans un autre procès, il a failli perdre son emploi. La Chambre considère que l'existence de difficultés pratiques d'ordre familial ou professionnel n'autorise pas en soi à faire une déposition par voie de vidéoconférence[6]. Cependant, la perte de la source de revenu d'un refugié ayant charge de famille est plus grave qu'une « difficulté pratique ». Au demeurant, les craintes du témoin BBA sont fondées sur sa propre expérience. Cela étant, la Chambre accepte les raisons qu'il a avancées pour refuser de se rendre à Arusha.

7. BBM refuse de se rendre à Arusha parce qu'elle a peur de prendre l'avion. Une peur de cette nature peut empêcher un témoin de participer au procès à Arusha. La Défense s'était engagée à fournir, au plus tard le 8 juin 2006, une attestation médicale confirmant l'état du témoin BBM, mais elle ne l'a pas fait[7]. En conséquence, la Chambre ne dispose pas d'éléments suffisants pour conclure que le témoin se trouve dans l'incapacité de se rendre à Arusha et l'autoriser de ce fait à déposer par voie de vidéoconférence[8].

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

FAIT DROIT à la requête de la Défense en ce qui concerne les témoins YMK et BBA ;

REJETTE la requête pour le surplus ;

ORDONNE au Greffe de prendre toutes les dispositions nécessaires, en consultation avec les parties, pour faciliter les dépositions des témoins YMK et BBA par voie de vidéoconférence de Bruxelles ou de La Haye et d'enregistrer ces dépositions sur vidéocassette pour permettre à la Chambre de s'y reporter par la suite s'il y a lieu.

[5] Dans une autre affaire, la Chambre a autorisé la déposition par vidéoconférence pour un témoin qui avait refusé de se rendre à Arusha par peur de représailles contre sa famille. La Chambre n'a pas pu déterminer si cette crainte reposait sur des éléments objectifs, mais a jugé que « le fait que le témoin continue de refuser de se rendre à Arusha malgré la convocation qui lui a été signifiée indique que ses craintes sont véritablement et profondément ressenties » [traduction]. Voir la Décision Bagosora du 8 octobre 2004, par. 13. Dans la présente affaire, aucune convocation n'a été requise. Cependant, la Défense et la Section d'aide aux victimes et aux témoins ont tenté en vain de persuader le témoin.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov, designated by the Chamber in accordance with Rule 73 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules");

BEING SEIZED of the Defence Requête Urgente Aux Fins de Transfert de Témoins Detenus Conformément à l'Article 90 bis du Reglement de Procedure et de Preuve, filed on 3 January 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. The Mpambara Defence requests the Chamber to order the transfer of two of its witnesses, who are detained in Rwanda, under Rule 90 bis of the Rules. Rule 90 bis (B) sets two conditions for such an order: first, that "the witness is not required for any criminal proceedings in the territory of the requested State during the period the witness is required by the Tribunal"; and second, that the "transfer … does not extend the period of his detention as foreseen by the requested State". Annexed to the motion is a letter, dated 28 December 2005, from the Rwandan Ministry of Justice indicating that the witnesses are available to be transferred, which implies that the two conditions set out in Rule 90 bis (B) are satisfied.[9] Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the requirements for the transfer of Witness RU2 and Witness RU8 under Rule 90 bis are met.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

ORDERS, conditional upon the agreement of the Government Rwanda, that the individuals designated by the pseudonyms RU2 and RU8 shall be temporarily transferred pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules to the Detention Unit in Arusha;

REQUESTS the Government of Rwanda to facilitate the transfer in cooperation with the Registrar and the Tanzanian Government;

INSTRUCTS the Registrar to:

(A) transmit this decision to the Governments of Rwanda and Tanzania;

(B) ensure the proper conduct of the transfer, including the supervision of the witnesses in the Tribunal's detention facilities;

(C) remain abreast of any changes which might occur regarding the conditions of detention provided for by the requested State and which may possibly affect the length of the temporary detention, and as soon as possible, inform the Trial Chamber of any such change.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA,

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Jai Ram Reddy, presiding, Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov, and Judge Flavia Lattanzi;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Prosecution Motion for a View Locus in Quo", filed on 30 January 2006;

CONSIDERING the parties' oral submissions at the Status Conference on 9 February 2006;

CONSIDERING the "Réplique de la Défense à la Requête du Procureur en vue du Déplacement du Tribunal sur les Lieux", filed on 9 February 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The Prosecution seeks to have the Judges of Trial Chamber I visit Rukara commune in order to familiarize themselves with the locations that are relevant to this case. In support of its request, the Prosecution submits that many of the disputed issues at trial turn on physical aspects of specific sites where offences are alleged to have been committed and argues that a site visit will allow the Chamber to more accurately assess the evidence adduced at trial. It further argues that a site visit can be accomplished with relative ease because the events occurred at a limited number of sites and can be accessed without any real difficulty from Kigali.

2. The Defence concurs that a site visit would assist the Chamber in more fairly assessing the evidence in this case in light of the topography of the area over which the Accused was responsible as bourgmestre of Rukara commune and the structure and location of the various sites at issue.

Deliberations

3. Rule 4 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence provides that "[a] Chamber or a Judge may exercise their functions away from the Seat of the Tribunal, if so authorized by the President in the interests of justice".

4. In accordance with the jurisprudence of the Tribunal, the Chamber must assess the request for a site visit on the basis of the particular circumstances in each case.[1] A decision to carry out a site visit should preferably be made when the visit will be instrumental in the discovery of the truth and determination of the matter before the Chamber.[2] At least one Trial Chamber has expressed the view that such visits should ideally take place at the close of presentation of the Prosecution and Defence cases.[3]

5. The Chamber agrees with the parties' submissions that many of the disputed issues at trial relate to physical attributes of various sites in Rukara commune and therefore finds that the particular circumstances in this case warrant a site visit. The Chamber has reviewed the itinerary suggested by the Prosecution, which the Defence does not appear to oppose, and the Chamber is satisfied that the proposed sites are relevant to the charges against the Accused and the evidence adduced at trial. Moreover, the Chamber notes that the proposed itinerary only requires two days and does not involve difficult logistical planning or significant costs to the Tribunal. The Chamber notes, however, that its grant of the Prosecution motion is subject to approval by the President in accordance with Rule 4.

6. In order to facilitate scheduling for the parties, particularly the Defence, the Chamber finds that the site visit should occur in conjunction with closing arguments, which are set for 2-3 May 2006. The Chamber therefore orders the site visit to take place between Wednesday, 26 April 2006 and Friday, 28 April 2006.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

REQUESTS the President to authorize the Chamber's exercise of its function away from the Seat of the Tribunal, pursuant to Rule 4 of the Rules; and if such authorization is granted, REQUESTS the Registry to make all the necessary arrangements, in liaison with the Chamber and the parties, to facilitate the implementation of this decision.

Table of Contents

Chapter I: Introduction

1. The Accused, Jean Mpambara, was formerly the bourgmestre of Rukara Commune in eastern Rwanda. Before April 1994, the Commune enjoyed a reputation as a relatively peaceful place, where moderation generally prevailed over ethnic extremism. In that fateful month, however, Rukara was engulfed by ethnic violence which culminated in a massacre of between one and two thousand Tutsi men, women and children who had sought refuge at the Rukara Parish church.

2. The Indictment charges the Accused with the crimes of genocide and extermination. Mpambara is not accused of having physically killed anyone; rather, he is alleged to have instigated, materially supported and facilitated attacks on Tutsi civilians. As the case proceeded, the Prosecution also made clear that it wished to hold the Accused criminally responsible for his failure to prevent the attacks.

3. Mpambara denies these allegations, protesting that he attempted to maintain security and to protect the Tutsi refugees. The Defence also contests whether the failure to prevent the attacks was properly pleaded in the Indictment.

4. The case against the Accused revolves around three sets of events in Rukara Commune over a six-day period: looting and killing in Gahini Secteur on 7 and 8 April 1994; an attack on Gahini Hospital on 9 April; and two attacks at the Parish Church of Rukara where, on 12 April 1994 attackers using guns, grenades, machetes and spears killed up to two thousand Tutsi civilians in a single night.

5. Chapter II of this judgement sets out the legal requirements of the crimes and forms of participation with which the Accused is charged. In Chapter III, the Chamber reviews the evidence heard during the trial, and will reach factual and legal findings in respect of each of the allegations against the Accused.

Chapter II: Applicable Law

1. Introduction

6. The Indictment charges the Accused with genocide or, in the alternative, complicity in genocide; and extermination as a crime against humanity.[1] The Indictment alleges that the Accused committed or participated in these crimes by: (i) participating in a joint criminal enterprise; (ii) ordering the commission of the crimes; and (iii) instigating and otherwise aiding and abetting those who actually did commit the crimes.[2] In its Closing Brief, the Prosecution withdrew the alternative count of complicity, noting that aiding and abetting was a more appropriate description of the conduct of the Accused.[3] Accordingly, section two below will discuss the elements of genocide and extermination, and section three will describe the forms of participation in these crimes attributed to the Accused.

7. During the course of the trial, and in its Closing Brief, the Prosecution argued that the Accused was criminally liable under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for having failed to prevent crimes committed by others, and that this allegation is encompassed by the charges in the Indictment.[4] The Defence argues that the Indictment contains no such charge and that the Accused was not otherwise informed

[1] Counts 1, 2 and 3, respectively.
[2] Indictment, paras. 6, 21. As will be discussed, infra, Prosecution submissions subsequent to the Indictment are ambiguous as to the relationship between joint criminal enterprise liability and the other forms of criminal responsibility provided in Article 6 (1). The Prosecution appears to consider aiding and abetting as a form of joint criminal enterprise. The Indictment itself, however, is clear that joint criminal enterprise and aiding and abetting are distinct and separate modes of participation in a crime: "In addition [to ordering, instigating, and aiding and abetting], the accused wilfully and knowingly participated in a joint criminal enterprise…." Few, if any references, to "ordering" or "planning" are to be found in the Prosecution Closing Brief and final arguments, but the Chamber cannot say that these have been dropped. The Chamber has accordingly considered any evidence which may be relevant to those modes of individual criminal responsibility.
[3] Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 272: "Given the divergent views on the distinction between Complicity under Art. 2 (3) (e) and aiding and abetting Genocide under Art (6) (1) the Prosecutor subscribes to the Krstic approach and submits that where 'knowledge' is proved the accused should be convicted of aiding and abetting Genocide on the basis that it is a better characterization of the culpability of the accused. In those circumstances, the Prosecutor submits that Complicity as an alternative count need not be considered by the Chamber".
[4] The Indictment contains no allegation of superior responsibility under Article 6 (3) of the Statute, and the Prosecution has not argued that this form of liability was pleaded in this case.

that such a charge was made against him. Section four of this chapter will examine the ways in which an accused may be criminally liable for omissions. Section five and six discuss whether the Accused was given adequate notice that he was charged with criminal responsibility for failing to prevent criminal acts.

2. Crimes

(i) Genocide

8. Genocide, as defined in Article 2 (2) of the Statute, is

> …any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such:
>
> (a) Killing members of the group;
> (b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group….

The victims must be targeted because of their membership in the protected group, and the perpetrator must intend to destroy at least a substantial part of that group.[5] Intent may be proven by overt statements of the perpetrator or by drawing inferences from circumstantial evidence, such as any connection to a wide-scale attack against the targeted group.[6] The actus reus of genocide does not require the actual destruction of a substantial part of the group; the commission of even a single instance of one of the prohibited acts is sufficient, provided that the accused genuinely intends by that act to destroy at least a substantial part of the group.[7]

(ii) Extermination

9. Extermination is a crime against humanity which, as defined by Article 3, must be "committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds". The crime itself has been described as the widespread or systematic killing of a group of persons, or systematically subjecting a large number of persons to conditions of living that would inevitably lead to death on a large scale.[8] The actus reus of the offence is that the perpetrator participates with others in a collective or ongoing mass killing event.[9] The act

[6] Rutaganda, Judgement (AC), para. 528; Semanza, Judgement (AC), para. 262; Jelisic, Judgement (AC), para. 47 ("As to proof of specific intent, it may, in the absence of direct explicit evidence, be inferred from a number of facts and circumstances, such as the general context, the perpetration of other culpable acts systematically directed against the same group, the scale of atrocities committed, the systematic targeting of victims on account of their membership of a particular group, or the repetition of destructive and discriminatory acts"); Simba, Judgement (TC), para. 415; Ndindabahizi, Judgement (TC), para. 454.

[7] Ndindabahizi, Judgement (TC), para. 471. The perpetrator of a single, isolated act of violence could not possess the requisite intent based on a delusion that, by his action, the destruction of the group, in whole or in part, could be effected.

[8] Statute, Article 3 (b). Ntakirutimana, Judgement (AC), para. 522; Simba, Judgement (TC), para. 422; Ndindabahizi, Judgement (TC), para. 479. No numeric threshold of deaths need be reached for the killings to be deemed "large-scale". Ntakirutimana, Judgement (AC), para. 516.

[9] Ntakirutimana, Judgement (AC), para. 516 ("the crime of extermination is the act of killing on a large scale"); Ndindabahizi, Judgement (TC), para. 479 (the acts must be "directed at a group of individuals collectively, and whose effect is to bring about a mass killing"). Bagosora et al., Judgement on Motions for Acquittal (TC), 2 February 2005, para. 28 ("The essential distinction between murder and extermination is that the latter is directed at a group collectively resulting in a mass killing, and that the forms of commission ('participation') are broader than what is required for murder"); Vasiljevic, Judgement (TC), para. 227 ("the act of extermination must be collective in nature rather than directed towards singled out individuals").

need not directly cause any single victim's death, but must contribute to a mass killing event.[10] As to the nature of the contribution required, a standard of "sufficient contribution" has been adopted in some cases, assessed according to "the actions of the perpetrator, their impact on a defined [victim] group, and awareness [by the accused] of the impact on the defined group".[11]

10. The mens rea of extermination is that the accused must intend by his actions to bring about the deaths on a large-scale.[12]

11. In addition to these specific elements of extermination, the chapeau requirements for a crime against humanity must also be satisfied. First, the crime must have been committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack. "Widespread" is defined as massive or large-scale, involving many victims; "systematic" refers to an organized pattern of conduct, as distinguished from random or unrelated acts.[13] Second, the attack must be carried out against a civilian population on "national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds".[14] The perpetrator must know that his acts form part of this discriminatory attack but need not possess the discriminatory intent.[15]

3. Modes of Commission and Participation

12. The Indictment recites all of the modes of participation prescribed by Article 6 (1) of the Statute, namely that a "person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime … shall be individually responsible for the [10] Ndindabahizi, Judgement (TC), para. 479 ("may be committed less directly than murder, as by participation in measures intended to bring about the deaths of a large number of individuals"); Krstic, Judgement (TC), para. 498 ("…we surmise that the crime of extermination may be applied to acts committed with the intention of bringing about the death of a large number of victims either directly, such as by killing the victim with a firearm, or less directly, by creating conditions provoking the victim's death"); Rutaganda, Judgement (TC), para. 83 ("includes, but is not limited to the direct act of killing. It can be any act or omission, or cumulative acts or omissions, that cause the death of the targeted group of individuals"); Vasiljevic, Judgement (TC), para. 227; Kayishema and Ruzindana, Judgement (TC), paras. 143, 146. The Appeals Chamber has held that it is unnecessary to name the victims of an extermination. Ntakirutimana, Judgement (AC), para. 521. This would not be the case for murder, if the accused participated, and if the Prosecution had this information in its possession. This reflects a fundamental distinction between the nature of murder and extermination.

[11] Ndindabahizi, Judgement (TC), para. 479 (the issue is whether an accused "contributed sufficiently to the mass killing"); Bagosora et al., Judgement on Motions for Acquittal (TC), 2 February 2005, para. 28 ("Whether the participation is sufficient to constitute extermination depends on a concrete assessment of the facts, including the actions of the perpetrator, their impact on a defined group, and awareness of the impact on the defined group"). The definition of the minimum level of participation has not been addressed by the Appeals Chamber: Vasiljevic, Judgement (TC), para. 227 ("'extermination' only attaches to those individuals responsible for a large number of deaths, even if their part therein was remote or indirect"); Kayishema and Ruzindana, Judgement (TC), para. 146 (planning alone may be sufficient for commission, provided that the "nexus between the planning and the actual killing" is shown); G. Mettraux, International Crimes and the Ad Hoc Tribunals (Oxford: Oxford UP, 2005), p. 176 (commission may occur where perpetrator's role "remote or indirect"); Simon Chesterman, "An Altogether Different Order: Defining the Elements of Crimes Against Humanity", 10 Duke J. Comp. & Int'l L. 307, 338 (2000) (advocating the standard of "'contributed directly' in the definition of extermination's actus reus); Ntakurutimana, Judgement (AC), para. 522 ("participation").

[12] Stakic, Judgement (AC), para. 260 ("The mens rea of extermination clearly requires the intention to kill on a large scale or to systematically subject a large number of people to conditions of living that would lead to their deaths"); Simba, Judgement (TC), para. 422; Ndindabahizi, Judgement (TC), para. 480 ("The mens rea for the offence of extermination is that the Accused participated in the imposition of measures against many individuals intending that their deaths should be brought about on a large-scale"). There is no need in the present case to decide whether recklessness would also satisfy the mens rea of extermination. Kayishema and Ruzindana, Judgement (TC), para. 144 (finding that recklessness is sufficient); cf. Semanza, Judgement (TC), para. 341 (requiring intent to perpetrate or participate in a mass killing); Vasiljevic, Judgement (TC), para. 229 (requiring actual intention to kill, or to cause grievous bodily harm or injury with the knowledge that such actions are likely to cause death).

[13] Niyitigeka, Judgement (TC), para. 439; Ntakirutimana, Judgement (TC), para. 804; Semanza, Judgement (TC) paras. 328-29. See also Kunarac et al., Judgement (AC), paras. 93-97 (interpreting the same words as part of a judicially-created condition for crimes against humanity).

See also Semanza, Judgement (AC), paras. 268-269. It is hard to imagine, however, that an accused could possess the mens rea for extermination, and yet not share the intent of the widespread or systematic attack of which it formed a part.

crime".[16] More particularly, the Indictment alleges that the Accused (i) "ordered those over whom he had command responsibility and control" to attack the Tutsi population; (ii) "instigated and aided and abetted those over whom he did not have command responsibility or control to attack the Tutsi population"; and (iii) "participated in a joint criminal enterprise whose object, purpose and foreseeable outcome was the destruction of the Tutsi racial or ethnic group throughout Rwanda".[17]

(i) Joint Criminal Enterprise

13. A joint criminal enterprise arises when two or more persons join in a common and shared purpose to commit a crime under the Statute.[18] Unlike conspiracy, no specific agreement to commit the crime need be shown: the common purpose may arise spontaneously and informally, and the persons involved need not be associated through a formal organization.[19] Any act or omission which assists or contributes to the criminal purpose may attract liability: there is no minimum threshold of significance or importance, and the act need not independently be a crime.[20]

14. A co-perpetrator (a term used to refer to a participant in a joint criminal enterprise) must intend by his acts to effect the common criminal purpose.[21] Mere knowledge of the criminal purpose of others is not enough: the accused must intend that his or her acts will lead to the criminal result. The mens rea is, in this sense, no different than if the accused committed the crime alone. As the Appeals Chamber has aptly remarked, a "joint criminal enterprise is simply a means of committing a crime; it is not a crime in itself".[22] Determining whether a co-perpetrator possessed the necessary intent may be more difficult than in the case of a single perpetrator who, of necessity, must physically commit the crime. Although the actus reus may be satisfied by any participation, no matter how insignificant, "the

[17] Indictment, para. 6. Although no express reference to joint criminal enterprise is to be found in Article 6 (1), it is well-established that a person may "commit" a crime in that manner, as discussed below in more detail. Tadic, Judgement (AC), para. 190 ("Whoever contributed to the commission of crimes by a group of persons or some members of the group, in execution of a common criminal purpose, may be held criminally liable, subject to certain conditions, which are specified below").
[18] It is also often said that the requisite common purpose exists where it "involves the commission" of such a crime. Stakic, Judgement (AC), para. 64 ("the existence of a common purpose which amounts to or involves the commission of a crime provided for in the Statute is required"); Kvocka et al., Judgement (AC), para. 81 ("A joint criminal enterprise requires a plurality of co-perpetrators who act pursuant to a common purpose involving the commission of a crime in the Statute"); Limaj, Judgement (TC), para. 510 ("When a number of persons are involved in a common plan aimed at the commission of a crime, they can be convicted of participation in a joint criminal enterprise ("JCE") in relation to that crime"); Simba, Judgement (TC), para. 387 ("the existence of a common purpose which amounts to or involves the commission of a crime provided for in the Statute is required").
[19] Stakic, Judgement (AC), para. 64 (the persons involved "need not be organized in a military, political or administrative structure"); Kvocka et al., Judgement (AC), para. 117 ("The common purpose need not be previously arranged or formulated; it may materialize extemporaneously"); Vasiljevic, Judgement (AC), para. 100; Milutinović et al., Decision on Dragoljub Ojdanić's Motions Challenging Jurisdiction-Joint Criminal Enterprise (AC), 21 May 2003, para. 23 ("while mere agreement is sufficient in the case of conspiracy, the liability of a member of a joint criminal enterprise will depend on the commission of criminal acts in furtherance of that agreement").
[20] Stakic, Judgement (AC), para. 64 ("the participation of the accused in the common purpose is required. This participation need not involve the commission of a specific crime under one of the provisions [of the Statute] (for example, murder, extermination, torture or rape), but may take the form of assistance in, or contribution to, the execution of the common purpose"); Kvocka et al., Judgement (AC), para. 97 ("there is no specific legal requirement that the accused make a substantial contribution to the joint criminal enterprise. However, there may be specific cases which require, as an exception to the general rule, a substantial contribution of the accused to determine whether he participated in the joint criminal enterprise"); Kvocka et al., Judgement, (AC), para. 187 ("…the accused's participation in carrying out the joint criminal enterprise is likely to engage his responsibility as a co-perpetrator, without it being necessary in general to prove the substantial or significant nature of his contribution: it is sufficient for the accused to have committed an act or an omission which contributes to the common criminal purpose").
[21] Stakic, Judgement (AC), para. 65 ("it must be shown that the accused and the other participants in the joint criminal enterprise intended that the crime at issue be committed"); Kvocka et al., Judgement (AC), para. 82 ("In the first form of joint criminal enterprise, all of the co-perpetrators possess the same intent to effect the common purpose"); Vasiljevic, Judgement (AC), para. 101 ("…what is required is the intent to perpetrate a certain crime (this being the shared intent of the part of all co-perpetrators)"); Tadic, Judgement (AC), para. 196 ("the accused, even if not personally effecting the killing, must nevertheless intend this result"); Limaj, Judgement (TC), para. 511 ("In the first type of joint criminal enterprise, the accused intends to perpetrate a crime and this intent is shared by all co-perpetrators").

significance and scope of the material participation of an individual in a joint criminal enterprise may be relevant in determining whether that individual had the requisite mens rea".[23]

15. There are three forms of joint criminal enterprise: "basic", described above; "systemic"; and "extended". Neither the systemic nor the extended forms of joint criminal enterprise are alleged in the present case, and need not be considered further.[24]

(ii) Aiding and Abetting

16. Aiding and abetting, though distinct concepts, are frequently combined to refer to any form of assistance or encouragement given to another person to commit a crime under the Statute.[25] The assistance or encouragement must have had a "substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime" to attract liability.[26] The aider and abettor need not (although he or she may) share the principal's criminal intent, but must at least know that his or her acts are assisting the principal to commit the crime.[27]

17. Joint criminal enterprise may be distinguished from aiding and abetting in two respects. Aiding and abetting requires a "substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime"; by contrast, no minimum threshold of participation is required in a joint criminal enterprise. The extent or significance of the contribution may, however, be important in showing that the perpetrator possessed the requisite criminal intent. The aider and abettor, on the other hand, need only be aware of the criminal intent of the principal whom he assists or encourages.[28] A person who contributes substantially to the commission of a crime by another person, and who shares the intent of that other person, is criminally liable both as a co-perpetrator and as an aider and abettor.[29]

(iii) Instigation

18. Instigation is urging or encouraging, verbally or by other means of communication, another person to commit a crime, with the intent that the crime will be committed.[30] In accordance with [24] Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 25 "The Prosecutor relies on the theory of JCE (JCE I) to establish the individual criminal responsibility of the accused….). The Chamber notes that the intent required for the systemic form of liability, in which there is an organized criminal system such as a prison camp whose purpose is to persecute the inmates, is very similar to that of the basic form. It "requires personal knowledge of the organized system and intent to further the criminal purpose of that system". Kvocka et al., Judgement (AC), para. 82. Although this formulation is slightly different from the intent required in the basic form of liability, the similarity is sufficient to permit this Chamber to rely on the pronouncements in the Kvocka et al. Appeal Judgement, which was concerned primarily with the systemic form of joint criminal enterprise liability.

[25] Vasiljevic, Judgement (AC), para. 102 (defining the actus reus of aiding and abetting as "acts specifically directed to assist, encourage or lend moral support to the perpetration of a specific crime (murder, extermination, rape, torture, wanton destruction of civilian property, etc.), and this support has a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crime"); Semanza, Judgement (TC), paras. 384-385; Limaj, Judgement (TC), para. 516 ("'Aiding and abetting' has been defined as the act of rendering practical assistance, encouragement or moral support, which has a substantial effect on the perpetration of a certain crime"); Gacumbitsi, Judgement (TC), para. 286 ("Aiding means assisting or helping another to commit a crime. Abetting means facilitating, advising or instigating the commission of a crime").

[27] Blaskic, Judgement (AC), para. 49; Krnojelac, Judgement (AC), para. 51; Vasiljevic, Judgement (AC), para. 102; Semanza, Judgement (TC), para. 388 ("The Accused need not necessarily share the mens rea of the principal perpetrator; the accused must be aware, however, of the essential elements of the principal's crime including the mens rea"). The Appeals Chamber has ruled that this principle – that only knowledge of the intent of the perpetrator is sufficient for liability – applies even in respect of the specific intent required for genocide: Ntakirutimana, Judgement (AC), paras. 499-501; Krstic, Judgement (AC), paras. 140-141. Certain authors have criticized imposition of liability based on mere knowledge of the principal's intent: G. Mettraux, International Crimes and the Ad Hoc Tribunals (Oxford: Oxford UP, 2005), p. 212.

[28] Vasiljevic, Judgement (AC), para. 102.

[29] The Appeals Chamber has offered a further distinction: a co-perpetrator is guilty of all the crimes committed by his co-perpetrators, whereas an aidor and abettor is only liable for the specific crime which he or she assists or encourages. Kvocka et al., Judgement (AC), para. 90.

[30] Semanza, Judgement (TC), para. 381; Akayesu, Judgement (TC), para. 482.

general principles of accomplice liability, instigation does not arise unless it has directly and substantially contributed to the perpetration of the crime by another person.[31] Unlike the crime of direct and public incitement, instigation does not give rise to liability unless the crime is ultimately committed.[32]

(iv) Ordering

19. The actus reus of ordering is that a person in a position of authority instructs another person to commit an offence. No formal superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and the perpetrator is required. It is sufficient that there is proof of some position of the part of the accused that would compel another to commit a crime in following the accused's order.[33]

(v) Planning

20. Planning is the formulation of a design by which individuals will execute a crime. Participation in such planning must be substantial, such as actually formulating the criminal plan or endorsing a plan proposed by another, for individual liability to arise.[34]

4. Liability for Omissions

21. Evidence was heard during the trial which the Prosecution characterizes as showing the Accused's failure to do certain things at certain times. The permissible legal significance of this evidence (or, more accurately, of this characterization) is disputed. In this section, the Chamber will consider the various ways in which omissions may be relevant to the crimes and forms of participation with which the Accused is charged.

(i) Omission as Evidence of Aiding and Abetting

22. Evidence which is characterized as an omission can be used to show that an accused aided and abetted a crime. A well-established example is the mere presence of a person in authority at the scene of a crime. Such presence could "bestow[] legitimacy on, or provide[] encouragement to, the actual perpetrator", particularly when the accused is in a position of some authority over the attacker.[35] Liability is not automatic, even for a person of high office, and must be proven by showing that the accused's inaction had an encouraging or approving effect on the perpetrators; that the effect was substantial; and that the accused knew of this effect and of the perpetrator's criminal intention, albeit without necessarily sharing the perpetrators' criminal intent.[36] Of course, by choosing to be present, the accused is taking a positive step which may contribute to the crime. Properly understood, criminal responsibility is derived not from the omission alone, but from the omission combined with the choice to be present.

[36] Kayishema and Ruzindana, Judgement (AC), para. 201 (approving that an accused may "incur individual responsibility provided he is aware of the possible effect of his presence (albeit passive) on the commission of the crime. In the case at bar, the Trial Chamber held that the Accused's failure to oppose the killing constituted a form of tacit encouragement in light of his position of authority"); Ndindabahizi, Judgement (TC), para. 457 ("It is not the position of authority itself that is important, but rather the encouraging effect that a person holding the office may lend to events"); Semanza, Judgement (TC), para. 386 ("Responsibility, however, is not automatic, and the nature of the accused's presence must be considered against the background of the factual circumstances"); Blaskic, Judgement (TC), para. 284; Krnojelac, Judgement (TC), para. 89 ("Presence alone at the scene of the crime is not conclusive of aiding and abetting unless it is demonstrated to have a significant legitimising or encouraging effect on the principal offender").

23. Other examples of aiding and abetting through failure to act are not to be easily found in the annals of the ad hoc Tribunals. The Appeals Chamber has left the category open, observing that "in the circumstances of a given case, an omission may constitute the actus reus of aiding and abetting".[37] On the other hand, inaction without being present at the scene of a crime has been excluded as a basis for proving these elements:

> Criminal responsibility as an "approving spectator" does require actual presence during the commission of the crime or at least presence in the immediate vicinity of the scene of the crime, which is perceived by the actual perpetrator as approval of his conduct.[38]

This would not, of course, preclude aiding and abetting liability for a person who had previously committed positive acts of assistance or encouragement which contributed substantially to the commission of a crime in his absence.[39]

(ii) Omission as Evidence of Participation in a Joint Criminal Enterprise

24. Involvement in a joint criminal enterprise may also be proven by evidence characterized as an omission. The objective element of participation is satisfied as long as the accused has "committed an act or an omission which contributes to the common criminal purpose".[40] Although it is hard to imagine that total passivity could demonstrate the requisite intent for co-perpetratorship, an omission in combination with positive acts might have great significance. The Appeals Chamber upheld an inference of guilt where an omission was combined with a series of other findings concerning the position and conduct of the accused, namely:

> that he held a high-ranking position in the camp and had some degree of authority over the guards; that he had sufficient influence to prevent or halt some of the abuses but that he made use of that influence only very rarely; that he carried out his tasks diligently, participating actively in the running of the camp; that through his own participation, in the eyes of other participants, he endorsed what was happening in the camp.[41]

The failure of the accused to intervene more frequently was an omission; but its significance in proving the criminal mental state of the accused, and its consequence for the victims, depended on a series of positive acts preceding the omission.

(iii) Omission as Failure of Duty to Prevent or Punish

25. Liability for an omission may arise in a third, fundamentally different context: where the accused is charged with a duty to prevent or punish others from committing a crime. The culpability arises not by participating in the commission of a crime, but by allowing another person to commit a crime which the Accused has a duty to prevent or punish.

26. The circumstances in which such a duty has been recognized in international criminal law are limited indeed. As stated by the Appeals Chamber in Tadic:

> The basic assumption must be that in international law as much as in national systems, the foundation of criminal responsibility is the principle of personal culpability: nobody may be

[37] Blaskic, Judgement (AC), para. 47 ("The Appeals Chamber leaves open the possibility that in the circumstances of a given case, an omission may constitute the actus reus of aiding and abetting").
[38] Semanza, Judgement (TC), para. 386; Bagilishema, Judgement (TC), paras. 34, 36. The Chamber is aware that this comment may refer only to a particular type of aiding and abetting by omission, and that it was not necessarily intended to be a comprehensive statement about aiding and abetting.
[39] One recent exception is Bisengimana, Judgement (TC). Although the Chamber formally found the accused to have been guilty of aiding and abetting on the basis of an omission, no findings were made that the accused's inaction had substantially contributed to the commission of the crime. On the contrary, the Chamber made a finding, conceded by the accused, that he owed a "a duty to protect" the victims. This represents a basis for liability different from aiding and abetting.
[40] Kvocka et al., Judgement (AC), para. 187.
[41] Id., para. 195.

held criminally responsible for acts or transactions in which he has not personally engaged or in some other way participated (nulla poena sine culpa).[42]

Article 6 (3) of the Statute creates an exception to this principle in relation to a crime about to be, or which has been, committed by a subordinate. Where the superior knew or had reason to know of the crime, he or she must "take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof".[43] In Blaskic, the Appeals Chamber extended this liability by finding that a superior could also be liable under 6 (1) for the mistreatment by his subordinates of prisoners used as human shields, not because he had given an order to do so, but because, as commandant, he was under a direct "legal duty … to care for the persons under the control of [his] subordinates. Wilful failure to discharge such a duty may incur criminal responsibility pursuant to Article [6 (1)] of the Statute in the absence of a positive act".[44] The Geneva Conventions were relied upon as imposing specific positive obligations on the accused.[45]

27. Some Trial Chambers have discovered duties to prevent the criminal acts of others in situations other than the superior-subordinate relationship.[46] In light of the findings below concerning notice, this Chamber need not consider the correctness of those judgements. The important point, for present purposes, is that liability for failing to discharge a duty to prevent or punish is a species of criminal liability distinct from omissions which prove aiding and abetting or joint criminal enterprise. On any view, liability for failing to discharge a duty to prevent or punish requires proof that: (i) the Accused was bound by a specific legal duty to prevent a crime; (ii) the accused was aware of, and wilfully refused to discharge, his legal duty; and (iii) the crime took place.[47] Although the Prosecution need not use any magic formulation of words, the pleadings must at least, in substance, articulate these three elements.

5. Notice

(i) Failure to Plead Duty to Prevent or Punish Criminal Acts

28. In its Closing Brief, the Prosecution purports to characterize the Accused's criminal responsibility as "Aiding and Abetting By Omission". Four conditions of this form of criminal liability are then set forth:

> For an accused to incur criminal liability for an omission in furtherance of the objectives of a JCE, the following elements must be proved: That the accused had a duty to act; That the accused had the ability to act; That the accused failed to act, intending or with knowledge that a crime or crimes would be committed; and That the failure to act resulted in the commission of a crime.[48]

The Closing Brief then discusses at length the evidence which purports to show that the Accused had a legal duty to act under Rwandan law; that he had a variety of legal powers and resources at his disposal as bourgmestre to prevent or punish criminal acts; that he failed to exercise such authority

[45] Id., para. 663, fn. 1384 and fn. 1385. The possibility of positive duties being created by international criminal law also appears to have been recognized in Tadic, Judgement (AC), para. 188 ("[Article 6 (1)] covers first and foremost the physical perpetration of a crime by the offender himself, or the culpable omission of an act that was mandated by a rule of criminal law").

[48] Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 200. On another occasion, the Prosecution argues that the failure of the duty to act proves aiding and abetting: T. 3 May 2006 p. 42 ("our submission is that the evidence led before you has passed the test of culpable omission we set out in our brief – in our closing brief, and can therefore form the basis for a conviction for aiding and abetting through, inter alia, the omissions proved"). These four conditions appear to have been adapted from the Rutaganira Judgement, para. 67.

knowing that crimes would result; and that such crimes did, in fact, take place.[49] In substance, this form of liability is the type described in the previous section: a failure of a duty to prevent or punish. The Defence argues that it had no notice of this form of criminal liability and that, accordingly, the Accused cannot be convicted on this basis.

29. Article 20 (4) (a) of the Statute requires that an accused "be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he or she understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him or her". An accused can be convicted of only those crimes with which he or she is charged in the Indictment.[50] The level of specificity required to describe the accused's mode of participation in a crime has been explained as follows:

> If an indictment merely quotes the provisions of Article [6 (1)] without specifying which mode or modes of responsibility are being pleaded, then the charges against the accused may be ambiguous. When the Prosecution is intending to rely on all modes of responsibility in Article [6 (1)], then the material facts relevant to each of those modes must be pleaded in the indictment. Otherwise, the indictment will be defective either because it pleads modes of responsibility which do not form part of the Prosecution's case, or because the Prosecution has failed to plead material facts for the modes of responsibility it is alleging.[51]

A vague indictment may be remedied by giving the accused timely, clear and consistent information concerning the nature of the charges or material facts so as to remedy the ambiguity.[52] Where such clarifying information has been communicated, if a party raises an objection during trial, the Chamber must still consider whether fairness requires amendment of the indictment, an adjournment, or the exclusion of evidence.[53] Even in the absence of any objection, no conviction can be entered against an accused if he or she was not in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her.[54]

30. The types of communication which can remedy an unclear indictment were recently canvassed by the Appeals Chamber:

> [T]he Appeals Chamber has in some cases looked at information provided through the Prosecution's pre-trial brief or its opening statement. The Appeals Chamber considers that the list of witnesses the Prosecution intends to call at trial, containing a summary of the facts and the charges in the indictment as to which each witness will testify and including specific references to counts and relevant paragraphs in the indictment, may in some cases serve to put the accused on notice. However, the mere service of witness statements or of potential exhibits by the Prosecution pursuant to disclosure requirements does not suffice to inform an accused of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial.[55]

31. Neither the Indictment nor the Pre-Trial Brief make any allegation reasonably recognizable as a duty to prevent or punish the crimes of other persons, whether because of a superior-subordinate relationship or otherwise. The Indictment comes closest to doing so in paragraph 19:

> At all times material to this indictment Jean Mpambara failed to maintain public order, or deliberately undermined the public order, in districts over which he exercised administrative authority, in agreement with or in furtherance of the policies and objectives of the MRND, the Interim Government or the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6, knowing that those policies and objectives intended the destruction, in whole or in part, of the Tutsi population.

[54] Naletilic, Judgement (AC), para. 27.
[55] Naletilic, Judgement (AC), para. 27 (citations omitted).

This pleading fails to give reasonable notice of a failure to discharge a duty to prevent or punish in several respects. First, the paragraph is ambiguous as to whether the failure to maintain public order is intended to prove participation in a joint criminal enterprise or aiding and abetting, on the one hand; or whether it constitutes a breach of a duty to prevent or punish criminal acts, on the other. This ambiguity is not resolved by any subsequent communications. Paragraph 7 of the Pre-Trial Brief charges that the Accused "used his office and position of authority as Bourgmaster to actively undermine public order in furtherance of the criminal enterprise". Paragraph 22 does use the language of failure to prevent or punish the attacks, but in an ambiguous manner.[56] Paragraph 26 of the Pre-Trial Brief states that the Accused's failure to prevent attacks "not only encouraged and lent moral support to the perpetrators but showed that he shared the same intent with the perpetrators in the commission of the crimes charged". A reasonable reader would infer that the Accused's omissions were part of an overall picture which proved his participation in a joint criminal enterprise, or that he aided and abetted a crime.

32. Neither the Indictment nor the Pre-Trial Brief identify the source of the legal duty on the accused, nor is the scope of the legal duty described in any way. This is an essential element for charging an accused with a failure to prevent or punish. An accused must at least know the scope of his obligations to be in a position to dispute his alleged default. No material facts are presented in the Indictment or elsewhere as distinctly supportive of the failure to discharge a duty to prevent or punish criminal acts. Although the summaries of the testimony of witnesses contain information which could be characterized as omissions, there is no specification that those omissions are related to a duty to prevent or punish crimes, rather than being probative of participation in a joint criminal enterprise or aiding and abetting. Indeed, all indications in the Indictment and the Pre-Trial Brief suggest otherwise.

33. The Prosecution could have pleaded that the accused's omissions demonstrated both that he was a co-perpetrator or aider and abettor, on the one hand; and, on the other, that the omissions constituted a failure to prevent or punish crimes. The problem is not that the claims are incompatible, but that the failure to prevent is never distinctly pleaded.

34. The nature of the case against the accused was concisely, fairly, and eloquently summarized by the Prosecutor on the opening day of trial:

> What is the case against the Accused? In a nutshell, it is this: That within hours of the death of President Habyarimana on the 6th of April 1994, Jean Mpambara, the Accused, who was then bourgmestre of Rukara commune, acting in concert with others and in furtherance of a common criminal enterprise, knowingly and willfully embarked on a deliberate path of destruction whose singular objective was the annihilation of the Tutsi ethnic group in his commune. As a result, thousands of Tutsi civilians were killed.… The Prosecution alleges, and will establish, that Jean Mpambara is criminally responsible for having planned, ordered, instigated, committed, or otherwise aided and abetted in the commission of the crimes alleged as a key participant in the joint criminal enterprise. Evidence we will lead will further show that, in the course of the killings, Jean Mpambara was at all times aware that they were a part of a broader, widespread, or systematic attack on the Tutsi civilian population and that he used his office and position of authority as bourgmestre to actively undermine public order in furtherance of the criminal enterprise.[57]

This was the Prosecution theory of liability as of the first day of trial. There is no mention of any duty to prevent or punish crimes. It bears repeating that the Prosecution is permitted to bring potentially incompatible charges against the Accused. The defect here is not the incompatibility, but the failure to distinctly explain that the omissions alleged against the Accused constituted a breach of his duty to prevent or punish the crimes of others.

[56] Paragraph 22 of the Pre-Trial Brief, cited by the Prosecution during closing arguments, similarly gives the impression that the omissions are only relevant to proof that the accused is guilty of aiding and abetting or joint criminal enterprise: "From the facts outlined above, Jean Mpambara prompted, enabled and facilitated the actions of the attackers. His presence during the attacks, and his failure to prevent the attacks or punish the attackers, not only encouraged and lent moral support to the perpetrators but also shows that he shared the same intent with the perpetrators and was not merely an aider and abettor, but a principal perpetrator in the commission of the crimes charged". [57] T. 19 September 2005 p. 4.

35. The Accused was not in a reasonable position to understand that the Prosecution was charging him with a duty to prevent or punish crimes. Accordingly, no conviction can fairly be entered against the accused for any alleged default in discharging that duty. The Chamber will, however, consider the evidence of omissions adduced at trial to the extent that they may be probative of the accused's participation in a joint criminal enterprise or having aided and abetted another in the commission of a crime.

6. Confusion of Legal Categories in Prosecution Submissions

36. As previously discussed, the Indictment itself delineates distinct modes of commission and participation by the Accused, under Article 6 (1): commission (by participating in a joint criminal enterprise); instigating; planning; ordering; and aiding and abetting.[58] In some of its submissions, however, the Prosecution has blurred the distinction between joint criminal enterprise and aiding and abetting. More seriously, it has failed to observe the important distinction between, on the one hand, a failure to prevent criminal conduct by others; and on the other hand, participation in a joint criminal enterprise to commit a crime.

37. The Prosecution argues that it seeks to prove "criminal responsibility for commission by aiding and abetting the physical perpetrators in furtherance of a JCE".[59] This statement is legally incoherent: aiding and abetting is a form of accomplice liability, whereas participation in a joint criminal enterprise is a form of direct commission, albeit with other persons.[60] There are important differences in the mental and objective elements for each of these forms of participation which have been discussed above. As the Appeals Chamber has stated, "it would be inaccurate to refer to aiding and abetting a joint criminal enterprise".[61] The fact that the same material facts may prove both aiding and abetting and participation in a joint criminal enterprise does not diminish the importance of distinguishing between the two. To the extent that the Prosecution has, on some occasions in its submissions, suggested that the joint criminal enterprise is proven by aiding and abetting, the Chamber will ignore this legal characterization and consider whether the material facts show either that the Accused participated in a joint criminal enterprise, or that he aided and abetted others in the commission of crimes.

38. As discussed above, joint criminal enterprise is a way of committing a crime. The mens rea which must be possessed by a co-perpetrator is no different from the mens rea which must be possessed by a person committing a crime on his or her own. Thus, a person is not guilty of participating in a joint criminal enterprise merely because he knows that others are about to commit a crime, and yet does nothing to prevent the crime from being committed. The proper inquiry in such a case is whether, by doing nothing, the person (i) intended to commit, or to contribute to the commission of, the crime; and (ii) actually did contribute to the crime. Any evidence which tends to prove these elements of the crime are relevant.

39. The four-part test suggested by the Prosecution does not correspond to the requirements for commission of a crime through a joint criminal enterprise. The four-part test purports to describe [58] Indictment, paras. 6, 21.

[59] Examples of this include: T. 3 May 2006 p. 41 (referring to "the culpability of the Accused for his participation in a joint criminal enterprise by aiding and abetting"); Prosecution Closing Brief, para 37 ("In order to establish Art. 6 (1) criminal responsibility for commission by aiding and abetting the physical perpetrators in furtherance of a JCE, the Prosecutor must prove that the acts and/or omissions of the accused were committed with the same criminal intent as that of the physical perpetrators of the alleged crimes").
[60] Milutinović et al., Decision on Dragoljub Ojdanić's Motions Challenging Jurisdiction-Joint Criminal Enterprise (AC), 21 May 2003, para. 20.

something quite different: the conditions in which a duty to prevent others from committing a crime will be imposed on an accused. By conflating these two tests, the Prosecution comes perilously close to equating the failure to prevent or punish a crime with the commission of that same crime through a joint criminal enterprise. The Chamber emphatically rejects this approach. Failure to prevent or punish a crime cannot be characterized as a form of commission of that same crime.

7. Conclusion

40. The Accused is charged with co-perpetrating, ordering, instigating, and aiding and abetting genocide and extermination. The facts as discussed in the next section will be considered in accordance with the mental and objective elements of these crimes and forms of participation. Due to lack of notice, the Chamber will not consider whether the Accused failed to discharge a duty under international criminal law to prevent others from committing a crime. Nonetheless, the Chamber may consider any evidence which the Prosecution characterizes as an omission in relation to the charges which have been properly pleaded. As more fully elaborated above, the Chamber will examine whether:

- the Accused, by his acts or omissions, joined with others in a common purpose: to kill or cause serious bodily or mental harm to Tutsis, with the intention to destroy at least a substantial part of the group (genocide); or to kill civilians on a broad scale (extermination);
- the Accused, by his acts or omissions, contributed substantially to others doing so, with at least knowledge that this was the others' intention (aiding and abetting);
- the Accused planned, ordered or instigated these crimes.

Chapter III: Factual and Legal Findings

1. Introduction

41. The case against the Accused revolves around three sets of events over a six-day period: looting and killing of Tutsi residents of Gahini Secteur on 7 and 8 April 1994; an attack on Gahini Hospital on 9 April, in which Tutsi civilians were chased from their hiding places and killed; and attacks on 9 and 12 April at the Parish Church of Rukara where, on the latter date, between one and two thousand Tutsi men, women and children were massacred in a single night.[62] The Accused is not alleged to have physically participated in the killing; rather, he is said to have verbally instigated the attacks; distributed weapons on various occasions; and omitted to do things which shows that he aided and abetted the crimes.

42. The Prosecution theory is that these attacks were the product of an ongoing joint criminal enterprise. To the extent that direct evidence of the Accused's involvement in that joint criminal enterprise may be lacking, the Prosecution has invited the Chamber to infer his involvement based on the inferences from the totality of the evidence. The Chamber has accordingly been mindful of the totality of the evidence and, where necessary, has explicitly analyzed the cumulative effect of relevant evidence. The Chamber has also in some respects been presented with a circumstantial case, which "consists of evidence of a number of different circumstances which, taken in combination, point to the guilt of the accused person because they would usually exist in combination only because the accused did what is alleged against him".[63] In assessing whether circumstantial evidence proves a conclusion beyond reasonable doubt, the Chamber has applied the following standard:

[62] Other events are pleaded in the Indictment, but were withdrawn by the Prosecution at the close of its case: The Prosecutor's Response to the Defence Motion for Judgement of Acquittal Under Rule 98 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, 10 October 2005, para. 11 (withdrawing paras. 9 (iii), 9 (iv), 9 (v), 14, 16, and 20).

> It is not sufficient that it is a reasonable conclusion available from that evidence. It must be the only reasonable conclusion available. If there is another conclusion which is also reasonably open from that evidence, and which is consistent with the innocence of the accused, he must be acquitted.[64]

43. This Chapter is structured around each of the material facts posited in the Prosecution Closing Brief. The relevant evidence is weighed to determine whether the material fact has been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. In so doing, the testimony of individual witnesses, including the Accused, will be summarized to the extent necessary to understand the totality of relevant evidence heard by the Chamber. This does not mean, unless otherwise indicated, that the evidence is accepted. The Chamber has made factual findings only in relation to matters which, in its view, are necessary for the determination of the material facts. Where necessary, the overall credibility of a witness is discussed. The Chamber has not considered it necessary to explicitly address each and every argument presented by the parties: some arguments are discussed only generally or indirectly, or not at all where the Chamber did not consider it necessary to do so.[65]

2. Position of the Accused

44. Jean Mpambara was appointed bourgmestre of Rukara Commune in July 1989. Although Rukara was his native commune, he had not lived there for more than a decade, having attended university in Butare and worked in Kigali as a civil servant. Immediately before his appointment, Mpambara worked in the Office of the President, where he was in charge of publication of the official gazette.[66]

45. As bourgmestre, Mpambara was the chief executive authority of the Commune. He reported to the préfet and sous-préfet of Kibungo, who were, in turn, answerable to the Minister of the Interior and the President of Rwanda.[67] The bourgmestre acted in consultation with a council of eight conseillers, each elected to five-year terms by their respective secteurs.[68] Mpambara lived in an official residence located about one hundred metres from the commune offices and several hundred metres from the Rukara Parish Church complex.[69] The nearest town of significance was a place called Rwamagana, about 30 minutes away by car, where there were a gendarmerie camp, the residence of the sous-préfet, and a telephone line to the outside world.[70]

[64] Id., para. 458; Stakic, Judgement (AC), para. 219 ("Where the challenge on appeal is to an inference drawn to establish a fact on which the conviction relies, the standard [of reasonable doubt] is only satisfied if the inference drawn was the only reasonable one that could be drawn from the evidence presented. In such circumstances, the question for the Appeals Chamber is whether it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to exclude or ignore other inferences that lead to the conclusion that an element of the crime was not proven".). The Prosecution recognizes throughout its Closing Brief that evidence concerning one discrete event is often only indirectly and circumstantially relevant to another event: "on the basis of the direct and circumstantial evidence … the Chamber can safely infer that Rukara Parish was deliberately left undefended … consistent with Mpambara's prior planning and preparation for the attack on the Tutsi refugees at the parish through instigating and facilitating the attackers with grenades, in furtherance of the JCE" (para. 142); "the only inference to be drawn from the foregoing analysis of the evidence is that the accused, consistent with his conduct and statements in Paris that morning, convened the Ruyenzi meeting to issue instructions for the attack on the Tutsi refugees" (para. 156).

The Appeals Chamber cannot be expected to provide comprehensive reasoned opinions on evidently unfounded submissions. Only this approach allows the Appeals Chamber to concentrate on the core issues of an appeal"); Musema, Judgement (AC), paras. 118-123.

46. The communal police force normally consisted of seven officers, although one was on annual leave in April 1994, and another never reported for duty after 7 April.[71] The commune armoury contained four Kalashnikov rifles, two Enfield rifles, and six other spare rifles.[72] Neither the police nor the commune had telephones or two-way radios, and the police travelled on bicycles unless transported in one of the commune's two vehicles, one of which was a white pick-up truck.[73] After the RPF invasion of northern Rwanda in 1990, a squad of gendarmes was posted near the commune office, but frequently departed on missions for days at a time, as it did on the morning of 7 April.[74] The Defence presented evidence, which the Prosecution did not seriously contest, that the bourgmestre had no legal authority over the gendarmes, who remained under the direction of their commanding officer even when posted in a commune at the bourgmestre's request.[75]

3. Attacks in Gahini Secteur on 7 and 8 April

3.1. Introduction

47. On the evening of 7 April and the morning of 8 April 1994, attacks occurred in Gahini Secteur, Rukara Commune, resulting in the deaths of Tutsi residents and in the looting and burning of many homes.[76] The attacks originated at a small marketplace called Akabeza Centre and were said to have been organized and led by the Conseiller of Gahini Secteur, Jean Bosco Butera. Three meetings were purportedly held at Akabeza Centre to plan and instigate the attacks: one on the morning of 7 April, and one preceding each of the two attacks on 7 and 8 April. The Accused is alleged to have participated in these meetings with Conseiller Butera and to have publicly instigated the attacks. Mpambara is also alleged to have given Butera weapons on the morning of 7 April, which were later used in the attacks. The Accused testified that he went to Akabeza Centre on several occasions over the course of these two days but asserted that, rather than fomenting the violence as claimed by the Prosecution, he tried to discourage the attacks.

3.2. Indictment

48. The Indictment reads:

> 7. Jean Mpambara participated in the preparation and execution of the campaign against the Tutsi civilian population in Rukara commune, Kibungo préfecture. The campaign consisted of … (iii) distributing arms to Interahamwe and Hutu civilians for purposes of attacks against the Tutsi population.[77]

Although the Prosecution argued generally that the acts and omissions of the Accused must be considered in the context of his "office and position of authority as Bourgmestre" (Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 10) the legal authority associated with his office was not a matter on which the Chamber heard extensive testimony. Most of the evidence on this question was adduced through the Accused himself. The present discussion of the legal authority of bourgmestre under Rwandan law in 1994 is, accordingly, more limited than in some other judgements of this Tribunal. See, e.g., Bagilishema, Judgement (TC), paras. 147-225. In the absence of more comprehensive evidence, or any need to make more detailed findings, the Chamber's description here must be understood as based on the limited evidence placed before it.
[76] The Accused does not, however, contest that killings took place in Umwiga and Ibiza Cellules on 7 and 8 April 1994. Déclarations des Admissions de la Défense, 30 May 2005, paras. 9-10.
[77] The Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief considerably narrowed the scope of these allegations and asserted that "[o]n or about 7th April between 9.00 and 11.00 a.m. at Rukara Commune office Samson Gacumbitsi, Jean Bosco Butera, Samuel Gasana and Manasse Kanyamurerea received ten guns from Jean Mpambara, with orders that all Tutsis should be killed. The said guns

9. Jean Mpambara organized or participated in meetings, as follows:

(i) on or about 7 April 1994, at Samson Gacumbitsi's place in Akabeza Trading Center, with other commune authorities and influential persons including conseiller de secteur Jean Bosco BUTERA, Police Brigadier Ruhiguri, Samson Gacumbitsi and Samuel Gasana.

(ii) on or about 8 April 1994, at Samson Gacumbitsi's place in Akabeza Trading Center, with other commune authorities and influential persons.[78]

11. On the evening of 7 April 1994, after the meetings in Akabeza Trading Center, Jean Mpambara ordered the gathered Hutu militia to attack the Tutsi population. Other members of the joint criminal enterprise including Jean Bosco Butera, Samson Gacumbitsi and Samuel Gasana led groups of armed Hutu civilians and Interahamwe to attack Tutsis in Umwiga Cellule. They attacked and killed a number of Tutsi civilians including Kayitesi and her two children, Anatalie and Gatsinzi.

12. On the morning of 8 April 1994, members of the joint criminal enterprise including Jean Bosco Butera led groups of armed Hutu civilians and Interahamwe, who gathered in Akabeza Trading Center, to attack Tutsis in Ibiza Cellule. They attacked and killed a number of Tutsi civilians including a man named David.

The legal characterization of the Accused's participation is expressed in paragraph 6 of the Indictment:

Jean Mpambara ordered those over whom he had command responsibility and control as a result of his position and authority described in paragraph 2. He instigated and aided and abetted those over whom he did not have command responsibility and control to attack the Tutsi population. In addition, the accused willfully and knowingly participated in a joint criminal enterprise whose object, purpose, and foreseeable outcome was the destruction of the Tutsi racial or ethnic group throughout Rwanda. To fulfill this criminal purpose, the accused acted with military and community leaders and members of the Interahamwe in Rukara Commune such as … conseiller de secteur Jean Bosco Butera, Police Brigadier Ruhiguri, Businessman Samson Gacumbitsi, Samuel Gasana … and other unknown participants.[79]

3.3. Evidence

3.3.1. Overview of Submissions

49. The Prosecution argues that the evidence shows that the Accused:

- distributed weapons at the Rukara Commune office on the morning of 7 April 1994, which were later used in attacks in Gahini Secteur;
- met with other influential persons at Akabeza Centre on the morning of 7 April 1994 to discuss plans for killing Tutsis, and publicly encouraged such attacks; were later that day distributed to attackers by Jean Bosco Butera and used to kill Tutsi civilians".[77] Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, para. 21. See also paras. 25, 28.

[78] The meetings on 7 and 8 April at Gacumbitsi's place are alleged as part of a joint criminal enterprise, through which the Accused knowingly and willfully acted with military and community leaders as well as members of the Interahamwe in a scheme to eliminate the Tutsi population throughout Rwanda (and specifically in Rukara Commune between 7 and 16 April 1994). Indictment, paras. 6-7, 10.

[79] This paragraph supports the charges of genocide and complicity in genocide. Similar allegations appear in paragraph 21 for the charge of extermination as a crime against humanity.

- publicly encouraged attacks at Akabeza Centre again on the evening of 7 April 1994, which led to attacks that evening in the Umwiga and Ibiza Cellules;
- patrolled Umwiga and Ibiza Cellules on 8 April 1994 with two gendarmes and actively encouraged killings of Tutsis; and
- purposefully failed to arrest those responsible or otherwise prevent the killings or take stronger action to stop the violence on 8 April 1994 as killings were taking place.[80]

3.3.2. Distribution of Weapons at Commune Office, 7 April

50. The Prosecution relies principally on the testimony of Witness AVK to establish that the Accused distributed rifles and grenades to Butera, Gasana, Gacumbitsi and others at the Rukara Commune office on the morning of 7 April 1994, which were later stored at Gacumbitsi's place in Akabeza Centre and used in attacks on Tutsis.[81] Witness AVK, who served a prison sentence in Rwanda for his role in attacks against Tutsis in Gahini Secteur, testified that on the morning of 7 April at approximately 9.30 or 10.00 a.m., he saw Butera, Gasana, Gacumbitsi, Kanyamurera and Semana leave Akabeza Centre in Gasana's vehicle, heading toward the commune office.[82] Butera said that they wanted the bourgmestre's advice.[83] At approximately 10.30 or 11.00 a.m., they returned and carried 10 Kalashnikov rifles and a box into Gacumbitsi's shop.[84] Witness AVK later learned that the box contained grenades, but was never told where the weapons had come from.[85]

51. The Accused acknowledged that Butera, Gasana, and Gacumbitsi came to the commune office that morning but denied that he distributed any weapons to them.[86] He testified that they arrived around 7.30 a.m. and asked how they should conduct themselves in light of the President's death.[87] The Accused testified that he told them to return to their secteurs and tell people to remain in their homes and avoid trouble.[88] Butera asked for a rifle to maintain security, but the Accused refused, saying that Butera was a civilian and was not authorized to carry a gun.[89] Butera became angry, and the three individuals left the commune office without any weapons, returning in the direction of Gahini.[90]

52. The Prosecution also relies on Witness LEV, who testified that he saw the Accused at the commune office with three communal policemen at approximately 6.30 a.m.[91] Later that morning, he

It is unclear from the record whether the Accused also had means to gain access to the store room.
[90] Id. p. 40 (Mpambara).
[91] T. 27 September 2005 pp. 13-14 (Witness LEV). The Prosecution also points to the testimony of Witness LEF, but his testimony has no probative value other than that it fails to corroborate the account given by Witness AVK. Witness LEF, who rented a room from Gacumbitsi in Akabeza Centre, testified that he did not see Butera, Gacumbitsi, and Gasana leave Akabeza Centre that morning nor did he see them return in Gasana's vehicle. T. 21 September 2005 p. 64. Witness LEF also stated that he saw weapons stockpiled at Gacumbitsi's place. T. 22 September 2005 pp. 3-5. However, Witness LEF only saw the weapons there around 17 April 1994, after the Rwandan Patriotic Front arrived in Rukara commune and broke the door open on Gacumbitsi's shop, leaving it exposed to looters. T. 21 September 2005 p. 57; T. 22 September 2005 p. 7. This saw two cars heading from the commune office toward Gahini Secteur: the first carrying Butera, Gatambara, Musirikare and others; and the second, approximately twenty minutes later, carrying Mpambara, a driver and two communal police.[92] Witness LEV did not, however, witness the meeting at the commune office, nor did he see Butera or the other men in possession of any weapons.

53. There is no direct evidence that the Accused distributed weapons to Butera or the other men. No witness saw any such distribution or heard that it had taken place. The Chamber will only infer criminal conduct on the basis of circumstantial evidence where, as previously mentioned, it is "the only reasonable conclusion available".[93] The evidence presented, assuming that it is credible, does not foreclose the reasonable possibility that the weapons were obtained elsewhere.[94] No evidence was heard, for example, suggesting that the communal armoury was the only possible source of the weapons in Butera's possession. The Chamber does not find beyond a reasonable doubt that Mpambara distributed weapons to Butera on the morning of 7 April.

3.3.3. First Gathering at Akabeza Centre, 7 April

54. Witnesses AVK and LEF alleged that the Accused came to Akabeza Centre on the morning of 7 April 1994; that he met with the leaders of the subsequent attacks; and that he verbally encouraged killing of Tutsis.

55. According to Witness AVK, the Accused arrived in the white communal pick-up truck around 11.00 a.m., accompanied by a driver and an armed communal policeman.[95] Mpambara entered Gacumbitsi's shop and met with Gacumbitsi, Gasana and Butera.[96] After approximately twenty minutes, the group reemerged onto the veranda, where Gacumbitsi told the crowd that the President's death was the work of the Tutsis and that his death needed to be avenged by killing them.[97] While Gacumbitsi was still speaking, but after these remarks instigating the killings, Mpambara boarded his vehicle and drove away.[98]

56. Witness LEF, a Tutsi who ran a small shop behind Gacumbitsi's bar, testified that he saw the Accused arrive between 9.00 and 10.00 a.m. at Akabeza Centre with two communal police named Ngarambe and Ruhiguri as well as a driver.[99] Upon exiting his truck, the Accused said, "in a very loud voice": "I used to think that the people from Gahini were strong, courageous, and how can there be no – any Tutsi corpses around when the head of state has been killed?".[100] Mpambara entered Gacumbitsi's place for a meeting, while Butera stayed outside and told the crowd that they needed to avenge the President's death.[101] Mpambara came out of Gacumbitsi's shop and left after speaking briefly with Butera.[102] Butera and Gacumbitsi then discussed how to carry out the attacks.[103] testimony is insufficient to link the stockpiling of weapons at Gacumbitsi's place in Akabeza to the events of the morning of 7 April 1994 and does not connect the weapons to the Accused in any way.

[92] T. 27 September 2005 pp. 15-17. While Witness LEV mentioned that others were travelling with Butera when he passed by the witness's place of employment, the Chamber notes that Witness LEV failed to mention Gacumbitsi and Gasana, two prominent figures in the community, who were alleged to have been with Butera that morning.

[93] Mucic et al., Judgement (AC), para. 458; Stakic, Judgement (AC), para. 219.

[94] The Prosecution conceded during closing arguments that "it's circumstantial evidence, but looking back on the train of events as they unfolded, it's our submission that you can be sure that you can make that inferential finding that there is a direct causation. MR. PRESIDENT: Is that – is that finding the only finding that is open, that it was, indeed, the Accused who is the source of those weapons? MS. MOBBERLEY: Obviously, it's not, Your Honours…". 57. The Accused testified that he visited Akabeza Centre around 10.30 a.m. as part of a tour of the commune, following reports of violence.[104] Mpambara told the population to close their shops and return to their homes.[105] Although it is not entirely clear from the record, he appears to have been driving himself in the communal vehicle, accompanied by Ngarambe, a communal policeman.[106] The Accused testified that he did not stay long at Akabeza Centre and continued on toward Kawangire and Rwimishinya Secteurs, where he crossed paths with Father Ganuza Lasa Santos, the Spanish priest of Rukara Parish.[107] Mpambara and Father Santos returned to the Parish church together, where they arrived at approximately 11.00 a.m.[108]

58. The testimony of Witnesses AVK and LEF diverge in several significant respects.[109] First, Witness AVK did not hear the Accused ask why there were no Tutsi corpses, even though he testified that he saw the Accused arrive.[110] Second, the witnesses differ as to whether Butera entered Gacumbitsi's place to participate in the meeting or rather remained outside on the veranda. Witness AVK specifically recalled seeing Butera enter Gacumbitsi's shop and remain there for twenty minutes, whereas Witness LEF was adamant that Butera stayed outside to hector the crowd.[111] Third, Witness LEF recalls no speech being made by Gacumbitsi after the meeting, whereas Witness AVK testified that Gacumbitsi addressed the crowd in the presence of the Accused, instigating them to kill Tutsis.[112]

59. These discrepancies cannot be explained by the witnesses' different vantage points, as argued by the Prosecution. Each witness gave specific eyewitness testimony describing the Accused's arrival, entry into Gacumbitsi's shop, emergence from the shop, and then departure from Akabeza. The discrepancies are significant enough to raise a reasonable doubt as to the reliability of both witnesses in respect of this event. The overall credibility of Witness AVK is also undermined by his testimony concerning the Accused's presence at Gahini Hospital on 9 April, discussed by the Chamber in [109] In addition to the discrepancies to be discussed in detail by the Chamber, other minor discrepancies exist which further diminish the weight to be given their testimonies. For example, Witnesses AVK and LEF differ in their accounts as to the number of communal police that accompanied the Accused that morning and the identity of these policemen. At trial, Witness AVK testified that the Accused arrived with one communal policeman whom the witness did not recognize and a driver. T. 21 September 2005 p. 2. The witness specified that the policeman was not the Brigadier Gervais Ruhiguri. T. 21 September 2005 p. 3. However, in his statement to OTP investigators dated 11 October 2004, he expressly stated that the Accused was accompanied by Brigadier Ruhiguri and a driver. Exhibit D-11 p. 3. Witness LEF, on the other hand, testified before the Tribunal in this case and in the Bizimungu et al. case that the Accused arrived with two communal policemen named Ruhiguri and Ngarambe and a driver. T. 21 September 2005 p. 65; Prosecutor v. Bizimungu et al., T. 15 March 2004 p. 35. In his 17 July 2001 statement to OTP investigators, Witness LEF stated that the Accused arrived with only one communal policeman named Ngarambe and a driver. Exhibit D-8A p. 3. He made no mention of the Brigadier Ruhiguri. The Chamber notes that, in addition to the witnesses' internal inconsistencies, their accounts may be inconsistent with each other on these issues. Witness LEF also failed to discuss the meeting at Gacumbitsi's place and Butera's address to the crowd during this meeting in his 2001 statement to OTP investigators. Exhibit D-8A. In addition, the Defence argues that LEF's testimony that a man named Alphonse Mugiraneza was present at Akabeka Centre that morning is contradicted by Witness LET's testimony that the man was at Gahini market, approximately two kilometres away, at the same time. Mémoire Final Aux Fins d'Acquittement p. 10. Finally, the Defence takes issue with the witnesses' assertions that the Accused had a driver, as the Accused and several other witnesses testified that the Accused did not have a driver during the events of April 1994. Mémoire Final Aux Fins d'Acquittement p. 9; T. 6 February 2006 pp. 16-17 (Mpambara); T. 7 February 2006 p. 41 (Mpambara); T. 27 January 2006 pp. 14-16 (Habineza). T. 26 September 2005 p. 7 (Witness LED); T. 31 January 2006 p. 12 (Serukwavu).

Section 4.3.7 below. Accordingly, in light of the irreconcilable discrepancies in the testimony of the only Prosecution witnesses to this event, and overall unreliability of Witness AVK's testimony concerning the Accused, the Chamber entertains a reasonable doubt that the Accused verbally instigated attacks on the Tutsi population, or that he stood by while others did so.

3.3.4. Second Gathering at Akabeza Centre and Ensuing Attacks, 7 April

60. The Prosecution relies solely on the testimony of Witness AVK to establish that Mpambara met Gacumbitsi and others at Akabeza Centre on the evening of 7 April 1994 and that he instigated a crowd to kill Tutsis. Witness AVK testified that people began to reassemble at Akabeza Centre around 6.00 p.m. that evening.[113] Mpambara arrived shortly thereafter and entered Gacumbitsi's place.[114] When the Accused reemerged, he and Butera stood on Gacumbitsi's veranda as they had earlier that day.[115] Butera blew a whistle, drawing people to gather around.[116] Witness AVK heard Mpambara tell the crowd that they needed to avenge the death of their father by killing Tutsis and to prevent themselves from becoming slaves.[117] After the Accused's departure, Butera blew the whistle again, and the group moved about ten metres down the road.[118] Witness AVK testified that Butera gave instructions for carrying out the killings and identified the houses to be targeted.[119] Butera blew his whistle a third time, leading attacks on the homes of five Tutsis that evening.[120] The attackers surrounded each house, broke down doors, killed anyone inside, and looted whatever could be found.[121] After the attack, the mob returned to Akabeza Centre where they were given beer and soda by Gacumbitsi and Gasana and told to return the following morning to continue the attacks.[122]

61. The Accused denied these allegations, testifying that he passed through Akabeza Centre in the afternoon, told people gathered there to return to their homes immediately, and that he returned to the commune office shortly before 6.00 p.m.[123]

62. Defence witness Félicien Serukwavu, a local carpenter of Tutsi origin, found a group of twenty to twenty-five people with machetes and clubs at Akabeza Centre in the late afternoon that day.[124]

The Chamber notes, however, that Witness AVK estimated the crowd at Akabeza Centre in the morning to be one hundred persons whereas Witness LEF attested to twenty to thirty persons. Compare id. p. 2 (Witness AVK) with id. p. 54 (Witness LEF). The crowd consisted of Hutu civilians and former soldiers in civilian clothes. Id. pp. 6-7 (Witness AVK). He testified that it was still daylight but that it was beginning to be twilight by the time he left Akabeza Centre. Id. pp. 6-7.

Butera was telling the crowd that they had to avenge their parent's death.[125] Serukwavu continued home and did not leave his home again until the following day.[126]

63. For reasons discussed more fully in Section 4.3.7, the Chamber entertains a reasonable doubt concerning Witness AVK's uncorroborated testimony incriminating the Accused. Moreover, Serukwavu's credible testimony contradicts that of Witness AVK, although it does not exclude the possibility that the Accused may have been present at Akabeza at some moment that evening. Nevertheless, the Chamber finds that the testimony of Witness AVK does not establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused instigated the killing of Tutsis on the evening of 7 April at Akabeza Centre, or that he attended a meeting at Gacumbitsi's place as part of a joint criminal enterprise to kill the Tutsi population.

3.3.5. Third Gathering at Akabeza Centre and Ensuing Attacks, 8 April

64. The Prosecution again relies on the uncorroborated testimony of Witness AVK to prove that the Accused encouraged killings in Ibiza Cellule on 8 April 1994.[127] Witness AVK testified that he and other attackers reconvened at Akabeza Centre that morning.[128] Butera gave instructions for carrying out more killings and divided the attackers into four groups, which proceeded to ravage Ibiza Cellule for the remainder of the day.[129] The attackers chased a Tutsi man named David Twamugabo into his house, where they tried to kill him with a grenade.[130] According to Witness AVK, the Accused arrived on the scene in the communal vehicle, accompanied by two gendarmes. Mpambara beckoned to Witness AVK and asked him where the grenade had exploded. When Witness AVK responded that it was Twamugabo's house, the Accused asked, "What are you doing? Are you failing to carry out your operations? What is it?".[131] The gendarmes accompanying the Accused then said, "Maybe you are short of firearms. Should we give you more weapons?".[132] Witness AVK gave no response, and the Accused and the gendarmes drove away.[133]

65. Defence Witness Félicien Serukwavu also saw the attacks that day, including the one on Twamugabo's house. After hearing shouts from that direction, Serukwavu went to Ibiza Cellule around 11.00 a.m. and stood a short distance away from Twamugabo's house.[134] Attackers using clubs, machetes and sticks removed the roof, door and windows of the house, but Serukwavu neither heard nor saw any explosions.[135] A short time later, Serukwavu saw Mpambara arrive accompanied by two communal policemen carrying rifles.[136] Mpambara looked angry as he exited his vehicle and said, "Anybody who loots the property of Tutsis or hunts down Tutsis trying to kill them should know that he should be – he will be tried in courts for it … I ask everybody to leave this premises and return

The attackers were divided into four groups led by Ruvugo, Nyagutungwa, Mugiraneza, and Butera. Although the witness's testimony was ambiguous as to which group he joined, it is at least clear that he was not in the group led by Butera.
[130] Id. p. 14. Twamugabo was not injured by the grenade. However, all of the attackers came to his house when they heard the grenade and began throwing arrows and stones at the house. Finally, Butera and Munyemana entered the house and killed Twamugabo, according to the witness.

[135] T. 31 January 2006 pp. 8, 27 (Serukwavu).

Witnesses AVK and Serukwavu differ as to whether the two persons travelling with the Accused were gendarmes or communal police, but the Chamber does not find this discrepancy to be significant insofar as both witnesses establish that the Accused was travelling with two law enforcement officers. The Chamber notes, however, that Mpambara recalled only having one communal policeman with him on that day. T. 8 February 2006 p. 56.

home".[137] Many attackers fled when they saw Mpambara arrive, and others dispersed at his instruction.[138]

66. Witness NK5, a peasant farmer living in the area who had come to buy food at Gacumbitsi's shop, confirmed the Accused's presence at Akabeza Centre that morning.[139] She testified that the Accused addressed a group outside Gacumbitsi's shop and told them not to turn against each other.[140] Witness NK5 described the Accused as "very sad" and "almost crying".[141] After his departure, a number of people gathered around Butera and began calling the Accused an accomplice of the Tutsi.[142]

67. Another Defence witness, Marie Rose Niwemugeni, testified that Mpambara came to Gahini market, which is not far from Akabeza Centre, around noon that day, accompanied by communal police.[143] According to Niwemugeni, the Accused told people gathered there to go back to their homes and not to engage in the same type of violence that was occurring in the neighbouring commune of Murambi.[144] As the Accused drove off in the direction of Gahini Hospital, the witness saw many residents begin to return to their homes and heard people call Mpambara a Tutsi accomplice.[145]

68. The Accused acknowledges that killings took place in Ibiza Cellule that day but denies that he encouraged the attacks in any way. He testified that he was informed of killings in Gahini Secteur by Brigadier Ruhiguri on the morning of 8 April at around 7.00 a.m.[146] The two immediately went to Akabeza Centre, where residents told them of the events of the previous evening.[147] After touring the secteur to assess the damage, they returned to Akabeza Centre, where Mpambara reprimanded the crowd for the attacks and told them that the killings had to stop.[148] He also spoke directly with Butera, reiterating the need to quell the violence and instructing him to prepare a report identifying those responsible.[149] The Accused told Butera that he would go to Rwamagana to call on the gendarmerie to investigate the killings.[150] Prosecution Witness Dr. Robert Wilson, a British physician who worked at Gahini Hospital in April 1994, generally corroborated this testimony, saying that when he arrived at Akabeza, Mpambara was meeting with approximately seventy to eighty people.[151] Dr. Wilson testified that he did not have the impression that the Accused was inciting violence and only heard him giving instructions about civil defence and emphasizing the need for calm.[152] Both Dr. Wilson and the Accused testified that they spoke to each other after this meeting.[153] Dr. Wilson told the Accused that a

The witness initially placed the encounter with the Accused near 11.00 a.m. However, in response to suggestive questioning by the Defence to which the Prosecution objected, she stated that she was not sure of the exact time. Her sighting of Butera suggests that she may be referring to Mpambara's earlier visit to Akabeza Centre that day because the Accused testified that he did not find Butera at Akabeza Centre when he returned there around 11.30 a.m. after his trip to Rwamagana. Tutsi man had taken refuge at his house and sought advice.[154] Mpambara told Dr. Wilson to keep the man in hiding until he returned from Rwamagana with gendarmes and could transport him to a more secure place.[155]

69. The Accused testified that after his unsuccessful attempt to obtain gendarmes from Rwamagana, he returned to Akabeza Centre around 11.30 a.m.[156] Mpambara was told that Butera and others were carrying out attacks in Umwiga Cellule.[157] The Accused took Ruhiguri and headed to Umwiga and Ibiza Cellules, where he found houses on fire.[158] The Accused testified that he ran around trying to stop the disturbances but that he could not control the situation because people scattered as soon as he approached.[159] The Accused did not mention having seen Butera.

70. Although the differences between Witness AVK and Serukwavu may be attributable to different perspectives or periods of time, they nevertheless reflect a fundamentally contradictory picture of Mpambara's general behaviour.[160] It seems unlikely that the Accused would have been actively encouraging the killings in Ibiza Cellule and, at the same time, scolding participants of the very same attack. Moreover, the Chamber views Witness AVK's uncorroborated testimony with caution in light of his testimony about the Accused at Gahini Hospital, discussed in section 4.3.7. Consequently, the Chamber finds that the evidence does not establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused instigated or encouraged the killings occurring in Ibiza Cellule on 8 April 1994.

3.3.6. Failure to Arrest Butera and Others, or to Take Stronger Action to Prevent Attacks on 8 April

71. The Prosecution argues that the Accused's failure to arrest those responsible for the attacks, particularly Butera, and his failure to take additional steps to end the violence on 8 April 1994 were intended to allow other members of a joint criminal enterprise to carry out killings in Umwiga and Ibiza Cellules.[161] In addition to the testimony of Witness AVK, the Prosecution relies on Defence Witness Félicien Serukwavu, who stated that he did not hear the Accused give any orders to the armed communal police who were travelling with him to take any action whatsoever.[162]

72. The Accused testified that he did not realize that the situation had become critical until 8 April 1994 when he found people dead in Umwiga and Ibiza Cellules, and that he immediately tried to take the necessary measures to restore order to the commune.[163] Upon learning of the killings of the Later that day, a group of German volunteers passed by Dr. Wilson's house with gendarmes to ask if Dr. Wilson and his family wanted to leave Rukara with them. Dr. Wilson decided to stay, but the group evacuated the Tutsi man to the commune office. Dr. Wilson heard that the man was later seen at the commune office but had no idea of what ultimately happened to him. T. 19 September 2005 p. 20 (Wilson).

[156] T. 7 February 2006 pp. 4-5 (Mpambara). Mpambara left Akabeza Centre and headed to Rwamagana between 9.30 and 10.00 a.m. where he met with the sous-préfet and the gendarmerie commandant to explain the situation and to request that gendarmes be deployed to Rukara. The gendarmerie commandant told the Accused that he could not send gendarmes immediately because many gendarmes had been sent to the front lines to fight, leaving very few behind, and because he needed to obtain the approval of his own superior prior to deploying them. The commandant agreed to contact his superiors and to send gendarmes to Rukara that afternoon.

[159] Id. pp. 4, 6. ("I went round the cellule in that kind of confusion and I didn't know what to do").
[160] The witnesses appear to have been situated at slightly different locations near Twamugabo's house, and consequently they appear to have had separate encounters with Mpambara. They may also have arrived at the scene at slightly different times, which would account for why they did not both hear grenade explosions or witness the looting of Twamugabo's house.

[163] T. 8 February 2006 pp. 50-52 (Mpambara) ("I realized that we were living an emergency period … on the 8th of April, when I found people dead at Gahini, that's when I realized that we were in critical times, and I decided to take the necessary measures").

previous evening, he went immediately to Akabeza Centre to gather information and to assess the situation first-hand:

> I went with Ruhiguri, the policeman. We went straight to Umwiga cellule and when I reached there, I found that some homes of the Tutsis had already been torched. When I reached there, I asked him what was happening and – there were doing it – was that whenever I reached a home, a home that was being torched, people would flee running in every direction and I wouldn't see anyone. The only people I would see would be some women and children who would come around to see and I ask people, 'What are you doing here?' And people would scatter into the banana growth, into the bushes and I wouldn't see anyone – anyone to arrest and every time I reached every home, it would happen like that. I could not control anything. I ran all over the place through the bushes, through the banana growth and I said that this is serious, I have to find a way of stopping all these disturbances.[164]

73. According to the Accused, his attempts to stop the violence were futile because he was unable to determine who was responsible.[165] The Prosecution suggested that Mpambara knew at the time that Butera was leading the attacks because Ruhiguri and others had told him so that morning.[166] Mpambara gave somewhat inconsistent responses as to his state of knowledge concerning Butera's culpability, but ultimately testified that, despite certain suspicions of Butera's involvement, he had no concrete reason to believe Butera was involved in the killings at that time.[167] More generally, the Accused testified that he did not have sufficient means to effectuate arrests or prevent the violence.[168]

74. The Accused also points to efforts he made that day to restore order in the commune. He made several trips to Akabeza Centre to speak with residents, urging them to remain calm and to return to their homes.[169] He patrolled Umwiga and Ibiza Cellules to see what was happening and to stop the violence.[170] He made two trips to Rwamagana to plead for gendarmes, once in the morning when he met with the sous-préfet and gendarmerie commandant, and again in the afternoon with Father Santos.[171]

75. In the Chamber's view, the evidence does not establish that the Accused's alleged omissions demonstrate a criminal intent. The evidence leaves open the reasonable possibility that Mpambara was overwhelmed by the situation, did not know with any degree of certainty who was leading the attacks in Ibiza and Umwiga Cellules on 7 and 8 April, and was incapable of restoring order with the law enforcement resources at his disposal. Moreover, the Defence presented evidence that the Accused made attempts to restore order to the commune. Although Mpambara may, arguably, have been able to do more than he did, the Prosecution has not established beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused's failure to arrest Butera and others, or to take stronger measures to quell the violence, shows that he was involved in a joint criminal enterprise, or that his omissions had a substantial effect on the commission of crimes by others so as to make him liable for aiding and abetting.

[167] Mpambara first testified that, upon his third passing at Akabeza Centre on the morning of 8 April, he was told that Butera and several youths had gone to Ibiza Cellule to torch houses and kill people. T. 7 February 2006 p. 5. Mpambara then stated that he did not know at the time that Butera was taking part in the killings but that he merely had suspicions without any tangible evidence. T. 7 February 2006 p. 8; T. 8 February 2006 pp. 56-57. Mpambara claimed that he did not learn of Butera's true involvement in the killings across Rukara Commune until he reached Tanzania as a refugee. T. 7 February 2006 p. 8.

76. The evidence of the events in Gahini Secteur on 7 and 8 April 1994 does not show beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused's alleged acts and omissions amounted to planning, instigating, ordering or aiding and abetting the killings, or that he was a participant in a joint criminal enterprise.

4. Attack on Gahini Hospital, 9 April

4.1. Introduction

77. Gahini Hospital is perched atop a ridge overlooking Lake Muhazi, about 10 kilometres by road from Rukara Parish. A wire-mesh fence encloses several buildings in a compound; the main gate gives access to the road to Rukara Parish, and a back gate leads to a small collection of shops called Akabeza Centre.[172] The evidence shows, and it is not disputed, that on the morning of 9 April 1994, a mob armed with clubs, spears, machetes, and other traditional weapons, surrounded the hospital compound, prevented the evacuation of Tutsi civilians who had taken refuge there, and then invaded the compound and violently killed the Tutsis who were trapped there. Mpambara came to the compound at some stage during the morning, assessed the situation, and then went to the Rwamagana gendarmerie camp. Another attack on the hospital then took place, before the Accused returned in the early afternoon with the gendarmerie commandant and the sous-préfet.[173]

4.2. Indictment

78. The Indictment reads:

> 13. On the morning of 9 April 1994, members of the joint criminal enterprise including conseiller de secteur Jean Bosco Butera and Communal Police Brigadier Ruhiguri led groups of armed Hutu civilians and Interahamwe to attack Tutsis who took refuge in Gahini Hospital. They attacked and killed a number of Tutsis who took refuge in Gahini Hospital. They attacked and killed a number of Tutsi civilians including Kalenzi Muzungu from Umwiga Cellule, Mwizerwa a.k.a. Bebe and his father Higiro, Ruhagaza from Kawangire, Mukarugwiza, Karasira Israel from Kawangire, Hhajabakiga Simeon from Bicumbi in Kigali, Muhikira a.k.a. Toto, Murenzi from Kawangire, Bushorishori from Kawangire and a child. During the attack, Jean Mpambara arrived at the Hospital and Jean Bosco Butera reported to him the names of the Tutsis they killed.

The legal characterization of the Accused's participation is that he:

> ordered those over whom he had command responsibility and control as a result of his position and authority described in paragraph 2. He instigated and aided and abetted those over whom he did not have command responsibility and control to attack the Tutsi population. In addition, the accused willfully and knowingly participated in a joint criminal enterprise whose object, purpose, and foreseeable outcome was the destruction of the Tutsi racial or ethnic group throughout Rwanda. To fulfil this criminal purpose, the accused acted with military and community leaders and members of the Interahamwe in Rukara Commune, such as … conseiller de secteur Jean Bosco Butera, Police Brigadier Ruhiguri … and other unknown participants. [172] T. 19 September 2005 p. 12 (Wilson).

[173] Witnesses LET, AVK and LEK were not in a position to confirm whether the Accused visited Gahini Hospital on two distinct occasions. However, their testimony is not inconsistent with that of Witnesses Wilson and Hardinge, who gave detailed eyewitness testimony concerning the Accused's first visit, his departure, and his return. Witnesses LET and LEK both confirm that the Accused was present at the compound at some stage, and then appeared to have left the scene. T. 26 September 2005 p. 71; T. 26 September 2005 p. 73 (French) (Witness LEK could not confirm whether Mpambara actually left the compound, although he saw him walking towards the main gate); T. 20 September 2005 pp. 20, 30 (Witness LET saw the Accused drive out of the main gate).

[174] Indictment, para. 6.

79. Even more broadly, paragraph 10 alleges that the Accused "planned, ordered, instigated, facilitated or otherwise aided and abetted the attack on the Tutsi civilian population"; and paragraph 19, that he "failed to maintain public order, or deliberately undermined the public order".

4.3. Evidence

4.3.1. Overview of Submissions

80. The Prosecution argues that the evidence shows that the Accused:

- commanded attackers to withdraw on his first visit to the hospital, thus showing that he was behind the attacks;
- conducted an "audit" of those killed, and of those remaining, with the assistance of Butera;
- exposed the refugees to attack by calling them out of their hiding places, and then leaving the hospital;
- instigated attackers to kill the refugees as he was departing the hospital;
- instructed one of the policemen under his command, Ruhiguri, to protect hospital supplies, but not the Tutsi refugees.[175]

The Accused admits that he visited the hospital twice that day, first in the morning, and then in the early afternoon, but he denies that he participated in, or encouraged, the attack in any manner whatsoever. He concedes that the attackers fled upon his arrival, but rejects that they were under his command. On the contrary, he maintains that he investigated what had happened; attempted to re-establish and maintain security there; and, upon his return with reinforcements in the early afternoon, evacuated the refugees to Rukara Parish where he thought they could be more effectively protected.

4.3.2. Background to the Attacks

81. The arrival of the Accused on the morning of 9 April was preceded by a number of events which shaped the actions and perspectives of the witnesses that day. Prosecution Witness Dr. Robert Wilson testified that on the afternoon of 7 April, he intervened to save a young man who was being beaten by a gang of youths in the hospital compound. When he returned to castigate the group, he found that they had dispersed or withdrawn out of the Akabeza Gate. Just outside the gate, he found Mpambara standing beside his vehicle with other community elders.[176] Wilson asked what could be done to protect the patients and others seeking refuge at the hospital. Mpambara responded that the hospital should be for patients only, and that it should not be used as a refuge, particularly by able-

[175] Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 93-114. The Prosecution lists a sixth assertion, concerning the presence of a man named Toto (also known as Jean-Claude Muhikira) during one of the Accused's visit. The Chamber will consider the significance of this evidence in the course of its analysis. Witness LET made two additional incriminating allegations against the Accused: that he led the attackers into the compound at the beginning of the first attack, and was present throughout its duration; and that he was present during, and acquiesced in, the killing of a certain Jean-Claude Muhikira. Neither of these allegations are contained in the Indictment, nor were they retained as part of the Prosecution case in its Closing Brief.

[176] T. 19 September 2005 pp. 13-14 (Wilson) ("I think I wanted to try to remonstrate with them, to ask them what they were doing, and to try to keep them out of the hospital compound. I think that they had withdrawn out of the gate, and so I went out of the gate. And it was there that I – I met the bourgmestre"). Two boys had been attacked; Wilson believed that the other had been able to escape without his assistance. He recalled the time as between 3:00 and 3:30 p.m. Witness LET gives a different account of this event, alleging that the Accused was inside the compound watching as the young men were beaten. T. 20 September 2005 pp. 10-13. The Accused denied that he saw the beating, but acknowledged that he saw Dr. Wilson taking an injured youth into the hospital, and that he spoke to a group of youth from Gahini who seemed to acknowledge that they had beaten the young man because they "didn't know him in that area". The Accused claims to have told them that "even if you don't know the person, you don't have the right to beat anybody". T. 7 February 2006 p. 2. The Chamber need not make any factual finding on this allegation, which is not part of the Indictment.

bodied young men who might be RPF spies.[177] He did not want the hospital to become either a base for the insurgency, or a target. Wilson testified that he had "no problem with those instructions at that point".[178]

82. Tutsi refugees did start to take shelter at the hospital, however. Prosecution Witness LET was a nurse at Gahini Hospital, who was married to a Tutsi man.[179] On 7 April, a family friend came to her house and warned her that killings were about to begin in the cellule and that she should take refuge somewhere.[180] She went to the hospital with her children, staying first in the paediatric ward and then in the maternity ward.[181] Witness LEK, a former school-teacher of Tutsi ethnicity, also took refuge in the paediatric ward on 8 April 1994, hiding in the ceiling.[182]

83. Defence Witness Elizabeth Hardinge, a British physiotherapist who had worked at Gahini Hospital since 1969, testified that late in the afternoon of 8 April, she went to Rukara Parish to ask Mpambara for police protection for the hospital, as there had been disturbances at Gahini.[183] He answered that he had only seven or eight gendarmes available and that they were all needed to protect the refugees at Rukara Parish; he promised, however, to send a patrol during the evening.[184] Mpambara testified that a squad of five gendarmes arrived at Rukara Parish soon after Hardinge had left. Mpambara proposed splitting them up, so that some of them could be stationed at Rukara Parish, while others would go to Gahini Hospital. The sergeant in command insisted on keeping his unit together, and said that they would maintain security at both locations by patrolling in their vehicle.[185] After showing them around Rukara Parish, Mpambara led the gendarmes to the hospital, where he left them in their vehicle.[186]

84. Early on the morning of 9 April, rumours spread amongst the refugees at the hospital of an impending attack.[187] A nurse told them that Dr. Wilson had agreed to assist with their evacuation. Between 20 and 50 refugees gathered on the steps of the main building, opposite the front gate, waiting for the hospital's double-cabin pick-up to arrive.[188] As they were waiting, the communal ambulance arrived, carrying two wounded, as well as two or three gendarmes and a driver.[189] After the

T. 7 February 2006 p. 10 (Mpambara) ("Hardinge told me that at Gahini Hospital there were refugees who had sought refuge … she was asking for either policemen or gendarmes to come and stop any possible attacks at the hospital. [188] T. 20 September 2005 pp. 14, 41 (Witness LET); T. 19 September 2005 pp. 21-23 (Wilson). Dr. Wilson does not say that he had authorized the evacuation of the refugees before the arrival of the ambulance. On the contrary, he suggests that he asked for the hospital's own vehicle (as distinct from the communal ambulance) to be brought around only once it had become apparent that there was not enough room in the ambulance. T. 19 September 2005 pp. 21-22. Hardinge identifies the hospital vehicle as a "pick-up", T. 13 January 2006 p. 39 Hardinge); Wilson specifies that it was a double-cabin Toyota Hilux, T. 19 September 2005 p. 23 (Wilson).

patients were unloaded, the gendarmes agreed to transport the refugees to Rukara Parish in the ambulance.[190]

85. As these arrangements were being made, a small but menacing group of Interahamwe assembled outside the main gate armed with "bows and arrows and machetes nonchalantly swung".[191] Witness LET testified that they had encircled the entire hospital compound, blowing whistles and making threatening noises.[192] The Interahamwe blocked the main gate with a tree trunk and let it be known that they would not let the refugees pass. The gendarmes refused to attempt to break the blockade, and the refugees ran back towards the hospital buildings.[193] The gendarmes also refused to split up so that some of them could remain behind while others returned to Rukara Parish to report on the situation.[194]

4.3.3. Commanding the Attackers to Withdraw

86. The witnesses gave different versions of events in respect of the remainder of the events at Gahini Hospital that day. Witness LET asserted that before any of the vehicles had left, the Accused arrived in his car and led the attackers into the compound.[195] Witness LEK testified that at the commencement of the attack, he saw the commune's white pick-up truck approaching the hospital, although he did not see the Accused himself.[196]

87. This testimony is contradicted by Ms. Hardinge. She testified that she left the hospital before the start of any attack in order to seek Mpambara's help, and found him at the commune office, 20 to 25 minutes away by car.[197] He was "obviously concerned about the situation" and agreed immediately to accompany her back to the hospital. Escorted by at least one gendarme and one policeman, they arrived at the hospital at around 10 a.m.[198]

88. The Prosecution does not maintain that the Accused was present at the commencement of the attack, and accepts that Mpambara arrived at Gahini Hospital with Ms. Hardinge at the end of the first attack.[199] However, the Prosecution, relying on the testimony of Dr. Wilson, alleges that the withdrawal of the attackers at the very moment of his arrival shows that he commanded their retreat.[200]

[190] T. 20 September 2005 pp. 14-15, 41-42 (Witness LET). Witness LET testified that the request for evacuation was made to the gendarmes by the same nurse who had requested the evacuation of the refugees in the first place, Jeanne de Dieu. Wilson recalled that it was he who "thought it was a prudent time, since there was an empty vehicle there, to ask the gendarmes to take these refugees to the commune office"). The refugees boarded the ambulance and Dr. Wilson's car, which had, in the meantime, also arrived to assist with the evacuation.

[191] T. 19 September 2005 p. 23 (Wilson). Witness LET explained that "they had machetes; they had spears; they had clubs – and they also had bows"). T. 20 September 2005 pp. 16-17, 43 (Witness LET). In addition to these weapons, Witness LEK testified that the Interahamwe also possessed grenades, although he is the only witness to make that observation. T. 26 September 2005 pp. 65-66, T. 27 September 2005 p. 2 (Witness LEK).

Witness LEK explains that the gendarmes went to speak with the Interahamwe after the gate had been blocked and returned and told the refugees to get out of the vehicles. T. 26 September 2005 pp. 65-66, T. 27 September 2005 p. 2.

[194] T. 19 September 2005 p. 22 (Wilson); T. 13 January 2006 p. 38 (Hardinge).

[195] T. 20 September 2005 pp. 18-19, 20, 44. Witness LET estimated that this was about twenty minutes after the refugees had fled back into the Hospital.

[196] T. 26 September 2005 pp. 67-68; T. 27 September 2005 p. 3. The witness explains that he was not running when he spotted the commune vehicle: "I was not running, I was simply starting to move away from the rest of the group. I was looking in all directions and then I saw the vehicle. Then when the alarm was raised, I ran into hiding").

[197] Dr. Wilson corroborates this account. He remembered that Ms. Hardinge was chosen to go and find the bourgmestre, and that he heard the vehicles leaving the compound before any attack had started. T. 19 September 2005 p. 22 (Wilson).

[198] T. 13 January 2006 pp. 38-39, 40-41 (Hardinge).

[200] Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 94, 96; T. 2 May 2006 pp. 22-23 (closing arguments).

89. The Prosecution's reliance on Dr. Wilson is misplaced. He testified that "the mob dispersed" when Mpambara arrived and that, once inside the compound, "the bourgmestre was trying to be clear – he wanted people to just go away, and just try and get some order in the hospital ground".[201] The fact that Mpambara ordered the attackers to disperse upon his arrival does not support the Prosecution's inference that he commanded the attack. Indeed, Dr. Wilson's impression was that Mpambara was genuinely attempting to restore order. Furthermore, Dr. Wilson's opinion was that Mpambara – far from giving commands to obedient followers – was in a state of "almost despair".[202] In the Chamber's view, this testimony does not show that the attackers were his subordinates, much less that they had carried out the attack as a result of some earlier order to do so.

4.3.4. "Auditing" the Victims And Failure to Arrest Butera

90. The Accused acknowledges, and the evidence shows beyond a reasonable doubt, that he spoke with a number of people at the hospital, including Jean-Baptiste Nkurayija, the hospital administrator; Jean-Bosco Butera, the Conseiller of Gahini Secteur; and Dr. Wilson.[203] The Prosecution alleges that the Accused "knew Butera had committed the killings at the Hospital, and that [he] was conducting an audit of how many refugees had been killed and how many were remaining".[204] Furthermore, the failure to arrest Butera is cited as evidence that the Accused must have been involved with him in a joint criminal enterprise.[205] The Prosecution relies on the testimony of Dr. Wilson to this end, but not of two of its other witnesses to the Accused's visit, Witnesses LET and LEK.[206]

91. No direct evidence, apart from that given by the Accused, was heard concerning the nature of Mpambara's conversation with Butera. Dr. Wilson believed that Mpambara was evaluating what had happened and, with Butera and Nkurayija's input, writing the names of those who had been killed.[207] There is no direct evidence that this list was being prepared as part of a plan to kill the refugees at the hospital, nor is it the only reasonably possible explanation of their actions.

92. Mpambara testified that after he spoke with Dr. Wilson, Nkurayija showed him three corpses just outside the Akabeza gate.[208] While there, Butera approached from Akabeza Centre, claiming that he had just heard news of the attack.[209] Mpambara testified that he did not believe Butera, but that since no one identified him as having participated in the attack, he had no firm basis to make an arrest.[210] Mpambara walked around the hospital with Butera and Nkurayija, noting the names of the [206] Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 98-101; T. 2 May 2006 pp. 21-27 (closing arguments). Their testimony is relied upon in respect of other matters, but not the colloquy between Butera and Mpambara.

[208] T. 7 February 2005 pp. 19, 20, 23 (Mpambara) ("I left through the smaller gate that leads to the Akabeza centre where I found three corpses of dead people"). Mpambara's testimony gives the impression that he spoke first with Dr. Wilson, and certainly before he had met Butera. Dr. Wilson, on the other hand, remembers that the bourgmestre was already speaking with Butera when he first saw them. T. 19 September 2005 pp. 24-25 (Wilson).
[209] T. 7 February 2005 p. 20, T. 8 February 2006 p. 61 (Mpambara). Mpambara testified that Butera claimed that he did not know who had participated.

That's what I think. But he did it in secrecy. He did not – he must have just been sending people to attack, but he did not show himself"); T. 8 February 2006 pp. 63-64 (Mpambara).

dead.[211] He made no arrests because the attackers who were named by the refugees had all fled the scene. In any event, they were all former soldiers, and attempting to arrest them, given the resources at his disposal, would have been "committing suicide".[212] Indeed, Mpambara doubted the loyalty of the gendarmes, whom he suspected of being partial to the attackers, thus undermining his ability to search for and arrest the attackers.[213]

93. The Chamber entertains a reasonable doubt that the failure to arrest Butera was for the purpose of facilitating the latter's criminal conduct. There is no evidence on record that anyone told Mpambara at the time that Butera had been part of this attack.[214] Even if there had been such an indication, the Chamber could not safely infer that the failure to arrest demonstrates participation in a criminal enterprise with Butera. Other plausible explanations for the failure to arrest have been raised, such as: lack of sufficient evidence against Butera; scarce law enforcement resources which were needed for other priorities; and the concern that failure would have led to a total breakdown of civil authority. The factual issue for the Chamber's determination here is not whether these reasons were correct; rather, the sole question is whether they are reasonably possible explanations for the Accused's failure to arrest Butera. The Chamber is not convinced that the only reasonable explanation for the failure to arrest Butera is that the Accused wished to assist him in the commission of crimes.

4.3.5. Exposing the Refugees to a Second Attack

94. The Prosecution alleges that the Accused instructed that the refugees be ordered to come out of their hiding places and that he then left Gahini Hospital, thus exposing them to a second murderous attack. Mpambara is specifically alleged to have failed to assist a refugee, Jean-Claude Muhikira, alias Toto, who was bleeding and in obvious distress and fear.[215]

95. Three Prosecution witnesses make reference to the possible involvement of the Accused in bringing refugees out of their hiding places and, in particular, the killing of Muhikira. Witness LET testified that between noon and 1 p.m., she saw the Accused talking with Nkurayija in the hospital compound when a group of eight to ten people, led by Butera, approached from the Akabeza Gate.[216] After speaking with Mpambara, they went to the physiotherapy ward, where Witness LET thought she heard the attackers trying to force open the door. About twenty minutes later, Butera came back to speak to Mpambara, and then returned to the physiotherapy ward again, now accompanied by a gendarme armed with a gun who had been escorting Mpambara. Shortly after hearing a gunshot, Witness LET saw Muhikira coming out of the ward with his hands up. An attacker fired an arrow at Muhikira, piercing his hand.[217] Muhikira, now bleeding profusely, ran up to Mpambara, who said, "'Get away. Go there and get treated, and then we'll take you to Karubamba with the others'".[218] But when Muhikira asked one of the nurses for treatment, she responded "'I would be wasting my time if I

[213] T. 7 February 2005 pp. 19-22 (Mpambara) (the gendarmes "were not sad about what had happened"); T. 7 February 2006 p. 26 (French) ("Mais après, je me suis rendu compte que les gendarmes*, au lieu de m'aider, aidaient les assaillants*"). The Chamber is mindful, however, that Witness Hardinge testified that she thought that, in general, the gendarmes who had arrived in the communal ambulance had tried to be helpful, as they had agreed to the original plan to evacuate the refugees. T. 13 January 2006 p. 38. Dr. Wilson also had the impression that the gendarmes had genuinely attempted to suppress the attacks. T. 19 September 2005 p. 27 (Wilson). Witness LEK, on the other hand, disagreed. T. 26 September 2005 pp. 66-67 (Witness LEK). The Chamber need not reach any finding on the attitude of the gendarmes. It is sufficient to say that the evidence does not show that Mpambara's perception of the gendarmes was unreasonable or implausible.
[214] The Prosecution assertion that Mpambara admitted that survivors had named Butera (T. 2 May 2006 p. 22) is not supported by the record. T. 7 February 2006 p. 22 (Mpambara) ("And when I asked them who attacked them, they said … 'We saw Kanifu, who had been a solider. We all saw Buringo (phonetic), we saw Bekehan (phonetic), we saw so-and-so.' And they never mentioned the name of the conseiller").

treat you because in a short while you are going to be killed'".[219] Muhikira slumped down on the veranda in front of the pharmacy. Witness LET had the impression that the young attackers wanted to kill Muhikira immediately, but hesitated. After Butera and others had conferred with Mpambara, one of the young attackers grabbed Muhikira and took him over to a group which started beating him with clubs and slashing him with their machetes.[220] The two gendarmes escorting Mpambara went over and searched Muhikira's pockets, taking his money. Mpambara did nothing.[221]

96. Witness LEK gives a different account. He testified that he emerged from his hiding place after Butera told him that the killings were over and that he would be evacuated to Karubamba.[222] He found Butera, Nkurayija, a gendarme, a policeman, and others.[223] Butera told everyone to leave the room, but indicated that Witness LEK should remain behind. The policeman or gendarme nevertheless signalled to the witness to leave and, once outside, he saw the Accused. The witness explained that Butera wanted to kill him in that room, and that he "did not want to show me to the bourgmestre Mpambara … He felt that I might get away from him".[224] Butera ordered Witness LEK to put his hands up, and he did so.[225] Mpambara told Witness LEK to join other Tutsi refugees who were sitting on the steps near the operating theatre.[226] Muhikira, who was amongst the group and had been shot in the palm of his hand with an arrow, entreated Mpambara to take him away from there. Mpambara responded angrily, asking why they should be taken away, and shortly thereafter, left on foot towards the main gate.[227] At that moment, Witness LEK saw about eight Interahamwe approaching from the left.[228] Witness LEK and Muhikira leapt over a white doctor who was giving stitches to a patient, and locked themselves in an adjacent room. The white doctor subsequently advised them that the gendarmes had chased the Interahamwe away, and asked them to come out. They did and joined other refugees in the women's ward.[229] Fifteen to thirty minutes later, a gendarme came and said that Witness LEK, Muhikira, and a woman named Mukaragwiza, had been targeted, but that the others would be spared.[230] The witness locked himself in a room and hid, but heard Muhikira and Mukaragwiza screaming as they were taken away and hacked to death.[231]

97. Witness AVK testified that he arrived at the hospital after the first attack had taken place, and that he noticed several corpses along the path that skirts the hospital compound. Before the second attack started, at around 10 a.m., Mpambara drove through the main gate and immediately summoned Butera and a certain Thadée Ruvugo.[232] After some discussion, Butera and Ruvugo returned to where the attackers were. Mpambara then called to Nkurayija, the hospital administrator, saying: "'Tell all the people who are hiding in the halls to come out so that we can provide refuge for them'".[233] People came out of the wards, were told to sit down near the flagpole, and then instructed to board Mpambara's vehicle.[234] Three of the refugees – Mukaragwiza, Toto, and a third person – were left behind and told to return to where they had been.[235] Mpambara then left for Karubamba with the refugees in his vehicle; the refugees who had been left behind were subsequently killed.[236] Witness AVK saw Muhikira being led away by the police chief Ruhiguri, and Witness AVK later saw his corpse.[237]

98. Dr. Wilson also probably saw Muhikira at the hospital that morning. He had a vivid recollection of a young man who had been wounded in the arm, standing near the group which had been discussing the attack with the bourgmestre. The man had "been defending his own life and he was obviously wondering what was happening next". Wilson did not recall that he spoke to Mpambara, or that anything was said about him. The young man evinced "intense fear", as he "had just escaped death and yet was going to still be having to face death in a little while".[238] Wilson was unaware of any killings while the bourgmestre was present, but as soon as he left, Interahamwe entered the hospital compound through the Akabeza gate.[239] Wilson later found the corpse of the young man outside the operating theatre.[240]

99. Ms. Hardinge heard no gunfire or screams indicating an attack or killings during the thirty to forty-five minutes that she and Mpambara were present at the hospital before they departed for Rwamagana gendarmerie camp. Just before their departure, Hardinge did leave the hospital compound to obtain documents from her house; she testified, however, that she lived close to the hospital.[241]

100. The differences in the testimony of Witnesses LET, LEK, and AVK are substantial.[242] Witness LET sees Muhikira taken directly from the front of the pharmacy and killed, in Mpambara's presence. Witness LEK testified that, at the sight of approaching attackers, which was after Mpambara had left, he and Muhikira fled from where they were waiting and barricaded themselves in a room adjacent to the operating theatre. Muhikira was killed some significant time later, after he had gone to the women's ward. Witness AVK, who is the only witness to testify that he heard the Accused direct that the refugees be brought out of the hospital, also testified that all but three of the refugees left with him in his vehicle. Ms. Hardinge contradicts this testimony, recalling that she and Mpambara went to Rwamagana gendarmerie camp without any refugees.[243]

As far as I know, no, but I was in my house, and that was not a long distance from the hospital, but I was certainly in my own house, and we stayed there all night"); T 13 January 2006 p. 43 (time of departure).
[242] The Prosecution postulates that all three witnesses are describing the same events during the Accused's first visit to Gahini Hospital. Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 107 ("the Prosecutor has produced the evidence of a survivor independently corroborated by a perpetrator that the accused ordered the refugees to be captured and exposed to their attackers before he left for Rwamagana with Elizabeth Hardinge"); T. 2 May 2006 pp. 23-24 (closing arguments). The Chamber accepts Ms. Hardinge's uncontradicted testimony that the time period involved is about thirty to forty-five minutes.
[243] The Prosecution did not challenge Hardinge's testimony in this respect, either on the witness's cross-examination, or in its closing submissions. T. 13 January 2006 pp. 40-41, 43 (Hardinge). A different problem arises is Witness AVK's testimony is treated as referring to the second visit of the Accused: by that time, according to Witness LET, Dr. Wilson, and probably Witness LEK, Muhikira had already been killed, whereas Witness AVK testified that he saw Muhikira being led away by Ruhiguri, the police brigadier.

101. The result is that the testimony of these three witnesses does not establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused was present when Muhikira or any other refugees were brought out of their hiding places, much less that he ordered this to happen or was present when any of them were killed. Further reasonable doubt is raised by the testimonies of Dr. Wilson and Ms. Hardinge, neither of whom perceived any indication of killings at the hospital during the Accused's presence.

102. The Prosecution also asserts that the Accused failed to assist Muhikira, whom he must have realized was in distress and danger.[244] Mpambara denies having seen anyone fitting Muhikira's description during his first visit to the hospital, but he acknowledges that he knew that there were still refugees in hiding at the hospital. He nevertheless decided to go to Rwamagana gendarmerie camp to obtain reinforcements and to complain about the ineffectiveness of those which had been previously assigned to him. He left the chief of communal police there, along with two gendarmes, "plead[ing] with them that they should do everything they can to make sure that no one else is killed in that place".[245] Hardinge and the Accused, without any police or gendarmes, then left for Rwamagana some time around 10:30 or 11 a.m. that morning.[246]

103. The evidence shows beyond a reasonable doubt that after Mpambara's departure, Interahamwe invaded the hospital compound a second time and killed Tutsi refugees, including Jean-Claude Muhikira.[247]

104. The question for determination is whether the alleged failure to immediately evacuate or otherwise assist the refugees shows that the Accused was part of a joint criminal enterprise to kill the refugees at the hospital, or that he aided and abetted the attacks, which would require that he substantially contributed to them. The uncontradicted evidence of Dr. Wilson and Ms. Hardinge was that the Accused did leave law enforcement officers – indeed, that he left all his escorts – at the hospital while he returned to Rwamagana to request additional gendarmes. The Chamber is aware that some witnesses suggested that the gendarmes and police colluded with the attackers; indeed, Mpambara shared that suspicion.[248] Nevertheless, the Accused explained that he had no better option than to deploy the forces at his disposal. The Prosecution failed to adduce any direct evidence that the Accused was colluding with the police or gendarmes to have the refugees killed. Indeed, Dr. Wilson's testimony was that when the Interahamwe invaded the compound a second time, one of the gendarmes shot into the air a couple of times, but that the Interahamwe "were just jeering, really, at the gendarme" and "I had a feeling that they just carried on and did what they wanted to do".[249] These are the impressions of a witness for the Prosecution, not the Defence.

105. The Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not shown beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused's alleged inaction was for the purpose of assisting the attackers in killing the Tutsi refugees at the hospital. This is not to say that more effective solutions might not have been available such as, for example, immediately collecting and evacuating the refugees with the escorts available. But the [246] T. 13 January 2006 pp. 40-41, 43 (Hardinge). Mpambara indicates that either they arrived at, or left for, Rwamgana at 11 a.m., which would be consistent with Ms. Hardinge, who estimated that it took about half an hour to go from Gahini Hospital to Rwamagana. T. 13 January 2006 p. 44 (Hardinge); T. 7 February 2005 p. 24 (Mpambara). As to the absence of escorts, Hardinge testified "I'm sure it was just us". T. 13 January 2006 p. 44 (Hardinge).

[247] Although the Chamber does not rely on the Witnesses LET, LEK, and AVK as to the manner of Muhikira's death, they all agree that he was killed. That fact is also corroborated by Dr. Wilson, assuming that the young man he saw was, in fact, Muhikira. Dr. Wilson also saw boys with machetes leading people out of the back gate, whom he suspected were later killed. T. 19 September 2005 pp. 26-27 (Wilson).
[248] Mpambara explained that he believed that the gendarmes appeared to be partial to the attackers. Only one gendarme had been on duty at the hospital when it was attacked, and he claimed that he had been overwhelmed, but without giving a clear account of what had happened. Mpambara did not believe this explanation and perceived that the gendarmes "were not sad about what had happened". T. 7 February 2005 pp. 19-22; T. 7 February 2006 p. 26 (French) ("Mais après, je me suis rendu compte que les gendarmes, au lieu de m'aider, aidaient les assaillants").
[249] T. 19 September 2005 pp. 26-27 (Wilson).

Prosecution did not establish, for example, that there was sufficient room in the vehicles to immediately evacuate all the refugees or that it was safe to do so under the circumstances. In the face of doubts such as these and plausible explanations for the conduct of the Accused other than collusion with the attackers, the Chamber entertains a reasonable doubt that the Accused's conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the crimes, so as to make him liable as an aider and abettor, or that he intended thereby to commit crimes by participating in a joint criminal enterprise.

4.3.6. Instigating the Attackers to Kill the Refugees

106. Witness AVK testified that the Accused verbally instigated the killing of the Tutsi refugees as he was leaving Gahini Hospital after his first visit there, telling the witness and other attackers:

> 'Je ne comprends pas. Est-ce tout ce que vous pouvez faire? Ne pouvez-vous pas faire les choses plus rapidement?' Nous avons compris qu'on ne nous appréciait pas à notre juste valeur. Nous sommes repartis nous réorganiser et nous sommes revenus, donc, pour tuer ceux qui restaient.[250]

These words are said to have been uttered in front of the main hospital building, just as the Accused was preparing to leave with most of the refugees in his vehicle.

107. The credibility of this description is questionable for a number of reasons. First, Witness AVK makes no mention of any words of instigation in his prior statement to the Prosecutor.[251] Even in the absence of specific questions on cross-examination concerning this omission, the Chamber has difficulty understanding how this striking and highly incriminating utterance would not have been previously mentioned.[252] Second, Witness AVK testified that after these words were spoken, Mpambara transported most of the refugees away from the hospital in his vehicle. This is contradicted by Ms. Hardinge's credible account, which was implicitly accepted by the Prosecution, that she and Mpambara left together for Rwamagana in his vehicle, without any refugees.[253] Indeed, no witness other than Witness AVK suggested that the Accused evacuated the refugees after his first visit. This is not a minor detail on which Witness AVK could simply have been mistaken, or which would have been overlooked by other witnesses at the Hospital. Third, Witness AVK testified that the only white person present at the hospital at that time was Dr. Wilson, even though Elizabeth Hardinge was nearby and, indeed, left with Mpambara in the very same vehicle which Witness AVK said was full of [250] T. 21 September 2005 p. 21 (French), T. 21 September 2005 p. 16 (Witness AVK). The Chamber prefers to cite the French directly, which was the first language of translation from Kinyarwanda, as the English includes some extraneous elements, including the use of the word "we", which do not appear in the French.

[251] Exhibit D-9. In fact, the statement says that there were people who thought that the Accused was there to protect the refugees. In this context, it is even harder to understand why the witness would not have mentioned the act of instigation, which would directly have contradicted this impression: "Some people said that he had brought the gendarmes to protected the people who had taken refuge[] at the hospital. When he came, the gendarmes started locating the survivors. The survivors who were about eight (8) in number were put on his pick-up and he left with them … All the survivors were of Tutsi ethnic group". Exhibit D-9, p. K0507844.

[252] Counsel did, however, ask questions during his cross-examination about the circumstances in which the statement was given. T. 22 September 2005 pp. 39-40 (Witness AVK).

[253] Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 113 ("When the Accused arrived at Gahini Hospital at between 10.30 and 11 a.m. the attackers withdrew at his command…"). The Prosecution asked Ms. Hardinge only three questions on cross-examination, none of which touched on the substance of her testimony. The Prosecution implicitly accepts that no refugees were evacuated on this occasion, as it argues that the whole group of refugees were exposed and left behind at Gahini Hospital. T. 2 May 2006 p. 22 (closing arguments) ("Still, [Mpambara] left [the gendarmes] at the hospital subsequently when he went to Rwamgana with Elizabeth Hardinge with instructions to guard the refugees"). Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 107 ("the Prosecutor has adduced the evidence of a survivor independently corroborated by a perpetrator, that the accused order the refugees to be captured and exposed to their attackers before he left for Rwamagana"). The same position was adopted in closing arguments: "…the Accused left [the Tutsi refugees who had come out of their hiding places], walked to his car before he joined Elizabeth Hardinge, and incited the attackers directly to hurry up and finish killing the Tutsi civilians". T. 2 May 2006 p. 23. The Chamber is mindful that Witness AVK's testimony could refer not to the first visit of the Accused to Gahini Hospital, but the second. However, as mentioned above, that would contradict the testimony of Witnesses LET, LEK, and Dr. Wilson, who testified that Muhikira had already been killed by that time.

refugees.[254] Taken together, these discrepancies with the testimony of other credible witnesses cannot be reasonably attributed to a mere error of memory. The Chamber, accordingly, entertains significant doubts about Witness AVK's veracity.

108. For these reasons, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not shown beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused uttered words of instigation or encouragement to the attackers as he left Gahini Hospital.

4.3.7. Instructing Policeman to Protect the Hospital Premises, Not the Refugees

109. The Prosecution asserts that the Accused instructed the brigadier of communal police, Ruhiguri, to prevent looting of hospital property, but not to protect the Tutsi refugees.[255] The basis for this allegation is the testimony of Witness AVK during cross-examination, who was attempting to explain a prior written statement in which he had said that during the second attack, "[t]here was some kind of scuffle. The chief of police was protect[ing the hospital], and people wanted to enter. Ruhiguri shot in the air, but people managed to enter".[256] This appeared to contradict the witness's testimony that the police and gendarmes assisted the attackers. Witness AVK insisted that there was no fighting between Ruhiguri and the attackers and that, indeed, the gunshot had been a signal to invade the premises. The witness explained his prior statement saying that Ruhiguri had only been protecting the hospital premises.

110. As previously mentioned, the Prosecution has failed to adduce any direct evidence that the Accused instructed the police or gendarmes to allow or assist in the killing of the refugees.[257] The Accused concedes that he suspected that the gendarmes were partial to the attackers. Indeed, it has been proven beyond a reasonable doubt that at least one refugee and probably more were killed during the second wave of attacks, despite the presence of Ruhiguri and two gendarmes, who were armed with guns. Notwithstanding Dr. Wilson's testimony that shots were fired into the air by one of the gendarmes, the Chamber considers that these killings lead to the inevitable inference that the gendarmes or policeman, at the very least, turned a blind eye to the attackers.

111. It does not follow, however, that the Accused was similarly involved. He testified that, despite his suspicions, he pleaded with Ruhiguri and the gendarmes to "do everything they can to make sure that no one else is killed in that place".[258] Dr. Wilson seemed to confirm this purpose. When Dr. Wilson asked Mpambara to leave gendarmes at the hospital, his response "was almost despair in that he had so few armed gendarmes at his disposal, but he said he would try and leave us a few while he went to Rwamagana to get more help from the local gendarmerie".[259] The Chamber is alive to the possibility that Mpambara was merely attempting to impress an outside observer of his good intentions. Nevertheless, the Prosecution has not presented any evidence which contradicts the testimony of the Accused concerning what he did at Gahini Hospital or shows that it is implausible. In the absence of such evidence, a reasonable doubt arises as to whether the Accused instructed Ruhiguri or the gendarmes not to protect the refugees.

4.4. Conclusion

[254] T. 21 September 2005 p. 31 (Witness AVK) ("Q. Did you see Mpambara talk with any white people during that incident? A. There was one white man present, but one could not follow everything that was happening from every moment. I saw one white man called Robert. He was standing there in front of the meeting room").

[259] T. 19 September 2005 p. 26 (Wilson).

112. The attacks on Gahini Hospital on 9 April 1994 were brutal, violent and ethnically motivated. Unarmed Tutsi civilians, men and women alike, were murdered under the blows of clubs and the blades of machetes. One witness heard the mortal cries of family members at close range. The hospital, which had been a place for treating the sick, became a genocide site.

113. The issue before the Chamber, however, is whether the evidence shows that Jean Mpambara is criminally responsible for this attack. The evidence does not show beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused actively participated in, or was present during, any stage of this attack. Nor has it been shown beyond a reasonable doubt that he ordered or encouraged anyone to participate in the attack. Furthermore, his alleged failures to act have not been shown beyond a reasonable doubt to be proof that he possessed the intent to be part of a joint criminal enterprise or that he substantially contributed to the crimes committed by other persons so as to be guilty of aiding and abetting.

5. Attacks at Rukara Parish, 9 and 12 April

5.1. Introduction

114. Early on the morning of 7 April, refugees from Murambi Commune began to arrive at the Rukara Parish Church, in Karubamba Secteur, saying that their homes had been attacked and burned.[260] Their stories were confirmed by the smoke rising in the distance from the Murambi hills.[261] Tutsi residents of Rukara Commune also started to gather at the church as the day progressed, as groups of thugs roamed on the streets, and people boarded up their homes.[262] Defence Witness Father Santos, testified that "nature itself had gone silent".[263] By 9 April, the number of refugees had risen to about 3,000, including some 900 children, concentrated mostly at the church and its surrounding buildings, which included separate residences for priests, nuns, and novices, and a cinema hall. Others hid in the parish school, health centre, and maternity building, clustered about a hundred metres away from the church.[264] The refugees had also brought five hundred head of cattle, which grazed on parish land near the church.[265] The parish priests and others provided the refugees with food, water, and other assistance.[266]

115. In the late afternoon of 9 April, groups of civilians armed with machetes and a few grenades, allegedly distributed by gendarmes, attacked the church.[267] Tutsis who were outside tending their cattle were targeted with grenades and several were killed as they tried to retreat into the church.[268] The attack lasted between thirty minutes and an hour, during which time about twelve people were killed by grenades and machetes, and many cattle were stolen.[269]

116. No attacks occurred on 10 and 11 April, leading some of the refugees to feel secure enough to circulate outside near the parish buildings.[270]

117. In the late afternoon of 12 April, however, the refugees barricaded themselves into the church in the face of looting and sporadic attacks.[271] Fearing an imminent attack, Father Santos and his captive congregants recited the rosary and sang.[272] The first grenade exploded as darkness fell, beginning a massive attack on the Parish complex that continued until dawn.[273] The Church was attacked with grenades and gunfire; the crowded cinema hall was set afire; and any refugees who tried to flee were hacked or beaten to death with machetes or clubs.[274] By dawn, between one and two thousand Tutsi

Although this testimony is said to refer to 7 and 8 April, the witness also seems to believe that the refugees remained outside even after the first attack: "the refugees were not passive. They counter-attacked").

I passed by the maternity ward, found lots of dead bodies in that area"). For reasons discussed below, the Chamber finds this testimony more credible than that of Witness AOI and Witness LED that the attack continued until mid-morning: T. 25 September 2005 pp. 8-9 (Witness LED); T. 23 September 2005 pp. 30-31 (Witness AOI). men, women and children had been massacred.[275] Both soldiers and civilians participated in the killing.[276]

5.2. Indictment

118. The Indictment reads:

> 18. Between 8 and 15 April 1994, Jean Mpambara ordered, planned, facilitated, or aided and abetted these attacks at Rukara Parish by:
>
> (i)* disarming civilians who had gathered, forcibly or by choice, at Rukara Parish, and luring them to exit the building enclosures and to gather in a central location on the Parish compound, allegedly for a security meeting or with promises of protection, as occurred on and between 8 and 13 April 1994;
>
> (ii) transporting and directing attackers including Interahamwe to the Parish compound as occurred on 9, 10 and 12 April 1994;
>
> - providing firearms and traditional weapons for the attackers as occurred on and between 8 and 13 April 1994;
> - providing and transporting stones to Rukara Parish complex, which were used by the attackers to attack the civilians sheltered at the Parish compound as occurred repeatedly between 9 and 12 April 1994;
> - providing petrol which was used by the attackers to attack the civilians sheltered at Rukara Parish compound as occurred on or about 11, 12 and 13 April 1994;
> - ordering or inciting Interahamwe and soldiers to attack and kill the civilians sheltered at Rukara Parish compound as occurred on or about 13 April 1994.

The legal characterization of the Accused's participation is that the he aided and abetted others to engage in attacks, and that he:

> participated in a joint criminal enterprise … with military and community leaders and members of the Interahamwe in Rukara Commune, such as … Police Brigadier Ruhiguri … Member of Parliament Innocent Kalibwende … former bourgmestre of Murambi commune Jean Baptiste Gatete … and other unknown participants. [277]

Paragraph 19 of the Indictment alleges that he "failed to maintain public order, or deliberately undermined the public order, in districts over which he exercised administrative authority, in agreement with or in furtherance of the policies and objectives of the MRND, the Interim Government or the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6, knowing that those policies and objectives intended the destruction, in whole or in part, of the Tutsi population".

5.3. Evidence

5.3.1. Overview of Submissions

[275] T. 26 September 2005 pp. 9-10 (Witness LED) ("But an estimate would base the number at about 2,000 dead – 2,000 people killed during that night or more than 2,000, possibly); T. 10 January 2006 p. 11 (Santos) ("And if we calculate that 1,000 people were killed, they were more than 3,000 people there, and that means that 2,000 persons were saved because of protection").

[276] T. 25 January 2006 p. 20 (Witness RU-18) ("these soldiers started using rifles"); T. 16 January 2006 pp. 27-31 (Witness RU-62) ("some soldiers came on bicycles in a line, they were carrying grenades on their belts, and they were carrying also rifles"); T. 29 September 2005 p. 18 (Witness AHY) ("they told me that they were planning to attack in the evening; and they said there were soldiers who would be coming from Murambi to give them a hand").

* The wrong numeration is the fact of the Tribunal.

[277] Indictment, para. 6. Paragraph 10 largely repeats this allegation, that the Accused "planned, ordered, instigated, facilitated or otherwise aided and abetted the attack on the Tutsi civilian population".

119. The Prosecution submits that the evidence shows that the Accused:

- presided over the distribution of grenades at a place called Paris Centre on the morning of 9 April and verbally instigated an attack on the Tutsi refugees;
- left Rukara Parish undefended with the intent to facilitate attacks on the Tutsi refugees on 9 April and instigated the first attack on the church at a place called Ruyenzi;
- met with Gatete, the former bourgmestre of Murambi, after the attack on 9 April to discuss the killing of Tutsi refugees;
- delivered stones on 12 April to be used in the attack on the Parish Church that evening; and
- left Rukara Parish undefended and permitted looting with the intent to facilitate attacks on the Tutsi refugees on 12 April.[278]

The Prosecution presented no arguments in support of the allegations in the Indictment that the Accused distributed petrol or that he ordered and incited attacks on 13 April.[279]

120. The Accused asserts that he did not co-operate with or encourage the attacks in any way. He maintains, on the contrary, that he did everything within his limited means as bourgmestre to protect the refugees. Testimony was heard purporting to show that he made good faith efforts to protect the refugees; that he opposed the attackers; and that he did not have legal or actual control over gendarmes who, rather than protecting the refugees, may have colluded with the attackers.

121. The Prosecution argues that the evidence concerning the Accused's involvement in a joint criminal enterprise must be considered as a whole. The Chamber accepts that where a single crime is constituted by diverse events, it is appropriate to consider whether the evidence of the various events is mutually supportive.[280] The Chamber must also consider whether a sequence of events, "taken in combination, point to the guilt of the accused person because they would usually exist in combination only because the accused did what is alleged against him".[281] As previously mentioned, the criminal conduct of the accused must be "the only reasonable conclusion" consistent with such evidence. Where "there is another conclusion which is also reasonably open from that evidence" then the accused must be acquitted.[282] In light of the range of factors which the parties have cited to prove or negate the involvement of the Accused in these attacks, the Chamber will make provisional findings in respect of each allegation on which the Prosecution relies, followed by a concluding section assessing the cumulative weight of the evidence.

[278] Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 115-172.

[279] Paragraph 18 (v) of the Indictment alleges that the Accused provided petrol for use during the attacks on the church. Prosecution Witness LEV testified that the Accused obtained jerry-cans of petrol from him on 12 April 1994, which may have been intended to prove this allegation. T. 27 September 2005 pp. 22-23 (Witness LEV). However, the Chamber heard no further evidence connecting this event to the use of petrol during the attacks, and the Prosecution presented no arguments on this evidence in its Closing Brief or closing arguments.

[280] Stakic, Judgement (AC), para. 55 ("the Trial Chamber's compartmentalized mode of analysis obscured the proper inquiry. Rather than considering separately whether the Accused intended to destroy the group through each of the genocidal acts … the Trial Chamber should expressly have considered whether all the evidence, taken together, demonstrated a genocidal mental state".).

[281] Mucic et al., Judgement (AC), para. 458.

[282] Id., para. 458; Stakic, Judgement (AC), para. 219 ("Where the challenge on appeal is to an inference drawn to establish a fact on which the conviction relies, the standard [of reasonable doubt] is only satisfied if the inference drawn was the only reasonable one that could be drawn from the evidence presented. In such circumstances, the question for the Appeals Chamber is whether it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to exclude or ignore other inferences that lead to the conclusion that an element of the crime was not proven".). The Prosecution recognizes throughout its Closing Brief that evidence concerning one discrete event is often only indirectly and circumstantially relevant to another event: "on the basis of the direct and circumstantial evidence … the Chamber can safely infer that Rukara Parish was deliberately left undefended … consistent with Mpambara's prior planning and preparation for the attack on the Tutsi refugees at the parish through instigating and facilitating the attackers with grenades, in furtherance of the JCE" (para. 142); "the only inference to be drawn from the foregoing analysis of the evidence is that the accused, consistent with his conduct and statements in Paris that morning, convened the Ruyenzi meeting to issue instructions for the attack on the Tutsi refugees" (para. 156).

5.3.2. Distribution of Grenades and Instigation at Paris Centre, 9 April

122. The Prosecution relies on the sole testimony of Witness AHY to prove that some time between 9 and 10 a.m. on 9 April, the Accused arrived at Paris Centre, driving the communal pick-up truck, accompanied by two gendarmes in the back. A crowd of twenty to thirty villagers gathered, and the gendarmes asked if anyone knew how to use grenades. They distributed four grenades, two to a certain Gahirwa and two to Ntaganda, while Mpambara remained silent inside the truck. As he started to drive away, he stopped the car, reversed, and announced: "'The Tutsis who [have] taken refuge in the church have got out of church and are coming to attack you … All of you should get ready to defend yourselves'".[283] He is also alleged to have said, "'People are ready to attack the Tutsis who are at the Karubamba church, so protect yourselves. I am going to tell the people of Ru[y]enzi'".[284] The evidence shows that Gahirwa, amongst others from Paris Centre, participated in the attack on the Parish church later that afternoon.[285]

123. Mpambara denied being at Paris Centre that morning and testified that he was at the communal offices with Elizabeth Hardinge at that time.[286] Ms. Hardinge, whose recollection of the timing of events the Chamber has found to be reliable, testified that:

> I can't remember the exact times, but it has to have been around half past nine that I was talking with him at Karubamba [behind the commune offices], and about ten o'clock when we were back at Gahini, but it could be some minutes either way because I never wrote down any timing or anything like that.[287]

Although Ms. Hardinge conceded a margin of error, the Chamber accepts her estimation that it would have been only a matter of "some minutes either way", as she put it, given her relatively precise recollection of the time of her departure from, and return to, Gahini Hospital. Given that Witness AHY testified that Mpambara's visit lasted between ten and fifteen minutes, the earliest he could have left Paris Centre would have been 9.10 a.m., which would have allowed him just enough time to travel the muddy three kilometres back to the communal offices at around 9.30 a.m.[288] On the other hand, after numerous fluctuations, Witness AHY seemed to settle on 9.30 a.m. as the time of Mpambara's arrival, which conflicts with Hardinge's testimony.[289] The likelihood of a conflict increases in light of a statement given by Witness AHY less than two weeks before his testimony that Mpambara arrived at 11 a.m., by which time Mpambara was on his way to Rwamagana with Hardinge.[290] The witness's

Whether the Accused spoke before or after the distribution of grenades is unclear. The witness said the former during the examination-in-chief, but then gave the detailed description of the Accused reversing the car and speaking to the crowd. The witness did not suggest that Mpambara had spoken twice, which is implicitly excluded by the witness's testimony that "[t]hose are the only words that he said". T. 29 September 2005 p. 7.

And about how long after this second sighting [of Nyirahuku at 9:00 a.m.] did the bourgmestre, Mpambara, arrive at Paris Centre? A. It was just a few moments after Nyirahuku left. Maybe thirty minutes after Mpambara arrived"). The Prosecution accepts the timeframe of 9.30 to 10.00 a.m. in its Closing Brief, but argues that both Ms. Hardinge and Witness AHY were giving only estimates. Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 118-121; T. 2 May 2006 pp. 29-30. If ten minutes is the minimum amount of time that he spent at Paris Centre, then he would not have left for Karubamba, some three kilometres away along a dirt track, until 9:40 a.m.

explanation that the time must have been recorded incorrectly due to a translation error does not seem plausible.

124. Witness AHY testified that twenty to thirty people gathered around Mpambara's vehicle after he arrived at Paris Centre.[291] None of them appeared before the Chamber to testify. The present situation is not one in which the lack of corroboration may be readily discounted because of the lack of potential witnesses. Accordingly, the witness's testimony must be treated with caution in light of the lack of corroboration, combined with its highly incriminating content.[292]

125. The Chamber entertains a reasonable doubt concerning the reliability of Witness AHY's testimony that Mpambara came to Paris Centre on the morning of 9 April and encouraged the killing of Tutsi refugees, and assisted gendarmes in distributing grenades.[293] Whether the totality of the evidence dispels that reasonable doubt shall be considered at the end of this section.

5.3.3. Instigating Attackers at Ruyenzi and Facilitating the Attack on Rukara Parish Church Complex on 9 April

126. The Prosecution interpretation of the evidence is that the apparent ease with which the Parish was attacked on 9 April shows that Mpambara made no effort to protect the refugees, despite the availability of gendarmes and police. Either no police or gendarmes were deployed to protect the Parish, or if they were, the Accused knew that they were complicit with the attackers. The Prosecution argues that "the Chamber can safely infer that Rukara Parish was deliberately left undefended … consistent with Mpambara's prior planning and preparation for the attack on Tutsi refugees at the parish through instigating and facilitating the attackers with grenades, in furtherance of the JCE".[294]

127. The Accused's role at Rukara Church began at 8 or 9 a.m. on 7 April 1994, when Mpambara met with the first wave of refugees to gather there.[295] As a result of their stories, he decided to tour Rukara to assess the situation and asked Father Santos and the Inspecteur de Police Judiciaire, Théophile Karasira, a Tutsi, to visit parts of the commune as well. Mpambara testified that neither he nor Santos saw any indications of unrest, although Santos testified that he saw threatening gangs of youths and refugees on the move.[296] By the time they returned to the Church at 11 a.m., the number of refugees had increased significantly.

[291] T. 29 September 2005 p. 7 (Witness AHY).

[292] Kordic and Cerkez, Judgement (AC), ("The Appeals Chamber has consistently held that the corroboration of evidence is not a legal requirement, but rather concerns the weight to be attached to evidence. In Kupreskic et al., the Appeals Chamber emphasized that a Trial Chamber is required to provide a fully reasoned opinion, and that where a finding of guilt was made in a case on the basis of identification evidence given by a single witness under difficult circumstances, the Trial Chamber must be especially rigorous in the discharge of that obligation. A Trial Chamber may thus convict an accused on the basis of a single witness, although such evidence must be assessed with the appropriate caution, and care must be taken to guard against the exercise of an underlying motive on the part of the witness. Any appeal based on the absence of corroboration must therefore necessarily be against the weight attached by a Trial Chamber to the evidence in question".). Although identification is not at issue here, the general principle is equally relevant.

[293] The Prosecution attempted to rely on a summary prepared by the Defence of the testimony of a witness who did not appear before the Chamber as corroboration for Witness AHY's testimony. Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 122; T. 2 May 2006 p. 30 (closing arguments). This information was not evidence, could not have been entered into evidence, and is of no evidential value. It is disregarded. Nor does Witness RU-62's testimony that he saw Gahirwa later in the day with grenades, reportedly given to him by gendarmes, provide any corroboration whatsoever that Mpambara was involved. Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 125; T. 2 May 2006 pp. 30-31 (closing arguments). Contrary to the Prosecution's suggestion, the evidence is made no stronger by the fact that the Defence put a proposition to the witness (that Mpambara was at a place called Ruyenzi) which conflicted with subsequent Defence evidence (that the Accused was on his way to Gahini Hospital). Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 128; T. 2 May 2006 p. 31 (closing arguments). The Defence may put a proposition to a witness during cross-examination without being thereby bound to that suggestion.

128. Mpambara testified that during this trip, he went to the homes of three of the seven communal police officers, including Brigadier Ruhiguri, and asked them either to return to the communal office directly or to join him on the tour. Two other policemen, who had been on duty throughout the night, were already accompanying Mpambara and Santos. Of the remaining two policemen, one was on annual leave, and another never reported for work again.[297]

129. Mpambara recalled that he left the Parish Church for the second time on 7 April around noon, in the company of Karasira, to assess the situation in a secteur which they had not visited earlier.[298] Defence Witness RU-18, a Tutsi who was inside the Church when it was attacked on 12 April, provides general corroboration of this account:

> [W]hat I recall most is that Mpambara and Karasira started moving around, telling people to stay calm. I remember that at [Karubamba] market people had started forming groups, and Karasira and Mpambara went and told them to disperse and go back to their homes.[299]

Santos testified that Mpambara returned to the Church several times that day to interview the refugees, and that he was "particularly interested in knowing what the situation was".[300] Mpambara testified that he directed the communal police to protect the Rukara Parish complex as of 6 p.m. that evening, but that their strength at that location over the next several days depended on how many policemen were on duty and not otherwise engaged, for example, with escorting him around the commune.[301]

130. Mpambara said that he first learned of killings in the commune from Brigadier Ruhiguri, on the morning of 8 April at his office.[302] After immediately going to Gahini Secteur to try to calm the situation, Mpambara testified that he left for Rwamagana around 9.30 a.m. in an unsuccessful effort to obtain additional reinforcements from the gendarmerie commandant and sous-préfet. Mpambara returned to Gahini Secteur between 11 and 11.30 a.m., where he saw further evidence of violence, before arriving back at the Church just after midday.[303] By that stage, Santos had apparently become alarmed at the possibility of an attack on the growing number of refugees, and told Mpambara:

> "If you cannot protect the refugees at the parish, and if the refugees are attacked by the population and if the refugees are massacred by the population, you[r] cause – the cause of the Hutu would be lost for good. Those images will be aired the world over, and your cause will be lost". So he stopped and looked at me in a pensive mood. And a few seconds afterwards he asked me, "Would you dare to make such a statement before the sous-préfet?".[304]

Santos testified that he accompanied Mpambara to Rwamagana where, having been unable to find the sous-préfet, they spoke to the gendarmerie commandant about the refugees at Rukara church. After Santos repeated his warning, he left the room while Mpambara spoke with the commandant alone. Santos could not recall whether Mpambara subsequently told him that gendarmes would be sent, but he testified that some time on that day or the next, four gendarmes armed with sub-machineguns were indeed stationed near Karubamba market, about 200 to 300 metres from the Church.[305]

Mpambara told Santos immediately before this exchange that "I told [Santos] that I had a lot of problems and that I was on the way to Rwamagana because I cannot manage the situation with only five policemen, and so I needed reinforcements from Rwamagana".). T. 7 February 2006 p. 6 (Mpambara).
[305] T. 9 January 2006 pp. 17-19, 42 (Santos).

131. Early in the afternoon of 9 April, the Accused arrived at the Parish church with twelve refugees who had been evacuated from Gahini Hospital, along with the gendarme commandant and several gendarmes and communal police.[306] Mpambara testified that he was told that a mob was forming near Gitarama with the intention of attacking the refugees at the church.[307] He left immediately, picking up Karasira, the Inspecteur de Police Judiciaire, and Innocent Kalibwende, a Member of Parliament, along the way.

132. Some four kilometres from the Parish church, a group of two or three hundred civilians armed with machetes, spears and sticks had gathered at a place called Ruyenzi.[308] According to Defence Witness RU-62, who was one of the would-be attackers, three of his companions, including Gahirwa, were armed with grenades, reportedly given to them that morning by a gendarme from Karubamba.[309] Mpambara urged people to return to their homes; said that he wanted peace and security in the commune; and ordered that the refugees be left alone.[310] Karasira reiterated Mpambara's instructions and said that they should instead fight people from Murambi who were invading the commune.[311] The crowd was displeased and some of them stood up and started to whistle and shout; some were insulting Karasira.[312] Mpambara, the gendarmerie commandant and the others were frightened by this reaction and quickly returned to their cars and left.[313] Some gendarmes signalled surreptitiously from the back of the pick-up in which they were riding for the crowd to follow them and an indeterminate number did so.[314] Witness RU-62 testified that one of the gendarmes told the attackers, apparently referring to Mpambara, that "if he stops you – keeps stopping you from going to the church, you should kill him first before you proceed to the church".[315] Mpambara testified that although the mob was displeased by what had been said, they started to return to their homes.[316]

133. The Prosecution insists that Mpambara's purpose at Ruyenzi was to instigate the population to attack the refugees at the Church.[317] The Defence testimony should be disregarded in its entirety because of "discrepancies between the various versions of the same event".[318] Furthermore, the [317] Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 156.

[318] Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 149-154. The Prosecution also suggests that the testimony of Witnesses RU-62 and KU-2 was discredited by contradictions with prior statements.

Prosecution suggests that if the gendarmes did beckon the crowd to follow, then those in the cars following Mpambara, including Father Santos, were "complicit[] in the planning and preparation of the attack".[319]

134. The evidence of the four Defence witnesses to this event – Santos, R-01, RU-62 and KU-2 – is consistent in the following essential elements: the meeting occurred in the early afternoon at Ruyenzi; leading military and civilian authorities, including Karasira, were present; Mpambara exhorted the attackers to return to their homes; and the crowd reacted to his words with hostility. In comparison with these factors, the discrepancies are of rather minor significance. Witness RU-62's hearsay evidence that Mpambara had some role in convening the meeting was explained by Mpambara who testified that the involvement of the bourgmestre would often be falsely invoked to encourage attendance. The Prosecution argues that the explanation is implausible if, as Mpambara claimed, he was widely known to be discouraging the violence.[320] Nevertheless, the Chamber cannot exclude the reasonable possibility that the organizers may still have believed that using Mpambara's name could attract people to the meeting.[321]

135. Defence Witness KU-2, who was one of the prospective attackers, had denied being at the meeting in a previous statement. The Prosecution construes this denial as an effort to dissociate himself from a meeting with a malign purpose and in which the Accused was involved as an organizer.[322] This speculation is outweighed by the consistent testimony of the three other witnesses concerning the words and attitude of the Accused on this occasion. At least two of them, Witness R-01 and Santos, were bystanders and have no need to dissociate themselves from the meeting or to concoct a version of events which would explain their presence there.[323]

136. The discrepancies concerning the number of people who headed to Rukara Parish is plausibly attributable to the witnesses' different perspectives.[324] As Witness RU-62 explained, the gendarmes gave their signals furtively, so as not to be observed by Mpambara or the others inside the pick-up truck. This suggests that there would likely have been some delay before most of the attackers followed the convoy. The accusation that the "occupants of the two other cars" in the convoy must have been able to observe the signalling and were, therefore, complicit in the attack which followed is presumably an oblique attack on the credibility of Father Santos.[325] The Prosecution failed to present any credible basis to believe that Father Santos would have lied about this incident. Indeed, the evidence shows that Father Santos declined to be evacuated with other Europeans on 10 April, remaining behind to provide assistance to his parishioners besieged at the Church.[326] A more plausible explanation for Father Santos's testimony, and one which is not reasonably excluded by the evidence, is that he simply did not see the gestures described by Witness RU-62.

137. Further doubt is cast on the proposition that Mpambara's true intention was to instigate the attackers by the fact that Mpambara brought Karasira to the scene, which was corroborated by Witnesses R-01, RU-62 and KU-2. If the Accused had wished to instigate an attack on the church, he would not likely have done so in front of a Tutsi judicial officer, whom he later assisted to flee the commune.

[321] The Chamber heard significant evidence that the Accused did engage in such efforts publicly. See Section 5.3.7.
[322] Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 152-53.
[323] The Chamber is also aware of the substantial contradictions between Witness KU-2's testimony and that of Witnesses AHY and LEV concerning KU-2's role in the first attack on the Parish. Witness KU-2 minimizes his participation (T. 24 January 2006 p. 12), whereas both Witness AHY (T. 29 September 2005 p. 11) and Witness LEV (T. 27 September 2006 p. 22) suggest that KU-2 had a leading role. Witness KU-2 has an obvious interest to be untruthful in respect of his own role in the attacks, but this does not necessarily undermine the credibility of his testimony concerning the Ruyenzi meeting.
[324] Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 154.
[325] Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 155; T. 2 May 2006 p. 38 (closing arguments) ("Father Santos … [is] deemed to have acquiesced in what the gendarmes were doing").
[326] See, e.g., T. 26 September 2005 p. 26 (Witness LED); T. 23 September 2005 p. 39 (Witness AOI).

138. When the convoy arrived back at the church, Mpambara spoke to the gathered refugees. Witnesses LED and LEV both testified that he said words to the effect: "'Isn't it your relatives who have killed the head of state?'"[327] Witness LEV described Mpambara as angry, derisive and mocking. Despite this hostility, both Mpambara and the gendarmerie commandant assured the refugees that they would be protected.[328] When the refugees complained about lack of water for their livestock, Mpambara promised to find a solution.[329] Prosecution Witness AOI saw Mpambara arrive but did not hear him speak; she was later told that he had said that there was no security at the church and that they should go back to their homes.[330] Father Santos arrived almost immediately after the others, but by that time the commandant was already speaking, having been introduced by the bourgmestre. The refugees were distrustful of the commandant's assurances of security, and one of them whispered to Santos: "'What is he talking about? Is he not making a mockery? He is the one who brought the grenades.'"[331] Santos denied that Mpambara had blamed the refugees for the death of the president or that he was mocking the refugees but accepted that the refugees were critical of the gendarmerie commandant who, when told of their views, responded: "'There is nothing I can do. I am sorry that what I said has been misinterpreted. There is nothing that I can do'".[332]

139. The Chamber entertains reasonable doubts about the reliability of the observation that Mpambara had a hostile or mocking attitude towards the refugees. Witness LEV admitted that he formed that only later, when the refugees were subsequently attacked. Father Santos testified that Mpambara's genuine goal throughout this period was "the protection of the refugees" and that "I could see at all times the commitment to defend the refugees", but that "[Mpambara] felt powerless because of the situation".[333] Under these circumstances, the Chamber has reasonable grounds to believe that Witness LEV's impressions of Mpambara's attitude are mistaken.

140. Mpambara testified that after the meeting with the refugees, the commandant ordered five gendarmes to take up a position at a kiosk near the Parish nutritional centre towards Karubamba Market and instructed them to work with the communal police to ensure security. Communal policemen were stationed near the convent, controlling the road approaching the church from the other direction.[334] Soon thereafter, Mpambara and Santos went together to fix the pump which supplied the Parish with water, some three or four kilometres away.[335]

141. When Mpambara and Santos were on their way back to the Parish, they saw cattle being stolen from the Parish. Santos went to the church while Mpambara started pursuing the thieves and firing his pistol to frighten them.[336] The attack on the church had started 40 minutes to an hour after Mpambara had been there with the gendarmerie commandant.[337] Witness AHY asserted that he saw no gendarmes or communal policemen at the Parish while he and others attacked the church.[338]

Gendarmes and policemen were not only present, according to Witness LED, but actively participated in the attack.[339] Witness KU-2 also testified that gendarmes were present at the Parish during the attack. As he was fleeing, they stopped and frisked him; Mpambara, who was nearby, shouted at him angrily.[340] Mpambara said that he heard gendarmes shooting in the air, chasing the people who had attacked the Parish, but did not recall having seen or shouted at Witness KU-2.[341]

142. Mpambara testified that when he found dead bodies at the church entrance, he was "amazed, flabbergasted [and] lost [his] head".[342] He and Santos went to the gendarmes and excoriated them for having failed to prevent the attack and asked them how it had happened.[343] Santos testified that the gendarmes responded that they had received orders not to shoot to kill anyone. The gendarmes also said, according to the Accused, that the attack had happened too quickly to be prevented.[344] The two communal police who had been stationed near the convent also denied having seen anything until the first grenades exploded because the attackers came through the bushes. Mpambara testified that he "did not accept that explanation" and that he entreated the gendarmes to shoot to kill to repel any further attacks.[345]

143. The Prosecution submits that the attack of 9 April could lead the Chamber to "safely infer that Rukara Parish was deliberately left undefended".[346] The Accused concedes that gendarmes and communal police acquiesced or cooperated with the attackers, but he insists that this cooperation was contrary to his own wishes and efforts. The vital question, therefore, is whether the lack of effective defence of the Church is attributable to the intentional conduct of the Accused, and whether this shows that he was colluding with the attackers.

144. The Defence has led credible evidence that the Accused took some, albeit ineffective, measures to dissuade or prevent attacks against the refugees and that the gendarmes were colluding with the attackers against his wishes. In the absence of any direct evidence (other than the testimony of Witness AHY, which the Chamber has found unreliable) that the Accused ordered, encouraged, or urged the gendarmes to facilitate attacks against the refugees, the Chamber cannot safely infer, on the basis of the evidence of events leading up to the 9 April attack, that the Accused facilitated the attack on the Parish complex by deliberately leaving it undefended.

5.3.4. Colluding to Kill Tutsi With Gatete, 9 April

145. The uncorroborated testimony of Prosecution Witness AHY is that, immediately after the attack on 9 April, he saw Mpambara standing with the former bourgmestre of Murambi Commune, Jean-Baptise Gatete, in front of Mugabo's Bar, near Karubamba Market.[347] Gatete asked "why this Tutsi issue was not over. 'Is there any shortage of bullets or grenades or Interahamwe? Tell me if you Actually, they instead helped the attackers. For instance, during the attack on the 9th, that evening the gendarmes also came and shot at us. And even in – rather, on the 11th and the 9th, a police – a communal policeman came with attackers and shot at us".). Cf. Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 130, 139.

[344] T. 9 January 2006 pp. 29, 42 (Santos); T. 7 February 2006 p. 40 (Mpambara). There appears to be a curious inconsistency as to where the two men met the gendarmes. Santos testified that he got into his vehicle and went to the gendarmes post; Mpambara testified that the gendarmes and police came to the church, and that he spoke with them there.
[345] T. 7 February 200 p. 42 (Mpambara). Santos neither confirmed nor denied that Mpambara had accompanied him to speak to the gendarmes. Cf. Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 161.

need Interahamwe, and then I send them and this issue is resolved'".[348] Mpambara "did not utter any word in reply".[349] Mpambara denies being present at Mugabo's bar that afternoon.

146. Even if accepted as reliable, this fragmentary account by Witness AHY is inconclusive. Mpambara's silence might suggest opposition, or simply a refusal to cooperate. Indeed, Witnesses RU-37 and RU-18 testified that, two days later, Mpambara had an angry exchange with the bourgmestre of Murambi Commune at the time, a certain Mwange. Mwange asked Mpambara why the "weeds", meaning Tutsi, had not been removed from the commune. Mpambara responded "loudly that the problem in Rukara was not the bushes they had to cut down, the problem was the security of the people being killed".[350] The two men parted in anger.

147. Under these circumstances, cooperation between the Accused and Gatete to kill the Tutsi refugees at Rukara Parish is not the only reasonable inference to be drawn from this fragment of conversation. Furthermore, Witness AHY's testimony concerning Mpambara's visit to Paris Centre that morning, discussed above in section 5.3.2, raises doubts about his overall credibility. Finally, the testimony of Witnesses RU-37 and RU-18 concerning the Accused's reaction to Mwange indirectly contradicts the proposition that the Accused was colluding with the attackers from Murambi Commune. Accordingly, it has not been proven beyond a reasonable doubt that Mpambara's conversation with Gatete was for the purpose of discussing the killing of Tutsis.

5.3.5. Delivering Stones to Be Used in an Attack on the Church, 12 April

148. No further attacks were launched on the Parish on 10 and 11 April, but the refugees were becoming increasingly desperate, and the distribution of food more difficult.[351] On 11 and 12 April, Mpambara and Santos returned to Rwamagana to ask the gendarmerie commandant for further reinforcements or evacuation of the refugees to an empty school in Rwamagana. The commandant responded that he didn't have enough manpower or resources for either request.[352] On the second visit, the commandant suggested that Mpambara distribute guns in the communal armoury to former soldiers who could assist in defending the Church.[353]

149. Santos testified that, at around 3 or 4 p.m. on 12 April, Mpambara came and told him that "'[t]he assailants have already received orders to attack this evening'".[354] Santos further testified that:

> [H]e told me, "… I will try to find out whether I can convince them to postpone the attack to the next day and not today". He's saying that he was trying to play the game, sort of, to accept the attack but to have it postponed to the next day. The idea he had was that he would use the intervening period to assemble the retired police officers and the retired soldiers in order to protect the refugees.[355]

150. The uncorroborated testimony of Witness LED is that between 4 and 5 p.m., the Accused arrived in front of the church in his pick-up truck with about eight Interahamwe who proceeded to unload quartzite stones.[356] As soon as Mpambara left, these and other Interahamwe started throwing [356] Contrary to the Prosecution suggestion, Witness AOI's testimony provides no corroboration for Witness LED's testimony. Witness AOI could confirm only that the she saw Mpambara driving at around that time in the same direction indicated by Witness LED. Indeed, Witness AOI's failure to mention an attack of the magnitude mentioned by Witness LED is significant. T. 23 September 2005 p. 29 (Witness AOI). Cf. Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 171.

the stones at the church, joined shortly thereafter by attackers with other weapons, including a gendarme who started firing his gun.[357]

151. Neither Father Santos nor Witness RU-18, both of whom were inside or near the church during this period, saw the Accused unloading stones or an attack of this nature.[358] This lack of corroboration from others, who were present inside the church and who would not likely have overlooked such an attack, is significant. Furthermore, Witness LED's account is undermined by a prior statement in which he had indicated that the Accused came to the church "three times", rather than just once, and that he "deposited the stones at various places outside in the parish". After Mpambara's departure "the third time, the Interahamwe attacked us".[359] This discrepancy is not easily explained as a transcription or translation error. Furthermore, Santos explained that cement and stone benches in front of the church were the source of the stones thrown at the church later that evening.[360] Consequently, the testimony of Witness LED does not establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused transported stones and Interahamwe to Rukara church for the purpose of aiding and abetting the attack on the Tutsi refugees there.[361]

5.3.6. Failing to Arrest Looters or to Otherwise Protect Rukara Church, 12 April

152. The Prosecution asserts that, by his own admission, the Accused failed to arrest looters in Rukara Parish on 10 and 11 April and that he failed to arrest anyone involved in the Parish attack of 12 and 13 April. By 12 April, the Accused knew that the gendarmes were not committed to defending the refugees and should have replaced them with communal police or taken other steps to defend the Parish. The Prosecution argues that these actions, or omissions, were for the purpose of permitting other members of the joint criminal enterprise to carry out attacks against the Tutsi refugees, or to aid and abet such attacks.[362]

153. In response to a question about his failure to make more vigorous efforts to track down and arrest those involved in the attack at the Gahini Hospital, the Accused gave the following answer regarding his general strategy:

> And I said that if I use violence and I arrest people by force, what am I going to gain from that? … If I arrest those people and lock them up, then the police will not be available because they would be guarding those people locked up in the commune cell … The second option was to use violence. As you know, in every strategy, an administrator has to think about which way he is going to use. I was with the chief of police and the IPJ, and I asked him whether, if – "With the means we have, can we arrest those people? Can we stop them? Can we shoot them?" Then I said, "Violence leads to violence," and bearing in mind that most of these people were soldiers … and Butera had been a soldier and knew how to use a gun and grenades. And I said, "With the staff that we have, we cannot kill those people and overcome them. If we use violence, if I give the order and the police chief shoots at one of them, those could come and kill us – kill all of us, myself and the police, and together with the people we're supposed to protect". And I found that this strategy wouldn't lead us to anywhere. Instead, it would make matters worse. So, me as bourgmestre, I said, "I have to adopt a strategy of dissuasion". I had to show them that [361] The Prosecution discusses the "credibility of Mpambara's alibi for 3 p.m. to 6 p.m." at length in its closing brief, paras. 173-193. Having found that Witness LED's testimony is not sufficient to establish that the Accused unloaded stones at the church, the Chamber need not examine whether the alibi raises a reasonable doubt concerning the evidence of distribution. The alleged inconsistencies in the alibi evidence do not provide any additional support to Witness LED's testimony.

[362] Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 228-237. Although these arguments are presented within the context of the accused's "failure to act", the Chamber will treat these submissions as if they are directed at proving the Accused's involvement in a joint criminal enterprise or aiding and abetting. Indeed, on occasion, the Prosecution also makes that submission: "…is evidence of his intention to ensure that they were not inhibited from carrying out the objective of the JCE…", paras. 228, 237.

there is administration. And when I looked at the whole situation, I found that we didn't have any leverage. Those people we were facing were stronger than us. So, we have to dissuade them, and without showing that the administration is weak, so that those people may not find that there is no administration and they can do anything they want. The second thing I thought about is that, if I give the order for them to shoot those people, those assailants, those are the policemen I am going to give orders to, and they are local people, they may not accept to shoot their kith and kin. If I tell someone to shoot a brother or a relative, is that possible? … So I chose the dissuasion strategy and tried to mitigate the situation so that it may not get worse. Mr. Prosecutor, I never said that I shouldn't arrest the assailants, but I was weak. And the only strategy that was left was to show that there is an administration because, in the end, it came to something. But I was not supposed to show the weakness of the authority. That is the strategy that I chose, Mr. Prosecutor, and Your Honour.[363]

Mpambara testified that, given the inadequacy of communal police resources, he had no choice but to rely on the gendarmes even after he became aware of their complicity in the attacks, and hoped that his complaints to the commandant would result in more or better-trained gendarmes.[364] The Defence tendered evidence, not seriously contested by the Prosecution, that gendarmes were not under the command of the bourgmestre.[365]

154. Although a few armed communal policemen could have deterred a large crowd of unarmed attackers, Defence and Prosecution witnesses alike testified that by 12 April the assailants were armed with guns and grenades, and included soldiers and gendarmes.[366] Under these circumstances, the Chamber cannot say that the failure of the communal police to maintain order at the Church demonstrates the Accused's collusion with the attackers. Another reasonable explanation is that Mpambara was afraid to oppose the attackers with direct force, fearing that they would turn on him with superior force. The Chamber does not find that the failure to arrest any of the attackers shows that the Accused was in league with them.[367]

155. In the absence of further evidence showing the Accused's cooperation with the attackers, and with some evidence that the Accused made efforts to secure the Parish, the Chamber cannot find beyond a reasonable doubt that the failure to arrest looters and otherwise protect Rukara Parish demonstrates his involvement in a joint criminal enterprise, or that he or that he substantially contributed to these crimes by other persons so as to be guilty of aiding and abetting.[368]

5.3.7. The Evidence in its Totality

156. The Chamber has been mindful of the inter-relationship of evidence concerning the different events described above and will now explicitly consider whether, taken as a whole, the evidence shows that the Accused was part of a joint criminal enterprise.

[367] The only incidents of failures to arrest are to be derived from the Accused's own testimony.
[368] The Chamber notes that evidence from Witness AOI placing the Accused at the scene of the attack on 12-13 April was not relied upon by the Prosecution in its Closing Brief. If it had been relied upon, the Chamber would have found that the witness's credibility was seriously undermined by an inconsistent prior statement, which gave a very different account of her whereabouts during the attack. T. 23 September 2005 p. 52. Further doubts are raised by her testimony that a close relative of hers was killed during the attack, a fact which was contradicted by several other witnesses, and which she recanted when asked directly to confirm his death. T. 23 September 2005 pp. 48, 51; T. 25 January 2006 p. 23 (Witness RU-18); T. 10 January 2006 p. 30, T. 12 January 2006 p. 27 (Santos).

157. Father Santos was a central witness for the Defence in describing the atmosphere at the Parish complex and the general conduct of the Accused from 7 to 13 April 1994. The Prosecution attempted to undermine Father Santos' testimony by suggesting that the Accused's apparent good conduct was no more than a smokescreen to conceal his criminal acts.[369] The Prosecution also implied that Santos was biased in favour of Mpambara.[370]

158. Although not all aspects of Father Santos' testimony are equally reliable, particularly in respect to the timing of events, the Chamber nevertheless finds that he was an honest, truthful and unbiased witness. He has been a missionary priest since 1954 and had been in Rwanda since 1967, mostly at Rukara Parish itself. He understands and speaks Kinyarwanda well.[371] Tutsi refugees testified that he helped them at the church, and the Prosecution brought no evidence suggesting that he harboured an anti-Tutsi bias, despite an oblique suggestion to this effect.[372]

159. Father Santos's account of the Accused's reaction to his planned departure on 10 April is significant:

> I stopped [Mpambara] and I said, "Goodbye". And he said, "Why?" I said, "We are leaving for Spain". "You are leaving for Spain", he said. "How? And you are leaving the refugees behind?" He was somewhat shocked. He said, "If you leave today, they will kill all the refugees". And he went on to say, "I am not sure that if you stay it will save them". And he was pointing with his finger. "But if I had any bit of hope left, it was you, and if you leave everyone will be killed". I turned to my fellow priest and I told him, "Have you heard? I am remaining behind – I am staying behind…".[373]

If the Accused had wished to assist with the extermination of the Tutsi refugees without being discovered, then it is difficult to understand why he would plead with a foreigner to remain on the scene. It is always possible that the Accused was so Machiavellian and confident in his skills of deception that he wished Santos to remain behind as a dupe who would later attest to his good deeds. The Chamber considers this possibility to be remote, in light of Santos's ability to understand the language and his familiarity with people in the commune.

160. Indeed, Santos's testimony is directly and indirectly corroborated by a number of credible Rwandese witnesses. Defence Witnesses RU-37 and RU-18 are partners in a marriage of mixed ethnicity. They testified that the Accused helped them to marry despite the opposition of their families and others in the community.[374] Both witnesses testified that on 11 April, near Karubamba Market, the Accused publicly denounced the bourgmestre of Murambi Commune, Mwange, who was advocating

I wanted to support the order that existed in Rwanda at the time, whether such a political order was maintained by the Hutus or the Tutsi. The Hutus were in power, and it was my intention to support the action of the authorities to ensure that the tragic events should not destroy the political authority at the time or should not lead your political authority at the time to go astray").

attacking the Tutsis.[375] The next day, Mwange was heard saying "'You should be patient… Mpambara is preventing you from killing those people, but I am going to bring people who will help you to kill those people".[376] Mpambara's public calls throughout Rukara Commune for the violence to stop are echoed in the testimonies of numerous witnesses, both Tutsi and Hutu. Félicien Serukwavu, a Tutsi, testified that, some time after 8 April, Mpambara addressed an angry crowd at Akabeza Centre to the effect that "I am warning you today whoever will again loot Tutsi property, kill, hunt down Tutsis and kill them, I am repeating to you that whoever does it will be prosecuted… Moreover, all these groups with machetes and clubs, I don't want them. Everybody should go back home".[377] The four witnesses to the meeting at Ruyenzi on 9 April all agree that the Accused conveyed the same sentiments there, in the presence of Karasira, the Tutsi Inspecteur de Police Judiciaire. Father Santos was one of those witnesses, and another was Witness R-01 who, in 1994, was a seminarian who provided medical and other assistance to the Tutsi refugees.[378]

161. Father Santos' general impression of the attitude of the Accused was that:

> In the gestures of the bourgmestre, I could see at all times the commitment to defend the refugees… [H]e didn't want to see anyone else being killed. He said he didn't want to be involved in this matter and wanted to go, but later on he said 'I am the bourgmestre and I have to stay.' So he felt helpless… [H]e wanted to flee but his conscience and his sense of responsibility obliged him to hold out… He could see himself being accused as a bourgmestre and he felt powerless because of the situation. He felt like fleeing in order not to be involved but, on the other hand, he felt obliged to stay – in order to live up to his responsibilities.[379]

This conclusion is based on several joint efforts by Mpambara and Santos on behalf of the refugees, including several visits to Rwamagana to obtain more gendarmes; attempts to fix the water supply; dissuading gangs from engaging in violence; and urging the gendarmes to protect the refugees. The Prosecution failed to raise any significant reason to doubt this testimony.

162. The Accused also undertook a variety of significant efforts to save Tutsis, including: driving eight kilometres from the Parish on 10 April to save the mother of a Tutsi priest, and then driving her, as well one of her sons and his wife and children, from the Parish church to Rwamagana;[380] colluding in the concealment of Witness RU-18, a Tutsi;[381] arranging for the evacuation of Karasira;[382] and giving out identity cards stamped "Hutu" to Tutsi refugees.[383] Although some of these actions may have been motivated primarily by personal attachment, together they demonstrate a significant effort to save Tutsis from danger.

163. By comparison, the evidence of the Accused's involvement in a joint criminal enterprise or other criminal conduct is weak, disconnected, and uncorroborated. There was direct testimony concerning only two events – instigation and distribution of grenades at Paris Centre and the distribution of stones at the Church – neither of which was corroborated. Neither Witness AHY nor Witness LED were particularly convincing for the reasons described above, and neither event is connected to other events in such a way as to make them more plausible or likely. The alleged intent to leave the refugees open to an attack is speculative and based on possible, but not necessary, inferences. The standard of proof when circumstantial evidence is relied upon is that the criminal conduct of the accused is the only reasonable conclusion. The cumulative weight of the evidence does not alter the finding that the Prosecution has not proven the material elements of the crimes charged beyond a reasonable doubt. On the contrary, the totality of the evidence confirms that there is reasonable doubt.

5.4. Conclusion

164. The Chamber finds that it has not been proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused distributed weapons and incited genocide at Paris Centre on the morning of 9 April; that he colluded with Gatete to kill Tutsi refugees; that he distributed rocks to aid the attack on the Parish church on 12 April; or that he deliberately left Rukara Parish unprotected as part of his involvement in a joint criminal enterprise.

6. Factual Allegations Falling Outside of the Indictment

165. Article 20 (4) (a) of the Statute requires that an accused "be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he or she understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him or her". This does not mean that all evidence on which the Prosecution intends to rely must be included in the indictment, but that the material facts must be articulated with sufficient particularity and accuracy to put the "accused [] in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her".[384] A Trial Chamber may permit material facts to be communicated to the Defence after the filing of the indictment as, for example, through the Pre-Trial Brief, opening statement, or other communications which make clear to the Defence that the material fact is part of the Prosecution case, and how it is relevant to the charges.[385] Even in the absence of a contemporaneous objection to the admission of evidence outside of the scope of the indictment, the Chamber may not base a conviction upon material facts of which the accused does not have reasonable notice.[386]

166. Whether a fact is material depends on its nature. An allegation that the Accused physically committed a criminal act is not only material, but must be specifically pleaded in the Indictment; it
