As to the requirement of accuracy: Rutaganda, Judgement (AC), para. 303 ("Before holding that an event charged is immaterial or that there are minor discrepancies between the indictment and the evidence presented at trial, a Chamber must normally satisfy itself that no prejudice shall, as a result, be caused to the accused. An example of such prejudice is the existence of inaccuracies likely to mislead the accused as to the nature of the charges against him"); Ndindabahizi, Judgement (TC), para. 28; Semanza, Judgement (TC), para. 44 ("The fundamental question in determining whether an indictment was pleaded with sufficient particularity is whether an accused had enough detail to prepare his defence"); Ntagerura et al., Judgement (TC), para. 32 ("The Chamber, however, does not expect the Prosecutor to perform an impossible task and recognizes that the nature or scale of the crimes, the fallibility of the witnesses' recollections, or witness protection concerns may prevent the Prosecution from fulfilling its legal obligations to provide prompt and detailed notice to the accused. If a precise date cannot be specified, a reasonable range of dates should be provided").

[385] Naletilic, Judgement (AC), para. 27 ("In [determining whether the accused had sufficient notice of a material fact], the Appeals Chamber has in some cases looked at information provided through the Prosecutor's pre-trial brief or its opening statement. The Appeals Chamber considers that the list of witnesses the Prosecution intends to call at trial, containing a summary of the facts and the charges in the indictment as to which each witness will testify and including specific references to counts and relevant paragraphs in the indictment, may in some cases serve to put the accused on notice. However, the mere service of witness statements or of potential exhibits by the Prosecution pursuant to disclosure requirements does not suffice to inform an accused of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial").

[386] Naletilic, Judgement (AC), para. 26 ("In reaching its judgement, a Trial Chamber can only convict the accused of crimes which are charged in the indictment… Where the failure to give sufficient notice of the legal and factual reasons for the charges against the accused has violated the right to a fair trial, no conviction may result"). The result of failing to make a specific, contemporaneous objection to the use of evidence of which no notice has been given is that the burden falls on the Defence to show that it was not reasonable informed of the charge, and that it suffered prejudice. Niyitegeka, Judgement (AC), para. 200; Ndindabahizi, Judgement (TC), para. 29.

may not be communicated by other means.[387] On the other hand, details concerning crimes on a broad scale, in which the accused played an indirect role, may be pleaded with less specificity.[388]

167. The Defence objects that it did not have adequate notice of the allegation that the Accused was present during the beating of a young man named Murenzi on the morning of 7 April at Gahini Hospital.[389]

168. The Indictment contains no specific reference to this event. The Pre-Trial Brief, which was disclosed about three months before the start of trial, does indicate that:

> On or about the 7th of April at around 3.30 p.m. following a meeting at Akabeza at which he had instigated the killing of Tutsis, Jean Mpambara stood by and watched Samuel Gasana and six other armed Interahamwe assault and seriously injure two Tutsi civilians, Murenzi and his friend, with machetes and did not intervene to prevent or stop the assault.[390]

169. This allegation is said in the Pre-Trial Brief to be relevant to paragraphs 7 (ii) and 7 (vi) of the Indictment, which assert that the Accused participated in a campaign against the Tutsi population, which included "mobilizing Hutu civilians to identify, isolate, marginalize and attack their Tutsi neighbours" and "strategically directing, facilitating and aiding armed attacks against large groups of Tutsis". The Pre-Trial Brief also links this allegation to paragraph 11 of the Indictment, which begins with the words "On the evening of 7 April, after the meetings in Akabeza Center…"

170. The allegation in question cannot be relevant to the paragraphs identified in the Pre-trial Brief. Murenzi was with one friend when attacked, not part of a "large group". Rather than fitting into a campaign to "marginalize and attack their Tutsi neighbours", the event was an isolated attack on a person who was targeted because he was a stranger in the neighbourhood. Finally, the attack was said to be at 3:30 p.m., which is before the temporal scope of paragraph 11 of the Indictment.

171. The lack of connection between the material fact and the paragraphs in the Indictment points to a more fundamental issue: the conduct would, on its own, be a criminal act which should, in principle, have been expressly pleaded in the Indictment. Although the Accused is not himself alleged to have beaten Murenzi, his alleged involvement is precise, specific, and, if proven, is probably sufficient to show that he was guilty of a crime. The implication of the allegation is that his presence, combined with his inaction, had an encouraging effect on the attackers. In these circumstances, the requirement that "acts that were physically committed by the accused personally must be set forth in the indictment specifically" applies to this allegation. Furthermore, this allegation stands on its own in the sense that it is not significantly relevant to or probative of the broader crimes mentioned in paragraphs 7 and 11 of the Indictment. This distinguishes it from the Accused's alleged instigation at Ruyenzi which, although not specifically pleaded, is squarely covered by paragraph 18 (ii) of the Indictment that the Accused "transport[ed] and direct[ed] attackers" as part of the Rukara church attacks on 9 and 12 April.

172. Accordingly, the Chamber considers that the allegation of the Accused's presence during the beating of Murenzi has not been charged as a distinct criminal act, and has only been considered above to the extent necessary to set the scene for events at Gahini Hospital on 9 April.

173. Even assuming that notice of this allegation had been properly given, the Chamber finds that it has not been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Witness LET testified that, around 3.30 p.m. on 7 April, she saw the Accused inside the compound of Gahini Hospital, standing next to his communal pick-up truck and escorted by two communal police, while a gang of youths beat two young Tutsis.

[390] Pre-Trial Brief, para. 21. No mention of this event is made in the opening statement. T. 19 September 2005 pp. 3-6 (Prosecution opening statement).

Mpambara allegedly did nothing to stop the attack and left while it was ongoing.[391] As discussed in section 3.3.2, Prosecution Witness Dr. Wilson testified that he also witnessed this attack and that he intervened to rescue one of the young men, a fact which is corroborated by Witness LET.[392] However, Dr. Wilson did not testify that he saw the Accused inside the compound during the attack, or at any other time that day. After he had taken the young Tutsi inside the hospital, and after the attackers had dispersed, Dr. Wilson came upon Mpambara standing next to his vehicle a short distance away from the Akabeza Gate, accompanied by "some of the older members … of the community".[393] Mpambara himself recalled being there that day and speaking to Wilson, but denied witnessing any attack. He did admit that he learned of the attack and, apparently addressing the attackers themselves, said that "even if you don't know the person, you don't have the right to beat anybody".[394]

174. Witness LET's overall credibility was significantly undermined by her testimony that she saw Mpambara lead the attackers into the Gahini Hospital compound for the first attack on the morning of 9 April 1994, as discussed above in section 4.3.3. This testimony was contradicted by Prosecution Witness Dr. Wilson, and Defence Witness Elizabeth Hardinge, both of whom testified that he did not arrive until after the end of the first attack.[395] The Chamber has accepted the testimony of Dr. Wilson and Ms. Hardinge as credible in this respect, and finds it difficult to understand how Witness LET's testimony as to Mpambara's presence at that time could be the result of a mere error of memory. When this is combined with the lack of corroboration from Dr. Wilson that Mpambara was present inside the hospital compound on the afternoon of 7 April, the Chamber cannot find beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused was present during the attack and that he knowingly failed to intervene.

Chapter IV: Verdict and Disposition

175. For the foregoing reasons, and having considered all of the evidence and the arguments of the parties, the Chamber finds the Accused NOT GUILTY on all counts of the Indictment, and is therefore acquitted.

176. Subject to any applications which may be made by the Parties upon receiving this Judgement, the Trial Chamber orders the immediate release of Jean Mpambara from the custody of the Tribunal, pursuant to Rule 99 (A) of the Rules.

Opinion individuelle du Juge Lattanzi

(Original : Français)

1. Je regrette de ne pouvoir partager certains des arguments développés par la majorité des juges de la Chambre dans les paragraphes 21 à 35 du Jugement, à propos des différentes modalités par lesquelles les omissions peuvent engager la responsabilité de leurs auteurs selon les Statuts des deux Tribunaux pénaux internationaux. Je me limiterai ici à souligner seulement quelques arguments plus significatifs que je ne peux partager.

2. Les omissions engagent la responsabilité de leur auteur avant tout conformément aux articles 6 (3), 7 (3) desdits Statuts, où elles sont explicitement considérées pour ce qui concerne la responsabilité du supérieur au regard des agissements de leurs subordonnés. D'une telle forme de responsabilité forme de responsabilité n'est pas question dans la présente Affaire, comme la Chambre bien le souligne[1].

3. Comme il résulte clairement de la jurisprudence des Chambres de première instance[2] et d'appel[3], la responsabilité par omission peut être envisagée aussi selon les articles 6 (1), 7 (1), en particulier comme une forme d'assistance ou d'encouragement (voire d'incitation[4]) à la commission du crime par l'auteur principal. Les omissions peuvent également engager la responsabilité d'un individu dans le cadre d'une entreprise criminelle conjointe (ECC)[5]. Dans ce cas, l'individu serait responsable d'une commission[6]. Ce sont en l'espèce les deux formes de responsabilité par omission que plaide le Procureur.

[2] V. Bagilishema, TC Judgement, 7 June 2001, para 675, Rutaganira Jugement 1ère instance, 14 Mars 2005, p. 17, para 68. la Chambre de 1ère instance dans Blaskic a affirmé que l'actus reus de l'aide ou encouragement peut bien être réalisé par une omission « provided this failure to act had a decisive effect on the commission of the crime and that it was coupled with the requisite mens rea » (citée dans Blaskic judgment (AC), 29 July 2004, para. 47. V. aussi Kvocka TC Judgment, 2 November 2001, para. 251. Une récente, très intéressante décision sur l'omission comme modalité de commission d'un crime selon le Statut du TPIY, est celle de la Chambre de 1ère instance dans Blagojevic, où on donne une illustration approfondie de la loi applicable à cet aspect : Blagojevic Judgment TC 17 January 2005, p. 261, para. 726.

[3] La jurisprudence de la Chambre d'appel soit confirme essentiellement l'approche des jugements rendus par les Chambres de première instance, admettant la responsabilité par omission dans le cadre de l'aide et de l'encouragement prévus par l'article 6 (1), 7 (1) des deux Statuts, soit envisage la responsabilité par omission directement en appel. C'est ainsi que la Chambre d'appel dans Blaskic a considéré spécifiquement l'affirmation de la Chambre de 1ère instance sur l'aide et l'encouragement par omission en laissant ouvert seulement l'aspect de la source de l'obligation (Judgement, 29 July 2004, para 47). Dans Ntagerura aussi on a eu l'occasion, en appel même, d'occuper de la responsabilité selon l'art. 6 (1), mais on s'est limité à faire état de l'accord des parties sur le fait « qu'un accusé /peut/ être tenu pénalement responsable d'une omission sur la base de l'art. 6 (1) du Statut » (par. 334). Dans Blaskic, encore, la Chambre d'appel a considéré l'accusé responsable de traitements inhumains pour des manquements à une obligation d'agir, excluant sa responsabilité pour des actes positifs se rapportant au même chef et qui avait été retenue par la Chambre de première instance. Pour économie du discours je ne me réfère pas à d'autres décisions et jugements, en 1ère instance et appel, où les omissions ont été bien considérées comme forme de responsabilité selon les articles 6 (1) et 7 (1) des Statuts. Je ne partage donc pas l'avis de la majorité de la Chambre qu'en plus des omissions en présence de l'accusé ou en stricte connexion avec des actes positifs, "other examples of aiding and abetting through failure to act are not to be easily found in the annals of the ad hoc Tribunals" (Mpambara Jugdment, para. 23).

[4] "Instigation can take many different forms; it can be expressed or implied, and entail both acts and omissions". Blaskic Judgement TC 3 March 2000, para 270.

[5] La Chambre d'appel dans l'affaire Kvocka a approfondi les distinctions à faire par rapport à la mens rea et à l'effet substantiel entre une omission comme simple forme d'aide et encouragement et une omission dans le contexte d'une ECC (Judgement AC, 28 February 2005, para. 90).

[6] Je ne vois pas que "it is hard to imagine that total passivity could demonstrate the requisite intent for co-perpetratorship" (pararagraph 24 du Jugement) : cela dépend seulement des circonstances concrètes. La «passivité » coupable représente

4. Je ne vois pas que "liability for an omission may arise in a third, fundamentally different context: where the accused is charged with a duty to prevent or punish others from committing a crime", ni que "the culpability arises not by participating in the commission of a crime, but by allowing another person to commit a crime which the Accused has a duty to prevent or punish"[7] (sauf le contexte de la responsabilité du supérieur, à laquelle d'ailleurs la majorité de la Chambre n'entend pas se référer[8]).

5. A mon avis, l'expression Failure of Duty to Prevent or Punish, ne se référant pas à la disposition de l'art. 6 (3), ne vise pas un contexte différent par rapport aux contextes relatifs aux autres omissions plaidées, mais décrit des infractions particulières, toute omission coupable n'étant qu'un manquement au devoir d'agir. En effet, si les actions comportant une responsabilité pénale consistent dans la violation d'une règle juridique portant interdiction de faire, les omissions sources de responsabilité consistent toujours dans la violation d'une règle juridique portant obligation d'agir[9].

6. S'il est vrai que l'expression en question présente, surtout en ce qui concerne le manquement au devoir de punir, une certaine ambiguïté par rapport à la responsabilité selon l'Article 6 (3), par la charge plaidée on envisage la punition manquée des auteurs des crimes comme une facilitation, un encouragement à la commission de crimes ultérieurs pour lesquelles la responsabilité de l'Accusé serait encore engagée. Et cela pourrait bien être le cas surtout dans une situation, comme dans la présente affaire, d'attaques continues qui ont eu une stricte connexion tant spatiale que temporelle et même personnelle entre eux (la même Commune, une période de temps très court, parfois les mêmes attaquants). On se trouverait donc toujours dans le contexte de l'aide et encouragement selon l'art. 6 (1)[10].

7. Je regrette encore de ne pas pouvoir partager l'avis de la majorité de la Chambre que parmi les omissions plaidées par le Procureur dans la présente affaire comme forme de participation de l'Accusé à une ECC de la première catégorie ou comme aide ou encouragement donnés aux auteurs des crimes l'actus reus (violation d'un devoir d'agir), la mens rea est un autre élément à prouver : et on peut bien partager la mens rea des autres participants à la ECC même en omettant simplement de remplir un devoir d'agir.

[9] Sur la source de l'obligation d'agir la jurisprudence des deux Tribunaux se divise. Il y a des Chambres qui, suivant la décision d'Appel Tadic dans laquelle pour la première fois on s'est occupée de cette question, voient cette source seulement dans le droit pénal, tandis que d'autres Chambres prennent en considération une «obligation légale d'agir quelconque ». La dernière approche, en tout cas suivie le plus souvent. Malheureusement la question n'a pas été abordée sinon indirectement par la Chambre d'Appel dans l'Affaire Ntagerura. Ici, se trouvant confrontée à une décision de 1ère instance qui reprenait sur le point l'approche qu'on trouve dans Tadic sur la source pénale de l'obligation d'agir, la Chambre d'appel a décidé de ne pas approfondir cet aspect et de se limiter à considérer la question de la capacité d'agir, qui avait été à la base de l'opinion individuelle d'un Juge de 1ère instance. La Chambre a donc conclu dans le sens que « le Procureur n'a pas indiqué les possibilités dont disposait Bagambiki pour s'acquitter de ses obligations dans le cadre de la législation nationale rwandaise », en ajoutant que « même si le fait de ne pas s'être acquitté de l'obligation incombant à un préfet rwandais d'assurer la protection de la population dans sa préfecture était susceptible d'engager sa responsabilité en droit pénal international, le Procureur n'a pas établi que l'erreur qu'aurait commise la Chambre de première instance a invalidé sa décision ». A mon avis, le droit pénal, interne ou international, peut prévoir des conséquences en termes de responsabilité individuelle pour violation d'obligations prévues par d'autres branches du droit, comme c'est le cas pour les obligations posées à la charge des agents d'Etats.

[10] En principe, le manquement à un devoir d'agir comme fondement de la responsabilité pénale selon les articles 6 (1) et 7 (1) des deux Statuts s'exprime par une conduite précédente à la commission du crime et non pas par une conduite successive, telle que le manquement au devoir de punir. En effet, cette dernière infraction acquiert une considération autonome exclusivement dans le contexte de la responsabilité du supérieur selon les articles 6 (3) et 7 (3). Cela n'exclut toutefois pas la possibilité de considérer le manquement par un accusé au devoir de punir l'auteur d'un crime, selon les circonstances du cas, sous la responsabilité pour aide ou encouragement. Le manquement à ce devoir peut bien représenter un manquement au devoir d'empêcher des crimes ultérieurs et donc à en aider ou encourager la commission. C'est ce qu'aussi la Chambre 1ère instance dans l'Affaire Blaskic envisage, implicitement confirmée dans son opinion par la Chambre d'appel : « the failure to punish past crimes, which entails the commander's responsibility under Article 7 (3), may, pursuant to Article 7 (1) and subject to the fulfilment of the respective mens rea and actus reus requirements, also be the basis for his liability for either aiding and abetting or instigating the commission of future crimes" (Judgement TC, 29 July 2004, para. 337).

et que la Chambre considère dans ses conclusions, on ne pourrait pas considérer[11] Failure of Duty to Prevent or Punish, parce que la défense n'aurait pas été adéquatement informée à temps de cette « particulière omission »[12].

8. A mon avis, si la défense n'a pas pu exercer ses droits pour ne pas avoir reçu une information adéquate du prétendu manquement par l'Accusé au devoir d'empêcher les crimes et d'en punir les auteurs, on doit retenir qu'elle n'a même pas reçu une telle information en ce qui concerne les autres omissions plaidées, pour lesquelles la majorité de la Chambre ne relève aucun défaut de l'Acte d'accusation. Mais, pourtant, toute omission doit être plaidée selon les éléments qui la caractérisent, y compris l'obligation dont la violation comporterait une omission coupable selon le Statut

9. Si je partage pour l'essentiel, la reconstruction par la majorité de la Chambre des défauts que l'Acte d'accusation contre l'accusé Mpambara présentait et auxquels les successives écritures n'avaient pas réussi à remédier efficacement (mais cela par rapport à toute omission plaidée et non seulement au manquement au devoir de prévenir et punir), je suis toutefois de l'avis que l'Accusé n'a subit aucun préjudice à son droit de se défendre.

10. En effet, selon l'opinion de la Chambre d'appel, l'obligation qui est faite au Procureur d'informer l'accusé clairement et en détail des charges alléguées à son encontre, doit être considérée non de façon isolée, mais en fonction du droit de l'accusé à assurer sa défense. Dès lors, il est nécessaire d'évaluer si le Procureur en a donné une information adéquate par rapport à la compréhension qu'en a eu la Défense. En effet, s'il est vrai qu'« aucune déclaration de culpabilité ne peut être prononcée lorsque le manquement à l'obligation d'informer dûment la personne poursuivie des motifs de droit et de fait sur lesquels reposent les accusations dont elle est l'objet a porté atteinte à son droit à un procès équitable », il n'en est pas moins vrai que la Chambre doit apprécier concrètement si l'accusé était ou non « in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her ». Encore, selon la Chambre d'appel, si la Chambre de 1ère instance « juge l'acte d'accusation vicié parce qu'il est vague ou ambigu, elle doit rechercher si l'accusé a néanmoins bénéficié d'un procès équitable ou, en d'autres termes, si le vice constaté a porté préjudice à la défense »[13].

11. Une telle vérification doit donc se faire à la lumière des droits que la défense a concrètement exercé pendant le procès. Si, pour une raison ou une autre, ces droits ont été effectivement exercés malgré la faiblesse des informations fournies par le Procureur quant aux charges retenues contre l'accusé, il serait même contraire à l'intérêt de la justice que la Chambre décide de ne pas considérer ces charges. Ces charges doivent naturellement être considérées dans les limites de l'exercice concret des droits de la défense par rapport à chaque événement et à chaque fait matériel allégués dans l'Acte.

12. En l'espèce, à la lumière des preuves présentées par la Défense tout le long du procès (y compris le témoignage de l'accusé), je suis de l'avis qu'elle a effectivement exercé ses droits par rapport à toutes les omissions alléguées par le Procureur, y compris le « manquement de l'accusé au devoir tant d'empêcher que de punir » invoqué dans le cadre de la responsabilité pour participation à une ECC ou pour aide ou encouragement prévu à l'article 6 (1) du Statut[14].

[11] Mpambara Judgment (TC) 12 septembre 2006, p 13, para. 35: "The Chamber will, however, consider the evidence of omissions adduced at trial to the extent that they may be probative of the accused's participation in a joint criminal enterprise or having aided and abetted another in the commission of a crime". Mais, on verra qu'on a fini par considérer aussi la charge contestée par la majorité de la Chambre.

[12] "There is no mention of any duty to prevent or punish crimes. It bears repeating that the prosecution is permitted to bring potentially incompatible charges against the Accused. The defect here is not the incompatibility, but the failure to distinctly explain that the omissions alleged against the Accused constituted a breach of his duty to prevent or punish the crimes of others" (Mpambara Judgement (TC), paragraph 34).

[14] La Chambre a entendu les témoins de la défense évoquer les appels par l'accusé à la pacification et les assemblées convoquées dans ce but, les secours apportés par l'accusé avec le Père Santos aux réfugiés. Ils ont parlé aussi des enquêtes menées par l'accusé pour trouver les auteurs des crimes et du fait qu'il n'ait pas été à même de les porter à bien pour manque de moyens. Tous les témoins de la défense ont parlé de la continue et inutile demande d'aide par l'accusé auprès du sous-préfet et donc de l'indisponibilité de moyens suffisants pour pouvoir contraster les attaques et en punir les auteurs sur un

13. D'ailleurs, dans le but de vérifier si l'accusé pouvait en être retenu responsable, la Chambre a pris soin de considérer toutes les omissions alléguées au cours du procès, y compris celle qui est contestée par la majorité de la Chambre pour manque d'information adéquate (failure of duty to prevent and punish).

14. La Chambre a donc conclu, pour chaque attaque et charge alléguées à l'encontre de l'accusé, que les omissions n'étaient pas prouvées au-delà de tout doute raisonnable, ou qu'elles ne démontraient ni la participation à une ECC ni une assistance ou un encouragement aux attaques, raison du fait que certains éléments de ces conduites n'avaient pas été prouvés au-delà de tout doute raisonnable. Et je partage entièrement ces conclusions.

territoire communal très étendu, dont la sécurité était assurée seulement par 6/7 policiers. L'accusé même a déclaré que si ces policiers avaient été utilisés pour arrêter les criminels et garder leur prison au lieu d'être affectés par lui à la sécurité des réfugiés, encore si faible, tous les réfugiés auraient été tués, tandis qu'il avait réussi à épargner beaucoup de vies. On lui a entendu dire qu'arrêter les attaquants aurait représenté un «suicide ». Ce sont là seulement certains des arguments portés par la défense pour contester les charges. Je renvoie à ce propos à ces témoignages ainsi que rapportés dans le Jugement.

Annex I: Procedural History

1. Jean Mpambara was transferred into the custody of the Tribunal on 23 June 2001, having been arrested by national authorities in northern Tanzania on 20 June 2001.[1] The Indictment, confirmed by Judge Erik Møse on 23 July 2001, charged Mpambara with one count of genocide.[2] At his initial appearance on 8 August 2001, Mpambara pleaded not guilty.[3] The Chamber granted the Prosecution leave to amend the Indictment on 4 March 2005, by adding a count of complicity in genocide and a count of extermination as a crime against humanity.[4] Mpambara pleaded not guilty to these additional counts on 29 April 2005.[5] On 30 May 2005, the Chamber denied a Defence motion challenging the amended Indictment.[6]

2. The trial commenced on 19 September 2005. The Prosecution case consisted of ten witnesses heard over eight trial days, and twenty-five exhibits. The Prosecution closed its case on 29 September 2005, subject to the cross examination of Witness AHY, which was heard on 14 and 15 December 2005.[7] The Chamber denied the Defence request for a judgment of acquittal on 21 October 2005.[8] The Defence case lasted from 9 January to 9 February 2006, during which the Chamber heard sixteen witnesses, including the Accused, and received forty-eight exhibits.

3. Measures for the protection of witnesses were ordered before the trial started on behalf of the Prosecution on 29 May 2002, and for the Defence on 4 May 2005.[9] The Chamber granted a Prosecution request to add three witnesses to its witness list on 19 September 2005.[10] A second request by the Prosecution, to drop five witnesses on condition that leave would be granted for the addition of one new witness, was denied by the Chamber orally on 22 September 2005, on the basis that the conditional nature of the motion was improper. The Prosecution orally renewed its motion as an unconditional request, and the Chamber subsequently granted leave to drop five witnesses, while adding Witness AHY, but granted the Defence additional time to conduct investigations into the new witness's testimony.[11]

4. Pursuant to a request by both parties, the Chamber granted a motion for a site visit on 10 February 2006. The parties and the Chamber visited Rukara Commune on 27 April 2005.[12] Final briefs were filed by both parties on 24 April 2006, and closing arguments were heard on 2 and 3 May 2006.

The Prosecutor v. Mikaeli (alias "Mika") MUHIMANA

Case N° ICTR-95-1B

Case History

• Name: MUHIMANA

• First Name: Mikaeli (alias "Mika")

• Date of Birth: 1950 (approximately)

• Sex: male

• Nationality: Rwandan

• Former Official Function: Counsellor of Gishyita Sector, Gishyita Commune

• Date of Indictment's Confirmation: 28 November 1995

• Date of Indictment's Severance: 14 April 2003 (Case N° ICTR-95-1B), (before: Ndimbati Aloys, Rutaganira Vincent, Ryandikayo and Sikubwabo Charles)

• Counts: conspiracy to commit genocide, genocide, crimes against humanity and serious violations of Article 3 common to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and of 1977 Additional Protocol II

• Date and Place of Arrest: 8 November 1999, in Tanzania

• Date of Transfer: 8 November 1999

• Date of Initial Appearance: 24 November 1999

• Date Trial Began: 29 March 2004

• Date and content of the Sentence: 28 April 2005, sentenced to life imprisonment

• Appeal: 21 May 2007, dismissed

On 22 November 1995, a joint indictment has been filed against Bagilishema Ignace, Kayishema Clément, Sikubwabo Charles, Ndimbati Aloys, Rutaganira Vincent, Muhimana Mika, Ryandikayo and Ruzindana Obed (ICTR-95-1).

On 6 November 1996, the Trial Chamber II ordered, at the Prosecution request, the joinder of the accused Clément Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana and the setting of a separate trial (see the file The Prosecutor v. Clément Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Case N°ICTR-95-1).

On 15 September 1999, the Trial Chamber I ordered orally, at the Prosecution request, the severance of the accused Ignace Bagilishema from the joint indictment (see the file The Prosecutor v. Ignace Bagilishema, Case N°ICTR-95-1A).

Mika Muhimana's indictment was, for his part, severed during 2003, by a decision of the Trial Chamber I, at the Prosecutor request (Case N°ICTR-95-1B).

In 2003, the ICTR-95-1 case number has been only assigned to the case The Prosecutor v. Muhimana Mika, Ndimbati Aloys, Rutaganira Vincent, Ryandikayo and Sikubwabo Charles.

I, FAUSTO POCAR, Presiding Judge of the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States Between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("International Tribunal"),

NOTING that Trial Chamber III of the International Tribunal pronounced its judgement against Mikaeli Muhimana on 28 April 2005 and issued a reasoned opinion in writing in English on 26 May 2005 ("Trial Judgement");

NOTING the "Order of the Presiding Assigning Judge Judges to an Appeal before the Appeals Chamber" issued on 31 May 2005, which assigned a bench of the Appeals Chamber to this case and designated myself as Pre-Appeal Judge;

NOTING the "Acte d'appel" filed by Counsel for Mikaeli Muhimana on 26 January 2006;

NOTING Articles 11 (3), 13 (4), and 24 of the Statute of the International Tribunal and Rule 108 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Tribunal ("Rules");

CONSIDERING the composition of the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia as set out in document IT/242 issued on 17 November 2005;

CONSIDERING that pursuant to Article 14 (2) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, I am the Presiding Judge on all appeals cases on which I sit;

CONSIDERING that pursuant to Rule 108 bis of the Rules, as Presiding Judge, I may designate a Pre-Appeal Judge responsible for pre-hearing proceeding in this case;

CONSIDERING the trial management and case distribution needs of the Appeals Chamber;

ORDER that, in the case of The Prosecutor v. Mikaeli Muhimana, Case N°ICTR-95-1B-A, the Appeals chamber shall be composed as follows:

Judge Fausto Pocar, Presiding
Judge Mohamed Shahabuddeen

Judge Mehmet Güney
Judge Liu Daqun
Judge Wolfgang Schomburg

AND DESIGNATE Judge Liu Daqun as Pre-Appeal Judge in the above named case.

THE APPEALS CHAMBER of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law

Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States Between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Tribunal"), NOTING the "Judgement and Sentence" rendered in English by Trial Chamber III on 28 April 2005 ("Trial Judgement");

NOTING the "Decision on Motion for Extension of Time for Filing of Notice of Appeal" issued on 2 June 2005 ("Decision on Extension of Time"), in which the Pre-Appeal Judge granted Mikaeli Muhimana ("Appellant"), an extension of "no more than thirty days from the date of the filing of the French translation of the Trial Judgement" to file his notice of appeal pursuant to Rule 116 (B) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal ("Rules");[1]

NOTING that the French translation of the Trial Judgement was filed on 19 December 2005;[2]

NOTING the "Acte d'appel" filed on 26 January 2006 ("Notice of Appeal") by Counsel for the Appellant;

FINDING that because the Decision on Extension of Time clearly states that the Appellant was to file his Notice of Appeal no more than 30 days from the filing of the French translation of the Trial Judgement, or by 18 January 2006, the Notice of Appeal was filed out of time by eight days;

EMPHASIZING that Counsel in a case before the Tribunal must, at all times, comply with the Rules and rulings of the Tribunal, including those concerning time limits;[3]

EMPHASIZING that the filing of a notice of appeal marks the beginning of the appeal proceedings in a case, and that since the time limits for the filing of an appellant's brief, respondent's brief, and the appellant's brief in reply are calculated from the date on which the notice of appeal is filed, any delays at such an early stage will affect subsequent filings;[4]

CONSIDERING that Rule 116 (A) of the Rules provides that the Appeals Chamber may grant a motion to extend a time limit upon a showing of good cause but that such a motion should be filed prior to expiry of the time limit at issue;[5]

CONSIDERING that the Appellant failed to file a second motion for an extension of time limit prior to or on 18 January 2006 with regard to filing his Notice of Appeal;

CONSIDERING however, that the Appeals Chamber may "recognise, as validly done any act done after the expiration of a time limit";[6]

NOTING that Counsel for the Appellant submits that the Notice of Appeal was filed 30 days from the date of his receipt of the French version of the Trial Judgement;

In this case, the Pre-Appeal Judge exceptionally granted a motion for an extension of time to file a reply, which was filed 136 days after the filing of the Respondent's Brief, that is, 121 days after the expiration of the 15-day deadline for filing briefs in reply during which the appellant should have filed any motion for extension of time. The Pre-Appeal Judge reprimanded the appellant for failing to file his motion for an extension of time within the 15-day deadline for filing the reply.
[6] See Practice Direction on Formal Requirements for Appeals from Judgement, 4 July 2005, para. 12. See also id., para. 1.

CONSIDERING that the Registry has confirmed that the French translation of the Trial Judgement was only served upon Counsel for the Appellant on 26 December 2005, that is, 7 days after its filing;[7]

CONSIDERING that pursuant to Rule 116 (B) of the Rules, good cause exists for extension of a time limit "[w]here the ability of the accused to make full answer and Defence depends on the availability of a decision in an official language other than that in which it was originally issued […]";

FINDING that similarly, in this case, good cause exists to recognize the filing of the Appellant's Notice of Appeal as validly done because it was only as of the date that the French translation of the Trial Judgement was made available to Counsel for the Appellant that the Appellant was in a position to consider the Trial Judgement in order to formulate his grounds of appeal from that judgement;[8]

NOTING FURTHER that the Notice of Appeal was filed publicly;

NOTING, however, that the Notice of Appeal discloses information as to a protected witness not found in the Trial Judgement, which risks identifying that protected witness;[9]

NOTING that in the exercise of caution the Registry temporarily placed the Notice of Appeal under seal;[10]

PURSUANT TO Rule 75 (A) as read with Rule 107 of the Rules;

HEREBY DIRECTS, proprio motu, the Registry to designate the Notice of Appeal a confidential document;

ORDERS the Appellant to re-examine the contents of the Notice of Appeal with a view to identifying all passages that are in contravention of any of the protective measures ordered by the Trial Chamber;

ORDERS the Appellant to file a public and redacted version of the Notice of Appeal within sixty (60) days of the filing of this order;

REMINDS the Appellant that this obligation does not change his pre-existing obligation to file his Appellant's brief, which shall be filed within 75 days of filing of the Notice of Appeal under Rule 111 of the Rules, that is, no later than 11 April 2006;

FURTHER REMINDS the parties that the information contained in the confidential Notice of Appeal shall not be communicated to any third party.

Done in English and French, the English text being authoritative;

Dated this 22nd day of February 2006, at The Hague, The Netherlands.

[7] The French translation of the Trial Judgment was delivered to Counsel for the Appellant by DHL International.
[8] The Appeals Chamber notes that because Counsel for the Appellant received the French translation of the Trial Judgement on 26 December 2005, his Notice of Appeal filed on 26 January 2006 was actually filed 31 days from receipt of that translation of the Trial Judgement. However, the Appeals Chamber does not find that this extra day affects its decision to recognize the filing of the Appellant's Notice of Appeal as validly done.
[9] The Appeals Chamber notes that the protective measures applicable to this witness have not been rescinded, varied or augmented in accordance with Rule 75 of the Rules.
[10] The Appeals Chamber notes that this was pursuant to a request by a Legal Officer from the Appeals Chamber dated 27 January 2006.

Emmanuel Ndindabahizi, Decision on the Admission of Additional Evidence, 4 April 2006 (ICTR-2001-71)

I, LIU DAQUN, Judge of the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Tribunal") and the Pre-Appeal Judge in this case,[1]

BEING SEIZED of the "Requête de l'Appelant aux fins de prorogation de délai pour la présentation des moyens de preuve supplémentaires" filed on 13 March 2006 ("Request"),[2] by counsel for Mikaeli Muhimana ("Defence"), in which the Defence requests an extension of forty-five days to file a motion to present additional evidence pursuant to Rule 115 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal ("Rules");

NOTING the "Réponse du Procureur à la requête de l'Appelant aux fins de prorogation de délai pour la présentation des moyens de preuve supplémentaires" filed by the Office of the Prosecutor on 17 March 2006 ("Response"),[3] opposing the Request;

[2] See also the English translation of the Request, Appellant's Motion for Extension of Time to Present Additional Evidence, filed on 21 March 2006.
[3] The English translation entitled Prosecutor's Response to Appellant's "Motion for Extension of Time to Present Additional Evidence" was filed on 28 March 2006.

NOTING that the reply was filed out of time, that good cause has not been shown for the late filing, and that in consequence the reply will not be considered;[4]

CONSIDERING that a party requesting the admission of additional evidence on appeal pursuant to Rule 115 shall do so by motion filed "not later than seventy-five days from the date of the judgement, unless good cause is shown for further delay";

CONSIDERING FURTHER that the good cause requirement in Rule 115 obliges the moving party to demonstrate that it was not able to comply with the prescribed time limit, and that it submitted the motion in question as soon as possible after it became aware of the existence of the evidence sought to be admitted;[5]

NOTING the Defence's submission that it "has difficulty" complying with the prescribed time-limit because "the new information […] obtained must be verified in Rwanda and elsewhere, and […] the only person who can verify the information was assigned to the Defence team only on 31 March 2006 […]. Moreover, at the time he was assigned to the Appellant's Defence team, he was on mission abroad on behalf of another Accused […].";[6]

NOTING the Prosecution's submission that the arguments put forward do not amount to a showing of good cause because:

(a) The Defence argument is vague and cannot justify the requested extension;[7]

(b) The investigator was not assigned to the Defence team on 31 March 2006, as submitted by the Defence, but on 31 January 2006, effective from 1 February 2006;[8]

(c) The Appeals Chamber need not take into account other professional commitments of the Defence team in setting deadlines;[9]

(d) The Defence's request is premature and that even if the extension of forty-five days were to be granted, the Defence would still have to show good cause for filing an application under Rule 115 out of time;[10]

NOTING that the French version of the Judgement was served on the Defence on 26 December 2005 and that, accordingly, the deadline for filing a motion pursuant to Rule 115 was 13 March 2006;[11]

CONSIDERING that the Defence has failed to demonstrate why it was not able to comply with the prescribed time limit and provides no indication as to when it became aware of the new information;

CONSIDERING further that the Defence has not provided sufficiently detailed submissions, in that it states that the new information obtained must be verified in Rwanda and elsewhere, but fails to explain what the new information is, why it needs verification and why it could not have been verified earlier, and further fails to expound upon its submission that there is only one person who can verify this information;

FINDING that the Defence submissions do not demonstrate good cause;

BEING SEIZED of the "Requête de l'appelant aux fins de réaménagement du calendrier judiciaire" filed on 14 June 2006 ("Request"), by Counsel for Mikaeli Muhimana ("Defence" and "Appellant" respectively), in which the Defence requests an extension of time to file its brief in reply and further requests that the scheduled date of a Status Conference be postponed;

NOTING that the Defence has not filed a reply;

NOTING the "Judgement and Sentence" rendered by Trial Chamber III on 28 April 2005 ("Trial Judgement");

NOTING the "Acte d'appel" ("Notice of Appeal")[2] and the confidential "Memoire d'appel" ("Appeal Brief") filed by the Appellant on 26 January 2006 and 12 April 2006 respectively;

NOTING the "Memoire de l'intimé" ("Respondent's Brief") filed partly in English and French by the Prosecution on 22 May 2006;

NOTING that the Defence has not yet received the French translation of the Respondent's Brief and requests that if it becomes available between 14 June 2006 and 10 July 2006, the time limit for the filing of the brief in reply should start running on 10 July 2006;[3]

NOTING the Defence's submission that both Lead Counsel and Co-Counsel would be temporarily unavailable to reply to the Respondent's Brief because they have "been invited to attend the 89th Annual International Convention of the International Association of Lions Clubs in Boston from 30 June to 4 July 2006";[4]

CONSIDERING that pursuant to Rule 116 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules") a motion to extend a time limit may be granted upon a showing of good cause;

CONSIDERING that the Defence fails to explain why the attendance of Counsel at the Annual Lions Club Convention would constitute good cause within the meaning of Rule 116 (A) of the Rules for extending the deadline for filing the brief in reply;

CONSIDERING ALSO that Counsel, when accepting an assignment as Counsel in a case before the Tribunal, is under an obligation to give absolute priority to observe the time limits as foreseen in the Rules;[5]

CONSIDERING that the unexpected and probable unavailability of Counsel due to other professional duties does not amount to good cause within the meaning of Rule 116 of the Rules;[6]

NOTING the Scheduling Order for this case filed on 13 June 2006 scheduling a Status Conference to be held on 7 July 2006 in Arusha, Tanzania;

NOTING that the Defence additionally requests the postponement of the Status Conference because on the date scheduled "Counsel could be in mid-air on the return journey to Kinshasa from the Annual Lions Club Convention";[7]

[2] The Notice of Appeal was placed under seal pursuant to the Order Concerning the Filing of the Notice of Appeal, filed on 22 February 2006; on 24 April 2006, the Appellant filed, Acte d'appel (Public et Caviardé).
[3] Request, paras. 14, 19. The Defence appears to imply that an extension of time would also be required pending the receipt of the Kinyarwanda translation of the response brief for the benefit of the Appellant. In light of the Pre-Appeal Judge's previous holding that an extension of time on such basis would not be appropriate since Counsel for the Appellant may discuss possible submissions with him as soon as a French translation is available, this point will not be considered further. See Decision on Motion for Extension of Time for Filing of Notice of Appeal, 2 June 2005, p. 3.

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS,

GRANT the Request in part,

CANCEL the scheduled Status Conference;

DISMISS the Request for extension of time to file the brief in reply; and REMIND the Defence that the brief in reply, if any, shall be filed within 15 days of service to the Defence of the French translation of the Respondent's Brief.

Mikaeli Muhimana, Decision on Appellant's Request for Extension of Time to File Additional Evidence Motion, 26 April 2006 (ICTR-95-1B)

5. THE APPEALS CHAMBER of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States Between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Tribunal"), is seized of the "Requête de l'appelant aux fins de la présentation des moyens de preuve supplémentaires" filed on 25 April 2006[1] by Mikaeli Muhimana ("Rule 115 Motion" and "Appellant", respectively).

6. On 28 April 2005, Trial Chamber III convicted the Appellant of genocide, and rape and murder as crimes against humanity pursuant to Articles 2 and 3 of the Statute of the Tribunal ("Statute") respectively. He was sentenced to life imprisonment on each of the three counts, with the sentences to run concurrently.[2] The Appellant subsequently filed an appeal against the Trial Judgement,[3] and it is for this purpose that the Appellant seeks the admission of additional evidence.

7. As a preliminary matter, the Appeals Chamber notes that the French version of the Trial Judgement was served on the Appellant on 26 December 2005 and that, accordingly, the deadline for filing a motion pursuant to Rule 115 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules") was 13 March 2006.[4] However, on that day, the Appellant requested an extension of time to file a motion pursuant to

[1] The certified English translation, "Appellant's Motion to Present Additional Evidence" was filed on 13 July 2006. Prosecutor's Response to "Requête de l'appelant aux fins de la présentation des moyens de preuve supplémentaires", 5 May 2006 ("Response"), para. 3. The Appellant did not file a reply.

[4] Rule 115 (A) provides that a motion to present additional evidence shall be filed no later than seventy-five days from the date of judgement. In this case, the seventy-five days start running from the date on which the French translation of the Trial Judgement was served on the Appellant, see Order Concerning the Filing of the Notice of Appeal, 22 February 2006, p. 3.

Rule 115,[5] submitting that he had difficulties complying with the prescribed time-limit because the new information had to be verified in Rwanda and elsewhere. He claimed that the only person who could verify the information had only recently been assigned to the Defence team and was at that time on mission abroad on behalf of another accused.[6] While making these claims in the Request, the Appellant failed to indicate when he became aware of the new information so as to establish that it had not been possible for him to comply with the time-limits for the reasons he gave in the Request.[7] The Appellant further failed to explain what the new information was and why it needed verification, and further failed to expound upon the submission that there was only one person who could verify this information.[8] As a result, the Pre-Appeal Judge found that the Appellant's submissions did not demonstrate good cause warranting an extension of time to file a Rule 115 motion and dismissed the Request in a decision dated 26 April 2006.[9]

8. However, one day prior to the Pre-Appeal Judge's decision dismissing the Request,[10] the Appellant filed his Rule 115 Motion. In that Rule 115 Motion, the Appellant proffers three items of purported additional evidence consisting of two experts' reports and a letter. He also makes submissions relating to a cassette, which is not tendered with the Rule 115 Motion.[11] In the Rule 115 Motion, the Appellant fails to make any submissions relating to whether good cause has been shown for the delay pursuant to Rule 115 (A), nor does he indicate whether or how the submissions made in the Request concerning the good cause requirement relate to the present motion. The Appeals Chamber further notes that it is apparent from the Rule 115 Motion that the materials sought to be admitted as additional evidence were available prior to the rendering of the Trial Judgement and consequently are not the "new information" that the Appellant was referring to in the Request.[12] For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that good cause has not been shown for the delay in filing the present Rule 115 Motion.[13]

For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber DISMISSES the Rule 115 Motion.

Dated this 25th day of September 2006, at The Hague, The Netherlands.

[10] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Rule 115 Motion was subsequently re-filed on 28 April 2006 and that the new version included annexes referred to in paras 17, 21 and 23 of the Rule 115 Motion.

[11] With the exception of the cassette, these items are attached to the Rule 115 Motion. The First and Second Expert's Reports relate to issues which, by the Appellant's own admission, were discussed during trial, and as such could have been proffered as evidence at trial, (see Rule 115 Motion, paras 14, 18-20). The letter is dated 13 October 2004 and was thus also clearly available before the rendering of the Trial Judgement.

[12] The Appeals Chamber has previously taken into account the availability of documents in its assessment of the good cause requirement, see Prosecutor v. Stanislav Galić, Case N°IT-98-29-A, Decision on Defence Second Motion for Additional Evidence Pursuant to Rule 115, 21 March 2005, para. 5.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov, as designated by the President of the Tribunal pursuant to Rule 28 of the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules");

BEING SEIZED OF the "Requête du Procureur Aux Fins de Levée des Scelles", etc., filed on 30 May 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. On 8 September 2005, in my capacity as the designated "reviewing judge" under Rule 47 (D) of the Rules, I confirmed the Indictment of the Accused and issued a warrant of arrest and order for transfer and detention. At the Prosecution's request, these decisions and orders were placed under seal. The Prosecution now requests the unsealing of these documents which, in substance, constitutes a modification of the previous decisions. As the judge who issued these decisions, I retain an inherent jurisdiction to modify their terms and am properly seised of the present motion.[1]

2. Proceedings of this Tribunal should normally be held in public, unless good cause is shown why they must be confidential.[2] According to the Prosecution, the reasons which justified non-disclosure no longer exist. There is no reason to doubt this submission.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, I

GRANT the motion;

AUTHORIZE that the "Decision on Confirmation of an Indictment Against Bernard Munyagishari", and the "Warrant of Arrest and Order for Transfer and Detention of Bernard Munyagishari", both dated 8 September 2005, be reclassified as public documents.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge Asoka de Silva, Presiding, Judge Flavia Lattanzi and Judge Florence Rita Arrey (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the "Accused Tharcisse Muvunyi's Addendum or Supplemental Motion to Have Defence Witness M072 Testify by Closed-Video Link Pursuant to Rules 54 and 71 (D) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence" filed on 17 February 2006 (the "Supplemental Motion");

NOTING that the Prosecution has not filed a response;[3]

RECALLING its "Decision on Muvunyi's Amended Motion to Have Defence Witnesses M005, M015, M036, M046 and M073 Testify by Closed-Video Link Pursuant to Rules 54 and 71 (D) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence" rendered on 7 February 2006 (the "Decision of 7 February 2006");

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules on the basis of written submissions filed by the Defence.

3.1.1. Submissions of the Defence

1. The Defence seeks to have Witness M072 added to the list of Defence witnesses authorised by the Chamber to testify via closed-video link in its Decision of 7 February 2006.

2, The Defence requests that the proceedings be closed to the public when the testimony could reveal the witness's identity and when any protective measures are being discussed. The Defence also requests that identifying records of the witness should not be disclosed to the public and that members of the Prosecution team should be prohibited from disclosing any records pertaining to this witness to any individual outside the Prosecution team in this case, including other Prosecutors at this Tribunal. The Defence asserts that it adopts the submissions made by the Prosecution in its motion to have Witnesses QCM and NN testify via closed-video link[4] as well as the ruling rendered by the Chamber in its Decision of 7 February 2006.

3. The Defence submits that Witness M072 resides in Rwanda; that she has been informed of all the security measures and services offered by the Tribunal's Witnesses and Victims Support Section (VSS); that the witness "recently had a baby and refuses to travel abroad with her newborn baby before the baby is six months old"; that the witness "will agree to testify from Kigali, Rwanda" by video link; and that the witness's testimony is "vital" to the defence of the Accused.

4. The Defence asserts that while protective measures are currently in place at the Tribunal, these measures do not provide adequate protection for the above witness and that recent events in Belgium show that the witness's fears are well-founded. The Defence cites a press release dated 23 December 2005 posted on the Tribunal's web site, confirming the death in Belgium of indictee and potential Prosecution witness Juvénal Uwilingiyimana. The Defence attaches a sworn affidavit from a Defence investigator confirming that Witness M072 has a newborn baby and is unwilling to travel outside of Rwanda while the baby is still less than six months old, but is willing to testify in Muvunyi's defence via video link from Kigali,

HAVING DELIBERATED

5. The Chamber recalls Rule 54 of the Rules, pursuant to which it is empowered to issue such orders as may be necessary for the purposes of an investigation or for the preparation or conduct of the trial; Rule 90 (A) establishing the principle that witnesses should be heard directly unless directed otherwise by the Chamber; and Rule 71 (D) providing for a witness's deposition to be given by means of a video-conference.

[3] In an e-mail communication dated 20 February 2006 in response to a Directive from the Chamber, the Prosecution indicated that it would not be filing a response to the Supplemental Motion.

[4] The Prosecutor v. Tharcisse Muvunyi, Case N°ICTR-2000-55A-T, "Prosecution Motion to have Witnesses QCM and NN Testify by Closed-Video Link", 14 April 2005.

6. The Chamber is mindful of the jurisprudence of the Tribunal establishing that a witness's testimony may be heard via video-conference in lieu of a physical appearance if it is in the interests of justice.[5] In determining what constitutes the interests of justice for the purposes of a motion for testimony by video-conference, the following factors are taken into consideration: (i) the importance of the testimony; (ii) the inability or unwillingness of the witness to attend; and (iii) whether a good reason can be adduced for that inability or unwillingness.[6]

7. The Chamber also recalls its Decisions of 23 May 2005 and 20 June 2005 dealing with the Prosecution's request to introduce the testimonies of Witnesses QCM and NN via closed-video link,[7] as well as its Decision of 7 February 2006 authorising Defence Witnesses M005, M015, M036, M046 and M073 to testify via closed-video link. In all the circumstances, the Chamber determined that it was in the interests of justice to permit the witnesses to testify via video-conference.

8. The Chamber has examined the Defence submissions and the accompanying documents and takes note of the assertion that the testimony of Witness M072 is "vital" to the defence of the Accused. The Chamber also notes the reason adduced for the witness's unwillingness to travel to Arusha, namely the recent birth and tender age of her baby.

9. Under these circumstances, the Chamber is satisfied that the minimum conditions for the granting of a motion for video-conference testimony have been met and that it will be in the interests of justice to allow the Supplemental Motion. The Chamber is also satisfied that the Prosecution will have the opportunity during cross-examination to confront the witness and to remedy any potential prejudice.[8]

10. On the Defence request that identifying records of the witness should not be disclosed to the public, the Chamber reminds the Defence that this is already covered by standing orders for protective measures for witnesses.

11. With respect to the Defence request that other prosecutors at this Tribunal who are not members of the Prosecution team in this case should be prohibited from obtaining any records pertaining to these witnesses, the Chamber wishes to draw the attention of the Defence to its Decision of 7 February 2006 and, once again, to an earlier Decision in which the Chamber denied a similar argument.[9]

GRANTS the Supplemental Motion in part and

ORDERS that:

(i). The testimony of Defence Witness M072 shall be permitted to be introduced via a secure audio-video transmission link from a location in Kigali on Friday, 10 March 2006;

(ii). The Registry shall make all necessary arrangements in respect of the testimony via secure audio-video transmission link of Witness M072;

(iii). The Prosecution shall be prohibited from disclosing the identity, specific whereabouts, or any records pertaining to Witness M072 to anyone outside the Office of the Prosecutor;

(iv). Court proceedings where the testimony of Witness M072 could reveal her identity shall be closed to the public;

(v). Court proceedings where protective measures are considered shall also be closed to the public.

(vi). The Registry shall take immediate steps to ensure the successful implementation of this Order;

(vii). The Parties co-operate with the Registry in the implementation of this Order;

(viii). All examinations of the witness testifying by video-link shall take place from the courtroom in Arusha;

(x). The parties shall make available to the Registry, not later than 1 March 2006, all exhibits they intend to use during their respective examinations of the witness;

(xi). The specific times of the hearing as well as the venue shall be communicated to all Parties as soon as a determination is made to that effect.

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules on the basis of written submissions filed by the Parties.

6.1.2. Submissions of the Parties

6.1.2.1. The Prosecution

1. The Prosecution requests the Chamber to admit into evidence certain documents tendered and marked for identification purposes as PID1 on 7 December 2005 during the cross-examination of Defence Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana.

2. The Prosecution submits that the first document ("Document 1"), bearing the numbers KA017090 and KA017091 for the French original (and K0284552 for the English translation), is a letter dated 12 (sic) April 1994[1] addressed to the bourgmestre of an unidentified commune. According to the Prosecution, the document bears the header "Republic of Rwanda, Ministry of Defence,

[1] The French original bears the date of 21 April 1994 while the English translation erroneously bears the date of 12 April 1994.

Rwandan Army, Commandant Place BUT-GIK",[2] while the name of the Accused and the title "Lt Col, Cmd Place BUT-GIK" appear at the foot of the letter together with the alleged signature of the Accused and a seal that reads "Republique Rwandaise – …Place Butare-Gikongoro."[3] The Prosecution alleges that the letter relates to the implementation of the Ministry of Defence's recommendation about the recruitment of youth for civil defence purposes. The letter also proposes a meeting for the coordination of the program at 9:00 a.m. on 26 April 1994.

3. The Prosecution asserts that the second document ("Document 2") bearing number K0026811[4] is almost identical to Document 1. It is dated 21 April 1994 and proposes a coordination meeting on 25 April 1994 at 9:00 a.m. According to the Prosecution, the name of the Accused and title "Lt. Col., Cmd Place BUT-GIK" also appear at the foot of the letter along with the alleged signature of the Accused and a seal that reads "Republique rwandaise – Min. de place – Butare-Gikongoro".

4. The Prosecution submits that the third document ("Document 3") contains travel passes dated 10 May 1994 authorising three separate individuals to circulate freely and that the name of the Accused and title "Lt Col Comd OPS Butare" appear under the authorisation for each of the three individuals.

5. The Prosecution alleges that Documents 1 and 2 are probative and relevant to the allegations that the Accused enjoyed a position of military power and authority in his capacity as Commander of ESO, including those specific allegations contained in paragraphs 3.21, 3.22, 3.24 and 3.26 of the Indictment. According to the Prosecution, in this position of authority, the Accused exercised control over military operations in the Butare Préfecture which extended to the recruitment and supervision of the training of civilians youth. The Prosecution submits that the contents of these two documents meet the necessary prima facie threshold that the documents are relevant and have probative value. The Prosecution submits that Document 3 is probative and prima facie relevant to the allegations that the Accused enjoyed a position of authority and control over the civilians within the Préfecture of Butare reflected by his authority to grant permission for them to travel within that Préfecture.

6. Relying on jurisprudence from the ICTR[5] and the ICTY[6], the Prosecution submits that those three documents possess sufficient indicia of reliability for them to be admitted into evidence. According to the Prosecution, the information presented in Documents 1 and 2 provide clear and recognizable indicia on the face of the documents themselves while for Document 3, the name and title of the Accused appear under each of the travel authorisations. While the signature of the Accused does not appear on these authorisations, the Prosecution submits that only someone in his position possessed the requisite power in the Préfecture of Butare to grant such authorisation.

7. The Prosecution submits that during the proceedings of 7 December 2005 in this case, the objections raised by the Defence Counsel with regard to the recognition of the signature and the seal on the documents were made in the presence of the witness. The Prosecution alleges that the direct interruption of the witness' testimony by the Defence Counsel prevented the Prosecution from having a fair and objective opportunity to have the witness recognise the signature of the Accused on the PID1 Documents. The Prosecution submits that such non-recusal of the witness directly tainted the ability of the witness to give an objective testimony on the PID1 Documents. The Prosecution further submits that in light of the indicia of reliability on the face of the documents themselves, it is reasonable to assume that the witness, as a former General of the Army of the Republic of Rwanda,

[3] The seal is partly unreadable.
[4] The document tendered to the Chamber on 7 December 2005 bears the numbers K0026811 and K0026812 for the French original but the copies attached to the Motion bear numbers K0313507 and K00313508 for the same French original. The Chamber will considered the documents tendered in Court on 7 December 2005 to render its decision in the present motion.

would be familiar with these types of documents and that the said documents should therefore be admitted as evidence.

6.1.2.2. The Defence

8. The Defence submits that the witness to whom the documents were presented testified that the signatures on the document were not identical, the seal was incomplete on Document 1 and he could not confirm that the documents contained Muvunyi's signature as he did not know Muvunyi's signature. The Defence further submits that during the proceedings it had objected to the admission of PID1 for lack of offer or indicia of reliability and that the Prosecution has not demonstrated the reliability and probative value of those documents.

9. The Defence submits that for a document to be admitted under Rule 89 (C), the party seeking the admission of the said document should explain what the document is, why it is authentic and what it purports to be. The Defence states that the Prosecution has failed to do so in this case. It added that with respect to the only document the witness said he had seen before, the Prosecution failed to ask where the Witness had previously seen the document.

10. The Defence also submits that while there is no standard for authenticating a document, a moving party must show "sufficient indicia of reliability" to justify admission. Relying on a Decision rendered in the Bagosora case, the Defence alleges that to justify the admission of a document as an exhibit, evidence must be presented to show where the document was seized, the chain of custody since the seizure of the document, corroboration of the contents of the document with other evidence and the nature of the document itself, such as signatures, stamps, or even other forms of handwriting.[7] The Defence submits that the Prosecution has failed to provide any evidence to authenticate these documents. Moreover it submits that at any time the Prosecution could have moved for the witness to be excused from the proceedings but it did not do so.

11. The Defence further requests to be heard orally on this matter.

HAVING DELIBERATED

12. Rule 89 (C), gives the Chamber a broad discretion to admit evidence, including documents, which it deems relevant and of probative value. In Bagosora et al, it was held that relevance and probative value are threshold issues when deciding questions of admissibility and that the moving Party only needs to prove that the document has prima facie relevance and that it has probative value.[8] In Nyiramasuhoko v. The Prosecutor, the Appeals Chamber stated that evidence may be deemed inadmissible under Rule 89 (C) "where it is found to be so lacking in terms of indicia of reliability, such that it is not probative. …At the stage of admissibility, only the beginning of proof that evidence is reliable, namely, that sufficient indicia of reliability have been established, is required for evidence to be admissible."[9] A Trial Chamber's decision to admit evidence is a different consideration from the weight to be attached to the evidence; the latter question must be determined at the close of the case and after considering the evidence as a whole.

13. The Chamber considers, with respect to the admissibility of documents, that the moving Party must provide some indication of the document's authenticity such as the nature of the document, its author(s), the provenance of the document and its chain of custody from the time of seizure to its production in court. If a copy of a document is sought to be admitted, there should be some explanation about the non-availability of the original, or some confirmation that the copy sought to be tendered genuinely emanates from the original. In the Chamber's view, evidence tending to confirm some of these issues could indicate that a document is reliable and potentially of probative value.

14. The Chamber notes that Document 1 is a letter in French dated 21 April 1994 addressed to an unnamed Bourgmestre of Gikongoro. It purports to emanate from, and bears the name and alleged signature of the Accused in the capacity of "Comd Place, BUT-GIK."[10] This document conveys to the Bourgmestre the Defence Ministry's plan to train 10 youths from each secteur as part of a civil defence programme.

15. The Chamber notes that the document is an uncertified copy; no evidence has been led by the Prosecution as to the non-availability of the original letter; no evidence has been led to confirm that the signature on the document in fact matches the usual signature of the Accused. The Chamber also recalls that during his cross-examination, Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana indicated that he could not tell if the signature on the document was that of the Accused.[11] The Chamber is convinced that while photocopies of documents may be admissible evidence before the Tribunal, a sufficient foundation must be laid for their admission so as to satisfy the Chamber that they are at least prima facie reliable. Where the moving party fails to demonstrate even "the beginning of proof that evidence is reliable", such evidence would clearly be inadmissible.[12] For the above reasons, the Chamber finds that Document 1 lacks the basic indications of reliability to make it admissible as evidence under the Rules.

16. The Chamber recalls the Prosecution submission that Document 2 is a letter in French dated 21 April 1994 and that it calls for a coordination meeting to be held at 9.00 a.m. on 25 April 1994. The name of the Accused, the title "Lt. Col., Cmd Place But-GIK", as well as a signature alleged to be that of the Accused, appear at the end of the letter. The Chamber observes that this document suffers from the same shortcomings pointed out with respect to Document 1. Document 2 therefore is not admissible as an exhibit because it lacks basic indicia of reliability.

17. Document 3 contains three type-written forms on which the names and identity card numbers of three individuals have been inserted by pen. At the top of each form, it is indicated "Butare le 10/5/1994". The forms do not appear to have been written on any official stationery. The following words appear at the end of each form: "Muvunyi Tharcisse Lt. Col Cmd OPS Butare". There is no signature. The Prosecution submits that the three forms are travel passes and that they are probative of the allegation that the Accused enjoyed a position of authority and control over the civilians within Butare préfecture. The Chamber finds that the mere mention of Muvunyi's name and alleged position on these documents is, without more, insufficient to establish that he prepared them or that they came from him personally or from his office. The Prosecution has not made any effort to establish the provenance of these documents, or to explain the absence of their originals. The Chamber is therefore left to speculate about these important threshold issues. Since the burden of proving admissibility lies on the moving party, the Chamber is not satisfied that the Prosecution has met that burden with respect to Document 3.

18. The Chamber recalls that in its Response, the Defence asked for oral arguments to be heard on this Motion. The Chamber is satisfied that having heard the parties in court during the course of the testimony of Defence Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana, and having considered the written submissions from both sides, it is unnecessary to hear oral arguments on this motion.

19. For all the foregoing reasons, the Chamber finds that although Documents 1, 2 and 3 contained in PID1 appear at face value to be relevant to the present case, they cannot be admitted as exhibits because they lack prima facie reliability. The documents will for now remain marked for identification purposes only.

8.1.1.1. The Defence[2]

1. The Defence requests the Chamber to grant it leave to expand and vary its list of witnesses by adding a person alternatively known as Witness AOG, Witness X, Witness D, and Witness 006. The Defence asserts that this person recently testified in the "Military II" case as a witness for the Prosecution and has also previously testified in the "Government II" trial.

2. According to the Defence, there is reason to believe that "this witness has exculpatory information pertinent to the outcome of this case", including evidence that Colonel Gatsinzi was the Commander of ESO and that Muvunyi performed many acts that could show that he did not have actual authority to control soldiers in the Butare area.

3. The Defence submits that since AOG is "a highly protected witness for the Prosecution", the Defence is unable to determine his actual location or even his real name. The Defence therefore requests the Chamber to order the Witness and Victims Support Section (WVSS) and/or the Office of the Prosecutor (OTP) to assist the Defence in locating Witness AOG and arranging for his testimony.

4. The Defence further submits that Witness AOG "testified that Muvunyi came to him begging for help in controlling violence" and that this shows that Muvunyi lacked actual authority within the meaning of Article 6 (3) of the Statute.

5. Should Witness AOG refuse to testify in this case, argues the Defence, the Chamber may issue a subpoena requiring him to testify. The Defence argues further that the Chamber has "ample authority under Rule 98 to order the Prosecutor to produce the witness and his evidence."

8.1.1.2. The Prosecution

6. The Prosecution submits that the Defence has failed to show whether or not it has attempted in any way to contact AOG, or even whether AOG has indicated his willingness to testify on behalf of the Defence. The Prosecution further submits that the Defence has not shown whether it is aware of the likely content of AOG's testimony in the context of this particular trial and that it is not sufficient for the Defence to merely imply that such testimony may be exculpatory.

[1] Note that the correct provision governing the Defence's right to vary its list of witnesses is Rule 73 ter (E).
[2] This is a summary of the primary arguments made in both the Motion and the Reply.

7. According to the Prosecution, the Chamber should not be requested to issue a futile order, as it is possible that this "highly protected witness" could refuse to testify in this case.

8. The Prosecution asserts that the Defence request comes "too late in the day" to be meaningful for the purposes of this trial; that the application ought to have been made in a timely manner and at an appropriate stage in the proceedings; that the late notice is "highly prejudicial to the Prosecution"; that the Defence has failed to show the interest of justice that will be served or the existence of a good cause to guide the Chamber in determining whether or not to grant leave to vary the witness list; and that AOG's proposed testimony will be neither new nor material, as most of the Defence witnesses so far have given testimony on matters similar to what is being proposed for AOG.

9. Finally, the Prosecution submits that the Defence has failed to assist the Chamber in making a determination on whether or not to allow this application by failing to produce the exculpatory testimony purportedly made by AOG in the "Military II" and "Government II" trials.

HAVING DELIBERATED

10. The Chamber recalls that pursuant to Rule 73 ter (E) of the Rules, after the commencement of the Defence case, the Defence may move the Chamber for leave to vary its list of witnesses, if it considers it to be in the interests of justice. The Chamber is mindful of the rights of the Accused as enshrined in Article 20 of the Statute, and in particular of the provisions of Article 20 (4) (e) guaranteeing the right of the Accused "to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his or her behalf under the same circumstances as witnesses against him or her."

11. The Chamber notes that in the jurisprudence of the Tribunal, a request for leave to vary the list of witnesses is evaluated in light of "the interests of justice" to be served by such a variation.[3] In evaluating the interests of justice, Trial Chambers typically take into consideration such factors as the materiality of the proposed testimony, the complexity of the case, and the level of prejudice to the opposing Party, "balanced against the right of the accused to have adequate time and facilities to prepare his Defence and his right to be tried without undue delay."[4] Trial Chambers also look at the stage the proceedings have reached, the probative value of the proposed testimony, and the reason for the late discovery of the witness.[5]

12. The Chamber has considered the Defence submission that it has brought the Motion at this late stage in the proceedings because it learnt of Witness AOG only after his recent testimony in the "Military II" case. The Chamber has also given due consideration to the importance the Defence attaches to the proposed testimony of Witness AOG.[6] In particular, the Chamber takes very seriously the Defence assertion that "this witness has exculpatory information pertinent to the outcome of this case." In the Chamber's view, should such an assertion prove to be true, it would have a significant impact on the continuation of these proceedings.

13. The Chamber notes that Witness AOG has previously testified before this Tribunal in at least three other trials,[7] but that the Defence has not provided any material from any of those trials in support of its assertions.[8] However, oral submissions by the Defence Counsel tend to indicate that the Defence request to have AOG added to its list of witnesses was motivated by the evidence the witness gave during his most recent appearance.[9] Therefore, in the interests of justice and to facilitate the proceedings, the Chamber has gone out of its way and has undertaken a thorough review of the transcripts of the witness's most recent testimony only.

14. Witness AOG testified by closed-video link from The Hague in the case of The Prosecutor v. Ndindiliyimana et al.[10] (also known as the "Military II" case) from 20 February to 3 March 2006. Although AOG spent nine days testifying before the Trial Chamber in the "Military II" case, it was only in a small part of his testimony on the ninth and final day that he mentioned the name of the Accused Muvunyi. That was in answer to questions by Defence Counsel during cross-examination.[11]

15. In the Chamber's view, none of the statements made by Witness AOG in the Ndindiliyimana case is directly related to any of the charges appearing in the Indictment against Muvunyi. Additionally, many of the Defence witnesses who have testified thus far in these proceedings have made similar general assertions about Muvunyi. Thus there is no indication from those transcripts that the proposed testimony of Witness AOG is material to this case.

16. Furthermore, the Chamber observes that this "highly protected witness" has always testified for the Prosecution in the past. Moreover, the Defence has not provided any reason for the Chamber to believe that even if the Defence were able to locate and interview the witness, he would be willing to testify in Muvunyi's defence.

17. Additionally, in light of the very advanced stage of these proceedings, and considering the fact that the Defence has already called the final witness on its original list, the Chamber is of the view that it would not be in the interests of justice to allow the Defence Motion.

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Motion in its entirety.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules on the basis of written submissions filed by the Parties.

12.1.1.1. The Prosecution

1. The Prosecution requests the Chamber to review its Scheduling Order dated 29 March 2006 taking into consideration all of the procedural matters outlined during the Status Conference of 27 March 2006, and to revise the schedule such that the Parties will now be required to submit written briefs by 7 July 2006, and oral arguments on 14 and 15 August 2006.

2. The Prosecution submits that, in its view, the said Scheduling Order did not take the following factors into account: the submissions made by the Prosecution and by the Defence during the Status Conference; that the Parties will each be filing lengthy closing briefs that will need to be translated into French prior to the oral arguments; that in all cases before the Tribunal, the practice is to allow a period of four to six weeks following the presentation of evidence for the submission of closing briefs; and that the normal practice is to allow a period of at least four weeks after the submission of closing briefs before the presentation of oral arguments.

3. According to the Prosecution, because the Scheduling Order allows for only seven working days between the conclusion of the presentation of evidence and the submission of closing briefs, and only five working days between the submission of the closing briefs and the presentation of oral arguments, it is "grossly inadequate" as it does not take into account the "established existing obligations and commitments" that the Prosecution team has vis-à-vis another case before the Tribunal. In the Prosecution's view, this is both prejudicial to it and contrary to the interests of justice.

4. The Prosecution alleges that it understands that there might be a need to complete this trial soon in order to enable one of the Judges sitting on this case to attend to other commitments outside the seat of the Tribunal. The Prosecution proposes that "arrangements could be put in place to enable the said Judge to return to the Tribunal as and when her attendance is required". The Prosecution has attached to the Motion a comparative grid indicating the number of days allowed in other proceedings before the Tribunal for the filing of closing briefs and for the presentation of oral arguments.

12.1.1.2. The Defence

5. The Defence submits that while it does not necessarily concur with the reasons and rationale advanced by the Prosecution, it joins with the Prosecution in every respect to seek for relief. In addition, the Defence requests for more time to submit any final witnesses on rebuttal, rejoinder and mitigation, and also prays the Chamber to arrange for "a telephonic conference over scheduling issues."

6. The Defence asserts that it is "at present without co-counsel" and that Muvunyi's Lead Counsel is currently away from the Tribunal while the Legal Assistant is still in Arusha, but that it is "physically impossible" for them to work together in person on the final trial brief. The Defence also asserts that since the Chamber has not yet ruled on the Prosecution's request to call witnesses in rebuttal, the Defence does not know if a rejoinder will be necessary.

7. The Defence further submits that, due to administrative reasons, the proper forms for any witnesses on mitigation have not yet been processed, and that this needs to be done at least a month in advance of bringing the witness here. Therefore, according to the Defence, the current Scheduling Order "is unrealistic and is a denial of justice and due process of the Defence."

HAVING DELIBERATED

8. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes that the Rules do not provide for the review or reconsideration of interlocutory decisions "save with certification by the Trial Chamber" to the Appeals Chamber.[1] This is because the Tribunal has an interest in establishing the certainty and finality of its decisions and in encouraging the Parties to rely on these decisions without fearing that they could easily be altered.[2]

9. However, "the fact that the Rules do not so provide is not of itself determinative of the issue whether or not the power of reconsideration exists in 'particular circumstances.'"[3] The Appeals Chamber of the ICTY has held that a Chamber has the authority to reconsider and modify its prior decision if it is satisfied that there has been a change of circumstances, if it is persuaded that the decision was erroneous and has caused prejudice,[4] or if new information emerges pointing to an error of law, a miscarriage of justice or an abuse of discretion.[5] The Chamber will evaluate the submissions of the Parties in light of this jurisprudence.

10. The Chamber recalls all the issues it discussed with the Parties during the Status Conference held on Monday, 27 March 2006,[6] subsequent to which it rendered the Scheduling Order of Wednesday, 29 March 2006.

11. The Chamber also recalls the provisions of Rule 86 (A) of the Rules dealing with closing arguments and notes that the Rule does not establish any definite time period between the conclusion of the presentation of evidence and the filing of final trial briefs. Each Trial Chamber, in the exercise of its inherent discretion and taking into consideration the specific circumstances of the case, may set the date as it deems appropriate. This Chamber is not bound by the practice of other Trial Chambers and as such the data presented in the Prosecution's comparative grid are of little relevance.

12. The Chamber further recalls Rule 86 (B), which requires that each party's final trial brief be filed with the Chamber "not later than five days prior to the day set for the presentation of that party's closing argument." Contrary to the arguments advanced by the Prosecution, the Scheduling Order clearly satisfied this requirement by establishing that the final trial briefs would be filed by 16 May 2006 while the closing arguments would be heard on 22 and 23 May 2006.

13. Subsequent to the filing of written submissions by the Parties requesting a review of the Scheduling Order, the Chamber was made aware of the Registrar's Decision withdrawing the assignment of the Co-Counsel for the Accused.[7] The Chamber notes that in the Registrar's Decision, it is stated that in a letter dated 21 March 2006, Co-Counsel notified Lead Counsel of his inability to continue in this case, and Lead Counsel wrote to the Registrar about the same issue on 27 March 2006. Yet Lead Counsel chose not to explicitly inform the Chamber about this important matter either at the Status Conference of 27 March 2006 or before it issued its Scheduling Order on 29 March 2006.

14. Nonetheless, in light of the ad hoc Tribunals' jurisprudence, the Chamber considers that the withdrawal of the assignment of Co-Counsel constitutes "new information" which was previously unknown to it and therefore creates a "particular circumstance" warranting a review of the Scheduling Order.

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Motion in part by reviewing the Scheduling Order of 29 March 2006 and

HEREBY ORDERS that:

(i) The Chamber will sit on 8 and 9 May 2006 to hear character witness(es), if any, that the Defence may wish to call, and any other witness(es) the Prosecutor may be allowed to call;

(ii) The Parties shall file their final trial briefs not later that 9 June 2006;

NOW DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written briefs filed by the Parties pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules;

14.1.1. Introduction

1. On 7 December 2005, during the cross-examination of Defence Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana, the Prosecution attempted to tender a set of documents that purportedly bore the signature of the Accused, Tharcisse Muvunyi, in the capacity of "Commandant de Place, Butare-Gikongoro." The Defence objected on the ground that the documents lacked basic indicia of reliability, and were therefore inadmissible. The Chamber ruled that because the Witness indicated that he had not seen the documents before, and that he was not familiar with the seal or the signature on the said documents, they were inadmissible as exhibits, but would be marked for identification purposes only. They were accordingly marked as "PID1". The Chamber further indicated that the Prosecution could prove the authenticity of the documents at a later stage by calling witnesses.[1]

2. On 31 January 2006, the Prosecution filed a motion to admit the documents marked as "PID1" on the grounds that they were relevant and probative of certain allegations in the Indictment, and that they possessed sufficient indicia of reliability to be admissible as evidence.

3. On 28 February 2006, the Chamber rendered a Decision denying the Prosecution motion in its entirety on the basis that the documents contained in "PID1" were not prima facie reliable to be admissible under the Rules, and that they will remain marked for identification purposes only.

14.1.2.1. The Prosecution

4. The Prosecution relies on Rules 89 (C) and (D), and further argues that the Motion is filed pursuant to the Trial Chamber's directive of 7 December 2005 to prove the authenticity of the "PID1" documents by calling additional witnesses. The Prosecutor further argues that even if the only issue for the Trial Chamber's consideration was whether or not Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana recognised the documents on the PID1 documents, it will still be necessary to call the handwriting expert as a rebuttal witness.[2]

5. The Prosecution asserts that by copy of this Motion, it gives notice of its intention to call a handwriting expert in the name of Mr. Antipas Nyanjwa, and seeks leave to call him to testify to the authenticity of the said documents. The Prosecution submits that if admitted, the handwriting expert will testify regarding the signatures and handwriting on the PID1 documents, having compared them to other similar documents authored by the Accused and obtained from the material seized from him following his arrest in the United Kingdom.

6. The Prosecution has attached the curriculum vitae of Mr. Nyanjwa which shows that he received his Bachelor of Arts Degree from Kurukshetra University (India) in 1993, and a Master of Arts Degree in Criminology and Forensic Science from the University of Sagar (India) in 1994. According to the documents submitted by the Prosecution, between 1998 and 2001, Mr. Nyanjwa completed several short-term post-graduate training courses including a seminar on "Questioned Documents" dealing with both handwritten and non-handwritten documents, a course on analysis of forged documents, and a familiarization course on forensic document examination. Since 1996, he has worked as a Forensic Document Examiner for the Kenyan Police Force. It is further asserted that Mr. Nyanjwa is an admitted expert and has given expert evidence before the Tribunal, but there is no indication of the case or cases in which he has testified.

7. The Defence objects to the Prosecution Motion on the following three main grounds: (i) that it would be inappropriate to allow the Prosecution to re-open its case-in-chief at this stage of the proceedings; (ii) that the evidence sought to be introduced does not qualify as rebuttal evidence; and (iii) that granting the Motion would violate the right of the Accused to a trial without undue delay under Article 20 of the Statute.

8. Relying on the ICTY Trial Chamber Decision in the Celebici case, the Defence argues that in order to be granted leave to re-open its case-in-chief, the Prosecution must demonstrate that the evidence it seeks to introduce was previously unavailable to it physically, and could not have been obtained with the exercise of due diligence. According to the Defence submission, the Prosecution has failed to meet this burden and, therefore, admitting the proposed evidence would secure an unfair tactical advantage for the Prosecution.

9. With respect to rebuttal evidence, the Defence argues that the essence of the presentation of evidence in rebuttal is to call evidence to refute a particular piece of evidence which has been adduced by the Defence, and is therefore limited to matters that arise directly and specifically out of Defence evidence. The Defence submits that Trial Chambers are generally reluctant to grant leave to adduce rebuttal evidence where the object of such evidence is to fill gaps in the Prosecution case, or merely to allow the Prosecution to call additional evidence to meet contradictory Defence evidence.

10. Furthermore, the Defence argues that the order of presentation of evidence in Rule 85 presumes that the Prosecution will present its evidence to prove the Accused's guilt, followed by the presentation of evidence to meet the Prosecutor's evidence. According to the Defence submission, while the Prosecution may in certain circumstances be allowed to call further evidence, this is exceptional and cannot be done merely to reinforce evidence already brought or to call evidence previously deemed unnecessary.

11. The Defence submits that nothing Defence Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana said during his cross-examination on 7 December 2005 with respect to the PID1 documents, would justify the calling of a hand-writing expert as a rebuttal witness.

12. The Defence asserts that if the proposed handwriting expert is allowed to testify for the Prosecution, it would have to find and retain a handwriting expert to examine the questioned documents, and subsequently, testify on behalf of the Defence. Since this process could, according to the Defence, take months, the right of the Accused to a trial without undue delay would be violated.

13. The Defence also objects to the use of any documents or material seized from the Accused at the time of his arrest in the United Kingdom as a basis for comparison with the questioned documents.

14. Finally, the Defence submits that the Prosecution Motion is frivolous and should be dismissed.

HAVING DELIBERATED

15. The Chamber notes the provisions of Rule 89 (C) and (D) of the Rules, and is mindful of the jurisprudence of the Tribunal to the effect that in exercising its discretion to admit evidence under Rule 89, it must consider the relevance and probative value of the proposed evidence. These must be weighed against the potential prejudice that may be occasioned to the accused person by admitting the evidence. Where, in the Chambers' assessment, the prejudicial effect of the proposed evidence is likely to outweigh its probative value, they would generally exercise their discretion against admitting such evidence.[3]

16. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution seeks to call the proposed handwriting expert to prove the authenticity of a set of three documents contained in PID1.

- Document 1 is a letter in French dated 21 April 1994 addressed to an unnamed Bourgmestre of Gikongoro. It purports to emanate from, and bears the name and alleged signature of the Accused in the capacity of "Comd Place, BUT-GIK." The document conveys to the Bourgmestre the Defence Ministry's plan to train 10 youths from each secteur as part of a civil defence programme.
- Document 2 is a letter in French dated 21 April 1994 and calling for a coordination meeting to be held at 9.00a.m. on 25 April 1994. Appearing on the document are the name of the Accused, the title "Lt. Col., Cmd Place But-Gik", as well as a signature alleged to be that of the Accused.
- Document 3 contains three type-written forms on which the names and identity card numbers of three individuals have been inserted by hand. At the top of each form, it is indicated "Butare le 10/5/1994." At the end of each form, it is written "Muvunyi Tharcisse, Lt. Col. Cmd OPS Butare."

17. The Chamber recalls that on 7 December 2005, the Prosecution attempted to tender these documents through Defence Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana who indicated that he could not tell if the signatures on the PID1 documents were those of the Accused, and could not recognise the stamps on the documents. The Chamber ruled that the documents be marked for identification purposes only. The Prosecution now seeks to introduce the evidence of a proposed handwriting expert, Antipas Nyanjwa, to prove that the signatures on the PID1 documents were in fact those of the Accused. The question before the Chamber therefore is whether, considering all the circumstances, it would be appropriate to allow the Prosecution to call this handwriting expert for the limited purpose of proving that the documents contained in PID1 are authentic and that they bear the signature of the Accused.

18. The Chamber recalls the provisions of Rule 85 which outline the order of presentation of evidence before the Tribunal. In the Chamber's view, Rule 85 envisages that the Prosecution, as accuser, should present all evidence which is available to it, and which it considers relevant to proof of the allegations against the Accused, during the presentation of its own case. That way, the Accused is afforded a fair opportunity to answer the Prosecution evidence when he presents evidence in his defence. According to the ICTY Trial Chamber in the Celebici case, "there is the principle that matters probative of the Defendant's guilt should be adduced as part of the case of the Prosecution."[4]

19. Despite this general principle, the Chamber notes that in exercising its discretion to admit evidence under Rule 89 (C), it must seek to receive all evidence that is relevant to the discovery of the truth about the allegations in the Indictment without causing substantial prejudice to the rights of the Accused. Where some prejudice may result from the exercise of its discretion, the Chamber must consider and adopt such procedural mechanisms that exist in the context of a criminal trial, as may be necessary to cure the prejudice and ensure that a fair trial ensues.

20. The Chamber has closely examined the PID1 documents and concludes, after careful consideration, that hearing evidence relating to these documents will further the Chamber's overall objective of discovering the truth about the allegations made against the Accused in this case.

21. The Chamber is mindful of the late stage of the proceedings. Nonetheless, it is the Chamber's view that the essence of the Motion touches upon the allegation that the Accused was commandant de place for Butare and Gikongoro. This allegation is not a new one, and the Defence has, during the presentation of its case, led evidence to contradict it. However, the Chamber is satisfied that the Defence could, in the interests of justice, be given the opportunity to call evidence to contradict or otherwise challenge the evidence of the proposed handwriting expert.

22. Having decided that evidence tending to verify the authenticity of the PID1 documents is admissible in the overall interests of justice, the Chamber must now pronounce itself on the qualifications of the proposed handwriting expert, Antipas Nyanjwa. The Chamber notes that pursuant to Rule 94 bis, Defence objects to the qualifications of the proposed handwriting expert and indicates its intention to cross-examine him if he takes the witness stand. The Chamber has carefully considered Mr. Nyanjwa's academic and professional qualifications, his experience in forensic document examination both in his native country and as an admitted handwriting expert before the Tribunal, as well as his expert report.[5] The Chamber is satisfied that by virtue of Mr. Nyanjwa's specialised knowledge, skill, training and experience, he can assist the Chamber in determining the authenticity of the signatures on the PID1 documents.

23. The Chamber notes the Defence objection that documents seized from the Accused at the time of his arrest in the United Kingdom should not be used for the purposes of comparison with the disputed signatures contained in PID1. The Defence argues that the Warrant of Arrest and Order for Transfer of the Accused dated 2 February 2000[6] did not authorise seizure of any materials from the Accused. As a result, argues the Defence, the documents seized from the Accused when he was arrested in the United Kingdom in 2000 were illegally seized and cannot be utilised by the Chamber for the purpose of comparing with other disputed documents.

23.* The Chamber notes the decision of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Stakic where the Defence argued that certain documents seized from the Accused at the time of his arrest were illegally obtained and therefore should be excluded. The Defence further argued that admitting the documents would violate the fair trial rights of the Accused. The Appeals Chamber held that Rule 39 of the ICTY Rules empowers the Prosecutor to collect evidence and conduct on-site investigations, and that the Defence had failed to establish that in the circumstances of the case, the search and seizure were illegal under the Rules or international law.[7] The Chamber agrees with the ICTY Appeals Chamber that the Defence must show that the search and seizure as a result of which the documents were obtained were tainted with illegality either under the Tribunal's Rules or at international law.

24. In addition, the Chamber notes that the arrest and transfer of persons accused before the Tribunal involves the application of both international and domestic law. This is envisaged by Article 28 of the Tribunal's Statute which requires States to cooperate with the Tribunal in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violations of international humanitarian law. It is the Chamber's view that while the Warrant of Arrest and Order for Transfer of the Accused was issued by an International Tribunal, its actual execution had to take place with the cooperation of States and also under the provisions of the domestic law. The domestic law of the United Kingdom, where the Accused was arrested, provides sufficient grounds for search and seizure of materials either during the course of an arrest or after an arrest has been made.[8]

[5] The Chamber notes that Mr. Nyanjwa has testified as a handwriting expert before the Tribunal on at least two previous occasions. See Prosecutor v. Nyiramasuhuko et al., "Decision on Prosecutor's Motion for Leave to Add a Handwriting Expert to His Witness List", 14 October 2004; and Prosecutor v. Bagosora et al., "Decision on the Prosecution Motion to Recall Witness Nyanjwa", 29 September 2004.

25. The Chamber is therefore satisfied on the basis of Rule 39 of the Tribunal's Rules, as well as the provisions of English law cited above, that a sufficient legal basis existed for the seizure of materials from the Accused at the time of his arrest, and for their subsequent use in proceedings before this Tribunal. The Defence submission on this issue therefore lacks merit and is dismissed.

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion and hereby ORDERS that:

1. The proposed handwriting expert, Antipas Nyanjwa, shall testify on 8 or 9 May 2006;

2. The Defence shall, if it so desires, file a Motion to call a witness in rejoinder to contradict or otherwise challenge the evidence of the above-named Prosecution witness;

3. The said Defence witness in rejoinder shall, if the Motion is granted, testify on 1 and 2 June 2006.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge Asoka de Silva, Presiding, Judge Flavia Lattanzi and Judge Florence Rita Arrey (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the "Accused's Motion for Certification to Appeal the Decision of April 26, 2006 Pursuant to Rule 73", filed on 2 May 2006 (the "Motion");

HAVING RECEIVED the "Prosecutor's Response to Accused's Motion for Certification to Appeal the Decision of April 26, 2006 Pursuant to Rule 73", filed on 4 May 2006 (the "Response");

RECALLING FURTHER its Oral Decision of 8 May 2006 granting the Defence Motion for Certification of Appeal pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules and indicating that the written reasons would soon follow (the "Oral Decision");[1]

[1] On 8 May 2006, prior to hearing the testimony of the handwriting expert, the Chamber rendered an Oral Decision granting the Defence Motion for Certification and stating that these written reasons would soon follow.

NOW PROVIDES THE REASONS for such Oral Decision on the basis of written submissions filed by the Parties.

1. The Defence requests the Chamber to certify an appeal against the Decision of 26 April 2006 in which the Chamber granted the Prosecution leave to present the evidence of a handwriting expert with regard to the signatures appearing on certain documents admitted for identification purposes only. The Defence submits that by granting the Prosecution motion, the Chamber erred and that it "confused and mixed the principles of evidence admissibility in Rule 89 and the order of presentation of evidence in Rule 85."[2] The Defence further submits that the Chamber "abused its discretion in that it misdirected itself as to the principle of law to be applied" and "by failing to give sufficient weight to the order of trial set out in Rule 85 and the underlying reason for that policy."[3]

2. Quoting at length from a decision by the Celebici Trial Chamber at the ICTY, the Defence argues that "the order of presentation set out in Rule 85 is based on the principle that matters probative of the defendant's guilt should be adduced during the Prosecutor's case-in-chief."[4] According to the Defence, the Impugned Decision unfairly grants the Prosecution the opportunity to reopen its case, since the documents in question have long been in the Prosecution's possession and the proposed testimony of the handwriting expert could have been adduced earlier through the exercise of reasonable diligence.[5]

3. The Defence asserts that the Impugned Decision satisfies the criteria for certification because it "clearly affects the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings"[6] and because an "immediate decision by the Appeals Chamber would materially advance the proceeding by preventing the introduction of inadmissible evidence".[7]

16.1.1.2. The Prosecution

4. The Prosecution submits that the reasoning underlying the Defence request for certification is "misguided."[8] According to the Prosecution, in the Impugned Decision, the Chamber "gave sufficient weight to the order of trial set out in Rule 85"[9] and "accurately deals with issues relating to Rule 89 (C)".[10] The Prosecution further submits that even if the Chamber erred by granting leave to call the handwriting expert, the Defence still "bears the onus of demonstrating how such an error would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or that its immediate resolution would materially advance the proceedings".[11] In the view of the Prosecution, the Impugned Decision was sound and the Defence request for certification should be denied.[12]

HAVING DELIBERATED

5. The Chamber recalls the provisions of Rule 73 (B) pursuant to which it may grant certification of an interlocutory appeal if the following two criteria are satisfied:

---

[2] Para. 2 of the Defence Motion.
[3] Para. 10 of the Motion.
[4] Para. 5 (b) of the Motion.
[5] Paras. 11-12, 16 of the Motion.
[6] Para. 20 of the Motion.
[7] Para. 21 of the Motion.
[8] Para. 7 of the Prosecution Response.
[9] Para. 8 of the Response.
[10] Para. 8 of the Response.
[11] Para. 14 of the Response.
[12] Para. 16 of the Response.

(i) the decision involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial; and

(ii) in the Chamber's opinion, an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings.

6. The Chamber further recalls that during the cross-examination of Defence Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana on 7 December 2005, the Prosecution attempted to tender into evidence certain documents purportedly bearing the signature of the Accused and identifying him as the Commandant de place of Butare and Gikongoro préfectures.[13] On that occasion, because the witness was unable to identify the signature and seal on the documents, the Chamber refused to admit them as exhibits. Instead, the Chamber admitted the documents for identification purposes only as "PID1".[14] The Chamber also directed that the Prosecution could prove the authenticity of the documents by calling other witnesses.[15]

7. In a subsequent written Decision, the Chamber again denied a Prosecution request to admit as exhibits the documents contained in PID1, noting that although the documents appeared at face value to be relevant to this case, they lacked prima facie reliability.[16] Relying on the Chamber's directive of 7 December 2005, the Prosecution filed a motion seeking leave to call a handwriting expert to testify to the authenticity of the documents contained in PID1. It is the Chamber's Decision of 26 April 2006 granting the Prosecution request that gave rise to this Defence Motion for certification of appeal.[17]

8. With respect to the criteria for granting certification, the Chamber notes that the allegation that Muvunyi was the Commandant de place of Butare and Gikongoro préfectures has been very seriously disputed throughout these proceedings. On the one hand, the allegation has constituted an important aspect of the Prosecution case. On the other hand, the Defence has consistently denied the allegation and has repeatedly challenged all attempts to introduce the said documents. Because the Impugned Decision allowed the Prosecution to call a handwriting expert to verify the signatures on the documents, it would have an impact on the rest of these proceedings. To that extent, the Chamber considers that the Decision involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings. Thus, the first criterion for certification is satisfied.

9. The Chamber is also of the view that an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings, especially during the Chamber's evaluation of the evidence in the context of the final judgement. Therefore, the second criterion for certification has also been met.

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTED the Defence Motion and

CERTIFIED an appeal against the Decision of 26 April 2006.

The Trial Chamber certified the appeal in an oral

Prosecution responded to the appeal on 22 May 2006,[3] and Mr. Muvunyi filed his reply on 25 May 2006.[4] The Appeals Chamber is also seized of Mr. Muvunyi's separate motion to stay the trial proceedings pending the disposition of this appeal.[5]

24.1.1. Background

10. This appeal concerns the Prosecution's efforts to authenticate copies of three documents, allegedly identifying Mr. Muvunyi as Commandant de la place of Butare and Gikongoro préfectures.[6] The parties dispute whether Mr. Muvunyi held the position of area commander for the two préfectures, and the Trial Chamber characterized this issue as relevant to the indictment and important to the Prosecution's case.[7] The Prosecution first moved to tender these documents during the cross-examination of the first defence witness, Augustine Ndindiliyimana.[8] The Trial Chamber refused to admit them into evidence at that time because, in its view, the Prosecution had failed to establish their prima facie reliability.[9] The Trial Chamber admitted the documents for identification purposes only and directed that the Prosecution could call witnesses to authenticate the documents at a later stage.[10]

11. In the Impugned Decision, the Trial Chamber granted the Prosecution's request to call a handwriting expert to authenticate the documents, and heard the witness on 8 May 2006.[11] The Impugned Decision also authorized Mr. Muvunyi to call evidence to contradict or otherwise challenge the evidence of the Prosecution's handwriting expert.[12] The Defence elected to call its own handwriting expert, who is expected to testify on 5 June 2006.[13] The parties' final written and oral submissions in the case are anticipated in June 2006.[14]

12. On appeal, Mr. Muvunyi principally argues that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in allowing the Prosecution to "reopen" its case at the close of the trial and to present additional incriminating evidence which could have been presented earlier through the exercise of due diligence.[15] The Prosecution concedes that the expert evidence and the disputed documents could, and perhaps should, have been presented during its case in chief in support of its proof that Mr. Muvunyi was the area commander, but nonetheless contends that its admission at this stage is well within the Trial Chamber's discretion and authority.[16]

24.1.2. Discussion

13. The decision to admit or exclude evidence pursuant to Rule 89 (C) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal ("Rules") as well as decisions related to the general conduct of the proceedings are matters within the discretion of the Trial Chamber.[17] A Trial Chamber's exercise of discretion will be reversed if the challenged decision was based on an incorrect interpretation of governing law, was based on a patently incorrect conclusion of fact, or was so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the Trial Chamber's discretion.[18]

14. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Mr. Muvunyi has identified no discernible error on the part of the Trial Chamber in allowing the parties to call evidence concerning the authenticity of the three disputed documents. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution cross-examined Mr. Ndindiliyimana on the basis of the documents. At the time, Mr. Muvunyi raised an issue concerning the reliability of the documents, and the Trial Chamber authorized the Prosecution to call additional evidence to verify their authenticity.[19] Rule 89 (D) of the Rules provides the Trial Chamber with clear authority to do so. In determining the timing of the testimony related to the authenticity of the documents, the Trial Chamber expressly considered the late stage of the proceedings and sought to avoid any possible prejudice to Mr. Muvunyi by allowing him to call evidence to contradict or otherwise challenge the evidence of the Prosecution's handwriting expert.[20] Mr. Muvunyi has pointed to no specific prejudice arising from this proposed procedure beyond an assertion of general unfairness.[21] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber cannot find that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in allowing the Prosecution to present evidence concerning the authenticity of the documents.

15. Mr. Muvunyi's arguments focus on the possible admission of the three disputed documents. The Appeals Chamber observes that, at this stage, it is not clear if the three disputed documents will be admitted and, if so, what probative value, if at all, the Trial Chamber will give them in the context of its final assessment of the record.[22]

24.1.3. Disposition

16. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber DISMISSES Mr. Muvunyi's appeal and DISMISSES as moot his request to stay the trial proceedings.

Done in English and French, the English version being authoritative.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge Asoka de Silva, Presiding, Judge Flavia Lattanzi and Judge Florence Rita Arrey (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the "Motion to Strike or Exclude Portions of Prosecutor's Exhibit N°34, Alternatively Defence Objections to Prosecutor's Exhibit N°34", filed on 24 March 2006 (the "Motion");

NOTING that the Prosecution has not filed a response;

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules on the basis of the written submissions filed by the Defence.

26.1.1. Introduction

1. On 10 March 2006, during the cross-examination of Defence Witness MO15, the Prosecution put to the witness two paragraphs of a document purported to be a Judgement of the Special Bench of the War Council of the Republic of Rwanda, sitting in Butare. The Prosecution tendered the entire document to be admitted into evidence.[1] The Defence objected to the admission of this document as an exhibit.[2] The Prosecution entered what it purported to be the original document in Kinyarwanda and its purported English translation. The Chamber admitted those two documents as Prosecution Exhibits P. 34A and P. 34 respectively and directed that because the Defence had just been provided with a copy of the said document during the proceedings of 10 March 2006, it was free to review the document and bring any issues to the attention of the Chamber at a later stage.[3]

26.1.2. Submissions of the Defence

2. In its Motion, the Defence requests the Chamber to entirely exclude Prosecution Exhibit 34 ("Exhibit P. 34") and Prosecution Exhibit 34A ("Exhibit P. 34A"). Alternatively, the Defence urges the Chamber to exclude portions which do not appear relevant to the witness's credibility. Additionally, the Defence submits that the Chamber should strike from the record all other cross-examination based on this exhibit.[4]

3. The Defence submits that Exhibit P. 34, a document of 78 pages, marked K0364204 through K0364281, is allegedly a Judgement by the Special Bench of the War Council of the Republic of Rwanda, sitting in Butare, in Respect of Offences Constituting the Crime of Genocide or Crimes against Humanity (the "Judgement"). The Defence adds that Exhibit P. 34A is allegedly the Kinyarwanda version of Exhibit P. 34 and that this document was first disclosed to the Defence in court on the day it was put to Witness MO15 by the Prosecution. For the purpose of Rule 5 of the Rules, the Defence argues that this is the earliest opportunity it has to object to this document.

4. The Defence asserts that the authenticity and reliability of Exhibit P. 34 are questionable. It also states that only one paragraph of the document is relevant for the purpose for which the Prosecution introduced it and that the document was not provided in its entirety.[5]

5. The Defence further submits that Exhibit P. 34 is a third party's summation of how witnesses, including Defence Witness MO15, testified in the case in which the Judgement was allegedly rendered and does not contain actual statements of Defence Witness MO15.

6. The Defence asserts that the Prosecution was disingenuous at best and attempting a fraud on the Court at worst when it implied that Defence Witness MO15 had made "testifying for his former bosses an art form". Furthermore, and contrary to the Prosecution assertion, the Defence argues that the testimony of Witness MO15 before the Special Bench of the War Council of the Republic of Rwanda was for the Prosecutor, not for the Defence.

[2] T. 10 March 2006, p. 40 (ICS).

[4] The submissions of the Defence are as follows: - in para. 1 of its Motion, the Defence seeks to exclude portions of the said exhibit or, alternatively, to exclude it entirely (see also the title of the Motion), - and in para. 15 of the same Motion, the Defence first asks the Chamber to exclude the entire exhibit or, alternatively, to "exclude all but the single paragraph possibly relevant to the witness' credibility".
[5] Exhibit P. 34, p. 15, between paras. 90 and 91, p. 16, between paras. 96 and 97.

7. Moreover, the Defence submits that even if the document is admissible, it is nothing more or less than the purported record of what occurred. According to the Defence, since the document is neither the witness's statement nor one adopted by him, it has no relevance to his credibility. The Defence adds that even if a portion of the document were admissible to impeach the witness, the remainder would not be relevant for that purpose.

HAVING DELIBERATED

8. The Chamber notes that the real issue raised by this Motion is whether the Chamber should reconsider its earlier Decision admitting Exhibits P34 and P34A into evidence. The Chamber recalls the jurisprudence of the ICTR and ICTY according to which a Trial Chamber may reconsider its own decisions if it discovers a new fact that was not known to the Chamber at the time the earlier decision was made, if it finds that a material change in circumstances has occurred, or if there is reason to believe that a previous decision was erroneous and therefore prejudicial to either party.[6]

9. Rule 89 (C) of the Rules gives the Chamber a broad discretion to admit evidence, including documents, which it considers relevant and of probative value.[7] The Appeals Chamber in Nyiramasuhuko v. The Prosecutor affirmed that "at the stage of admissibility, only the beginning of proof that evidence is reliable, namely, that sufficient indicia of reliability have been established, is required for evidence to be admissible."[8]

10. The Chamber has considered the Defence submissions, and had the opportunity to review Exhibits P. 34 and P. 34A more closely than was possible during the hearing. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution has not given any explanation about the source of the translation of the document in question. In addition, there is no indication that the said translation was certified as correct by the Tribunal's Language Services Section or any other person or organization.

11. The Chamber has, however, closely examined the document in Kinyarwanda vis-à-vis the purported English translation, and concludes that on their face, the two documents do not seem to relate to the same facts. The two documents appear to be different in their structure and do not address the same persons. For example, the names of "Rwangampuhwe", "Gatera", "Kajuga" (1st para.), "Mukarubibi" (2nd, 4th, 5th, 7th paras.), "EER" (2nd, 3rd paras.) "Karenzi" (3rd para.) appear on the first page of Exhibit P. 34A while they do not appear in the corresponding paragraphs or even the first two pages of Exhibit P. 34. Moreover, Exhibit P. 34 bears the following title on the top of the first page: "The Special Bench of the War Council of the Republic of Rwanda, sitting in Butare in Respect of Offences Constituting the Crime of Genocide or Crimes Against Humanity, Delivered the Following Judgement, On July 1998: the Hearing of Which where Held on 11, 25, 26 May; 9, 10, 16, 17, 18, 19, 24, 25 and 26 June 1998…". No such header can be found on top of Exhibit P. 34A. The Chamber also notes that the last two pages of Exhibit P. 34A contain tables indicating amounts in Rwandan Francs whereas the last two pages of document P. 34 contain text organised in paragraphs with no reference to any amount of money.

12. The Chamber also recalls that during the proceedings of 10 March 2006, the Prosecution relied exclusively on the document in English later entered as Exhibit P. 34, and it was only when the Chamber was marking the document as an exhibit that the Prosecution introduced a document in Kinyarwanda to be admitted as the original version of Exhibit P. 34. Therefore, the Chamber considers that since Exhibit P. 34, the purported English translation, appears to be a different document from the original Kinyarwanda document, Exhibit P. 34 is not prima facie reliable or authentic.

13. The Chamber has also taken into account the Defence submission that the translator has indicated that two portions of the original document were missing and therefore could not be translated.[9] Having examined Exhibit P. 34A, the Chamber finds that pages marked K035894 through K035897 are missing.

14. In view of its finding that Exhibit P. 34 lacks prima facie reliability and authenticity, the Chamber concludes that the document should not have been admitted as an exhibit. The Chamber therefore invokes its inherent power to reconsider its Decision of 10 March 2006 admitting into evidence a purported translation into English of a Judgement of the War Council in Rwanda and its Kinyarwanda original as Exhibits P. 34 and P. 34A respectively.

15. In light of the Chamber's finding that this document lacks prima facie reliability or authenticity, the Chamber is of the view that the evidence associated with these exhibits and elicited during cross-examination, should equally not be taken into account.

16. Finally the Chamber wishes to remind the Parties of their obligation to act with all necessary diligence when submitting materials to be admitted as evidence.

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Defence Motion;

ORDERS that Prosecution Exhibit P. 34 and Prosecution Exhibit P. 34A be excluded from the record.

BEING SEIZED of the "Corrected Accused's Additional Objections to the Deposition Testimony of Witness QX", filed on 27 April 2006 (the "Motion");[1]

HAVING RECEIVED the "Prosecutor's Response to Accused Tharcisse Muvunyi's Additional Objections to the Deposition Testimony of Witness QX", filed on 28 April 2006 (the "Response");

RECALLING the "Decision on the Prosecutor's Extremely Urgent Motion for Deposition of Witness QX (Rule 71 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence)", rendered on 11 November 2003, (the "Decision of 11 November 2003");[2]

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules on the basis of written submissions filed by the Parties.

28.1.1. Submissions of the Parties

28.1.1.2.

1. The Defence prays the Chamber to strike from the record in this case, and not to consider the deposition testimony of Prosecution Witness QX taken on 4 and 5 December 2003. Alleging "ineffective assistance of counsel", the Defence submits that the Duty Counsel who represented the Accused at the deposition proceedings has "admitted that he was not familiar with the facts of the case". The Defence argues that as a consequence, Muvunyi was deprived of both his right to effective assistance of counsel and his right to cross-examination.

2. According to the Defence, the right to counsel provided in Article 20 of the Statute is "more than the right of an accused to have a warm body with a law license seated next to him in the courtroom." The Defence further argues that Rule 44 bis of the Rules "envisions that duty counsel will provide only initial legal advice to an accused or suspect until such time as permanent [representation] is arranged." In the view of the Defence, it cannot be expected that Duty Counsel will become intimately familiar with the case, conduct investigations and/or provide definitive legal advice to a suspect or accused person.

3. The Defence submits that the Appeals Chamber has interpreted the requirement of effective assistance of counsel to mean competent counsel.[3] The Defence further submits that the Supreme Court of the United States of America has determined that for a conviction or sentence to be vacated due to ineffective assistance of counsel, the defendant must show that there was deficient conduct falling outside the normal range of professional conduct, and that but for this deficient conduct, there is a reasonable probability that the result of the trial would have been different.[4] The Defence also asserts that the same Supreme Court has held that there is a presumption of ineffectiveness when Defence Counsel's performance is so deficient that there is a breakdown in the adversarial process to the extent that the Prosecutor's case is not tested in a meaningful way.[5]

4. Finally, the Defence submits that since the deposition was taken after one permanent lawyer had been dismissed and before a new one was assigned, "there was no counsel specifically charged with preparing the case for trial and determining where Witness QX's testimony fit into the overall scheme of the trial." The Defence further submits that Muvunyi "was denied his right to effective assistance of counsel," and that the Chamber can cure the error by striking the deposition testimony of Witness QX and not considering it for any reason.

[1] Although the Defence does not so indicate, the Chamber understands that this "Corrected" version replaces the "Accused's Additional Objections to the Deposition Testimony of Witness QX" filed on 26 April 2006 and in which the name of the Accused was wrongly spelt.
[2] This Decision in the pre-trial phase was rendered by Trial Chamber III.

28.1.1.3. The Prosecution

5. The Prosecution submits that the Defence motion to strike the deposition testimony of Witness QX "is out of time, falling outside the time frame contemplated by the Rules" for the presentation of preliminary objections. In the view of the Prosecution, the Defence motion is not only a "frivolous application", but is "both spurious and vexatious" as well.

6. The Prosecution further submits that before the Trial Chamber rendered its Decision of 11 November 2003, it considered and deliberated upon the reasons advanced by the Prosecution for the taking of the deposition. The Prosecution also notes that in a subsequent decision, the Chamber found that Duty Counsel was "competent to conduct the taking of the deposition of Witness QX" and that nothing in the Defence motion changes that finding.

7. According to the Prosecution, absent new facts or exceptional circumstances which were unknown to the Chamber at the time of the Decision in November 2003, "there are no provisions in the Rules allowing for a review" of such decisions. Therefore, submits the Prosecution, the Chamber should dismiss the Motion and deny the Defence filing costs.

HAVING DELIBERATED

8. The Chamber is mindful of the Rights of the Accused enshrined in Article 20 of the Statute, and in particular of the "minimum guarantees" provided in Article 20 (4) (d) and (e), including the right of the Accused:

> (d) To be tried in his or her presence, and to defend himself or herself in person or through legal assistance of his or her own choosing; to be informed, if he or she does not have legal assistance, of this right; and to have legal assistance assigned to him or her, in any case where the interest of justice so require, and without payment by him or her in any such case if he or she does not have sufficient means to pay for it;
> (e) To examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him or her and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his or her behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him or her.

9. The Chamber also recalls the provisions of Rule 44 bis on Duty Counsel, which should be read in conjunction with Rule 44 on the Appointment and Qualifications of Counsel. Pursuant to these rules, both Duty Counsel and Assigned Counsel are deemed to be competent. As stipulated in Rule 44 (A), subject to verification by the Registrar, "a counsel shall be considered qualified to represent a suspect or accused, provided that he is admitted to the practice of law in a State, or is a University professor of law."

10. The Appeals Chamber has developed considerable jurisprudence at both the ICTR and the ICTY on the issue of the effective assistance of counsel. In Kambanda, it noted that the effectiveness of representation by assigned counsel must be assured in accordance with the principles relating to the right to a defence, in particular the principle of equality of arms.[6] In Akayesu, it affirmed that indigent accused have the right to be assigned competent counsel and that such right to competent counsel is guaranteed under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (Article 14), among other international legal instruments.[7] In the Tadic case, however, the Appeals Chamber established that the test to be applied in assessing counsel's competence is that unless "gross negligence" is shown to exist in the conduct of either Prosecution or Defence counsel, due diligence will be presumed.[8]

11. The Chamber has also examined the two companion cases from the Supreme Court of the United States of America (US Supreme Court) cited by the Defence in support of the Motion. Apart from the fact that the Defence has failed to prove any deficient performance on the part of the Duty Counsel, as required by the US Supreme Court, it is worth noting that those cases are distinguishable from the instant one in multiple ways, but primarily because they both deal with final trial judgements involving convictions and sentences, while the present case is still at the trial stage and without a judgement.[9]

12. The Chamber is fully aware of the special circumstances under which the deposition of Witness QX was recorded in December 2003. In particular, the Chamber notes that pursuant to an application by the Accused, Trial Chamber III ordered the Registrar to withdraw Mr. Michael Fischer as Lead Counsel, but stated that this should not be interpreted as implying any delay in the commencement of the trial.[10] The Registrar on the following day gave effect to the Trial Chamber III Decision and appointed Mr. Francis Musei as Duty Counsel, pending the assignment of a new Lead Counsel for Muvunyi.[11] The deposition was taken in the presence of the Duty Counsel.

13. It should also be recalled that in the Decision of 11 November 2003, which authorised the taking of the deposition, Trial Chamber III determined that:

> "In the instant case, the Chamber considers that Witness QX's age, coupled with his critical state of health, constitutes exceptional circumstances within the meaning of Rule 71 of the Rules. If the state of his health worsened, the Prosecutor would be deprived of his evidence. Furthermore the Chamber notes the Prosecutor's submission that the anticipated evidence of Witness QX is highly important to its case not only because he was allegedly an eyewitness of the acts alleged by the Prosecutor against both Accused, but also because his status makes him a special witness. The Chamber therefore considers that the interests of justice require that the evidence of Witness QX be taken by way of deposition, pursuant to Rule 71 of the Rules, before commencement of trial, so as to adequately facilitate the administration of justice."[12]

[9] In Strickland v. Washington [US Supreme Court, 466 U.S. 668, 1984], a criminal defendant acted against the advice of his assigned counsel and pleaded guilty to a string of murders and other violent crimes. He subsequently challenged the death sentence imposed on him by the trial court, alleging ineffective assistance of counsel. On appeal, the US Supreme Court held that "[t]he benchmark for judging any claim of ineffectiveness must be whether counsel's conduct so undermined the proper functioning of the adversarial process that the trial cannot be relied on as having produced a just result." The Court then established a two-part test requiring a defendant to show, first, that counsel's performance was deficient and, second, that the deficient performance prejudiced the defence.
United States v. Cronic [US Supreme Court, 466 U.S. 648, 1984] involved a criminal defendant indicted on mail fraud charges. Shortly before the scheduled trial date, his retained counsel withdrew and the trial court appointed a young real estate attorney to represent him. Whereas the Government had taken four-and-a-half years to investigate the case and had reviewed thousands of documents in the process, the young lawyer had only 25 days for pre-trial preparation. The intermediate US Court of Appeals subsequently reversed the 25-year prison sentence, concluding that the defendant did not have the effective assistance of counsel for his defence. The US Supreme Court in turn reversed the ruling of the Court of Appeals, holding that the right to the effective assistance of counsel is "the right of the accused to require the prosecution's case to survive the crucible of meaningful adversarial testing." The Supreme Court also held that there is no necessary correlation between the amount of time spent on a case and the quality of representation delivered. It concluded that lawyers are presumed competent and that the burden rests on the defendant to demonstrate that there was a breakdown in the adversarial process.

[10] The Prosecutor v. Tharcisse Muvunyi et al, Case N°ICTR-2000-55-I (Joinder), "Decision on the Accused's Request to Instruct the Registrar to Replace Assigned Lead Counsel", 18 November 2003.

14. In a subsequent Decision dated 27 November 2003, Trial Chamber III denied Muvunyi's request for certification to appeal the Decision of 11 November 2003, ruling that Muvunyi would be adequately represented by Duty Counsel during the taking of the deposition.[13]

15. A review of the transcripts of the deposition proceedings on 4 and 5 December 2003 reveals that despite Muvunyi's strict instructions to the contrary, he was in fact represented by Duty Counsel, Mr. Francis Musei.[14] At the conclusion of the Prosecution's examination-in-chief of Witness QX, Duty Counsel made the following statement:

> My Lord, lest I should be accused of negligence, I think I would have to participate in cross-examination, even in the absence of instruction as I had earlier said.[15]

16. Before commencing the cross-examination, Duty Counsel also requested and obtained from the Court an adjournment until the following day "in order to look into the evidence as a whole and make the necessary strategy in the approach of the witness."[16] The next day, 5 December 2003, Duty Counsel proceeded to cross-examine Witness QX and to represent the interests of the Accused.[17] The Chamber notes the Defence's allegation that the Duty Counsel has "admitted that he was not familiar with the facts of the case",[18] but after a review of the transcripts of the deposition proceedings, the Chamber has not been able to substantiate the allegation.

17. It is apparent from the foregoing analysis that Muvunyi's claim here falls short of meeting the standards established by the Appeals Chamber. The Chamber considers that during the deposition of Witness QX, Muvunyi was adequately represented by a Duty Counsel deemed competent pursuant to Rule 44; there was no indication of gross negligence on the part of the Duty Counsel; there was no allegation of improper or unprofessional conduct by counsel; his performance could not be said to have been deficient; there was no breakdown in the adversarial process; and, in the absence of a final judgement, there can be no claim that but for Duty Counsel's performance, the outcome of the trial would have been different. Furthermore, just because Duty Counsel's involvement in the case occurred between those of two permanent counsel, it does not necessarily follow that he was less competent or less effective at defending Muvunyi's cause. There is no necessary correlation between the amount of time spent on a case and the quality of representation delivered.[19]

18. The Chamber is of the opinion that not only was the Motion filed out of time, but the issues raised therein were already sufficiently ventilated as far back as November 2003 and are now res judicata. The Chamber notes, for instance, that Muvunyi's request for certification of appeal against the Decision authorising the taking of the deposition was denied[20] and that the Defence has not pointed to any new facts that would justify a review of those earlier Decisions. Therefore, the Chamber considers the Motion to be frivolous and subject to sanctions within the meaning of Rule 73 (F).

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Motion in its entirety and

ORDERS the Registry to deny the Defence all costs associated with the filing of the Motion.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge Asoka de Silva, Presiding, Judge Flavia Lattanzi and Judge Florence Rita Arrey (the "Chamber");

NOTING that Judge Florence Rita Arrey, who is currently away from the seat of the Tribunal, has had the opportunity to read this Decision in draft, agrees with it, and has authorised the Presiding Judge to sign it on her behalf;

BEING SEIZED of "Muvunyi's Motion to Include all Testimony of Witness AOG/D/X/006 in the Appellate Record", filed on 18 April 2006 (the "Motion");

HAVING RECEIVED the "Prosecutor's Response to Accused Muvunyi's Motion to Include all Testimony of Witness AOG/X/006 in the Appellate Record", filed on 20 April 2006 (the "Response");

RECALLING the Chamber's "Decision on Accused's Motion to Expand and Vary the Witness List", filed on 28 March 2006 (the "Decision of 28 March 2006");

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules on the basis of the written submissions filed by the Parties.

33.1.2. Submissions of the Parties

33.1.2.2.

1. The Defence seeks to include in the appellate record of this case all documents utilized by the Chamber to render its Decision of 28 March 2006. It adds that it specifically seeks to include as part of the appellate record the testimony of the Witness variously known as X, D, AOG and 006 in its totality in all proceedings that the Court reviewed. It further requests that these documents be sealed and form part of the record in this case for the purpose of appeal.

33.1.2.3. The Prosecution

2. The Prosecution submits that the Decision of 28 March 2006 renders the present Motion res judicata. The Prosecution further argues that if the Defence was dissatisfied with the Decision of 28 March 2006 it should have requested certification to file an interlocutory appeal in the time frame stipulated in Rule 73 (C) of the Rules. It adds that having failed to make such an application within the time frame required by the Rules, the Defence now seeks to enter the materials into the record through the back door.

3. The Prosecution further submits that the rules governing admissibility of evidence are clear. It adds that the Chamber, before reaching its Decision of 28 March 2006, had taken the proper steps under the law to safeguard the rights and interests of the Accused and cannot be said to have erred in its decision to exclude the testimony of the Witness as it took the extra step of reviewing the transcripts of the most recent testimony of Witness AOG/006 in the Ndindiliyimana case.

4. Finally, the Prosecution submits that should the materials be admitted as part of the record without availing the Prosecution a right to challenge the content of the transcripts and of the testimony of the witness, such admission would amount to a violation of the Prosecutor's rights and would require the Chamber to review its Decision of 28 March 2006.

HAVING DELIBERATED

5. The Chamber notes that the Defence seeks to include all the evidence given by Witness X/D/AOG/006 in other proceedings before the Tribunal in the appellate record of this case. The Chamber recalls Article 20 (3) of the Statute which guarantees the right of the Accused to be presumed innocent until proven guilty. This presumption subsists throughout the trial. It follows therefore that the issue of an appeal or the compilation of an appellate record does not arise until the trial comes to an end and until an appeal, if any, is filed. If the Chamber were to make the Order sought by the Defence, it would be prematurely anticipating the outcome of the trial in violation of the presumption of innocence. Therefore, the Chamber considers that the Defence request is premature.

6. Having decided that the Defence request is premature, the Chamber need not say more about the substance of the Motion. However, the Chamber would like to remind the Defence that the appropriate procedure to vary witness protection orders is to bring a motion before the Chamber that issued the protective order(s) pursuant to Rule 75 (F) and (G). An application to the current Chamber would only lie where the first Chamber is no longer seized of the matter.

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Defence Motion in its entirety.

RECALLING its Oral Decision of 15 February 2006 on the admissibility of Prosecution Exhibit 33 (the "Oral Decision");[2]

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules on the basis of written submissions filed by the Parties.

35.1.1. Submissions of the Parties

35.1.1.1. The Defence Motion

1. The Defence requests the Chamber to reconsider its Oral Decision of 15 February 2006 in which it admitted into evidence, as Prosecution Exhibit 33, certain documents tendered during the cross-examination of Defence Witness MO80. The Defence specifically requests the Chamber to exclude the said Exhibit, alleging that it was admitted in error.

2. The Defence submits that the documents comprising Prosecution Exhibit 33 are "copies of collected statements of a witness" drawn from the Prosecutor's databank and tendered for the purpose of impeaching Witness MO80's credibility, but "not properly authenticated and/or proven up as reliable." According to the Defence, the person making those declarations is someone other than Witness MO80, requiring that "a credibility choice be made between the witness and the Declarant." In the view of the Defence, such a credibility choice by the Chamber "violates the Accused's right to cross-examination and his due process rights as guaranteed under Article 20 (4) (e) of the Statute and under Rule 90 (A)."

3. The Defence asserts that these out-of-court statements by a third party lack relevance with regard to the truthfulness of Witness MO80's testimony, as this is not a situation where the witness is confronted with a contradiction between his own prior inconsistent statements and his current testimony, one of which must be untruthful or incorrect. The Defence further asserts that no proof has been offered as to the truthfulness of the statements contained in the Exhibit, and that the reliability of the evidence offered is questionable. In the view of the Defence, before evidence can be admitted, it needs to be credible and there must be sufficient indicia of its reliability.

4. According to the Defence, the Prosecution made an erroneous submission when it claimed in open court that it was reading from a decision by the Appeals Chamber, rather than from a decision by the Trial Chamber, in the Delalic case. The Defence also submits that the Prosecution claimed there was no test to guide the Chamber in determining if there are sufficient indicia of reliability for the admission of an exhibit, whereas a test does in fact exist and has been applied before by Trial Chambers in the Celebici and Tadic cases.[3] The Defence alleges that "the Chamber fundamentally erred in allowing the exhibit to be admitted for the purposes of making a credibility choice rather than allowing the witness to be examined on the differences of the statements."

35.1.1.2. The Prosecution Response

[1] Note that the Prosecution's Response, to which is annexed a 20-page excerpt of the closed-session transcripts of the proceedings of 15 February 2006, is marked "Confidential".
[2] During the proceedings on 15 February 2006, the Exhibit in question was erroneously recorded as Prosecution Exhibit 41. (See pp. 22-23 of the English transcript, in closed session.) The error was corrected on 16 February 2006 and the same Exhibit was properly recorded as Prosecution Exhibit 33. (See p. 1 of the English transcript of the proceedings.)
[3] References omitted.

5. The Prosecution submits that there is "absolutely no legal basis to support the Defence Motion to exclude Prosecution Exhibit 33." It argues that while neither the Statute nor the Rules specifically provides for a right to request reconsideration of a previous decision, the jurisprudence of the ICTR has tended to imply the existence of such a right.[4] The Prosecution further argues that the Appeals Chamber has stated that interlocutory decisions may be reconsidered only in cases where a "clear error" has been exposed[5] or where a "special circumstance" exists.[6]

6. In the view of the Prosecution, since the Defence has demonstrated neither a "clear error" nor the existence of any "special circumstances" to warrant reconsideration, the Motion is both "frivolous and vexatious." Consequently, the Prosecution prays the Chamber to dismiss the Motion in its entirety and to deny fees to Counsel pursuant to Rules 46 and 73 (F).

35.1.1.3. The Defence Reply

7. The Defence asserts in its Reply that the Prosecution's Response is "at a minimum disingenuous and at most a blatant attempt to mislead the Trial Chamber as to the right of a party to move a Trial Chamber to reconsider an interlocutory decision". The Defence further asserts that a Chamber has an inherent power "to reconsider any decision when it is necessary to prevent an injustice."

8. Citing a recent decision in the case of Bizimungu et al., the Defence submits that the Prosecution at this Tribunal has itself had occasion to resort to motions for reconsideration where it considered the Trial Chamber's ruling to be unjust.[7] According to the Defence, all advocates appearing before the Tribunal "owe a duty of candor to the court" and the Prosecution owed a duty to inform the Chamber "that it had taken exactly the opposite position in another case" compared to this one.

9. The Defence submits that the Prosecution's request for sanctions is unjustified; that the Prosecution "is attempting to intimidate Muvunyi and his counsel"; and that the Chamber should consider taking appropriate action against the Prosecution "for its frivolous and misleading pleading." In the view of the Defence, it has met the test for reconsideration by outlining the argument as to the clear error and special circumstances involved in asking the Chamber to reconsider its prior ruling.

35.1.2. Deliberations

10. As preliminary matters, the Chamber reminds both Parties of the need to treat each other with the courtesy and respect expected from officers of the Court. The Chamber also reminds the Parties that it is quite capable of making an independent determination of the circumstances under which sanctions may be applied.

11. It is well settled in the jurisprudence of the ad hoc Tribunals that while the Rules do not specifically provide for the review or reconsideration of interlocutory decisions, a Trial Chamber may nonetheless reconsider and modify its prior decision if it is persuaded that the decision was made in error or has the potential to lead to a miscarriage of justice.[8] The Chamber will consider the Motion in light of this jurisprudence.

12. The Chamber recalls its Oral Decision of 15 February 2006 admitting into evidence as Prosecution Exhibit 33 ("Exhibit P. 33"), the documents tendered by the Prosecution during the cross-examination of Defence Witness MO80. On that occasion the Prosecution indicated that the documents contained in the Exhibit were the signed statement and confession of one of MO80's former colleagues at a roadblock in 1994,[9] who had previously testified for the Prosecution before this Chamber under the pseudonym of YAQ.[10]

13. The stated purpose of introducing the documents in Exhibit P. 33, according to the Prosecution, was to impeach Defence Witness MO80's credibility by comparing his version of the events at the roadblock to the version given by Witness YAQ.[11] Counsel for the Defence objected to the admission of the documents on the grounds that MO80 was not their author and had no knowledge of them, and Counsel also questioned the authenticity and reliability of the documents in the Exhibit.[12] The Prosecution, purportedly[13] citing an Appeals Chamber decision in the Delalić case, responded that only the relevance and probative value of the documents, and not their authenticity or reliability, could be considered at this stage of the proceedings.[14]

14. The Chamber also recalls Rule 89 (C) of the Rules, which provides that a Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value. This Rule has been construed to mean that before a Chamber can admit any particular document, it must be satisfied that the document fulfils two conditions, namely that it is relevant and has probative value.[15] However, the Chamber is equally mindful of the requirement that for evidence to be admissible, it must possess "sufficient indicia of reliability."[16]

15. It is now the Chamber's belief that its Oral Decision admitting the documents contained in Exhibit P. 33 was based on the mistaken assumption that these were the statement and confession of Witness YAQ who has previously testified for the Prosecution in this case and whose demeanour and credibility the Chamber has had the opportunity to assess. In particular, the Chamber notes the following exchange between the Presiding Judge and the Prosecution Counsel:

MR. PRESIDENT:
Madam Prosecutor, could you kindly tell us -- one of these witnesses gave testimony in this court?

MS. ADEBOYEJO:
Yes, Your Honour. Yes, directly gave evidence before this Trial Chamber, Witness YAQ, Your Honours.[17]

[9] T. 15 February 2006, p. 9 (in closed session, during cross-examination).

[10] Witness YAQ testified for the Prosecution in this matter on 31 May 2005.

[11] During his testimony, YAQ stated that his brother, who had been with him at the roadblock, had testified in the Butare case under the pseudonym of QBV. (T. 31 May 2005, pp. 15-16 (cross-examination))

[12] T. 15 February 2006, pp. 7-17 (in closed session, during cross-examination).

[13] It was actually from a Trial Chamber decision that the Prosecution Counsel was reading: The Prosecutor v. Delalic, Case N°IT-96-21-T (TC), "Decision on the Motion of the Prosecution for the Admissibility of Evidence", 19 January 1998, paras. 15-17.

16. Having carefully examined the English and French versions of the documents contained in Exhibit P. 33,[18] the Chamber notes that the declarant in both the witness statement and the confession is not Witness YAQ. Rather, the declarant in both documents is YAQ's brother, who has not testified in the instant case.

17. In the Chamber's view, by pointing out that the declarant in the documents contained in Exhibit P. 33 was someone other than a witness who has previously testified in this case, the Defence has successfully demonstrated the existence of new information which was unknown to the Chamber at the time it rendered its Oral Decision. The Defence has also shown that the decision to admit the documents contained in Exhibit P. 33 could occasion a miscarriage of justice. The criteria for reconsideration have therefore been satisfied.

18. Finally, the Chamber has considered the Prosecution's request for sanctions and is not of the opinion that the Defence Motion is frivolous. Furthermore, the Chamber cautions the Prosecution to refrain from making erroneous and potentially misleading submissions.[19]

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Motion and

ORDERS that Prosecution Exhibit 33 be excluded from the record in this case.

Arusha, 13 June 2006.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge Asoka de Silva, Presiding, and Judge Flavia Lattanzi (the "Chamber"), pursuant to Rule 15 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence;

BEING SEIZED of "Accused Tharcisse Muvunyi's Motion for Trial Continuance", filed on 29 May 2006 (the "Motion");

HAVING RECEIVED the "Prosecutor's Response to Accused Tharcisse Muvunyi's Motion for Trial Continuance", filed on 02 June 2006 (the "Response");

RECALLING the Chamber's Oral Decision of 6 June 2006 denying the Accused Tharcisse Muvunyi's Motion for Trial Continuance (the "Oral Decision");

NOTING that the Chamber rendered its:
(i) "Decision on Motion to Strike or Exclude Portions of Prosecutor's Exhibit N°34, Alternatively Defence Objections to Prosecutor's Exhibit N°34" on 30 May 2006;
(ii) "Decision on Muvunyi's Additional Objections to the Deposition Testimony of Witness QX, Pursuant to Article 20 of the Statute and Rules 44, 44 bis and 73 (F) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence" on 31 May 2006;
(iii) "Decision on Muvunyi's Motion for Rejoinder Witness Pursuant to Rule 85" on 2 June 2006;

FURTHER NOTING that on 29 May 2006, the Appeals Chamber rendered its "Decision on Interlocutory Appeal", in which it also dismissed as moot the Defence request to stay the trial proceedings that was filed on 15 May 2006;

ALSO NOTING the corrigenda issued by the Language Services Section of the Tribunal on 30 May and further on 9 June 2006 following the order the Chamber issued on 6 June 2006, in connection with the errors or discrepancies in the French and English language transcripts relied upon by the Defence to support its Motion for Continuance;

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

NOW ISSUES the reasons for the Oral Decision.

37.1.1.1. The Defence

1. The Defence sought a stay of the trial proceedings for the following reasons: first, that it had not received any ruling on several pending motions that could have an impact on the course and direction of the final brief;[1] secondly, that it needed a translation into English of the Judgement rendered by the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (the "ICTY") in the Hadzihazanovic and Kubura case; and thirdly, that it had found a series of translation errors in the transcripts of proceedings.

2. The Defence asserted that until these matters were resolved, it would be impossible for it to complete the final trial brief and for the Trial Chamber to deliberate. The Defence further submitted that the Accused was being denied the right to a fair trial until he knew what evidence had been properly admitted against him and until the transcript errors were corrected.

3. The Defence attached to its Motion two annexes. Annex A is a summary of the ICTY judgment the Defence seeks to have translated. Annex B contains a copy of correspondence with the Court Management Section of the Tribunal as well as samples of the discrepancies in translation it reported to the Court Management Section.

4. During the Proceedings of 5 June 2006, however, the Defence indicated that it was abandoning all other grounds of the Motion except the one relating to the correction of the alleged errors in the transcripts.

37.1.1.2. The Prosecution

5. The Prosecution submitted that the Defence had not shown any exceptional circumstances that warranted a postponement of the hearing of the rejoinder witness on 5 June 2006. The Prosecution added that the Chamber had already rendered decisions for two of the pending motions mentioned by the Defence,[2] and that the Appeals Chamber had also handed down its Decision on Muvunyi's Interlocutory Appeal, dismissing as moot the Defence application to stay the trial proceedings. The Prosecution further added that the Language Services Section had issued a corrigendum for the errors alleged in the Transcripts of 13 December 2005, 15 December 2005, and 13 March 2006. The Prosecution finally submitted that the translation of the ICTY Judgement in the Hadzihasanovic case should have been anticipated by the Defence team and could not justify continuance of the trial proceedings.

37.1.2. Reasons

6. The Chamber carefully examined the errors in the transcripts. It also examined the two corrigenda issued by the Language Services Section.

[1] The Defence mentioned the following motions as pending: "Accused's Motion to Exclude Prosecutor's Exhibit 33", filed in February 2006; "Accused's Motion to Strike or Exclude Prosecutor's Exhibit 34", filed in March 2006; "Muvunyi's Motion to Include the Testimony of AOG/D/X/006 in the Appellate Record", filed in April 2006; "Muvunyi's Motion for Admission of Testimony Pursuant to Rule 92 bis"; "Interlocutory appeal".

[2] "Accused's Motion to Strike or Exclude Portions of the Prosecutor's Exhibit N°34, Alternatively Defence Objections to Prosecutor's Exhibit N°34"; "Accused's Additional Objections to the Deposition Testimony of Witness QX Pursuant to Article 20 of the Statute."

7. The Chamber noted that the Language Services Section rectified all the errors pointed out by the Defence in the transcripts of 13 December 2005, 15 December 2005 and 13 March 2006. The Chamber also noted that the Language Services Section did not address the alleged errors relating to Witness MO23 and so ordered that Section to review the evidence of Witness MO23 given on 16 March 2006, and if necessary, to issue a corrigendum. The Chamber further noted that one of the alleged errors in translation was not rectified in the corrigendum issued on 30 May 2006 because there was in fact no error and it appeared that the Defence wrongly quoted the English and corresponding French transcripts.[3]

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIED the Motion.

Arusha, 15 June 2006.

[Signed] : Asoka de Silva; Flavia Lattanzi

[3] For Witness MO31, instead of 15 December 2005, page 20, lines 14-16 of the English transcripts and page 19, lines 27-31 of the French transcripts, the Defence should have quoted page 20, lines 14-16 and page 21, lines 3-4 of the English transcripts and the English transcripts would have matched the French transcripts.

38. Decision on Muvunyi's Motion Substitution of Final Trial Brief 39. 20 June 2006 (ICTR-2000-55A-T)

(Original : English)

Trial Chamber II

Judges : Asoka de Silva, Presiding Judge; Flavia Lattanzi; Florence Rita Arrey

Tharcisse Muvunyi – Substitution of the Final Trial Brief – Substance of the Final Trial Brief unchanged – Motion granted

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge Asoka de Silva, Presiding, Judge Flavia Lattanzi and Judge Florence Rita Arrey (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of "Tharcisse Muvunyi's Motion for Substitution of Final Trial Brief" filed on 19 June 2006 (the "Motion");

CONSIDERING the urgency of the situation, in view of the fact that the Closing Arguments of both Parties are scheduled to be heard on 22 and 23 June 2006;

HAVING CONSIDERED the Defence submission that it encountered "computer problems at the time of printing" the initial version of its Final Trial Brief filed on 15 June 2005;

ALSO NOTING the Defence submission that the substitute document "only corrects typographical errors, margins, numbering problems and footnote numbering issues" and that the substance of its Final Trial Brief "is not changed and that no new argument has been added";

THE CHAMBER HEREBY

GRANTS the Motion and

ORDERS that:

(i). The version of "Tharcisse Muvunyi's Final Trial Brief" filed on 19 June 2006 shall replace the version filed on 15 June 2006;

(ii). Any changes to the substance of the Final Trial Brief filed on 19 June 2006 or any new argument added thereto shall not be taken into consideration.

41.1.1. Table of Contents

41.1.2. Chapter I : Introduction

41.2. 1. The Tribunal and Its Jurisdiction

1. The Judgement in the case of The Prosecutor v. Tharcisse Muvunyi is issued by Trial Chamber II (the "Chamber") of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (the "Tribunal"), composed of Judge Asoka de Silva, presiding, Judge Flavia Lattanzi, and Judge Florence Rita Arrey.

2. The Tribunal was established by the United Nations Security Council after official United Nations reports indicated that genocide and widespread, systematic, and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law had been committed in Rwanda.[1] The Security Council determined that this situation constituted a threat to international peace and security; resolved to put an end to such crimes and to bring to justice the persons responsible for them; and expressed conviction that the Prosecution of such persons would contribute to the process of national reconciliation and to the restoration of peace. Consequently, on 8 November 1994, the Security Council acting under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, adopted Resolution 955 establishing the Tribunal.[2]

3. The Tribunal is governed by the Statute annexed to United Nations Security Council Resolution 955 (the "Statute") and by its Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules").[3]

4. The Tribunal has authority to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the Republic of Rwanda, and Rwandan citizens responsible for such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring States.[4] Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute provide the Tribunal with subject-matter jurisdiction over acts of genocide, crimes against humanity, and serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II. The Tribunal's temporal jurisdiction is limited by Article 1 of the Statute to acts committed between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994.[5]

41.3. 2. Indictment

5. In the Indictment filed on 23 December 2003 (the "Indictment"), read together with the Schedule of Particulars filed on 28 February 2005, the Prosecution charged Tharcisse Muvunyi (the "Accused") with five counts pursuant to Articles 2 and 3 of the Statute: genocide, or in the alternative complicity in genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, rape, and other inhumane acts as crimes against humanity. The Prosecution charged the Accused with individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1) and 6 (3) of the Statute for genocide, complicity in genocide and rape. As for the charge of direct and public incitement to commit genocide, the criminal liability of the Accused is sought only in respect of Article 6 (1), while Article 6 (3) is referred to for the count of other inhumane acts.

41.4. 3. Summary of Procedural History

6. The Accused was arrested on 5 February 2000 in the United Kingdom, and was transferred on 30 October 2000 to the United Nations Detention Facility in Arusha, Tanzania.[6] The Accused made his initial appearance on 8 November 2000 before Judge William Sekule and pleaded not guilty to all counts in the Indictment. In February 2005, the Chamber denied the Prosecution Motion for leave to amend the Indictment, but indicated that the Prosecution could, if it wished, file a Schedule of Particulars in order to arrange its pleading in a clearer manner provided that no new allegation was added. The Chamber added that if the Prosecution chose to do so, it should include the types of responsibility under Article 6 (1) or 6 (3) upon which it wished to rely.[7] The trial commenced on 28 February 2005 and closed on 23 June 2006. The Prosecution called 24 witnesses in the course of 47 trial days, including an investigator, a socio-linguistic expert, and a handwriting expert. The Defence also called 24 witnesses over 33 trial days, including a handwriting expert and a socio-linguistic expert. In addition, the Chamber admitted the sworn statement of one Defence witness in lieu of her oral testimony.[8] The Accused chose not to testify in his own defence.

41.5. 4. Overview of the Case

7. Immediately after the death of Rwandan President Juvénal Habyarimana on 6 April 1994, thousands of Tutsi civilians in many locations across the country were attacked and killed by Hutu militiamen and soldiers. By contrast, Butare préfecture remained relatively calm until 19 April 1994 when President Théodore Sindikubwabo visited the town to attend the investiture of a new préfet. It is alleged that during his speech, the President incited the public to join in the massacres. Thereafter, large numbers of Tutsi civilians residing in Butare, as well as refugees from other parts of Rwanda, were massacred by soldiers working in collaboration with members of the Hutu Interahamwe militia.

8. The Prosecution alleges in the Indictment that the Accused, by virtue of the fact that he became the Interim Commander of the École des sous-officiers (ESO) Camp and was the most senior military officer in Butare préfecture from 7 April 1994, was responsible for the activities of all the military personnel in the area. The Prosecution further alleges that instead of protecting the public, soldiers under the Accused's command committed various serious violations of international humanitarian law. These allegations form the basis of the charges preferred against the Accused in the Indictment.

9. The Defence, on its part, maintains that the Accused was never formally appointed to any position of authority over the military personnel either at the ESO or in Butare préfecture and therefore does not bear superior responsibility for the actions of the soldiers. The Defence also argues that there is no evidence that the Accused either directly participated in, or ordered the commission of, any of the crimes charged in the Indictment.

41.6. 5. Admissibility and Assessment of Evidence

10. The Rules give the Trial Chamber discretion to admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value.[9] According to the Appeals Chamber, in determining admissibility, the Trial Chamber need only consider that evidence is relevant and displays sufficient indicia of reliability. The question of probative value should be determined at the end of the trial.[10] In admitting and assessing evidence, the Chamber is not bound to follow national rules of evidence, and shall apply rules of evidence which best favour a fair determination of the matter.

11. In general, the Chamber can make a finding of fact based on the evidence of a single witness if it finds such evidence relevant and credible.[11] It follows that the Chamber does not necessarily require evidence to be corroborated in order to make a finding of fact on it. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber has held that corroboration is not a rule of customary international law and as such shall ordinarily not be required by Trial Chambers.[12] With respect to sexual offences, Rule 96 (i) specifically provides that the Trial Chamber shall not require corroboration of the evidence of a victim of sexual violence.

12. The Chamber's discretion to admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value also implies that while direct evidence is to be preferred, hearsay evidence is not per se inadmissible before the Trial Chamber. However, in certain circumstances, there may be good reason for the Trial Chamber to consider whether hearsay evidence is supported by other credible and reliable evidence adduced by the Prosecution in order to support a finding of fact beyond reasonable doubt.

13. The evidence of accomplices or of detained witnesses is similarly not inadmissible before the Trial Chamber. However, the Trial Chamber will, when necessary, approach such evidence with caution in order to ensure a fair trial and avoid prejudice to the Accused.

14. In determining witness credibility, the Trial Chamber has discretion to assess inconsistencies between a witness's pre-trial statements and his evidence in court and to determine the appropriate weight to be attached to such inconsistencies. The mere fact that inconsistencies exist does not mean that the witness completely lacks credibility.[13] Moreover, the Chamber notes that many of the witnesses who appeared before it had themselves suffered, or were witnesses to, untold physical and psychological suffering during the 1994 events in Rwanda. In many cases, giving evidence before the Tribunal entailed reliving these horrific experiences thereby provoking strong psychological and emotional reactions. This situation may impair the ability of such witnesses to clearly articulate their stories or to present them in a full and coherent manner. When the effect of trauma is considered alongside the lapse of time from 1994 to the present the Chamber believes that the mere fact that inconsistencies exist in a witness's story does not mean that the witness is not credible. Such inconsistencies go to the weight of the evidence rather than the credibility of the witness.

41.6.1.1.1. Witness Protection Issues

15. The Chamber has issued witness protection orders in respect of several Prosecution and Defence witnesses, and heard the evidence of several witnesses in closed session. In analysing such evidence, the Chamber was mindful of the need to avoid revealing the identity of protected or otherwise vulnerable witnesses to the press or members of the public. Therefore, in presenting such evidence in this Judgement, the Chamber chose language which in its view, struck a balance between such witness protection concerns and the need to fully convey its reasoning.

41.6.1.1.2. Judicial Notice

16. The Appeals Chamber has held that the following are all facts of common knowledge, not subject to reasonable dispute and therefore qualify for judicial notice under Rule 94 (A): genocide took place in Rwanda between 6 April and 17 July 1994; there were widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification during the said period; there was a non-international armed conflict in Rwanda; and the Tutsi, Hutu, and Twa existed as ethnic groups in Rwanda in 1994.[14] The Chamber takes judicial notice of these facts and will therefore disregard any evidence the parties have led to prove or disprove such facts. However, this does not relieve the Prosecution of its burden to lead evidence to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused's conduct and mental state rendered him individually responsible for genocide and crimes against humanity as charged in the Indictment.

41.6.2. Chapter II : Factual Findings

41.7. 1. Preliminary Matters

41.7.1.1.1. General Allegations

17. The Chamber notes that the allegations contained in Paragraphs 3.10, 3.10 (i), 3.11, 3.11 (i), 3.11 (ii), 3.12, 3.12 (i), 3.13, 3.14, and 3.16 do not attribute any specific criminal conduct to the Accused, and the Prosecution has not relied on them to prove any of the charges in the Indictment. The Chamber will therefore not make any factual findings on them.

41.7.1.1.2. Paragraphs of the Indictment not relied upon by the Prosecution

18. The Chamber also recalls that during its Closing Argument on 22 June 2006, the Prosecution indicated that it was not relying on the allegations contained in Paragraphs 3.37, 3.38, 3.39, 3.42, 3.43, 3.44, 3.49, 3.50, and 3.51 because it did not lead any evidence to support them.[15] Accordingly, the Chamber will not make factual findings on the said paragraphs and they are hereby dismissed.

41.7.1.1.3. Specificity of the Indictment

19. In its Closing Brief, the Defence argues that the Indictment alleges very few specific acts committed by the Accused and that based on the specific factual allegations in the Indictment, Muvunyi could not determine what acts he allegedly committed so as to mount an effective defence. It is argued that most references to Muvunyi contained in the Indictment are general in nature, and do not specify the particular criminal conduct he is accused of.[16]

20. The Defence further argues that the Indictment fails to allege any specific form of liability pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute. It submits that the Prosecution must plead a specific form of liability under Article 6 (1) and the failure to do so results in ambiguity and a defective indictment.

[16] Defence Closing Brief, 19 June 2006, paras. 32-33.

While conceding that such a defect can in certain circumstances be cured through the Pre-Trial Brief, whether the Prosecution has effected such a cure must be considered in light of the Accused's right to a fair trial, including his entitlement to adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence.[17]

21. Concerning genocide, the Defence argues that the Indictment does not charge the Accused with actual participation in the crime of genocide in a specific manner and urges the Chamber to limit its consideration to personal participation in genocide.[18] The Defence also maintains that none of the allegations in the Indictment is made with sufficient specificity to support a conviction of the Accused for complicity in genocide.[19] Furthermore, the Defence submits that the Indictment fails to plead Article 6 (3) responsibility with sufficient specificity to support a conviction.[20]

22. The Chamber notes that generally, the Defence must raise objections to the form of the Indictment at the pre-trial stage, and interpose a timely objection to a defective pleading when the evidence is introduced at trial.[21] In any case, the Chamber will consider the Defence submission that the Prosecution failed to specifically plead the forms of participation under Article 6 (1). In the Chamber's view, while it is desirable that forms of participation under Article 6 (1) be specifically pleaded in the Indictment, there is no rule of law requiring such a form of pleading except where the Prosecution alleges joint criminal enterprise.[22] In Semanza, the Appeals Chamber referred to the Prosecutor's long established practice of merely quoting the provisions of Article 6 (1) and added that it would be "advisable" to plead the specific form of 6 (1) responsibility in relation to each individual count of the indictment. However, the Appeals Chamber did not state that this was a mandatory requirement.[23] The majority in Gacumbitsi indicated that in determining whether the form of participation has been adequately pleaded so as to give the accused clear and timely notice, the indictment must been considered as a whole.[24] Having considered the totality of the allegations in the Indictment the Chamber is satisfied that the Accused was put on notice that the Prosecution intended to prove that he was individually responsible for either ordering or aiding and abetting the commission of genocide or crimes against humanity.

23. With respect to the form of pleading responsibility under Article 6 (3), this Chamber is satisfied that the Indictment adequately sets out (a) that the Accused is the superior of sufficiently identified subordinates over whom he had effective control in the sense of the material ability to prevent or punish their criminal conduct; (b) that the said subordinates engaged in specific acts of criminal behaviour; (c) that the accused knew or had reason to know that the crimes were about to be committed or had been committed and failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators.[25]

41.7.1.1.4. Notice

24. An accused has the right "[t]o be informed promptly and in detail … of the nature and cause of the charges against him" according to Article 20 (4) (a) of the Statute. According to the Appeals Chamber, when considered in light of Rule 47 (C) of the Rules, this provision translates into a prosecutorial obligation "to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the indictment, but not the evidence by which such material facts are to be proven."[26] It also implies that the Prosecution must know its case before going to trial and to plead all the material facts in the Indictment with as much specificity as possible.[27]

25. The Chamber notes the Prosecution submission made during closing arguments that even though it had not specifically pleaded the killing of Karegeya in the Indictment, its timely disclosure of Witness YAA's unredacted statement, as well as the summary of this witness's testimony contained in the Pre-Trial Brief, provided adequate notice to the Defence so as to justify the admission of testimony on this event. Relying on the Appeals Chamber judgement in Ntakirutimana, the Prosecution argues that the Defence has not suffered any prejudice from the admission of this evidence.[28] The Chamber has examined the Pre-Trial Brief and the statement of Witness YAA and is satisfied that the Defence was given timely, clear and consistent notice of the material fact relating to the killing of Karegeya.[29]

26. The Chamber also notes that the attack on Tutsi refugees at Mukura forest is not specifically mentioned in the Indictment. However, the list of massacre sites provided in Paragraph 3.40 is not exhaustive, but merely a set of examples of such venues. Having considered the Indictment as a whole and subsequent communications made to the Defence by the Prosecution, the Chamber is satisfied that information regarding the attack and the Prosecutor's intent to lead evidence on it were disclosed to the Defence in a timely, consistent and clear manner. The Chamber notes that in the summary of proposed evidence of Witnesses XV and YAK contained in the Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution indicated that both witnesses would testify about the attack on refugees at Mukura forest by ESO soldiers and Interahamwe.[30] Similarly both witnesses referred to this attack in their pre-trial statements which, pursuant to the Chamber's order, were disclosed to the Defence at least 21 days prior to each witness testimony. Therefore, the Chamber concludes that the Accused's ability to defend himself will not be prejudiced if evidence relating to the Mukura forest attack is taken into account.[31]

27. In its Closing Brief, the Defence raised several objections, claiming it was not provided with proper notice on some of the evidence that the Prosecution was allowed to lead. The Defence requests that all such evidence be excluded in order to avoid prejudice to the Accused. The Chamber recalls that during the course of trial, the Defence objected to the evidence of several witnesses on the ground that it was not given adequate notice. These issues were considered and ruled upon by the Chamber either orally or in writing.[32] Consequently, in the absence of a showing of exceptional circumstances, the Chamber will not reconsider those issues.

28. The Defence urges the Chamber not to take the evidence of Witness QX into account. It submits that the summary of Prosecution Witness QX's testimony contained in the Pre-Trial Brief was barely intelligible and there was no indication that this witness would say anything adverse to the Accused. In the end, the Defence submits that it was not given adequate notice of Witness QX's deposition testimony and therefore did not have adequate time to prepare a defence to this testimony.[33] The Chamber recalls that during trial, the Defence brought a motion to exclude the deposition testimony of Witness QX on the ground that it had insufficient opportunity to mount an effective defence and for lack of competent counsel at the deposition hearing. The Chamber views the current submission as an attempt to reargue a matter already decided by the Chamber. In any case, the Chamber considers that the Accused was represented at the deposition hearing by Duty Counsel and has had the benefit of counsel's assistance throughout the proceedings before the current Chamber. Since the deposition hearing was held in December 2003, the Defence has had adequate opportunity to consider Witness QX's testimony, to carry out further investigations and cross-examine Prosecution witnesses with a view to challenging his evidence, and indeed to call defence evidence to contradict, or impugn the credibility and reliability of Witness QX's testimony. It is the Chamber's view that since the Defence failed to take advantage of those opportunities, it cannot argue at this stage that Witness QX's testimony should not be taken into account.

29. The Defence also objected to the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses YAO and YAN on the ground that these witnesses were called to support the counts of genocide or complicity in genocide, and that the Accused never had notice of, and therefore could not prepare a defence to, the witnesses' evidence relating to the charge of other inhumane acts.[34] The Chamber has closely examined the evidential summary of both witnesses contained in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief as well as their pre-trial statements, and is satisfied that both of them clearly refer to acts of beating that could provide material in support of the charge of other inhumane acts. The Defence argument on lack of notice is therefore untenable.

41.9. 2. Tharcisse Muvunyi

30. Tharcisse Muvunyi, a Rwandan citizen, was born on 19 August 1953 in Mukarange commune, Byumba préfecture. He served in the Rwandan Army and as of 1 March 1994, and was Lieutenant-Colonel stationed at ESO.[35]

41.10. 3. The Issue of ESO Commander

31. Paragraphs 2.2 and 2.3 read:

> 2.2 Throughout the events referred to in this Indictment until he left Rwanda, Tharcisse Muvunyi held the office of i. He was appointed to this position on the 7th of April 1994 after his superior officer, Colonel Marcel Gatsinzi, was appointed Acting Chief of Staff of the Rwandan army.
> 2.3 In his capacity as Commander of ESO, the Accused had under his command the officers and soldiers of the school. He exercised authority and control over the gendarmerie, Ngoma Camp, as well as all the military operations in Butare préfecture.

41.10.1.2. 3.2. Evidence

41.10.1.2.1. Prosecution Witness KAL

32. Prosecution Witness KAL, a Tutsi man, served in the Rwandan Army from 1991 to 1994.[36] When he joined the Army in 1991, he was sent for a six-month training course at the ESO in Butare. At that time, Colonel Marcel Gatsinzi was Commander of ESO.[37]

[37] T. 5 March 2005, pp. 5, 7 (I.C.S.).

33. On 6 April 1994, Witness KAL was still a student at MECATR, a school for army mechanics and transmission, and lived at the Kanombe Military Camp in Kigali. According to his evidence, that evening, he and his fellow students were sent to guard the MECATR school premises. When Witness KAL returned to ESO between 14 and 20 April 1994,[38] the Camp Commander was Colonel Tharcisse Muvunyi, who remained in that position until the time the witness left ESO for Gikongoro in June 1994.[39] During this period, the Accused gave orders which the witness had to carry out, and the witness saw Muvunyi address other people at two meetings held at the Accused's house. However, Witness KAL said he never spoke to the Accused directly because, as he put it, a mere soldier could not easily speak with a Commander.[40]

34. KAL testified that after his appointment as Chief of Staff, Colonel Gatsinzi came back to ESO on short visits "from time to time" between April and June 1994 during which the Colonel's helicopter would land inside the ESO Camp and would then leave again. After Gatsinzi was replaced as Chief of Staff, he returned to Butare, but not as ESO Commander. The witness believed it was common knowledge that Gatsinzi was appointed to negotiate an end to the war between the Rwandan Government and the RPF.[41]

41.10.1.2.2. Prosecution Witness YAA

35. Prosecution Witness YAA, a soldier in the Rwandan Army, was based at ESO between April and June 1994 but was posted to various locations during that period. He testified that on 7 or 8 April 1994, Colonel Marcel Gatsinzi, then Commander of ESO, was appointed as interim Chief of Staff of the Rwandan Army and he moved to Kigali.[42] According to YAA, Colonel Tharcisse Muvunyi took over command at ESO on 8 or 9 April even though the soldiers did not receive any information that Gatsinzi had been relieved of this position. YAA said that on 12 or 13 April 1994, he was deployed to the battlefront in Kigali but returned to ESO on 16 May and stayed there until 8 June 1994, when he left for Gikongoro and then Cyangugu.[43] During his stay at ESO, Witness YAA saw Muvunyi almost every day, knew the latter's office within the ESO Camp and saw him giving orders to the soldiers. According to the witness, Muvunyi was ESO Commander between 16 May and 8 June 1994.[44]

36. According to YAA's testimony, everyone inside the ESO Camp was under Muvunyi's orders.[45] He added, however, that Colonel Munyengango was also present at ESO during the events in question, but he did not assume command due to his health condition.[46]

Prosecution Witness YAP

37. In 1994, Witness YAP said he worked at the Butare University Hospital and lived not far from ESO.[47] YAP testified that he never met Muvunyi, but knew Muvunyi was the Commander of ESO because this was a matter of public knowledge. He knew soldiers who worked under Muvunyi's command such as Captain Nizeyimana and Second-Lieutenant Bizimana; these soldiers told him Muvunyi was their commander. Witness YAP thought that Muvunyi was Commander of ESO both before and after the death of President Habyarimana.[48] During cross-examination, he stated that he did not believe Marcel Gatsinzi was the Commander of ESO before the death of President Habyarimana, even though he had heard on the radio that Gatsinzi stated he was Commander of ESO during a Gacaca court session.[49]

41.10.1.2.3. Prosecution Witness XV

38. Witness XV said that he worked at the Butare University Hospital in 1994.[50] He testified that around 15 or 16 April 1994, he received a letter signed by the Director of the Butare University Hospital and by "Commander Muvunyi" instructing him to return to work at the Hospital.[51] Sometime in May 1994, Muvunyi visited the Hospital and a colleague of witness XV told him that "that person was Muvunyi, and that he was the commander of the soldiers who were both within the hospital and those who were outside …".[52]

41.10.1.2.4. Prosecution Witness CCQ

39. Witness CCQ was born in Butare and said that he knew the authorities there quite well. He testified that Marcel Gatsinzi was Commander of ESO until the war started in April 1994, but that the Accused was also present at that time. After the war started, he used to see Muvunyi and Munyengango who were living at ESO and recalled that Muvunyi replaced Gatsinzi as Commander of ESO following the death of President Habyarimana, and specifically, as of 20 April.[53]

41.10.1.2.5. Prosecution Witness NN

40. Witness NN was a non-commissioned officer in the Rwandan Army from April to June 1994. He testified that Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi replaced Colonel Gatsinzi as Commander of ESO. He said he was present at ESO when the Accused arrived in March 1994 but could not remember whether Muvunyi or Munyengango was Colonel Gatsinzi's deputy. NN further testified that even though Augustin Bizimungu replaced Colonel Gatsinzi as Chief of Staff, Gatsinzi did not resume his duties as Commander of ESO until late May 1994 and the Accused remained in charge of ESO until that time. He confirmed that Colonel Munyengango was present at ESO and was sick. He added that Colonel Mugemanyi was also present at ESO but only arrived after 16 April 1994.[54]

Defence Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana

41. Defence Witness General Augustin Ndindiliyimana was the Chief of Staff of the Gendarmerie nationale at the time of the events in 1994.[55] He testified that Colonel Marcel Gatsinzi was Commander of ESO on 6 April 1994.[56] On 7 April, Gatsinzi was appointed Interim Chief of Staff of the Rwandan Army and moved to Kigali to take up his new position. On 17 April 1994, Gatsinzi was replaced as Chief of Staff by Colonel (later General) Augustin Bizimungu. According to Augustin Ndindiliyimana, during the period when Gatsinzi served as Interim Chief of Staff, Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi acted as de facto Commander of ESO.[57] But after 17 April, Gatsinzi returned to ESO and "took over his unit, his school again" and remained in that position until June 1994 when the witness left Rwanda.[58] Augustin Ndindiliyimana said he never saw any communiqué placing Muvunyi in command of ESO.[59]

41.10.1.2.6. Defence Witness MO83

42. Defence Witness MO83 served in the Rwandan Army from 1985 to 1994 and was assigned to ESO at various times between 1989 and 1993. He testified that he was not at ESO in 1994 but understood that in April 1994, the Commander of ESO was Colonel Gatsinzi. MO83's evidence was that Gatsinzi remained Commander until the time Butare town was taken over by the RPF even though he did not state the date this took place.[60] Gatsinzi remained Commander of ESO throughout this period even though he would leave ESO to go for negotiations with the RPF and all other commanders at ESO were there only in an acting capacity.[61] The witness said he never saw a communiqué appointing Muvunyi as ESO Commander.[62]

41.10.1.2.7. Defence Witness MO31

43. Witness MO31 served in the Rwandan Army from 1976 to 1994 and has known Muvunyi since 1982.[63] From mid-May to mid-June 1994, he held a senior military position in Butare préfecture.[64]

44. According to the witness, there was no commander at ESO when he arrived in Butare in May 1994.[65] Later in his testimony, the witness stated that General Marcel Gatsinzi was the Commander of ESO from 17 April to 5 July 1994.[66] He indicated, however, that during the period he served in Butare, he was never required to report to the ESO Commander, and never carried out joint operations with the other military camps in the area.[67]

45. Witness MO31 said that after serving in Butare for about one month, he received a telegram from the Ministry of Defence relieving him of his duties. On the same day, Muvunyi also received a telegram transferring him from his duties at ESO. Witness MO31 testified that sometime in June 1994, a helicopter landed at the ESO Camp for a short while and then left. He therefore went to Muvunyi and asked him who was on board the helicopter. Muvunyi responded that it was the Minister of Defence and that he had taken the opportunity to ask the Minister why he was being transferred.[68] Muvunyi added that according to the Minister, the reason for his transfer was that he and one Ndayambaje no longer enjoyed the confidence of the government and that they were suspected of being accomplices of the RPF. Further, Muvunyi told him it was the government's view that if the RPF were to enter Butare, Muvunyi and Ndayambaje would not be able to defend the town.[69]

41.10.1.2.8. Defence Witness MO30

46. Witness MO30 testified that he and his family relocated from Kigali to Butare in 1992, and remained there until about 30 June 1994 when he left for Gikongoro.[70] During his stay in Butare, he became familiar with people in key positions in government, society, and business in the city. On 28 April 1994, Witness MO30 and one of his colleagues at work went to see Muvunyi at ESO to request fuel for their factory because it was said that the Ministry of Defence was managing the distribution of fuel supplies. Upon arrival, his colleague spoke to Muvunyi who responded that "the boss, Marcel Gatsinzi" was not there, that he had gone to Kigali, and that therefore he could not meet their needs.[71]

41.10.1.2.9. Defence Witness MO46

47. Defence Witness MO46 served in the Rwandan Army from 1971 to 1994 and has known Muvunyi for a very long time.[72] In April 1994, MO46 worked at the Ministry of Defence. On or about 20 April 1994, he was sent on an official mission to find out what was happening in Butare. Upon his arrival at ESO, he expected to meet with Colonel Marcel Gatsinzi who, according to the witness, was the Commander of the ESO Camp. However, because Gatsinzi was not available, he met with Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi who was an S-4 officer in charge of logistics. Witness MO46 told Muvunyi he was sent from the Ministry of Defence "because it was felt that the killings had already reached Butare", and there was a need to do something about the massacres. Muvunyi replied that he was not in a position to do anything about the killings because it was being said that Nizeyimana was the commander, and advised that MO46 should speak to Nizeyimana and Hategekimana if he wanted to put an end to the massacres.[73] Witness MO46 told the Chamber that when he spoke with Muvunyi, he knew quite well that Marcel Gatsinzi, and not Muvunyi, was the Commander of ESO Camp.[74] He explained further that following Gatsinzi's appointment as Interim Chief of Staff on 7 April, no one was appointed to the position of Commander or Interim Commander of ESO Camp.[75] He said Gatsinzi continued to direct the affairs of ESO at the same time that he served as Army Chief of Staff ad interim and that this situation remained until the time when the witness left his position at the Defence Ministry on 13 May 1994.[76] Witness MO46 explained that where a commander was appointed to another acting position, he continued to exercise the duties of his command until he was dismissed or replaced by someone else. He told the Chamber that due to his position at the Ministry of Defence he would have known if a commander or an interim commander had been appointed to replace Gatsinzi at ESO.[77]

41.10.1.2.10. Defence Witness MO15

48. Witness MO15 worked as an instructor at ESO at the time of the 1994 events.[78] He said that when he arrived in 1992, Colonel Marcel Gatsinzi commanded ESO and remained in that position until 7 April 1994 when he was appointed Interim Chief of Staff of the Rwandan Army. Witness MO15 added that Gatsinzi was not replaced as ESO Commander.[79] When asked if ESO had a Deputy Commander, he initially said ESO did not have a Deputy Commander, but later indicated that one Lieutenant-Colonel Baramyeretse "replaced Gatsinzi in his absence".[80] Muvunyi arrived at ESO in March 1994 and was designated the S-1/S-4 officer. Captain Idelphonse Nizeyimana was the S-2/S-3 officer responsible for training and operations.[81]

41.10.1.2.11. Defence Witness MO23

49. Witness MO23, who was a student at the ESO in 1994, testified that when General Bizimungu was appointed Chief of Staff, Colonel Gatsinzi came to ESO after three or four days and continued to function as the Commander. The witness stated that whenever he was on guard at the ESO entrance, he saw Gatsinzi coming almost every day and going into his office.[82]

41.10.1.3. 3.3. Deliberations

50. The Indictment asserts that from 7 April 1994, up to the time he left Rwanda, Tharcisse Muvunyi held the Office of Commander of ESO, a position he was appointed to after his superior officer, Marcel Gatsinzi, was appointed Acting Chief of Staff of the Rwandan Army. The Indictment further alleges that as ESO Commander, Muvunyi was the most senior among the officers and men at ESO and exercised authority over the Ngoma Camp and military operations in Butare. In support of the allegations contained in the Indictment that Muvunyi was the Acting Commander of ESO camp from 7 April 1994, the Prosecution has relied on the evidence of Witnesses KAL, YAA and NN, all of whom were soldiers attached to ESO at various times between April and June 1994. All three witnesses testified that Muvunyi assumed command of ESO after Marcel Gatsinzi's appointment as Interim Chief of Staff sometime between 7 and 9 April 1994. Although no evidence was led pointing to a formal instrument appointing the Accused to this position, his assumption of the position of ESO Commander was based on the provisions of Law N°23/1986 on the Establishment and the Organisation of ESO, which provides that in the absence of the Commander, the Deputy Commander shall assume the former's responsibilities.[83] Witnesses KAL, YAA, and NN, corroborated one another's testimony that Muvunyi, throughout the period in question, was giving orders to ESO soldiers. Although Colonel Munyengango was also present at ESO, the Chamber believes he was only there for medical reasons. The testimony of Witnesses KAL, YAA and NN that Muvunyi became ESO Commander after Gatsinzi's appointment as Interim Chief of Staff is supported by Witnesses YAP and XV, both of whom were civilians living in Butare during April 1994. The evidence of Witness XV that Muvunyi co-signed a letter instructing him to return to work lends further support to the allegation that Muvunyi was ESO Commander in April and May 1994.

51. The Defence witnesses gave various accounts as to who was in command of ESO after Gatsinzi was appointed Interim Chief of Staff of the Rwandan Army. In assessing their evidence the Chamber will give more weight to the testimony of witnesses who were present at ESO in the crucial months of April to June 1994. In this respect, the Chamber notes that Witness MO83 left ESO in 1993. Defence Witness MO31 contradicted himself when he testified that Gatsinzi was ESO Commander from 17 April to 5 July, but at the same time, said that when he arrived in Butare in May 1994, there was no ESO Commander; subsequently he explained that Muvunyi received a telegram sometime around the middle of June 1994 relieving him of his post at ESO. Indeed the overall tenor of MO31's testimony is consistent with an inference that Muvunyi was the most senior military officer at ESO. It is the Chamber's view that MO31's account that Muvunyi was at ESO until the middle of June 1994, is more consistent with the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses KAL and YAA who worked at ESO, and therefore had direct knowledge of day-to-day events at that Camp. Furthermore, the evidence of Witness MO46 that on 20 April 1994 he visited the ESO Camp as a delegate of the Ministry of Defence and met with Muvunyi instead of Gatsinzi, provides additional reason to believe that Muvunyi acted as ESO Commander in the absence of Gatsinzi. Defence Witnesses MO36 and MO30 testified that they attended several security committee meetings at the Office of the préfet, and that

[82] T. 16 March 2006, pp. 19-20 (I.C.S.).
[83] Law N°23/1986, admitted as Exhibit D.49 on 13 March 2006. Article 8 provides: "[Le Commandant en second] est chargé de la coordination et de l'enseignement et remplace le Commandant de l'École en cas d'absence ou d'empêchement",

Muvunyi represented ESO at these meetings.[84] Taken in its totality, this evidence supports the conclusion that Muvunyi exercised the powers of the office of ESO Commander on the basis of law, and had effective control over the actions of ESO soldiers even though he might not have been formally appointed as such. As stated by the Appeals Chamber in the Čelebiči Judgement, the absence of a formal appointment is not fatal to a finding of criminal responsibility, provided it can be shown that the superior exercised effective control over the actions of his subordinates.[85] For this purpose, effective control reflects the superior's material ability to prevent or punish the commission of offences by his subordinates and it could arise from both a de jure and a de facto position of authority. Where de jure authority is proved, a court may presume the existence of effective control on a prima facie basis. Such a presumption can, however, be rebutted by showing that the superior had ceased to possess the necessary powers of control over subordinates who actually committed the crimes.[86]

52. The Chamber must also determine the period for which Muvunyi served as ESO Commander. Witnesses KAL and YAA testified that Muvunyi acted as ESO Commander from 7 April to June 1994. Prosecution Witness NN's testimony differs slightly on the temporal duration of Muvunyi's command. He told the Chamber that in late May 1994, Gatsinzi returned to ESO as Commander. Defence Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana testified that on 4 May 1994, in his capacity as Chief of Staff of the Gendarmerie nationale, he visited Butare and held a meeting with military commanders in the area. He told the Chamber that Muvunyi attended the said meeting as the representative of ESO.[87]

53. The Defence has challenged the credibility of Prosecution Witnesses KAL, YAA, and NN.[88] With respect to Witnesses KAL and YAA, the Defence suggests that both of them were military deserters who, in April 1994, had been posted to the war front in Kigali, but had returned to the ESO Camp in Butare without instruction or approval. The Defence further disputes that Witness YAA returned to ESO on 16 May 1994, and indicated that he signed at least three statements in which he said he returned to ESO in late May. For these reasons, the Defence argues that the evidence of KAL and YAA should not be believed. The Chamber disagrees.

54. In the Chamber's view, the mere fact that Witnesses KAL and YAA left their positions at the battlefront in Kigali to return to Butare is not sufficient to dispute the veracity of their testimony relating to events that they witnessed during the course of their stay at ESO. The Chamber has carefully considered the specific circumstances surrounding the departure of Witnesses KAL and YAA from Kigali to ESO in Butare, alongside the general context of the ethnic-based killings that were then being perpetrated in Rwanda. In the Chamber's view, the fact of their desertion, does not per se affect the credibility and reliability of the evidence they gave about the issue of ESO Commander during the months of April and May 1994.

55. On the issue of the discrepancy in the date that Witness YAA might have returned to ESO from Kigali, the Chamber notes that in his statement dated 18 and 22 September 2000, Witness YAA indicated on three separate occasions that he returned to Butare in late May.[89] In his evidence before the Chamber, he stated that he returned to ESO on 16 May 1994.[90] The Chamber is of the view that this is a minor discrepancy that does not affect YAA's credibility. Moreover, the Chamber notes that when Witness YAA was confronted with this discrepancy during cross-examination, he explained that when he noticed it back in 2000, he brought it to the attention of one of the Prosecution investigators who promised to change it. He maintained that he told the investigators he returned to Butare at the middle of May 1994, not in late May. The Chamber accepts this as a sufficient explanation of the discrepancy between Witness YAA's evidence and his pre-trial Statement.

56. With respect to Witness NN, the Defence submits that his evidence should not be relied upon because he was paid US$ 5,000.00 before he agreed to testify for the Prosecution, and his evidence is therefore tainted. The Chamber has carefully considered the Defence submission, the evidence of Witness NN and the circumstances surrounding the payment of US$ 5,000.00 to him by the Office of the Prosecutor. The Chamber is satisfied that the sum was paid to the witness as compensation for material and financial loss he suffered as a result of his quick relocation from Rwanda to another State, leaving behind his house and business. The Chamber believes that Witness NN was compelled to flee Rwanda because of threats he and his family received from people who did note like the fact that he was in contact with investigators of the Office of the Prosecutor and that he might be called to testify before the Tribunal. The Chamber is further satisfied that this payment, made on 7 May 2005,[91] did not colour or change Witness NN's testimony given on 18, 19 and 20 July 2005. The Chamber's finding in this respect is supported by the fact that the witness's testimony before the Chamber with respect to Muvunyi's position as ESO Commander, is generally consistent with his pre-trial statement given to Prosecution investigators on 16 July 1998, seven years before he took the witness stand or received the said compensation.[92]

57. In the Chamber's opinion, even if Muvunyi was never formally appointed ESO Commander, this does not detract from the fact that he effectively remained the most senior officer and commander on the ground with power and authority to make day-to-day operational decisions at ESO. Therefore, having considered the totality of the evidence adduced by the Prosecution and the Defence, the Chamber makes the following findings of fact:

- On 6 April 1994, Colonel Marcel Gatsinzi was the Commander of ESO and Tharcisse Muvunyi was the second most senior officer;
- On 7 April 1994, Gatsinzi was appointed Interim Chief of Staff of the Rwandan Army, a position he held until 17 April 1994;
- While he might have returned to Butare on a few occasions, Gatsinzi did not return to the position of ESO Commander;
- Colonel Tharcisse Muvunyi, as the second most senior officer at ESO, assumed the position of ESO Commander after his superior officer, Marcel Gatsinzi, was appointed Interim Chief of Staff on 7 April 1994; although there was no formal instrument or other official communication appointing him as such, his assumption of the post of ESO Commander was based, inter alia, on the provisions of Law N°23/1986 on the Establishment and Organization of ESO, which provides that in the absence of the Commander, the Deputy Commander shall assume his responsibilities.
- Muvunyi held this position until mid-June 1994, and during this period he had effective control over the actions of ESO soldiers.

41.11. 4. Muvunyi's Responsibility for Security in Butare and Gikongoro préfectures

41.11.1.1. 4.1. Indictment

Attachment 'C' to the Motion is a receipt signed by Witness NN on 7 May 2005, confirming receipt of the sum of US$ 5,000.00 from two investigators of the Office of the Prosecutor. Attachment 'A' is an affidavit signed by the Prosecutor's Chief Investigator detailing his Office's dealings with Witness NN and the circumstances surrounding the payment of the above sum.

58. Paragraphs 3.21 and 3.22 of the Indictment read:

> 3.21 In Butare préfecture, the Commander of the ESO was the most senior military officer responsible for security operations in Butare and Gikongoro préfectures. He carries out the orders of the military high command as directed from the Army Chief of Staff. In instances where there was a breach of security, the préfet could summon the assistance of both the gendarmerie and the army to restore order.
> 3.22 In his capacity as the highest military authority in the Préfecture Tharcisse Muvunyi was part of the military presence to ensure security of the civilians in the Préfecture and part of his duties entailed: liaising with the préfet on matters of security; being part of the security council of the préfet; ensuring that the préfet enjoys the enabling environment to carry out his functions as the most senior civilian government representative; assisting the population in times of danger and carrying out all other functions necessary for the smooth running of the training school for soldiers.

41.11.1.2.1. Prosecution Witness KAL

59. Witness KAL explained that, in addition to the ESO, there were two other military camps in Butare during the course of the events between April and July 1994, namely the Ngoma Military Camp, and the Tumba gendarmerie Camp.[93] The Ngoma Camp was under the command of Lieutenant Hategekimana, while one Captain Rusigariye commanded the Tumba gendarmerie Camp. These individual camp commanders were under the overall command of the Sector Commander, who was the Commander of ESO. According to Witness KAL, as ESO Commander, Tharcisse Muvunyi was the hierarchical superior of the commanders of the other two military camps in Butare and had authority over the entire Butare and Gikongoro préfectures.[94] Colonel Muvunyi was not replaced as Camp Commander during the war.[95]

60. During examination-in-chief, KAL repeatedly identified the Accused as the "Sector Commander", a position which corresponded with ESO Commander and was hierarchically superior to the other commanders in Butare and Gikongoro; the Ngoma Camp and Tumba Camp commanders both reported to this Sector Commander.[96] When asked whether the term "commandant de place" was the same as "Area Commander", Witness KAL replied: "We used to say commandant de place instead of Area Commander."[97] During cross-examination, Defence Counsel asked Witness KAL to explain the distinction between "sector commanding officer" and "area commanding officer". In response the witness stated that: "Until July 1994, the Sector Commander was also called the Commandant ops, the ops Commander. Ops is short for operations. So this was the places where there was fighting. … The ops commander was the Sector Commander, and I told you that the ops commander was the superior of the Area Commander."[98]

Ngoma Military Camp was commanded by Lieutenant Hategekimana, and I also said that the Tumba Camp was commanded by Captain Rusigariye, but the last two commanders, that is, the Commander of Tumba Camp and the commander of Ngoma Military Camp, were under the command of the ESO Commander. That was the structure."

41.11.1.2.2. Prosecution Witness YAA

61. Witness YAA testified that ESO was under the authority of a Commander who was assisted by four immediate officers. These officers were in charge of administration and personnel (S-1), intelligence (S-2), training and operations (S-3), and logistics (S-4).[99] Apart from ESO, there were two other military camps in Butare, namely, Ngoma Camp, and the gendarmerie unit known as the Groupement de Butare located on Tumba Hill. He explained that both of these camps had their respective commanders, but they were also answerable to the ESO Commander who was commandant de place. Witness YAA recalled that in April 1994, the Commander of the Ngoma Camp was Lieutenant Hategekimana, and the Commander of the gendarmerie Camp in Tumba was Major Cyriaque Habyarabatuma.[100] Witness YAA testified that Muvunyi was the Area Commander or commandant de place.[101]

62. He further explained that when reference was made to an "area", it meant the various camps located within one préfecture. The highest-ranking officer of all the camps located within the area automatically became "Area Commander" or commandant de place, and he assumed overall responsibility for coordinating military operations and security in the area including activities of both the Army and the gendarmerie. According to Witness YAA, the Area Commander was appointed by the Chief of Staff and had to approve all reports sent from the area to the Office of the Chief of Staff.[102]

63. With respect to the other functions of the Area Commander, YAA explained that because of his primary responsibility for security in the area, the Area Commander could, for operational reasons, request the intervention of soldiers from other units within his area of authority. The Area Commander's responsibility also extended to the then préfecture of Gikongoro which had one gendarmerie camp. As a result, YAA stated, in his capacity as Area Commander, the ESO Commander had responsibility for military operations not only by soldiers of ESO Camp, but also the Ngoma Military Camp and the gendarmerie Camps on Tumba Hill and at Gikongoro.[103]

64. YAA drew a distinction between "Area Commander" and "Sector Commander". He explained that the concept of Sector Commander was introduced during the war and applied to areas where there were active hostilities. On the other hand, "Area Commanders" existed prior to the war. He said the term "Sector Commander" existed alongside "Area Commander", although he did not know of the existence of a Sector Commander in Butare.[104]

41.11.1.2.3. Prosecution Witness NN

65. Prosecution Witness NN testified that Colonel Marcel Gatsinzi was Commander of ESO in 1994, and, as such, he "was commander of the Butare, Gikongoro military region," which included the Ngoma Company and the Tumba gendarmerie in Butare and the gendarmerie Camp in Gikongoro. He explained that this meant the ESO Commander had higher authority than the commanders of each of these other camps.[105]

66. The witness drew a distinction between the positions of "Area Commander" or "commandant de place" on the one hand, and "Ops, or Operations Commander" on the other. He explained that

[99] T. 8 March 2005, pp. 27, 28 (I.C.S.).
[100] T. 8 March 2005, pp. 34, 35 (I.C.S.).
[101] T. 8 March 2005, p. 34 (I.C.S.).
[102] T. 10 March 2005, p. 9 (I.C.S.).
[103] T. 8 March 2005, p. 36 (I.C.S.). The witness explained as follows: "[the Area Commander] was responsible for security in the province in collaboration with his camp commanders in Butare, and it is he who coordinated all the activities, so much so that the Area Commander could request the intervention of the other soldiers for operations. Thus, his prerogatives extended even to Gikongoro province."
[104] T. 10 March 2006, pp. 9, 10 (I.C.S.).
[105] T. 18 July 2005, p. 12 (I.C.S.).

whereas the position of Ops commander was created when the war broke out in 1990, that of Area Commander existed well before the war. Before the war, the Area Commander dealt with administrative matters but also had military camps under his command and control. However, after the war began, the Area Commander was also given authority to deal with military operations in his area. The witness explained that when the French term "place" was used, it denoted a given space or region where there were military camps controlled or commanded by the Area Commander. These military camps had individual commanders, but those commanders had the Area Commander as their hierarchical superior. Witness NN said that he had never heard of a situation in which the Area Commander was not the highest-ranking officer in the area.[106]

67. Witness NN told the Chamber that the title "Ops Commander" related to activities and command of troops at the battlefront. The Ops Commander had authority over units or battalions that operated in a military region. The battalion commanders came under the authority of the Ops Commander.[107]

41.11.1.2.4. Prosecution Witness YAN

68. Prosecution Witness YAN testified that in mid-May 1994, he was abducted from l'Économat général in Butare town by a group of ESO soldiers under the command of Lieutenant Gakwerere. Thereafter, he was beaten and taken to ESO Camp where he observed Interahamwe and military men, the former armed with clubs, spears and rifles and dressed in kitenge. The witness did not know whether soldiers or Interahamwe had beaten him.[108]

69. YAN also testified that he was later taken to a Brigade, about 400 meters from ESO located just past the Quartier arabe in Butare. At the Brigade, he was held in a room with about fifteen Tutsi from Tumba and elsewhere. YAN saw both soldiers and gendarmes at the Brigade although he did not know who was in charge. The gendarmes wore red berets whereas the soldiers wore black or camouflage berets. During his detention, people were periodically taken away: "the gendarmes would open the rooms and then hand over the victims to the soldiers". Witness YAN also described repeatedly overhearing his guard, a gendarme, answer the phone. He said, "Each time that people were taken out, the gendarmes would say that it was Muvunyi who had given that order to take them away."[109]

70. Finally, Prosecution Witness YAN testified that he was released from the Brigade after someone pleaded with Muvunyi to have him released. This occurred to the disappointment of the gendarmes. He said: "the gendarmes were upset by the fact that I was not taken away as the others. They were wondering why Muvunyi was not giving the order to take me away. So I was subsequently released."

41.11.1.2.5. Prosecution Witness YAO

71. Prosecution Witness YAO testified that she was abducted from the Butare Cathedral by soldiers under the leadership of Lieutenant Gakwerere. She was taken to ESO where she saw Muvunyi, who ordered the soldiers to take her to the Brigade, where she was held for several weeks and beaten by soldiers and gendarmes. Soldiers and gendarmes, YAO explained, could be distinguished on the basis of their uniforms: some had red berets and some had black berets and some had camouflage and others had green uniforms.[110]

72. Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana testified that a commandant de place in the Army was a commander on the spot, an officer appointed by the Army Chief of Staff and given responsibility over a military area. The commandant de place was responsible, among other things, for recruitment, managing the reserve elements, coordinating activities involving the participation of military corps and elements from the various camps in the area, organizing ceremonies during peacetime, and participating in the activities of the préfecture.[111]

73. Ndindiliyimana explained that an Operational Sector Commander was different from the commandant de place because the former was the military commander in a given sector, and was responsible for the defence of the region. According to the witness, the term "Operational Sector" was used to identify combat areas or combat zones. In April 1994, he knew there were military operational sectors in the areas of Gisenyi, Ruhengeri, Rulindo, Mutara, Kigali and possibly Kibungu. He noted that the Butare sector "was not operational, so to speak" and confirmed during cross-examination that he never saw a message indicating that Butare had become an operational military sector.[112] According to Ndindiliyimana, a document presented by the Prosecution indicating that Muvunyi was "Ops Commander" was surely a mistake because, in principle, "one cannot designate oneself operational commander if one is not designated by the Minister responsible."[113]

74. Ndindiliyimana testified that Butare préfecture was divided into three sectors for security purposes, namely: the central area, which was occupied by ESO; the northern sector occupied by the Ngoma Company; and the southern sector controlled by the gendarmerie units from Tumba. The Commander of each sector was responsible for recording and reporting crimes and misconduct within his sector and for taking all necessary action. A member of the armed forces involved in misconduct could be subjected to the penal process by the office of the Public Prosecutor, or be dealt with under military disciplinary procedures. However, these two processes were not mutually exclusive.[114]

75. With respect to the relationship between the different military units in Butare, Augustin Ndindiliyimana told the Chamber that the ESO Commander had two hierarchical superiors as head of a military training school: in terms of courses and academics, he was answerable to the Ministry of Defence; in terms of administration, he was under the General Staff of the Army. The Commander of the Ngoma Camp answered to the Army General Staff headed by the Chief of Staff, and the Commander of the Tumba gendarmerie reported to the Chief of Staff of the Gendarmerie nationale on gendarmerie matters.[115]

41.11.1.2.7. Defence Witness MO83

76. Witness MO83 testified that a commandant de place or Area Commander is usually appointed by the Army High Command on the basis of an order from the Ministry of Defence. The high command would issue a telegram announcing the name of the commandant de place, his rank, his subordinates, the area he would command, and the scope of his authority. It was not automatic for a commandant de place to be the Operations Commander of a given region. He explained that no one could arrogate to himself the functions of an Area Commander, and if this happened, the Army High Command would take disciplinary action. The witness never saw a communiqué appointing Muvunyi as commandant de place for Butare.[116]

41.11.1.2.8. Defence Witness MO31

77. Defence Witness MO31 told the Chamber that the commandant de place or Area Commander was the representative of the Ministry of Defence within the préfecture and that he was responsible for the coordination of activities concerning administration. He played an administrative role and liaised with the préfet. The witness stated that during the period of his stay in Butare from mid-May to mid-June 1994, the commandant de place in Butare was Marcel Gatsinzi.[117]

78. MO31 testified that during the 1994 war there were seven military "operational sectors" in Rwanda, namely: Gisenyi, Ruhengeri, Byumba, Kibungo, Mutara (later replaced by Nyanza), Rulindo, and Kigali city.[118] These sectors were designated by the Army Chief of Staff, and each operational sector was under the command of a Sector Commander, who in turn reported to the Army Chief of Staff. Witness MO31 told the Chamber that during the time he served in another military facility in Butare, he was not aware of any decision or communication designating a military operational sector in that préfecture. He said if such a decision were ever made, the Chief of Staff would have informed him by telegram.[119] Moreover, he indicated that during that period, he was never required to report to the ESO Commander, and never carried out joint operations with the other military camps in the area.[120]

41.11.1.2.9.

41.11.1.2.10. Defence Witness MO46

79. Defence Witness MO46 testified that the post of commandant de place existed during the time of the National Guard, which preceded the establishment of the gendarmerie and the Rwandan National Army.[121] The witness explained that the National Guard was responsible for the maintenance of law and order and fighting the enemy from outside.[122] He explained that commandant de place was a title later used within the Army and was not known outside the Army.[123] He added that the commandant de place was someone who was very important from the time of the coup d'état in 1973 because it was said that at that time the commandant de place was going to replace the préfet.[124]

80. MO46 testified that the commandant de place existed in the By-Law N°13.[125] When the Rwandan Army separated from the gendarmerie, the term commandant de place disappeared with the by-law because after the establishment of the gendarmerie as an entity distinct from the Rwandan Army, there was another article which said that anything different should be abrogated.[126] He explained that the commandant de place would have been a commander of a military camp and would determine who would be on the watch.[127] He explained that had the term commandant de place remained, it would be replaced by "C*ommandant de camp*".[128]

81. Defence Witness MO23 testified that after 6 April 1994, there were three companies of soldiers at ESO: a reserve company, which remained in the camp; a company charged with protecting the camp; and the intervention company which handled security in Butare town.[129] MO23 noted that there was some collaboration between the ESO soldiers and the gendarmes. For example, MO23, who was himself a soldier in the intervention company which manned the roadblocks in Butare town, explained that Inkotanyi identified as such at the roadblocks would be handed over to the judicial department of the gendarmerie.[130] Additionally, the witness stated that there was at least one Military Police unit composed of both soldiers and gendarmes that was created at ESO with the aim of tracking down soldiers who deserted the army.[131]

41.11.1.3. 4.3. Deliberations

82. The Indictment alleges that as Commander of ESO, Muvunyi was the most senior military officer in Butare and was responsible for security operations in Butare and Gikongoro préfectures. The Prosecution further alleges that in carrying out his responsibilities for maintaining security of the civilian population in the two préfectures, the Accused acted in collaboration with the préfet, who was the most senior civilian administrator, as well as other local civil and military authorities. It is the Prosecution's case that Muvunyi became commandant de place and thereby assumed administrative and operational authority over military camps in the entire Butare and Gikongoro préfectures including the Ngoma Military Camp, and the gendarmerie Camp on Tumba Hill. The Prosecution argues that even though the Accused might not have enjoyed de jure authority over Ngoma Military and Tumba gendarmerie Camps, he had effective control over their operations.[132] In its Closing Brief, the Prosecution further argues that in view of his seniority among the officers at ESO on 7 April 1994, Muvunyi "automatically assumed" the position of ESO Commander after his superior officer, Marcel Gatsinzi, was appointed to a new position in Kigali.

83. To support these allegations, the Prosecution relies on the evidence of Witnesses KAL, YAA, and NN. The Prosecution also relies on the evidence of Defence Witnesses Ndindiliyimana, MO83, and MO31 to prove that the position of commandant de place existed in Rwandan military hierarchy during the events of 1994, that it was usually held by the most senior military officer in each préfecture, and that the duties of the position included overall administrative and operational command of the various Army and gendarmerie camps in the préfecture.

84. The Chamber has considered the evidence of Witness KAL that as "Sector Commander" Muvunyi was the hierarchical superior of all other commanders in Butare préfecture. Similarly, the Chamber recalls the evidence of Prosecution Witness YAA that Muvunyi was responsible for overall coordination of military operations in Butare and Gikongoro préfectures. With respect to Prosecution Witness NN, the Chamber recalls that he did not testify that Muvunyi became "Area Commander" but stated that Muvunyi succeeded Gatsinzi as ESO Commander.

85. The Chamber has also considered the evidence of the various Defence Witnesses on the issue of commandant de place. Augustin Ndindiliyimana distinguished between "commandant de place" and "Operational Sector Commander" noting that while the former was primarily an administrative position, the latter had operational responsibilities. The Chamber further notes from Ndindiliyimana's testimony that Butare was not one of the six military operational sectors in existence in Rwanda in 1994 and therefore did not have an "Operational Sector Commander". Particularly worthy of note is his evidence that the Ngoma Camp Commander was answerable directly to the Chief of Staff of the Rwandan Army, and that the Commander of the Tumba gendarmerie Camp answered directly to the Chief of Staff of the Gendarmerie nationale, a position which was held by Ndindiliyimana himself. The ESO Commander had two hierarchical superiors depending upon the issue at hand; for academic matters relating to the training activities of the school, the Commander was answerable to the Ministry of Defence. For operational matters, he answered to the Chief of Staff. It is the Chamber's view that [132] The Prosecutor's Closing Brief, Chapter III, especially paras. 129-132; 160, 161, 189, 190, 193.

Defence Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana gave a coherent and cogent account of the distinction between Area Commander and Operational Sector Commander, and a very clear picture of the chain of command that governed the operations of the various military camps in Butare in 1994.

86. Notwithstanding the caution with which the Chamber must treat the testimony of Witness MO31, who asserted that Gatsinzi maintained his position as ESO Commander after 6 April, the Chamber cannot fail to consider the fact that he corroborates the evidence of Witness Ndindiliyimana with respect to the military structure in Rwanda and the existence of military operational sectors in 1994. In particular, both witnesses agree that Butare was not a military operational sector and therefore did not have a Sector Commander. MO31 also supports the view that the Area Commander fulfilled an administrative, rather than an operational role and reported to the Ministry of Defence. The evidence of Witness MO31 that during the time he served in Butare he never reported to the ESO Commander and was instead answerable to the Chief of Staff of the National Army, is particularly significant in this respect. This evidence supports the account of Witness Ndindiliyimana.

87. The Chamber is satisfied that the evidence of Defence Witnesses MO83 and MO46 on of the position of commandant de place generally corroborates that given by Defence Witnesses Ndindiliyimana and MO31. The Chamber has considered By-Law N°13, and notes that while it provided for the position of commandant de place, it governed the operations of the Rwandan National Guard, which was later disbanded.[133] However, it remains unclear to the Chamber whether the By-Law or any of its provisions remained in force in 1994.

88. The Chamber recalls that during the cross-examination of Defence Witness Ndindiliyimana, the Prosecution attempted to tender a set of documents that were said to bear the signature of the Accused in the capacity of "commandant de place, Butare-Gikongoro." The Chamber declined to admit the documents as exhibits and marked them for identification purposes ("PID1") subject to the Prosecution's right to call evidence later to prove their authenticity or reliability.[134] The Chamber subsequently granted a Prosecution motion to call a handwriting expert, who examined the documents contained in PID1, compared them to some undisputed signatures of the Accused, and concluded that the signatures on the disputed documents were made by the Accused.[135] The Chamber also granted a Defence motion to call a handwriting witness in rejoinder, who examined the same set of documents against known samples of the signature of the Accused, and testified that she could not tell as a matter of certainty that the signatures on the PID1 documents were made by the Accused. She told the Chamber that there were too few samples of the known signature of the Accused to make an effective comparison, that the quality of the photocopies supplied for analysis was poor, and that there was a distinct possibility that the signatures could have been manipulated. In light of this clearly conflicting expert opinion, the Chamber remains in doubt about whether the signatures on the PID1 documents were those of the Accused and therefore declines to admit the PID1 documents.

89. The Chamber notes the evidence of Witness QX that Lieutenant Hategekimana, then Commander of Ngoma Camp, collaborated with ESO soldiers to attack refugees at Ngoma Parish on or about the 30 April 1994. Prosecution Witness TQ also testified that Hategekimana together with Lieutenant Modeste Gatsinzi and Captain Nizeyimana, both from ESO, led a large-scale attack on Tutsi refugees at the Groupe scolaire on 29 April 1994. The Chamber has also considered the evidence of Defence Witness MO23 that on 8 April 1994, under Muvunyi's auspices, a Military Police unit composed of soldiers and gendarmes was created at ESO with the aim of tracking down army deserters. Finally Witnesses YAO and YAN both narrated that after their arrest from the Convent of the Little Sisters and the Économat général respectively, they were taken to ESO where they saw Muvunyi and pursuant to his instructions, were later transported and detained at the gendarmerie Brigade. The Chamber also recalls YAN's testimony that he survived the genocide because someone interceded with Muvunyi on his behalf, and even though many of his co-detainees at the gendarmerie Brigade were taken away and killed, his life was spared because the Accused did not authorise that he be taken away.

[135] Exhibit P.37, admitted on 8 May 2006.

90. The question before the Chamber is whether in light of all the evidence presented, the Prosecution has proved that the Accused, Tharcisse Muvunyi, exercised the functions of commandant de place with responsibility for security in Butare and Gikongoro préfectures from April to June 1994. In the Chamber's view this allegation has not been established beyond reasonable doubt. Indeed it is still unclear whether the office of commandant de place existed in Rwandan military hierarchy in 1994, whether it was merely an administrative position, or if it entailed both administrative and operational duties. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution listed a military expert in his Pre-Trial Brief but fail to call him to testify. Such expert testimony could have been of assistance to the Chamber. However, the Chamber is satisfied that as Interim Commander of ESO, the Accused had authority over ESO Camp with responsibility for the security of the civilian population within the central sector of Butare préfecture and had responsibility for the actions of ESO soldiers within this area.

91. Notwithstanding its finding that the Prosecution has not proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused exercised the functions of commandant de place, in assessing the Accused's individual responsibility as a superior, the Chamber shall take the following factors into consideration: whether the Accused had effective control over the actions of those subordinates in the sense of the material ability to prevent or punish their actions; whether he knew or had reason to know that his subordinates had committed or were about to commit specific crimes; and finally, whether the Accused failed to take necessary and reasonable measures to prevent or punish their unlawful conduct. Furthermore the individual responsibility of the Accused for specific events where his subordinates at ESO collaborated with units from Ngoma Camp or the gendarmerie, has to be assessed on a case-by-case basis. As stated in the Čelebiči judgement, in considering the question of superior responsibility, the Chamber must at all times be alive to the realities of any given situation, and do away with "veils of formalism" that may shield individuals from responsibility for committing the most serious crimes known to humanity.[136]

41.12. 5. Specific Allegations Against Tharcisse Muvunyi

41.12.1.1. 5.1. Swearing-in Ceremony of New préfet of Butare on 19 April 1994

92. Paragraphs 3.19 and 3.20 read:

> 3.19 On the 19th of April 1994, the swearing-in ceremony in Butare for the new préfet, Sylvain Nsabimana, was the occasion of a large gathering. The meeting, which had been announced and organized by the Interim Government, was held at the MRND headquarters in Butare. On that occasion, President Théodore Sindikubwabo made an inflammatory speech, openly and explicitly calling on the people of Butare to follow the example of the other préfectures and begin the massacres. He violently denounced the "banyira ntibindeba", meaning those who did not feel concerned. He asked them to "get out of the way" and "let us work". Prime Minister Jean Kambanda, who subsequently took the floor, did not contradict the President of the Republic.
> 3.20 Lieutenant-Colonel Tharcisse Muvunyi attended in his capacity as Commander of Military Operations in Butare. Because he was present at the ceremony and did not dissociate himself from the statements made by the President of the Republic, Lieutenant-Colonel Tharcisse Muvunyi gave a clear signal to the people that the massacres were condoned by the Military.

41.12.1.1.3.

41.12.1.1.4. Prosecution Witness YAA

93. Prosecution Witness YAA testified that the situation in Butare changed following the speech given by Interim President Théodore Sindikubwabo in Butare on the occasion of the swearing-in of the new préfet, Sylvain Nsabimana.[137] The witness heard this speech over Radio Rwanda in Kigali, on 19 April 1994, the day it was delivered and a week before he left Kigali.[138] In the speech, Sindikubwabo called on the population to "do something", and said that those who "did not feel concerned" should "get up and work". YAA said that the killings by the Interahamwe were referred to as "work". The witness testified that this speech incited people in Butare to kill, because prior to its broadcast killings had not started in that city.[139]

41.12.1.1.5. Prosecution Witness NN

94. Witness NN testified that before President Sindikubwabo came to Butare, there had been no disturbances or killings there. On 19 April 1994, Sindikubwabo gave a speech at a meeting during his visit to Butare, which Witness NN heard over the radio. During that meeting, Sindikubwabo stressed the fact that members of the Butare population were behaving as if they were not concerned about what was happening. The day after the President's visit, there was disorder in Butare and the killings started. Taking into account the speech and its consequences, Witness NN stated that Sindikubwabo wanted to convey to members of the Butare population that they must do the same thing as people in other préfectures.[140]

95. Although Witness NN was not present at the meeting, he testified that he knew those who attended because whenever the President came to Butare, he was welcomed by the same people. According to Witness NN, the following authorities attended the meeting: the préfet, the Area Commander, the bourgmestre, and préfecture officials. In short, Sindikubwabo was welcomed by members of the local administration, as well as military authorities.[141]

96. On 6 April 1994, Defence Witness MO01 was working at the Nyakibanda Major Seminary located about nine kilometres from Butare.[142] He remained at the seminary until the beginning of July 1994 when he went into exile.[143] Witness MO01 stated that between 1 May and 1 July 1994, he visited the Bishopric in Butare on at least five occasions. Defence Witness MO01 told the Chamber that even though he heard on the radio that President Sindikubwabo visited Butare, he never heard that the President addressed a meeting on 19 or 20 April 1994. On 20 April, he travelled to Karubanda and returned to Naykibanda Major Seminary a week later. However, Witness MO01 recalled having heard that the President came to Butare on a pacification mission.[144]

[141] T. 18 July 2005, pp. 33-34 (I.C.S.): Witness NN testified: "I would therefore, like to point out that before the president came to Butare during that crisis period, and even when President Habyarimana was still president, wherever he went, he was welcomed by the préfet of the préfecture in question, by the Area Commander, the military authorities in the area and *bourgmestre*s. Even if the Defence states that I did not attend that meeting, I can say that I never went where President Habyarimana went. Whenever he came to Butare, I was among the personalities who welcomed him. For instance, when he held a meeting in the stadium, it was the same personalities who came to welcome him. Those same personalities, therefore, came to the meeting held by Sindikubwabo."

97. Witness MO37 lived in Nyamirambo, in Kigali préfecture, when the President of Rwanda died on 6 April 1994.[145] As a result of the deteriorating security situation in Kigali, he and his fiancée decided to leave for Butare about one week after the President's death. Upon their arrival in Butare, the situation was initially calm and they could even walk to attend mass at Bishopric.[146] However, on or about 19 April 1994, the Bishop of Butare told them it was no longer necessary for them to come to mass, and advised that they should stay at home. According to Witness MO37, when they arrived in Butare, the préfet was Jean-Baptiste Habyalimana. However, by 20 April, Mr. Habyalimana was no longer préfet; he had been removed from that position on 19 April by President Sindikubwabo during a speech the President made at the swearing-in ceremony of the new préfet, Nsabimana. Witness MO37 further explained to the Chamber that after the President's speech, the security situation in Butare town changed a great deal because killings started after the dismissal of préfet Habyalimana.[147]

41.12.1.1.8.5.1.3. Deliberations

98. In the Chamber's view, the evidence of both Prosecution and Defence witnesses demonstrates that on 19 April 1994, President Sindikubwabo addressed a crowd in Butare at the swearing-in ceremony of the new préfet of Butare, Sylvain Nsabimana. The Chamber notes that even though Prosecution Witnesses NN and YAA only heard the speech on the radio, their accounts of its contents are sufficiently similar to render them credible. The evidence shows that widespread killing of Tutsi civilians started in Butare after that speech. Further, the Chamber accepts YAA's interpretation of the President's speech, that when the President said "get up and work" and "do something", he was in fact calling the people to resort to violence. The Chamber has also examined the reports of the socio-linguistic experts called by both the Prosecution and the Defence and finds that in the context of the war in Rwanda in 1994 these words were understood as a call to eliminate members of the Tutsi ethnic group.[148]

99. However, the Chamber has not heard any reliable evidence that Muvunyi attended this meeting. Taking the totality of the evidence and the circumstances into account, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not proved beyond reasonable doubt that Muvunyi attended the meeting of 19 April 1994 at which President Sindikubwabo called on members of the Hutu ethnic group to "get up and work", which was understood as a call to kill Tutsis.

100. Paragraph 3.23 reads:

> 3.23 Subsequent to the visit of President Sindikubwabo and in exercising his de jure and de facto authority over the officers and men of the ESO, Lieutenant-Colonel Tharcisse Muvunyi called for a meeting of all the ESO commissioned and non-commissioned officer corps and informed them that the President's wishes should be considered as orders to be carried out.

101. Witness NN testified that Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi convened a meeting at the ESO Camp on 20 April 1994 which was attended by 10 to 15 officers and non-commissioned officers, including Captain Nizeyimana.[149] The meeting was convened by means of a message written on a blackboard in French, indicating that the meeting was for officers and high-ranking non-commissioned officers ("NCOs") of the ESO.[150]

102 Witness NN testified that during the meeting which lasted for one hour, Muvunyi repeated what President Sindikubwabo had said, that the people of Butare were indifferent and did not feel concerned.[151] Muvunyi then told officers at the meeting that they needed to consider what the President had said as an order that had to be executed.[152] After the meeting, the killings started.[153]

103. Witness NN also testified that Muvunyi reproached people for carrying out unauthorized missions. NN understood this to be a reference to his trip to the Rwanda-Burundi border to help Tutsis escape the fightings, because both Captain Nizeyimana and Muvunyi had asked him about the trip on 19 April 1994.[154]

104. Witness MO15 testified that on 20 April, Muvunyi convened a meeting of the service heads of ESO. MO15 did not attend, but his commander told him that Muvunyi chaired the meeting and stated that because the security situation had deteriorated in Butare, the defence system within ESO had to be strengthened.[155] On the morning of 20 April, Muvunyi conducted a roll call and told the soldiers that they needed to strengthen the defences and be vigilant in order to arrest looters irrespective of whether they were soldiers or civilians. MO15 added that Muvunyi left after making those remarks and Captain Nizeyimana took over from him. MO15 later overheard Nizeyimana telling some non-commissioned officers that Muvunyi's remarks about the security situation were not true, that the words of President Sindikubwabo had to be considered an order, and that Muvunyi was an accomplice of the RPF.[156]

[154] T. 18 July 2005, p. 37 (I.C.S.).
[155] T. 9 March 2006, pp. 11, 12 (I.C.S.). According to Witness MO15, "Following the speech that was made by President Sindikubwabo, the highest ranking officer that was in Butare at the time was Lieutenant-Colonel Tharcisse Muvunyi, held a meeting attended by the service heads of ESO and this was on the 20th, in the afternoon. Those in attendance at the meeting of service heads were the three commanders of the – the three company commanders that were in Butare."

When asked by Defence Counsel about what transpired at the meeting, MO15 answered as follows: "As I said earlier on, I did not attend that meeting. I wasn't a service head nor was I a company commander. It is my company commander who told me what had transpired in the course of the meeting. He told me that that meeting had been chaired by Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi. He also said that the security situation had deteriorated in Butare town and the defence system, therefore, had to be strengthened within ESO, and that, furthermore, the company responsible for security in town had to display or show proof of more vigilance."

105. The Chamber accepts the testimony of Prosecution Witness NN that on 20 April 1994 Muvunyi convened a meeting of ESO officers at which he repeated the contents of President Sindikubwabo's speech. The Chamber also finds that Muvunyi told those at the meeting they needed to understand what the President of the Republic meant to say, and consider the President's remarks as an order that had to be executed. The Chamber also accepts that shortly after this meeting, killings began in Butare.

106. The Chamber has considered the testimony of Defence Witness MO15 that on 20 April his superior officer told him Muvunyi convened a meeting of the service heads of ESO in which he discussed the deteriorating security situation in Butare and advocated for the ESO defence structure to be bolstered. In respect of the issue of whether it was Muvunyi or Nizeyimana who stated that President Sindikubwabo's words should be considered as an order, the Chamber attaches more weight to the testimony of Witness NN who was present at the meeting than to that of Witness MO15 who only gave hearsay evidence.

107. The Chamber therefore finds that at a meeting of ESO officers on 20 April 1994, Muvunyi told the officers to consider the content of President Sindikubwabo's speech as an order to be carried out.

41.12.1.3. 5.3. Establishment and Use of Roadblocks in Butare préfeture

41.12.1.3.2.

108. Paragraphs 3.33 and 3.34 read:

> 3.33 On 27th April 1994, the Interim Government ordered roadblocks to be set up, knowing that the roadblocks were being used to identify the Tutsi and their "accomplices" for the purpose of eliminating them. These orders were followed and had already been put in place in Butare.
> 3.34 These checkpoints were ostensibly to check for weapons and to prevent any infiltration by the enemy. The roadblocks were located at Rwasave, Rwabuye, the front of Hotel Faucon, in front of Ngoma Camp, in front of the Ibis Hotel, at the junction leading to the University hospital, beside Chez Bihira and in front of the ESO. These checkpoints served as points where searches were conducted on civilians for the purposes of identity control and to check against infiltration of the enemy.

41.12.1.3.4. Prosecution Witness QX

109. Prosecution Witness QX, a Tutsi priest, gave testimony by deposition from Kigali on 4 and 5 December 2003.[157] On 7 April 1994, he received the news of the death of President Habyarimana by telephone. Thereafter, he confirmed the news from a broadcast on Radio Rwanda which further announced that the entire population should stay at home. When he switched to Radio France International, he heard that "in Kigali they had started killing people."[158]

[157] "Decision on the Prosecutor's Extremely Urgent Motion for the Deposition of Witness QX, Rule 71 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence", dated 11 November 2003. The Chamber reasoned that the witness's advanced age and poor health constituted exceptional circumstances under rule 71. The Chamber also took into account the fact that the witness was going to give an eyewitness account of the alleged massacres that took place at the Ngoma Parish on 30 April 1994.
[158] T. 4 December 2003, p. 3 (I.C.S.).

110. He also heard people saying that in Butare, members of the MRND had started putting up roadblocks on various roads and paths. He added that there were times when "people were allowed to go out and purchase some goods." On one such occasion, the witness went out and when he got close to the Ngoma Camp, he found that armed soldiers had erected and were manning a roadblock. Witness QX testified that "everybody passing through had to show his or her identity card."[159]

111. On another occasion, he was going to administer the sacrament to some sick people when he encountered a roadblock close to Ngoma Parish. This roadblock was manned by civilians carrying clubs and knives. He explained that all persons going through the roadblocks had to show their identity cards and that when it was determined that they were Tutsi, they were killed. He was not asked for his identity card at this roadblock but on his way back, those manning the roadblock demanded to see it. Witness QX told them that he had left it at home. They sent someone to accompany him to his home so he could produce the card. Upon arrival at Witness QX's home, he showed his identity card to the person who had accompanied him, and the latter said, "come with me, you have to explain this to those manning the roadblock." When he got there, he met a Hutu person who told him "to go back home" and promised to explain to those manning the roadblock what was happening.[160]

112. Prosecution Witness KAL, a soldier posted at ESO in 1994, testified that on one occasion between April and June 1994, he left the ESO Camp to buy milk from the Arab neighbourhood. As he approached the second entrance of the ESO Camp at a place called Charabu, he found a roadblock made out of tree trunks placed across the road. Most of the people manning the roadblock were soldiers from ESO. He specifically named Corporals Mazimpaka and Niyibizi from ESO nouvelle formule as being among them. Witness KAL testified that people were stopped at the roadblock to determine whether they were Tutsi or accomplices of the Inkotanyi. The word Inkotanyi, he explained, referred to opponents of the government in power at the time, people who were at the war front, or who had infiltrated Butare. Tutsis were considered Inkotanyi.[161]

113. Witness KAL said that people who were identified as Tutsi or Inkotanyi at the roadblock were taken inside the ESO Camp. Subsequently, they were taken away from the Camp by ESO soldiers, including Lieutenants Bizimana and Gatsinzi, as well as trainees of ESO Nouvelle Formule. The soldiers who took the arrested civilians away seemed to be following orders, they seemed to have been authorised to carry out killings and were proud of themselves for doing so.[162] Witness KAL admitted that he was not an eyewitness to the killing of any of the people taken away from the ESO Camp. He added, however, that the killings were a matter of public knowledge because the soldiers who carried them out returned to the camp and spoke openly about their actions.[163]

114. Witness YAA, a soldier who worked at ESO in 1994, testified that on 7 or 8 April 1994, he noticed that a roadblock had been created at a distance of 100 to 200 metres from ESO, in the Arab neighbourhood. The roadblock was manned by a group of about 12 armed soldiers from ESO. Each of [159] T. 4 December 2003, p. 14 (I.C.S.). The witness stated that the roadblock was "close to the camp … was manned by soldiers and they were carrying weapons."

[160] T. 4 December 2003, pp. 13-14 (I.C.S.).
[161] T. 2 March 2005, pp. 7, 8, 12 (I.C.S.).
[162] T. 7 March 2005, p. 35 (I.C.S.).
[163] T. 7 March 2005, pp. 35-36. KAL testified as follows: "Soldiers crossed that roadblock to return to the camp, and they prided themselves on having arrested people. It was not difficult to know what was happening. In any case, as people passed, we could see new faces, and it was not possible not to be aware of that. Everybody spoke about it.… I personally did not witness any murder outside of ESO, but those who committed those murders prided themselves on having done so. Some of those people are still in Rwanda. You can find them in various préfectures."

the soldiers carried a personal weapon such as an FAL gun, an R-4 gun, or a J-3 gun. These were the same types of guns used at ESO. The guns were loaded with ammunition.[164]

115. Witness YAA testified that people were intercepted at the roadblock and asked to present their identity cards. Some of the people were struck with weapons. Those who were identified as Tutsi were beaten at the roadblock, while Hutu were allowed to pass through. He recalled that at an assembly of ESO soldiers on 7 April 1994, Captain Nizeyimana confirmed that President Habyarimana's plane was shot down by the RPF. Witness YAA further explained that since the Tutsi inside the country were generally regarded as accomplices of the RPF, they were also held responsible for the death of the President.[165]

116. On 12 or 13 April 1994, YAA and a detachment of ESO soldiers were deployed to Kigali. On their way, he saw a second roadblock at the Hotel Faucon. He noticed that a group of 10 to 12 armed trainee-soldiers from ESO were manning the roadblock. They were armed with FAL, R-4 and J-3 rifles. Some carried grenades. Although YAA did not stay long at the roadblock, he noticed that the soldiers were checking the identification papers of people passing through the roadblock.[166]

117. Witness YAA saw two other roadblocks in the city of Butare. One was at a crossroads leading to Gikongoro; the other was at Rwabuye. Both were manned by Interahamwe militia armed with firearms, including grenades, as well as traditional weapons such as machetes and spears. As they proceeded to Kigali, YAA saw other roadblocks on the road from Butare to Kigali and at each of these, people were being asked to present their identification papers.[167]

41.12.1.3.7. Prosecution Witness XV

118. Witness XV was an employee of the Butare University Hospital at the time of the events in question. On 7 April, he received news of the death of President Habyarimana through a broadcast on Radio Rwanda. The next day, "all the population was on the hills and roadblocks were ordered to be set up, especially in Butare." According to the witness, the roadblocks in the city were set up by soldiers from ESO and Ngoma Camps, and there was very frantic activity. He recalled the names "Rapide" and "Kazungu" as two ESO soldiers whom he saw at the roadblock. The latter bore this nickname because of his light complexion. At these roadblocks, those suspected of being Tutsi had to show their identity card and they could be mistreated just because of their physical appearance.[168]

41.12.1.3.8. Prosecution Witness CCQ

119. On 20 April 1994, Witness CCQ was taking his wife to the medical centre at the Butare Groupe scolaire with the help of a priest from Ngoma Parish. His wife had just suffered a heart attack. On the way, they came across a roadblock located at Hotel Faucon manned by about six to ten soldiers and Interahamwe. One of the soldiers stopped them and demanded to see their identity cards. CCQ knew some of the soldiers at the roadblock because they were natives of his secteur; he knew that they worked at the ESO.[169]

[164] T. 8 March 2005, p. 42 (I.C.S.): YAA said: "Customarily, except for assemblies that were held when the flag was hoisted, each soldier had his or her arm, otherwise there was an ammunitions depot and each trainee, when going for lessons, put his gun in that armoury. But from April 1994 every trainee, every soldier had a gun loaded with ammunition."

[165] T. 8 March 2005, p. 43 (I.C.S.): YAA stated that: "… if I go by what was said in general, whenever people made mention of the RPF people understood that Tutsis inside the country were accomplices of the RPF. At the assembly held on the 7th in the morning, Captain Nizeyimana confirmed that President Habyarimana's plane had been shot down by the RPF, which meant that the Tutsis who were described as accomplices of the RPF were also responsible."

[167] T. 8 March 2005, p. 43; 9 March 2005, p. 7 (I.C.S.).

120. Witness CCQ and his wife produced their identity cards which showed that they were Hutu.[170] The priest accompanying them did not have an identity card, but carried another document which showed that he was a priest and a Tutsi. The Tutsi priest was questioned at the roadblock for about one-and-a-half hours before they were let through. The priest was questioned because the soldiers had orders to arrest all Tutsis. They were only allowed to proceed from the roadblock after CCQ begged the soldiers and told them that his wife would die if they did not let them through. The soldiers insisted, however, that the Tutsi priest must return to them within 15 minutes using the same road.[171]

121. Witness CCQ further explained that while Hutu were allowed to pass through the roadblocks without any trouble, Tutsi were being chased away, their houses were being burnt down, and they were being attacked with firearms and traditional weapons. He stated that the roadblocks were established for the purpose of the attacks on the Tutsis.[172]

122. Witness CCQ testified that after leaving the roadblock at Hotel Faucon, they came across another roadblock in front of Chez Bihira. Even though there was no physical barrier at this place, there was a group of armed soldiers who stopped them and demanded to know their destination. They responded that they were taking a sick person to the hospital. CCQ added that they stopped only briefly at this roadblock because the soldiers noticed that they had already been checked at the previous roadblock.[173]

123. While at this second roadblock, Witness CCQ saw three slender-looking young persons, who appeared to be of Tutsi ethnicity. The soldiers were asking them to show their identity cards. He also saw one of the soldiers holding a bloodstained sword, which he brandished, saying that they had finished killing the Inyenzi. Witness CCQ understood this to mean the soldiers had finished killing Tutsi.[174]

124. After they arrived at the hospital, CCQ left his wife and went to buy some food. He took the same route as when they came to the medical centre, and therefore had to go through the roadblock at Chez Bihira. As he went by, he saw the bodies of the three young people whom he had left at the roadblock earlier, thrown in the gutter. They had been shot dead. CCQ could identify them from their attire and could tell that they were the same three people he had previously seen. He continued on his way to buy food in town and returned to the medical centre to join his wife.[175]

125. Witness CCQ also told the Chamber that on 21 April 1994, while on his way to visit his family at Matyazo, he saw Muvunyi together with Robert Kajuga[176] and soldiers at the roadblock in front of Hotel Faucon. He was on the other side of the road from where Muvunyi and his colleagues stood, but he could see them talking. He believed that Muvunyi was giving orders to the soldiers. CCQ was asked to show his identity card which he did and continued on his way.[177]

[170] T. 26 May 2005, p. 15. The witness explained further: "My identity card indicated that I was Hutu. … I did not belong to the Hutu ethnic group. I am Tutsi, but my wife was Hutu. … The reason for that is that in 1959, my father changed his ethnicity in his identity card with the birth of the MDR party. So when my father was asked for his card he stated that he was Hutu, and that flowed on to us, his children. … It was in a bid to protect ourselves. War was raging at the time, a war that was similar to the war of 1994. However, at the time the killings were not at the scope of those that occurred in 1994."

[171] T. 26 May 2005, p. 15. At p. 31 of the transcript, witness explained that the priest had earlier given him 1000-2000 Rwandan francs to pay to the soldiers, but that this offered was turned down.

"Q: Why do you say that the soldiers had been instructed to arrest Tutsis?

"A: That was the prevailing situation in Rwanda at the time, and everybody knew that, and we all knew what was going on. We were already being chased away; our houses were already being burnt down. We were already being attacked by firearms and clubs and what have you. So you understand that these roadblocks were set up for a purpose. You see, they didn't ask us to show the documents for the vehicle. We were simply asked to show our identification cards."

[175] T. 26 May 2005, p. 17.

[176] Kajuga was the alleged leader of the Interahamwe militia in Rwanda in 1994.

[177] T. 26 May 2005, pp. 17, 18.

126. Witness CCQ also testified that there were several roadblocks located in Butare. He said, "[f]rom Matyazo to the School complex and from the School complex to Tumba, there were roadblocks. I went through all those roadblocks. There was one in Matyazo; I went through that roadblock. There were roadblocks at the level of the Ngoma Camp. There was a roadblock in front of the university extension. There was a roadblock in front of Hotel Faucon. There was a roadblock in front of Bihira's home which was manned only by soldiers, and there was another roadblock at Pauline Nyiramasuhuko's. There was the Mukoni roadblock, as well as a roadblock which was at Tumba. I went through all that distance."[178]

41.12.1.3.9. Prosecution Witness YAN

127. Witness YAN lived in Gikongoro préfecture when President Habyarimana's plane was shot down. Sometime during the war, he moved from Gikongoro to Butare and went to live at a place called the Procure, otherwise known as Économat général, located close to the Groupe scolaire. He was arrested by ESO soldiers under the leadership of Lieutenant Gakwerere in mid-May and taken to ESO in the back of a white single-cabin pick-up truck. He was subsequently detained at the Brigade for two or three weeks. Upon release, he saw several roadblocks including at Chez Bihira, close to the University, next to Nyiramasuhuko's house, and opposite Hotel Faucon. All these roadblocks were manned by soldiers and Interahamwe militia. YAN believed that the soldiers collaborated with the Interahamwe and were manning the roadblocks together. Witness YAN described the Interahamwe as "killers" who had received military training. They wore kitenge fabric and carried guns and traditional weapons such as machetes.[179]

128. When asked by the Prosecution how he was able to go through all these roadblocks without being killed, YAN responded he could see the roadblocks, but avoided going through them.[180]

41.12.1.3.10. Prosecution Witness AFV

129. Witness AFV was an employee of the Butare University Hospital on 6 April 1994 when the President's plane was shot down. She testified that on 20 April 1994, she was stopped at a roadblock on her way home from the hospital. It was manned by a group of "more than four" armed soldiers who carried firearms, cartridge belts, and grenades. The roadblock was located at the intersection of the roads leading to the University Laboratory and the University Hospital. Witness AFV believed that the soldiers were from ESO because they carried weapons and wore the military uniforms with spotted colours that she knew soldiers from ESO wore. However, she did not notice the headgear that the soldiers might have been wearing, or even whether they wore any, because she was scared. In addition, she believed the soldiers were from ESO because the roadblock was only ten minutes away from the ESO Camp and the soldiers took turns at the roadblock.[181]

130. Witness AFV testified that the soldiers demanded that passers-by show their identity cards and separated the Hutu from the Tutsi. Those whose identity cards showed that they were Hutu were allowed to pass, but the Tutsi were detained at the roadblock and searched. Recounting her personal experience at the roadblock, AFV said she was searched, beaten and asked by the soldiers if she thought she was extraordinary. They also asked how she could dare go to work. Witness AFV added

[179] T. 30 May 2005, p. 10. "The roadblocks were manned by soldiers and Interahamwes. The Interahamwes collaborated with the soldiers. If they wanted to kill someone they would do so. It seems they were manning these roadblocks together." When asked by the Prosecutor to explain who the Interahamwe were, YAN stated: "Interahamwes were killers who had received military training. They had their kitenge fabric that they were wearing. And these were people who had been trained. They were people not like others; they had been trained."

that a girl who had accompanied her to the roadblock was killed by the soldiers in her presence when they realised that she was Tutsi, but that she had torn up her identity card. Her body was thrown in a gutter.[182]

131. Furthermore, AFV testified that one of the soldiers said to his colleagues, "Let us look at this Tutsi's sexual organs. How come you are working when others aren't?" He then told his colleagues that they should go along with her, and that she should come back and report to them the next day. The witness stated that she interpreted the soldier's statement to mean they would kill her after looking at her private parts. Witness AFV testified that two armed soldiers escorted her from the roadblock, and said they were going to take her home. Instead, they beat her and took her to the woods. Along the way, they hit her and said they were going to look at her sexual organ to see to what extent she was extraordinary. They called her names. She said, "I understood that they were going to hurt me, taking into account the fact that they were beating me and the fact that they had killed the girl who was in my company. I understood that they were going to kill me." The witness therefore asked the soldiers to kill her on the spot instead of taking her away to torture her.[183]

132. Despite her plea to be killed on the spot, the soldiers took her into the bush to a spot "very close to Mukoni as you go down towards the university." She estimated that the distance between this place and the roadblock was about two metres, but added that it was the equivalent of the distance between the witness stand and the main entrance to the courtroom. She added that "you could see the bush from the roadblock." According to the witness, she was taken into the bush sometime between 4.30 and 5.00 p.m. although she emphasized that this was only an estimate, as she was afraid and did not look at her watch. She was subsequently raped by the soldiers.[184]

133. Witness YAQ testified that on 24 April 1994, he saw Muvunyi, in the company of local government officials including Nteziryayo, and Kalimanzira at a roadblock in Rumba cellule, Kibilizi secteur. The witness was one of those manning the roadblock. He said that Muvunyi and about 10 other people, including soldiers, arrived in a white Toyota vehicle, not a military vehicle. This was the first time the witness saw Muvunyi, and he did not know the names of the other officials who accompanied him until they were introduced at a "security meeting" held later that day near the roadblock. Witness YAQ testified that Gasana, Chairman of the Power Wing of the MDR Party, introduced Muvunyi at the meeting. The meeting was chaired by Muvunyi and Alphonse Nteziryayo. During cross-examination, YAQ denied mentioning in his statement of 4 February 2000 that Muvunyi was accompanied at the roadblock by Nteziryayo and Kalimanzira, instead of Nteziryayo and Nsabimana as he said before the Chamber.[185]

134. The Accused and the other military officers addressed the crowd. The Accused said, "Tomorrow, very early in the morning, if I do not find bodies, any dead bodies at this roadblock, I will conclude that you are all Tutsis. I myself will bring soldiers, and we will allow people from Shyanda – assailants from Shyanda, to come here, and they will even kill you."[186] The next day, that is 25 April 1994, the Accused returned to the roadblock to see if the killings had started. The witness testified that

[182] T. 21 June 2005, p. 13. Witness narrated her experience at the roadblock in the following words: "They asked passers by to present their identity cards and separated the Hutu from the Tutsi. And when the name Hutu was on your identity, you were allowed to pass, and the Tutsis were asked to stay, and they searched us. … They searched me; they asked me to show my identity card. And they were severe in their language to me. They asked me if I were an extraordinary person and asked how I could dare go to work. … I understood that they were going to hurt me because there was a girl who was in my company and who had just been killed and thrown into the gutter. … I had come down with that girl. She had torn her identity and therefore had none. And once soldiers realised that she was Tutsi, she was killed and thrown into the gutter in front of us."

upon arrival of the Accused, there were dead bodies at the roadblock – "The first person to be killed and who was a Tutsi was Rwabigwi. There was also Rubanda, Isador Mutiganda, [and] Kayiranga. These are the names that I remember, but I believe there were about seven bodies."[187]

135. Defence Witness MO01 testified that on or around 14 April 1994, he went into Butare town from the Nyakibanda Major Seminary using the road that passed through the University of Butare to the Chez Bihira junction.[188] On his outward and return trips he did not see any soldiers on the road, nor did he see a roadblock at the Chez Bihira junction.[189] On 20 April, Witness MO01 left the Nyakibanda Major Seminary and travelled to the Karubanda Minor Seminary where he stayed for a week. He took the same road that he travelled on 14 April, and again there were no soldiers on the road, and he did not see a roadblock at Chez Bihira.[190]

136. Witness MO01 testified that sometime in June 1994, while on his way to the Butare Bishopric, he saw a roadblock at the Chez Bihira junction.[191] He believed that those manning the roadblock were civilians because the person who asked the witness to show his identity papers was not wearing a military uniform or military beret.[192]

137. April 1994, Witness MO23 was a student soldier at ESO Nouvelle Formule. He was assigned to the "Intervention Company" which was in charge of security in Butare town under the command of Lieutenant Gakwerere.[193] The Intervention Company was one of the units created on 8 April 1994 by Captain Nizeyimana during a roll-call which was also attended by Muvunyi. He said Muvunyi addressed the soldiers and advised them to be law abiding. According to the witness, a company in charge of protecting the ESO Camp was also created and placed under the command of Lieutenant Bizimana; and a Reserve Company under the command of Lieutenant Gatsinzi remained in the camp.[194]

138. Witness MO23 stated that the Intervention Company was in charge of creating roadblocks in Butare town. He said a roadblock was put up at the second entrance of ESO, in the Arab neighbourhood, and others were located at Hotel Faucon, Hotel Ibis, and at the Chez Bihira junction.[195] Witness MO23 said he was assigned to the Chez Bihira roadblock which was created on 9 April, but remained for only two days. According to Witness MO23, the Butare préfectoral committee decided that the roadblock was no longer necessary and it was therefore dismantled. During the period Witness MO23 stayed at the roadblock, he never arrested anybody.[196]

139. Defence Witness MO30 said that to his knowledge, there were no roadblocks in Butare from 7 to 8 April 1994. However, sometime between 8 and 10 April, he saw a single roadblock "towards the Bihira Shop", which was a small roundabout on the road leading to the Butare Cathedral. This roadblock was up for only a day or two and was removed by 11 April.[197] Between 7 and 21 April, MO30 did no go to the Arab neighbourhood or ESO and did not see any roadblocks manned by military personnel during this period.[198]

140. Witness MO30 testified that there were a lot of roadblocks in Butare after 20 or 21 April 1994.[199] He recalled that there was a roadblock in front of Hotel Faucon, another one between the residence of Minister Nyiramasuhuko and the Protestant College, and a third one next to the University Hospital Laboratory. The University Laboratory roadblock was manned by young civilians whom he believed were students who had remained on campus. MO30 stated that he did not see a roadblock at Chez Bihira in May 1994.[200]

141. In April 1994, Witness MO48 lived in Mugusa commune, in Butare préfecture.[201] He heard the news of President Habyarimana's death on 7 April and noted that people in his commune were shocked. He estimated that about two weeks after the President's death, around 20 April 1994, the conseiller of his secteur, Tharcisse Singisabana, asked the members of the population to commence night patrols because "the situation was becoming serious."[202] Members of the population, both Hutu and Tutsi, had started killing each other.[203]

142. Defence Witness MO48 testified that roadblocks were set up with the intention of bringing people who did not have identity papers to the Communal Office. Those manning the roadblocks also searched bags to ensure that people were not carrying weapons. He explained that it was the people coming from Uganda who were Inkotanyi because they were working with the RPF.[204]

143. Witness MO48 said that he was posted to a roadblock at Cyamugasa, seven to eight kilometres from the Mugusa Communal Office on the road towards Cyiri-Gikonko. All the cellules were required to provide civilians armed with traditional weapons to man the roadblocks.[205] He worked at the roadblock for only four days after it was set up, because he fell ill with malaria and requested permission from the responsable de cellule to stop working. During the period he was at the roadblock, he never saw any soldiers, nor did he see anyone being killed; moreover, those who manned the roadblock during his absence never said anyone was killed at the roadblock. In fact, he added, those who manned the roadblock did not have authority to kill, they were prohibited from threatening anyone, and they did not carry guns.[206]

144. On 6 April 1994, Witness MO69 lived in Kigali with her family. Due to security concerns, she moved to Butare sometime in May. In Butare, Witness MO69 saw roadblocks at many places including at a junction leading to Gikongoro, and at Hotel Faucon. Initially, she said that the Hotel Faucon roadblock was manned by "young persons".[207] Later, however, she said the Hotel Faucon roadblock was manned by soldiers "dressed in the usual uniform of the national army and berets" but added "there were other people around".[208]

41.12.1.3.18.

145. Witness MO73 and his family left their house in Rubungo commune, Kigali on or about 16 April 1994. They had received information that the Interahamwe were preparing to attack their family house. They travelled by car for about five hours and eventually arrived in Butare and secured accommodation at the Hotel Faucon. According to the witness, throughout their journey from Rubungo to Butare, and up to their arrival at Hotel Faucon, they did not come across any roadblocks.[209]

146. MO73 said that they left Hotel Faucon and moved to ESO on or about 20 April because the security situation in Butare had deteriorated as of 19 April 1994.[210] At ESO, Colonel Muvunyi gave accommodation to Witness MO73 and his family at one of the officers' quarters located about 50 metres from Muvunyi's own official residence. They stayed at ESO until about 21 May 1994, when Muvunyi provided a military escort composed of six soldiers in a pick-up truck and they crossed the border into Burundi.[211]

147. MO73 testified that during his stay at ESO in April and May 1994, there was a roadblock in front of the Camp.[212] He also said that on 23 or 24 April, he went from ESO to the Butare University campus to collect his belongings. He walked the distance, and passed through the University Hospital. He did not see any roadblocks manned by soldiers and did not see a roadblock at the University Laboratory. However, there was a roadblock on the small road leading to the Kigali/Butare main road at Kagaro. This roadblock was close to the University and the witness believed it was manned by students from the Law Faculty.[213] In addition, during his stay at ESO, he made about four or five trips to Butare town during which he passed Hotel Faucon. On each occasion, he noticed that there was a roadblock opposite the hotel manned by soldiers. He did not see or hear about anyone being abused at the roadblock "because the people were saying that the soldiers manning the roadblock were disciplined."[214]

148. Defence Witness MO15 testified that in order to ensure security in Butare, roadblocks were set up at various locations between 8 and 10 April 1994 including one near the ESO Camp within in the Arab neighbourhood, and others at Hotel Faucon, the Kigali-Gikongoro crossroad, and at Chez Bihira.[215] All the roadblocks were manned by military personnel from the Intervention Company under the leadership of Lieutenant Gakwerere. He explicitly denied that civilians manned the roadblocks.[216] The soldiers asked people passing through the roadblocks to show their identity cards, so as to prevent infiltration into their area by RPF forces.[217]

149. Witness MO15 initially testified that the roadblock at Chez Bihira was dismantled nine days after it was set up,[218] but later said that the roadblocks at Hotel Faucon and the Kigali-Gikongoro crossroad, as well as the one at Chez Bihira, were still in place when he left Butare on 3 May 1994.[219]

41.12.1.3.21.

150. The Chamber finds that roadblocks were set up in Butare in the days following the death of President Habyarimana. This conclusion is supported by Prosecution Witnesses XV, QX, KAL, and YAA, as well as Defence Witnesses MO15 and MO23.

151. The Chamber also finds that many of these roadblocks were created and operated by soldiers, specifically ESO soldiers. The Intervention Company was a unit created at ESO on 8 April 1994 and specifically tasked with creating and manning roadblocks in Butare town. As Defence Witness MO23 noted, the Company established such roadblocks near Hotel Faucon, Hotel Ibis, Chez Bihira, and in the Arab neighbourhood near ESO. Witnesses KAL, YAA, XV, CCQ, YAN, AFV, MO15 and MO23 all gave evidence that ESO soldiers were involved in creating and manning the roadblocks. Specifically, the Chamber notes the testimony of Prosecution Witnesses KAL and YAA, both of whom worked at ESO in 1994 and specifically identified ESO soldiers whom they knew at various roadblocks in Butare.

152. The Chamber finds that the Prosecution evidence was largely corroborated by the Defence. Witness Ndindiliyimana, MO01, MO23, MO30, MO48, MO69, MO73, and MO15 all acknowledged the existence of several roadblocks in Butare town, and testified that the roadblocks were intended for stopping persons to check their identification cards in hopes of weeding out RPF infiltrators. Defence Witnesses with a military background such as Ndindiliyimana, MO23, and MO15 all testified that the roadblocks in Butare were manned by soldiers coming from the ESO Camp.

153. The Chamber finds that at various times from 7 April to mid-June 1994, roadblocks existed at the following locations: at a distance of 100 or 200 metres from ESO Camp, as per the testimony of KAL, YAA, MO23, MO73, and MO15; Ngoma Camp, as established by QX and CCQ; Hotel Faucon, at the very least by April 20 or 21, in accordance with the testimony of YAA, CCQ, YAN, MO69, MO30, MO23, MO73 and MO15; Hotel Ibis, as per MO23's testimony; at least one in the vicinity of the University of Butare, pursuant to the testimony of CCQ, YAN, AFV, MO01, MO30, and MO73; Chez Bihira, as stated by CCQ, MO15, and MO23; Matyazo, as per the testimony of QX and CCQ; Rwabuye, in accordance with YAA's testimony; the Kigali-Gikongoro crossroads, as established by YAA and MO15; Cyamugasa, where MO48 worked; Rumba cellule, where YAQ testified that he worked; and several others, noted by Witness YAA.

154. Of these, there is no evidence suggesting that the Matyazo, Rwabuye, or Cyamugasa roadblocks were manned by soldiers. The Chamber finds that the Rwabuye roadblock was operated by armed civilian Interahamwe. Furthermore, the Ngoma Camp checkpoint was most likely manned by soldiers from that camp, and the Prosecution has not shown that ESO soldiers were at any time present at that location. Finally, the Chamber observes that the military forces and armed civilians were in many instances working together. For example, on 20 April, Witness CCQ saw six to ten soldiers at the Hotel Faucon roadblock along with several members of the civilian Interahamwe, who were armed with traditional weapons. CCQ also personally spotted the Accused in front of the Hotel Faucon talking with Robert Kajuga, the alleged leader of the Interahamwe, along with several soldiers and other Interahamwe. This identification evidence is, however, not corroborated by any other witness, and the Chamber concludes that it would be unsafe to rely on it, or to draw any inference therefrom that Muvunyi acted in concert with, or otherwise ordered, instructed or permitted his subordinates to jointly operate with the Interahamwe at this roadblock.[220]

155. The Chamber finds that the roadblocks served as points where searches were systematically conducted on civilians for the purposes of identity control. The Chamber further finds that while the official rhetoric was that the roadblocks were to prevent infiltration by enemy forces, they were in fact used to identify Tutsi civilians for the purpose of eliminating them. Prosecution Witnesses YAA, CCQ, AFV, KAL, QX, XV, and YAN all offered evidence demonstrating the existence of identity checks at roadblocks in Butare.

156. The Chamber has considered Witness YAQ's testimony placing Muvunyi at the Rumba cellule roadblock on 24 April 1994 and finds it unreliable. YAQ was an Interahamwe militiaman and had reason to enhance Muvunyi's participation in the genocidal campaign and in that way attempt to diminish his own role therein. Moreover, his evidence on this issue is not supported by that of any other witness.

157. Taking all the Prosecution and Defence evidence into account, the Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that between 7 April and 15 June 1994, roadblocks were set up in various parts of Butare town and manned by soldiers from ESO Camp. While these roadblocks were ostensibly set up to prevent infiltration by enemy soldiers, they were in fact systematically used to identify Tutsi civilians for elimination. Due to the large number of roadblocks set up in Butare, the widespread nature of killings at these roadblocks, the proximity of some of the roadblocks to the ESO Camp, and the fact that ESO soldiers were routinely deployed to man the roadblocks, the Chamber concludes that Muvunyi knew or had reason to know about them. The Chamber finds that Muvunyi failed to take necessary and reasonable measures to stop the unlawful killing of Tutsi civilians at these roadblocks by ESO soldiers.

41.12.1.5. 5.4. Sensitisation Meetings

41.12.1.5.1.5.4.1. Indictment

158. Paragraphs 3.24 and 3.25 read:

> 3.24 During the events referred to in this Indictment, Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi, in the company of the Chairman of the civil defense program for Butare who later became the préfet of Butare préfecture, and other local authority figures, went to various communes all over Butare préfecture purportedly to sensitize the local population to defend the country, but actually to incite them to perpetrate massacres against the Tutsis. These sensitization meetings took place in diverse locations throughout Butare préfecture such as:
> - in Mugusa commune sometime in late April 1994;
> - at the Gikore Centre sometime in early May 1994;
> - in Muyaga bureau communal between the 3rd and 5th of June 1994;
> - in Nyabitare secteur, Muganza commune sometime in early June 1994.
> 3.25 At the meetings referred to in Paragraph 3.24 above, which were attended almost exclusively by Hutus, Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi, in conjunction with these local authority figures, publicly expressed virulent anti-Tutsi sentiments, which they communicated to the local population and militiamen in traditional proverbs. The people understood these proverbs to mean exterminating the Tutsis and the meetings nearly always resulted in the massacre of Tutsis who were living in the commune or who had taken refuge in the commune.

[220] Bagilishema, Judgement (AC), para. 75; Kupreškić, Judgement (AC), para. 39. In both cases, the Appeals Chamber urged "extreme caution" before relying upon identification evidence made under difficult circumstances.

41.12.1.5.2.5.4.2. Meetings at Nyantanga Trade Centre and at Nyakizu Communal Office

41.12.1.5.3.5.4.2.1 Evidence

41.12.1.5.4. Prosecution Witness CCR

159. Prosecution Witness CCR testified that on 6 April 1994 when President Habyarimana's plane was shot down, he lived in Nyakizu commune, Butare préfecture.

160. On 20 April, at about 10.00 a.m., CCR heard from an announcement by megaphone mounted on a vehicle that the population were invited to a "security meeting" at the Nyantanga Trade Centre. The meeting took place between 2.00 p.m. and 3.00 p.m. He attended the meeting, and so did members of all ethnic groups from the three secteurs that made up his commune. The meeting was also attended by Colonel Tharcisse Muvunyi, Captain Niyomugabo, Lieutenant Emmanuel, at least one military chaplain, the préfet of Butare and several other commune and préfectoral officials.[221]

161. Several officials spoke at the meeting. In his speech, the bourgmestre said the meeting was convened because the military commander of the area, Colonel Tharcisse Muvunyi, wished to come to the area to "get an assessment of the situation", and to tell the people "what needed to be done". Colonel Muvunyi then took the floor and stated as follows: "You are all aware that we are in a state of war. We are fighting the enemy just as we have fought the enemy in the past and that is the Inyenzi. Today they have taken on a new name – the RPF. This is a difficult war and that is why we seek your assistance. You, members of the population, you are expected to help us within the framework of our civilian defence."[222] Muvunyi added that there would be another meeting the next day where he would distribute weapons to the population of Nyakizu commune.[223]

162. The following day, 21 April, a second meeting was indeed held at the Nyakizu Communal Office. Tharcisse Muvunyi and the other officials addressed the population. The bourgmestre informed those gathered that "the government had decided to set up the civilian defence" and invited the Accused to explain the nature of the war and the measures that needed to be taken. In his turn, Muvunyi reminded the population of the previous day's meeting and stated: "The matter before us now is that our country is at war. We are fighting this war against the enemy, who has taken the name RPF, whereas it is the same enemy we fought in the past under the name Inyenzi." The Accused went on to say "the current war is a difficult war because the enemy before us is fighting us from a military front and is also using accomplices. As your soldiers, we are at the battle front and we have come here to make you aware so that you may fight the accomplices who are amongst you. […] The RPF Inyenzi has distributed weapons to its accomplices, and that was the reason why we, too, have brought weapons to you so that you may face the accomplices." Muvunyi added "Let this be clearly understood, and it is common knowledge, all Rwandans know it, these accomplices I am referring to are Tutsis and Hutus who are cowards. All these persons must be exterminated. We must get rid of this dirt."[224] Witness CCR stated that the population understood the word "Inyenzi" used by Muvunyi as an indirect reference to the Tutsi. With respect to the term "accomplices", Muvunyi had explained that this referred to the Tutsi members of the population.[225]

163. CCR testified that weapons were distributed at the meeting and that later that evening some people were killed at the Nyakizu Communal office. The next day CCR witnessed the killing of eight people at the Nyantanga Trade Centre.

41.12.1.5.5. Defence Witness MO81

164. Defence Witness MO81, a Tutsi, testified that the Nyantanga Health Centre was located at virtually the same place as the Nyantanga Trade Centre.[226] Even though the two were separated by trees, MO81 explained that a person standing at the Health facility could clearly see the Trade Centre and vice-versa.[227]

165. According to MO81, the situation in Nyantanga remained calm until about 15 April, when people started killing each other, destroying houses and looting property.[228] He therefore went into hiding with his family until late June or early July when he went into exile in Burundi.[229] He said that he was not aware of any public meeting held at the Nyantanga Trade Centre before 15 April which was presided over by high officials of Butare préfecture. He added if any such meeting had taken place, he would have known because the Trade Centre was close to his home. Witness MO81 said he never saw any soldiers in the Nyantanga Health or Trade Centre before 15 April.

166. Defence Witness MO67 also testified that where the Nyantanga Trade Centre was located.[230] At approximately 11.00 a.m. one day, about one week after the President's death, while at work, she heard people shouting that the Inkotanyi were coming, and members of the population started fleeing. As a result, the witness also fled to Kibangu secteur, where she remained for about two hours before returning to Nyantanga.[231]

167. She explained that before that morning's incident, she never heard of a public meeting being held at the Nyantanga Trade Centre, and never saw any military vehicles in the area. According to MO67, she continued working near the Trade Centre up to the time she fled from Rwanda in July 1994.[232]

41.12.1.5.8.

168. Defence Witness MO68 also confirmed the proximity of Nyantanga Health Centre to Nyantanga Trade Centre and stated that if there was a meeting at the Trade Centre, someone at the Health Centre could hear what was being said.[233]

169. Around 15 or 16 April, MO68 heard people running and shouting. She knew that people were dying, but did not know who was being killed and by whom. Before the violence broke out on 15 April, she never saw or heard of a public meeting convened at the Nyantanga Trade Centre by senior government officials from the Butare préfecture.[234]

41.12.1.5.10.

170. Defence Witness MO39 testified that between April and July 1994, he lived in Nyakizu commune.[235] About a week-and-half after the death of President Habyarimana, he accompanied bourgmestre Ntagazwa to Nyantanga and noticed that the security situation had deteriorated. However, according to the witness, bourgmestre Ntagazwa neither made a speech nor called or attended a meeting in Nyantanga during this trip. Furthermore, he did not see Tharcisse Muvunyi or any other military personnel during the visit.[236]

41.12.1.5.11. 5.4.2.2. Deliberations

171. The Chamber has considered the totality of the evidence heard on the alleged meetings held at Nyantanga Trade Centre and at Nyakizu Communal Bureau on 20 and 21 April 1994. The Prosecutor relied exclusively on the evidence of witness CCR to prove these allegations. The Chamber notes that the Defence strongly objected to the evidence of this witness on the ground that he is not credible. The Defence argued that Witness CCR's pre-trial statements are materially distinct from his evidence before the Chamber. In particular, the Defence submitted that in three statements CCR made in 2001, he referred to only one meeting held at the Nyantanga Trade Centre on 10 April 1994;[237] in none of the statements did he mention a meeting held at Nyakizu Communal Office, although in his statement of 22 February 2001, he indicated that he heard from someone that weapons were distributed at the Communal Office on 11 April 1994. Witness CCR testified that there were in fact two meetings which took place on 20 and 21 April 1994 at Nyantanga Trade Centre and Nyakizu Communal Office respectively. The Chamber observes that on 18 May 2005, barely two days before CCR took the witness stand, the Prosecutor filed a will-say statement indicating that the witness intended to correct the date "10 April 1994" in his statement of 22 February 2001, to read "20 April 1994", and the date "11 April 1994" to read "21 April 1994".

172. The Chamber considers that significant inconsistencies exist between Witness CCR's testimony and his pre-trial statements with respect to the dates and number of meetings at which the Accused is alleged to have made anti-Tutsi statements. The introduction of a will-say statement two days before the witness's testimony, seeking to align the proposed testimony with the Prosecution's theory of the case, is in the Chamber's opinion, at best suspect.

173. In addition to the inconsistencies between his testimony and his pre-trial statements, the Chamber notes that CCR was detained in Rwanda for six years from 1996 to 2002 on allegations that in 1994, he killed people including his mother and/or wife, and son.[238] In his testimony, the witness denied having killed anyone and said he was acquitted by a Gacaca court. He added that the person who killed his wife had confessed. He also maintained that his mother died while he was in prison. The Defence maintains that the witness was provisionally released and not acquitted. The Chamber notes that on 27 April 2006, the Prosecution filed an order of provisional release issued by the Court of First Instance in Butare on 11 November 2002, which requires Witness CCR to periodically report to the authorities in Butare. It also provides that the terms of the provisional release shall cease to apply once the witness is acquitted or convicted of the charges laid against him.[239] In the Chamber's view, the Defence has not shown that because of his prior detention in Rwanda in connection with the genocide, Witness CCR had a motive to lie and that he in fact lied on the witness stand so as to curry favour with the Rwandan authorities.[240] Nonetheless, it is the Chamber's view that Witness CCR is an alleged participant in the genocide, and the Chamber therefore views his evidence with caution.

174. CCR's testimony must be considered in light of the evidence of Defence Witnesses MO67, MO68, MO81, and MO39. The Chamber concludes that MO39 is not credible; he was evasive during his testimony and denied the obvious, including ever seeing any soldiers or hearing about killings in Nyakizu commune between April and July 1994. However, the Chamber believes that Defence Witnesses MO67, MO68, and MO81 gave coherent and convincing testimony about events in Nyantanga in April 1994. They gave similar accounts of the physical location of the Nyantanga Trade Centre; each of them said there were no killings before 15 April 1994; however, on that day, members of the population were scared and had to go into hiding because some people were shouting that the Inkotanyi had come; finally, each of them denied that there was a meeting held by civil and military figures at the Nyantanga Trade Centre in April 1994. The Chamber notes that the Defence witnesses each testified that there was no meeting at the Nyantanga Trade Centre before 15 April 1994 or anytime thereafter. On the other hand, Witness CCR's evidence is to the effect that a meeting was held at that location on 20 April 1994. The Chamber accepts the evidence of the Defence witnesses.

175. In light of the inconsistencies between Prosecution Witness CCR's pre-trial statements and his testimony before the Chamber, as well as the uncorroborated nature of that testimony, and the fact that three Defence witnesses who were in a position to know, testified that to their knowledge no meeting was held at the Nyantanga Trade Centre, the Chamber concludes that the Prosecution has not proved beyond reasonable doubt that a meeting took place at Nyantanga Trade Centre on 20 April 1994 at which the Accused addressed the population. The Chamber further disbelieves CCR's testimony that another meeting was held on 21 April 1994 at Nyakizu Communal Office during which the Accused distributed weapons to the population. The Prosecution has equally failed to prove this alleged meeting took place.

41.12.1.5.12. 5.4.3. Meeting at a Roadblock in Rumba cellule, Kibilizi secteur

41.12.1.5.13. 5.4.3.1. Evidence

41.12.1.5.14. Prosecution Witness YAQ

176. Prosecution Witness YAQ testified that in April 1994, he lived in Nyabiduha, Kibilizi secteur, Mugusa commune, in Butare préfecture. He admitted before the Chamber, as he did in his confession before the Rwandan authorities, that he participated in the genocide. He manned roadblocks, looted and burned down Tutsi property, and killed Tutsi people. On 24 April 1994, at about 1.00 p.m., while YAQ was on duty at a roadblock located at Rumba cellule, Kibilizi secteur, the Accused arrived in a white Toyota vehicle together with Colonel Alphonse Nteziryayo, one Nsabimana who later appointed préfet, Kalimanzira who was a senior civilian officer in Butare, and other people. The Accused wore a camouflage military uniform with a black beret which had a sign or badge on it. There was a large crowd of people present at the roadblock which was located at the intersection of the roads leading to Butare, Rubona and Gikongoro, in front of one Sakindi's house.[241]

177. The Accused and the other military officers addressed the crowd. During his speech, the Accused told the population that "[t]omorrow, very early in the morning, if I do not find bodies, any dead bodies at this roadblock, I will conclude that you are all Tutsis. I myself will bring soldiers, and we will allow people from Shyanda – assailants from Shyanda, to come here, and they will even kill

[240] Ntakirutimana Judgement (AC), para. 181 where it was stated that that the mere fact that a detained witness might have a motive to lie so as to gain favour with the authorities detaining him, is by itself insufficient to prove that the witness in fact told a lie on the stand.

you."[242] The next day, that is 25 April 1994, the Accused returned to the roadblock to see if the killings had started. The witness testified that upon arrival of the Accused, there were dead bodies at the roadblock – "The first person to be killed and who was a Tutsi was Rwabigwi. There was also Rubanda, Isador Mutiganda, Kayiranga. These are the names that I remember, but I believe there were about seven bodies."[243]

178. Witness YAQ said that before Muvunyi's speech, a soldier who had come along with the Accused posed the following rhetorical question: "You Hutus of this area, do you know how to cut the throats? ... You Hutus of this area, do you know how to cut people's neck?" This soldier then put his hands around his own neck and demonstrated to the population how they could cut other people's necks. After the soldier's speech, Nteziryayo also took the floor and said: "As from today, you should be aware that all the communes have finished, and I believe that you are aware that you should start eating the cattle of the Tutsis who are in this area, and you should burn down their houses."[244]

179. YAQ gave evidence that after hearing these speeches, members of the population were given matches by the leaders of the MRND and they proceeded to burn down houses belonging to the Tutsis and to eat their cattle. He added that the next day, 25 April 1994, the killings began.[245]

41.12.1.5.16. 5.4.3.2. Deliberations

180. By his own admission, Witness YAQ was an accomplice to the 1994 genocidal killings in Rwanda and the Chamber therefore views his evidence with caution. The Chamber has considered Witness YAQ's testimony that while working at a roadblock in Rumba cellule on 24 April 1994, the Accused arrived with other military and civilian officials and threatened those manning the roadblock that if by the next day he does not find any dead bodies at that spot, he will consider all of them as Tutsis, and would bring assailants from another commune to attack and kill them. As a result of this threat, a number of Tutsis were killed the following day.

181. The Chamber recalls that the Tribunal can make a finding of fact on the basis of the evidence of a single witness if it finds such evidence relevant, reliable and probative of the material facts alleged in the Indictment.[246] However, the Chamber concludes that in the circumstances of the present case, the evidence of Witness YAQ is not sufficiently reliable or credible to ground a finding of fact beyond reasonable doubt that a meeting took place at a roadblock in Rumba cellule on 24 April 1994 at which the Accused incited the population to kill Tutsis. The Chamber will therefore not rely on this evidence and holds that the Prosecution has not proved beyond reasonable doubt that Muvunyi visited the roadblock at Rumba cellule on 24 April 1994 or that he threatened those manning the roadblock to kill Tutsis or otherwise get killed by assailants from another commune.

Given that he had said that he would return to see whether the members of the population had, indeed, started killing people, he came back and there were dead bodies at the roadblock."

41.12.1.5.19. 5.4.4.1. Evidence

41.12.1.5.20.

41.12.1.5.21. Prosecution Witness YAQ

182. Witness YAQ recalled that he attended another meeting held in Gikonko, in Mugusa commune, sometime in April or May 1994. The meeting was called by the bourgmestre of Mugusa, Mr. André Kabayiza.[247]

183. Most people who attended the meeting were armed Hutu men, but YAQ explained that a few Tutsi who carried Hutu identity cards might also have been present. Upon their arrival at the communal Office, YAQ and the other people found Muvunyi, Nteziryayo and Kalimanzira already there sitting in a red Toyota vehicle. Some people had surrounded the vehicle. There was a soldier at the back of the vehicle with a big gun mounted above the cabin. Muvunyi wore a military uniform and carried a pistol.[248]

184. The first speaker, Nteziryayo, said: "We can see that the Inkotanyis have already taken over the entire country because they are also in Butare. So you, the members of the population, you have not fought against the Inkotanyis as we instructed you to do, so return to the *commune*s and do the mopping up. The Tutsis who are still alive, whether they are young girls, men, or women who had been forced into marriage, and all those who look like them should be killed. The Inkotanyis have already taken over the country, and if you do not kill them, they are going to tell the Inkotanyis what you have done."[249]

185. Conseiller Gasana then told the crowd that while Nteziryayo was asking the population to go and mop up the Tutsi, he, Gasana, was aware that the bourgmestre was hiding a Tutsi. He said there was no reason for them to go and look for the snakes in the bushes when there were serpents or snakes right in front of their doors. YAQ testified that the reference to "serpents" or "snakes" in Gasana's speech was in fact an oblique reference to Tutsis. He said Gasana was referring to the Tutsis that the bourgmestre was hiding at the communal office, in particular, one Vincent Nkurikiyinka who was a friend of the bourgmestre.[250]

186. After Gasana made these remarks, the Accused then turned to the bourgmestre and said: "How could you be hiding a Tutsi when you are a bourgmestre? You have to hand him over so that he should be killed." The Accused added that "when a snake is near a calabash, it is necessary to break that calabash in order to get the snake."[251] YAQ informed the Chamber that as a result of what Muvunyi said, the bourgmestre ordered people to go below the communal office and bring out Vincent, the Tutsi man who was in hiding. A group of attackers went from the meeting to the communal offices where they captured Vincent, took him to his own house and killed him. Members of the population thereafter returned to their respective *commune*s to mop up the surviving Tutsis as they had been told.[252]

187. Defence Witness MO80, a Hutu, lived in Mugusa commune, Kibilizi secteur, in April 1994. He said that one or two weeks after President Habyarimana's death, conseiller Gasana directed that roadblocks should be set up in Mugusa commune. The witness was assigned to a roadblock located on the "junction of the main road from Butare and the one going to ISAE Rubona or the one going into Mugusa commune" near Sakindi's house where he worked for about two weeks.[253] During this period, he never took part in or heard of a public meeting involving the populations of Mugusa, Ndora, Uyaga and Muganza.[254] If such a meeting had taken place in his secteur, he would have known about it, although it would be difficult to know about meetings in the commune in general.[255]

188. MO80 also confirmed that a Tutsi civilian called Vincent Nkurikiyinka was abducted from his hiding place at the Communal Office and taken to his house where he was killed. The armed Hutu attackers were led by conseiller Gasana. This event took place in mid-May 1994.[256]

41.12.1.5.23. 5.4.4.2. Deliberations

189. The Chamber has considered Witness YAQ's evidence on the meeting held at Gikonko sometime in April or May 1994. The Chamber believes YAQ's account and notes that certain aspects of his testimony are supported by that of Defence Witness MO80. While the latter denied that there were any public meetings in his secteur in April or May 1994, he admitted he could not tell as a matter of certainty that meetings were not held in other parts of the commune. In the Chamber's view, the fact that Witness MO80 was not aware of the meeting at Gikonko does not mean that the meeting did not take place. The Chamber notes that both witnesses stated that conseiller Gasana was the leader of the armed attackers, that Vincent was abducted from the Mugusa Communal Office and that he was killed sometime in April or May 1994.

190. Having considered all the evidence, the Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that Muvunyi addressed Hutu members of the population in April or May 1994 in Gikonko. The Chamber also finds the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Muvunyi blamed the bourgmestre of Gikonko for hiding a Tutsi man and asked him to deliver the said man to the killers. The Chamber believes this aspect of Witness YAQ's evidence and finds that Muvunyi used the Rwandan proverb, "when a snake is near a calabash, it is necessary to break that calabash in order to get the snake", and that the population understood his remarks as a call to kill Tutsis.[257] The Chamber is also satisfied that Muvunyi knew that his audience would understand his words as a call to kill the Tutsi man Vincent. The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt, and the Chamber therefore finds that as a result of Muvunyi's remarks, Vincent, a Tutsi man, was arrested from his hiding place and killed by a group of armed attackers under the leadership of conseiller Gasana.

41.12.1.5.26. 5.4.5.1. Evidence

41.12.1.5.27.

41.12.1.5.28. Prosecution Witness YAI

191. Witness YAI testified that he attended a "security" meeting at the market square of the Gikore Trade Centre towards the end of May 1994. The meeting started at about 1.00 p.m. Colonel Muvunyi attended the meeting accompanied by Jean-Baptiste Ruzindana, the sous-préfet of Butare called Laurent, the s*ous-préfet* of Gisagara called Dominic Ntawukuliyrayo and the bourgmestre of Nyaruhengeri commune.[258] Also in attendance were about one thousand local people, mainly Hutu from the Nyaruhengeri, Kegembe and Muganza communes.[259]

192. During his speech, Muvunyi reminded the population that the country was at war, and that they were fighting against the Inkotanyi. He informed the attendees that the Inkotanyi start by infiltrating areas they wish to attack, and that "[e]ven in our own area, the Inkotanyi were already present." He warned the population that if they were not vigilant, the Inkotanyi "will make it to [their] own homes." He further called on members of the population to "beef up the roadblocks; to conduct night patrols, and to take full control of their security."[260] On the issue of Hutu men who had forcefully taken Tutsi women as wives, the Accused told the population "to send these women back to their homes". In YAI's view, because the homes of the Tutsis had been destroyed and their property plundered, Muvunyi's reference to sending the women home "simply meant to deliver those persons to the killers."[261]

193. Next, YAI stated that Muvunyi pointed to a partially demolished house in front of him and said: "Look at that house that has been destroyed. You will be blamed for that. So level the houses; bring them down completely – those houses that are still standing – these Tutsi houses that are still standing. And in the place of those houses, cultivate and plant banana plantations and you will see what will happen."[262] Witness YAI testified that by these words, Muvunyi wanted to make sure that no one could in future give an account of what had transpired and "in so doing, make any Prosecution difficult."[263] He added that Muvunyi spoke in a "firm" tone during the meeting.

194. After Muvunyi, Jean-Baptiste Ruzindaza took the floor and invoked Biblical scripture from the Prophet Jeremiah about an enemy who came from the North and killed and destroyed everything in its path. According to YAI, Ruzindaza's speech was not a prayer for peace, but a "satanic prayer", because it was used to "call on people to kill." He recalled that Ruzindaza urged the population to be vigilant so as to avoid infiltration into their areas by the Inkotanyi. Ruzindaza also stated that it was unfortunate that the Hutu had not been trained to kill, and that parents should encourage their Hutu

A: He was referring to the roots or the origin of these people. The places from which they came as they escaped. This was in Gikore in the south. The southern border with Burundi and these people came from all over – attempting to cross over into Burundi in order to escape and find freedom.
Q: Mr. Witness, to the best of your knowledge, at the time of the meeting, what had happened to the homes of Tutsi people?
A: The houses of Tutsis had been demolished and their property plundered. So when one said that these people were to be sent back to their home, that was not correct. It simply meant to deliver those persons to their killers."

children to "have a mastery of the art of killing."[264] Finally, the witness recalled that Ruzindaza employed the Rwandan proverb that "those who did not wish to spill their blood for their country would have dogs drink it", meaning that people should not be afraid to spill their blood for their country.[265]

41.12.1.5.29. Prosecution Witness CCP

195. Witness CCP testified that he first met the Accused at a meeting held in Gikore in May or June 1994. The meeting was held at a location opposite Chez Vénuste Nkulikiyukuri and was attended by members of the population from all ethnic groups. A number of officials were in attendance, including Muvunyi, the then préfet of Butare called Alphonse Nteziryayo, one Ruzindaza, the bourgmestre called Charles Kabeza, conseillers, and Responsables de cellule.[266] Nteziryayo, Muvunyi and Ruzindaza addressed the meeting.

196. During their respective speeches, Witness CCP stood at a distance of approximately 4 to 5 metres away from the speakers and so could see and hear them clearly. He testified that the préfet, Mr. Nteziryayo, told the population that the country had been attacked by the Inyenzi/Inkotanyi. He called on the young people to go and fight against the Inkotanyi, chase them away and take over their property. CCP recalled that Nteziryayo referred to Tutsi as "serpents" and said that their eggs should be destroyed. He concluded by warning the people gathered in the following terms: "When you refuse to pour or to shed your blood for the country, dogs will drink it for free." Witness CCP testified that he was frightened by the préfet's words because he understood them to imply a call to members of the population to kill those who were being referred to as "serpents", and that the reference to "eggs" implied that little children, including newly-born babies, had to be killed.[267]

197. In his speech, Muvunyi told young Hutu men who had married Tutsi girls that they should either kill those girls or send them away. The Accused invoked a Rwandan proverb and said the Tutsi girls "should die elsewhere because they could poison" their Hutu husbands. Furthermore, the Accused told his audience that Tutsi were serpents that should be killed and their eggs crushed. The Accused added: "I know that very well […] I know that you have hidden girls and children. Go and seek them out and kill them." Witness CCP said he understood Muvunyi's words to be a call on young Hutu to kill Tutsi girls and that the reference to "serpents" was a way of saying that Tutsi and their children should be killed.[268]

198. CCP also testified that Muvunyi pointed to a partially demolished house opposite the meeting venue and called on the population to pull it down completely and grow plants in its place. During cross-examination, CCP reaffirmed this testimony, and clarified that the house in question belonged to a priest and that the Accused told the population to destroy it completely and plant pumpkins in its place. According to CCP, by asking the population to destroy the house and plant pumpkins in its place, Muvunyi wanted to "destroy all traces of genocide in Rwanda."[269]

[267] T. 9 June 2005, pp. 5-6. "When I heard that message I was afraid because people were being referred to as serpents. People were being asked to kill them. When it is said that somebody is a serpent and that the person has to be killed, they were talking about people, and they were talking about eggs referring to little children and even babies who had just been born. So you would understand that those words were very intimidating."
[268] T. 9 June 2005, pp. 6-7. At p. 26, during cross-examination, Witness CCP stated as follows: "People who had detained these women for sexual purposes had to kill them or drive them away. … He [Muvunyi] said that the people who had subjected those girls to sexual slavery had to kill them, and those who could not kill them had to drive them away. He was worried, he was concerned that these women were going to exterminate Hutus by poisoning them. So he said he had no pity for those women."
[269] T. 9 June 2005, pp. 6, 41. "What I believe I said is that this person, Tharcisse Muvunyi, pointed to the house of a priest which had been partially destroyed and said that this house should be completely destroyed and pumpkins planted. And this is a plant that covers the entire ground when it is planted, and therefore you will not be able to see the ground or the soil that it covers."

199. The third official to speak, according to CCP, was Ruzindaza. The witness said that Ruzindana held a Bible during his speech and prayed to God to teach Hutu to kill, "as Tutsis grow up to kill."[270]

200. The meeting lasted for about an hour and ended in the afternoon. According to CCP, the following morning, "there was a disaster because as was prescribed, people were killed, and the instructions which were given were followed." He explained that those killed were Tutsi and those who did the killing were Hutu, but not all Hutu were involved in the killing.[271]

201. Witness CCP denied any personal involvement in the killings.[272] However, Defence Counsel referred to the witness's pre-trial statement of 19 October 1999, in which the witness is alleged to have admitted taking part in the hunt for and killing of Tutsis.[273] The witness admitted to making part of this statement, but denied that he participated in killing Tutsi.[274]

202. Defence Witness MO78 testified that on the 23 or 24 May 1994, he attended a public meeting at Gikore secteur, Nyaruhengeri commune.[275] The meeting was organized by the bourgmestre of Nyaruhengeri, Charles Kabeza. According to Witness MO78, the purpose of the meeting was to promote peace in Nyaruhengeri, and to foster unity among members of the population.[276] He added that several officials attended the meeting including Tharcisse Muvunyi, Alphonse Nteziryayo, Sylvain Nsabimana (the préfet of Butare), Mr. Rosendarusa, and Dominic Ntawukuriryayo.[277]

203. Muvunyi spoke at the meeting and said that the purpose of the meeting was to restore security to the area and urged members of the population to remain united. He told them that the war was between the RPF and the Rwandan Army and that it did not concern the public. Muvunyi further told the population to fight against Army deserters, and also called on those with military equipment to return such materials in order not to frighten members of the population.[278]

204. Witness MO78 added that he did not recall that Muvunyi or any other speaker called on the population to get rid of their Tutsi wives, or to pull down structures belonging to Tutsis, or to plant anything in place of destroyed Tutsi houses. He further said he did not remember that any of the speakers invoked a Rwandan proverb or that someone said a prayer at the meeting.[279] Witness MO78

[272] T. 9 June 2005, p. 16. Witness CCP explained that he was detained in 1996 upon his return from exile in Burundi on suspicion that he committed rape in 1994. He added that he was released after an investigation found him innocent of the rape allegation. However, CCP admitted that on one occasion during the events of 1994, a group of killers asked him to keep watch over three people – a girl and two of her brothers – while they embarked on their killing spree. He kept watch over the three people and delivered them back to the killers upon their return. The witness stated that he released the people back to the killers because it was said that they were going to be taken to one Buchumi, who would confirm that they were Hutus.
[273] T. 9 June 2005, p. 16; CCP testified: "These deaths signalled the killings in our area because the same morning a certain Rowansnashyroka, alias Zona, a Hutu, accompanied by about ten other Hutus, whose identity I cannot remember, came to look for me at my home and asked me to go with them to participate in the hunt for Tutsis, which they had organized. … They even threatened to kill me if I refused to follow them. … We had to look for the Tutsis in our secteur, assemble them together, kill them and throw their bodies into the lake."

confirmed that he knew Prosecution Witness YAI, but could not recall if the latter attended the meeting held at Gikore on 23 or 24 May 1994. He said he did not know Prosecution Witness CCP.[280]

41.12.1.5.32. Defence Witness MO30

205. Defence Witness MO30 testified that during the events of 1994, he saw Muvunyi at public meetings at the commune Office or at Amohoro stadium. The meetings were convened by the préfet to mobilise the population and to restore security to the area.[281] He explained that Muvunyi attended these meetings as the envoy or representative of the powers who were in command. According to Witness M030, in May 1994, there was a meeting in the urban commune attended by communal and préfectoral authorities, as well as private sector persons such as himself. Sometime in mid-June, Muvunyi and General Gatsinzi were both present at a public meeting chaired by the préfet. At this meeting, the authorities gave information to the population about their attitude towards work, on the road and in their homes.[282]

41.12.1.5.33. 5.4.5.2. Deliberations

206. The Chamber has considered the Defence objections that Prosecution Witnesses YAI and CCP should not be believed because they were both, at various times, arrested and detained in connection with the genocide. CCP admitted that in 1996 he was arrested on suspicion of having committed rape in 1994, but was subsequently found innocent and released. He also admitted that during the 1994 events, members of a Hutu militia had asked him to join them in hunting down and killing Tutsis and that they threatened to kill him if he refused. However, he states that he did not join the killing campaign because the killers had asked him to watch over a Tutsi girl and two of her brothers whom they later picked up from him. He explained that he handed the detainees over because it was said that they would be taken to one Buchumi to confirm that they were Hutu. It is not clear what happened to these three persons. The Chamber considers, in light of the above evidence, that Witness CCP is an accomplice to the genocidal killings that took place in Rwanda in 1994 and views his evidence with caution.

207. The Defence also argues that CCP should not be believed because he testified that Colonel Nteziryayo attended the Gikore meeting as préfet of Butare, and this could not have been the case since Nteziryayo was appointed préfet on 17 June 1994. The Defence produced Exhibit D13, a letter ostensibly emanating from the Rwandan Council of Ministers, appointing Nteziryayo to that position with effect from 17 June 1994.[283] The Chamber holds that this misstatement of the capacity in which Nteziryayo might have attended the Gikore meeting is immaterial to the issue to be determined and does not affect the overall credibility of Witness CCP. The Chamber has heard evidence from other witnesses that Nteziryayo was the Chairman of the civil defence program in Butare in 1994 before his appointment as préfet.[284] Considering the context of events in Rwanda in 1994, his attendance at a "security" or "sensitization" meeting is not inconsistent with the duties that the holder of such an office might be expected to carry out.

208. With respect to YAI, the Chamber notes that up to the time he testified, he was being held in Rwanda in connection with the killing of a Tutsi man named Mukunzi, together with his wife and children. The witness denies that he was involved in the killing of the Mukunzi family; on the contrary, he testified that he hid the Mukunzi family in his house in order to protect them from the killers, but that they were subsequently discovered and killed. The witness has not yet been tried in connection with the killings of the Mukunzi family. The Chamber recalls the Appeals Chamber's reasoning to the effect that merely because a detained witness might have a motive to lie so as to gain favour with the authorities detaining him, is, by itself, insufficient to prove that the witness in fact told a lie on the stand.[285] Nonetheless, the Chamber will assess Witness YAI's evidence with caution.

209. The Chamber has closely examined the evidence of YAI and CCP. Both witnesses testified that a meeting took place in Gikore sometime towards the end of May or early June 1994 and that Tharcisse Muvunyi attended the meeting and addressed the population as did a number of other military and civilian authorities. The Chamber is satisfied that during the meeting, Muvunyi called on young Hutu men to send their Tutsi wives away; he said Tutsi women could poison their husbands; he referred to Tutsis as "serpents" or "snakes" to be killed and their eggs crushed; and asked the population to pull down a partially demolished house that belonged to a Tutsi priest and plant crops in its place. The account that the two Prosecution witnesses gave of Muvunyi's speech at Gikore is strikingly similar. The Chamber has not received any evidence to suggest that they fabricated or otherwise colluded to harmonize their testimonies. The Chamber therefore concludes that they both gave reliable evidence of the Gikore meeting and the speech the Accused made there.

210. The Chamber adds that the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses YAI and CCP is corroborated by that of Defence Witness MO78 who confirmed that he saw Muvunyi at a public meeting in Gikore on 23 or 24 May 1994, and that Nteziryayo and Nsabimana were also in attendance. The Chamber, however, disbelieves Witness MO78's evidence to the extent he said that in their speeches, Muvunyi and the other officials promoted peace, security and friendly relations among members of the population. This evidence is rejected in light of the clear and coherent evidence to the contrary given by Witnesses YAI and CCP.

211. The Chamber therefore concludes that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that at a meeting held in Gikore in May 1994, Muvunyi made a speech in which he called for the killing of Tutsis, the destruction of Tutsi property, associated Tutsis with the enemy, and denigrated Tutsi people by associating them with snakes, serpents, and poisonous agents. The Chamber is also satisfied that his audience understood Muvunyi's words as a call to kill Tutsis, and that the Accused knew that this would be the effect of his words on the audience.

41.12.1.6. 5.5. Provision of Weapons to Militiamen

41.12.1.6.1. 5.5.1. Indictment

212. Paragraph 3.26 reads:

> 3.26 During the events referred to in this Indictment, Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi participated in the provision of weapons such as grenades to these militiamen to perpetrate attacks against the Tutsis.

5.5.2. Evidence

41.12.1.6.2. Prosecution Witness KAL

213. Witness KAL testified that he attended a secret meeting held at Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi's house located at Joli Bois inside the ESO Camp. Also present were Lieutenant Bizimana, and the bourgmestres of Ngoma and Huye communes. He said generally when bourgmestres met, they did so to request guns for themselves or for civilians trained at ESO. He added that the bourgmestres had enlisted civilians who had to learn to handle firearms. After the meeting, "people indeed came to the [285] Ntakirutimana, Judgement (AC), para. 181.

Camp to receive a weeklong training on how to operate firearms."[286] He said that the training was conducted by soldiers of the ESO Camp. Captain Nizeyimana, who was officer in charge of operations and training at ESO, came from time to time to check on the progress of the training programme. KAL testified that upon completion of their training, these civilians were sent to the communes to "look for the enemy." He added that the trainees were issued various types of weapons before leaving the Camp, including Kalashnikov rifles, R-4 rifles, FAR rifles, G-3 rifles and grenades.[287]

41.12.1.6.3. Prosecution Witness YAA

214. Witness YAA testified that when he returned to ESO from Kigali in May 1994, he found out that Captain Nizeyimana and 2nd Lieutenant Modeste Gatsinzi were based in Mata, in Gikongoro préfecture, where they trained Interahamwe and Burundians on how to handle guns. Witness YAA explained that Nizeyimana returned to ESO a few times in order to obtain training equipment and ammunition as well as other supplies such as petrol and food for the trainees. He knew that Nizeyimana and Gatsinzi were based in Mata because when they came to ESO, he spoke to them. YAA added that when he fled from ESO on 8 June 1994, he met 2nd Lieutenant Gatsinzi at Gikongoro town. The latter was on board a van with trainees from ESO Nouvelle Formule. YAA spoke to Gatsinzi, who told him that he was based in Mata, where he was training Interahamwe.[288]

41.12.1.6.4. Prosecution Witness CCR

215. Witness CCR testified that at a meeting in Nyakizu commune on the 21st April 1994, Muvunyi told the population that weapons would be distributed after the meeting. He explained that priority would be given to those who already knew how to use weapons, and to reserve soldiers and policemen who were no longer in active service.[289]

216. CCR testified that during the meeting, he saw a deep-green CTA military truck that had weapons loaded on it. It was covered with tarpaulin. He does not state how he knew the truck was loaded with weapons. The witness was not present when the weapons were distributed, but later met at least three people with weapons, who confirmed to him that they received them at the meeting, and that they were part of weapons distributed by the Accused.[290]

217. Defence Witness MO67 testified that the Nyantanga Trade Centre was located in Nyakizu commune, Butare préfecture.[291] According to Witness MO67, from the time of the President's death until when she left for Gikongoro in July, she never heard or saw weapons being distributed at the Nyantanga Trading Centre.[292]

In answer to the Prosecutor's question about how witness knew that weapons were distributed if he did not personally witness such distribution, CCR answered: "I found out in two ways: one, the vehicle in which the weapons were loaded was parked on the premises, and it was a CTA truck. Following the distribution of weapons, I saw three persons who were in possession of the weapons. … Now, Augustin Kabayiza came to my place of work with a brand new gun, a G-3 gun, which he had never owned before. So he showed us the gun, proudly displaying it. So I took it in my hand, and he said he had received the gun because he was a reserve officer or reserve soldier. … One Jean-Baptiste Bazaramba also had a gun. He had a Kalashnikov, a brand new Kalashnikov. The former communal police Kaganwa also had a gun, and it was a machine-gun, an old machine-gun."

[292] T. 7 February 2006, p. 12 (I.C.S.).

41.12.1.6.6. Defence Witness MO68

218. Witness MO68 testified that there was no distribution of weapons at the Nyantanga Trade Centre and that throughout the 1994 events while she was in Nyantanga, she never saw any military vehicle or firearm.[293]

41.12.1.6.7. Defence Witness MO81

219. Witness MO81 testified that before 15 April he did not see any military personnel in the Nyantanga Trade Centre area and that he did not see any soldiers distributing weapons at the Centre or any other place. He said that he fled Rwanda for Burundi where he stayed for about one-and-half months and returned in late June or early July.[294]

41.12.1.6.8. 5.5.3. Deliberations

220. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution Closing Brief does not address Paragraph 3.26 of the Indictment. It is therefore unclear which witnesses the Prosecution wishes to rely on to prove this allegation, or if indeed it intends to support or abandon the paragraph. However, in the absence of express notice of withdrawal, the Chamber must consider whether the allegation is supported by any of the evidence brought before it.

221. Witness KAL is the only witness who testified that Muvunyi met with the bourgmestres of Ngoma and Huye communes and that after the meeting, civilians came to ESO for training and were given weapons and asked to go and "look for the enemy", understood as Tutsi civilians. The Chamber has serious doubts about KAL's testimony in this respect. He does not state when this meeting took place, and he speculates that "[g]enerally, when bourgmestres met, they were meeting to request guns for the civilians being trained at ESO Camp. These were civilians. Or they came to request guns for themselves. They came, in particular, to submit reports to the ESO Camp."[295] His testimony is not supported by that of any other witness.

222. The Chamber believes that if civilians were trained and issued weapons at ESO in 1994, this circumstance would have been known by more than one person. The fact that none of the other Prosecution witnesses spoke about this issue, including YAA and NN, who worked at ESO, reinforces the Chamber's doubts about the accuracy of Witness KAL's account. Consequently, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not proved beyond reasonable doubt that Muvunyi trained or distributed weapons to civilian militia at ESO in 1994.

223. Similarly, the Chamber has doubts about YAA's testimony that in May 1994, Interahamwe militiamen were trained by ESO soldiers Nizeyimana and Modeste Gatsinzi in Mata. At first, the witness said he heard that these two ESO officers were training Interahamwe and Burundians; then he said he met Gatsinzi in Gikongoro and the latter was accompanied by a truck-load of ESO nouvelle formule trainees; finally he said during their conversation, Gatsinzi told him he was training Interahamwe at Mata. The Chamber concludes that this inconsistent testimony leaves a reasonable doubt about whether Muvunyi provided weapons for the training of civilian militia to perpetrate attacks against Tutsis as alleged in the Indictment. The Chamber has already concluded (with respect to the "sensitization meetings") that CCR's testimony about the alleged meeting at Nyakizu Communal office on 21 April 1994 is not credible and therefore will not consider here the allegation that Muvunyi distributed weapons at that meeting.

41.12.1.7. 5.6. Attack on Wounded Refugees at the Butare University Hospital

41.12.1.7.1. 5.6.1. Indictment

224. Paragraph 3.29 reads:

> 3.29 On or about the 15th of April, Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi in the company of a section of soldiers participated in the attack on wounded refugees at the University Hospital in Butare separating the Tutsis from the Hutus and killing the Tutsi refugees.

41.12.1.7.2. 5.6.2. Evidence

41.12.1.7.4.

225. Witness XV was an employee at the Butare University Hospital in 1994.[296] He testified that as a result of the deteriorating security situation following the death of the Rwandan President on 6 April 1994, he stayed at home with his Hutu wife and four children together with their two domestic servants until around the 15 or 16 April 1994.[297] On one of those dates, Witness XV received a letter signed by the Director of "the University Establishment" and "by Commander Muvunyi" instructing him to return to work. XV said he obeyed the instruction and returned to work at the University Hospital. At that point he added: "[t]hey hadn't started killing people". However, around the 18 or 19 April, his boss asked him to stop coming to work because "houses were being burnt and people had started running away" in the hills around Nyarutovu. He therefore stayed at home from that date until around 21 April, 1994. Meanwhile, his wife had taken the children to the University Hospital "because she used to work there and she thought that the children would be safer there." At this time, his neighbours houses were being burnt down, and people were being asked to ensure their own security.[298] XV said his family left the hospital only because the Head of Service at the hospital said "he didn't want to hold any refugees at the hospital and referred to them as Inyenzi."[299]

226. Witness XV returned to the hospital on or around the 21 April, after surviving an attack by ESO and Ngoma Camp soldiers and Interahamwe on refugees at Mukura forest.[300] Upon his arrival at the hospital, Witness XV saw some refugees and uniformed soldiers who were armed with guns. Shortly thereafter, the Interahamwe arrived and in collaboration with the soldiers, asked people to show their identity cards. XV recalled that anyone who did not have an identity card "was taken for a Tutsi, or was referred to as a Tutsi Inyenzi." Witness XV was not asked to show his identity card because a soldier whom he had helped in the past, assisted him to evade being asked to show his identity papers.[301]

227. Witness XV testified that sometime in May 1994, Muvunyi visited the hospital accompanied by other military officials and a lady called Nyiramasuhuko. Although Witness XV stated that he had seen Muvunyi before that date, specifically "in Butare Town" and "when he came from Taba", the witness also stated that it was one of his colleagues who told him that the person who was visiting the hospital that day was Muvunyi, and that "he was the commander of the soldiers who were both within the hospital and who were outside, and they had come to determine whether the work had been done

Witness VX stated to the Chamber as follows: "What they did is that – a soldier whom I had helped and I – the doctors were aware of this, the nurses had asked me to assist that soldier. And this soldier told me that, "This Tutsi has treated me poorly, and I'll take him down the slopes to give him his reward."

properly."[302] Witness XV estimated that Muvunyi stayed at the hospital for about 20 minutes on that occasion, and even though he could not hear what Muvunyi was saying, he stood about "12 steps away from him", and could see him talking to the soldiers and civilians.[303]

228. After Muvunyi's departure, the soldiers continued to check the identity papers of the refugees during the day, and took people away at night "to be killed." Witness XV said he personally witnessed a soldier called Phillip Jeans, a native of Kibuye, shoot and kill a male refugee who had come from Ngoma. XV added that his own sister was taken away by soldiers on one Sunday and that she never returned after that.[304] He said during his stay at the hospital, he also saw other people being killed including a man called Claude Dogo, and a child who was suffering from diabetes.[305]

229. XV further testified that most of the refugees were wounded and hungry. Nonetheless, soldiers and Interahamwe took them away, and it was clear that "they were taking them to kill them in mass graves." The witness explained that he knew this because one of the refugees, whom the soldiers had taken away and tried to kill with a hoe, escaped and told the witness that the other refugees had been killed.[306] Witness XV explained that he survived the attacks because he wore a service robe and some nurses gave him their keys which enabled him to move from room to room. XV stated that on the day after his sister was taken away, he escaped from the hospital with the help of a staff member who put him on the hospital ambulance.[307]

230. Witness YAP was an employee of the Butare University Hospital between April and July 1994.[308] He testified that he did not know Tharcisse Muvunyi personally, but knew that Muvunyi was the Commander of ESO, "because everybody talked about it."[309] YAP also stated that he was friends with several soldiers from ESO and many of them talked about Muvunyi, their Commander. He mentioned Corporal Rwagihangi, Corporal Bicamumpaka, a certain Adele, and Corporal Mamishi.[310]

231. According to YAP's testimony, after he learnt of the death of President Habyarimana on 7 April, he went to the hospital and noticed that several things had changed. There were very few workers, the number of Tutsi refugees had increased, and soldiers had entered the hospital premises. Some of the refugees came from Gikongoro, and others from Nyaruteza, Mpare, Vumbi, and Runyinya communes. The refugees from Gikongoro and Nyaruteja were wounded. Those from the other communes were not wounded, but they were fleeing from areas that were under attack.[311] YAP testified that there was one refugee who had come from Kigali. This refugee informed Witness YAP that initially, nine of them had started the journey from Kigali to Butare. However, upon their arrival at Ngoma Camp, eight of the refugees were beaten to death by soldiers belonging to that camp. Their bodies were dumped at Mubumbano in Gishamvu commune. The bourgmestre of Gishambvu, Pascal Kambanda, took the bodies for an autopsy, and the surviving refugee came to the Butare University Hospital for an X-ray. That was how the said refugee met with Witness YAP. YAP testified that this refugee also died later.[312]

232. Witness YAP testified that during the period he stayed at the Hospital, an ESO soldier called Bizimana (alias Rwatsi, or Ruhati) was training Burundian refugees at the hospital on how to handle and dismantle weapons.[313] YAP said the young Burundians lived under tents next to the paediatric service. When Witness YAP observed this activity, he reported it to the medical officer of the hospital, Jotham Hakizumukika. The latter in turn promised to inform the ESO Commander, and told YAP that the ESO Commander was Muvunyi. Three days later, YAP said he inquired from Jotham about the outcome of his contact with the ESO Commander. Jotham responded that when he informed the ESO Commander about YAP's report, the Commander told him that it was impossible to punish a soldier during wartime.[314]

233. Witness YAP also stated that sometime after 20 April 1994, he learnt about the existence of a Crisis Committee at the Hospital. The members of the Committee were Dr. Karemera, who was Dean of the Faculty of Medicine, Dr. Gatera, the Head of the Surgery Unit, and other civilians such as Twahirwa and Nshimyumukiza. The Committee also included 18 ESO soldiers including one Nizeyimana, Mberabagabo, Sekimonyo, Second-Lieutenant Rwanyonga who was a student at the Faculty of Medicine, Muzungu, and Nzema. He added that while the Crisis Committee was supposed to provide security at the hospital, it in fact sought out people and killed them.[315]

234. Prosecution Witness YAP testified that as a result of the deteriorating security situation, he stopped going to work on 18 April 1994. From that day until 3 July, he mostly remained in hiding at home, except for four occasions on which he visited the University hospital.[316] During his first visit on 20 April 1994 he saw a Corporal called Kayitana, who came from ESO with instructions that a search should be conducted within the hospital. YAP explained that this "search" actually involved "seek[ing] out the Tutsis who were within the hospital complex."[317] The witness admitted he did not speak to Kayitana directly, but said he was present when the latter spoke to the "officer in charge."[318]

235. In his further testimony before the Chamber, YAP said that even though he left the hospital premises as the people who were going to conduct the search arrived, he saw everything that happened. He explained to the Chamber that he withdrew to a location not far from both the ESO Camp and the University Hospital, and clearly saw all that transpired.[319] The search party included one Nyimyumukiza, Dr. Gatera, Dr. Karemera, the Vice-Rector of the University, soldiers and Interhamwe and they asked the Tutsi refugees to board a red pick-up vehicle that belonged to the hospital. The pick-up made several trips.

236. YAP testified that soldiers and some surviving refugees later told him that the pick-up truck took the refugees to the EER primary school. In particular, a female survivor told YAP that the refugees were taken from the University Hospital to EER.[320] This woman also told Witness YAP that those refugees who survived the journey from the University Hospital to EER were taken from EER to the préfecture Office. Some were then forced to flee to Kabilizi, while others were taken to Cyarwa and killed. The witness further testified that other refugees were taken and killed near an Electrogaz transformer located "quite close" to the University Hospital. Finally, YAP testified that the last remaining refugees arrived at Rango forest and were subsequently rescued by the RPF Inkotanyi. [321]

237. On his second visit to the hospital sometime in May, Witness YAP went to accompany one of his neighbours who had asked him for help because Witness YAP worked at the hospital. He stayed for about "30 minutes … in any case, not up to an hour."[322] Upon their arrival, he noticed that there were many soldiers both in the parking lot and in the corridors. He observed that because the hospital was so close to ESO, the health facility had almost become a military camp. YAP said that with a few exceptions, all the other soldiers he saw were from ESO and they were armed.[323]

238. Witness YAP's third visit to the hospital after 18 April took place on a Sunday in late May or early June 1994. On this occasion, he noticed that the beds in the paediatric unit and the dermatology service were occupied by soldiers. He spoke briefly to the hospital director and returned the following Tuesday to receive his salary.[324] YAP testified that on that Tuesday (the fourth visit) the director sent the hospital ambulance to pick him up from and return him back to his house. Witness YAP did not tell the Chamber about anything he saw at the hospital on this visit.

41.12.1.7.6. Prosecution Witness AFV

239. During the events of April 1994, Witness AFV was an employee of the Butare University Hospital. She testified that normally, she walked from her house to her place of work. However, on 7 April, as a result of the death of President Habyarimana, the "security situation was precarious. People could not move around freely; roadblocks had been erected; Tutsis could not move around; they were being asked to present their identification papers, and everywhere, where they had to pass, they had to go through roadblocks which were manned by soldiers." Due to this difficult security situation, the service vehicle picked her up for work on 7 April. However, on 19 and 20 April, the said vehicle did not pick her up, so she had to walk to work. When she arrived at the hospital on 20 April, Witness AFV noticed the presence of an unusually large number of armed soldiers on the premises. This was unusual because normally, "a few soldiers would come there to seek treatment and they would not be carrying weapons."[325] The armed soldiers were wearing camouflage uniforms, the same type of uniforms that Witness AFV "saw the soldiers of the ESO putting on." She further testified that given their uniforms and the proximity of the ESO to the University Hospital, she believed that the soldiers came from ESO. AFV said she did not know what the soldiers were doing at the hospital, and that she left upon their arrival at about 1.00 p.m. She left at that time because the hospital director, one Jotham, denied her access to the hospital vehicle on the ground that she was Tutsi. According to AFV, Jotham said to her, "Come out, your time has come".[326] AFV testified that she walked home that afternoon, and on her way, she encountered a roadblock that was manned by soldiers.[327]

41.12.1.7.7. Prosecution Witness YAK

240. Prosecution Witness YAK testified that on or about the 25 April 1994, he left his aunt's house at about 3.00 a.m. to seek refuge at the Butare University Hospital. He said there was no other way of getting there, so he walked through the bush at night.

241. Upon his arrival at the University Hospital, he saw some tents in which Burundian refugees were living. The refugees were being supported by "Doctors Without Borders". In addition to the Burundian refugees, he also saw soldiers who came from ESO. He knew the soldiers were from ESO because when one stood at the hospital reception area, one could clearly see the soldiers coming from ESO.

[324] T. 6 June 2005, pp. 17-18 (I.C.S.). Witness YAP gave evidence that on the third occasion, he visited the hospital because ESO soldiers who knew him, and who knew that he was a Pentecostal Christian asked him to come to the hospital and pray with them. They guaranteed his security and that was why he went.

242. YAK said that about five days after his arrival at the hospital, Muvunyi visited together with a female Major, and two soldiers wearing black berets. That was the first time he saw Muvunyi; in fact it was a female refugee who indicated to him that the visitor was Muvunyi. On that occasion, Muvunyi was wearing a single colour military uniform with no hat. A few minutes before Muvunyi's arrival, a bus carrying wounded soldiers had entered the hospital premises. Muvunyi arrived in a red Hilux vehicle. The female Major who came with Muvunyi said, "Are these refugees? I didn't bring any food for them. Let them go back to where they were." Muvunyi then asked a soldier who was on guard about what the refugees were doing at the hospital. As the soldiers began to carry their wounded colleagues in on stretchers, Muvunyi asked the female Major, in apparent reference to the refugees, "What are they still doing here?"[328]

243. Witness YAK further testified that during his stay at the University Hospital, soldiers from ESO came and told the female refugees to follow them to ESO so that they could give them food. The girls complied and followed the soldiers. However, the girls returned in tears. They told YAK and the other refugees that instead of giving them food, the ESO soldiers forced them to have sexual intercourse.[329]

244. YAK also gave an account of the activities of an Interahamwe called Diogène Harindintwali and a lady called Mukamurera who were widely known "to the public". The duo came and spoke to the soldiers at the University Hospital. The woman then walked among the refugees and pointed out some people. The soldiers following her then put aside the people she pointed out. All the people who were pointed out and put aside were young male refugees. YAK estimated that about 20 to 30 refugees were selected in this manner. Diogène, the Interahamwe put some of the selected refugees on board a double-cabin Toyota vehicle and the soldiers walked with the others to ESO Camp. YAK added that all but one of those selected and taken away from the hospital were killed. Some of the bodies were buried close to the laboratory, and Witness YAK and others had to give them a decent burial after 1994.[330] He said the lone survivor is still alive and lives with his family in Rwanda.

245. Prosecution Witness NN testified that he learnt of a massacre of Tutsis at the Butare University Hospital sometime in May 1994. He said he was not in Butare when the massacre took place because Colonel Gatsinzi had sent him to Cyangugu, but learnt about it upon his return.[331] According to NN's testimony, those responsible for the massacre were wounded soldiers from Kanombe in collaboration with ESO soldiers assigned to protect the hospital. NN added that a number of hospital employees and wounded Tutsis were killed during the massacre. These wounded Tutsis were living in tents on the hospital compound. Witness NN further testified that after the attacks, he was requested to help save a female employee of the hospital who had been badly wounded during the attacks. With the assistance of one of the hospital doctors, he was able to evacuate the said female employee to his house and subsequently to the Burundian border.[332] NN said he did not witness anyone being killed within the premises of the ESO Camp.[333] Prosecution Witness YAA

246. Witness YAA testified that in 1994, the Butare University Hospital was situated about 400 metres from the ESO Camp. In the witness's view, "someone at ESO Camp could call out to someone at the university hospital at the top of his voice and … the latter could hear him or her easily."[334] He said the hospital was guarded by ESO soldiers. YAA testified that after he returned to Butare from Kigali around the 16 May 1994, he stayed inside the ESO Camp because he feared for his security. On 8 June 1994, his Tutsi wife went into labour and he took her to the Butare University Hospital. He was accompanied by an ESO soldier called Kirezi, who was in charge of health at ESO, as well as Corporal Modeste Kayitana.[335] Kirezi called one Dr. Jotham at the University Hospital to ask for help, but the latter said he could not help them. Witness YAA and Kirezi therefore decided to take YAA's wife to the hospital. Upon their arrival, YAA noticed that the hospital was guarded by trainees from ESO. In particular, he saw a Sergeant called Sekimonyo and five ESO trainees accompanied him and his wife to the hospital maternity wing.[336]

Colonel Gatsinzi had sent me to Cyangugu and by the time I returned the killings had been committed." When asked by the Prosecutor if he remembered the month during which he was sent to Cyangugu by Gatsinzi, Witness NN replied: "It was in May."

247. Witness YAA said that even though he heard that people were killed at the Hospital, he did not witness any such killings. However, when he requested one of the nurses to allocate a room for his wife to rest after the delivery, the nurse advised YAA that he must stay with his wife in the room, otherwise she would be killed.[337] This nurse further told YAA that the ESO soldiers had killed people at the hospital, and that "those soldiers were not there to provide for the safety of patients. They, instead, contributed to exterminating the patients."[338] YAA added that the nurse advised him to stay with his wife because she was Tutsi. He further stated that people who were killed at the Hospital were Tutsis. After his wife delivered, YAA decided to take her back to the ESO Camp because they had "nowhere else to go."[339]

41.12.1.7.9. Defence Witness MO73

248. Defence Witness MO73 testified that during his stay at ESO between end of April and the beginning of May 1994, he went to the University Hospital on two occasions to visit a friend.[340] On both occasions, he did not notice a security presence at the hospital, and the environment appeared the same as it was prior to 6 April 1994. Witness MO73's friend told him that the Interahamwe had abducted some civilian patients from the hospital, and thought that those abducted might have been killed or otherwise harmed. The witness did not see any soldiers during his two visits to the hospital.[341]

41.12.1.7.11.

249. Witness MO30 testified that he visited the Butare University Hospital on two occasions during May and June 1994.[342] On his first visit in May, he went to the hospital to receive treatment for a hand injury he sustained at work. Because Witness MO30 knew the Chief Surgeon of the hospital he went straight to the surgery department where the wound on his finger was stitched. On the second visit, he went to see a person named Jonathan. According to Witness MO30 he did not observe any visible security presence when he went to the hospital on these two occasions, he did not have any problem moving around the hospital premises, and no one demanded to see his identification documents.[343]

41.12.1.7.12. 5.6.3. Deliberations

250. It is alleged in the Indictment that on or about 15 of April 1994, the Accused, in the company of a section of soldiers, participated in an attack on wounded refugees at the Butare University Hospital. According to the Indictment, the attack involved separating the Tutsi from the Hutu and killing the former. The Prosecution specified in the Schedule of Particulars that it was charging Muvunyi with individual responsibility for the alleged crime pursuant to Article 6 (1) and 6 (3). In support of this allegation, the Prosecution relied on the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses XV, YAP, AFV, YAK, NN and YAA. On his part, the Accused called Defence Witnesses MO73 and MO30 to counter the allegation.

251. The Chamber finds that there are a number of inconsistencies in Witness XV's testimony which necessarily affect his credibility. In addition, there are some material discrepancies between the dates of the events as alleged in the Indictment and those given by Witness XV. For instance, whereas the Prosecution alleged in the Indictment that the attack on the refugees occurred around 15 April 1994, XV claimed he continued to go to work until about 19 April, that he fled to the Mukura forest around 21 April, where he survived an attack on refugees. Then, despite the lack of security and the apparent killing of Tutsis at the University Hospital, not only did he send his wife and children to seek refuge there, but he also went there himself. Additionally, it is not clear to the Chamber when exactly XV's family was sent to stay at the hospital and for how long they stayed there.

252. There are also some contradictions regarding the place of death of XV's sister. During his evidence-in-chief, XV suggested that soldiers from the ESO abducted his sister along with other Tutsi refugees who were never seen again. During cross-examination, however, it emerged that in judicial proceedings before the Rwandan courts, XV had sought compensation from a certain medical doctor for the death of his sister.[344]

253. The Chamber remains equally unpersuaded by XV's account of the alleged visit by the Accused to the Butare University Hospital premises. This is both because of XV's inability to indicate the timeframe within which the visit might have taken place and because of the alleged purpose of the visit. Moreover, the witness oscillated between saying that he knew and saw Muvunyi in the past, to saying that one of his colleagues at the hospital indicated to him that the military officer who visited the hospital on that day in May was "commander Muvunyi". Finally, the Defence was fairly successful in impeaching XV's credibility by pointing to material discrepancies between his pre-trial statements and his in-court testimony. Having considered all the above, the Chamber is not satisfied that Witness XV's evidence supports the allegation in the Indictment that Muvunyi participated in an attack on wounded Tutsi refugees at the Butare University Hospital on or about 15 April 1994.

254. The Chamber is satisfied that YAP is generally an honest and credible witness and has no reason to disbelieve his testimony. YAP appears to have known many of the ESO soldiers present at the Butare University Hospital and even identified some of them by name. He saw these soldiers at the hospital during three of his visits; after his first visit, he withdrew to a vantage point not far from the hospital from where he could observe the soldiers and Interahamwe loading refugees onto a pick-up truck. The Chamber notes that the attack on Tutsi refugees at Butare University Hospital about which Witness YAP testified, appeared to have taken place on 20 April but there is no evidence that the Accused was present during this attack or otherwise participated in it. In the end, the Chamber finds that while Witness YAP is credible, his evidence fails to support the allegation contained in Paragraph 3.29 of the Indictment.

255. The Chamber is satisfied that Prosecution Witness AFV gave relevant evidence to the effect that she saw an increased number of soldiers at the University Hospital on 20 April and that she thought they came from ESO. However, she did not speak of the abduction or killing of any refugees at the hospital nor did she at any time place Muvunyi at that location.

[344] T. 16 May 2005, p. 24; T. 17 May 2005, pp. 11-12; T. 18 May 2005, pp. 5-6, 39 (I.C.S.).

256. The Chamber finds that despite the passage of time and the fact that YAK was only 15 years old in 1994, in light of the totality of the evidence, he is a credible witness and gave an honest account of the events he witnessed at the Butare University Hospital in April and May 1994.

257. The Chamber considers that Witness NN gave hearsay evidence of the attack on refugees at Butare University Hospsital in April 1994. However, his evidence is corroborated by the account given by other Prosecution witnesses including YAK, YAP, AFV, and XV. The Chamber has already concluded that the payment of US$ 5,000.00 to Witness NN by the Office of the Prosecutor as compensation did not affect his credibility.

258. The Chamber notes that whereas the Indictment alleges that the attack on the refugees at the Butare University Hospital occurred around 15 April 1994, Witness YAA acknowledged that he only returned to Butare from Kigali around 16 May 1994, a full month after the alleged attack. It is apparent that YAA's account of killings at the University Hospital constitutes hearsay evidence, as he did not witness any killings but only heard that Tutsis were killed. Furthermore, YAA, being a soldier at ESO, knew the Accused personally, but did not place him at the scene of the alleged attack. However, his eyewitness account of the presence of ESO soldiers at the hospital lends credence to the testimony of other witnesses who said they saw soldiers and Interahamwe abducting Tutsi refugees from the hospital and killing them.

259. The Chamber observes that Witness MO73's testimony goes against the grain of the other witnesses' testimonies and finds him to be generally lacking in credibility. Whereas most of the others testified that ESO soldiers were present at the University Hospital during the relevant period and that they saw the soldiers conducting identity checks and separating the Tutsis from the Hutus, MO73 said that during his visits to the hospital in April and May, he did not see any soldiers on the premises. MO73 implicated only the Interahamwe in the abductions at the hospital while exonerating the soldiers. Noting that MO73 also stated that the Accused offered protection to him and his father, the Chamber cannot discount the possibility that MO73's purpose in coming to testify is to repay the Accused for his assistance rather than to assist the Chamber in finding out the truth.

260. The Chamber notes that Defence Witness MO30's visits to the University Hospital occurred during the months of May and June 1994, a considerable amount of time after the alleged attacks on the refugees. Thus, while he is generally a credible witness, his testimony is not relevant to the issue at hand.

261. Having considered all the evidence adduced by the Prosecution, the Chamber is not satisfied that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that Muvunyi participated in an attack on Tutsi refugees at the Butare University Hospital on or about 15 April 1994. However, the Chamber has heard evidence that sometime after 20 April 1994, ESO soldiers, in collaboration with Interahamwe and civilians abducted about 20 to 30 refugees from the University Hospital and killed them. The Chamber has considered the close proximity of ESO to the University Hospital, the presence of large numbers of Tutsi refugees at the hospital, and the presence of ESO soldiers at that location. Taking all relevant circumstances into account, the Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable that the Accused had reason to know about the attack on Tutsi refugees at Butare University Hospital by ESO soldiers on or about 15 April 1994. Despite his superior military position over the said soldiers, and his material ability to intervene, he failed to do anything to prevent the attack or punish the soldiers' murderous conduct.

41.12.1.8. 5.7. Attack at Beneberika Convent

41.12.1.8.1. 5.7.1. Indictment

262. Paragraph 3.27 reads:

3.27 On the 30th of April 1994, Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi in the exercise of his de facto and de jure authority, ordered soldiers of the Ngoma Camp to the Beneberika Convent and kidnap the refugees at the Convent including women and children. A certain Lieutenant led this attack, and he kidnapped 25 people including the children of Professor Karenzi, who were never seen again.

41.12.1.8.2.5.7.2. Evidence

41.12.1.8.3. Prosecution Witness QCQ

263. Prosecution Witness QCQ estimated that she was 11 years old in 1994. She testified that she was living at the Beneberika Convent when the war began in 1994, and that her parents died during the war.[345]

264. Witness QCQ testified that on 6 April 1994, the nuns at the Convent told her that they had heard the news of President Habyarimana's death on the radio. The witness testified that as a result of this news, all activities inside the Convent, including their routine prayer sessions, ceased, and they no longer felt safe.[346]

265. Witness QCQ testified that afterwards, refugees from Butare, Kigali, and Gikongoro arrived at the Convent, and told QCQ that they had fled their homes because they were being attacked by Interahamwe and soldiers. According to QCQ, there were around 27 refugees, including young people, women, children, and an 18 month-old child.[347] QCQ further testified that all the refugees were killed, "except a few children who were amongst them".[348]

266. The witness testified that during her stay at the Convent, various attacks were launched on the Convent by Interahamwe and soldiers. QCQ said that during the first attack, the attackers did not get into the compound because a sister named Fréderique met them at the gate and told them that there were no Tutsis at the Convent.[349]

267. Witness QCQ testified that the second attack was also launched by Interahamwe and soldiers. She stated that the Interahamwe wore ordinary clothing, that they were armed with guns, clubs and machetes, and that they came with dogs. QCQ said that she was able to identify the soldiers because they wore uniforms. Some of the soldiers wore red caps, while others did not, and some wore military trousers and carried guns on their shoulders.[350]

268. QCQ testified that during the attack, she was not more than five metres away from the attackers. She said that the attackers asked the refugees to show their identity cards, but that not everyone had an identity card. QCQ testified that the assailants referred to those who refused to show their identity cards as Inkotanyi accomplices, and confiscated property belonging to some of the refugees. QCQ further testified that the assailants labelled some people as Inkotanyi merely by virtue of their physical appearance. The witness said that the assailants were Hutu, and that they referred to the Tutsi as Inyenzi and Inkotanyi.[351] Witness QCQ further testified that the assailants hit her and asked the nuns to confirm that she lived at the Convent, which they did.[352]

269. QCQ testified about another child who was hit by the assailants. When the child's mother intervened to beg for mercy, the assailants said that they would only spare the child if it was a girl; if it was a boy, they would kill him, because "a serpent could not be spared". The assailants verified that the child was a girl and handed her to the nuns, but her mother was killed.[353] QCQ said that after the child's mother was killed, QCQ was the one who looked after the child.[354]

270. The witness testified that other children at the convent were killed by soldiers and Interahamwe. According to the witness, "All those children were killed, except Diane, Cecile, and Théodosie". In particular, QCQ indicated that the following children were killed: Thierry, Solange, and Marc Karenzi. According to QCQ, the Karenzi children were wounded when they arrived at the Convent: "Solange was wounded on the head. Her clothes had been torn. Her brother Marc Karenzi was bleeding on a leg." Witness QCQ testified that the children sustained these injuries as the result of the beatings they received from soldiers and Interahamwe.[355]

271. The witness testified that she was not present when the refugees were killed. However, she knew that they had been killed because she saw them being taken away by soldiers and Interahamwe in a Hilux vehicle, after which the soldiers returned to the Convent to fetch some beer and informed QCQ and the others of "what had happened".[356]

272. Witness QCQ further testified that the soldiers attacked the Convent again, ten minutes after the refugees left in the Hilux vehicle. According to QCQ, the soldiers had been drinking beer before this attack. They counted the children and told the nuns that "none of [them] must be missing". When they returned, one of the soldiers said, "Looking at the faces of these children, don't you think they are Inkotanyi?" A second solider replied, "You are drunk. Let us go", at which point the soldiers left.[357]

273. Witness QCQ gave evidence that during the third attack, the assailants went inside the Convent looking for walkie-talkies. In the process, they took off the veils of some of the nuns to see if the veils had left permanent marks on their foreheads. The purpose of this was to determine whether there were any people disguised as nuns.[358] Witness QCQ testified that she did not know the ESO.[359]

41.12.1.8.4. Prosecution Witness QCM

274. Prosecution Witness QCM testified that she knew Idelphonse Hategekimana to be the commander of the Ngoma Camp, which was located about two kilometres from the Beneberika Convent, where the witness lived.[360] QCM arrived at the Convent, which was located in Buye cellule, Butare,[361] in 1992.[362] QCM said that she first met Hategekimana in 1992.[363] He used to visit the Convent because one of the occupants, Frédérique Marie, was a friend of his. The witness testified that during the genocide, Hategekimana was also known by the nickname "Bikomago", which was the name of a Burundian soldier who killed many people after President Ndadaye was assassinated.[364]

275. Witness QCM testified that she saw Hategekimana at Buye on 30 April 1994. He was in military uniform, was carrying a stick in his hand, and was with many soldiers, civilians, and

Interahamwe.[365] The witness stated that she saw two vehicles outside, one with a "UNO" inscription and the other belonging to the "GK" project, but she was not sure whether Hategekimana and the others had arrived in those vehicles. The witness testified that there were about 100 or more soldiers in Hategekimana's company,[366] coming from ESO and Ngoma Camps.[367] The soldiers carried firearms, while the civilians, who numbered about 100, were armed with clubs and machetes.[368] The Interahamwe took positions behind the fence next to the vehicles that were parked outside the compound.[369]

276. Witness QCM identified a few people whom she recognised from the group who came to the Convent. They included the cardiologist Dr. Pierre Mugabo, his son Remy Mugabo, a man named Ignace, a lecturer from the Groupe scolaire called Valence, a person nicknamed Nyati, someone that Hategekimana called Makete, and Professor Blaise.[370]

277. QCM testified that she saw this group of over 200 people surround the Convent at about 11:00 a.m. on 30 April 2004.[371] The Convent had an outer wall with two gates and an inner wall with two gates leading inside. The witness stated that there were about 40 sisters at the Convent, including some who had come from different places to seek refuge. There were also neighbours who had sought refuge at the complex, and about 45 refugees who had come at various times. The majority of the refugees were children.[372]

278. The witness stated that the nuns hid the refugees upon their arrival. The nuns were in their respective rooms when the assailants arrived, but when they came into the courtyard and started shooting in the air, some of the nuns panicked and came out of their rooms. According to QCM, the nuns opened the gates into the courtyard for the assailants because the soldiers threatened to kill them if they did not do so.[373] While the assailants were knocking hard on the door, the Mother Superior of the Convent called bourgmestre Kanyabashi on the phone, but QCM did not know what happened, because Kanyabashi did not intervene.[374]

279. Witness QCM stated that the assailants claimed they had come to take all the civilians who were in the Convent. After firing in the air, they searched the Convent to find the people who were hiding, and then separated the refugees from the other people. The nuns remained in the Convent, whereas the refugees, including the children, were put in the GK project vehicle and taken away by the soldiers.[375] QCM testified that there were two Hutu children staying with them who had initially been placed with the civilians, but Hategekimana ordered a soldier to take them back into the house, as they were Hutus.[376]

280. The witness testified that the soldiers asked the nuns to display their identity cards, but they refused to do so, after which Hategekimana waved a document in the air and asked for their superior. They pointed out the superior to Hategekimana, at which point he said to her, "This warrant of arrest has been given to me by Muvunyi so that I should go and fetch civilians who are here".[377] QCM said that Hategekimana read the document out to them,[378] saying that it was an arrest warrant that allowed him to arrest the people he was seeking and to kill them.[379] When QCM asked him to show her the warrant, he refused to give it to her, so she never read it herself.[380]

281. Witness QCM stated that the refugees were mainly Tutsis. There were a few Hutus among them, but it was only the Tutsis who were ordered to board the vehicles. The identification of the Tutsis was made possible because a nun who was Hategekimana's friend helped him to identify the Tutsis.[381] Witness QCM said that she was aware that the children were going to be killed and begged Hategekimana to spare them, but he refused and told her that once they were handed over to the Interahamwe, he no longer had any means of saving them.[382]

282. The witness testified that after the vehicle was loaded with the children, she continued to beg the attackers to leave them behind and attempted to get into the vehicle herself. Professor Blaise struck her with a cutting tool and told her to leave, saying that those were not her children.[383]

283. QCM also stated that she saw Remy Mugabo beating a student who went to secondary school with him and calling him an Inyenzi, but the soldiers around did nothing to stop him.[384]

284. The witness testified that the vehicles carrying the Tutsi refugees left the house at about 1:00 p.m., but the soldiers came back around 3:00 p.m. to get some drinks that were left over from a party that they had had. The witness asked them where they had put the children, and the soldiers told her that they had handed them over to the Interahamwe.[385]

285. Witness QCM stated that she only knew of Colonel Muvunyi as the commander of the ESO Camp. She said she had not met him and would not have been able to identify him.[386] However, QCM testified that she knew by sight more than 20 soldiers from among the assailants; she knew they were from ESO because they were her neighbours; but she did not know their names.[387]

41.12.1.8.5.5.7.3. Deliberations

286. The Indictment alleges that on 30 April 1994, the Accused ordered soldiers of the Ngoma Camp to kidnap refugees, including women and children, at the Beneberika Convent and that none of the 25 persons kidnapped was ever seen again. The Prosecution presented the evidence of Witnesses QCQ and QCM in support of this allegation.

287. Prosecution Witness QCQ was about 11 years old in 1994 and did not state the specific dates of the events she was describing. The Chamber concludes that despite her tender age in 1994 and the passage of time, she is very credible and provided a clear and convincing account of what she experienced. What is not clear from QCQ's testimony, however, is the provenance of the soldiers who attacked the Beneberika Convent or the date of the attacks.

288. The Chamber has considered the testimony of QCM and finds her to be a very credible witness. Not only did she recount facts based on her direct knowledge and personal experience, but her evidence is also strongly corroborated by that of Witness QCQ. There is no doubt that QCM knew Hategekimana as the Commander of the Ngoma Camp. She had seen him before because he had a friend at the Convent whom he used to visit. She even knew his nickname, "Bikomago".

289. Based on the evidence of Witnesses QCM and QCQ, the Chamber is satisfied that a group of soldiers and civilians under the leadership of Lieutenant Hategekimana of Ngoma Camp attacked Beneberika Convent on or about 30 April 1994 and abducted and subsequently killed a large number of unarmed Tutsi civilians. However, the Chamber has not received any direct evidence that Muvunyi ordered the said attack. The question for the Chamber's determination is whether it could be reasonably inferred from all the circumstances, including the allegation that Hategekimana waved a piece of paper which he claimed was a search warrant from the Accused, that Muvunyi ordered the said attack. In the Chamber's view, there is insufficient circumstantial evidence from which to conclude beyond reasonable doubt that Muvunyi ordered soldiers of ESO or Ngoma Camp to attack Beneberika Convent.

290. However, the Chamber must also determine in light of Paragraph 10, Sub-paragraph 2 of the Schedule of Particulars, whether the Accused bears superior responsibility for the attack on Beneberika Convent. In this respect, it is relevant to note that the Accused was the most senior military officer in Butare; that the attack was highly organized and targeted to the specific location of the Convent and the Tutsi refugees living there; and that soldiers from Ngoma Camp were acting together with soldiers from ESO and Interahamwe. The Chamber recalls Witness QCM's testimony to the effect that she knew some of the assailants. She could identify about 20 of them as being from ESO. The Chamber also notes from the evidence of Prosecution Witness Ghandi Shukry that the Convent was located at a distance of about 1.7 kilometres from the ESO Camp within the central corridor of Butare préfecture which fell within the security jurisdiction of the ESO Camp.

291. There is evidence before the Chamber that Ngoma Camp soldiers collaborated with ESO soldiers such as Captain Nizeyimana, Lieutenant Modeste Gatsinzi and Lieutenant Gakwerere to attack civilian refugees at the Groupe scolaire and other locations. These circumstances support the conclusion that such high-level co-ordination of military operations could not have taken place without the knowledge of the Accused, who was the most senior military officer in Butare at the time. In light of the circumstantial evidence, the Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused had reason to know about the attack on Tutsi refugees at Beneberika Convent by soldiers from ESO and Ngoma Camps, together with the Interahamwe. Despite his effective control over the ESO soldiers, he failed to take necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the attack and to punish the perpetrators.

41.12.1.9. 5.8. Attack on Tutsi Lecturers and Students at the University of Butare

292. Paragraph 3.34 (i) reads:

> 3.34 (i) Furthermore, during the events referred to in this Indictment, soldiers from the ESO went to the University of Butare to kill the Tutsi lecturers and students as part of plans to exterminate the Tutsi intelligentsia. Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi by reason of his position of authority over the soldiers of the ESO and the widespread nature of these massacres, knew or had reason to know, that these acts were being committed and he failed to take measures to prevent, or to put an end to these acts, or punish the perpetrators.

41.12.1.9.2. 5.8.2. Evidence

41.12.1.9.4.

293. Prosecution Witness KAL testified that he knew Sergeant Major Sibomana, who was a student at ESO, but had the rank of a Sergeant Major. Sibomana was granted study leave to go to university. KAL said that Sibomana abducted students from the University and brought them back to the ESO Camp; he worked with the soldiers as if he had come back to the Army.[388]

294. According to KAL, Sergeant Major Sibomana had the duty of identifying students who were Inkotanyi. He and other soldiers scoured the town looking for such students, put them on board commandeered vans, and brought them to ESO Camp. The witness said that all the abducted students were subsequently taken out of the ESO Camp and killed.[389]

295. KAL testified that Sibomana did not act alone. KAL said that Sibomana, as well as others who were no longer in the Army, had received orders to look for Inkotanyi from the commander of the camp.[390] KAL explained that Sibomana sometimes went with students from ESO nouvelle formule, but there was total disorder and he went with whomever he wanted.[391]

296. When asked by the Chamber how he knew that Sibomana had received orders from the camp commander, KAL said that it was common knowledge that the Commander had issued an order. The witness explained that these events did not only take place over two or three days but over a long time. He added that Sibomana went out every day to look for these students, acting under orders from the commander of the camp.[392]

297. Prosecution Witness NN testified that Chief Warrant Officer Damien Ntamuhanga was involved in the killing of students at Butare University. Ntamuhanga was the leader of an anti-looting team consisting of six gendarmes and other soldiers. This team was formed by Bizimana after the meeting chaired by Muvunyi on 20 April, and although it was purportedly designed to prevent soldiers from looting, the team went to kill civilians at the University.[393]

298. Witness NN described the killings at the University in further detail, noting that he had saved a female student from the University at the request of her family, and that student told him that Ntamuhanga and members of his military police group were killing students at the University and openly boasting about and describing the killings in detail. The girl that NN saved was studying at the Faculty of Medicine, which was located next to the University Hospital, not inside the main University campus. The Faculty of Medicine was two kilometres away from the ESO Camp. According to NN, the girl told him that the soldiers who had committed the massacres at the University were members of Ntamuhanga's military police group. NN added that if anyone had heard that he had gone to save that girl, he "would have had problems".[394]

299. NN further testified that Chief Warrant Officer Innocent Sibomana was also in charge of the group that killed students at the University,[395] and that Ntamuhanga was relieved by Colonel Marcel Gatsinzi as chief of the Military police in mid-May.[396]

41.12.1.9.7. 5.8.3. Deliberations

300. The Indictment alleges that ESO soldiers set out to kill Tutsi lecturers and students at the University of Butare as part of the plan to exterminate the Tutsi intelligentsia and that the Accused, by virtue of his position and authority over the soldiers, knew or had reason to know of these activities due to their widespread nature, but failed to stop the massacres or to punish their perpetrators.

301. The Chamber notes that Prosecution Witness KAL did not state any basis for his assertion that the Accused ordered the abduction and killing of Tutsi intellectuals. KAL neither saw any written order nor directly heard the Accused giving any orders in this regard. Rather, KAL appears to presume that there was such an order since it was common knowledge. In the Chamber's view, the Prosecution has not proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused issued an order for the abduction and killing of Tutsi intellectuals. The remaining issue, then, is whether the Accused knew or had reason to know about these attacks in view of their frequency, and the identity and position of the alleged perpetrators.

302. The Chamber recalls the testimony of Prosecution Witness NN, that Chief Warrant Officer Sibomana was one of those responsible for the attacks on Tutsi intelligentsia at the University of Butare, and that Sibomana and Ntamuhanga were members of the Military Police Unit set up by the Accused on 20 April 1994. According to NN, although the unit was intended to serve as an anti-looting squad, it ended up operating as a death squad instead, abducting and killing people at the University. NN personally helped save one student, who told him that Ntamuhanga and members of his Military Police group were killing students at the University and openly boasting about their acts. Furthermore, Witness NN's account of Sibomana's activities is largely corroborated by Witness KAL's testimony.

303. The Chamber notes that none of the 24 witnesses for the Defence testified specifically on this allegation. Based on the evidence before it, the Chamber concludes that ESO soldiers systematically sought and killed Tutsi lecturers and students from the University of Butare. Due to the widespread nature of these attacks, and the proximity of the ESO Camp to the University of Butare,[397] the Chamber finds that the Accused had reason to know that the attacks were taking place. The Chamber further finds that the Accused, as the commanding officer of the ESO, failed to do anything to stop the killing by ESO soldiers or to punish them for their illegal behaviour even though he had the material ability to do so. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the Prosecution has proved the allegation in Paragraph 3.34 (i) beyond reasonable doubt.

41.12.1.10. 5.9. Arrest and Killing of Two Priests at Gihindamuyaua Monastery

41.12.1.10.1. 5.9.1. Indictment

304. Paragraph 3.28 of the Indictment reads:

> 3.28 On or about the 4th of May 1994, Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi requested that the Reverend Fathers at Gihindamuyaua Monastery to be brought to him (sic) and he subsequently separated the two Tutsi Fathers in the monastery from the Hutus, and they were subsequently killed.

[397] Exhibit P.6, admitted on 16 March 2005.

305. The Chamber has not heard any evidence supporting the allegation contained in Paragraph 3.28 of the Indictment and therefore finds that the Prosecution has failed to prove the said allegation.

41.12.1.11. 5.10. Massacre of Tutsi Civilians by Soldiers and Interahamwe

41.12.1.11.1. 5.10.1. Indictment

306. Paragraphs 3.30, 3.31, 3.35, 3.36, 3.40, 3.46 and 3.48 read:

> 3.30 During the events referred to in this Indictment, Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi had the duty of ensuring the security and safety of the civilian population in the préfecture, as well as ensuring the discipline of the armed men under his command but failed in this duty. On several occasions in April 1994, Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi failed or refused to assist those whose lives were in danger or who asked for his help, particularly in Groupe scolaire and Ngoma Parish where Tutsi refugees were massacred.
> 3.31 Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi in most cases instigated, encouraged, facilitated, and or acquiesced to among others, the Interahamwe and soldiers committing killings, kidnappings and the destruction of property.
> 3.35 During the events referred to in this Indictment, the militiamen, i.e. the Interahamwe, with the help of the soldiers, participated in the massacres of the civilian Tutsi population in Butare préfecture and elsewhere.
> 3.36 During the events referred to in this Indictment, officers and soldiers acting under the orders of Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi participated in the massacres of the civilian Tutsi population and of Hutu moderates in the opposition. Some of these civilian Tutsis were arrested and taken to either the Ngoma Camp or the ESO and later killed.
> 3.40 During the events referred to in this Indictment, thousands of civilians, mostly Tutsi, in Butare préfecture, were massacred, including at the following locations:
> - Ngoma Parish, Ngoma commune
> - Matyazo Dispensary, Matyazo
> - Kibeho Parish, Mugusa commune
> - Beneberika Convent, Sovu, Huye commune
> - Groupe scolaire, Ngoma
> - Économat général, Ngoma commune
> - Nyumba Parish, Gatare commune
> - Muslim Quarters, Ngoma commune.
> 3.45 On or about the 30th of April 1994, the Ngoma Parish was attacked. The Parish Priest requested for help from the Ngoma Camp and an hour later 2nd Lieutenant Niyonteze, who was second in command at the Ngoma Camp, arrived with 6 soldiers. Rather than take any action, 2nd Lieutenant Niyonteze demanded to know what right the Parish Priest had in keeping so many Inyenzi near a military camp. He proceeded to count the refugees and leave the parish without taking any action to stop the attackers. Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi by reason of his position of authority and the widespread nature of these massacres, knew or had reason to know that these acts were being committed and he failed to take measures to prevent, or to put an end to these acts, or punish the perpetrators.
> 3.46 On or about 5.00 p.m. of the same day, a certain Lieutenant arrived at the Parish with intent to arrest the Parish Priest who had escaped; but the refugees at the Parish including the women and children were all subsequently attacked by the soldiers and the Interahamwe. Muvunyi as an authority figure failed to provide for the safety or security of the refugees but rather encouraged the attacks.

3.48 On or about the 24th of April, the refugees at the Groupe scolaire comprising of orphans evacuated from the Red Cross Centre at Kacyiru and other orphanages, were attacked by soldiers from the Ngoma Camp and the ESO. The soldiers from the Ngoma Camp were led by a certain Lieutenant while the soldiers from ESO were dispatched on the orders of a certain Captain and were led by 2nd Lieutenant Niyonteze. The Supervisor of the children called the ESO for assistance and spoke with Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi, who refused to send any assistance during the massacre.

307. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes on the one hand that it has not heard any evidence relating to attacks on Kibeho Parish, or Nyumba Parish. On the other hand, it has received evidence of attacks on Cyanika Parish and Mukura Forest which are not specifically listed in the Indictment. Having concluded above that the Defence did receive adequate warning of the Prosecution's intention to prove the said attacks, the Chamber will consider the evidence relating to them. In the following sections, the Chamber considers evidence relating to attacks on Ngoma Parish, Matyazo School, Groupe scolaire, Mukura Forest, and Cyanika Parish.

41.12.1.11.2. 5.10.2. Attack at Ngoma Parish and the Matyazo School Complex

41.12.1.11.3. 5.10.2.1. Attack at Ngoma Parish

41.12.1.11.4. Prosecution Witness QX

308. Prosecution Witness QX testified that from around 7 April 1994, people were being killed in the Butare area, and members of the population were therefore afraid to leave their homes. The witness testified that on 8 April, a young man called Rugomboka was taken away by soldiers, and later his body was found in a forest. On 14 April, he heard that Queen Rosalie Gicanda had been killed. Witness QX added that on that same day, he could see smoke coming from the direction of Runyinya commune and many refugees started fleeing from these areas because their houses were being burnt down, and people were being killed. Witness QX testified that bourgmestre Kanyabashi prevented the refugees from moving into Butare town, so they went to the Matyazo Health Centre. On 21 April, Witness QX heard intense gunfire and explosions coming from the direction of Matyazo. He subsequently saw people flocking to the Ngoma Parish to seek refuge. Witness QX explained that the fleeing refugees "hid in the sorghum fields, others hid in the bush, and at night they would crawl to the parish and hide at the parish itself."[398] He added that most of the refugees had wounds on their heads, and that they appeared to have been "hacked with sharp objects."

309. On 21 April, Witness QX and another person received a telephone call from a lady who advised them to flee from Ngoma Parish because she had information that people were planning to come and kill them. As a result of this information, Witness QX said they spent the night in the bush, but returned to the Parish the next morning and took the decision to remain there. He added that at this time, there was "a continuous influx of refugees" to the Ngoma Parish.[399]

310. According to Witness QX, about two or three days later, the conseiller of Matyazo loaded many "orphans whose parents had been killed in the night of the 21", onto a pick-up vehicle and brought them to Ngoma Parish. These children were among a group of between 480 and 490 refugees at the parish. Witness QX added that all the refugees were Tutsi, "there was no soldier among them", and none of them was carrying a weapon.[400]

[398] T. 4 December 2003, p. 17 (I.C.S.).
[399] T. 4 December 2003, p. 17 (I.C.S.).

311. On 29 April 1994, Witness QX heard a group of people knocking very hard on the Parish gate. As a result, he and those with him concluded that they were being attacked, and decided to telephone for assistance and protection from the Ngoma Military Camp, which was located about 600 to 700 metres from the Parish. About 50 minutes after their call, a non-commissioned officer arrived at the parish with soldiers. He asked what was happening, asked if there were any refugees at the Parish and left saying they would be back the following day.[401]

312. Witness QX said that at around 10.00 a.m. on the following day, he "saw soldiers standing within the premises of the Parish" and he came out to greet them. The commander of the group asked where the Parish priest was, but left when he was told that the Parish priest was not around. However, the soldiers who had accompanied the commander stayed behind. The witness later found out that the said commander's name was Idelphonse Hategekimana, and that he was commander of the Ngoma Camp. He added that he noticed there were a lot of civilians who had come with the soldiers, that they were standing outside the church building, and that they "were carrying knives."[402]

313. After Hategekimana's departure, two of the soldiers who remained behind "went into the church building and got the refugees, all the refugees out." The crowd of armed people who were waiting outside the parish gate rushed into the compound "wanting to kill the refugees." Witness QX asked the soldiers to allow him to take the refugees back into the church to pray. The soldiers agreed. Because he knew the refugees were going to be killed, Witness QX took them back into the church building and they prayed together.[403] After this, the soldiers assured the refugees that no one would kill them, and that they would bring buses to take the refugees to a safe place where they would be protected. Thereafter, the soldiers started selecting people from among the refugees and taking them out in groups of four or five. Witness QX explained that he later learnt from survivors that once outside, these refugees were handed over to the crowd of armed civilians, who took them away and killed them. The witness stated "they were hit with clubs and they fell, they were killed – they were finished immediately. They made sure they finished them such that nobody cried out when they were killing them."[404] Witness QX emphasized that among the refugees who were killed at the Ngoma Parish were "orphans whose parents had been killed on the night of 21st April," and who had been brought to the parish by the conseiller of Matyazo.[405]

314. Witness QX explained that he knew the refugees were killed because after the attack, there were "a lot of dead bodies on the ground." He added that one of the soldiers told him to ask one of the priests to come out of hiding, and they agreed to pay this soldier 500,000 Rwandan francs, so that he would not kill the priest. However, they arranged to pay in instalments so that the soldier would keep coming back to ensure their protection.[406]

315. This witness testified that on 20 April 1994, he had to telephone the Ngoma Parish for assistance because his wife had suffered a heart attack. He spoke to a priest who later came in his vehicle and transported the witness and his sick wife to the medical centre at the Butare school complex.[407] Witness CCQ explained that they drove with the Tutsi Priest through several roadblocks on their way to the medical centre, including at Hotel Faucon and Chez Bihira, and subsequently arrived at the medical centre. The priest dropped off Witness CCQ and his wife, but before his departure, requested the witness to check on him later to make sure that he had safely arrived back to the Parish.

316. According to CCQ's testimony, on 21 April 1994, he first went to Matyazo to the school of the Pentecostal church where some members of his family had sought refuge and then proceeded to the Ngoma Parish to check on the priest who had helped him and his wife. Upon his arrival, he saw many refugees at the Parish. CCQ narrated that the refugees were initially afraid when they saw him, and thought he might have been one of the killers. However, the refugees were reassured when they saw him talking with the priest. Witness CCQ said that he visited the Ngoma Parish again on 22 April. On 24 April, as he passed by the Parish on his way to Matyazo, he discovered that the refugees had been killed. He saw their bodies, and could tell that they had been shot to death. Witness CCQ testified that he continued on his way to Matyazo to make sure that members of his family were alive.[408]

41.12.1.11.7. 5.10.2.2. Killings at Matyazo School Complex

41.12.1.11.8. Prosecution Witness CCQ

317. Prosecution Witness CCQ testified that he was at Matyazo school complex on the night of 21 April 1994 together with members of his family and many other refugees. The witness testified that the school was attacked, that the attackers threw grenades at the refugees, shot at them, and used petrol to burn them. CCQ stated that some members of his family, including his sisters, uncles and aunts survived the attack, but were wounded. He added that his family members remained in Matyazo secteur until May when they were killed.[409]

41.12.1.11.9. Prosecution Witness QX

318. Witness QX testified that on that 14 April 1994, he could see smoke coming from the direction of Runyinya commune and many refugees started fleeing from these areas because their houses were being burnt down, and people were being killed.[410] Witness QX further stated that bourgmestre Kanyabashi prevented the refugees from moving into Butare town, so they went to the Matyazo health centre. He added that the refugees were supposed to have been moved to Simbi Parish, but a certain priest informed that he had encountered "some members of the population who were armed with machetes and spears and who were going to the Simbi Parish in order to kill refugees who had sought refugee at the parish."[411] Witness QX said he heard intense gunfire and explosions coming from the direction of Matyazo on 21 April. He subsequently saw people flocking to the Ngoma Parish to seek refuge. Witness QX explained that the fleeing refugees "hid in the sorghum fields, others hid in the bush, and at night they would crawl to the parish and hide at the parish itself."[412] He added that most of the refugees had wounds on their heads, and that they appeared to have been "hacked with sharp objects." The witness said that on 21 April, "Tutsis living in Matyazo were killed, and the refugees at the Matyazo Health Centre, too, were killed." Witness QX testified that a man who had survived the attack at Matyazo Health Centre narrated to him what had happened.[413]

41.12.1.11.10. Prosecution Witness QY

319. Witness QY testified that in April 1994, she was 17 years old and lived in Matyazo, in Tonga cellule.[414] She testified that on 7 April 1994, she observed that people in her commune were buying and stockpiling provisions and that the security situation had begun to deteriorate. Witness QY said a vehicle carrying soldiers then arrived and took away the property of someone called Ngarambe. She believed that the soldiers came from ESO, because ESO was the closest camp to their neighbourhood. Witness QY added that the soldiers took away Ngarambe and killed him near a pit in Karubanda. She further testified that later that evening, Tutsis were gathered in the Matyazo school complex.

320. As a result of the deteriorating security situation, Witness QY left for the Matyazo primary school which was located at about a 10-minute walk from her residence. Upon her arrival at the school, QY saw Interahamwe armed with traditional weapons and firearms, and there were many Tutsi refugees. According to QY's testimony, the refugees arrived at the school complex at about 6.00 p.m., and were killed by soldiers and Interahamwe at about 8.00 p.m. She said she was one of three survivors of this attack. Later on she said she was the sole survivor.

321. Witness QY said that the Interahamwe were led by two men called Janvier and Bakare. She explained that during the attack by the Interahamwe, a vehicle carrying soldiers suddenly appeared. The soldiers joined the attack by pouring petrol on the refugees and starting a fire. QY explained that the refugees used their clothes to try to extinguish the fire. Witness QY was in a classroom that was set on fire, and she therefore came out. She tried to speak to one of the soldiers whom she knew, and asked him for help, but the soldier hit her with a machete on her head. The soldiers fired gunshots to force the refugees inside the blazing classroom. QY testified that in addition to the wound on her head, she also realised that one of her hands was burnt, and thought that it might have been because the hand bag she was carrying caught fire. Witness QY showed the Chamber both the scar on her forehead caused by the machete blow and her severely burnt left hand. QY stated that most of the refugees died during this attack, and that she was one of three survivors. She said she lay among the dead bodies and that she was subsequently carried away by some Interahamwe who had come to finish off the surviving refugees.

41.12.1.11.11. 5.10.2.3. Deliberations

322. It is alleged in the Indictment that Interahamwe militiamen, with the help of soldiers under the orders of the Accused, participated in the massacre of the civilian Tutsi population and politically moderate Hutus in Butare préfecture and elsewhere. It is further alleged that Tutsi refugees at Ngoma, the Groupe scolaire and other locations were attacked and killed by soldiers under the authority of the Accused acting in concert with Interahamwe militia. During some of these attacks, several pleas for assistance were made by victims at various locations across the préfecture to both the ESO and the Ngoma military camps and directly to the Accused, but no assistance was provided. In paragraphs 17, 21 and 27 of the Schedule of Particulars, the Prosecution alleges that Muvunyi bears individual criminal responsibility for the said attacks pursuant to Article 6 (1) and 6 (3) of the Statute.

323. The Chamber recalls that due to a number of exceptional circumstances, Prosecution Witness QX was allowed to give a deposition before the start of this trial. The Chamber is satisfied that QX gave a coherent and reliable account of the events he witnessed at the Ngoma Parish in April 1994. The Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that a large-scale attack was launched on the Tutsi refugees including orphans at the Ngoma Parish on 29 April 1994. The attack was led by Ngoma Camp soldiers and Interahamwe militia. There is no evidence to suggest that [414] T. 8 June 2005, pp. 11, 12. During cross-examination, Defence counsel pointed out to the witness that in her statement of 15 January 1997, she indicated that in 1994, she lived in Ruhenda cellule. Under oath, before the Chamber, witness testified that she never lived in Ruhenda, and that she might have been confused in 1997 when she made the statement, because this was soon after the war. She added that when she gave her statement in 1997, she lived in Tonga Cellule.

ESO soldiers participated in this attack, or that Muvunyi gave direct orders for the attack to be carried out. Since most of the incidents recounted by Witness QX involved Ngoma Camp soldiers, the question arises as to whether the Accused had any control over the Ngoma Camp. As stated above, the Chamber finds that the Accused effectively assumed the position of ESO Commander, but it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt the he was also Commandant de place of Butare and Gikongoro préfectures. Consequently, he cannot be held responsible for the actions of the Ngoma Camp soldiers. The only matter left to be determined is whether or not the Prosecution has adduced any evidence to prove beyond reasonable doubt that ESO soldiers collaborated with the Ngoma Camp soldiers in the alleged attacks.

324. The Chamber considers that Witness CCQ's evidence on the killing of Tutsi refugees at Ngoma Parish corroborates that of Witness QX. The Chamber attributes the slight difference in the dates mentioned by the witnesses to the lapse of time between 1994 and the dates of their testimony, as well as to the effect of trauma on the witnesses' memory. This minor discrepancy does not affect the overall reliable evidence that both witnesses gave about the attack and killing of several hundred unarmed Tutsi civilians at Ngoma Parish by soldiers and Interahamwe.

325. With respect to the alleged attack on Matyazo, the Chamber notes that the Prosecution witnesses gave different accounts of the location of this attack. Prosecution Witnesses CCQ and QY testified to an attack on Matyazo Primary School on or around 21 April 1994. Prosecution witness QX spoke of an attack on Matyazo Health Centre on 21 April 1994. CCQ did not state whether he was present during the attack, or who the alleged perpetrators were. QY only heard gunfire and explosions from the direction of Matyazo and gave hearsay testimony that the refugees at the Matyazo Health Centre were killed on 21 April.

326. The evidence of Witness QY that Interahamwe and ESO soldiers were responsible for that attack on Matyazo Primary school sometime after 7 April is not consistent with the evidence of the other witness for the Prosecution. The Chamber therefore finds that there was an attack on Tutsi refugees at Matyazo primary school sometime around 21 April 1994. However, the Chamber has not heard any reliable evidence on the identity of those responsible for the attack, and therefore cannot conclude that the Accused bears any form of responsibility for that attack. The allegation about the attack on Matyazo therefore fails.

327. Similarly, there is no doubt in the Chamber's mind that a large-scale attack was launched against Tutsi refugees at Ngoma Parish on or about 29 April 1994. The only evidence before the Chamber is that the attack was led by soldiers under the leadership of Lieutenant Hategekimana of Ngoma Camp. There is no evidence that ESO soldiers were involved in this attack. Furthermore, the Chamber has not heard any evidence to suggest that the Accused ordered, instigated or otherwise aided and abetted the said attack; nor has the Chamber heard any evidence pointing to the conclusion that the Accused knew or had reason to know about this attack. For these reasons, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused was responsible for the attack on Tutsi refugees at Ngoma Parish on 29 April 1994.

41.12.1.11.12. 5.10.3. Attack at the Groupe scolaire

41.12.1.11.13. 5.10.3.1. Evidence

41.12.1.11.14. Prosecution Witness QBE

328. Witness QBE was an employee of the Groupe scolaire in April and May 1994. He testified that he was an eyewitness to two attacks launched on Groupe scolaire in the second half of April

1994.[415] According to QBE's testimony, the first attack was by a group of people apparently led by an Interahamwe dressed in Kitenge cloth. QBE added that this person was later identified as a member of the Presidential Guard, but he did not give a name. Witness QBE said that the attackers from outside were assisted by some employees of the Groupe scolaire including Faustin Twagirayezu, Faustin Niyonzima, Jean Paul, Jean-Marie and Diogène.[416]

329. Witness QBE explained that during the attack, he came out of the building but the attackers ordered him not to move, so he sat down in front of the Principal's office. He saw the attackers lead the refugees out of their dormitories and assemble them on a volleyball court. The attackers then proceeded to examine the refugees' identity cards and separated the Tutsi from the Hutu. The witness explained that the refugees who did not possess identity cards were separated based on their physical features.[417]

330. Witness QBE testified that on this occasion, the refugees were not killed because a certain Bicunda paid the attackers about 200,000 Rwandan francs to save their lives. The witness added that as a result of this incident, the rumour spread that Witness QBE was a member of the RPF and that he was the one paying money to save Tutsi lives.[418]

331. Witness QBE explained that the second attack also occurred in the second half of April. He narrated that one evening, as he prepared to leave the Groupe scolaire at about 5.00 p.m., he saw a camouflage military vehicle with a uniformed-soldier on board. Witness QBE tried to stop the vehicle, and asked the soldier where he was going to. According to QBE's testimony, the said soldier refused to stop the vehicle or answer the witness's question; instead, he retorted that he knew Witness QBE was a member of the RPF. The soldier drove out of the school complex.[419] QBE said that later on, he learnt from Bicunda who appeared to know the soldiers, that the soldier who was driving the vehicle was Lieutenant Gatsinzi and that he came from the Ngoma Military Camp. Bicunda also informed the witness that Lieutenant Gatsinzi had said because Witness QBE was hiding Inkotanyi at the Groupe scolaire, Gatsinzi would return the next day to kill QBE.[420]

332. Witness QBE further said that at about 6.00 p.m. the same day, he and the other people at the Groupe scolaire realised that while people could enter the school compound, no one was free to leave. He testified that two nuns who worked at the Butare Hospital had entered the school premises on their way home, but were prevented by soldiers from leaving the school. They spent the night at the school complex. QBE testified that having heard the nuns' story, and recalling his previous encounter with Lieutenant Gatsinzi, as well as the fact that two soldiers were guarding the main entrance of the school, he concluded that they were under attack by soldiers from Ngoma Camp.[421]

333. In light of Witness QBE's conclusion that the Groupe scolaire was under attack by soldiers from Ngoma Camp, he decided to seek assistance from the ESO Military camp, which was the Camp closest to the school, located approximately one or two kilometres away. He placed a telephone call to ESO Camp and spoke to a person at the guard post and requested to speak with the Camp Commander. The person who answered the call then handed it to someone else whom Witness QBE believed to be the Commander of the ESO Camp. According to QBE's testimony, he told the alleged Camp Commander that the Groupe scolaire was under attack and requested that he send troops to save them. The Camp Commander promised to come to their rescue. However, Witness QBE and the other refugees waited the whole night but no one came to protect them. Witness QBE testified that he learnt later that the Commander of ESO Camp was Tharcisse Muvunyi, but admitted he had never met the said person and did not know him personally.[422]

334. Witness QBE testified that between 8.00 and 9.00 a.m. the next day, the Groupe scolaire was attacked. The witness said he saw Lieutenant Gatsinzi standing near the administrative buildings of the complex. Gatsinzi showed him a search warrant and asked him to read it and move back. QBE testified that even though he was too scared to read the document, he confirmed to Gatsinzi that he had read it. QBE further said that at the same time as he was being asked to read the search warrant, he saw other soldiers and Interahamwe, led by a gendarme called Diogène, arrive at the school. Gatsinzi then asked Witness QBE to accompany him and open the doors to the buildings in the school so that Gatsinzi could search for those he referred to as Inkotanyi in hiding. QBE added that he led Gatsinzi around the school complex and opened a few doors for him, but not the doors to the rooms where he knew Tutsi refugees to be hiding in. Lieutenant Gatsinzi marked those doors with a cross and said he would return later to check.[423]

335. Witness QBE explained that as he and Gatsinzi left the building, he saw a group of soldiers arriving at the Groupe scolaire from all directions. QBE further explained that the soldiers acted together with Interahamwe who were armed with traditional weapons and appeared to be under the leadership of Faustin Twagiramungu. Together, the military and civilian attackers discovered some of the refugees, including children who came from an orphanage in Kigali. They took the refugees outside, asked for their identity cards, and separated Tutsi from Hutu. Witness QBE testified that at this point, it became clear to him that the attackers were not looking for Inkotanyi but for Tutsis, because they referred to some people as Inkotanyi simply because of their physical features.[424]

336. Witness QBE further explained that as the Tutsis were being separated from the Hutus, they were being beaten by the soldiers, and were asked to lie down on the veranda of the office of the school director. The soldiers then brought two Mazda pick-up vehicles from the Red Cross and EMUJECO and, with the help of the Interahamwe, as well as Diogène and Jean-Marie, loaded the refugees on the vehicles. The two vehicles made two trips each with intervals of about thirty minutes and carried the refugees away. Witness QBE testified that the vehicles left the school premises at about 3.00 p.m, and that as they did, the refugees on board were still being beaten and some of them were almost dead. Witness QBE said that he never saw any of those refugees again. Witness QBE said that at about 6.00 p.m. on the day of the attack, he was informed by a nun that the refugees had been killed near the Butare CARAES centre, which is the psychiatric clinic of Butare. Witness QBE testified that one of the people taken away on that day was called Vincent and that he was in charge of the Red Cross orphans. By Witness QBE's account, the people who participated in the attack were approximately fifty soldiers, assisted by Interahamwe and some teachers of the school. He also estimated that about 100 Tutsi refugees were carried away in this manner.[425]

337. Witness QBE said that later that evening, Lieutenant Gatsinzi returned to the Groupe scolaire together with another soldier. They asked the witness to come with them into his office and demanded that he give them money. Witness QBE initially gave them 40,000 Rwandan francs, but they only left after demanding and receiving a further 40,000 francs from the witness. Witness QBE explained that there were no further attacks on the school until he left at the end of May, but that people continued to be abducted and killed.[426]

[426] T. 15 June 2005, pp. 29, 30 (I.C.S.).

338. Prosecution Witness TQ testified that on 29 April 1994, at around 6:30-7:00 p.m., a large-scale attack was launched on the Groupe scolaire complex. TQ testified that at the time of the attack he did not know who had launched it, but he subsequently learnt that the attack was led by Second-Lieutenant Modeste Gatsinzi, who was a member of the Armed Forces and who, according to the witness, was from ESO. He was accompanied by soldiers and civilians, and in particular by a teacher from the Butare school complex, called Faustin Twagirayesu, who was also the responsable de cellule for Kabutare. Certain persons named Ndora and Muterere were also present.[427]

339. TQ estimated that there were over 50 assailants. The soldiers were wearing their camouflage uniforms and were carrying firearms. According to Witness TQ, they came from the ESO. TQ said that at the time, he was not aware that the soldiers were from the ESO, but he obtained this information afterwards from people who had followed what had happened.[428] Nathan Bicunda, the director of a company called SULFO in Kigali, who had come to take refuge at the orphanage on 7 April,[429] told him that he knew Modeste Gatsinzi, and that he had come from the ESO. Other people told TQ that they saw soldiers from the ESO. There was also a young soldier who told TQ that the soldiers who launched the attack were from ESO.[430] TQ also recalls that soldiers had already started to surround the Groupe scolaire complex the day before the attack.[431]

340. When the attack was launched on 29 April 1994, Witness TQ was in the refectory with the orphans. TQ first saw the attackers in front of the director's office. They then dispersed within the complex and went and asked the people in the dormitories to emerge. The refugees were gathered in the volleyball court opposite the director's office. At that point, the selection process started and the Tutsis were set apart from the others.[432] During this time, one of the Brothers was standing in front of the director's office, from where he could see the refugees being gathered on the volleyball court.[433] TQ testified that he was able to identify a number of the people on the court, including Vincent Wutabariyo, TQ's colleagues, and 18 of the Red Cross orphans, as well as some other children and refugees. Ten of the Red Cross supervisors were among those set aside on the volleyball court. Those set aside on the court were taken in front of the veranda, asked to lie down, and the soldiers and civilian Interahamwe fell on them. They were beaten, undressed, and loaded onto vehicles, taken to Rwasave and killed. According to Witness TQ, over 140 people were loaded onto the vehicles and taken away. TQ said that Rwasave was about two kilometres from the Groupe scolaire.[434] Witness TQ asked one of the Brothers to contact the authorities but he does not know if this was done.[435]

341. Witness TQ said that Bicunda, a Tutsi refugee, was not one of the persons taken away and killed.[436] This was because a soldier said, "Those members of Muvunyi's family should come closer",[437] whereupon Bicunda and other members of his family moved out and stood aside, and nobody touched them.[438] However, a child from Bicunda's family, nicknamed Kibwa, stayed away from other members of Bicunda's family and was taken away and killed. TQ learnt that an ambulance was sent for the child but it was already too late.[439] That child was the only person for whom an ambulance was sent that day.[440]

342. On the morning of 29 April 1994, TQ talked to Witness QBE and told him to ask for help from the Commander of ESO because the attack was coming from soldiers under the Commander's charge.[441] TQ testified that Witness QBE told him that he had telephoned the ESO and had spoken to Colonel Muvunyi.[442] QBE told TQ that Colonel Muvunyi said he would first check which soldiers were attacking them and then he would send help,[443] but nothing happened. Witness TQ also said he would not be surprised if Witness QBE said he did not make that call on the morning of 29 April 1994 but the night before.[444] TQ said that he subsequently learnt that Colonel Muvunyi refused to help and said he did not know the soldiers in question. In the afternoon, TQ asked Witness QBE to tell Colonel Muvunyi and the préfet that a number of persons had been abducted.[445]

343. On cross-examination, Witness TQ explained that when he gave his statement to the ICTR investigator on 28 and 29 July 1998, he knew a few of the assailants' names, but he did not know their complete respective identities. Witness TQ testified that he knew Lieutenant Modeste Gatsinzi, although not before the attack. He saw Lieutenant Gatsinzi the day of the attack and after that he often saw him moving around town, for instance in early May. TQ testified that he came to know Gatsinzi's name on the day of the attack.[446] Witness TQ further explained that when he gave his statement on 28 and 29 July 1998, he did not give Lieutenant Gatsinzi's name to the investigators for personal reasons.[447] TQ explained that at that time he himself had a pending case and that he had learnt that Gatsinzi held a position and that he had gone back to the RPF so TQ was afraid to mention his name for security reasons.[448]

344. Witness TQ first mentioned the involvement of Modeste Gatsinzi in the 29 April attack when he came to testify at the ICTR in the Butare case.[449] He did not recall mentioning any other soldier in the course of that testimony.[450] Witness TQ testified that now he can also identify Captain Nizeyimana, who was based at the ESO in 1994, as well as Mugabarigira, Hategekimana, as soldiers who took part in the attack of 29 April 1994 at the Groupe scolaire.[451] Witness TQ came to know the identity of those men during his trial before the Rwandan War Council.[452] Witness TQ testified that he did not know who was in charge of those soldiers on 29 April 1994.[453] TQ said that in the Butare trial before the ICTR, he did not say anything about Nizeyimana because no question was put to him in that regard.[454] Witness TQ further testified that a friend of Nathan Bicunda gave him information concerning the soldiers who took part in the attack of 29 April 1994.[455] TQ testified that Hategekimana was the commander of the Ngoma camp.[456]

345. In regards to the civilians who took part in the attack of 29 April 1994, Witness TQ can remember Diogène Nsabimana, whom he knew because they attended the same school and then were colleagues.[457] Witness TQ could not remember if Nsabimana also took part in the attack of 21 April 1994. TQ remembered that Deogène Nsabimana was working at the Groupe scolaire at the time of the attack and that he was the person who opened the dormitory.[458] Witness TQ further testified that Jean-Marie Ovibar also participated in the attack of 29 April 1994.[459]

346. TQ testified that during the 29 April attack, he and others were able to identify soldiers from ESO, but during the proceedings before the War Council in Rwanda, Modeste Gatsinzi mentioned certain officers from Ngoma Camp, including Mugabarigira and Hategekimana.[460]

347. Following that attack, the atmosphere at the Groupe scolaire was bad. Distrust had increased. Tutsis were saying that Hutus were plotting against them, and Hutus did not want to stay close to Tutsis so that no one could say that they were together and thus kill them.[461]

348. Witness TQ testified that nobody, to his knowledge, did anything to prevent the attack on the refugees at the Groupe scolaire on 29 April 1994. TQ estimates that the military authorities could have prevented the attack because during the killings the soldiers supervised the others.[462]

349. TQ testified that when the attack occurred on 29 April 1994, he did not think about asking for assistance from Colonel Munyamunyi and his soldiers, who were being used for security across the street.[463] TQ said that at that time he did not know who Munyamunyi was. Witness TQ added that the soldiers who were guarding the school complex knew the attack was happening, so they could have protected the children and the refugees if they had wanted to do so. Witness TQ testified that on that date they knew who attacked them: people coming from ESO Commanded by Lieutenant Gatsinzi. These soldiers had been sent by the Commander of ESO along with other soldiers from the Ngoma Camp.[464]

350. Witness TQ testified that he reported the attack of 29 April 1994 to the Red Cross authorities and that they wanted to alert the authorities such as the préfet.[465] However, no written report was made.[466] TQ believes that he talked about this to the Italian Counsel, Pierre Antonio Costa, to whom he gave a report on the general situation, as well as to a nun, named Annunciata. Although he asked Witness QBE to report to the préfet, Witness TQ does not remember receiving any answer from him.[467] When TQ testified in the Butare case in 2004, he said that he was present when QBE telephoned préfet Nsabimana and that he heard what QBE was saying.[468] However, TQ never said that he was sure QBE was talking to the préfet at that time.[469]

351. Witness NN testified that from April to June 1994, he was a soldier at ESO.[470] He said that during the 1994 events, there were two different groups of soldiers at ESO. The first group was under the leadership of Captain Nizeyimana and included other officers such as Chief Warrant Officer Kayinamura, second-Lieutenant Bizimana, and Second-Lieutenant Gakwerere. According to Witness NN, this group consisted mainly of soldiers from the north of Rwanda, they were extremists, and they engaged in widespread massacres of the civilian Tutsi population. Witness NN explained that the second group consisted of those who did not support the massacres. Witness NN said he was part of the second group that consisted of Tutsis, people who looked like Tutsis and others who were not from the north and did not support the massacres. He explained that this group had its "own information network", and that they tried to obtain information about the killings to learn who was responsible.[471]

352. Witness NN testified that Second-Lieutenant Gatsinzi, an ESO soldier, participated in the killings at the Groupe scolaire, and that the victims were orphan children from SOS Kacyiru who had sought refuge in Butare.[472] He explained that while there were both adults and children at the Groupe scolaire, most of the refugees were children, and that he had seen them when he went to visit one Bicunda. Witness NN added that all the refugees he saw were civilians. He further stated that he was not an eyewitness to the killings, but saw the body of one of Bicunda's children at the mortuary. The Witness estimated that the killings at the Groupe scolaire took place in late May.[473]

353. Defence Witness MO38, a Tutsi woman, testified that in 1994 she lived in Kacyiru, in Kigali préfecture and worked as a nurse. On 6 April 1994, she heard about the death of President Habyarimana and also heard gunfire.[474] On 7 April she received a telephone call from someone who told her that some people had been killed in Kyovu district, and that the attackers were looking for witness M38's home with the intention of killing her and members of her family.[475]

354. Witness and her family therefore moved to the orphanage at Kacyiru and stayed there for two nights. On 9 April 1994, Witness MO38 and her family were evacuated to Butare together with the other children from the orphanage.[476] They arrived in Butare at 9.30 p.m. and lodged at the Groupe scolaire. According to the witness, Butare was quiet when they arrived, but around the 20 April, the security situation deteriorated.[477] Witness MO38 stated that on 21 April, the Groupe scolaire was attacked by the Interahamwe who wanted to kill the orphan children. The attackers separated the children into groups, based on their ethnicity. Witness MO38 initially testified that the children were protected by the other refugees, but later said it was soldiers who protected the children from the Interahamwe. She added that Prosecution Witnesses TQ and QBE paid 500,000 Rwandan francs to the Interahamwe in order to save the children.[478]

355. Witness MO38 further explained that at about 6.00 a.m. on 29 April, another attack was launched on the Groupe scolaire by soldiers and Interahamwe.[479] The soldiers remained outside the complex, while the Interahamwe came inside and together with one Diogène, asked all the refugees to come out to the courtyard. The soldiers and Interahamwe asked the refugees, including children, to lie down on the floor and they did. However, Witness MO38 explained that she and members of her family were asked to stand away from the other refugees; she later understood this was because Colonel Marcel Gatsinzi had asked the soldiers to protect them.[480] According to the witness, the remaining refugees were killed and their bodies dumped somewhere in ponds in Kabutare.[481]

356. Witness MO38 testified, without giving a specific figure, that there were many people at the Groupe scolaire during this attack including the orphans from Kigali. She confirmed that over fourteen children were killed during the attack by the Interahamwe "under the supervision of the soldiers." All the victims were unarmed Tutsi civilians.[482] On the other hand, the soldiers and Interahamwe were armed with various types of weapons. Witness MO38 said the soldiers who attacked the Groupe scolaire said they were coming from Gisenyi.[483]

41.12.1.11.18. 5.10.3.2. Deliberations

357. It is alleged in the Indictment that on or about 24 April 1994, refugees at the Groupe Scolaire, including orphans evacuated by the Red Cross from Kigali to Butare, were attacked by soldiers from Ngoma and ESO Camps. During the attack, the supervisor of the orphans called the ESO Camp for assistance and spoke with the Accused, but the latter refused to send troops to protect the refugees.

358. The Chamber has considered the testimony of Prosecution Witness QBE and finds him to be very credible. It is apparent from QBE's testimony that the Groupe scolaire was attacked by soldiers under the leadership of Lieutenant Modeste Gatisinzi working in collaboration with Interahamwe. The Chamber is satisfied from the totality of the evidence before it that Lieutenant Gatsinzi actually came from ESO, and not from Ngoma Camp as stated by Witness QBE. This error, in the Chamber's view, does not affect the reliability of Witness QBE's testimony. The Chamber also notes QBE's assertion that he telephoned the ESO Camp and spoke directly to the Camp Commander, even though there remains a lingering doubt as to whether the person at the other end of the telephone line was in fact the Accused. In any event, QBE testified that the ESO Camp was the closest military facility to the Groupe scolaire, as it was located only one or two kilometres away. Thus, it was reasonable to expect the Accused, as the highest-ranking military official at the Camp in late April 1994, to provide protection for the refugees at the school or to prevent soldiers under his command from attacking the facility. Due to the repeated nature of these attacks on the Groupe scolaire, the Accused had reason to know of them, but failed to take action either to prevent them or to punish their perpetrators.

359. The evidence of Prosecution Witness TQ corroborates that of Witness QBE with respect to the fact that the Groupe scolaire was attacked by ESO soldiers on or about 29 April 1994. TQ's evidence tends to suggest that the Accused was at least aware of the ongoing attack, even if he did not directly order it. TQ's testimony further corroborates QBE's assertion that he placed a telephone call to the ESO Commander to request for assistance. From the evidence of these two witnesses the Chamber notes that Bicunda and his family, who were Tutsis, were spared on account of their relation to the Accused.

360. The Chamber considers that the evidence of Witnesses QBE and TQ is corroborated in every material particular by that of Witnesses NN and MO38. In fact the salient issues that an attack was perpetrated on Groupe scolaire on 29 April 1994 by soldiers and Interahamwe, that Bicunda's family was saved by the Accused, that one of the Bicunda children was killed during the attack due to a mistaken identity, and that an ESO soldier called Lieutenant Modeste Gatsinzi led the group of military and civilian attackers, have all been corroborated and established beyond reasonable doubt. The Chamber notes Witness TQ's suggestion that during criminal proceedings in Rwanda, he learnt that both Hategekimana from the Ngoma Camp and Nizeyimana from the ESO Camp took part in the attack on the Groupe scolaire. This evidence, together with QBE's account that it was soldiers from Ngoma Camp who attacked the school, established that this attack was a joint operation involving soldiers from both ESO and Ngoma Camps.

361. The Chamber believes that MO38 deliberately tried to minimise the role of the Accused in saving her and her family and therefore does not believe her evidence that Colonel Gatsinzi was her family's saviour. Similarly, the Chamber disbelieves MO38's evidence that it was a group of Interahamwe with the assistance of soldiers from Gisenyi, who attacked the Groupe scolaire. The Chamber attributes this evidence to Witness MO38's desire to shield ESO soldiers and the Accused, their commander, from responsibility for the Groupe scolaire massacres. The Chamber recalls its finding that ESO soldiers were under the effective control of the Accused. The Chamber also notes that the Accused saved the Bicunda family from being killed; that he sent an ambulance to rescue one of Bicunda's children; that Witness QBE telephoned the ESO Camp and reported the attack to someone alleged to be the Camp Commander; and that the attackers were under the leadership of Lieutenant Modeste Gatsinzi from ESO. These facts suggest that the Accused knew of the attack but failed to do anything to prevent or stop it, or otherwise punish the perpetrators.

[483] T. 14 December 2005, pp. 20, 26 (cross-examination).

362. The Chamber notes a number of apparent discrepancies in the testimony of Prosecution Witness TQ. For instance, it emerged during the cross-examination that TQ had deliberately failed to mention Lieutenant Modeste Gatsinzi's name to the ICTR Investigators in 1998, but that he had mentioned Gatsinzi's name during his 2004 testimony in the Butare trial before this Tribunal. Apparently, this was because TQ himself was an accused person in a pending case before the Rwandan War Council and he was afraid of mentioning Gatsinzi's name. TQ also testified that it was during the proceedings in Rwanda that he got to know the names of some of the other soldiers who participated in the attack on the Groupe scolaire, including Nizeyimana, Mugabarigira and Hategekimana, the Commander of the Ngoma Camp. TQ also stated that it was Modeste Gatsinzi who, during the proceedings in Rwanda, first mentioned the involvement of Ngoma Camp soldiers such as Mugabarigira and Hategekimana in the Groupe scolaire massacre. However, having considered all supporting and corroborative evidence relating to the attack on the Groupe scolaire, the Chamber is satisfied that Witness TQ gave a truthful and honest account of the events he witnessed at that location on 29 April 1994. Moreover, the Chamber is satisfied, on the basis of the Judgement of the Rwandan War Council of 20 January 2003 that Witness TQ was acquitted of the genocide-related charges laid against him in Rwanda.[484]

363. The Chamber finds that as Interim Commander of the ESO Camp and as the highest-ranking military official in Butare during these events in late April 1994, the Accused had a duty to act to prevent the attacks perpetrated by soldiers under his command on the civilian Tutsi population seeking refuge at the Groupe scolaire, barely two kilometres away from ESO. The Chamber finds that the nature and scale of the attack at the Groupe scolaire were such that the Accused could not have been unaware of it. His position as the most senior military officer in Butare placed on him a special duty to investigate actual or potential violations of criminal law by his subordinates and to prevent or punish such violations. In this regard, the Chamber recalls the view expressed in Kayishema and Ruzindana that military superiors have a more active duty to inform themselves of the activities of their subordinates when they knew, or, owing to the circumstances, should have known that those subordinates were committing or about to commit crimes.[485]

364. The evidence presented by Prosecution Witnesses QBE and TQ strongly suggests that the attack on the Groupe scolaire was a joint operation involving soldiers from both ESO and Ngoma Camps. Despite a direct telephone request made by Witness QBE to the ESO Camp to send help to protect the refugees, including orphans and Red Cross employees, no help was sent. Even if the Accused did not personally receive the call for help, Bicunda's family was spared because of an order from the Accused. Therefore, it is clear that he knew about the attack and had the material ability to stop it, but did nothing. The Chamber therefore finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that soldiers from ESO in collaboration with men from Ngoma Camp and Interahamwe militia attacked and killed a group of Tutsi civilians at Groupe scolaire on 29 April 1994. As Interim Commander of ESO and the most senior military officer in Butare, the Accused knew about this attack by his subordinates from ESO, but failed to take measures to prevent its occurrence or to punish the perpetrators in its aftermath.

41.12.1.11.19. 5.10.4. Attack on Tutsi Refugees at Mukura Forest

41.12.1.11.21. Prosecution Witness XV

365. Witness XV, an employee of the University Hospital, testified that from about 7 April 1994 when the news of the death of Rwanda's president spread in his commune, the security situation deteriorated. He said soldiers set up roadblocks and Tutsis were asked to show their identity cards.[486] XV testified that in light of this security environment, he decided to stay at home with his family. On 15 or 16 April, he received a letter from the Director of the university establishment, which was co-signed by "Commander Muvunyi", instructing him to go back to work, which he did. However, around the 18 or 19 April, he again stopped going to work on the advice of his boss because "houses were being burnt and people were running away."[487]

366. Witness XV further testified that around 21 April, houses near his own were being burnt down "and people were being told to ensure their own security." Witness XV therefore chose to move towards Mukura forest where some of his friends had already sought refuge. According to Witness XV's testimony, when he got to Mukura forest, he found about 800 Tutsi refugees, including "children, old women, old men, young men, and young women." He explained that shortly after the refugees arrived at the forest, "civilians and Interahamwe became aware of that" and "started to kill" them. Witness XV further explained that the refugees defended themselves "with sticks and other resources in order to ward off the situation" but they failed because soldiers had been called in to reinforce the Interahamwe. These soldiers, who Witness XV said came from the ESO and Ngoma Camps, soon arrived bearing arms and grenades.[488]

367. Witness XV informed the Chamber that after the attacks, he "noticed that there were some dead bodies", and that he escaped through the bushes and went towards to Tumba valley.[489]

368. Prosecution Witness YAK was a 15 year-old school boy in 1994, living in Huye commune, Butare préfecture. He testified that on 7 April 1994, he learnt that the plane carrying President Habyarimana had been shot down, and that the President was dead. Witness YAK said it was further announced that the Inyenzi were responsible for the President's death; and that the word "Inyenzi" meant Tutsi. YAK said the security situation in his commune changed after this date; night patrols were initially set up and operated jointly by Hutus and Tutsis, but later, the Hutus developed their own "means of communication" and did not want to conduct joint patrols with the Tutsis. The joint night patrols stopped around 15 to 17 April 1994. According to YAK's testimony, the Hutus from neighbouring secteurs started wearing banana leaves and marching; they told other Hutus to wear banana leaves on their person and place them on their houses, and that anyone who did not do so would be killed. YAK explained that this was a way of distinguishing Hutus from Tutsis. He said; "One could feel that there was something organised and they killed us."[490]

369. As a result of this deteriorating security situation, Witness YAK and other Tutsis spent the night in the bush, not far from a school. The refugees filled the classrooms of the school, and there was not enough space for everyone. Witness YAK said that the refugees came from neighbouring secteurs such as Dudinana, Runyinya, Karama, and Bvumbi. He said they remained at the school but were attacked by people wearing banana leaves. Some of the men tried to defend themselves, but realised it was impossible to do so. The refugees therefore decided to move towards Gasharu. By Witness YAK's account, there were between 4,000 and 5,000 refugees.[491] They went past Gasharu and settled on a platform called Nyagasoze, which was located in Mukura forest. YAK testified that because they had not eaten for a number of days, someone slaughtered one of his cows and distributed the meat among the refugees. As they settled down to eat, they were attacked by a group of civilians. Witness YAK said the refugees managed to repel this initial attack.[492]

370. Shortly after this first attack, there was another attack by soldiers who came from the direction of the tarred road, and descended from CT military trucks. YAK testified that in his estimation, there were about 100 armed soldiers in uniform; they wore black berets bearing the insignia of the Rwandan Army. Witness YAK further stated that he believed the soldiers came from ESO, because another Tutsi refugee told them that an Interahamwe called Diogène Harindintwali had gone to seek reinforcements from the ESO Military Camp. Witness YAK added that he could distinguish between soldiers and gendarmes because the latter wore red berets, while the soldiers wore black ones. He also explained that the soldiers at ESO were trainees.[493]

371. YAK explained that upon their arrival, the soldiers first fired three grenades mounted on guns towards the refugees, but that these grenades did not claim any victims. YAK stated the Chamber that the soldiers started shooting at the refugees, who because they were afraid to see the soldiers, had gathered in one place. He said this facilitated the "work" of the soldiers.[494] YAK said some people who stood close to him fell to the ground. He managed to slip away and lie down in a sorghum field. YAK said that the shooting lasted for about two hours. When the gunfire stopped and everything was quiet, YAK observed the soldiers withdraw into a nearby pine forest, and then back to their trucks. They drove off towards the direction of Butare. After the soldiers' departure, "members of the population came to finish off all those who hadn't been killed on the spot with guns – with gunshots". YAK explained that from his hiding spot in the sorghum field, he could hear the noise of striking machetes, as well as the screams and groans of the refugees who were being attacked. He said "those agonising cries" ended about 3.00 p.m., but he waited until nightfall and then walked to his aunt's place. His aunt was married to a Hutu man. He said he walked in the rain and under the cover of darkness and that those manning the roadblocks had already left. He arrived at his aunt's place at about 8.30 p.m., but had to leave again at 3.00 a.m., to join other refugees at the Butare University Hospital.[495]

41.12.1.11.23. 5.10.4.2. Deliberations

372. In the Chamber's view, Prosecution Witnesses XV and YAK largely corroborate each other on the attack on Tutsi refuges at Mukura forest and the identity of the attackers. The Chamber finds that soldiers from the ESO and Ngoma Camps were involved in the attack and that they worked in close collaboration with the Interahamwe. The Chamber also finds that the Accused, by virtue of his position as Interim ESO Commander and the most senior military officer in Butare, had reason to know of the attack on the civilian Tutsi population at Mukura forest. Due to the large number of refugees staying at Mukura and the nature of the attacks on them by the Interahamwe, the Accused had reason to know of their situation. Yet, instead of protecting the refugees and preventing the Interahamwe from further victimising them, ESO soldiers under the authority of the Accused participated in massacring them. The Chamber therefore concludes that the Prosecution has proved

[493] T. 29 June 2005, p. 30.
[494] T. 29 June 2005, pp. 29-30. Witness YAK stated as follows: "We were refugees scattered all over the place. We saw soldiers and as Rwandan civilians were not used to soldiers, was (sic) afraid because those soldiers hadn't come to save us. We expected something to happen. So we assembled and apparently facilitated their work. … We assembled so they could shoot us easily, a gun, a bullet could hit more than one person, and that is exactly what those soldiers wanted to see."

beyond reasonable doubt that ESO soldiers under the command and authority of the Accused collaborated with Interahamwe and other soldiers from Ngoma Camp to attack and kill Tutsi civilian refugees at Mukura forest. The Chamber further finds that the Accused had reason to know of this attack but failed to prevent it or to punish the perpetrators.

41.12.1.11.26. 5.10.5.1. Evidence

41.12.1.11.27.

41.12.1.11.28. Prosecution Witness YAO

373. Prosecution Witness YAO testified that on 7 April 1994, she heard about the death of the Rwandan President. At the time, she lived with her parents and five siblings. They were all Tutsi. YAO testified that after the President's death, the behaviour of people in her area changed and members of her family were afraid. They therefore decided to leave their home and seek refuge elsewhere. Her parents and siblings went to Mushubi Parish, while Witness YAO spent the night in the bush. YAO testified that her parents, one of her brothers, as well as other people such as Kageruka, Rugambara, and Félicité were killed at Mushubi Parish on the night of 7 April. She learnt about this from her younger sisters who were with their parents when they died.[496]

374. YAO stated that after receiving the news of the death of her parents, she continued her flight so that she would not be killed. She first went to her aunt's place and subsequently to Cyanika Parish. Upon arrival at the Parish, she found two priests who were living there; later on, other refugees including men, women and children arrived from Karama and Rukondo. The refugees looked dirty and tired. YAO said that she spoke to some of the refugees and they told her they were fleeing because they had been attacked and their cows taken away; some said that their neighbours had been killed and so they decided to flee.[497] YAO said that she heard that on 16 April 1994, there was an attack on the refugees at Cyanika Parish. YAO testified she "heard that grenades were thrown, but… did not see the assailants."[498] She said she left the Cyanika Parish on 17 April 1994 and went to the Butare Cathedral. She found a priest and other refugees who had sought shelter there. YAO explained that it was quite a distance between the parish and the Cathedral and that it might have taken them up to three hours to walk the distance.

375. YAO explained that on 20 April 1994, while at the Cathedral, soldiers came and took the refugees to Kabutare. She explained that these soldiers wore military uniforms and were armed with guns. She said the soldiers asked the refugees to walk ahead of them and the soldiers followed on foot. Witness YAO said that when they arrived at Kabutare, the soldiers asked the refugees to lie down and then began shooting at them. As a consequence, most of the refugees were killed, others were injured, and there were a few survivors. Witness YAO explained that people survived because as the refugees were asked to lie down, some people fell on top of others and some of those beneath the crowd survived. Witness YAO said she was one of the lucky survivors.

41.12.1.11.30.

376. The Chamber is unable, on the basis of Witness YAO's testimony, to conclude that an attack took place at Cyanika or that the Accused or his subordinates were involved in it. It is not clear whether Witness YAO was present at Cyanika Parish during the alleged attack or if she was merely recounting hearsay evidence. Furthermore, she did not give any evidence regarding the identity of the assailants. The Chamber therefore finds that the Prosecution has failed to prove this allegation beyond reasonable doubt.

41.12.1.11.31. 5.10.6. General Conclusion on Massacre of Tutsi civilians

377. In conclusion, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that as ESO Commander, the Accused knew of the attacks by ESO soldiers on Tutsi refugees at the Groupe scolaire. The Chamber is also satisfied that the Accused had reason to know about the attacks at Mukura forest. However, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to prove that the Accused directly participated in, knew, or had reason to know about the attack on Tutsi refugees at Ngoma Parish, Matyazo School, and Cyanika Parish.

41.12.1.12. 5.11. Rape and Sexual Violence by Soldiers and Interahamwe during Attacks on Tutsi Civilians

41.12.1.12.1. 5.11.1. Indictment

378. Paragraphs 3.41 and 3.41 (i) read:

> 3.41 During the course of the acts referred to in Paragraph 3.40 above, many women and girls were raped and sexually violated in these locations or were taken by force or coerced to other locations, where they were raped and subjected to acts of sexual violence by Interahamwe and soldiers from the Ngoma Camp. Lieutenant-Colonel Muvunyi by reason of his position of authority and the widespread nature of these acts, knew or had reason to know, that these acts were being committed and he failed to take measures to prevent, or to put an end to these acts, or to punish the perpetrators.
> 3.41 (i) In most cases the rapes were aggravated by circumstances of gang rape, multiple rape, rape of virgin girls, rape of daughters in front of their mothers or other family members, which involved violence and degrading treatment to the persons involved. Most of these acts of sexual violence were accompanied by the killing of the victim.

41.12.1.12.3. Prosecution Witness AFV

379. Witness AFV, a Tutsi woman, worked at the Butare University Hospital at the time of President Habyarimana's death.[499] At about 1:00 p.m. on 20 April 1994, while walking home from work, she was stopped by soldiers manning a roadblock located at the intersection of the roads leading to the University Laboratory and the University Hospital.[500] There were about four armed soldiers in military uniforms with spotted colours similar to the uniforms she knew soldiers from the ESO wore. They also wore cartridge belts and carried grenades. AFV did not notice the headgear of the soldiers, or even if they wore any. The witness believed the soldiers came from the ESO because the roadblock was not far from the ESO Camp "and the soldiers took turns" at the roadblock.[501]

380. AFV estimated that the roadblock was about a 10-minute walk from the ESO.[502] The soldiers asked passers-by to present their identity cards and separated the Hutu from the Tutsi. Hutu were allowed to pass, but Tutsi were asked to stay and were searched.[503]

381. Witness AFV testified that the soldiers searched her, beat her, and asked if she thought she was extraordinary. They asked her how she could dare go to work. They took her service keys. The witness feared the soldiers would harm her, because a Tutsi girl who had walked with AFV to the roadblock was killed by the soldiers when they discovered that she had torn up her identity card in order to conceal her ethnicity. Her body was thrown into the gutter.[504]

382. One of the soldiers said, "Let us look at this Tutsi's sexual organs. How come you are working when the others aren't?" The soldier then added, "Let's go along with her, but tomorrow you will have to come back and present yourself to me."[505] AFV believed the soldiers meant that they would kill her after looking at her sexual organ.[506] Two gun-toting soldiers said they would accompany Witness AFV home, but they in fact beat her up and took her into the woods.[507] She told them to kill her on the spot instead of taking her away to torture her.[508]

384. When she regained consciousness, her attackers had left. She felt very weak, could not bring her legs together, and noticed she had lost a lot of blood; she had difficulty getting up.[510] AFV could see the blood coming from her sexual organ despite the fact that it was not daylight. She was still bleeding when she arrived home;[511] under the lights at home, she also noticed a white liquid or substance near her pubic area. Witness AFV believed the bleeding from her sexual organ and the white substance around her pubic area were because she was raped by the two soldiers.[512]

385. AFV testified that at the time of the events she was a nun and a virgin and had never had sexual intercourse before. Witness AFV added that she was no longer a nun because she could not continue to be one after losing her virginity; she said that the soldiers had deprived her of that status.[513]

41.12.1.12.4. Prosecution Witness QY

386. Prosecution Witness QY, a Tutsi, was 17 years old in 1994.[514] She testified that when the security situation in her cellule deteriorated after 7 April 1994, she went to the Matyazo Primary

School, which was located about 10 minutes away from her residence.[515] As a result of an attack on Matyazo Primary School, Witness QY fled to different locations and ended up at the préfecture office where she found armed soldiers and gendarmes.[516]

387. QY recognised the gendarmes because they were wearing red berets.[517] She said the soldiers were raping girls. QY did not know how long she stayed at the préfecture Office, but subsequently she and other refugees were taken to the E.E.R. by soldiers and young bystanders.[518]

388. The refugees arrived at E.E.R. at about 6.00 p.m., and soon thereafter, QY was taken by a soldier to a nearby woodlot and raped. The soldier was wearing military gear and carried a gun. Witness QY suspected that the soldier came from ESO because the E.E.R. "was very close to the ESO, and that is where the military camp was. Even those who were at the Office of the préfet were from ESO."[519] Once they got inside the woods, the soldier forced her to take off her clothes. He then removed his trousers, remained in his underpants, and proceeded to insert his sexual organ into hers. QY started bleeding. The soldier then took her to the lower part of the woods and forced her to lie down. She did. Witness QY further explained: "When I lay down, he once again put his sexual organ into mine and did the same exercise, and after that he said, 'We are going to put our blood together, and I will not kill you.'" After this experience, she realised that she was "bleeding profusely" from her sexual organ and her clothes were wet. The soldier then took her back to the other refugees.[520]

389. Witness QY testified that sometime between April and July 1994, she was taken by three soldiers from the préfecture Office to a place at Rwabayanga. She could not identify the soldiers because the event took place at night and the population was "going through a very difficult time." The soldiers took her to a bar and restaurant, and then into "a small house which looked like a toilet." They put her on a bed inside the room. QY said, "One got on me, the other one spread my legs apart, and the other took to one side and took one of my legs, and the other took the other leg. … One of the soldiers got on me, and they took turns and then they left." When asked by the Prosecutor to explain what she meant by "they took turns", QY replied: "each of them introduced his sexual organ into mine."[521]

390. About three weeks after this incident, Witness QY said she was raped again by a soldier in the back courtyard of the préfecture Office. She said she could not remember the exact month this incident took place, but explained that the soldier took her to a very small house where he raped her. She said, "And he put me up against the wall … and then he raped me against the wall. … He took his sexual organ and introduced it into mine." The soldier left Witness QY in the small house. Later she went back to the other refugees within the premises of the préfecture Office.[522]

391. QY further explained to the Chamber that at some point between April and July 1994, she was taken away from the préfecture Office by a person "dressed in civilian clothes" to a place known as Chez Mahenga.[523] When this civilian took her away, soldiers were present at the préfecture. Witness QY and other refugees at the préfecture were subjected to several rapes by many people. All these rapes took place in the presence of soldiers as "the soldiers were practically living there."[524]

392. Chez Mahenga was about seven minutes away from the préfecture Office. Witness QY described it as a bar, or a drinking place which also had rooms. Upon their arrival at Chez Mahenga, she saw soldiers who had "forcibly married girls" and kept them at that location.[525] The girls were in rooms opposite her own; she could see them from her veranda, but could not speak to them. QY was kept in a room by her captor for about two to three days. He locked her up in that room and returned whenever he wanted to have sexual intercourse. QY explained that she "became a sort of wife" to her captor.[526] With respect to the general condition of women kept at Chez Mahenga, Witness QY told the Chamber, "we had become their women. We had no idea when they were going to come and take us out of where we were. We had simply become like their women. Nobody was spared; everybody was raped. … Many people were raped, and most of them died. There are others who were traumatized and still others who even had children with the rapists."[527] Her captor took her back to the préfecture Office after an announcement was made that there would be a search at Chez Mahenga. From the préfecture Office, she and other refugees were subsequently transported in buses to Nyange forest at the instructions of the préfet.[528]

393. During cross-examination, the witness was questioned about one Mazimpaka. She stated that while at the préfecture Office, she was raped by Mazimpaka. She explained that she could not remember when this incident took place, or if it was before or after the three soldiers raped her at Rwabayanga. QY further added that Mazimpaka was a soldier or a gendarme,[529] and that she came to know Mazimpaka's name during the latter's trial in Rwanda.[530]

394. In 1994, Prosecution Witness TM was a 44-year-old Tutsi farmer living in Gikongoro.[531] She testified that sometime around mid-April 1994, a group of civilians and soldiers came to her house to search for Tutsis. A Tutsi child called Rusunika, then living with her, was chased after and killed by the attackers.[532] The soldiers in the group included Katabirora, Sebuhoro and another who was referred to as "GP, Garde présidentiel."[533] TM knew both soldiers Katabirora and Sebuhoro well, and had in the past seen them manning a roadblock located about one kilometre from her house. She further said she used to see Katabirora who worked in Gikongoro town.[534] She believed that Katabirora was Hutu. The other people who came to her house included Ndayisaba, Ntawuhiganayo, and Isidore. The soldiers carried firearms and the civilians carried small hoes and machetes.[535]

395. Witness TM testified that after killing Rusunika, the Tutsi child, the attackers returned and raped her. Soldier Katabirora was the first to rape her. When she tried to resist, the latter hit her.[536] At the time of the rape, Witness TM was six months pregnant. Three days after she was raped, she suffered a miscarriage. She testified that she still felt pain in her back and head.[537]

41.12.1.12.7. Prosecution Witness YAI

396. Witness YAI testified that in late May 1994, at a security meeting held at Gikore, Muvunyi spoke about Hutu men who had forcefully taken Tutsi women as wives and asked the men to "[s]end these women back to their homes".[538] According to the witness, when Muvunyi asked that the women be sent back to their homes, he simply meant that they should be delivered to the killers because the homes of the Tutsi women had already been destroyed.[539]

41.12.1.12.8. Prosecution Witness CCP

397. Prosecution Witness CCP, a Hutu,[540] testified that he attended the meeting at Gikore in May 1994.[541] He heard Muvunyi say that the Hutu men who had married Tutsi girls had to kill those girls, or if they were not capable of killing them, to send them away so they could be killed elsewhere.[542] According to CCP, Muvunyi stated that the Tutsi girls should die because they could poison their Hutu husbands.[543]

41.12.1.12.9. Prosecution Witness YAK

398. Witness YAK was 15 years old in 1994.[544] He found refuge at the Butare University Hospital after his family was killed.[545] According to the witness, soldiers from ESO came to the University Hospital and tried to lure the girls who were there. The refugees were hungry; the soldiers told the girls to follow them to ESO where they would be given food. However, the girls returned in tears and Witness YAK heard from another refugee that the girls were raped by the ESO soldiers.[546]

399. YAK testified that the soldiers within the University Hospital compound came from ESO. According to him, if one stood at the hospital reception area, one could see the soldiers coming from ESO.[547]

41.12.1.12.10. 5.11.3. Deliberations

400. The Indictment alleges that many women and girls were raped and sexually assaulted by Interahamwe and soldiers from the Ngoma Camp. At Paragraph 82 of its Pre-Trial Brief, however, the Prosecution stated that the acts of rape were committed by Interahamwe as well as soldiers from the Ngoma and ESO Camps and the gendarmerie. Similarly, during its Opening Statement, the Prosecution indicated that it would lead evidence to show that soldiers from the ESO and Ngoma Camps under the command of the Accused committed rape. The question to be considered is whether by including the ESO soldiers in the Pre-Trial Brief and its Opening Statement, the Prosecution discharged its obligation to give clear and timely notice in order to put the Defence on alert in respect of this charge.

401. Pursuant to Article 20 (4) (a) of the Statute, an accused has the right to be informed of the nature and cause of the charges against him. According to the Appeals Chamber, when considered in light of Rule 47 (C), this provision translates into a prosecutorial obligation "to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the indictment, but not the evidence by which such material facts are to be proven."[548] The Chamber notes that the evidence of Witnesses AFV and QY that they were raped by soldiers from ESO does not support the very clear and specific allegation in the Indictment that soldiers from Ngoma Camp and Interahamwe were responsible for the said rapes. In the Chamber's view, the allegation that ESO soldiers committed rape in Butare in 1994 is a material fact that should have been pleaded in the Indictment, not a mere evidential detail that could be introduced at a later stage.

402. It is clear from the jurisprudence of the ad hoc Tribunals that in certain limited circumstances the Prosecution may cure a defective indictment by giving timely, clear and consistent notice to the Defence through subsequent communications such as the Pre-Trial Brief, witness statements, or the opening statement.[549] Thus, a vague or otherwise defective indictment can be cured through these means if it merely fails to set out the particulars of the Prosecution case with sufficient specificity. As stated by the ICTY Appeals Chamber, "the question whether an indictment is pleaded with sufficient particularity is dependent upon whether it sets out the material facts of the Prosecution case with enough detail to inform a defendant clearly of the charges against him so that he may prepare his defense."[550]

403. In the instant case, however, the Chamber is confronted with a very different problem. With respect to the rape charge, the Chamber is of the view that the Indictment is not vague. On the contrary, the Indictment clearly states that soldiers from Ngoma Camp committed rape. This is a clear and straightforward charge. There is no ambiguity in this. A careful consideration of all the charges contained in the Indictment reveals that the Prosecution clearly distinguished between the criminal acts attributed to soldiers from the Ngoma Camp and those attributed to ESO soldiers. There is specific reference to the Ngoma and ESO Camps in some charges while other charges refer only to one Camp and not to the other. Therefore, it cannot be said that it was a mistake on the part of the Prosecution to have listed only the Ngoma Camp under the rape charge. When the evidence was presented in Court during the trial, however, it turned out that it was not the soldiers from Ngoma Camp but those from the ESO Camp who had committed these acts. Lack of evidence to prove a charge does not make the charge defective.

404. For the Prosecution to turn around in its Pre-Trial Brief and state that the ESO soldiers as well as soldiers from Ngoma Camp and Interahamwe committed rape could be interpreted as a radical transformation of the Prosecution case. It is clear that the Accused did not have the opportunity to defend himself against such a fundamentally different case. The Chamber therefore considers that it would be prejudicial to consider the evidence of rape by ESO soldiers in light of the allegation in the Indictment.

405. It is clear from the Rules that the Prosecution cannot amend an existing charge in an indictment or introduce a new charge without following the proper procedure. Rule 50 deals with the amendment of indictments. Once the indictment is confirmed it can be amended only with leave of the Confirming Judge or the Trial Chamber, as the case may be. If new charges are added when the accused has already made an initial appearance before a Trial Chamber, a further appearance shall be held in order to enable the accused to enter a plea on the new charges.

406. These provisions would be null and void if the Prosecution could amend existing charges merely by giving notice in the opening statement or Pre-Trial Brief. As mentioned earlier, if the existing charge were merely vague or otherwise defective, such defects could be cured by providing timely, clear, and consistent notice. However, when these are new charges, the matter has to be referred to the Chamber to have the indictment amended.

407. It is generally alleged in the Indictment that the Accused was Interim Commander of ESO from about 7 April 1994. Thus the issue of his responsibility for the alleged criminal acts of his subordinates is an important matter that needs to be clearly spelt out in the Indictment, not a mere detail that can be added later at the convenience of the Prosecution. The Chamber recalls that the Prosecution sought leave to amend the Indictment, including a specific prayer to drop the rape charge, but its motion for amendment was denied on the ground, inter alia, that it came just before the commencement of the trial and that further delay in the opening of trial would prejudice the rights of the Accused.[551] The matter went up to the Appeals Chamber, which proceeded to elaborate on the distinctions between a new charge and the material facts underpinning an existing charge.[552] It should be noted, however, that the Prosecution did not seek in that instance to amend the rape charge.

408. To establish the rape charge, the Prosecution presented the evidence of three witnesses, viz, AFV, QY and TM, all alleged victims of rape. The Prosecution also presented Witnesses YAI, CCP and YAK to show that the Accused knew or should have known that the widespread rape of Tutsi women was taking place in Butare. The Defence did not present any witness to challenge the evidence on rape but argued that the Prosecution witnesses were not credible.

409. The Chamber has carefully considered the testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses AFV, QY and TM, and finds that their accounts of the rapes they endured are reliable. The Chamber fully understands the unique circumstances of rape victims and sympathises with them. However, in light of the very specific nature of the rape charge contained in the Indictment, and the nature of the evidence adduced at trial, the Chamber is of the view that the Prosecution has not proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused can be held responsible for the crime of rape as charged in Count 4 of the Indictment.

41.12.1.13.2. 5.12.1. Indictment

410. Paragraph 3.47 reads:

> 3.47 During the events referred to in this Indictment, soldiers of the ESO and Ngoma Camp participated in the meting out of cruel treatment to Tutsi civilians by beating them with sticks, tree saplings and or rifle butts.

41.12.1.13.5. Prosecution Witness YAO

411. Prosecution Witness YAO testified that on 17 May 1994, soldiers came to the Butare Cathedral and found her hiding in a cupboard located within the sacristy of the cathedral. They brought her out, and one of them called Gakwerere, forced her to roll in the mud. The other soldiers hit her and called her Inyenzi.[553]

412. YAO said the soldiers took her to the "bishop's house", from where they took another person out. She explained that when they arrived at the Bishop's house, some of the soldiers alighted from the vehicle and went inside the house. Witness YAO was left in the vehicle with one soldier. The soldiers who went inside the house said they were going to look for Inyenzi, and returned with one person who they were beating, kicking and hitting with gun butts.[554] From the bishop's house, the soldiers drove with them to the nun's Convent, "the Convent of the Petite Sœurs", where they picked up two nuns. These nuns told Witness YAO that soldiers had killed people at the Convent.[555]

413. From the nun's Convent, the soldiers drove with them to ESO. Upon arrival at ESO, Lieutenant Gakwerere went to speak with Muvunyi. Gakwerere and Muvunyi then called one of the nuns who had been brought together with YAO. Even though YAO could not hear the question that was put to the nun by the soldiers, she heard the nun telling Gakwerere and Muvunyi that the people who had come to the Convent were unarmed refugees. Muvunyi also asked the nun why she did not make a list of all the refugees at the Convent, but she did not answer the question. YAO noted that Muvunyi was speaking in a "visibly angry" tone. She added that Muvunyi asked the soldiers to take the nun they had questioned back to the Convent, and Witnesses YAO and YAN to the Brigade.[556] YAO testified that Muvunyi was present when they were being taken away. She testified that the Brigade constituted two buildings in which people were jailed, and that it was very close to the ESO. She said it took them about four minutes to drive from ESO to the Brigade.

414. Witness YAN testified that on 6 April 1994 when President Habyarimana's plane was shot down, he lived in Gikongoro préfecture. Around 15 April, he moved to the Procure (l'Économat général).[557] Upon his arrival at the Procure, he found about 20 Tutsi refugees who had come there because they thought that the church buildings would not be attacked.[558]

415. YAN testified that when he got to Butare around 15 April, there was no violence.[559] However, around mid-May, he was arrested from his residence at the Procure by ESO soldiers under the command of Lieutenant Gakwerere. He explained that he knew the soldiers came from ESO because he had known Gakwerere for a long time. He also knew that at the material time, Ngoma Camp soldiers had been sent to the war front, and Butare town was therefore under the control of ESO soldiers.[560] YAN stated that at the time of his arrest, the soldiers accused him of being an Inyenzi, and that he had fired a gun. He denied that he ever owned a gun or fired one. He explained that the soldiers kicked him, hit him with gun butts, and threw him into the back of a single-cabin pick-up vehicle that belonged to the Nyiramasuhuko family. As a result of this treatment, he suffered multiple injuries to his face, his left side and his ribs. He was also wounded with a bayonet and told the Chamber the scar from that wound was still visible at the time of his testimony.

416. Witness YAN testified that when he was arrested at the Procure, some of the other refugees were killed. He said "I was arrested at the Procure and led outside that area to be placed in detention. It was said that I was an Inyenzi who had opened fire because a gunshot had been heard. So I was taken out of there. And other people who were there were killed."[561] YAN further testified that a guard at the Procure was shot dead when he attempted to resist the attack by the soldiers. According to YAN, the mission of the soldiers "was to commit genocide, to exterminate the Tutsis." He added that "all the people that they found were killed."[562]

417. According to Witness YAN, when he was thrown behind the pick-up truck, there was also a girl at the back of the truck who had been taken from the Butare Cathedral (Witness YAO). He said the two of them were taken together to the ESO where they found "a lot of soldiers and Interahamwe dressed in kitenge." He said some of the Interahamwe were armed with rifles, while others had machetes and clubs. Witness YAN testified that he was subjected to further mistreatment at ESO: "I was trampled upon, I was beaten, I was maltreated, and I was treated in a very inhumane way."[563] He said he appealed to one soldier whom he knew to intercede on his behalf, but the latter told him he had first to be questioned.

418. Witness YAN and the lady he came with in the pick-up (YAO) were subsequently taken to the Brigade and detained. He explained that the Brigade was located about 400 meters from ESO, and that it was near the Butare préfecture Office. He said that there were many other refugees in detention at the Brigade, and that while there, gendarmes would come and take out detainees. Whenever they did so, the gendarmes said it was Muvunyi who had ordered that specific persons be taken away. Witness YAN explained that a gendarme officer sat in an office next to the room where he was being detained, and whenever the phone rang, this officer would say it was Muvunyi who had telephoned to give orders that people be taken away. Witness YAN testified that those taken away in this manner never came back, "they were taken away to be killed".[564]

419. YAN informed the Chamber that he was released from detention as a result of intervention by someone who spoke to Muvunyi on his behalf. After his release, the gendarmes at the Brigade told him that he could not cross all the roadblocks and advised him to stay at the Brigade and die of hunger.[565] Undeterred by what the gendarmes had said, Witness YAN decided to leave the Brigade and head back to the Procure.

420. Defence Witness MO72 testified that on 17 May 1994, Lieutenant Gakwerere and one of his subordinates transported her and three other sisters from the Convent of the Little Sisters of Jesus Christ to ESO Camp.[566] They were taken in the back of a pick-up truck with three other individuals, including Callixte, and Witnesses YAN and YAO.[567] The witness recalled that when they arrived at the ESO, she saw three buses full of new recruits to be taken to the war front and other people whom she believed resided or worked at the ESO.[568]

421. She explained that Lieutenant Gakwerere told people at ESO that the nuns and other people aboard the truck had shot at the soldiers. The people who were in the buses came off and surrounded Witness MO72 and the other refugees brought to ESO by Gakwerere.[569] She explained that the crowd shoved the refugees, pulled at their clothes, called them Inyenzis, but did not strike them.[570] However, the witness admitted that one person attempted to attack YAN with a metallic implement.[571] She further stated that YAN asked a military Chaplain at ESO for assistance but the latter said he could not come to YAN's aid.[572]

422. Witness MO72 also testified that Prosecution Witness YAO was never assaulted during the period they were at ESO. She added that YAO was not treated differently from any of the other persons arrested by the soldiers.[573] However the witness stated that YAO's clothes were wet but that she did not know how they got wet.[574]

423. The witness further explained that she had never met Tharcisse Muvunyi and never spoke to him while at ESO Camp.[575] According to her account, Lieutenant Gakwerere was the only person who came to speak to them. She added that the ESO Chaplain also stated that the nuns had reduced their Convent into an abode for Inyenzi. [576]

41.12.1.13.8. 5.12.2.2. Deliberations

424. The Chamber notes that Prosecution Witnesses YAO and YAN gave strikingly similar testimony about the date they were arrested, the identity of their attackers and their experiences at the time of arrest and subsequently at ESO and the gendarmerie Brigade. They both testified that the soldiers who arrested them were led by Lieutenant Gakwerere from ESO, that they were transported in the back of a pick-up truck, that they were beaten with rifle butts, kicked and trampled upon by the soldiers, and then taken to ESO. In particular, Witness YAO was asked to roll in the mud by Lieutenant Gakwerere while other soldiers kicked her and called her Inyenzi.

425. The Chamber considers that while Defence Witness MO72 denied that Prosecution Witnesses YAN and YAO were mistreated at ESO or during the course of their transportation to that Camp, when considered in its entirety, her evidence in fact corroborates that of the Prosecution witnesses. Defence Witness MO72 confirmed that she and the two Prosecution witnesses were among the people arrested and transported in the back of a pick-up truck to ESO Camp by soldiers led by Lieutenant Gakwerere on 17 May 1994. She further confirms that while at ESO, Witnesses YAN and YAO were pushed around by soldiers and Interahamwe militia and that YAN was threatened with a sharp object. MO72 also confirmed that the two Prosecution witnesses were transported from ESO and detained at the Brigade located some 400 metres from the ESO Camp.

426. Having considered all the evidence on this issue, the Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that on or about 17 May 1994, Prosecution Witnesses YAO and YAN were arrested by ESO soldiers under the leadership of Lieutenant Gakwerere and severely beaten with rifle butts and other implements as a result of which Witness YAN sustained severe injuries on his head and abdomen. The Chamber is also satisfied that Witness YAO, a woman, was asked to roll in mud, beaten and called Inyenzi. Finally the Chamber finds as a fact that the persons who were responsible for the mistreatment of Witnesses YAO and YAN were subordinates of the Accused.

427. Taking all necessary factors into consideration, the Chamber is satisfied that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused knew about this attack and mistreatment of Tutsi civilians by his subordinates and did nothing to prevent it or to punish the perpetrators.

41.12.1.13.11. Witness QCQ

428. Prosecution Witness QCQ testified that Beneberika Convent sheltered approximately 27 Tutsi refugees from Butare, Kigali and Gikongoro in April 1994.[577] She told the Chamber that several attacks were launched against the Convent during this time, the second of which was a large-scale strike that forced all occupants out.[578] During this assault, armed soldiers and Interahamwe, who were equipped with guns, clubs, machetes and dogs, forcefully entered the Convent and drove refugees out from their hiding places into the garden with their hands in the air.[579]

429. The witness further explained that the soldiers and Interahamwe sorted the refugees according to their préfecture of origin, beat them up, demanded to see their identity cards, and asked them to sing that the RPF was the source of all their problems.[580] The witness said that some refugees did not have an identity card, while other simply refused to present theirs.[581] The attackers forced some refugees to produce their cards. At other times, they simply labelled some refugees as Inkotanyi based on their physical appearance. According to the witness, the attackers referred to Tutsis as Inkotanyi and Inyenzi.[582] She also reported that some soldiers and Interahamwe confiscated property from the refugees.[583]

430. Witness QCQ recalled that "Karenzi's children," Solange, Marc and Thierry Karenzi, the youngest of whom was seven years old, were removed from their separate hiding places and beaten. When they arrived in the garden, Solange's clothes were torn and her head was bleeding, while Marc had a gash on his leg. Originally mistaken for Hutu, Thierry was spared at first, but eventually placed with those to be executed.[584] QCQ also explained that a group of children from Byumba were set aside except for Diane, Cécile and Théodise. After sorting out the refugees on the basis of ethnicity, the Tutsi refugees were loaded onto a Hilux vehicle, the assailants stepped on top of them and they drove away.[585] Later that day, the soldiers returned to fetch beer from the Convent and informed the inhabitants that they had killed the refugees.[586]

41.12.1.13.12. Witness QCM

431. Witness QCM testified at about 11.00 a.m. on 30 April 1994, a crowd of approximately 200 people. The armed attackers included 100 or more soldiers from ESO and Ngoma camps under the leadership of Lieutenant Hategekimana, along with 100 more civilians or Interahamwe.[587] QCM recalled that the soldiers carried firearms, while the civilians were armed with clubs and machetes.[588] The witness recalled that at the time of the attack there were about 40 sisters, and approximately 45 other refugees, the majority of whom were children, living at the Convent.[589]

432. After threatening to kill the nuns if they did not open the gates, the attackers entered the compound and fired shots in the air. As a result, other nuns came out from the dormitories.[590] The assailants claimed that they had come for all civilians who were in the building. The soldiers pulled individuals from their hiding places and subsequently separated refugees based on ethnicity and put the Tutsis aside.[591] According to QCM, one of the nuns who was a friend of Hategekimana, helped the latter to identity which refugees were Tutsi.[592]

433. Witness QCM reported that soldiers asked the nuns to present their identity cards. When the nuns refused, Hategekimana read from a document which he said was an arrest warrant from Tharcisse Muvunyi authorising him to arrest civilians from the Convent.[593] However, when QCM asked to see this document, Hategekimana refused to show it to her.[594]

434. QCM stated that the soldiers beat the Tutsi refugees as they were sorted from other civilians, loaded Tutsis onto a "GDK" vehicle and ordered them to lie down.[595] Then, along with a number of civilians, the soldiers stood on top of the refugees as they drove them away at around 1:00 p.m.[596] Witness QCM stated that she pleaded with Hategekimana to spare the children but the latter refused and told her that those who were handed over to the Interahamwe could not be saved.[597]

435. QCM testified that approximately 25 people that the soldiers took from the Convent on that day were never seen again.[598] She added that the soldiers returned to the Convent two hours later to collect some beer.[599] The witness asked them where they took the children. They responded that the children had been handed over to the Interahamwe.

41.12.1.13.13. 5.12.3.2. Deliberations

436. The Chamber has considered the evidence of Witnesses QCQ and QCM that sometime in April 1994, a group of armed soldiers and Interahamwe under the leadership of Lieutenant Hategekimana attacked Tutsi refugees sheltered at the Beneberika Convent. The group of refugees included at least 25 children from various préfectures in Rwanda. The nuns and other refugees, including children, were first sorted out based on their préfecture of origin, or on the basis of their ethnicity. The Tutsi refugees were consistently denigrated as Inkotanyi or Inyenzi and were set aside and maltreated by the soldiers and Interahamwe attackers. Witnesses QCQ and QCM gave similar accounts of the way the refugees were treated, including the fact that they were beaten, thrown in the back of a vehicle and trampled-upon by soldiers and Interahamwe, and that those who were taken away never returned and are presumed dead.

437. The Chamber believes that Prosecution Witnesses QCQ and QCM gave a frank and credible account of the events they witnessed at Beneberika Convent in April 1994. In particular, the Chamber finds that despite her young age (10 years) at the time of the events, Witness QCQ gave an accurate and coherent account of what she saw and experienced on that fateful day in April 1994. The Chamber therefore finds that soldiers under the leadership of Lieutenant Hategekimana, in the company of Interahamwe militia, attacked the Beneberika Convent in April 1994 during which they meted out cruel treatment to the refugees including many children.

41.12.1.13.16. Prosecution Witness TQ

438. Prosecution Witness TQ testified that by 16 April 1994, about 700 people, including 400 orphans, 30 instructors and the elderly evacuated by the Red Cross, were transported to the Groupe Scolaire in Butare from Kacyiru, Kigali préfecture.[600]

439. At around 6:30 or 7:00 p.m. on 29 April 1994, a large-scale attack was launched on the Groupe scolaire complex. The witness testified that the assailants consisted of more than 50 armed soldiers from ESO. They were dressed in camouflage uniforms.[601] They gathered the refugees on the volleyball court, and began separating Tutsis from other people.[602] The soldiers set aside a number of people, including 18 orphans and 10 Red Cross employees who were presumed to be Tutsi. The soldiers then forced the Tutsi refugees to lie down on the floor, and proceeded to severely beat them up with the assistance of the Interahamwe. The refugees were then transported to Rwasave, and Witness TQ later learnt that they were all killed.[603] TQ estimated that more than 140 people were transported to Rwasave that day.[604]

41.12.1.13.17. Prosecution Witness QBE

440. Prosecution Witness QBE testified that the first attack on Groupe Scolaire, which took place during the second half of April 1994, was launched by a group of people who appeared to be led by an Interahamwe.[605] When the attack began, Prosecution Witness QBE came outside and was ordered to sit down in front of the principal's office.[606] The attackers led the refugees out of their dormitories and assembled them on a volleyball court. They separated the Tutsis from the Hutus by examining their identity cards or looking at their physical features.[607]

441. According to Prosecution Witness QBE, the second attack began late one evening during the second half of April 1994.[608] At about 5:00 p.m. he was preparing to leave the premises but encountered a camouflage vehicle with a soldier on board.[609] Witness QBE asked the soldier about what he was doing at the Groupe scolaire, but the soldier retorted that he knew QBE was a member of the RPF. At 6:00 p.m. the same day, other people assembled in the Groupe Scolaire and he realized that although it was possible to enter the compound, it was impossible to leave.[610] He therefore concluded that they had been attacked,[611] and that it was soldiers from the Ngoma Military Camp who had attacked them.[612]

442. The witness placed a telephone to the ESO Camp and asked to speak to the commander.[613] He was connected to someone he believed to be in charge and who he later learnt was Tharcisse Muvunyi.[614] QBE testified that Muvunyi promised to send troops to rescue them but that no one came.

443. The following morning, Lieutenant Gatsinzi arrived at the Groupe scolaire with a search warrant. QBE led the Lieutenant around the compound, opening a few rooms for him, but not the doors to rooms in which he knew people were hiding.[615] Lieutenant Gatsinzi marked those doors with a cross, and said he would come back later to check.[616] Prosecution Witness QBE further explained that as he left the building with Lieutenant Gatsinzi, he observed that soldiers had arrived and were in all corners of the Groupe scolaire.[617]

444. QBE stated that some Groupe scolaire teachers assisted Gatsinzi's troops and the Interahamwe, who eventually discovered some of the refugees, including some of the children from the orphanage in Kigali,[618] took them outside, asked for their identity cards, and separated the Tutsi from the Hutu.[619] The witness recalled that the soldiers and Interahamwe beat up the Tutsi refugees as they separated them from the Hutus.[620] Then they asked the refugees to lie down on the veranda of the office of the Director of the Groupe scolaire.[621] A total of about 100 Tutsi refugees were then loaded into two Mazda pickups and taken away.[622] From about 3.00 p.m., the vehicles made two trips, between which there was a time period of about 30 minutes.[623] Witness QBE added that due to the beatings the refugees received at the hands of the soldiers and Interahamwe, some of them were almost dead when they were taken away.[624]

41.12.1.13.19.

445. Witness MO38 testified that on the night of 28 April, while at the Groupe scolaire, she noticed that soldiers had encircled the complex.[625] At about 6:00 a.m. the following morning, all doors to the facility were locked. Interahamwe entered the Groupe scolaire and ordered the refugees to come out, while soldiers remained outside.[626] MO38 testified that it was the Interahamwe who were directing the people to lie down.[627] She also stated that she heard the soldiers saying they were coming from Gisenyi, that they were merciless and that they were not going to spare anyone. She further explained that Witnesses TQ and QBE were among the refugees who were tied and asked to lie on their stomach to prevent them from calling ESO. MO38's husband was lying about one metre from QBE and TQ. MO38 was able to observe the scene from a window.[628]

446. According to MO38, although Tharcisse Muvunyi did not send soldiers into the facility, he sent soldiers to guard the complex. She added that whenever the Interahamwe attacked the complex, people telephoned ESO and soldiers were sent to guard or protect the Groupe Scolaire from the Interahamwe.[629]

41.12.1.13.20. 5.13.4.2. Deliberations

447. The Chamber recalls its earlier conclusion that Witness MO38 was not credible with respect to her account of the role that soldiers played in the attack on Groupe scolaire. The Chamber will therefore base its findings on the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses TQ and QBE. From the evidence of those two witnesses, the Chamber is satisfied that during an attack on Tutsi refugees sheltered at the Groupe scolaire complex on 30 April 1994, ESO soldiers under the leadership of Lieutenant Modeste Gatsinzi separated Tutsi refugees, including orphan children, from the other refugees, forced them to lie down on the floor of a volleyball court, and proceeded to severely beat them. Furthermore, the Chamber believes that those who were treated in this manner included at least 18 orphan Tutsi children, as well as employees of the Red Cross.

448. Moreover, it is the Chamber's belief that Muvunyi knew that this attack was planned or was taking place, but failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent it. The attackers were under Muvunyi's effective control because, as previously discussed,[630] they obeyed his instructions that members of the Bicunda family should not be killed. Therefore, if he had wanted to save the other refugees he could have done so. The Chamber finds that the Accused had the authority to prevent or stop the inhumane treatement of Tutsi civilians but failed to do so.

41.12.1.13.21. 5.12.5. Events at Various Roadblocks in Butare and Gikongoro

41.12.1.13.23. Prosecution Witness YAA

449. YAA testified that one roadblock was erected in the Arab Quarters, either between 7 and 8 April or even in the night of 6 April.[631] YAA saw it between 6 and 12 April when he went to a shop. He recalled that it was manned by 12 ESO soldiers, wearing dark green trousers and shirts, a camouflage jacket and shoes and caps that were normally worn by soldiers. They were armed with personal weapons. Each soldier had a loaded gun. The witness told the Chamber that people were intercepted at the roadblock and asked to show their identity cards. According to YAA's account, some people were struck with weapons.[632] Most of the persons intercepted were Tutsi and they were beaten up while Hutu were allowed to pass.[633] YAA did not know specifically why the soldiers targeted Tutsis, but surmised that Tutsis were generally perceived as RPF accomplices.[634]

41.12.1.13.24.

41.12.1.13.25. Prosecution Witness QY

450. Witness QY testified that she also encountered the Arab Quarters' roadblock in early April 1994.[635] As she approached the checkpoint, she recalled that ESO soldiers asked her where she was coming from and where she was going. She answered that she was coming from the University Hospital, where she had gone to receive treatment for an injury she had sustained at the hand of some Hutus. According to her account, the soldiers allowed her to pass through the roadblock as she stated that her father was a Hutu and her mother was a Tutsi. However, they undressed her and mocked various sections of her anatomy.[636]

41.12.1.13.27.

451. Witness AFV testified that at about 1:00 p.m. on 20 April 1994, she came up to a roadblock at the University Hospital laboratory. She stated that four armed soldiers carrying cartridge belts and grenades were manning the roadblock.[637] The soldiers asked passers-by to present identity cards and separated the Hutu from the Tutsi.[638] Hutu were allowed to pass, but Tutsi were asked to stay and were searched.[639]

452. AFV said that the soldiers searched her, beat her, and asked if she thought she was extraordinary. One of the soldiers said, "Let us look at this Tutsi's sexual organs. How come you are working when the others aren't?"[640]

453. The witness stated that two armed soldiers then accompanied her from the roadblock, claiming that they would accompany her home, but instead they took her to the woods.[641] As they walked, they beat her and stated that they were going to look at her sexual organ to see to what extent she was extraordinary.[642] AFV further testified that they then undressed her by taking off her underpants while she was sitting, tied her with her sweater, and blindfolded her with her other clothing.[643] She asked that he should kill her rather than rape her. One of the soldiers hit her head against the ground and she lost consciousness.[644] When she woke up, she realized she was bleeding from her sexual organ, and could not bring her legs together.

454. Defence Witness MO15 reported that during April 1994 roadblocks were setup at the Arab Quarters, at the Hotel Faucon, at the crossroads between Gikongoro and Kigali, and another at Chez Bihira.[645] According to Witness M015, the company responsible for providing personnel for the roadblocks was the compagnie d'intervention, which was commanded by Lieutenant Gakwerere from ESO.[646]

455. Although he did not know what instructions were given to the personnel manning the roadblocks, he knew that the soldiers were there to ensure security in Butare town.[647] He explained that the soldiers were asking for the identification documents of people who passed through the roadblocks.[648] Soldiers were always allowed to pass through the roadblocks but he did not know whether civilians who did not have identification papers could also pass the checkpoints.[649] Under cross-examination the witness explained that it was common knowledge that their enemies were infiltrating among the refugees and were carrying out their terrorist acts in the country; he testified that their enemies were the RPF.[650]

456. Having considered the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses YAA, AFV, and QY and Defence Witness MO15, the Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that ESO soldiers stopped, searched and beat many Tutsi civilians at various roadblocks throughout Butare from April to June 1994. Prosecution Witnesses AFV and QY were among the victims of such mistreatment. Due to the large number of roadblocks set up in Butare, the widespread nature of attacks on Tutsis at these roadblocks, the proximity of some of the roadblocks to the ESO Camp, and the fact that ESO soldiers were routinely deployed to man the roadblocks, the Chamber concludes that Muvunyi had reason to know about them. As Commander of ESO Camp, Muvunyi had the human and material resources at his disposal to put a stop to the illegal activities of his subordinates at the roadblocks, but failed to do so. He also failed to punish their criminal conduct.

41.12.2.Chapter III : The Law

457. In the following sections, the Chamber will discuss the applicable law on individual criminal responsibility relevant to this case, before addressing the specific crimes charged in the Indictment and the Chamber's legal findings on the liability of the Accused.

41.13. 1. Individual Criminal Responsibility under Article 6 (1) and 6 (3)

458. In the Indictment and Schedule of Particulars, the Prosecution charged the Accused with individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1) for genocide, or in the alternative complicity in genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, and for rape as a crime against humanity. The Accused is also charged with command responsibility under Article 6 (3) for genocide, or complicity in genocide, as well as rape and other inhumane acts as crimes against humanity.[651]

459. The principle of individual responsibility for serious violations of international criminal law is one of the key indicators of a paradigm shift from a view of international law as law exclusively made for and by States, to a body of rules with potential application to individuals. It is now recognized that the principle of individual responsibility for serious violations of international law, affirmed in Article 6 (1) of the Statute, is reflective of customary international law.[652] Indeed, it has been established since the Versailles Treaty and especially the Nuremberg and Tokyo trials, that crimes under international law are physically committed by individuals and that irrespective of their official status, only by punishing such individuals for their criminal conduct, can the fundamental values of international law have meaning and efficacy.

41.13.1.1. Article 6 (1)

460. The jurisprudence of the ad-hoc Tribunals has clearly established that criminal liability under Article 6 (1) is incurred not only by individuals who physically commit a crime, but also by those who are accomplices because they participated in or otherwise contributed to the commission of a crime by others.[653] Such forms of participation include planning, instigating, ordering, or aiding and abetting the principal offender's actions. Moreover, the participation of the Accused must have substantially

Article 6 (1) of the Statute of the ICTR provides: "A person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime."
Article 6 (3) provides: "The fact that any of the acts referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his or her superior of criminal responsibility if he or she knew or had reason to know that the the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable meansures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof."

contributed to, or have had a substantial effect on, the completion of the crime.[654] The Chamber notes that accomplice liability under Article 6 (1) is different from the substantive crime of complicity in genocide under Article 2 (3) (e) of the Statute.

461. The mental element required for responsibility under Article 6 (1) depends on the form of participation alleged by the Prosecution. An accused who is alleged to have "committed" an offence, in the sense of direct physical perpetration, must possess the requisite mens rea for the underlying offence.[655] Where it is alleged that the accused participated as an accomplice in the commission of a crime by another, his responsibility under Article 6 (1) will depend upon whether the Prosecution proves that he was aware of the mens rea of the principal perpetrator.[656] The requirement that the Accused must have knowledge of, rather than share, the principal perpetrator's mens rea, also applies to a charge of aiding and abetting genocide.[657]

462. Having analysed the general requirements for individual responsibility under Article 6 (1), the Chamber will now discuss the various forms of participation as laid down in the jurisprudence. The Chamber's discussion will be limited only to the forms of participation relevant to the present case.

41.13.1.1.1. Committing

463. Generally speaking, "committed" under Article 6 (1) has been interpreted to mean "direct and physical perpetration" of the crime by the accused himself or his culpable omission to fulfil a duty imposed by law and attracting a penal sanction. It also includes participation in the commission of a crime by way of joint criminal enterprise.[658] Since joint criminal enterprise is not pleaded in the present case, the Chamber need not address it in detail. As already discussed, an accused who is alleged to have "committed" an offence, in the sense of direct physical perpetration, must possess the requisite mens rea for the underlying offence.[659]

41.13.1.1.2. Instigating

464. To ground individual responsibility for instigation pursuant to Article 6 (1), the Accused must have encouraged, urged, or otherwise prompted another person to commit an offence under the Statute. Such instigation may arise from a positive act or a culpable omission. The instigation of the Accused must have a substantial nexus to the actual commission of the crime. Instigation differs from incitement in that it does not have to be direct or public. Therefore, private, implicit or subdued forms of instigation could ground liability under Article 6 (1) if the Prosecution can prove the relevant causal nexus between the act of instigation and the commission of the crime.[660]

Mettraux, International Crimes and the ad-hoc Tribunals, 2005, p 287, who expresses "serious doubt" about the correctness of this position and suggests that a conviction for aiding and abetting genocide, should in certain circumstances, require proof that the aider and abettor possessed the specific intent to commit genocide.

465. The mens rea required to establish a charge of instigating a statutory crime is proof that the Accused directly or indirectly intended that the crime in question be committed and that he intended to provoke or induce the commission of the crime, or was aware of the substantial likelihood that the commission of the crime would be a probable consequence of his acts.[661]

466. The instigation of the accused must have a substantial effect on the actual commission of the crime and represents a general form of participation relevant to every crime in the Statute. However, direct and public incitement is only relevant in the context of genocide and it is criminalised as such. The Prosecution must therefore prove that a person accused of direct and public incitement to commit genocide shared the special intent of the principal perpetrator.

41.13.1.1.3. Ordering

467. Ordering under Article 6 (1) requires that a person in a position of authority uses that position to issue a binding instruction to or otherwise compel another to commit a crime punishable under the Statute.[662] In Semanza, the Appeals Chamber held that "no formal superior-subordinate relationship between the Accused and the perpetrator is required" to establish the actus reus of "ordering" under Article 6 (1).[663] However, proof of such a relationship may be evidentially relevant to show that the person alleged to have issued the order, was in a position of authority.

468. The responsibility for ordering the commission of a crime could also be proved by circumstantial evidence, but as required by the jurisprudence, the Chamber will thoroughly evaluate such evidence and treat it with caution.

41.13.1.1.4. Aiding and Abetting

41.13.1.1.5.

469. Aiding and abetting reflect forms of accomplice liability. The aider and abettor is usually charged with responsibility for providing assistance that furthers the principal perpetrator's commission of a crime. It is therefore required that the conduct of the aider and abettor must have a substantial effect on the commission of the crime by the principal perpetrator, although it need not constitute an indispensable element of the ultimate crime.[664]

470. The jurisprudence has been fairly consistent in interpreting "aiding and abetting" as distinct legal concepts. The former implies assistance, and the latter implies facilitating, encouraging, or advising the commission of a crime.[665] The mental element required for liability as an aider and abettor is knowledge of the Accused that his conduct (either a positive act or culpable omission) assists the principal perpetrator in the commission of the crime.[666] With respect to aiding and abetting genocide, the only mental element required is proof that the Accused knew of the genocidal intent of the actual perpetrator, but he need not share this specific intent.[667]

471. Aiding and abetting genocide refers to "all acts of assistance or encouragement that have substantially contributed to, or have had a substantial effect on, the completion of the crime of genocide."[668] Although the terms aiding and abetting may appear synonymous, they are in fact different. "Aiding means giving assistance to someone. Abetting, on the other hand, would involve facilitating the commission of an act by being sympathetic thereto".[669] Thus, individual criminal responsibility can be incurred where there is either aiding or abetting, but not necessarily both. Besides, the aider or abettor need not be present during the commission of the crime.[670] Additionally, the ICTY Appeals Chamber has stated that in order for an accused person to be convicted of aiding and abetting the commission of a crime, it must be established that he had knowledge that the principal perpetrator(s) intended to commit the underlying crime.[671]

472. Liability for aiding and abetting can also be incurred by way of omission such as the case of the so-called "approving spectator" where a person in a position of authority is present either at the scene of the crime or within its immediate vicinity, under circumstances where his presence leads the perpetrators to believe that he approved, encouraged or was giving moral support to their actions. The mens rea required for liability as an approving spectator is knowledge on the part of the Accused that the perpetrators would see his presence as approval or encouragement.[672]

473. Article 6 (3) of the Statute lays down the principle of superior or command responsibility which is well established in customary international law and specifically mentioned in the Geneva Conventions on international humanitarian law. While the principle was initially applied to the responsibility of military commanders for the criminal actions of their subordinates during war (hence the term "command responsibility"), it is now clearly established that both civilian and military superiors may, under appropriate circumstances, be held responsible for the actions of those under their authority or command.[673] In Kayishema and Ruzindana, the Trial Chamber concurred with the distinction drawn in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (the "ICC") with respect to the mental element required for superior responsibility of military commanders vis-à-vis other superiors.[674] The Chamber in that case noted that Article 28 of the Statute of the ICC imposes a more active duty on military superiors to control the activities of subordinates under their effective command and control where they "knew, or owing to the circumstances at the time, should have known that the forces were committing or about to commit such crimes." Under such circumstances, the military commander is under an obligation to take all necessary and reasonable measures to prevent or punish criminal acts committed by his subordinates. On the other hand, non-military superiors are only expected to have known or consciously disregarded information which clearly indicated that their subordinates were committing or about to commit crimes. The Chamber agrees with this distinction and notes that the nature of military service and discipline is consistent with the expectation that superior military officers have a more active duty to inquire about the possible criminal behaviour of men under their command and to prevent or punish such behaviour when it occurs.

474. Irrespective of the civilian or military status of the Accused, the Prosecution must prove four essential elements in order to establish liability under Article 6 (3). It must lead evidence that proves beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused was the superior of the actual perpetrators of an offence punishable under the Statute; that he knew or had reason to know that a criminal act was about to be or [672] Akayesu, Judgement (TC), para. 692; Bagilishema, Judgement (TC), paras. 34, 36.

[673] Akayesu, Judgement (TC), para. 491 suggesting that the application of superior responsibility to civilians is contentious. However, in Kayishema and Ruzindana, Musema, and Kajelijeli, the ICTR held civilian superiors responsible for the actions of their subordinates under Article 6 (3). See also the Celebici Case, para. 378 where the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that "… the doctrine of superior responsibility extends to civilian superiors only to the extent that they exercise a degree of control over their subordinates which is similar to that of military commander."
[674] Kayishema and Ruzindana, Judgement (TC), paras. 227, 228.

had been committed; that he had effective control over the perpetrators in the sense of the material ability to prevent or punish their crimes; and that he did not take necessary and reasonable measures to prevent or punish the commission of the crime.[675]

475. While the formal legal status of the Accused may be relevant to the determination of effective control, the power to prevent or punish cannot be inferred solely on the basis of the existence of formal status. Indeed, as stated by the Appeals Chamber in the Kajelijeli Judgement, power or authority for the purposes of Article 6 (3) responsibility can be attributed to superiors who hold their positions either on a de jure or a de facto basis.[676] For this purpose, effective control reflects the superior's material ability to prevent or punish the commission of offences by his subordinates. Where de jure authority is proved, a court may presume the existence of effective control on a prima facie basis. Such a presumption can, however, be rebutted by showing that the superior had ceased to possess the necessary powers of control over subordinates who actually committed the crimes.[677]

41.15.1.1.

476. In Count 1 of the Indictment, the Prosecution charges the Accused with genocide following a series of specifically described acts or omissions through which he is alleged to be responsible for killing and/or causing serious bodily and mental harm to members of the civilian Tutsi population, with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi ethnic group. These charges are pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, which holds the Accused individually responsible for his alleged direct participation in the crime, and Article 6 (3), which holds him individually responsible as a superior for the crimes allegedly committed by his subordinates.

477. The Statute provides a list of specific types of conduct which constitute the actus reus of genocide. Under Article 2 (2) of the Statute,[678] genocide means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such:

(a) Killing members of the group;
(b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;
(c) Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part;
(d) Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group;
(e) Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

478. Because of its element of dolus specialis (special intent), which requires that the crime be committed with the specific intent to destroy in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial or religious group as such, genocide is considered a unique crime.[679]

41.15.1.2. Mens Rea

479. For an accused person to be found guilty of the crime of genocide, it must be proved that he possessed the requisite mens rea in addition to committing any of the genocidal acts listed in Article 2 of the Statute.[680] Therefore, it must be established that he committed any of the enumerated acts in [678] Based on Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (the "Genocide Convention"), adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on 9 December 1948. The Genocide Convention is considered part of customary international law, as reflected in the advisory opinion issued in 1951 by the International Court of Justice on reservations to the Genocide Convention.

Article 2 (2) with the specific intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a group, as such, which is defined by one of the protected categories of nationality, race, ethnicity or religion.[681] While there is no upper or lower limit to the number of victims from the protected group, the Prosecution must prove beyond reasonable doubt that the perpetrator acted with the intent to destroy at least a substantial part of the group.[682] Furthermore, an accused can be found guilty of committing genocide even if his personal motivation went beyond the criminal intent to commit genocide.[683]

480. In Akayesu, the Trial Chamber noted that in the absence of a confession or other admission, it is inherently difficult to establish the genocidal intent of an accused. At the same time, it noted that a Chamber may make a valid inference about the mental state of the accused on the basis of a number of factors.[684] Thus, where it is impossible to adduce direct evidence of the perpetrator's intent to commit genocide, such intent may be inferred from the surrounding facts and circumstances.[685] In attempting to establish genocidal intent, the Chamber can rely on a variety of factors including the overall context in which the crime occurred, the systematic targeting of the victims on account of their membership in a protected group, the fact that the perpetrator may have targeted the same group during the commission of other criminal acts, the scale and scope of the atrocities committed, the frequency of destructive and discriminatory acts, whether the perpetrator acted on the basis of the victim's membership in a protected group and whether the perpetrator's intent was to destroy that group in whole or in part, as such.[686]

481. The Chamber concurs with this reasoning and will be guided by the above jurisprudence in determining whether the Accused in this case possessed specific genocidal intent.

41.15.1.5.

482. Article 2 of the Statute requires a showing that the perpetrator committed any of the enumerated acts with the intent to destroy a group. Trial Chambers at the Tribunal have tended to interpret the term broadly so that it not only entails acts that are undertaken with the intent to cause death but also includes acts which may fall short of causing death.[687]

41.15.1.6. "In Whole or in Part"

483. In order for an accused person to be convicted of genocide, the Prosecution must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused acted with the intent to destroy the group as such, in whole or in part.[688] At the very least, it must be shown that the intent of the perpetrator was to destroy a substantial part of the group,[689] regardless of the number of victims actually involved.[690]

41.15.1.7.
41.15.1.8. Protected Groups

484. The jurisprudence of the Tribunal indicates that although the Statute does not clearly establish the criteria for determining protected groups under Article 2, the Trial Chambers have tended to decide the matter on a case-by-case basis, taking into consideration both the objective and subjective particulars, including the historical context and the perpetrator's intent.[691] In Karemera, the Appeals Chamber upheld the Trial Chamber's decision taking judicial notice of "the existence of the Twa, Tutsi and Hutu as protected groups falling under the Genocide Convention."[692] It is not disputed in the present case that the Tutsi are members of a protected group under the Statute.

41.15.1.9. "As Such"

485. The term "as such" has been interpreted to mean that the prohibited act must be committed against a person based on that person's membership in a specific group and specifically because the person belonged to this group, such that the real victim is not merely the person but the group itself.[693]

41.15.1.10. Killing Members of the Group
41.15.1.11.

486. In addition to establishing that an accused person possessed the requisite intent to commit genocide, the Prosecutor must also show that the accused intentionally killed one or more members of the group, and that the victim or victims belonged to the targeted protected group. A showing of premeditation is not necessary.[694]

41.15.1.12. Causing Serious Bodily or Mental Harm

487. Although the Statute does not provide definitions for the terms "serious bodily harm" and "serious mental harm", the various Trial Chambers have concluded that the intent of the framers was to punish serious acts of physical violence that do not necessarily result in the death of the victim. On the one hand, serious bodily harm has been held to include acts of sexual violence, ones that seriously injure the health of the victim, cause disfigurement, or result in serious injury to the victim's senses or organs.[695] An accused can be found guilty of causing serious bodily harm even if the injury suffered by the victim is not of a permanent or irremediable nature.[696] On the other hand, the term "serious mental harm" has been interpreted to mean a significant injury to the mental faculties of the victim.[697] For an accused to be convicted of causing serious bodily or mental harm under the Statute, it must be shown that the perpetrator, in addition to possessing the requisite mens rea for genocide, acted with intent to cause such harm to one or more members of the protected group in question and that the victim or victims did in fact belong to the targeted group.[698]

41.15.1.13. Other Enumerated Acts

488. The other acts of genocide enumerated in Article 2 (2) of the Statute, to wit, deliberately inflicting on a group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part; imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; and forcibly transferring children of the group to another group, are not at issue in the present case and therefore will not be discussed by the Chamber.

41.15.1.13.1. Findings on the Accused's Responsibility for Genocide

489. The Prosecution alleges in Count 1 of the Indictment that pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, the Accused bears individual criminal responsibility for various acts of genocide.

490. To establish the Accused's individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, the Prosecution relies on Paragraphs 2.2, 2.3, 3.10 (ii)-3.10 (v), 3.15, 3.17, 3.19, 3.20-3.30, 3.31, 3.32, 3.33, 3.34, 3.36, 3.40, 3.41-3.41 (i), 3.46, 3.48, and 3.52 of the Indictment.

491. The Prosecution also charges the Accused with genocide pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute. Under this provision, the fact that any of the crimes enumerated in Articles 2 to 4 "was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his or her superior of criminal responsibility if he or she knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof."

492. In alleging the Accused's superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute, the Prosecution relies on Paragraphs 2.2, 2.3, 3.10 (ii)-3.10 (v), 3.17, 3.19, 3.20-3.30, 3.31, 3.32-3.34 (i), 3.35-3.43, 3.45 and 3.52 of the Indictment.

493. During the course of the trial, the Chamber heard extensive evidence from both Prosecution and Defence witnesses pointing to the fact that in the days and weeks following the death of President Habyarimana on 6 April 1994, Tutsi civilians in the Butare area were targeted for elimination. During that period, acts similar to those enumerated in Article 2 (2) of the Statute were perpetrated against the Tutsi population by soldiers from the ESO and Ngoma Camps, as well as by members of the Interahamwe Hutu militia.

494. The Chamber has carefully examined the Prosecution evidence in support of Count 1 of the Indictment (Genocide) and notes that at least 18 Prosecution witnesses[699] testified in support of the count of genocide. Among the facts established through these witnesses' testimonies are the following: that the Accused was the Interim Commander of the École des sous-officiers (ESO) in Butare, with authority over the school's soldiers and other military personnel; that ESO was charged with responsibility for security in central Butare prefecture, including Butare town; that ESO soldiers either by themselves, or in collaboration with soldiers from Ngoma Camp and Interahamwe militia, attacked and killed many unarmed Tutsi civilians at various locations throughout Butare town in April and May 1994; that the circumstances under which these attacks took place were such that the Accused knew or had reason to know about them; that the Accused had effective control over the ESO soldiers who conducted these attacks, in the sense that he had the human and material resources at his disposal at ESO to either prevent the attacks or punish the perpetrators; and finally that the Accused failed to take necessary and reasonable measures to prevent attacks by ESO soldiers and Interahamwe militia and to punish their perpetrators.

495. The question before the Chamber is whether there is any clear evidence that the Accused planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of the genocide. While there is no reliable or convincing evidence of direct participation by the Accused in any of the alleged acts of genocide, the Chamber is satisfied that on the whole there is sufficient and corroborated evidence to demonstrate that the Accused, by virtue of his position, had reason to know that ESO soldiers and other persons were committing genocidal acts. The Chamber also concludes that despite his effective control over the said soldiers, the Accused deliberately refrained from taking appropriate action to prevent such crimes or to punish the perpetrators.

496. On the basis of the testimonies of the various witnesses, it is clear to the Chamber that the Accused himself possessed the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi ethnic group, as such. For instance, when soldiers from the ESO were in the process of attacking unarmed civilian Tutsi refugees at the Groupe scolaire, the Accused refused to come to the refugees' assistance. Instead, he gave instructions that members of a certain family should be separated from the other Tutsi refugees and should not be harmed. Indeed, even when one child from this family was mistakenly taken away together with the other Tutsi refugees, the Accused sent a vehicle to try to rescue the child. The overall conduct of the Accused during this event, including the fact that he implicitly allowed a large contingent of soldiers under his command to leave their Camp fully equipped with arms and ammunition to attack unarmed refugees, his instruction to these soldiers not to kill or otherwise harm members of the Bicunda family, while leaving the vast majority of unarmed Tutsi refugees at the mercy of the genocidal killers, amounted to tacit approval of the unlawful conduct of the ESO soldiers. This approval assisted and encouraged the killing of the Tutsi civilians at the Groupe scolaire. There is no doubt that in light of the general situation in Rwanda, and specifically in Butare in 1994, the Accused had knowledge that ESO soldiers, who were his subordinates, had attacked or were about to attack unarmed Tutsi civilians at the Groupe scolaire for no other reason than their Tutsi ethnic identification. By his tacit approval of the conduct of the ESO soldiers, the Accused substantially contributed to the crime of genocide. The Chamber therefore finds the Accused individually responsible for aiding and abetting genocide pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute.

497. Furthermore, the Chamber concludes that the Accused is individually responsible as a superior for the killing of Tutsi civilians by ESO soldiers at the Butare University Hospital, at the University of Butare, at the Beneberika Convent, at Mukura forest, and at various roadblocks in Butare. In light of the material and human resources available to the Accused as Commander of ESO, he exercised effective control over the attackers in the sense of his material ability to prevent or punish their criminal wrongdoing. The Accused failed to take necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the killings or to punish the perpetrators. For the above reasons, the Chamber finds that the Accused bears superior responsibility under Article 6 (3) of the Statute for the crime of genocide.

498. The Chamber therefore finds Muvunyi guilty of genocide pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute for the attack at the Groupe scolaire; and pursuant to Article 6 (3) for the attacks at the Butare University Hospital, the University of Butare, the Beneberika Convent, the Mukura forest, and at various roadblocks in Butare.

41.16. 3. Complicity in Genocide

41.16.1.1.

499. The Chamber recalls that Count 2 is charged as an alternative to Count 1 of the Indictment. Since the Accused has already been found guilty of genocide on Count 1, the Chamber sees no need to make any finding on the charge of complicity in genocide in Count 2.[700] Count 2 is hereby DISMISSED.

41.18. 4. Direct and Public Incitement to Commit Genocide

500. The Chamber notes that Article 2 (2) of the Statute defines the offence of genocide, and Article 2 (3) (c) provides that direct and public incitement to commit genocide is punishable as a specific crime. The Chamber notes that there is limited jurisprudence on direct and public incitement as an offence at international law. In both Akayesu and Nahimana, this Tribunal considered the International Military Tribunal (IMT) cases of Streicher and Fritzsche which dealt with incitement to murder and extermination as crimes against humanity.[701] After Nuremberg, this Tribunal's judgement in Akayesu was the first occasion on which an international tribunal considered direct and public incitement to commit genocide as a specific offence. The Akayesu Trial Chamber considered the meaning of incitement under both the common law and civil law traditions[702] and concluded that under the Genocide Convention and Article 2 (3) (c) of the Statute, direct and public incitement means:

> directly provoking the perpetrator(s) to commit genocide, whether through speeches, shouting or threats uttered in public places at public gatherings, or through the sale or dissemination, offer for sale or display of written or printed matter in public places or at public gatherings, or through the public display of placards or posters, or through any other means of audiovisual communication.[703]

501. The Chamber notes that the Akayesu definition of direct and public incitement received tacit approval from the Appeals Chamber, and has been consistently applied in other decisions of the Tribunal.[704] The Chamber therefore adopts the Akayesu Trial Chamber's definition of direct and public incitement, as well as its elaboration of the "direct" and "public" elements of that offence.

502. The "direct" element requires more than a vague or indirect suggestion of incitement, and implies that the expression which is alleged to be inciteful, specifically provoke another to engage in criminal conduct. In considering whether incitement is direct, the specific context in which it takes place is important.[705] Cultural and linguistic factors, as well as the kind of audience the message is addressed to, could help determine whether a particular speech qualifies as direct incitement. An important consideration for the Trial Chamber is whether the members of the audience to whom the message was directed immediately understood its implication.[706]

503. The Chamber agrees with the Akayesu judgement that the drafters of the Genocide Convention only intended to criminalize public incitement and to rule out what may constitute private forms of incitement. In determining its "public" character, the Chamber must consider the place where the incitement occurred and whether attendance was selective or limited.[707] There is no requirement that the incitement message be addressed to a certain number of people or that it should be carried through a specific medium such as radio, television, or a loudspeaker. However, both the number and the medium may provide evidence in support of a finding that the incitement was public.

504. The Akayesu Trial Chamber explained the mental element required for direct and public incitement to commit genocide as follows:

> The mens rea required for the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide lies in the intent to directly prompt or provoke another to commit genocide. It implies a desire on the part of the perpetrator to create by his actions a particular state of mind necessary to commit such a crime in the minds of the person(s) he is so engaging. That is to say that the person who is inciting to commit genocide must himself have the specific intent to commit genocide, namely, to destroy in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group as such.[708]

505. The Appeals Chamber has restated and affirmed the Trial Chamber's analysis of mens rea for direct and public incitement to commit genocide.[709] As an inchoate offence or infraction formelle, incitement to commit genocide is punishable as such, irrespective of whether or not it succeeded in producing the result intended.[710]

41.18.1.1.1.

41.18.1.1.2. Findings on the Accused's Responsibility for Direct and Public Incitement to Commit Genocide

506. The Accused is charged with direct and public incitement to commit genocide under Count 3 of the Indictment in that he planned, committed, instigated or otherwise aided and abetted the planning, preparation or execution of the said offence pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute. In the Indictment, the Prosecution relied on Paragraphs 3.24 and 3.25 in support of this charge; in the Schedule of Particulars, the Prosecution indicated that it was also relying on Paragraph 3.32 of the Indictment. The Chamber has already found that the Prosecution failed to prove the allegation in Paragraph 3.32 of the Indictment.

507. The Chamber has found that at a meeting held at Gikonko in April or May 1994, the Accused addressed a crowd of Hutu male civilians during which he equated Tutsis to "snakes" that should be killed. The Chamber further found that the Accused chastised the bourgmestre of Gikonko for hiding a Tutsi man, and asked the latter to produce the said Tutsi so that he could be killed. As a result, a Tutsi man named Vincent Nkurikiyinka, was taken from his hiding place and killed by the mob. The Chamber concludes that Muvunyi's words were spoken in public, were directed to a group of assembled Hutu civilians, and were intended to provoke the said civilians to kill Tutsis. Indeed, when considered in the context of the language and culture of Rwanda, equating Tutsis to snakes was, in the words of socio-linguistic expert Ntakirutimana, synonymous with condemning members of this ethnic group to death. The Chamber is satisfied that Muvunyi knew that his audience immediately understood the genocidal implication of his words and therefore that he had the requisite intent to destroy members of the Tutsi ethnic group in whole or in part as such.

508. The Chamber notes that the Accused's statement that Vincent Nkurikiyinka should be brought out and killed could be interpreted as an order to commit an act of genocide. However, since the Prosecution relied on this incident only to support the count of incitement, the Chamber has not taken into account with respect to the genocide count.

See also Niyitekega, Judgement (TC) para 431; Nahimana, Judgement (TC), para.1013.

509. The Chamber has also found that at a public meeting held in Gikore in May 1994, Muvunyi made a speech in which he called for the killing of Tutsis, the destruction of Tutsi property, associated Tutsis with the enemy at a time of war, and denigrated Tutsi people by associating them with snakes and poisonous agents. The Chamber is satisfied that when considered in the context of the inter-ethnic killings prevalent in Rwanda in 1994, the war between the Tutsi-dominated Rwandan Patriotic Front rebels and the Hutu-dominated Rwandan Army, as well as the culture and language of Rwanda, the audience understood Muvunyi's remarks as a call to kill or otherwise eliminate members of the Tutsi population. The Chamber is also satisfied that Muvunyi knew that his words would be so understood by the audience, and therefore he had the intent to destroy in whole or in part members of the Tutsi ethnic group.

510. The Prosecution has proved all the elements of direct and public incitement to commit genocide under Article 2 (3) (c) of the Statute with respect to the meetings held at Gikonko in April and at Gikore in May 1994. The Chamber therefore finds the Accused bears individual criminal responsibility for that offence pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute.

41.19. 5. Crimes against Humanity

41.19.1.2. 5.1. General Elements

511. The Chamber notes that under Article 3 of the Statute, the definition of "Crimes Against Humanity" consists of two layers. The first layer, ("General Elements") is to the effect that a crime against humanity must be committed as part of a "widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, ethnic, racial or religious grounds."[711] The second layer lists six specific ("underlying") crimes, plus one residual category of "other inhumane acts" which qualify as crimes against humanity when committed in the context of a widespread or systematic attack on a civilian population on any of the enumerated discriminatory grounds.[712] The two-layered requirement of crimes against humanity under the Statute has been interpreted and applied in a large number of cases before the Tribunal.[713]

512. There is a rich and consistent body of jurisprudence on the meaning of each of the terms that make up the general elements of crimes against humanity. An "attack" is defined as "[a]n unlawful act, event or series of events of the kind listed in Article 3 (a) through (i) of the Statute."[714] In accordance with customary international law, the twin elements "widespread" or "systematic" should be read disjunctively and not as cumulative requirements.[715] "Widespread" refers to the scale of the attack and the multiplicity of victims; "systematic" reflects the organized nature of the attack, excludes acts of random violence, and does not require a policy or plan.[716] However, the existence of such a plan or policy may, for evidential purposes, be relevant in proving that the civilian population was the target of the attack or of its widespread or systematic character.

[711] Article 3 provides as follows:
"The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for the following crimes when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds:
(a) Murder; (b) Extermination; (c) Enslavement; (d) Deportation; (e) Imprisonment; (f) Torture; (g) Rape; (h) Persecutions on political, racial and religious grounds; (i) Other Inhumane acts."

513. In Akayesu, "civilian population" was defined as people not taking an active part in hostilities, members of the armed forces who have surrendered or otherwise laid down their arms, and those who, either for sickness, injury, detention or otherwise, have been placed hors de combat. The presence of non-civilians within a group of "civilians" as defined above, does not deny the population of its essential civilian character.[717] The Bagilishema Trial Chamber added, relying on Blaškić, that in determining the existence of a "civilian population" as a constitutive element of crimes against humanity, the Chamber must consider "the specific situation of the victim at the moment the crimes were committed, rather than his status."[718]

514. In Akayesu, the Appeals Chamber stated that except for the offence of persecution, international humanitarian law does not require proof of a discriminatory intent for all crimes against humanity. In providing that a crime against humanity under Article 3 of the Statute must be part of an attack against civilians on national, political, ethnic, racial, or religious grounds, the Security Council did not intend to depart from the meaning of crimes against humanity as understood under customary international law, or to introduce a new legal ingredient. Rather, the Council only intended to limit the jurisdiction of the Tribunal to try those crimes against humanity that fall within the listed discriminatory categories.[719] It follows therefore that it is irrelevant whether the particular victim of a crime against humanity was a member of a listed group if it can be proved that the perpetrator targeted the civilian population on one of the enumerated discriminatory grounds.[720]

41.19.1.3. 5.2. The Underlying Offences – Rape

515. Article 3 of the Statute lays down a non-exhaustive list of acts that constitute crimes against humanity including: murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, imprisonment, torture, rape, persecution, and other inhumane acts. Under Count 4 of the Indictment, the Prosecution charged the Accused with rape as a crime against humanity. In this sub-section, the Chamber will consider the elements required to prove rape as a crime against humanity.

516. The commission of rape constitutes a crime against humanity only if the Prosecution proves that an enumerated crime under Article 3 of the Statute was committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds. The Prosecution must also prove that the perpetrator acted with the knowledge of the broader context of the attack and with the knowledge that his act(s) formed part of the attack. However, the perpetrator does not need to share the purpose or goals of the broader attack. The "attack" is an element distinct from the acts enumerated in Article 3 of the Statute. There must exist an attack on a civilian population which is discriminatory and widespread or systematic before the perpetrator can be found to have committed a crime against humanity.[721]

Indeed the Appeals Chamber has similarly held that the requirement under Article 5 of the ICTY Statute that crimes against humanity be "committed in armed conflict", did not reflect customary international law, that the Security Council only intended to place a jurisdictional limit on the types of crimes against humanity that the Tribunal could try, and that the nexus with an armed conflict was not a new constitutive element of crimes against humanity. 517. The jurisprudence of the ad hoc Tribunals reveals a rather chequered history of the definition of rape. Initially, in the Akayesu Judgement, this Tribunal proposed that a conceptual approach to defining rape would be more useful to international law and opined that a mechanical approach with its focus on objects and body parts, was unsuitable. The Akayesu Trial Chamber therefore proceeded to define rape as "a physical invasion of a sexual nature, committed on a person under circumstances which are coercive." The broader concept of "sexual violence", according to Akayesu, "includes rape [and] is considered to be any act of a sexual nature which is committed on a person under circumstances which are coercive."[722] The Chamber notes that this definition was endorsed in the Musema, Niyitegeka, and Muhimana Judgements.[723]

518. However, in both Furundžija and Kunarac, ICTY Trial Chambers reverted to defining rape in terms of sexual penetration through the use of body parts or other objects under forceful or otherwise coercive circumstances.[724] The definition of rape as sexual penetration of the vagina, anus, or mouth of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator or some other object used by him under coercive or forceful circumstances was partially approved by the Appeals Chamber in Kunarac. However, the Appeals Chamber expressed the view that Furundžija and earlier decisions defined rape more narrowly than was required under international law and reasoned that the emphasis on coercion, force, or threat of force did not recognise other factors that could render an act of sexual penetration non-consensual or non-voluntary. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber approved the definition of rape as:

> [t]he sexual penetration, however slight: (a) of the vagina or anus of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator or any other object used by the perpetrator; or (b) of the mouth of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator; where such sexual penetration occurs without the consent of the victim. Consent for this purpose must be consent given voluntarily, as a result of the victim's free will, assessed in the context of the surrounding circumstances.[725]

519. The mens rea is the "intention to effect this sexual penetration, and the knowledge that it occurs without the consent of the victim."[726]

520. In Muhimana this Tribunal expressed the view that the Akayesu and Kunarac definitions of rape are not incompatible and noted that "[w]hereas Akayesu referred broadly to a "physical invasion of a sexual nature", Kunarac went on to articulate the parameters of what would constitute a physical invasion of a sexual nature amounting to rape."[727]

521. The Chamber agrees with the above analysis and considers that the underlying objective of the prohibition of rape at international law is to penalise serious violations of sexual autonomy. A violation of sexual autonomy ensues whenever a person is subjected to sexual acts of the genre listed in Kunarac to which he/she has not consented, or to which he/she is not a voluntary participant. Lack of consent therefore continues to be an important ingredient of rape as a crime against humanity. The fact that unwanted sexual activity takes place under coercive or forceful circumstances may provide evidence of lack of consent on the part of the victim.[728]

522. The Chamber considers that in their result, both the Akayesu and Kunarac definitions of rape reflect this objective of protecting individual sexual autonomy and therefore are not incompatible. The

See also Kunarac, Judgement (TC), para. 457: "The basic principle which is truly common to these … legal systems is that serious violations of sexual autonomy are to be penalised. Sexual autonomy is violated wherever the person subjected to the acts has not freely agreed to it or is otherwise not a voluntary participant."

broad language in Akayesu that rape constitutes "physical invasion of a sexual nature", when properly interpreted, could include "sexual penetration" as stipulated in Kunarac. The Chamber therefore concludes that the offence of rape exists whenever there is sexual penetration of the vagina, anus or mouth of the victim, by the penis of the perpetrator or some other object under, circumstances where the victim did not agree to the sexual act or was otherwise not a willing participant to it. The mens rea consists of the intent of the perpetrator to effect such sexual penetration with knowledge that it occurs without the consent of the victim.[729]

523. In the Indictment, the Prosecutor alleges that the Accused bears superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (3) for the rapes described under Paragraphs 3.41 and 3.41 (i). In the Schedule of Particulars, the Prosecution indicated that the Accused was also being charged for responsibility under Article 6 (1) for aiding and abetting rape.[730]

524. The evidence provided in this case shows that Tutsi women as young as 17 years old were raped by soldiers during the months of April and May 1994 in the Butare and Gikongoro préfectures. The evidence before the Chamber establishes that Witnesses TM, QY and AFV were raped at various locations in Butare between April and May 1994. In each case, the evidence points to sexual penetration of the victim's vagina under circumstances in which they did not consent to such penetration. Moreover, each of these events took place in the context of widespread attacks against civilians in Butare in 1994. The legal requirements for the offence of rape as a crime against humanity have therefore been satisfied.

525. However, in order to hold the Accused culpable, the Prosecution must also prove that he aided or abetted the commission of these rapes, or otherwise bore superior responsibility for their commission.

526. Having concluded that the evidence heard by the Chamber does not support the specific allegation in the Indictment that soldiers from Ngoma Camp committed rape, and that it would be prejudicial and unfair to hold this evidence against the Accused, the Chamber hereby finds the Accused NOT GUILTY of rape under Count 4 of the Indictment.

41.19.1.4. 5.3. Crimes against Humanity – Other Inhumane Acts

527. Count 5 of the Indictment charges Tharcisse Muvunyi with other inhumane acts pursuant to Article 3 (i) of the ICTR Statute. The crime of "other inhumane acts" encompasses acts not specifically listed as crimes against humanity, but which are nevertheless of comparable nature, character, gravity and seriousness to the enumerated acts in sub-articles (a) to (h) of Article 3.[731] The inclusion of a residual category of crimes in Article 3 recognizes the difficulty in creating an exhaustive list of criminal conduct and the need for flexibility in the law's response.[732] The ICTY Appeals Chamber recently noted that the crime of "other inhumane acts" cannot in itself violate the principle of nullum crimen sine lege certa as it proscribes conduct which is forbidden under customary international law.[733] Whether an act falls within the ambit of Article 3 (i) has to be determined on a case-by-case basis.[734]

528. With respect to the actus reus of the offence, inhumane acts have been found to include sexual violence[735], forcible transfer of civilians,[736] mutilation, beatings and other types of severe bodily harm.[737]

529. The act or omission must deliberately cause serious mental or physical suffering or injury or constitute a serious attack on human dignity.[738] If the inhumane act is witnessed by a third party, "an accused may be held liable under these circumstances only where, at the time of the act, the accused had the intention to inflict serious mental suffering on the third party, or where the accused knew that his act was likely to cause serious mental suffering and was reckless as to whether such suffering would result. Accordingly, if at the time of the act, the accused was unaware of the third party bearing witness to his act, then he cannot be held responsible for the mental suffering of the third party."[739]

41.19.1.4.1. Findings on the Accused's Responsibility for Other Inhumane Acts

530. The Chamber recalls its factual findings relating to the treatment of Witnesses YAN and YAO at the Économat General, the Butare Cathedral and at ESO, the open humiliation of the two Tutsi women namely, Witnesses QY and AFV at various roadblocks in Butare, the beatings and injuries caused to Tutsi civilians by ESO soldiers at Beneberika Covent and Groupe scolaire, and is satisfied that the treatment meted out to these people by ESO soldiers constitute inhumane treatment within the meaning of Article 3 (i) of the Statute. The Chamber is satisfied that in each of these instances, the Accused had reason to know of the illegal conduct of his subordinates, he had effective control over their actions, but that he failed to take necessary and reasonable measures to prevent or punish their illegal behaviour. The Chamber's conclusion on effective control is based in particular on the fact that the Accused had all the material and human resources at ESO at his disposal and could have sent troops to prevent or punish the commission of the said crimes. For example, the Chamber believes that the Accused not only gave instructions that the Bicunda family should not be harmed during the attack on the Groupe scolaire, he also attempted to save the life of one Bicunda child when he realised that the latter had been taken away to be killed with the other refugees. The Accused therefore bears criminal responsibility as a superior under Article 6 (3) for the actions of these subordinates and is guilty of other inhumane acts as crimes against humanity.

41.19.2.Chapter IV : Verdict

531. For the reasons set out in this Judgement, having considered all the evidence and arguments of the Parties, the Trial Chamber unanimously finds in respect of Tharcisse Muvunyi as follows:

Count 1: Genocide: GUILTY

Count 2: Complicity in Genocide: DISMISSED

Count 3: Direct and Public Incitement to Commit Genocide: GUILTY

Count 4: Crimes Against Humanity (Rape): NOT GUILTY

Count 5: Crimes Against Humanity (Other Inhumane Acts): GUILTY

41.20. 1. Introduction

532. In Resolution 955 (1994) which established the Tribunal, the United Nations Security Council reasoned that holding individuals responsible for the serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in Rwanda in 1994, would further the objectives of justice, deterrence, reconciliation and the restoration and maintenance of peace in that country. These objectives largely reflect the goals of sentencing in criminal law which are retribution, deterrence, rehabilitation, and societal protection. In determining the appropriate sentence to impose on the Accused in respect of the crimes for which he has been found guilty, the Chamber will be guided by these goals, as well as the provisions of the Statute and Rules relevant to sentencing. Article 23 of the Statute limits the punishment that the Tribunal can impose to imprisonment, and provides that in determining the terms of imprisonment, the Trial Chamber shall have recourse to the sentencing practice of Rwandan Courts and take into account the gravity of the offence and the individual circumstances of the Accused. Article 23 therefore provides legal authority for both the principles of gradation and individualisation in sentencing.[740]

533. Rule 101 provides that the Trial Chamber can impose a maximum penalty of life imprisonment, and shall take into account both aggravating and mitigating circumstances in determining the appropriate sentence to impose on the Accused. Aggravating circumstances must be proved beyond reasonable doubt, whereas mitigating circumstances need only be established on a balance of probabilities.[741] Where the Trial Chamber imposes a fixed term of imprisonment running short of a life sentence, it should give credit for time served by the accused from the time of his arrest to the date of his conviction and sentence

41.22. 2. Submissions

534. In its Closing Brief and during Closing Arguments, the Prosecution submitted that the crimes charged against the Accused, in particular genocide and rape, are inherently grave offences that deserve the maximum punishment permissible under the Statute. It further argued that the sentencing practice of both this Tribunal and the Rwandan courts is consistent with imposition of the maximum penalty for genocide and rape. Under the Rwandan Organic Law, argues the Prosecution, upon conviction for such Category I offences, the Accused would be liable to capital punishment.

535. The Prosecution also argues that as a senior military officer with responsibility for civilian protection in Butare prefecture, the Accused abused his authority by allowing his subordinates to commit the heinous crimes alleged in the Indictment, and by his own incitement of the population to commit genocide against the Tutsis. It is argued that these are aggravating factors and should be considered as such.

536. According to the Prosecution, there are no mitigating circumstances in favour of the Accused, and he did not show any remorse for his own conduct or for the conduct of his subordinates. Finally, it is argued that the Prosecution did not intend to make the character of the Accused an issue in this trial, and therefore that the evidence of his good character introduced by the defence is irrelevant and should not be considered by the Chamber.

537. The Defence did not address sentencing issues in its Closing Brief or during Closing Arguments. It contented itself with the position that the Accused was not guilty of the crimes charged. However, pursuant to Rule 92 bis, the Defence introduced the sworn statement of the daughter of the accused to the effect that throughout his life, the Accused has been of good moral character and a law-abiding citizen who never discriminated against anyone on the basis of race, religion or ethnic background.[742] She added that as a soldier, the Accused treated all his subordinates alike and gave them equal opportunities regardless of their ethnic background. As a husband and father, the accused showed support and loyalty to his family, especially his two sons and one daughter and supported them in every manner possible so as to ensure that they grew up to be responsible and tolerant members of society. She urged that should the Chamber find her father guilty of any of the crimes charged, it should consider a sentence which reflects his entire life and his commitment to his family and to humanity, as well as his sense of honesty, respect and fairness to all manner of people.

41.23.1.1. 3.1. Gravity of the Offence

538. The Chamber has considered the submissions of the Prosecution that genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, and crimes against humanity such as rape are inherently grave offences deserving severe punishment. Indeed the Chamber considers that all offences subject to the jurisdiction of the Tribunal are inherently serious and offensive of our human conscience. For this reason, in exercising its discretion to determine the most appropriate sentence for the Accused, the Trial Chamber will do so in the context of the form and degree of the Accused's participation, as well as his individual circumstances so as to ensure that the sentence imposed is commensurate with the gravity of the offence. The Chamber has considered that under Rwandan law, Category I and II perpetrators of genocide and crimes against humanity are liable to the death penalty or to imprisonment for life.[743] Depending upon the circumstances, rape is punishable by imprisonment for a term of five to forty years.[744] The Chamber has also examined the jurisprudence of the Tribunal and notes that the maximum penalty of life imprisonment is usually reserved for those who held positions of authority and planned or ordered atrocities, as well as for those who committed crimes with particular zeal or sadism.[745]

41.23.1.2. 3.2. Individual, Aggravating and Mitigating Circumstances

539. The Chamber notes that throughout the events referred to in the Indictment, and in particular from 7 April to about 15 June 1994, the Accused was a senior military officer in the Rwandan Army. The Chamber has found that from about the 7 April 1994 to 15 June 1994, he was the most senior military officer in Butare. Apart from his superior military position, the accused was well-known in Butare and other parts of Rwanda as an active sportsman and basketball player who often participated in athletic and other sports events alongside his military colleagues and members of the civilian population. The official and social standing of the Accused therefore placed him among the leaders of the Butare community, with capacity to influence the course of many events including the conduct of his subordinate officers. The position of trust held by the Accused carried with it authority and responsibility to take all reasonable measures to protect members of the civilian population from attack. In the Chamber's view, the fact that the accused failed to prevent soldiers under his command

[742] "Tharcisse Muvunyi's Motion for Admission of Witness Testimony Pursuant to Rule 92 bis", filed on 16 May 2006. The statement was admitted into evidence by the Chamber's Oral Decision of 23 June 2006.
[743] Organic Law N°08/96, on the Organization of Prosecutions for Offences Constituting the Crime of Genocide or Crimes against Humanity Committed since 1 October 1990, dated 30 August 1996. Article 2 defines category I and II offenders as follows: Category 1: (a) person whose criminal acts or whose acts of criminal participation place them among the planners, organizers, instigators, supervisors and leaders of the crime of genocide or of a crime against humanity; (b) persons who acted in positions of authority at the national, préfectoral, communal, sector or cell level, or in a political party, or fostered such crimes; (c) notorious murderers who by virtue of the zeal or excessive malice with which they committed atrocities, distinguished themselves in their areas of residence or where they passed; (d) persons who committed acts sexual torture;
Category 2: persons whose criminal acts or whose acts of criminal participation place them among perpetrators, conspirators of accomplices of intentional homicide or of serious assault against the person causing death. Article 14 stipulates that persons convicted in catgories I and II shall be liable to the death penalty or to life imprisonment.
[744] Muhimana, Judgement (TC), para. 592, citing Articles 360-361 of the Rwandan Penal Code.
[745] Simba, Judgement (TC), para.434; Muhimana, Judgement (TC), paras 606-614, recalling the particular zeal and sadism with which the accused perpetrated crimes against his victims; Niyitegeka, Judgement (TC), para. 486.

from committing wide scale atrocities against Tutsi civilians in Butare was an aggravating factor. Moreover, the Chamber considers the following as aggravating circumstances:

- the ethnic separation and subsequent killing of orphan children at the Groupe scolaire by soldiers under the command of the Accused in collaboration with civilian militia;
- the fact that the Accused chastised the bourgmestre in Nyakizu commune for hiding a Tutsi man and that pursuant to his instructions, the said man was produced and killed by an armed mob.

540. The Chamber has also considered evidence from several defence witnesses that the accused was responsible for protecting and thus saving the lives of Tutsi civilians including the former Bishop of Butare, Witness MO73 and his family, the Bicunda family, and the children of Witness MO69's sister. The Chamber does not consider this to be a mitigating factor. On the contrary, the Chamber considers that the selective exercise by the accused of his power to protect civilians based on friendship or family ties, was further evidence of his abuse of office and authority. His duty was to protect all civilians in danger irrespective of ethnicity or personal relationships. The Chamber further considers that the Accused was one of the people entrusted with responsibility for the security of the civilian population in Butare. By using his power, influence and official resources to protect his friends and family while leaving the vast majority of Tutsi civilians at the mercy of the genocidal killers, the Accused abused the trust and confidence placed in him by members of his society.

541. The Chamber also notes that several witnesses testified that the Accused, while the most senior military officer at ESO and in Butare préfecture, was in practice powerless. It is suggested that Lieutenant Nizeyimana was the real operational decision-maker at ESO, and that he either perpetrated or masterminded the commission of most of the crimes for which the Accused has been charged. Furthermore, it is alleged that the Accused was never fully trusted by the military and political authorities in Kigali, and was at times suspected to be a sympathiser of the RPF. In the Chamber's view, these should not be considered as mitigating circumstances because the Chamber has already found that the Accused had effective control over ESO soldiers and he was fully aware that crimes were being committed by his subordinates. In any case, if at his level, he found it impossible to rein in those subordinates, he had a duty and a responsibility to report their criminal behaviour to officers higher up the chain of command. To sit down and fold his hands on the basis that he could not do anything about the serious crimes being committed by his subordinates, was at a minimum, a dereliction of his duties.

542. The Chamber notes, however, that except for the crime of incitement, the Prosecution has not proved that the Accused at any time gave direct orders for the commission of the crimes for which he has been convicted, or that he was present and directly participated in or encouraged the commission of those crimes. This circumstance must be taken into account in determining the sentence to impose on the Accused.

543. The Chamber also considers that the good character of the Accused prior to 1994, his position as a husband and father of three children, and the fact that he spent most of his life working for the defence of his country are mitigating factors. Moreover, many Defence witnesses portrayed the Accused as a highly respected individual and devoted worshipper, an avid sportsman and basketball player who actively participated in the life of his community alongside his military colleagues, as well as members of the civilian population. Furthermore, the Chamber has heard evidence indicating that prior to 1994, the Accused never discriminated against anyone on the basis of ethnicity.

544. Having considered all the evidence and weighing the aggravating and mitigating circumstances, the Chamber is convinced that some mitigation is warranted.

545. The Chamber sentences Tharcisse Muvunyi to TWENTY-FIVE (25) YEARS' IMPRISONMENT.

41.23.1.3. 3.3. Credit for Time Served

546. The Chamber notes that the Accused was arrested in the United Kingdom on 5 February 2000 and has been in detention since then. This means that he has been in detention for 6 years, 7 months and 6 days. Pursuant to Rule 101 (D) of the Rules, the Accused shall be given credit for the time served from the date of his arrest to the date of this Judgement.

547. In accordance with Rule 102 (A) the sentence shall begin to run from the date of this Judgement, provided that where notice of appeal is filed, the enforcement of the sentence shall be stayed until the final determination of the appeal.

548. Pursuant to Rule 103 of the Rules, Tharcisse Muvunyi shall remain in the custody of the Tribunal pending his transfer to a State where he shall serve his prison sentence if no appeal is filed, or, until the final determination of any appeal that may be filed.

549. This Judgement is rendered in English, which remains the authoritative version. The Chamber directs the Registry to translate the Judgement into French and Kinyarwanda without delay.

550. Rendered on 12 September 2006, and signed on 17 September 2006, in Arusha, Tanzania.

41.23.2.Annex I: Procedural History

41.24. 1. Introduction

41.24.1.1. 1.1. The Tribunal and its Juridciction

1. The Judgement in the case of The Prosecutor v. Tharcisse Muvunyi is issued by Trial Chamber II ("the Chamber") of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda ("the Tribunal"), composed of Judge Asoka de Silva, Presiding, Judge Flavia Lattanzi, and Judge Florence Rita Arrey.

2. The United Nations Security Council established the Tribunal after official United Nations reports indicated that genocide and widespread, systematic, and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law had been committed in Rwanda. The Security Council determined that this situation constituted a threat to international peace and security; resolved to put an end to such crimes and to bring to justice the persons responsible for them; and expressed conviction that the prosecution of such persons would contribute to the process of national reconciliation and to the restoration of peace. Thus on 8 November 1994, the Security Council acting under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, adopted Resolution 955 establishing the Tribunal.

3. The Tribunal is governed by the Statute annexed to United Nations Security Council Resolution 955 ("the Statute") and by its Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("the Rules").

4. The Tribunal has authority to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the Republic of Rwanda, and Rwandan citizens responsible for such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring States. Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute grant the Tribunal subject-matter jurisdiction over acts of genocide, crimes against humanity, and serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II. Article 1 of the Statute limits the Tribunal's temporal jurisdiction to acts committed between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994.

41.24.1.2. 1.2. The Accused

5. The Indictment alleges that Tharcisse Muvunyi (the "Accused") was born on 19 August 1953 in Mukarange commune, Byumba préfecture, Rwanda.

6. According to the Indictment, the Accused was appointed Commander of the Ecole des Sous-Officiers (ESO), a military training school in Butare préfecture, on 7 April 1994. In this capacity, the Accused allegedly exercised authority over the soldiers of the school, the gendarmerie, Ngoma camp, and all military operations in Butare préfecture.

41.24.1.4. 1.3. Procedural Background

41.24.1.4.2. 1.3.1. Pre-Trial Phase

7. A Warrant of Arrest and Order for Transfer and Detention were issued on 2 February 2000 by Judge Yakov Ostrovsky. On the same date, Judge Yakov Ostrovsky confirmed the joint indictment dated 21 January 2000, and issued an order of non-disclosure until the indictment had been served on all of the accused: Tharcisse Muvunyi, Idelphonse Hategekimana and Idelphonse Nizeyimana.

8. Muvunyi was arrested on 5 February 2000 in the United Kingdom, and was transferred on 30 October 2000 to the United Nations Detention Facility in Arusha, Tanzania. The Accused made his initial appearance before Judge William Sekule on 8 November 2000, and entered a plea of not guilty.

9. On 6 February 2001, Judge Yakov Ostrovsky granted a Prosecution motion to rescind the non-disclosure order regarding the original indictment.

10. On 25 April 2001, Judge Mehmet Güney granted a number of protection measures to prosecution witnesses, including the use of pseudonyms, closed sessions, and the non-disclosure to the public of witnesses' identifying information.

11. Trial Chamber III ("Chamber III"), composed of Judge Lloyd G. Williams, presiding, Judge Andresia Vaz, and Judge Khalida Rachid Khan, conducted the pre-trial proceedings between 11 November 2003 and 7 December 2004. From January 2005 onwards, the proceedings were held in Trial Chamber II for commencement of trial by the Bench rendering this Judgment.

12. On 15 April 2003, the Registrar denied the Accused's request to withdraw Mr. Michael Fischer from the position of Lead Counsel. The Accused applied to the President of the Tribunal for review of the Registrar's decision; his application was dismissed on 12 September 2003. However, in a decision dated 18 November 2003, Chamber III determined that the lack of communication between the Accused and his Lead Counsel hindered the judicial proceedings and constituted exceptional circumstances as provided by Rule 45 (H) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. Trial Chamber III therefore ordered the Registrar to withdraw Lead Counsel. Mr. Michael Fischer was consequently replaced by Mr. Francis Musei, Duty Counsel, on 19 November 2003.

13. On 11 November 2003, Chamber III authorised the deposition of Witness QX in Rwanda. On 27 November 2003, Chamber III denied the Accused's request for certification to appeal this decision, ruling that the Accused would be adequately represented by Duty Counsel during the deposition. Mr. William Taylor was appointed Lead Counsel on 7 January 2004.

14. At the Status Conference on 7 December 2004, the trial was scheduled to start on 28 February 2005. The Prosecution was ordered to file a Pre-Trial Brief before 25 January 2005.

41.24.1.4.3.1.3.2. The Indictment

41.24.1.4.4.

15. On 11 December 2003, Chamber III granted the Prosecutor's request to sever the indictment and to try the Accused separately, finding that it was in the interests of justice to try the Accused without delay. The Prosecutor filed an Amended Indictment (the "Indictment") on 22 December 2003, bearing the Case Number ICTR-2000-55A.

16. On 23 February 2005, the Chamber denied the Prosecutor leave to further amend the Indictment. The proposed changes included specifying the factual allegations underlying the charges, and dropping counts 4 and 5 (rape and inhumane acts as crimes against humanity). The Trial Chamber found that eight of the proposed amendments amounted to new charges. The Prosecutor was granted certification to appeal, and the Appeals Chamber upheld the Trial Chamber's decision. The Appeals Chamber found that although the Trial Chamber had erred in characterising certain proposed amendments as new charges, it had exercised its discretion reasonably in ruling that to accept changes at a date so close to the start of the trial would result in delays and prejudice to the Accused. On 24 June 2005, the Prosecutor filed a Schedule of Particulars which clarified the Indictment without expanding the charges.

17. The Indictment as amended charges the Accused with five counts: genocide, or alternatively complicity in genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, rape as a crime against humanity, and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity.

18. The Indictment alleges that these crimes were committed between 1 January and 31 December 1994 in Butare préfecture, Rwanda, where the Tutsi, the Hutu and the Twa were identified as racial or ethnic groups. The Indictment asserts that during this period, widespread or systematic attacks were directed against the civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds, and that a state of non-international armed conflict existed in Rwanda.

19. The Indictment alleges that the Accused, by reason of his position, knew or had reason to know that massacres and other atrocities were being committed in Butare by persons under his authority, but failed to prevent or put an end to these acts.

41.24.1.4.5. Trial Phase

20. The trial of the Accused commenced on 28 February 2005. In the course of 76 trial days, the Chamber heard a total of 47 witnesses, of whom there were 24 for the Prosecution including one investigator and two expert witnesses, and 23 for the Defence, including one expert witness.

21. On 24 March 2005, the Prosecution filed a motion requesting leave to call 29 additional witnesses in view of the Chamber's decision not to allow the withdrawal of two charges from the indictment. The Chamber directed the Prosecution to reformulate its supplementary witness list to include only those whose testimonies would support counts 4 and 5 i.e. rape and other inhumane acts as crimes against humanity The Prosecution added six names to its original list of witnesses. In a decision dated 20 June 2005, the Chamber ruled against a Defence motion seeking to exclude these additional testimonies, concluding their statements indicated they could offer evidence regarding counts 4 and 5.

22. On 27 June 2005, the Defence filed a motion seeking to exclude the evidence of Witness TQ who the Defence asserted was a former employee of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and who had previously given evidence in the Butare case. The Chamber rendered a decision on 13 October 2005 denying the Defence motion. The Chamber found that it was clear from Witness TQ's preliminary statement that he was working for the Belgian Red Cross Society (BRCS) at the relevant time, not the ICRC and that as BRCS is a national organization, it has no exceptional privilege of non-disclosure of information in the possession of an employee.

23. The Prosecution concluded its case on 20 July 2005.

24. On 15 August 2005, the Defence filed a motion for Judgment of Acquittal pursuant to Rule 98 bis. On 14 October 2005, the Chamber ruled against the Accused in relation to each Count of the Indictment. The Chamber concluded that there was sufficient evidence upon which a reasonable trier of fact could sustain a conviction in relation to each of the five counts in the Indictment. The Chamber found that in relation to Counts 1 and 2, a conviction could be sustained pursuant to Articles 6 (1) and 6 (3) of the Statute ; in relation to Count 3, a conviction could be sustained pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute ; and in relation to Counts 4 and 5, a conviction could be sustained pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute.

25. On 20 October 2005, the Chamber granted a number of protective measures for Defence witnesses which had been sought by the Defence and which had not been opposed by the Prosecution. The measures were granted with the proviso that the Defence provide the Prosecution with unredacted statements and witness identity information no less than 21 days prior to the evidence of the witness being heard. The Chamber concluded that further protective measures which had been requested by the Defence and opposed by the Prosecution, if granted, had the potential to affect the Prosecution's disclosure obligations and therefore were not in the interests of justice.

26. On 6 October 2005, the Defence filed a motion seeking an adjournment of the proceedings from 14 November 2005 to early 2006. The Chamber concluded that the matters raised by Counsel for the Accused could have been resolved internally within the Defence team, rejected the motion and ordered the Defence to commence the presentation of its case on 14 November 2005.

27. On 25 October 2005, the Prosecution filed a motion for disclosure of identifying information of Defence witnesses, indicating that the Prosecution had only received the name of the first Defence Witness MO60 but no further identifying information in relation to either this witness or any of the other 39 Defence witnesses. On 9 November 2005, the Chamber reiterated its orders of 20 October 2005 and further specified the type of identifying information the Defence should provide in relation to its witnesses.

28. On 14 November 2005, the Defence filed an emergency motion for continuance. On that same date, the Chamber handed down an oral decision, ordering the Defence to disclose the statements of its first three designated witnesses, MO60, MO70 and MO38, to the Prosecution no later than 21 November 2005 and the Defence to commence its case on 5 December 2005. In relation to the remaining Defence witnesses, the Chamber ordered that their identifying information be disclosed to the Prosecution at least 21 days prior to the date of their testimony and adjourned the proceedings to 5 December 2005.

29. The Defence case commenced on 5 December 2005.

30. On 21 December 2005, Lead Counsel for the Accused filed an application for the withdrawal of the assignment of his Co-Counsel, citing irreconcilable differences between them, and between Co-Counsel and other members of the Defence Team.

31. During the cross-examination of Defence Witness Augustin Ndindiliyimana on 7 December 2005, the Prosecution attempted to tender a set of documents that purportedly bore the signature of the Accused, in the capacity of "Commandant de Place, Butare-Gikongoro." The Chamber ruled that the documents were inadmissible as exhibits, but would be marked for identification purposes as "PID1". The Chamber further indicated that the Prosecution could prove the authenticity of the documents at a later date by calling witnesses.

32. On 31 January 2006, the Prosecution filed a motion to admit the documents contained in PID1. On 28 February 2006, the Chamber rendered a decision denying the Prosecution motion to admit documents marked PID1 on the basis that, although the three documents appeared at face value to be relevant to the present case, the documents were not prima facie reliable to be admissible under the Rules. The Prosecution then filed a further motion on 30 March 2006 seeking leave to call a handwriting expert by the name of Mr. Antipas Nyanjwa to testify to the authenticity of the documents marked PID1. The Chamber concluded that hearing evidence relating to these documents would further the Chamber's overall objective of discovering the truth about the allegations made against the Accused and that Mr. Nyanjwa was qualified to give that evidence. The Chamber concluded that the Defence could be given the opportunity to call evidence to contradict or otherwise challenge the evidence of the proposed handwriting expert if they so desired.

33. On 20 March 2006, the Defence filed a motion to expand and vary the Defence witness list. The Defence sought leave to add a further witness who had recently testified in the "Military II" and "Government II" cases for the Prosecution on the grounds that the witness had exculpatory information pertinent to the outcome of this case. The Chamber rendered a decision on 28 March 2006 after having conducted an analysis of the transcript of the evidence of Witness AOG in the "Military II" case denying the Defence motion. The Chamber concluded that none of the statements made by this witness in that case directly related to any of the charges in the Indictment against Muvunyi, that in other prior cases the witness had always testified for the Prosecution and the Defence had provided no material to indicate that the witness would be willing to testify on behalf of the Accused.

34. The Prosecution and Defence filed their closing briefs on 15 June 2006. Closing Arguments were heard on 22 and 23 June 2006.

THE APPEALS CHAMBER of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States Between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Tribunal"), is seized of the "Prosecutor's Notice of Appeal and Motion for an Extension of Time Within Which to File Notice of Appeal", filed on 17 October 2006 ("Motion"), in which the Prosecution requests that its Notice of Appeal, filed together with the Motion, be considered timely;[1]

NOTING that Trial Chamber II of the Tribunal pronounced its Judgement against Tharcisse Muvunyi on 12 September 2006, and issued a reasoned opinion in writing in English on 18 September 2006 ("Trial Judgement");

NOTING that the Prosecution submits in support of its Motion that the time for filing the Notice of Appeal should start running from the date on which the Trial Judgement was filed;[2]

NOTING that Counsel for Tharcisse Muvunyi did not file a response to the Motion;

CONSIDERING that under Rule 108 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal ("Rules"), "[a] party seeking to appeal a judgement or sentence shall, not more than thirty days from the date on which the judgement or the sentence was pronounced, file a notice of appeal, setting forth the grounds";

CONSIDERING therefore that the Prosecution's Notice of Appeal should have been filed no later than 12 October 2006;

CONSIDERING that Rule 116 (A) of the Rules provides that the Appeals Chamber may grant a motion to extend a time limit upon a showing of good cause;

CONSIDERING that such a motion should be filed prior to expiry of the time limit at issue;[3]

In this case, the Pre-Appeal Judge exceptionally granted a motion for an extension of time to file a reply, which was filed 136 days after the filing of the Respondent's Brief, that is, 121 days after the expiration of the 15-day deadline for filing briefs in reply during which the appellant should have filed any motion for

CONSIDERING that the Prosecution failed to file a motion for an extension of time limit prior to or on 12 October 2006 with regard to filing its Notice of Appeal;

CONSIDERING however, that the Appeals Chamber may "recognise, as validly done any act done after the expiration of a time limit";[4]

CONSIDERING that the Registry has confirmed that the Trial Judgement was only filed on 18 September 2006, that is, six days after its pronouncement;

STATUE sur la requête sur la base des conclusions écrites des parties, en application de l'article 73 (A) du Règlement,

Introduction

1. Le 7 décembre 2005, pendant le contre-interrogatoire du témoin à décharge Augustin Ndindiliyimana, le Procureur a voulu verser au dossier un jeu de documents qui auraient été signés par l'accusé, Tharcisse Muvunyi, en sa qualité de « commandant de place, Butare-Gikongoro ». La Défense s'y est opposée au motif que ces documents ne satisfaisaient nullement à la norme de fiabilité requise et étaient donc inadmissibles. Le témoin ayant affirmé n'avoir jamais vu ces documents auparavant et ne pas reconnaître le sceau et la signature y figurant, la Chambre a conclu que lesdits documents ne pouvaient être admis comme pièces à conviction, mais qu'ils recevraient une cote aux seules fins d'identification. Ils ont ainsi reçu la cote « PID1 ». La Chambre a ajouté que le Procureur pourrait établir leur authenticité ultérieurement en citant des témoins à cette fin[6].

2. Le 31 janvier 2006, le Procureur a déposé une requête en vue de l'admission des documents portant la cote « PID1 », arguant qu'ils étaient pertinents, établissaient la véracité de certaines allégations contenues dans l'acte d'accusation et satisfaisaient à la norme de fiabilité requise pour être admis comme éléments de preuve.

3. Le 28 février 2006, la Chambre a rendu une décision par laquelle elle rejetait la requête du Procureur dans sa totalité au motif que les documents portant la cote « PID1 » ne constituaient pas un commencement de preuve fiable pour être recevables en vertu du Règlement. Elle a décidé que ces documents conserveraient aux seules fins d'identification la cote qui leur avait été attribuée.

Arguments des parties

Le Procureur

4. Le Procureur invoque les dispositions des paragraphes (C) et (D) de l'article 89. Il précise qu'il a déposé sa Requête en application de la décision orale du 7 décembre 2005 afin d'établir l'authenticité des documents portant la cote « PID1 » en appelant à la barre des témoins supplémentaires. A supposer même que la Chambre n'aurait à examiner que le point de savoir si Augustin Ndindiliyimana reconnaissait les documents portant la cote « PID1 », il resterait néanmoins nécessaire d'appeler à la barre un expert en écritures pour apporter la contradiction[7].

[7] Prosecutor's Response to Accused's Objections to the Prosecutor's Request for a Handwriting Expert and Request for Cross-Examination, 20 avril 2006, par. 3.

5. Dans sa Requête, le Procureur annonce son intention d'appeler à la barre un expert en écritures, Antipas Nyanjwa, pour établir l'authenticité desdits documents et il demande l'autorisation de citer celui-ci. Il précise que si cette autorisation est donnée, l'expert en écritures déposera au sujet des signatures et de l'écriture apparaissant sur les documents portant la cote « PID1 », ayant pu les comparer à des documents similaires dont l'accusé est l'auteur et qui figuraient parmi les pièces saisies à la suite de l'arrestation de celui-ci au Royaume-Uni.

6. Le Procureur a joint à sa Requête le curriculum vitae de M. Nyanjwa, d'où il résulte que celui-ci est licencié ès lettres de l'Université Kurukshetra (Inde) (1993) et titulaire d'une maîtrise en criminologie et en médecine légale de l'Université de Sagar (Inde) (1994). Selon les documents déposés par le Procureur, de 1998 à 2001 M. Nyanjwa a suivi plusieurs formations de courte durée ou effectué des stages d'études supérieures, notamment un séminaire sur les « documents contestés », (documents manuscrits et documents non manuscrits), un stage sur l'analyse des faux en écriture et un cours d'analyse scientifique des documents. Depuis 1996, il est chargé de l'analyse scientifique des documents auprès de la police kényane. Le Procureur ajoute que M. Nyanjwa est un expert reconnu et qu'il a témoigné en cette qualité devant le Tribunal, mais il ne précise pas dans quelle(s) affaire(s).

La Défense

7. La Défense s'oppose à la Requête du Procureur essentiellement pour les trois raisons que voici : (i) il ne faut pas permettre au Procureur de reprendre la présentation de ses moyens au présent stade de la procédure ; (ii) les documents dont le Procureur demande l'admission ne constituent pas des éléments de preuve en réplique ; (iii) en faisant droit à la Requête, on méconnaîtrait le droit de l'accusé d'être jugé sans retard excessif (art. 20 du Statut).

8. Se fondant sur une décision rendue par la Chambre de première instance du TPIY en l'affaire Čelebići, la Défense fait valoir que pour être autorisé à reprendre la présentation de ses moyens, le Procureur doit établir que les éléments de preuve qu'il souhaite produire n'étaient pas en sa possession auparavant et qu'il n'aurait pu les obtenir même en exerçant toute la diligence voulue. Pour la Défense, le Procureur ne remplit pas cette condition et, de ce fait, admettre les éléments de preuve proposés, ce serait lui accorder un avantage tactique indu.

9. Pour ce qui est des contre preuves du Procureur, la Défense fait valoir que le propre de la réplique est de produire une preuve pour réfuter un élément de preuve particulier que la Défense a présenté, et qu'elle se limite donc aux questions soulevées directement et expressément par les moyens de preuve à décharge. Elle fait valoir que les Chambres de première instance hésitent généralement à faire droit à des offres de preuve en réplique ayant pour seul but de compléter la thèse du Procureur ou, tout simplement, de permettre à celui-ci de citer des témoins supplémentaires pour contrer les arguments de la Défense.

10. La Défense rappelle l'ordre de présentation des moyens de preuve fixé par l'article 85 du Règlement selon lequel le Procureur présente sa preuve pour établir la responsabilité de l'accusé. La Défense présentant en retour ses moyens à décharge. Elle convient que le Procureur peut dans certains cas être autorisé à présenter des moyens de preuve supplémentaires, mais elle souligne le caractère exceptionnel de cette mesure qui ne peut avoir pour seul but de renforcer les éléments de preuve produits précédemment ou de présenter des éléments de preuve jugés non pertinents antérieurement.

11. Selon la Défense, rien de ce qu'a dit le témoin à décharge Augustin Ndindiliyimana, durant son contre-interrogatoire du 7 décembre 2005, à propos des documents portant la cote PID1 ne saurait justifier que le Procureur appelle à la barre un expert en écritures dans le cadre de sa réplique.

12. Elle considère que si ledit expert était autorisé à déposer à charge, elle se verrait contrainte de s'assurer les services d'un autre expert en écritures pour examiner les documents contestés et déposer ensuite à décharge. À l'entendre, tout ceci pourrait prendre des mois, et ce, au mépris du droit de l'accusé d'être jugé sans retard excessif.

13. Elle s'oppose également à ce qu'on utilise pour les comparer avec les documents contestés, des documents ou pièces de l'accusé saisis lors de son arrestation au Royaume-Uni.

14. Elle affirme enfin que la Requête du Procureur est fantaisiste et doit être rejetée.

Délibération

15. La Chambre tient compte des dispositions des paragraphes (C) et (D) de l'article 89 du Règlement, ainsi que de la jurisprudence du Tribunal selon laquelle, lorsqu'elle exerce le pouvoir que lui confère l'article 89 de décider s'il faut recevoir des éléments de preuve, elle doit peser la pertinence et la valeur probante de ces éléments, en regard du préjudice que pourrait subir l'accusé si ceux-ci étaient admis. En général, lorsque la Chambre estime que cet effet préjudiciable a des chances de l'emporter sur la valeur probante, elle choisira de rejeter ces éléments de preuve[8].

16. La Chambre prend note de l'intention du Procureur d'appeler à la barre l'expert en écritures proposé pour établir l'authenticité des pièces contenues dans le jeu de trois documents portant la cote PID1.

- Le document n°1, une lettre écrite en français et datée du 21 avril 1994, est adressé à un bourgmestre de Gikongoro dont le nom n'est pas mentionné. Il aurait pour auteur l'accusé, dont le nom figure sur le document et serait signé de lui en qualité de « Comd Place, BUT-GIK ». Il informe le bourgmestre du projet du Ministre de la défense de former 10 jeunes par secteur dans le cadre du programme de défense civile.
- Le document n°2, une lettre écrite en français et datée du 21 avril 1994, est une convocation à une réunion de coordination devant se tenir le 25 avril 1994 à partir de 9 heures. Sur le document figurent le nom de l'accusé, son titre (« Lt. Col., Cmd Place But-Gik ») et une signature qui serait la sienne.
- Le document n°3 contient trois formulaires dactylographiés sur lesquels le nom et le numéro de la carte d'identité de trois individus ont été inscrits à la main. En tête de chacun des formulaires apparaît la mention « Butare le 10/5/1994 ». A la fin, on lit la mention « Muvunyi Tharcisse, Lt. Col. Cmd OPS Butare ».

18. La Chambre rappelle que l'article 85 du Règlement définit l'ordre de présentation des moyens de preuve devant le Tribunal. Selon elle, en vertu de cet article il appartient au Procureur, en tant qu'auteur de l'acte d'accusation, de produire, dans le cadre de la présentation de ses moyens, tous les éléments de preuve qui sont en sa possession et dont il estime qu'ils permettront de prouver les allégations portées contre l'accusé. De la sorte, celui-ci peut effectivement répondre aux arguments du Procureur lorsqu'il présente ses propres moyens. Dans l'affaire Čelebići, la Chambre de première instance du TPIY a déclaré ce qui suit : « ... [le Procureur] doit présenter les éléments établissant la culpabilité de l'accusé dans le cadre de l'exposé de ses moyens[9] ».

20. Après un examen minutieux des documents portant la cote PID1, la Chambre conclut que l'audition d'un témoin qui déposera au sujet de ces documents va dans le sens de l'objectif qu'elle-même poursuit de faire la lumière sur les allégations portées contre l'accusé en l'espèce.

21. La Chambre n'ignore pas qu'on se trouve à un stade très avancé de la procédure. Elle estime néanmoins que ce qui est au cœur de la requête, c'est l'allégation selon laquelle l'accusé était le commandant de place de Butare et Gikongoro. Cette allégation, qui n'est pas nouvelle, a été contredite par la Défense lorsqu'elle a présenté ses moyens. Cependant, la Chambre est convaincue qu'il faudrait dans l'intérêt de la justice, donner la possibilité à la Défense d'appeler à la barre un témoin pour contredire ou autrement contester la déposition de l'expert en écritures proposé par le Procureur.

22. Ayant décidé que l'audition d'un témoin appelé à la barre pour établir l'authenticité des documents portant la cote PID1 est admissible dans l'intérêt de la justice, la Chambre doit à présent se prononcer sur les compétences d'Antipas Nyanjwa, l'expert proposé par le Procureur. Elle note que la Défense, se fondant sur l'article 94 bis du Règlement, conteste la qualification de l'expert en écritures proposé et fait part de son intention de contre-interroger celui-ci s'il est appelé à la barre. La Chambre a examiné attentivement les titres universitaires et la qualification professionnelle de M. Nyanjwa, son expérience dans le domaine de l'analyse scientifique des documents tant dans son pays natal qu'en qualité d'expert en écritures agréé auprès du Tribunal et le rapport d'expert qu'il a déposé[10]. Elle est convaincue, eu égard aux connaissances spécialisées de M. Nyanjwa, à ses compétences, à sa formation et à son expérience, qu'il peut aider la Chambre à déterminer l'authenticité de la signature au bas des documents portant la cote PID1.

23.* La Chambre rappelle la décision rendue par la Chambre d'appel du TPIY dans l'affaire Stakić. La Défense avait fait valoir que certains documents de l'accusé saisis lors de son arrestation avaient été obtenus illégalement et devaient être exclus, car il y allait du droit de l'accusé à un procès

[10] La Chambre relève que M. Nyanjwa a déjà témoigné deux fois au moins devant le Tribunal en tant qu'expert en écritures. Voir Le Procureur c. Nyiramasuhuko et consorts, Decision on Prosecutor's Motion for Leave to Add a Handwriting Expert to his Witness List, 14 octobre 2004 ; Le Procureur c. équitable. La Chambre d'appel a conclu que l'article 39 du Règlement du TPIY habilitait le Procureur à recueillir tous éléments de preuve et à enquêter sur les lieux et que la Défense n'avait pas établi dans les circonstances de l'espèce que la fouille et la saisie avaient été effectuées de manière illégale au regard du Règlement ou du droit international[12]. La Chambre pense, comme la Chambre d'appel du TPIY, que la Défense doit établir que la fouille et la saisie des documents qui ont permis d'obtenir ces documents étaient entachées d'illégalité au regard du Règlement ou du droit international.

24. La Chambre relève que l'arrestation et le transfèrement d'accusés au Tribunal concernent à la fois le droit interne et le droit international. En effet, l'article 28 du Statut exige des Etats qu'ils collaborent avec le Tribunal à la recherche et au jugement des personnes accusées d'avoir commis des violations graves du droit international humanitaire. Pour la Chambre, le mandat d'arrêt et l'ordonnance de transfèrement de l'accusé ont été délivrés par un tribunal international, mais il a fallu la coopération des États et l'application du droit interne pour les exécuter. Le droit anglais – l'accusé a été arrêté au Royaume-Uni – permet la fouille et la saisie de pièces pendant ou après l'arrestation[13].

25. La Chambre est donc convaincue, se fondant sur l'article 39 du Règlement et sur les dispositions visées du droit anglais, qu'il existe une base juridique suffisante justifiant la saisie des pièces trouvées sur l'accusé lors de son arrestation et leur utilisation dans le cadre de procédures engagées devant le Tribunal. Aussi l'argument que la Défense fait valoir à cet égard n'est-il pas fondé, et il est écarté.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

FAIT DROIT à la Requête et PRESCRIT les mesures suivantes :

1. Antipas Nyanjwa, l'expert en écritures proposé par le Procureur, déposera le 8 ou le 9 mai 2006 ;

2. Si elle le souhaite, la Défense pourra déposer une requête demandant à pouvoir appeler à la barre un témoin en duplique pour contredire ou autrement contester la déposition du témoin à charge susmentionné ;

3. S'il est fait droit à cette requête, le témoin appelé en duplique pourra déposer les 1er et 2 juin 2006.

BEING SEIZED OF the "Requête de la Défense aux fins de fixation de la date d'ouverture du procès", filed on 6 March 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response, filed on 8 March 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. On 29 June 2001, the Accused made his initial appearance and pleaded not guilty to all three counts in the Indictment. The Defence complains that there has since been no progress in the case, and requests the setting of a date for the commencement of the trial. The Defence specifically asks that the trial start in September 2006 and that a Pre-trial Conference be scheduled accordingly. The Prosecution expresses its willingness to advance the proceedings and suggests that a Status Conference be held, as a Pre-trial Conference is premature.

Deliberations

2. At the initial appearance of the Accused, the Presiding Judge affirmed that "[t]he date for trial will be set later".[14] Such indication satisfies the provisions of Rule 62 (A) of the Rules and conforms to the Tribunal's jurisprudence.[15]

[14] Nchamihigo, T. 29 June 2001, p. 32.

3. The Chamber is mindful of the right of the Accused to be tried without undue delay. The date for commencement of any particular trial depends on a variety of factors, some of which cannot be determined in the absence of consultation with both parties. In order to facilitate this consultation, the Chamber directed the Registry to ascertain the parties' availability for a status conference. The Defence indicated that it could be available from 15 May 2006, and the conference has been scheduled for 19 May 2006. Setting a date for the commencement of trial prior to this consultation would be premature.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DECLARES the motion premature.

BEING SEIZED OF the "Requête de la Défense aux fins de demander l'extension du délai pour répondre à la requête du Procureur en modification de l'acte d'accusation", filed on 11 May 2006;

CONSIDERING the Prosecution Response thereto, filed on 15 May 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

1. The Indictment against the Accused is dated 29 June 2001. On 5 May 2006, the Prosecution filed a request to amend the Indictment.[1] The Defence, in its motion, asks for an extension to respond to the Prosecution request until 17 July 2006. The Defence subsequently communicated to the Chamber that it would be prepared to file a response by 2 July 2006.

2. The motion also complains that the Defence had not received the French version of the proposed Amended Indictment. The Chamber notes that on 17 May 2006, the Prosecution filed the French translation.

3. In light of the modifications proposed to the Indictment, including an additional charge, and given the importance and complexity of the matter, the Chamber agrees that the five-day statutory time-period is too short a period to prepare an adequate response. Accordingly, the Defence will have until 3 July 2006 to file a response.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion in part and extends the deadline until 3 July 2006.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding, Judge Jai Ram Reddy, and Judge Sergei Alekseevich Egorov;

BEING SEIZED OF the "Requête du procureur aux fins d'être autorisé à modifier l'acte d'accusation", filed on 5 May 2006;

CONSIDERING the Defence Response, filed on 5 July 2006; and the Prosecution Reply, filed on 10 July 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion.

Introduction

1. The current Indictment of the Accused, dated 29 June 2001, charges the Accused with three counts: genocide, or alternatively, complicity in genocide; extermination, or alternatively, murder, as a crime against humanity; and violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II.[1] The Prosecution now seeks leave to alter the charges against the Accused and has drawn up a proposed Indictment. The Defence opposes the motion.

2. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber rejects the Defence argument that it should not consider the Prosecution reply to its response. Although such filings are not specifically permitted by the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, nor are they prohibited. The Chamber has discretion to consider such submissions and, in the present instance, chooses to do so.[2]

Submissions

3. The Prosecution proposes the following amendments to the current Indictment: separation of extermination as a crime against humanity and murder as a crime against humanity into two distinct and independent counts, rather than as a single count in which the two crimes are pleaded in the alternative; removal of the counts of complicity in genocide and violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II thereto, and addition of a count of other inhumane acts as crimes against humanity under Article 3 (i) of the Statute; clarification that the Accused is charged with participating in a joint criminal enterprise; insertion of additional details, including names, dates and places with respect to other factual allegations, and removal of some generally phrased material facts; and, addition of new material facts such as, for example, an allegation that the Accused personally killed four Tutsi civilians.

[1] The Accused pleaded not guilty to all three counts at his initial appearance on 29 June 2001.
[2] Bagosora et al., Decision on Kabiligi Request for Particulars of the Amended Indictment, 27 September 2005 (TC), para. 3.

4. The Prosecution states that many of the changes are justified by the discovery of new information which indicates a "much greater participation by the Accused" in the crimes charged, as well as participation in other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity.[3] The proposed Indictment is said to more accurately reflect the totality of the evidence against the Accused and provides more specificity as to the nature and cause of the charges against him. The Accused will suffer no prejudice if leave to amend is granted because, according to the Prosecution, the proposed Indictment is based largely on material which has already been disclosed to the Accused pursuant to Rule 66 (A).[4] Further, in the absence of any date for the opening of the trial the right of the Accused to be tried without undue delay under Article 20 (4) (c) of the Statute will not be compromised.[5]

5. The Prosecution claims that it has been diligent in moving for the amendments in a timely manner.[6] The failure to previously propose amendments to the Indictment is justified on the basis that the Prosecution was negotiating for the transfer of the present case to a national jurisdiction. The Prosecution did not consider it necessary to amend the Indictment while such negotiations were ongoing.[7]

6. In its motion, the Prosecution also requests that Witnesses BRG, BRD, BRE, BNB, BRF, BRK, BRH, BRR, BRQ, BRN, BRO, BPA, BRX, BOV, BPX, BRY, BRZ, BOU, and API be granted protective measures under Rules 53 (A), 69 and 75 (A) and that the statements be disclosed to the Defence only in redacted form, pursuant to an order of the chamber.[8]

7. The Defence opposes the motion. The five-year delay between the filing of the current Indictment and the present amendments is said to be unjustified. Many of the factual elements which the Prosecution now seeks to add to that Indictment were discovered some time ago; the Prosecution must have been aware of these facts, in light of the ongoing Ntagerura trial, which involved many of the same factual allegations that are now brought against the Accused.[9] Moreover, twelve of the new witnesses upon whom the new material facts are based are detainees, who should have been discoverable long before now.[10] Negotiations with a State for the purpose of transferring the case to a national jurisdiction provide no excuse for failing to amend the Indictment in a timely manner.[11]

8. Granting the Prosecution leave to amend the Indictment under these circumstances, argues the Defence, would be prejudicial to the Accused. The majority of paragraphs in the proposed Indictment contain entirely new information, including four new counts, that, according to the Defence, is not based on information which has already been disclosed.[12] As such, it is claimed that, if the amendment were granted, the Defence would have to start its work anew.[13] The inclusion of new charges would necessitate a further appearance and plea by the Accused, which would further delay the start of the case.[14] Furthermore, the ameliorating effect of the amendments is negligible.[15] The proposed Indictment uses cumulative formulations to plead criminal responsibility, creating confusion and leaving doubt as to which forms of responsibility attach to each count.[16] For example, the proposed Indictment does not specify which forms of joint criminal enterprise the Prosecution is alleging.[17] The proposed Indictment would lead to additional contention and conflict between the parties.[18]

Deliberations

9. Rule 50 (A) (i) provides that, after the initial appearance of the Accused, an indictment may only be amended with leave of the Trial Chamber. The Chamber has discretion whether to grant leave on a case-by-case basis.[19] In making its determination, the Chamber must weigh three factors: the ameliorating effect of the changes on the clarity and precision of the case to be met; the diligence of the Prosecution in making the amendment in a timely manner that avoids creating an unfair tactical advantage; and the likely delay or other possible prejudice to the Defence, if any, caused by the amendment.[20] The Chamber must also consider whether a prima facie case exists to support any new charges in the proposed amendment.[21] At the time this motion was filed, no date for trial had been set. However, on 13 July 2006, the trial was scheduled to start on 25 September 2006. The impact of the proposed amendments will be considered in the context of this schedule.

(a) Separation of the Crimes of Extermination and Murder

10. Separation of the crimes of extermination and murder does not prejudice the Accused. As the current Indictment now stands, with the crimes pleaded in the alternative, the Defence would necessarily have had to prepare to meet both charges. Separation of the counts does not expand the legal basis of criminal liability alleged against the Accused, although it does potentially place him in greater jeopardy if convicted of both crimes. In the absence of any discernible prejudice, and in light of the usual practice of pleading these charges as separate crimes, the Chamber considers the amendment to be justified.

(b) Addition and Removal of Counts and Modes of Liability

11. The Prosecution proposes to withdraw two counts: complicity in genocide and violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II. The consistent jurisprudence of the International Criminal Tribunals holds that, in the absence of specific pleading to the contrary, the material elements of complicity and aiding and abetting are substantially identical.[22] The removal of the count of complicity in genocide therefore reduces the redundancy in the current Indictment and is, hence, in the interests of justice.

12. The Prosecution submits that lack of evidence justifies removal of the count of violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II on the basis of lack of evidence to support the count. The Chamber takes note of the Prosecution position and grants the amendment.[23]

13. The proposed Indictment adds the new count of other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity. Except as addressed below in paragraph 21 of this Decision, detailed factual allegations supporting the count are provided in paragraphs 72-75 of the proposed Indictment. Some of the material facts alleged in support of the count were already included in the current Indictment in support of all three counts against the Accused.[24] Thus, some of the allegations are, in fact, already well-known to the Accused. Other allegations, added in paragraph 73 of the proposed Indictment, are also alleged in paragraph 31, in support of the count of genocide in that Indictment. The Chamber is of the view that the Defence will have sufficient time before the start of trial to conduct investigation into the new material facts in support of this count.

(c) Joint Criminal Enterprise

14. The proposed Indictment advances with greater particularity the theory of joint criminal enterprise as a mode of criminal liability.[25] Paragraph 21 of the current Indictment refers to this form of criminal responsibility, albeit ambiguously, stating that "Siméon Nchamihigo ordered, directed or acted in concert with administrative and military officials in Cyangugu préfecture ... in the planning, preparation or execution of a common scheme, strategy or plan". The proposed Indictment has clarified the forms and nature of participation alleged.[26] Paragraphs 16 and 18 of the proposed Indictment allege that the Accused > knowingly and willfully participated in a joint criminal enterprise .... The purpose of the joint criminal enterprise was the destruction of the Tutsi racial or ethnic group in Cyangugu préfecture [sic] through the commission of the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity …. [T]hese crimes were the natural and foreseeable consequences of the execution of the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise.

The specification that the crimes were the "natural and foreseeable consequence" of the common purpose gives notice to the Accused that he is charged not only with the "basic" form of joint criminal enterprise, but also the "extended" form. This precision allows the parties and Chamber to proceed on a clearer and more precise legal footing which is beneficial for the conduct of the trial. The Prosecution's proposal to integrate the theory of joint criminal enterprise in the proposed Indictment is therefore granted.

"aiding and abetting" in Article 6 (1) "are similar to the material elements of complicity"). See also Krstić, Judgement (TC), 2 August 2001, para. 640.

[23] In this regard, "a prosecutor who no longer intends to prosecute an accused on certain counts of the indictment needs no amendment of the indictment to achieve that end. He could, instead, simply declare, at the opening of the trial, that he will not present any evidence on those counts." Muvunyi Decision, para. 31.

[The] "systemic" form of joint criminal enterprise ... is a variant of the basic form, characterised by the existence of an organised system of ill-treatment .... It concerns cases involving a common purpose to commit a crime where one of the perpetrators commits an act which, while outside the common purpose, is nevertheless a natural and foreseeable consequence of executing that common purpose"); Simba, Decision on the Defence's Preliminary Motion Challenging the Second Amended Indictment (TC), 14 July 2004, paras. 8-10; Mpambara, Decision on the Prosecution's Request for Leave to File an Amended Indictment (TC), 4 March 2005, para. 12; Gatete, Decision on the Prosecution's Request for Leave to File an Amended Indictment (TC), 21 April 2005, para. 5.

(d) Specification of Material Facts

15. The proposed Indictment refines the allegations in the current Indictment by, inter alia, specifying dates,[27] locations,[28] names and numbers of victims,[29] and names of individuals with whom the Accused allegedly collaborated in a joint criminal enterprise, or whom he allegedly ordered or instigated to attack and kill Tutsis.[30] These additional details may require further investigation by the Defence; on the other hand, they also assist in clarifying and narrowing otherwise general allegations. For example, the Chamber notes that the addition of Pierre Munyandamuta, Vincent Mvuyekure, Jean Bosco Habimana, Patrick Nsengumuremyi, Faustin Sinashebeje, and Nehemi Habirora as the Accused's alleged co-collaborators in the joint criminal enterprise may require additional investigation by the Defence. However, such additions provide a more accurate picture of the case the Prosecution intends to present at trial, and as such, have an ameliorating effect on the clarity and precision of the case to be met.

16. The Chamber finds an exception to this conclusion in the Prosecution's insertion of the phrases "throughout the Rwandan territory" in paragraph 46 and "throughout Rwanda" in paragraph 60 of the proposed Indictment. The addition of these phrases reduces the specificity of the Indictment, substantially increases the vagueness in the allegations and prejudices the Defence by vastly expanding the potential geographic scope of events. These amendments are, accordingly, rejected.

17. Some of the allegations in the Indictment are, in the Chamber's view, irrelevant to the charges against the Accused, or are outside the temporal scope of the Tribunal. The allegation in paragraph 58 of the proposed Indictment that the Accused accepted money is extraneous to the counts in both the current and proposed Indictment. The claim included in the proposed Indictment that the Accused warned Hutu boys not to approach Tutsi girls relates to a 1992 event which falls well outside the dates of jurisdiction of the Tribunal.[31] In the absence of some showing of the relevance of this fact to the charges within the Tribunal's temporal jurisdiction, leave is not granted for this amendment.

18. The Chamber notes that the spelling of the name of the stadium at which an attack is alleged to have occurred is inconsistent as between paragraph 5 ("Karampaka") and paragraph 9 ("Kamarampaka") of the proposed Indictment. The Prosecution is requested to correct the inconsistency.

[27] For example, while the current Indictment refers in paras. 7-8 to the Accused's involvement "during April 1994" in supervising roadblocks, delivering weapons to men there, and ordering the killing of Tutsis at roadblocks, paragraph 24 of the proposed Indictment specifies one such particular incident in Kamembe which occurred "on or about 15 April 1994".

[28] The proposed Indictment provides details on the locations and attacks in which the Accused was allegedly involved that are not included with such specificity in the current Indictment, including: roadblocks at Gatandara and Cyapa (paras. 22, 28); and attacks at Nyakanyinka school (para. 33), Gihundwe Secteur (para. 35); Mibirizi convent (para. 36); and near Cyangugu prison (para. 44). The addition of paragraphs regarding these locations does not constitute the addition of new charges because these allegations clarify incidents taking place in the broader area of Cyangugu préfecture as already alleged in the current Indictment.

[29] The current Indictment mentions names of victims (see paras. 8, 12, 14, 20), but also heavily relies on statements such as that in para. 20 that "Nchamihigo ordered the killing of a number of individuals that were targeted for being Tutsi, or for being accomplices of the Tutsi" to put the Accused on notice of any victims not specifically mentioned. The proposed Indictment adds names and numbers of victims and situates their killing with greater precision: see, inter alia, the name of the accountant Canisius Kayihura (para. 53); a list of influential Tutsi or Tutsi accomplices (para. 43); the mention of thirteen FAR soldiers (para. 69); and the killings of Nsengumuremyi (paras. 24-25), Josephine Mukashema, Marie and Helene (para. 37), Gakwandi (para. 52), and Ndayisaba (paras. 63, 73).

[30] The proposed Indictment mentions names the Accused's alleged collaborators as follows: Christophe Nyandwi, Yusuf Munyakazi, Mubiligi Thompson, Pierre Munyandamutsa, Vincent Mwyekure, Jean Bosco Habimana, Anasthase Bizimungu, Patrick Nsengumuremyi, Faustin Sinashebeje, Nehemi Habirora, Samuel Imanishimwe, Marc Ruberanziza, Vedaste Habimana, and Emmanuel Bagambiki (para. 17). The proposed Indictment also includes the names of Interahamwe who were allegedly ordered or instigated by the Accused to kill, including: Martin Ndorimana (para. 26); Joseph Habineza (paras. 32, 50); and Jean Charles Uwimana (para. 34).

[31] Article 7 of the Statute states that the "temporal jurisdiction of the International Tribunal for Rwanda shall extend to a period beginning on 1 January 1994 and ending on 31 December 1994."

(e) New Material Facts

19. Proposed amendments that add new material facts may be more prejudicial to the Accused and thus require greater scrutiny.[32] The Chamber notes that "[n]othing in Rule 50 prevents the prosecution, as a general matter, from offering amendments that are substantial".[33] However, "[o]nce the indictment is confirmed, the Prosecutor's power to amend a confirmed indictment is not unlimited and must be considered against the overall interests of justice as envisioned by Rule 50 (A)".[34] "There is no prejudice caused to the accused if he is given an opportunity to prepare a defence to the amended case."[35]

20. New charges in the proposed Indictment require a further appearance of the Accused under Rule 50 (B) and raise the possibility of preliminary motions and possible postponement of the trial date under Rule 50 (C). A "new charge" arises not only where there is a new count, but where new allegations could lead to criminal liability on a factual basis that was not previously reflected in the Indictment. The key question is whether the amendment introduces a basis for conviction that is factually or legally distinct from those already alleged in the Indictment.[36]

21. The proposed Indictment alleges in paragraphs 8, 21 (e), 70, and 76 that the Accused himself directly committed killings of Tutsis. These allegations constitute serious new charges, and their nature poses a potentially heavy investigatory burden on the Defence. The allegations, however, lack sufficient detail, such as the date of the alleged killings and the names of the victims, to allow the Defence to focus its investigations of the allegations.[37] As such, these new allegations do not improve the clarity of the case to be met, will not serve to streamline the scope of the trial and will result in prejudice to the Accused and undue delay of the proceedings. The following elements are therefore rejected from the proposed Indictment: "Siméon Nchamihigo himself killed Tutsi as well during the same time period, as described below in the concise statement of the facts relating to the charges" in paragraph 8; "and he himself used two of the weapons, particularly an R4 semi-automatic rifle to kill Tutsi and Hutu political opponents" in paragraph 21 (e); and the allegations in paragraphs 70 and 76.

22. The Accused is also now alleged to have personally led attacks in locations within Cyangugu préfecture[38] whereas the current Indictment alleges only that he ordered, instigated, or facilitated such attacks. Although the Accused's role in the events has changed, the events themselves are the same as are described in the current Indictment. Thus, although the added allegation does trigger the procedures concerning "new charges" prescribed by Rule 50 (B) and (C), the Defence's previous investigations should already have substantially addressed the subject-matter concerned. Any additional investigations as may be needed should not prejudice the Defence or cause undue delay of the case.

23. Paragraphs 39 and 59 of the proposed Indictment newly alleged that "[o]n an unknown date in July 1994, while fleeing to Zaire", the Accused "recognized a Tutsi woman in the pirogue and ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to kill her. The Interahamwe then allegedly "killed the Tutsi woman and threw her body into the lake." Permitting the addition of such a seriously incriminating fact at this stage would prejudice the Accused, particularly in the absence of a convincing explanation for not proposing this new allegation earlier. This allegation is, accordingly, rejected.

[37] Paragraphs 70 and 76 only allege a fairly broad range of dates for the incident, or "[o]n an unknown date in April 1994". Paragraph 21 (e) alleges only that the killings occurred "[b]etween 6 April and 17 July 1994".
[38] See paras. 29, 30, 35, 36, and 47 of the proposed Indictment.

24. With regard to the temporal scope of the proposed Indictment, the Chamber notes that the Prosecution extends the date range with regard to certain allegations in the proposed Indictment, including: the period during which the Accused is alleged to have acted as Substitut du Procureur in paragraph 3, the date range during which the Accused is alleged to have been a member of the Tuvindimwein paragraph 7, and the period during which the Accused is alleged to have been an Interahamwe leader in Cyangugu préfecture in paragraph 8.[39] None of these allegations, however, even with their expanded date ranges, could independently ground a conviction on any of the counts included in the proposed Indictment. They do not constitute new charges and, because these allegations tend to describe the context of the Accused rather than his actions relating to each count, they would not appear to cause prejudice to the Accused nor unduly delay the proceedings.

25. Paragraph 38 of the proposed Indictment extends the geographic scope of the allegations into Kibuye.[40] That expansion is not prejudicial to the Defence insofar as the allegations of ordering and instigating the Interahamwe are otherwise supported by the existing general allegations of paragraphs 5 and 20 in the current Indictment, and the new alleged incident is described with sufficient specificity for the Defence to prepare its case.[41]

26. The other additional facts in the proposed Indictment that do not constitute new charges clearly fall within the scope of the current Indictment and further specify its general allegations in paragraphs 5, 20, and 21.[42]These facts include, inter alia, acting as Deputy Prosecutor on the basis of a forged diploma in paragraph 3 of the proposed Indictment; issuing arrest warrants for Tutsi in paragraphs 4-5; the Accused's positions as "zone supervisor" in paragraphs 10 and 21 (a); and the specific locations of attacks and names of victim, as discussed above.

27. In this regard, the Chamber adopts the reasoning of the Appeals Chamber in Karemera:

> Although amending an indictment frequently causes delay in the short term, the Appeals Chamber takes the view that this procedure can also have the overall effect of simplifying proceedings by narrowing the scope of allegations, by improving the Accused's and the Tribunal's understanding of the Prosecution's case, or by averting possible challenges to the indictment or the evidence presented at trial. The Appeals Chamber finds that a clearer and more specific indictment benefits the accused, not only because a streamlined indictment may result in shorter proceedings, but also because the accused can tailor their preparations to an indictment that more accurately reflects the case they will meet, thus resulting in a more effective defence.[43]

[39] The allegation in paragraph 7 of the proposed Indictment that the Accused was a member of the Tuvindimwe is itself a new allegation, but one that is sufficiently related to existing allegations of the Accused's organization and participation in the "political opposition in Cyangugu préfecture" that its addition should not prejudice the Accused. Current Indictment, para. 6.

[40] In particular, paragraph 38 of the proposed Indictment alleges that the Accused "ordered or instigated the Interahamwe in his area ... to go to Kibuye ... and participate in a number of attacks to kill Tutsi who had sought refuge at Bisesero in Kibuye Prefecture."

[41] Similarly, the mention of Bukavu in paragraph 32 of the proposed Indictment flows from the event in paras. 8 and 20 (c) of the current Indictment; however, as the Accused's driving to Zaire does not constitute a separate basis for criminal liability, this allegation does not constitute a new charge.

[42] Namely, as stated in the current Indictment, that the Accused "organized and participated in the campaign against the Tutsi and the political opposition in Cyangugu préfecture" (para. 5); "ordered the killing of a number of individuals that were targeted for being Tutsi, or for being accomplices of the Tutsi" (para. 20); and "ordered, directed or acted in concert with administrative and military officials ... in the planning, preparation or execution of a common scheme, strategy or plan … leading to the deaths of hundreds of persons" (para. 21).

[43] Karemera et al., Decision on Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal against Trial Chamber III Decision of 8 October 2003 Denying Leave to File an Amended Indictment (AC), 19 December 2003, para. 15.

Diligence of the Prosecution

28. Rule 50 does not require the Prosecution to amend an indictment as soon as it discovers new evidence supporting the amendment; however, it may not delay giving notice of the changes to the Defence to earn strategic advantage.[44] The Chamber recalls the Muhimana Decision on Motion to Amend Indictment:

> The Prosecution argues that these additional details have emerged as a result of ongoing investigations ... The existence of such new evidence, the date of its discovery, and the date of its disclosure to the Defence are important factors in weighing both whether Prosecution has acted diligently, and also whether there is surprise to the Defence that would justify a postponement of the schedule for trial, and which might raise the prospect of undue delay in the trial of the Accused.[45]

29. On 19 May, 2006, a status conference was held, with a view to setting a possible trial date. The conclusion was that the trial would begin sometime between September and November 2006.[46] That the trial date was not indicated when the present motion was brought, does not suffice to explain the Prosecution's timing of its motion to amend the Indictment. Aside from its assertions that the proposed Indictment is the product of ongoing investigations and derived from information "not available at the time the Indictment against the Accused was confirmed",[47] the Prosecution has provided little information regarding its diligence and timeliness in bringing this motion. This lack of information is especially notable, given that the current Indictment was confirmed on 29 June, 2001, more than five years ago. Nearly half of the witness statements submitted by the Prosecution in support of the proposed Indictment are dated June 2001 or earlier.

30. The Prosecution's reference to its efforts to refer the current Indictment to a national jurisdiction as provided in Rule 11 bis[48] has limited weight. The Prosecution should have continued efforts to avoid undue delay and move the case forward, regardless of 11 bis initiatives undertaken. However, this shortcoming in the Prosecution's motion is outweighed by other factors as described above, including the ameliorating effect of the amendments on the clarity and precision of the case to be met, and their tendency to streamline the judicial process, and by the fact that the Accused will have an adequate opportunity to prepare his defence.

Witness Protection

31. The Chamber authorizes the Prosecution to disclose witness statements in support of the proposed Indictment, as required by Rule 66 (A) (i), in redacted form so as to delete information which would reveal the witness's identity. However, should the Prosecution wish to be relieved of any other disclosure obligation, it must make an appropriate motion.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion in part, allowing the Prosecution leave to amend the current Indictment in accordance with its motion, except as to the following phrases in the proposed Indictment: "Siméon Nchamihigo himself killed Tutsi as well during the same time period, as described below in the concise statement of the facts relating to the charges" in paragraph 8; the second sentence of paragraph 11 relating to a 1992 event; "and he himself used two of the weapons, particularly an R4 semi-automatic rifle to kill Tutsi and Hutu political opponents" in paragraph 21 (e); paragraph 58;

Amended Indictment (In conformity with Trial Chamber I Decision dated 14 July 2006) 18 July 2006 (ICTR-2001-63-I)

(Original : not specified)

I. The Charges

1. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, pursuant to the authority stipulated in Article 17 of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda ("the Statute") charges:

Siméon Nchamihigo with the following crimes:

Count 1 : genocide, pursuant to Articles 2 (3) (a) and 6 (1) of the Statute;

Count 2: murder as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Articles 3 (a) and 6 (1) of the Statute;

Count 3: extermination as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Articles 3 (b) and 6 (1) of the Statute and

Count 4: other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Articles 3 (i) and 6 (1) of the Statute.

II. The Accused

2. Siméon Nchamihigo was born on 8 September 1960 in Gatare commune, Cyangugu Préfecture (Rwanda). He was Substitut du Procureur [Assistant Prosecutor] at the Cyangugu Court of First Instance from sometime in 1991 until 17 July 1994.

3. Between 1 January and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo acted in his capacity of Substitut du Procureur in the Office of the Prosecutor of the Republic in Cyangugu on the basis of a forged diploma which he produced sometime in 1991 in support of his application for the post of Substitut du Procureur in Rwanda. He was investigated by the Deputy Prosecutor General Ntakirutimana Charles in connection with the forged diploma, but the investigation was stopped when a pro-MRND Deputy Prosecutor General, Musekura Jean Damascene, was appointed to replace Ntakirutimana Charles.

4. On an unknown date around mid-April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in his capacity of Substitut du Procureur, issued counterfeit warrants of arrest against Tutsi who had sought refuge at the Cyangugu Cathedral or at the Bishopric of Cyangugu, including Gapfumu, to enable and thus aid and abet officers from the office of the Prosecutor of the Republic, soldiers and Interahamwe to remove those refugees and kill them and they did so.

5. Similarly, on an unknown date around mid-April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in his capacity as Substitut du Procureur, issued counterfeit warrants of arrest against Tutsi who had been transferred to Kamarampaka Stadium from various places. On or around the same date, the members of the préfecture security council, including Siméon Nchamihigo, brought outside the stadium those Tutsi. Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to kill those Tutsi, or otherwise aided and abetted the killing of those Tutsi, resulting in the killing of those Tutsi by the Interahamwe.

6. From about 1992 until 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, although he was Substitut du Procureur, was also involved in political activities in Cyangugu Préfecture both for the MRND, President Juvénal Habyarimana's political party and the political party known as La Coalition pour la Défense de la République, or CDR. CDR was a Hutu extremist party and allied to MRND. It opposed parties that were in opposition to the MRND.

7. Between 1 January and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo was also a member of a clandestine group of Hutu civil servants working in Cyangugu, called Tuvindimwe, which was formed in 1991 or thereabouts. This group supported the MRND and CDR. Tuvindimwe recruited its members from the Préfecture, the Appeals Court, the parquet general [Public Prosecutor's office at the Appeal Court], the Court of First Instance and the parquet de la république [Public Prosecutor's office at the Court of First Instance]. Tutsi and moderate Hutu who opposed the MRND were excluded from Tuvindimwe because they were considered accomplices of the Inkotanyi, a term applied to the Tutsi-dominated Rwandan Patriotic Front, or RPF.

8. Between 1 February and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo was an Interahamwe leader in Cyangugu Préfecture. He recruited many young Hutu men as Interahamwe and he instructed Habimana Jean Bosco alias Masudi, a former soldier, in collaboration with Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Christophe Nyandwi and caporal Aimé, to train the Interahamwe in Karambo military camp, to enable them to kill the Tutsi. In addition, Siméon Nchamihigo allowed Interahamwe to stay in his house in Cyangugu and he provided them with food and drink. He ordered or instigated these Interahamwe to kill the Tutsi, or otherwise, aided and abetted the killing of Tutsi, as described below in the concise statement of facts relating to the charges.

9. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo acted as a member of the préfecture security council of Cyangugu and participated in its meetings. The following persons, among others, were members of the préfecture security council: Emmanuel Bagambiki, Préfet of Cyangugu; Samuel Imanishimwe, commander of the Cyangugu military camp; Vincent Munyarugerero, commander of the Cyangugu gendarmerie; Bernadin Bayingana, President of the Cyangugu Court of First Instance; Paul Ndorimana, the Public Prosecutor of Cyangugu, who was often represented by Siméon Nchamihigo, and sous-Préfets Emmanuel Kamonyo, Théodore Munyangabe and François Nzeyimana. The préfecture security council met regularly to discuss matters relating to security in Cyangugu Préfecture. The préfecture security council was particularly active from 6 April 1994, following the death of President Habyarimana, until 17 July 1994. During this time it met more often and made decisions concerning the setting of roadblocks in Cyangugu, the transfer of refugees to Kamarampaka Stadium from locations where they had sought to escape the violence, the drawing of lists of Tutsi and moderate Hutu and the selection of individual refugees for removal from the Kamarampaka Stadium, as described below in the concise statements of the facts relating to the charges.

10. On or about 11 April 1994, a meeting was called by the préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki in the préfecture office which was attended by the sous-Préfets, bourgmestres, religious authorities, prominent businessmen who financed the MRND political party, the Interahamwe leaders and political authorities of the MRND, CDR, MDR-power and PL-power parties. Civil servants, including Siméon Nchamihigo, were also present at the meeting. During this meeting, Siméon Nchamihigo and Callixte Nsabimana, manager of Shangasha Tea Factory, were appointed supervisors for the security of Gisuma and Gafunzo zones. At the end of the meeting, all zone supervisors, including Siméon Nchamihigo, went to Karambo military camp to receive weapons from Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe. Shortly thereafter, the zone supervisors, including Siméon Nchamihigo, distributed these weapons to the Interahamwe posted in their respective zones and ordered them to kill the Tutsi with those weapons.

III. General Allegations

11. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, and during all the periods referred to in this indictment, Rwandan citizens were identified according to the following ethnic or racial classifications: Tutsi, Hutu and Twa.

12. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, soldiers, Interahamwe and armed civilians attacked, killed or caused bodily or mental harm to members of the Tutsi ethnic group in Cyangugu Préfecture and throughout Rwandan, with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi ethnic group as such.

13. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, in Cyangugu Préfecture and throughout Rwandan, Interahamwe, soldiers and armed civilians murdered individually identified or targeted people or committed widespread killings, as part of widespread or systematic attacks against Tutsi civilians and/or Hutu opponents. As result of these attacks, Interahamwe, soldiers and armed civilians killed hundreds of thousands of Tutsi civilians and Hutu political opponents in Cyangugu Préfecture and throughout Rwanda.

IV Individual Criminal Responsibility

14, Pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, Siméon Nchamihigo is criminally responsible for the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, for planning, instigating, ordering, committing, or otherwise aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity. Siméon Nchamihigo ordered people over whom he had authority by virtue of his position described in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of this indictment, to commit the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, and instigated or otherwise aided and abetted those who were not under his authority to commit the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity.

15. In addition to his responsibility under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for having planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, Siméon Nchamihigo knowingly and willfully participated in a joint criminal enterprise, in his role as set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10 and 15 of this indictment. The purpose of the joint criminal enterprise was the destruction of the Tutsi racial or ethnic group in Cyangugu Préfecture through the commission of the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity. This joint criminal enterprise came into existence on or about 6 April 1994 and continued until 17 July 1994.

16. Siméon Nchamihigo and the other members of the joint criminal enterprise shared the same intent to effect the common purpose. To fulfill the common purpose, Siméon Nchamihigo acted in concert with Interahamwe Christophe Nyandwi, Yusuf Munyakazi, Mubiligi Thompson, Pierre

Munyandamutsa, alias Pressé, Mvuyekure Vincent, known as Tourné, Habimana Jean Bosco, alias Masudi, Bizimungu Anasthase, Nsengumuremyi Patrick, Sinashebeje Faustin, and Habirora Nehemi, among others, as well as other participants who were not Interahamwe, including Samuel Imanishimwe, commander of the Cyangugu military camp, Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Habimana Vedaste, and Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, among others.

17. In addition to his participation in a joint criminal enterprise as set out in paragraphs 15 and 16 above, Siméon Nchamihigo is responsible for the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity on the basis that these crimes were the natural and foreseeable consequences of the execution of the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise. Siméon Nchamihigo intended to further the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise. In addition, it was foreseeable that the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, might be perpetrated by one or other members of the group and Siméon Nchamihigo willingly took that risk.

18. The particulars that give rise to Siméon Nchamihigo's individual responsibility for the crimes charged are set out in this indictment as follows:
- For the crime of genocide in paragraphs 19 through 43;
- For the crime of murder as a crime against humanity in paragraphs 44 through 55;
- For the crime of extermination as a crime against humanity in paragraphs 56 through 69 and
- For the crime of other inhuman acts as a crime against humanity in paragraphs 67 through 70.

V Crimes charged and Concise Statement of Facts

Count 1: Genocide

19. The Prosecutor of the international Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo with genocide, a crime provided for in Article 2 (3) (a) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17 July 1994, in Cyangugu Préfecture (Rwanda), he was responsible for killing or causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the Tutsi population, with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, an ethnic or racial group as such, as described in the facts contained in paragraphs 20 through 43 of this indictment.

Concise Statement of the Facts Relating to Count 1

20. Following the death of the President of Rwanda, Juvenal Habyarimana, on 6 April 1994, the interim government formed on 8 April 1994 launched a national campaign aimed at mobilizing the government armed forces, civilian militia, Interahamwe, the local public administration and ordinary citizens to fight the Rwandan Patriotic Front, or RPF, a politico-military opposition group comprising mainly Tutsi. The Rwandan government armed forces and Interahamwe militia specifically targeted the Tutsi civilian population of Rwanda as domestic accomplices of an invading army, ibyitso, or categorically as a domestic enemy. Under the pretext of ensuring national defence, ordinary citizens of Rwanda, mainly Hutu, mobilized into action by the authorities, killed Tutsi and political opponents and looted their property. Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994 hundreds of thousands of Tutsi and moderate Hutu were killed as a result of this campaign. Siméon Nchamihigo participated in the organization and the implementation of this campaign as follows:

(a) On or about 14 April 1994, during a meeting called by the Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki in the MRND office in Cyangugu, all zone supervisors, including Siméon Nchamihigo, were requested to report on the ongoing massacres in their zones. During the meeting, Siméon Nchamihigo reported that he was facing difficulties in attacking the Shangi parish as so many Tutsi had sought refuge there and that, according to him, it was not possible to kill all of them with traditional weapons. He claimed that he needed fire arms, such as rifles and grenades. These were later given to him by Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe in Karampo military camp Siméon Nchamihigo distributed the weapons to the Interahamwe and ordered or instigated them to attack the Shangi parish and to kill the Tutsi and they did so.

(b) In late April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo participated in a meeting at Gihundwe secteur office the purpose of which was to put in place security measures. Acting bourgmestre, Manase Buvugamenshi, presided over the meeting, which was attended by Védaste Habimana, Siméon Nchamihigo and Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe in Cyangugu préfecture, among others. During the meeting, Siméon Nchamihigo enquired about the security situation in the secteur and whether there were more Tutsi in hiding to be killed. Védaste Habimana replied that three days would suffice to "mop up" the secteur. In the context of the meeting, "to mop up" was understood to mean "to finish killing all the Tutsi." The "mopping up" of the secteur did in fact continue. By his enquiries regarding the remaining Tutsi to be killed, Siméon Nchamihigo instigated and aided and abetted the killing of these Tutsi.

(c) Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe at the préfecture level, Habimana Jean Bosco, alias Masudi, a former soldier and caporal Aimé, among others, organized and supervised military training for Interahamwe in Cyangugu préfecture to enable and thus to aid and abet them to kill the Tutsi.

(d) Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo was involved with Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, and others, in the drawing up of lists of influential Tutsi and Hutu political opponents, on the basis of which the préfecture security council, including Siméon Nchamihigo, identified persons to be killed. As a result, Siméon Nchamihigo planned, ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the Interahamwe and other Hutu civilians in killing many Tutsi and Hutu political opponents, as described further below in paragraphs 20 (e), 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 40, 41, 42 and 43 of this indictment.

(e) Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo kept a stockpile of weapons in his residence in Cyangugu. He distributed weapons to the Interahamwe and ordered or instigated them to go and kill specifically named people, Tutsi and Hutu political opponents, or launch large-scale attacks against Tutsi, who were sometimes assembled in specific places, such as parishes and schools as described in paragraphs 28, 32, 33, 34, 35 and 37 of this indictment.

21. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to erect several roadblocks in Cyangugu town and supervised the effective manning of these roadblocks. Such roadblocks included the Kadashya roadblock, manned by an Interahamwe leader, Pierre Munyandamutsa alias Pressé, an associate of Siméon Nchamihigo, the Cyapa roadblock manned by Mvuyekure Vincent, alias Tourné, and the Gatandara roadblock, manned by an Interahamwe, Habimana Jean Bosco. The aim of the roadblocks was to stop the Tutsi and Hutu opponents from fleeing to safer areas and to kill them. Siméon Nchamihigo controlled and supervised the roadblocks by inspecting them several times a day, and he ordered or instigated the Interahamwe who manned the roadblocks to kill the Tutsi attempting to pass through. Siméon Nchamihigo's Interahamwe killed many Tutsi at the roadblocks, sometimes in the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo. The Préfet of Cyangugu, Emmanuel Bagambiki appointed people like Ndagijimana Shabani to remove dead bodies at the roadblocks and throughout the Cyangugu city in this period. At the Gatandara roadblock, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to kill many Tutsi who had been selected in the Karampaka Stadium. The Cyapa roadblock was erected just next to Siméon Nchamihigo's residence. Siméon Nchamihigo ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of Tutsi at that roadblock, including the catholic priest, Father Boneza Joseph.

22. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo arrived at a road block manned by a group of young Hutuin Kamembe and ordered or instigated them to look for all the Tutsi and RPF accomplices and hand them over to the Interahamwe and to set ablaze all the places where the opposition was well-established. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's orders or instigation, the Interahamwe tracked down and killed many people, mostly Tutsi men, women and children, on or about 7 April 1994 and in the months that followed.

23. On or about 15 April 1994, in Kamembe, Siméon Nchamihigo arrived at a road block manned by about 20 people, comprised of Interahamwe and young armed Hutu alike. He read out to these people names of Tutsi who were reportedly hiding in Kamembe town, and ordered or instigated that they be hunted down. The names read out from the list by Siméon Nchamihigo included Gasali Aloys, Emilien Nsengumuremyi, Isidore Kagenza and Judge Jean-Marie Vianney Tabaro. After reading out the names and before leaving the roadblock, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to look for Tutsi and to kill them and aided and abetted by providing them with two grenades. These Interahamwe then hunted down and killed the Tutsi.

24. On an unknown date in May 1994, in execution of Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation issued at a road block in Kamembe on or about 15 April 1994, the Interahamwe found Emilien Nsengumuremyi and killed him. They continued to look for the other Tutsi whose names had been read out by Siméon Nchamihigo, in order to kill them.

25. On or about 28 or 30 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to a roadblock manned by the Interahamwe, including Ndorimana Martin, and ordered or instigated them to kill the accountant of Cyangugu*Préfecture*, Kayihura Canisus, a Tutsi, who had supposedly managed to obtain an identity card indicating that he belonged to the Hutu ethnic group.

26. On an unknown date in May 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to a roadblock in Kamembe and ordered or instigated the Interahamwe manning the roadblock to kill a Tutsi priest of the Mibirizi Catholic parish, whose name he did not reveal but who, according to him, was expected to pass by the roadblock in a vehicle. Siméon Nchamihigo had issued similar instructions at all the roadblocks that he supervised and he had threatened to kill the Interahamwe if they let the Tutsi priest through. In the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo, the Interahamwe killed the priest later that day at the roadblock erected at the entrance to Kamembe next to the residence of the accused and manned by the Interahamwe Habirora Nehemi and Patrick Nsengumuremyi.

27. On an unknown date in May 1994, at the Cyapa roadblock manned by the Interahamwe and the gendarmes, Siméon Nchamihigo took into the car he was driving two young Tutsi students, Uzier and Innocent, who were seeking a lift to go back home. Siméon Nchamihigo handed the two students over to the Interahamwe and ordered or instigated them to kill the Tutsi students, and they did so.

28. After President Juvénal Habyarimana's death on 6 April 1994, a large number of Tutsi and Hutu political opponents fleeing acts of violence and massacres, sought refuge in places considered safe in Cyangugu such as the main cathedral, Mibirizi parish, Hanika parish, Nkanka parish, Shangi parish, Nyamasheke parish, the Mibirizi hospital, the Gihundwe school and the Nyakanyinya school, among others. Other Tutsi and Hutu political opponents remained in their homes. Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza alias Bikomago, Sous-Préfet Theodore Muyengabe and Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe at the préfecture level, ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to launch attacks against Tutsi and Hutu political opponents who had sought refuge in safe places and also on individuals in their homes. Siméon Nchamihigo personally led all these attacks, except the attack at Nkanka parish. During these attacks, Siméon Nchamihigo and the Interahamwe killed many people, as described in paragraphs 29 through 37 of this indictment.

29. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe in an attack on the residence of Doctor Nagafizi, a Tutsi regional chief medical officer of Cyangugu and member of the Parti Libéral, allegedly with RPF leanings, and an attack on the residence of a businessman called Kongo, a Hutu and member of the PSD political party. During the attacks, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, killed Doctor Nagazafi and Kongo.

30. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RPF. During the attack, the Interahamwe killed the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba and looted their house. The Interahamwe killed Trojena Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

31. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, including Habineza Joseph, alias Sekuse, to kill Theoneste Karangwa, an influential Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. Siméon Nchamihigo said that the Interahamwe should not to kill Karangwa's wife because she was not Tutsi. The Interahamwe then attacked and killed Theoneste Karangwa and his driver Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo seized Karangwa's vehicle and later took it to Bukavu in neighboring Zaire.

32 On or about 12 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, including Bizimungu Anasthase, and communal police, gendarmes and military reservists to attack the Nyakanyinka school and kill the Tutsi who sought refuge there. The attackers received from Siméon Nchamihigo grenades and rifles which were used during the attack and were thus aided and abetted by him in the attack. As a result, the Interahamwe and other attackers killed about 600 Tutsi.

33. On or about 12 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Samuel Imanishimwe, commander of Cyangugu military camp, and the Sous-Préfet Kamonyo, ordered or instigated the Interahamwe including Uwimana Jean Charles, alias Karoli, and a group of Hutu civilians, to attack the Hanika parish and kill all the refugees who were supposed to be Tutsi. As a result of Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the attackers killed about 1,500 people, including children and the aged.

34. On a day sometime between 14 and 15 April 1994, at about 8 o'clock in the morning, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi (the militiamen of the CDR political party), in an attack against Tutsi of the Gihundwe Secteur, particularly targeting Tutsi of Kabugi, Ruganda, Murindi and Murangi Cellules. During the attack, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, killed a large number of Tutsi and destroyed their houses.

35. On or about 18 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Sergeant Major Marc Rubenziza, alias Bikomago and Sous-Préfet Theodore Muyengabe, led a group of Interahamwe that attacked Mibirizi convent and Mibirizi hospital, where many Tutsi had sought refuge. During the attacks, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, massacred the Tutsi refugees and looted their property. After the attacks, Siméon Nchamihigo rewarded the killers with beer.

36. In late April or early May 1994, three young Tutsi girls, Mukashema Josephine, Marie and Helene, sought refuge in the residence of a certain Hutu named Jonas. Siméon Nchamihigo accused Jonas and his brother Niyikiza Jonathan of hiding Inyenzi. Siméon Nchamihigo, assisted by one of his Interahamwe, removed the three Tutsi girls from Jonas's house and took them away to an unknown place. On the same day, Siméon Nchamihigo told Niyikiza Jonathan that the Inyenzi had been killed and threatened Niyikiza Jonathan to kill him if he continued to hide Tutsi. By his actions, Siméon Nchamihigo committed, ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of these Tutsi girls.

37. Between 20 and 25 June 1994 or thereabouts, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe in his area, including Jean-Paul, Mvuyekure Vincent, alias Tourné, Nzeyimana, among others, to go to Kibuye together with Yusufu Munyakazi and his Interahamwe, and participate in a number of attacks to kill Tutsi who had sought refuge at Bisesero in Kibuye Préfecture. The Interahamwe travelled in an Onatracom bus to Bisesero and assisted the Kibuye Interahamwe in killing the Tutsi. Together, they killed many Tutsi. On the return of the Interahamwe from Kibuye after one or two days, Siméon Nchamihigo rewarded them with drinks and food at the Gihundwe school.

38. After President Juvénal Habyarimana's death on 6 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council, including Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki and Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, the Cyangugu military camp commander, decided to move refugees from their places of refuge and assembled them at Kamarampaka Stadium in Cyangugu, ostensibly with the purpose of providing the refugees with better security but with the aim of eliminating those who were suspected of being accomplices of the Inkotanyi.

39. On or about 14 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and other members of the préfecture security council moved the refugees from the Gihundwe school to Kamarampaka stadium.

40. On or about 15 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and other members of the préfecture security council moved the refugees from Cyangugu Cathedral and took them to Kamarampaka Stadium. The refugees transferred to the stadium that day included Baziruwiha Marianne, Nkusi Georges, Albert Twagiramungu, Jean Fidèle Murekezi, his wife Kanyamibwa Christine and their children, among others.

41. On or about 16 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council, including Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and Christophe Nyandwi, President of the Interahamwe at the Préfecture level, went to Kamarampaka Stadium. The commander of the gendarmerie camp, using a megaphone, called out names of civilians who were alleged to be Inkotanyi accomplices from a list that had been prepared by the préfecture security council, including Siméon Nchamihigo. The list included: Benoît Sibomana, Jean-Fidèle Murekezi, Apiane Ndorimana, Albert Mugabo, Albert Twagiramungu, Ibambasi, Bernard Nkara, Trojean Nzisabira, Rémy Mihigo, Dominique Gapeli, Albert Mugabo and Marianne Baziruwiha. All of the individuals named on the list were Tutsi, except for Marianne Baziruwiha who was a Hutu and an influential member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. The individuals were asked to come out, and were escorted out of the Stadium by Siméon Nchamihigo and the préfecture delegation. Outside the stadium, about four people of Tutsi origin, including Vital Nibagwire, Ananie Gatake, Jean-Marie Vianney Habimana alias Gapfumu, whom Siméon Nchamihigo and the other members of the préfecture delegation had brought from the cathedral, were waiting in vehicles. Siméon Nchamihigo and the préfecture delegation instructed soldiers to take the selected 16 people to the gendarmerie camp purportedly for questioning.

42. When, on or about 16 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council took the 16 selected persons to the gendarmerie camp, they removed Marianne Baziruwiha from the group and instructed the drivers to proceed with the remaining 15, all Tutsi, to a place near Cyangugu prison. Siméon Nchamihigo then ordered or instigated the Interahamwe whom he had brought along with him from Mutongo Centre earlier the same day, including Bizimungu Anasthase, to kill the 15 remaining Tutsi. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the Interahamwe killed the 15 Tutsi near Cyangugu prison and threw their dead bodies into a latrine in Gapfumu's compound

43. On or about 18 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went back to Kamarampaka Stadium in a delegation of the préfecture security council, comprising Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, Samuel Imanishimwe, and Sous-Préfet Emmanuel Kamonyo, among others. Bagambiki, using a megaphone, called out about 20 names from a list which the préfecture security council had drawn up. They took the listed people out of the stadium. Some people of Tutsi origin, such as Antoine Nsengumuremyi and Felicien, whose names had not been called out, were nevertheless taken out of Kamarampaka

Stadium that day, together with the others. These people were subsequently killed and their bodies thrown into the Gataranga River or into mass graves. Siméon Nchamihigo and the préfecture delegation aided and abetted the killing of all those who had been taken out of the stadium.

Count 2 : Crime against humanity : Murder

44. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo with murder, as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Article 3 (a) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17 July 1994 he was responsible for the murder of a number of Tutsi and of people considered as Tutsis, as well as Hutu opponents, particularly in Cyangugu Préfecture, as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on ethnic, racial or political grounds, as set out in paragraphs 45 through 55 of this indictment.

Concise statement of the facts relating to Count 2

45. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe in an attack on the residence of Doctor Nagafizi, a Tutsi regional chief medical officer of Cyangugu and member of the Parti Liberal, with RPF leanings, and an attack on the residence of a businessman called Kongo, a Hutu and member of the PSD political party. During the attacks, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo and ordered, instigated or aided or abetted by him, killed Doctor Nagafazi and Kongo.

46. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba, a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RPF. During the attack, the Interahamwe killed the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba and looted their house. The Interahamwe killed Trojean Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

47. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo in collaboration with Nyandwi Christophe, an Interahamwe leader at the préfecture level, ordered or instigated Interahamwe to kill Zacharie Serubyogo, a Hutu trader and MDR political party member of Parliament, together with other people. The Interahamwe then killed Zacharie Serubyogo and many unknown people near Lake Kivu in the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo. After the killing of Zacharie Serubyogo, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered his Interahamwe to look for a Tutsi by the name of Theoneste Karangwa and kill him.

48. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated Interahamwe, including Habineza Joseph, alias Sekuse, to kill Théoneste Karangwa, an influential Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. Siméon Nchamihigo said that the Interahamwe should not to kill Karangwa's wife because she was not Tutsi. The Interahamwe then attacked and killed Théoneste Karangwa and his driver Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo seized Karangwa's vehicle and later took it to Bukavu in neighboring Zaire.

49. On or about 15 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo planned to kill Marianne Baziruwiha and looked for her that day because he considered her as an accomplice of the Inkotanyi. Marianne Baziruwiha was a Hutu, regional director of Agriculture in Cyangugu and an influential member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu.

50. Between 15 and 17 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated a group of Interahamwe to kill a young Hutu student called Jean de Dieu Gakwandi, whom he had described as a traitor and an accomplice of the Tutsi. To this end, Siméon Nchamihigo gave a grenade to someone called David Habanakwabo, alias Vicky, and ordered him to join other Interahamwe in order to kill Jean de Dieu Gakwandi. The assailants hit Jean de Dieu Gakwandi with a club on the head. Jean de Dieu Gakwandi sustained serious injuries. The assailants left him there, unconscious, thinking he was dead.

51. On or about 28 or 30 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to a roadblock manned by Interahamwe, including Ndorimana Martin, and ordered or instigated them to kill the accountant of Cyangugu Préfecture, Canisius Kayihura, a Tutsi civilian, who had managed to obtain an identity card indicating that he belonged to the Hutu ethnic group.

52. In late April or early May 1994, three young Tutsi girls, Mukashema Josephine, Marie and Helene, sought refuge in the residence of a certain Hutu named Jonas. Siméon Nchamihigo accused Jonas and his brother Niyikiza Jonathan of hiding Inyenzi. Siméon Nchamihigo assisted by one of his Interahamwe, removed the three Tutsi girls from Jonas's house, took them away to an unknown place. On his return the same day, Siméon Nchamihigo told Niyikiza Jonathan that the Inyenzi had been killed and he threatened Niyikiza Jonathan to kill him if he continued to hide Tutsi. By his actions, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of these Tutsi girls.

53. On an unknown date in May 1994, in execution of Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation issued at a road block in Kamembe on or about 15 April 1994, the Interahamwe found Emilien Nsengumuremyi and killed him. They continued to look for the other Tutsi whose names had been read out by Siméon Nchamihigo, in order to kill them because of their Tutsi origin.

54. On an unknown date in May 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to a roadblock in Kamembe and ordered or instigated the Interahamwe manning the roadblock to kill a Tutsi priest of the Mibirizi Catholic parish, Father Joseph Boneza, who was expected to pass by the roadblock in a vehicle. Siméon Nchamihigo had issued similar instructions at all the roadblocks that he supervised and he had threatened to kill the Interahamwe if they let the Tutsi priest through. Later that day and in the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo, the Interahamwe killed Father Joseph Boneza at the roadblock erected at the entrance to Kamembe next to the residence of the accused and manned by the Interahamwe Habirora Nehemi and Patrick Nsengumuremyi.

55. On an unknown date in May 1994, at the Cyapa roadblock manned by the Interahamwe and the gendarmes, Siméon Nchamihigo took into the car he was driving, two young Tutsi students, Uzier and Innocent, who were seeking a lift to go back home. Siméon Nchamihigo handed the two boys over to the Interahamwe and ordered or instigated them to kill the Tutsi students and they did so.

Count 3 : Crime against humanity : Extermination

56. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo with extermination as a crime against humanity, a crime stipulated in Article 3 (b) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17 July 1994, particularly in Cyangugu préfecture, Siméon Nchamihigo was responsible for the large scale killing of Tutsi or of people considered as Tutsi and of Hutu opponents, as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds, as described below in the concise statement of facts relating to the charges in paragraphs 57 through 65 of this indictment.

Concise statement of the facts relating to Count 3

57. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, and Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe at the préfecture level, ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to launch attacks against Tutsi civilians and Hutu opponents refugees in Hanika parish, Mibirizi parish, Mibirizi hospital, Nkanka parish, Shangi parish and Nyamasheke parish among other places where those people had sought refuge including their homes. Siméon Nchamihigo personally led all of these attacks, except the attack at Nkanka parish. During the attacks, the Interahamwe and other Hutu civilians led by Siméon Nchamihigo killed many civilians who thus were targeted as described in paragraphs 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64 and 65 of this indictment.

58. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo arrived at a road block manned by a group of young Hutu in Kamembe and ordered or instigated them to look for all the Tutsi and RPF accomplices and hand them over to the Interahamwe and to set ablaze all the places where the opposition was well-established. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's orders or instigation, the Interahamwe tracked down and killed many civilians, mostly Tutsi men, women and children, after or around 7 April 1994.

59. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RFP. During the attack, the Interahamwe killed the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba and looted their house. The Interahamwe killed Trojean Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

60. On or about 12 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated Interahamwe, including Bizimungu Anasthase, and communal police, gendarmes and military reservists to attack the Nyakanyinka school and kill the Tutsi civilians who sought refuge there. The attackers received from Siméon Nchamihigo grenades and rifles which were used during the attack, and were thus aided and abetted by him in the attack. As a result, the Interahamwe and other attackers killed about 600 Tutsi civilians.

61. On a day sometime between 14 and 15 April 1994, at about 8 o'clock in the morning, Siméon Nchamihigo, leading a group of Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi (the militiamen of the CDR political party), launched an attack against Tutsi of the Gihundwe Secteur, particularly targeting Tutsi of Kabugi, Ruganda, Murindi and Murangi Cellules. During the attack, the Interahamwe led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, killed a large number of Tutsi and destroyed their houses.

62. On or about 15 April 1994 in Kamembe, Siméon Nchamihigo arrived at a road block manned by about 20 people comprised of Interahamwe and young armed Hutu alike. He read out to these people names of Tutsi who were reportedly hiding in Kamembe town, and ordered or instigated that they be hunted down. The names read out from the list by Siméon Nchamihigo included Gasali Aloys, Emilien Nsengumuremyi, Isidore Kagenza and Judge Jean-Marie Vianney Tabaro. After reading out the names and before leaving the road block, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to look for Tutsi and to kill them and aided and abetted by providing them with two grenades. These Interahamwe then hunted down and killed the Tutsi.

63. On an unknown date in April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe in an attack on Mibirizi convent, where many Tutsi civilians had sought refuge. During the attack, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, massacred the Tutsi refugees and looted their property.

64. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo in collaboration with Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Yusuf Munyakazi and soldiers from the Rwandan armed forces, or FAR, targeted military detainees and civilians whom he accused of being accomplices of RPF and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of those military detainees as described in paragraph 65 of this indictment.

65. Thus, on or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo in collaboration with lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and Yusuf Munyakazi, went to Cyangugu prison and ordered the director of the prison to remove about 13 FAR soldiers who had been sent to jail for their alleged complicity with RPF. The detainees were taken to the Préfecture office. Siméon Nchamihigo then ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of the 13 FAR soldiers. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order, instigation or aiding and abetting, the 13 FAR soldiers who were no longer combatants, were killed and their dead bodies thrown into a garden of the Préfecture near the lake. Later on the same day,

Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated other prisoners, including Ndamira Damien, to remove the dead bodies of the 13 FAR soldiers from the garden and bury them along with the dead bodies of 8 unknown persons found at the same place.

Count 4 : Crime against humanity : other inhumane acts

66. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo of other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, a crime stipulated in Article 3 (i) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17 July 1994, throughout Rwanda, particularly in Cyangugu Préfecture, Siméon Nchamihigo was responsible for committing inhumane acts against Tutsi civilians or of people considered as Tutsi, and of Hutu opponents, as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds, as outlined in paragraphs 67 through 70 of this indictment.

Concise statement of the facts relating to Count 4

67. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated Interahamwe, including Habineza Joseph, alias Sekuse, to kill Theoneste Karangwa, an influential Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. Siméon Nchamihigo said that the Interahamwe should not to kill Theoneste Karangwa's wife because she was not Tutsi. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the Interahamwe attacked and caught Theoneste Karangwa in his house. The Interahamwe then covered Theoneste Karangwa with his own mattress, poured fuel into the mattress and burnt Theoneste Karangwa, causing him great pain and suffering before his death. The Interahamwe also killed Theoneste Karangwa's driver by the name of Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo then seized Theoneste Karangwa's vehicle and later took it with him to Bukavu in neighboring Zaire, together with other vehicles and various items looted during the attacks.

68. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba, a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RFP. During the attack, the Interahamwe burnt the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba inside their vehicle causing them great pain and suffering before their deaths. The Interahamwe killed Trojean Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

69. Between 15 and 17 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated a group of Interahamwe to kill a young Hutu student called Jean de Dieu Gakwandi, whom he had described as a traitor and an accomplice of the Tutsi. To this end, Siméon Nchamihigo gave a grenade to someone called David Habanakwabo, alias Vicky, and ordered him to join other Interahamwe in order to kill Jean de Dieu Gakwandi. The assailants hit Jean de Dieu Gakwandi with a club on the head causing him pain and suffering. Jean de Dieu Gakwandi sustained serious injuries. The assailants left him there, unconscious, thinking he was dead.

70. On 16 April 1994 or thereabouts, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council, including Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and Christophe Nyandwi, removed from Karampaka Stadium about 15 Tutsi and 1 Hutu woman by the name of Marianne Baziruwiha, and took them to a place near the prison after dropping off Marianne Baziruwiha at the gendarmerie camp. Among the 15 Tutsi who were removed from the stadium by Siméon Nchamihigo and others, were Jean-Fidele Murekezi, Albert Twagiramumgu and Gapfumu. Siméon Nchamihigo then ordered or instigated the Interahamwe whom he had brought along with him from Mutongo Centre earlier the same day, including Bizimungu Anasthase, to kill the 15 Tutsi. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the Interahamwe killed the 15 Tutsi near Cyangugu prison and threw their dead bodies into a latrine in Gapfumu's compound; before doing so the interahamwe removed the genitals of Jean-Fidele Murekezi and Albert Twagiramungu and the heart of Gapfumu.

The acts and omissions of Siméon Nchamihigo set out herein are punishable pursuant to Articles 22 and 23 of the Statute.

Aloys Simba, Decision on Defence Request for Protection of Witnesses, 25 August 2004 (ICTR-2001-76)

Introduction

1. The trial in the instant case is scheduled to begin on 25 September 2006. On 5 May 2006, the Prosecution requested the Chamber to grant leave to amend the Indictment against Simeon Nchamihigo, which had been filed on 29 June 2001. In its 14 July 2006 Decision on Request for Leave to Amend the Indictment, Trial Chamber I granted the Prosecution's request for witness protection measures as to Witnesses BRG, BRD, BRE, BNB, BRF, BRK, BRH, BRR, BRQ, BRN, BRO, BPA, BRX, BOV, BPX, BRY, BRZ, BOU, and API by authorizing the Prosecution to file any witness statements in support of the Amended Indictment pursuant to Rule 66 (A) (i) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence in redacted form to conceal the identities of the makers thereof. The Chamber noted that the Prosecution would need to file an additional motion if it wished to be relieved of any further disclosure obligation.[1]

2. The Prosecution now moves the Chamber to order protective measures, described in paragraphs 33, 47 and 50 of a Motion filed on 24 July 2006, for the following 18 additional witnesses: Witnesses LDD, LM, BRP, LDC, LAG/BRL, BRI, BRJ, LDB, LAA, LBB/BNO, LCR, LDA, NM, LCJ/BRM, LF, NI, NL and LY.[2] It claims that there is a real fear for the safety of victims and potential witnesses based on an objective assessment of the security situation confronting such persons in and outside Rwanda, whether in Africa or elsewhere in the world, and has attached nineteen annexes to support its application. In a second Motion filed on the same day, the Prosecution urgently requests that the Chamber allow it to disclose, in redacted form, the statements of the above-listed additional 18 witnesses that it intends to call to testify at trial so that the Prosecution can comply with its disclosure obligations within the time limits set out by Rule 66 (A) (ii), namely sixty days before the trial start date, pending the outcome of the Chamber's Decision on the Prosecution's application for protective measure.[3]

3. The statutory time limit for the Defence to reply under Rule 73 (E) of the Rules has not yet expired, and the Defence has not yet submitted responses to these motions. Given, however, that the deadline for disclosure of the statements of all witnesses whom the Prosecution intends to call to testify at trial is sixty days before the trial start date and will therefore expire on 27 July 2006, and that the Defence may not be able to respond before that deadline expires, the Chamber considers it a measure necessary under Rule 54 for the conduct of the trial and in the interests of justice to provide a provisional decision based on the Prosecution submissions only. If necessary, the Chamber may render a subsequent decision based on any additional submissions from the parties.

Discussion

4. In accordance with Article 21 of the Statute and Rules 69 and 75, the Chamber will consider protective measures for witnesses that are appropriate to the safeguard the privacy and security of the victims and witnesses, without overriding the rights of the Accused. Measures for the protection of witnesses are granted on a case-by-case basis.

5. The jurisprudence of this Tribunal requires that the Prosecution demonstrate that the witnesses for whom protective measures are sought have a real fear for their safety or that of their family, and that an objective justification exists for this fear.[4] Such fears may be expressed by persons other than the witnesses themselves.

6. After reviewing the information provided by the Prosecution, and taking into account the fairness of the trial and the rights of the Accused, the Chamber finds that there is subjective and objective fear on the part of the Prosecution witnesses such that witnesses, wherever they may reside, do justifiably fear that disclosure of their participation in the proceedings of this Tribunal would threaten their safety and security.[5]

7. The measures requested by the Prosecution are well-established and uncontroversial, with two exceptions. The measure proposed in sub-paragraph 47 (xi) of its Motion for protective measures would prohibit > the Accused both individually or through any person working for the Defence, from personally possessing any material that contains any Identifying Information, including but not limited to, any copy of a witness statement even if the statement is in redacted form, unless the Accused is, at the time in possession, in the presence of Counsel; also instructing the United Nations Detention Centre authorities to ensure compliance with the prohibition set out in this paragraph.

The aim of this prohibition is said to be to ensure that protected information is not improperly shared between accused persons at the United Nations Detention Facility or otherwise.[6] While the Chamber is concerned by the example cited in the motion, it is not persuaded that the measure would achieve the desired objective. A more effective remedy is the diligence of Defence Counsel in notifying and reminding the Accused that witness identities may not be shared with other accused persons, and that any violation of this requirement is a serious matter. Furthermore, depriving the Accused of the statements of Prosecution witnesses could interfere with the preparation of the defence. Previous decisions have rejected this measure in the absence of a specific showing of misconduct by the Accused.[7]

8. The proposed measure in paragraph 33 of the Motion for protective measures is that the witness's identity be disclosed to the Defence twenty-one days before the date that the witness is expected to testify. The Prosecution asserts that this "rolling disclosure" has crystallised as the ordinary practice of the Tribunal.[8] The Chamber disagrees. Numerous decisions have required that the identity of all witnesses disclosed before the start of trial, particularly in the trials of a single Accused, where there is little likelihood of a long delay between disclosure of the witness's identity and their testimony.[9] According to Rule 69 (C) of the Rules, in order to allow adequate time for the preparation of both parties, the Chamber considers, in light of that an appropriate deadline is that witness identities, and unredacted witness statements, be disclosed to the Defence thirty days before the start of trial.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

Seromba,* Case N°ICTR-2000-66-I, Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Protective Measures for Victims and Witnesses (TC), 30 June 2003, para. 7. Similarly, disclosure of the identity of all Defence witnesses is frequently required before the start of the Defence case. See, e.g, Bagosora et al., Decision on Kabiligi Motion for Protection of Witnesses (TC), 1 September 2003, para. 10. Several such decisions were rendered after 6 July 2002 when Rule 69 (C), which had formerly required disclosure before trial, was amended to permit rolling disclosure at the Chamber's discretion. The numerous decisions prior to that date requiring disclosure before trial are omitted.

GRANTS in part the Motion, and

I. ORDERS the following protective measures for all Prosecution witnesses or potential Prosecution witnesses wherever they reside and who have not affirmatively waived their right to protective measures ("Protected Witness"):

1. The Prosecution is required to designate a pseudonym for each of the Protected Witnesses; the pseudonym shall be used whenever referring to such Protected Witness in Tribunal proceedings, communications, and discussions, both between the Parties and with the public. The use of such pseudonyms shall last until such time as the Trial Chamber orders otherwise.

2. The names, addresses, whereabouts, and other information that might identify or assist in identifying any Protected Witness ("Identifying Information") must be sealed by the Registry and not included in public or non-confidential Tribunal records.

3. To the extent that any names, addresses, relations, whereabouts or other Identifying Information is contained in existing records of the Tribunal, such Identifying Information must be expunged from the public record of the Tribunal and placed under seal.

4. Any Identifying Information concerning Protected Witness shall not be disclosed to the public or the media; this order shall remain in effect after the termination of the trial.

5. The Accused or any member of the Defence team shall not attempt to make any independent determination of the identity of any Protected Witness or encouraging or otherwise aiding any person to attempt to identify any such Protected Witness.

6. The names and identities of the Protected Witnesses shall be forwarded from the Prosecution to the Registry in confidence, and shall not be disclosed to the Defence unless otherwise ordered.

7. Nowhere and at no time shall the public or the media make audio or video recordings or broadcasts, or take photographs or make sketches of any Protected Witness, in relation to their testimony, without leave of the Trial Chamber.

8. The Defence and any representative acting on its behalf and/or the Accused shall provide reasonable notice to the Prosecution, prior to contacting any Protected Witness. Should the witness or potential witness concerned agree to the interview, or the parents or guardian of that person, if that person is under the age of 18, the Prosecution shall immediately undertake all necessary arrangements to facilitate the interview. The Witnesses and Victims Support Section of the Tribunal may facilitate the interview.

9. The Defence and/or the Accused shall keep confidential to itself any Identifying Information, and shall not expose, share, discuss or reveal, directly or indirectly, any Identifying Information to any person or entity other than the Accused, assigned Defence Counsel, or other persons the Registry designates as working on the Defence team.

10. The Defence and/or the Accused are required to provide the Witnesses and Victims Support Section a designation of all persons working on the immediate Defence team who will have access to any Identifying Information; the Defence are also required to notify WVSS in writing of any person leaving the Defence team and to confirm in writing to the WVSS that such person has remitted all material containing Identifying Information.

11. The Prosecution may withhold disclosure to the Defence of the identity of the Protected Witnesses and temporarily redact their Identifying Information from material disclosed to the Defence. The Identifying Information shall be disclosed by the Prosecution to the Defence thirty days prior to commencement the Prosecution case.

II. DENIES the remainder of the Motion.

1. The trial in this case is scheduled to begin on 25 September 2006. On 24 July 2006 the Prosecutor submitted an Ex Parte Motion for an Order for the Temporary Transfer of Witnesses Pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. For the Chamber to grant such an Order, it must be satisfied according to Rule 90 bis (B) that:

> (i) The presence of the detained witness is not required for any criminal proceedings in the territory of the requested State during the period the witness is required by the Tribunal; and
> (ii) Transfer of the witness does not extend the period of his detention as foreseen by the requested State.

2. The Prosecutor contends that the requirements set out by Rule 90 bis of the Rules for the said transfer are met. In support of his Motion, the Prosecutor provided a copy of the letter to the relevant authorities requesting this confirmation. The Prosecutor further states that he expects the authorities to make the confirmation but no such evidence has yet been presented to the Chamber. To address that Motion, the Chamber is of the view that additional information is necessary.

3. The Prosecutor's ground for filing the Motion ex parte is to protect the identity of the witnesses. As a general rule, Motions must be filed inter partes.[1] The Chamber notes that the only identifying information in the Motion is in the Annexes, and finds that there is no danger of revealing any witness' identity if the substantive portion of the Motion is disclosed to the Defence.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. ORDERS the Prosecutor to provide any document that would support his Motion for temporary transfer of detained witnesses;

II. REQUESTS the Registrar to reclassify pages 1-3 of the Motion as public, while maintaining the ex parte nature of Annexes A, B and C.

Siméon Nchamihigo – Scheduling order – Obligations for the Prosecutor

The trial in this case is scheduled to begin on 25 September 2006. On 7 August 2006, a Status Conference was held with the parties in preparation for trial. After discussions with the parties, and considering the rights of the accused to adequately prepare its Defence, the Chamber:

I. NOTES that the Prosecutor undertook to disclose the Rwandan judicial records of his detained witnesses as soon as possible;

II. ORDERS the Prosecutor to submit its pre-trial brief, list of exhibits, final list of witnesses, and the order of the witnesses to be called in the first trial session, by 25 August 2006;

III. ORDERS the Prosecutor to submit the admissions by the parties and a statement of other matters not in dispute, and a statement of contested matters of fact and law also by 25 August 2006.

Siméon Nchamihigo – Transfer of detained witnesses – Rwanda – Conditions satisfied – Motion granted

Rules of Procedure and Evidence, Rule 90 bis

1. The trial in this case is scheduled to begin on 25 September 2006. On 24 July 2006 the Prosecutor submitted an Ex Parte Motion for an Order for the Temporary Transfer of Witnesses Pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. He asked that ten witnesses, who are currently detained and awaiting trial in Rwanda, be transferred to the United Nations Detention Facilities in Arusha so that they can testify as Prosecution witnesses in the present case. On 9 August 2006, the Chamber made an Order for Filing for the Prosecutor to provide additional evidence to support his Motion.

2. Rule 90 bis gives the Chamber power to make an order to transfer a detained person to the Detention Unit of the Tribunal if his or her presence has been requested. Before such an order can be made the applicant must show that:

(i) The presence of the detained witness is not required for any criminal proceedings in progress in the territory of the requested State during the period the witness is required by the Tribunal;

(ii) Transfer of the witness does not extend the period of his detention as foreseen by the requested State;

3. On 7 September 2006, the Prosecution filed a letter from the Rwandan Minister of Justice confirming that the ten requested witnesses who are detained in Rwanda will be available for the relevant time period to testify in this case. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that these witnesses are not required for criminal proceedings in Rwanda during that time and that the witnesses' presence at the Tribunal does not extend the period of their detention in Rwanda.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS the Prosecution Motion;

II. REQUESTS the Registar, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules, to temporarily transfer the detained witnesses indicated in the letter from the Rwandan Minister of Justice dated 5 September 2006 to the United Nations Detention Facilities (UNDF) in Arusha, at an appropriate time prior to their scheduled dates to testify. Their return travel to Rwanda should be facilitated as soon as practically possible for each witness after the individual's testimony has ended.

II. REQUESTS the Governments of Rwanda and Tanzania to cooperate with the Registrar in the implementation of this Order.

III. REQUESTS the Registrar to cooperate with the authorities of the Governments Rwanda and Tanzania; Ensure proper conduct during transfer and during detention of the witness at the UNDF; Inform the Chamber of any changes in the conditions of detention determined by the Rwandan authorities and which may affect the length of stay in Arusha.

Édouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera, Decision on Defence Motions for Certification to Appeal Decision Granting Special Protective Measures for Witness ADE, 7 June 2006 (ICTR-98-44)

Introduction

1. The trial in the instant case is scheduled to begin on 25 September 2006. On 17 July 2006, Trial Chamber I granted in part the Prosecution request for leave to amend the Indictment ("Impugned Decision"). The Amended Indictment was filed by the Prosecution on 18 July 2006[1] and a further appearance for the Accused, along with a Status Conference, took place on 7 August 2006. The Defence has now applied for certification to appeal the Impugned Decision.[2]

Discussion

2. Rule 73 (B) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence provides that a Trial Chamber may grant certification to appeal when (i) there is an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and (ii) that an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings. These two conditions are cumulative and are not determined on the merits of the appeal against the impugned Decision.[3]

[1] The Prosecution filed a Corrigendum to the 18 July 2006 Indictment on 25 July 2006 containing only technical changes to the Indictment.
[2] Filed on 20 July 2006; response filed 31 July 2006.
[3] Prosecutor v. Édouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera, Case N°ICTR-98-44-T, Decision on Defence Motions for Certification to Appeal Decision Granting Special Protective Measures for Witness ADE (TC), 7 June 2006, para. 5.

3. The two main errors alleged by the Defence are (1) that the Trial Chamber allowed some of the Prosecution's amendments because they were mischaracterized as clarifications and specifications instead of new charges and as such, erred when it concluded that the Accused will have adequate time to prepare his Defence, and (2) that the Trial Chamber erred when it concluded that the tardiness of the Prosecution's Motion under the circumstances did not cause any prejudice to the Accused. The Defence believes that because the Impugned Decision has violated the right of the Accused to be tried without undue delay and his right to adequately prepare his defence as guaranteed by Article 20 (4) of the Statute, it constitutes an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial.

4. The Defence asserts that an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber will materially advance the proceedings because the Accused will then know what the exact charges are against him before the start of trial. It relies on the Trial Chamber's decision in Muvunyi of 16 March 2005 which granted certification to appeal in a similar situation.[4]

5. The Prosecution opposes the Motion and states that the Defence has not made any arguments that touch upon an issue which might affect the fair and expeditions conduct of the proceedings.

6. Certification to appeal a Trial Chamber's decision is only granted in exceptional circumstances.[5] According to the Appeals Chamber in Muvunyi, a Trial Chamber's decision on a Motion to Amend the Indictment is an exercise of judicial discretion which, when done at a late stage of the trial process, must be considered in the context of potential prejudice to the accused.[6] The resulting decision can only be interfered with if the moving party proves a discernable error on the part of the Trial Chamber.[7]

7. Although an issue with the Indictment could be considered to significantly affect the fair conduct of the proceedings, the Chamber finds that the solutions to the errors alleged by the Defence will not expedite the conduct of the proceedings, nor will an immediate resolution be likely to materially advance the proceedings. In the Muvunyi case, even when the Appeals Chamber determined that the Trial Chamber mischaracterized amendments or potential amendments to the Indictment, as alleged here, those mischaracterizations did not affect the overall outcome of the impugned decision.[8] Similarly, in this case, there is no real challenge to the amendments, which are the basis of the decision, but that the result of adding those additions cause prejudice to the Accused because they were not done in a timely manner and he will not have sufficient time to prepare his defence. When a specific scenario arises, the Defence can move the Chamber for additional time to prepare its case in order to preserve the rights of the Accused to a fair trial. Consequently, the Chamber finds that Defence has not satisfied the standard for certification to appeal the Impugned decision.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Motion.

Introduction

1. The trial in the instant case commenced on 25 September 2006 with the Prosecution's Opening Statement. On 17 July 2006, Trial Chamber I granted the Prosecution leave to amend, in part, the Indictment of 29 June 2001.[1] In conformity with this Decision, the Prosecution filed an Amended Indictment on 18 July 2006. On 25 July 2006, the Prosecution filed a Corrigendum to the Indictment, which only changed certain incorrect paragraph numbers, and the French translation to the Indictment. The Amended Indictment charges the Accused with four counts: genocide, and murder, extermination and other inhumane acts as crimes against humanity. On 29 August 2006, the Defence submitted the present motion raising objections on defects in the form of the Amended Indictment under Rule 50 (C) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.

Discussion

I. Preliminary Matter

2. This motion was filed after the end of the 30-day period following the filing of the Amended Indictment during which the Defence may submit preliminary motions according to Rule 50 (C) of the Rules. Although the Defence has not offered any explanation for its delay in submitting the Motion, the Chamber notes that pursuant to Rule 72 (G), it has discretion to consider late-filed preliminary motions on defects in the form of an indictment upon showing good cause.[2] In the Chamber's view, the same principle can apply when a submission is made under Rule 50 (C) of the Rules since it also concerns the defects in the form of new charges as a result of the amendment of an Indictment. Due to the fact that it is still early in the trial process, the Chamber finds it necessary in the interests of justice and the rights of the Accused to a fair trial, to use its discretion and entertain the Defence submission.

II. Allegations of Defects in the Form of the Indictment

3. Article 17 (4) of the Tribunal's Statute and Rule 47 (C) of the Rules require the Prosecution to set forth in the Indictment a concise statement of the facts of the case and of the crime(s) with which the suspect is charged. According to the jurisprudence of the International Criminal Tribunal for Former Yugoslavia and of this Tribunal, this obligation must be interpreted in light of the rights of the accused[3] and obliges the Prosecutor to inform an accused of the charges against him in a prompt and detailed manner.[4] The key issue is whether the material facts are pleaded in an indictment with enough specificity so that an accused can adequately prepare his defence.[5] In assessing an indictment, each paragraph should not be read in isolation but rather should be considered in the context of the other paragraphs in the indictment.[6] It is possible that an indictment may not plead the material facts with the requisite degree of specificity because the necessary information is not in the Prosecution's possession. But the Prosecution is expected to know its case before it goes to trial. It is not acceptable for the Prosecution to omit material aspects of its main allegations in the indictment with the aim of moulding the case against this accused in the course of the trial depending on how evidence unfolds. An indictment, which does not set out the material facts with enough detail in this respect, is defective.

4. In its motion of 29 August 2006, the Defence submits that the form of the Amended Indictment against Siméon Nchamihigo is defective to the extent that it does not properly plead (i) the form of criminal responsibility under Article 6 (1) of the Statute, (ii) the category of joint criminal enterprise,[7] and (iii) fails to specify details relating to certain dates, places and persons. It claims that these defects affect his right to adequately prepare his defence and his right to a fair trial. The Prosecution opposes the Motion and claims that the Indictment conforms to the requirements set out by the jurisprudence and, in any event, much of the information that is requested in the Motion is detailed in material found in the disclosure of documents, witness statements and other pre-trial material.[8]

5. The Chamber accepts that according to the established jurisprudence, a defect in an indictment may be cured where the accused has received timely, clear, and consistent information from the Prosecution which resolves the ambiguity or clears up the vagueness.[9] However, in the instance case, since this case is at the outset of the trial, it is more appropriate that any more specific information on the allegations, which is currently in the Prosecution's possession, be included in the Indictment from now to ensure that any ambiguity concerning the charges against the Accused is removed. This would give effect to the right of the Accused to understand the charges against him and prepare adequately his defence. For these reasons, the Chamber will address the three categories of defects alleged in the Defence Motion.

(i) Defects Related to the Form of Individual Criminal Responsibility

6. According to the established jurisprudence, the mode and extent of an accused's participation in an alleged crime are always material facts that must be clearly set out in the indictment. The Prosecution must specify the form of criminal responsibility charged against an accused.[10] When the Prosecution alleges more than one form of participation for each crime, it has the obligation to specify the alleged acts of an accused giving rise to each form of participation charged.[11] Each count in the indictment must identify the precise legal qualification of the crime charged based on the material facts alleged in the indictment as well as the mode of the accused's alleged participation in the crime.[12] The count must also specify which paragraphs of the concise statement of the facts of the crime support the charge.[13]

7. The Defence submits that the Prosecution failed to specify which form of criminal liability is being invoked against the Accused in relation to each charge. It claims that paragraph 14 of the Indictment lacks specificity and raises ambiguity as to the modes of liability since all the forms under Article 6 (1) are pleaded. The Defence also argues that a number of paragraphs in the Amended Indictment fail to particularise the way in which the Accused participated in the crimes alleged, most notably in the context of the allegations of instigating and aiding and abetting.

8. In the Chamber's view, paragraph 14 of the Amended Indictment is a general paragraph introducing all the forms of liability which are then alleged throughout the Indictment. The Chamber notes that the forms of liability on which the Prosecution intends to rely under Article 6 (1) of the Statute are specified in relation to each factual allegation. This view is confirmed by the Prosecution's submission in its reply to the Defence motion. The Chamber is satisfied that the forms of liability concerning the alleged crimes committed by the Accused are sufficiently pleaded in relation to each fact.

9. The Defence submits that the allegations in paragraphs 28 and 36, which refer to the Accused's direct participation in the crimes alleged, must be struck from the Amended Indictment because they do not coherently allege the forms of criminal liability consistently with the second sentence of paragraph 14. They must also be struck because they are inconsistent with Decision of Trial Chamber I granting leave to amend the Indictment except when it is alleged that the Accused personally committed the murders.[14]

10. Paragraphs 28 and 36 must be read in the context of paragraphs 28 through 37 of the Indictment. These paragraphs contain specific factual allegations including modes of liability for each of these factual allegations. Similarly paragraph 14 as a whole contains all the modes of liability referred to in paragraphs 28 through 37. The allegations specify a reasonable range of dates, a precise location and the exact names of the victims involved. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that paragraphs 28 and 36 are set out with enough detail and clarity to allow the Accused to understand the charges against him and prepare his defence. The Chamber is not convinced that a reference to the commission of killing by the Accused at paragraph 36 will require more investigation than for the allegation that he ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of some Tutsi girls as stated in the paragraph, and can see no inconsistency with the Decision of Trial Chamber I.

11. The Defence argues that paragraphs 5, 34, 35, 43, 64 and 65 fail to explain the way in which the Accused instigated or aided and abetted the crimes alleged, in particular it does not understand how both forms of liability could be pleaded on the same facts. It requests that the Prosecution indicate the alleged acts of the Accused that give rise to each form of participation charged, because otherwise it appears that the Prosecution does not know what theory it intends to prove on these allegations.

12. In the Chamber's view, paragraphs 5, 34, 35, 43, 64 and 65 provide sufficient detail concerning the acts by which the Accused allegedly participated in the commission of the crimes to allow the Accused to understand the charges against him. The words "ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the crime" are the legal terms which may be applied to the Accused's participation as described under these paragraphs.

13. The Defence also complains that paragraphs 27, 29, 41, and 49 do not specifically state the means by which the Accused participated in the criminal facts alleged. These paragraphs allege certain actions taken by the Accused, and all include specific forms of liability pursuant to Article 6 (1). Whether the alleged action by the Accused amounts to the criminal responsibility pleaded is a matter to be decided at a later stage in the trial. For the purposes of this Motion, the Chamber finds no defects in this regard.

(ii) Defects Related to the Category of Joint Criminal Enterprise

14. Joint criminal enterprise is considered as a form of participation in the crime coming from the word "committing" contained in Article 6 (1) of the Statute. The jurisprudence established the existence of three forms of joint criminal enterprise: basic, systemic and extended. According to the jurisprudence, when pleading responsibility as a participant in a joint criminal enterprise, it is preferable that the Indictment refers to the particular form of joint criminal enterprise envisaged. However, more than one form of joint criminal enterprise can be pleaded for the same facts, similarly to other forms of individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1).[15] The indictment must also set out the purpose of the enterprise, the identity of the co-participants, and the nature of the accused's participation in the enterprise.[16]

[14] The Defence relies upon para. 21 of the Decision filed on 17 July 2006.

15. The Defence argues that the Amended Indictment does not specify which category of joint criminal enterprise is alleged against the Accused, but instead includes both the basic and extended categories and that a criminal act cannot fall within both forms of joint criminal enterprise at the same time. It further submits that the Amended Indictment fails to particularise which specific criminal activities refer to which category of joint criminal enterprise both within paragraphs 15, 16 and 17, and within the concise statement of facts relating to each count of the Amended Indictment.

16. As Trial Chamber I pointed out in its Decision of 14 July 2006, the Amended Indictment makes clear to the Accused that he is charged with both the basic and extended forms of joint criminal enterprise.[17] Here, the Indictment must be read as a whole: paragraphs 15 to 17 of the Indictment plead without ambiguity the basic and extended forms of joint criminal enterprise. Paragraph 17 provides the names of the members of the joint criminal enterprise, and as paragraph 14 of the Indictment, these paragraphs introduce the factual allegations pleaded in the subsequent paragraphs where, in each instance, the mode of liability is specified. As a result, the Accused is sufficiently aware of the material facts, which make up the Prosecution's theory of joint criminal enterprise and can, on this basis, adequately prepare his defence.

(iii) Defects Related to the Failure to Specify Precise Dates, Locations, the Identity of Victims and Co-Perpetrators, Vagueness, and Relevance to the Charges in the Indictment

17. The specificity with which material facts must be pleaded depends on the form of participation charged against an accused.[18] With respect to allegations of direct commission of criminal acts, an indictment must specify the identity of the victims, the time and place of the events, and the means by which the acts were committed.[19] In light of the nature or scale of the crimes, the fallibility of witnesses' recollections and considerations tied to witness protection, the Prosecution is not expected to plead these material facts with absolute precision.[20] If a precise date cannot be specified, a reasonable range of dates can be provided;[21] and if victims cannot be individually identified, then the Prosecution should refer to their category or position as a group.[22] Where the Prosecution cannot provide greater detail, then the indictment must clearly indicate that it provides the best information available.[23]

18. The Defence submits that the concise statement of the facts included in the Amended Indictment is defective to the extent that some allegations are not relevant to the charges against the Accused or that the Indictment lacks details relating to certain dates, places and persons and therefore results in grave prejudice to the Accused.

19. The Defence first claims these defects with respect to paragraphs 3, 6 and 7 of the Indictment. The Chamber notes that these paragraphs provide context and background concerning the Accused, indicated by the heading of the section and the content of the paragraphs themselves. As Trial Chamber I stated in its Decision of 14 July 2006, none of these allegations could independently ground a conviction on any of the counts included in the Indictment.[24] The Defence's contention on this issue is therefore rejected.

20. The Defence argues that paragraphs 4, 5, 8 to 10 of the Indictment also lack details. These paragraphs are however introducing the allegations against the Accused as fully described in the concise statement of the facts related to the charges.[25] Read as a whole along with the other allegations in the Indictment, paragraphs 4, 5, and 8 are not defective. Paragraph 10, however, mentions a meeting held on or about 11 April 1994, which allegedly lead to the distribution of weapons. Nowhere else in the Indictment is a meeting alleged to be held on that day, although there are similarities in paragraph 10 with paragraph 20 (a), where the meeting is alleged to be held on or about 14 April 1994. Due to this confusion, the Chamber finds that the dates of the meetings and distribution of weapons should be specified in paragraphs 10 and 20 (a), and that clarification should be made if paragraph 20 (a) is meant to elaborate on the meeting introduced in paragraph 10. If these two paragraphs are not referring to the same meeting, then more details should be given in paragraph 10 as to when the weapons were distributed and orders were given to kill the Tutsi with those weapons.

21. The Defence also argues that references to the Interahamwe in the Amended Indictment are imprecise in that the Prosecution does not define the nature of the Interahamwe and does not specifically identify its members. The Defence reasons that this information is all the more necessary as the Amended Indictment alleges that the Interahamwe executed a number of the crimes charged where responsibility has been attributed to the Accused. The Chamber notes that in some instances, the identities of the alleged perpetrators of the crimes, including Interahamwe are specified in the Indictment. There are other instances where the use of the term Interahamwe does not refer to an individual's name in particular. Where the Prosecution knows the names of the Interahamwe who committed the particular acts, they should be provided. If it is impossible to provide more specific information due to the large number of Interahamwe involved or other reason, this should be clearly indicated in the Indictment. The definition or meaning of "Interahamwe", however, is not a matter that needs to be specified in the Indictment.

22. In addition, the Defence identifies a number of paragraphs in the Amended Indictment which suffer from a lack of detail and clarity in the following ways:

(a) Time-frame

23. The Defence claims that paragraphs 20 (a), (c), (d), 26, 27, 31, 41, and 43 do not specify with enough detail the date, time or length of time in which the criminal allegations took place. The Chamber notes that the time-frame of the Accused receiving and later distributing weapons for an attack on the Shangi parish as alleged in paragraph 20 (a) is not clear. Although a range of dates is given for the military training alleged in paragraph 20 (c), and the drawing of lists in 20 (d) this range is rather large, and if possible, should be better specified. The language in paragraphs 26 and 27 indicates that the dates in question are unknown and in Paragraph 31 that the most specific date is given for the allegations in those paragraphs. Reading the Indictment as a while, the Chamber can infer that the lists referred to in paragraphs 41 and 43 were made during the large time-frame specified in paragraph 20 (d), but that if a more precise time-frame is known, it should be clarified.

(b) Location

[24] Para. 24.
[25] See in particular last sentence of Paragraph 9 of the Indictment: "as described below in the concise statements of the facts relating to the charges".

24. The Defence asserts that paragraphs 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 are not clear on where the facts involved occurred. Paragraphs 21, 22, 23, 24 and 25 all mention roadblocks in Cyangugu town. Each of these paragraphs gives a satisfactory detailed factual account of alleged criminal events, without always specifying the exact roadblock. If the name of the actual roadblock is known, the Chamber finds that it should be specified.

(c) Individual Identification - Victims, Organizers and Perpetrators

25. It is contended by the Defence that paragraphs 26, 27, 30, 32, 38, 39, 40, 41, 43, 47, 64, and 65 do not sufficiently name the individual victims, organizers or perpetrators of the crimes in question. Pursuant to the jurisprudence, if individuals cannot be specified, than sufficient detail can be given on the group or the individuals. This information, however, must be according to what the Prosecution actually has in its possession. The Prosecution's response, as stated above, is that the details requested here are not required by the Indictment but regardless, have already been provided to the Defence through other informal means such as disclosure.

26. As already stated, amending the Indictment at this stage of the proceedings is the most appropriate way to ensure that the Accused understands the charges against him. It is only when the information is unavailable, or the scale too large should individuals be referred to within groups or positions. If the information is presently available, as inferred by the Prosecution's response, then it should be specified in the Indictment.

(d) Vagueness

27. The Defence claims that the Amended Indictment contains a number of vague and imprecise expressions such as "among others" (at paragraphs 16, 20 (c), 37 and 43), "other" or "other members" (at paragraphs 38 to 42, 60 and 70) or "members of security council" (at paragraph 5). Paragraph 16 indicates the members of the joint criminal enterprise. The Prosecution should state all known members, but if it is unable to do so, it should be mentioned. Paragraph 20 (c), 37 and 43 make specific allegations against individuals. All known identities for these individuals should be provided, or stated that it is unable to do so. Paragraphs 5, 38 to 42, and 70 refer to members of the préfecture security council, who have been defined in paragraph 9. In paragraph 60, which alleges that the Interahamwe and other attackers killed about 600 civilians, the Prosecution should clarify the identities of these attackers to the extent possible.

(e) Relevance

28. The reference in paragraph 31 to the theft of the vehicle by the Accused and the planning to kill Marianne Baziruwiha in paragraph 49 are alleged to be irrelevant to the actual charges in the Indictment and should be struck.

29. In relation to the allegation of vehicle theft the argument of irrelevance is refuted by Rule 88 (B) of the Rules which provides that if the Trial Chamber finds the accused guilty of a crime and concludes from the evidence that unlawful taking of property by the accused was associated with it, it shall make a specific finding to that effect in its judgement. With regard to paragraph 49 the facts relating to the Marianne Baziruwiha as set out in that paragraph and in paragraphs 42 and 43 of the Indictment do not make any reference to her having been killed. Repetition of the incident in paragraph 49 as murder as a crime against humanity is incongruous if there is no allegation that she was killed. The Prosecution should either amend the paragraph to indicate that Marianne Baziruwiha was killed or strike out the paragraph.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS the Motion in part, and

II. ORDERS

1. The Prosecution to clarify the dates of the meetings, reception and distribution of weapons and the orders to kill the Tutsi mentioned in paragraphs 10 and 20 (a)

2. The Prosecution to provide further details to the extent available on the names and identities of the Interahamwe in paragraphs 8, 10, 13, 20, 20 (a), 20 (e), 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 34, 35, 36, 37, 45, 47, 50, 52, 53, 54, 55, 57, 61, 63, and 69;

3. The Prosecution to provide more specific time-frames to the extent possible in paragraphs 20 (a), 20 (c), 20 (d), 41 and 43;

4. The Prosecution to provide the name of the exact roadblock, or the best detail available concerning the roadblocks mentioned in paragraphs 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25;

5. The Prosecution to provide to the extent possible the identities of persons mentioned in paragraphs 26, 27, 30, 32, 38, 39, 40, 41, 43, 47, 64, and 65;

6. The Prosecution to specify to the extent possible the identities of the members of the joint criminal enterprise in paragraph 16, and the individuals involved in the factual allegations in paragraphs 20 (c), 37, 43 and 60;

7. The Prosecution to amend paragraph 49 to indicate that Marianne Baziruwiha was murdered or strike out the paragraph altogether;

8. The Amended Indictment in conformity with this decision shall be filed by 29 September 2006.

III. DENIES the remainder of the Motion.

Revised Amended Indictment (In conformity with Trial Chamber III Decision dated 27 September 2006) 29 September 2006 (ICTR-2001-63-I)

(Original : not specified)

I. The Charges

1. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, pursuant to the authority stipulated in Article 17 of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda ("the Statute") charges:

Siméon Nchamihigo with the following crimes:

Count 1: genocide, pursuant to Articles 2 (3) (a) and 6 (1) of the Statute;

Count 2: murder as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Articles 3 (a) and 6 (1) of the Statute;

Count 3: extermination as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Articles 3 (b) and 6 (1) of the Statute and

Count 4: other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Articles 3 (i) and 6 (1) of the Statute.

II. The Accused:

2. Siméon Nchamihigo was born on 8 September 1960 in Gatare commune, Cyangugu Préfecture (Rwanda). He was Substitut du Procureur [Assistant Prosecutor] at the Cyangugu Court of First Instance from sometime in 1991 until 17 July 1994.

3. Between 1 January and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo acted in his capacity of Substitut du Procureur in the Office of the Prosecutor of the Republic in Cyangugu on the basis of a forged diploma which he produced sometime in 1991 in support of his application for the post of Substitut du Procureur in Rwanda. He was investigated by the Deputy Prosecutor General Ntakirutimana Charles in connection with the forged diploma, but the investigation was stopped when a pro-MRND Deputy Prosecutor General, Musekura Jean Damascene, was appointed to replace Ntakirutimana Charles.

4. On an unknown date around mid-April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in his capacity of Substitut du Procureur, issued counterfeit warrants of arrest against Tutsi who had sought refuge at the Cyangugu Cathedral or at the Bishopric of Cyangugu, including Gapfumu, to enable and thus aid and abet officers from the office of the Prosecutor of the Republic, soldiers and Interahamwe to remove those refugees and kill them and they did so.

5. Similarly, on an unknown date around mid-April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in his capacity as Substitut du Procureur, issued counterfeit warrants of arrest against Tutsi who had been transferred to Kamarampaka Stadium from various places. On or around the same date, the members of the préfecture security council, including Siméon Nchamihigo, brought outside the stadium those Tutsi. Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to kill those Tutsi, or otherwise aided and abetted the killing of those Tutsi, resulting in the killing of those Tutsi by the Interahamwe.

6. From about 1992 until 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, although he was Substitut du Procureur, was also involved in political activities in Cyangugu Préfecture both for the MRND, President Juvénal Habyarimana's political party and the political party known as La Coalition pour la Défense de la République, or CDR. CDR was a Hutu extremist party and allied to MRND. It opposed parties that were in opposition to the MRND.

7. Between 1 January and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo was also a member of a clandestine group of Hutu civil servants working in Cyangugu, called Tuvindimwe, which was formed in 1991 or thereabouts. This group supported the MRND and CDR. Tuvindimwe recruited its members from the Préfecture, the Appeals Court, the parquet general [Public Prosecutor's office at the Appeal Court], the Court of First Instance and the parquet de la république [Public Prosecutor's office at the Court of First Instance]. Tutsi and moderate Hutu who opposed the MRND were excluded from Tuvindimwe because they were considered accomplices of the Inkotanyi, a term applied to the Tutsi-dominated Rwandan Patriotic Front, or RPF.

8. Between 1 February and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo was an Interahamwe leader in Cyangugu Préfecture. He recruited many young Hutu men as Interahamwe, including Jean de Dieu Utabazi, Janvier Borauzima, Faustin Sinashebeje and Joseph Habineza and he instructed Habimana

Jean Bosco alias Masudi, a former soldier, in collaboration with Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Christophe Nyandwi and caporal Aimé, to train these, among other Interahamwe in Karambo military camp, to enable them to kill the Tutsi. In addition, Siméon Nchamihigo allowed Interahamwe to stay in his house in Cyangugu and he provided them with food and drink. He ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to kill the Tutsi, or otherwise, aided and abetted the killing of Tutsi, as described below in the concise statement of facts relating to the charges.

9. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo acted as a member of the préfecture security council of Cyangugu and participated in its meetings. The following persons, among others, were members of the préfecture security council: Emmanuel Bagambiki, Préfet of Cyangugu; Samuel Imanishimwe, commander of the Cyangugu military camp; Vincent Munyarugerero, commander of the Cyangugu gendarmerie; Bernadin Bayingana, President of the Cyangugu Court of First Instance; Paul Ndorimana, the Public Prosecutor of Cyangugu, who was often represented by Siméon Nchamihigo, and sous-Préfets Emmanuel Kamonyo, Théodore Munyangabe and François Nzeyimana. The préfecture security council met regularly to discuss matters relating to security in Cyangugu Préfecture. The préfecture security council was particularly active from 6 April 1994, following the death of President Habyarimana, until 17 July 1994. During this time it met more often and made decisions concerning the setting of roadblocks in Cyangugu, the transfer of refugees to Kamarampaka Stadium from locations where they had sought to escape the violence, the drawing of lists of Tutsi and moderate Hutu and the selection of individual refugees for removal from the Kamarampaka Stadium, as described below in the concise statements of the facts relating to the charges.

10. On or about 11 April 1994, a meeting was called by the préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki in the préfecture office which was attended by the Sous-Préfets, bourgmestres, religious authorities, prominent businessmen who financed the MRND political party, the Interahamwe leaders and political authorities of the MRND, CDR, MDR-power and PL-power parties. Civil servants, including Siméon Nchamihigo, were also present at the meeting. During this meeting, Siméon Nchamihigo and Callixte Nsabimana, manager of Shangasha Tea Factory, were appointed supervisors for the security of Gisuma and Gafunzo zones. At the end of the meeting, all zone supervisors, including Siméon Nchamihigo, went to Karambo military camp to receive weapons from Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe. Shortly thereafter, the zone supervisors, including Siméon Nchamihigo, distributed these weapons to Anasthase Bizimungu and other Interahamwe posted in their respective zones and ordered them to kill the Tutsi with those weapons.

III. General Allegations

11. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, and during all the periods referred to in this indictment, Rwandan citizens were identified according to the following ethnic or racial classifications: Tutsi, Hutu and Twa.

12. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, soldiers, Interahamwe and armed civilians attacked, killed or caused bodily or mental harm to members of the Tutsi ethnic group in Cyangugu Préfecture and throughout Rwandan, with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi ethnic group as such.

13. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, in Cyangugu Préfecture and throughout Rwandan, Interahamwe, soldiers and armed civilians murdered individually identified or targeted people or committed widespread killings, as part of widespread or systematic attacks against Tutsi civilians and/or Hutu opponents. As result of these attacks, Interahamwe, soldiers and armed civilians killed hundreds of thousands of Tutsi civilians and Hutu political opponents in Cyangugu Préfecture and throughout Rwanda.

IV Individual Criminal Responsibility

14, Pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, Siméon Nchamihigo is criminally responsible for the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, for planning, instigating, ordering, committing, or otherwise aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity. Siméon Nchamihigo ordered people over whom he had authority by virtue of his position described in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of this indictment, to commit the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, and instigated or otherwise aided and abetted those who were not under his authority to commit the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity.

15. In addition to his responsibility under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for having planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, Siméon Nchamihigo knowingly and willfully participated in a joint criminal enterprise, in his role as set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10 and 15 of this indictment. The purpose of the joint criminal enterprise was the destruction of the Tutsi racial or ethnic group in Cyangugu préfecture through the commission of the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity. This joint criminal enterprise came into existence on or about 6 April 1994 and continued until 17 July 1994.

16. Siméon Nchamihigo and the other members of the joint criminal enterprise shared the same intent to effect the common purpose. To fulfill the common purpose, Siméon Nchamihigo acted in concert with Interahamwe Christophe Nyandwi, Yusuf Munyakazi, Mubiligi Thompson, Pierre Munyandamutsa, alias Pressé, Mvuyekure Vincent, known as Tourné, Habimana Jean Bosco, alias Masudi, Bizimungu Anasthase, Nsengumuremyi Patrick, Sinashebeje Faustin, and Habirora Nehemi, among others, as well as other participants who were not Interahamwe, including Samuel Imanishimwe, commander of the Cyangugu military camp, Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Habimana Vedaste, and Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, among others.

17. In addition to his participation in a joint criminal enterprise as set out in paragraphs 15 and 16 above, Siméon Nchamihigo is responsible for the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity on the basis that these crimes were the natural and foreseeable consequences of the execution of the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise. Siméon Nchamihigo intended to further the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise. In addition, it was foreseeable that the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, might be perpetrated by one or other members of the group and Siméon Nchamihigo willingly took that risk.

18. The particulars that give rise to Siméon Nchamihigo's individual responsibility for the crimes charged are set out in this indictment as follows:

-For the crime of genocide in paragraphs 19 through 43;
-For the crime of murder as a crime against humanity in paragraphs 44 through 55;
-For the crime of extermination as a crime against humanity in paragraphs 56 through 69 and
-For the crime of other inhuman acts as a crime against humanity in paragraphs 67 through 70.

V Crimes charged and Concise Statement of Facts

Count 1: Genocide

19. The Prosecutor of the international Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo with genocide, a crime provided for in Article 2 (3) (a) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17

July 1994, in Cyangugu Préfecture (Rwanda), he was responsible for killing or causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the Tutsi population, with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, an ethnic or racial group as such, as described in the facts contained in paragraphs 20 through 43 of this indictment.

20. Following the death of the President of Rwanda, Juvenal Habyarimana, on 6 April 1994, the interim government formed on 8 April 1994 launched a national campaign aimed at mobilizing the government armed forces, civilian militia, Interahamwe, the local public administration and ordinary citizens to fight the Rwandan Patriotic Front, or RPF, a politico-military opposition group comprising mainly Tutsi. The Rwandan government armed forces and Interahamwe militia specifically targeted the Tutsi civilian population of Rwanda as domestic accomplices of an invading army, ibyitso, or categorically as a domestic enemy. Under the pretext of ensuring national defence, ordinary citizens of Rwanda, mainly Hutu, mobilized into action by the authorities, killed Tutsi and political opponents and looted their property. Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994 hundreds of thousands of Tutsi and moderate Hutu were killed as a result of this campaign. Siméon Nchamihigo participated in the organization and the implementation of this campaign as follows:

(a) On or about 14 April 1994, during a meeting called by the Prefect Emmanuel Bagambiki in the MRND office in Cyangugu, all zone supervisors, including Siméon Nchamihigo, were requested to report on the ongoing massacres in their zones. During the meeting, Siméon Nchamihigo reported that he was facing difficulties in attacking the Shangi parish as so many Tutsi had sought refuge there and that, according to him, it was not possible to kill all of them with traditional weapons. He claimed that he needed fire arms, such as rifles and grenades. These were later given to him by Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe in Karampo military camp Siméon Nchamihigo distributed the weapons to the Interahamwe and ordered or instigated them to attack the Shangi parish and to kill the Tutsi and they did so some time in April 1994 with Yussuf Munyakazi and others.

(b) In late April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo participated in a meeting at Gihundwe secteur office the purpose of which was to put in place security measures. Acting bourgmestre, Manase Buvugamenshi, presided over the meeting, which was attended by Védaste Habimana, Siméon Nchamihigo and Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe in Cyangugu préfecture, among others. During the meeting, Siméon Nchamihigo enquired about the security situation in the secteur and whether there were more Tutsi in hiding to be killed. Védaste Habimana replied that three days would suffice to "mop up" the secteur. In the context of the meeting, "to mop up" was understood to mean "to finish killing all the Tutsi." The "mopping up" of the secteur did in fact continue. By his enquiries regarding the remaining Tutsi to be killed, Siméon Nchamihigo instigated and aided and abetted the killing of these Tutsi.

(c) Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe at the préfecture level, Habimana Jean Bosco, alias Masudi, a former soldier and caporal Aimé, among others, organized and supervised military training for Interahamwe in Cyangugu préfecture namely: Jean de Dieu Utabazi, Janvier Borauzima, Faustin Sinashebeje, Joseph Habineza amongst others to enable and thus to aid and abet them to kill the Tutsi.

(d) On unknown dates in April and May 1994 Siméon Nchamihigo was involved with Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, Lieutenant Samuel Immanshimwe, and others, in the drawing up of lists of influential Tutsi and Hutu political opponents, on the basis of which the préfecture security council, including Siméon Nchamihigo, identified persons to be killed. As a result, Siméon Nchamihigo planned, ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the Interahamwe and other Hutu civilians in killing many Tutsi and Hutu political opponents, as described further below in paragraphs 20 (e), 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 40,41, 42 and 43 of this indictment.

(e) Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo kept a stockpile of weapons in his residence in Cyangugu. He distributed weapons to the Interahamwe who included David Habanakwabo and Jeremy Nsengiyumva and others and ordered or instigated them to go and kill specifically named people, Tutsi and Hutu political opponents, or launch large-scale attacks against Tutsi, who were sometimes assembled in specific places, such as parishes and schools as described in paragraphs 28, 32, 33, 34, 35 and 37 of this indictment.

21. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to erect several roadblocks in Cyangugu town and supervised the effective manning of these roadblocks. Such roadblocks included a roadblock near the Kamembe Market and the Pendeza roadblock on the road to the Airport as well as the Kadashya roadblock, manned by an Interahamwe leader, Pierre Munyandamutsa alias Pressé, an associate of Siméon Nchamihigo, the Cyapa roadblock manned by Mvuyekure Vincent, alias Tourné, and the Gatandara roadblock, manned by an Interahamwe, Habimana Jean Bosco. The aim of the roadblocks was to stop the Tutsi and Hutu opponents from fleeing to safer areas and to kill them. Siméon Nchamihigo controlled and supervised the roadblocks by inspecting them several times a day, and he ordered or instigated the Interahamwe who manned the roadblocks to kill the Tutsi attempting to pass through. Siméon Nchamihigo's Interahamwe killed many Tutsi at the roadblocks, sometimes in the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo. The Préfet of Cyangugu, Emmanuel Bagambiki appointed people like Ndagijimana Shabani to remove dead bodies at the roadblocks and throughout the Cyangugu city in this period. At the Gatandara roadblock, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to kill many Tutsi who had been selected in the Karampaka Stadium. The Cyapa roadlock was erected just next to Siméon Nchamihigo's residence. Siméon Nchamihigo ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of Tutsi at that roadblock, including the catholic priest, Father Boneza Joseph.

22. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo arrived at a road block manned by a group of young Hutuin Kamembe and ordered or instigated them to look for all the Tutsi and RPF accomplices and hand them over to the Interahamwe and to set ablaze all the places where the opposition was well-established. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's orders or instigation, the Interahamwe tracked down and killed many people, mostly Tutsi men, women and children, on or about 7 April 1994 and in the months that followed.

23. On or about 15 April 1994, in Kamembe, Siméon Nchamihigo arrived at a road block manned by about 20 people, comprised of Interahamwe and young armed Hutu alike. He read out to these people names of Tutsi who were reportedly hiding in Kamembe town, and ordered or instigated that they be hunted down. The names read out from the list by Siméon Nchamihigo included Gasali Aloys, Emilien Nsengumuremyi, Isidore Kagenza and Judge Jean-Marie Vianney Tabaro. After reading out the names and before leaving the roadblock, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to look for Tutsi and to kill them and aided and abetted by providing them with two grenades. These Interahamwe then hunted down and killed the Tutsi.

24. On an unknown date in May 1994, in execution of Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation issued at a road block in Kamembe on or about 15 April 1994, the Interahamwe including Mvuyekure Vincent alias Tourné found Emilien Nsengumuremyi and killed him. They continued to look for the other Tutsi whose names had been read out by Siméon Nchamihigo, in order to kill them.

25. On or about 28 or 30 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to a roadblock manned by the Interahamwe, including Ndorimana Martin, and ordered or instigated them to kill the accountant of Cyangugu Préfecture, Kayihura Canisus, a Tutsi, who had supposedly managed to obtain an identity card indicating that he belonged to the Hutu ethnic group.

26. On an unknown date in May 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to a roadblock in Kamembe and ordered or instigated the Interahamwe manning the roadblock who included Vincent Mvuyekure alias Tourné to kill a Tutsi priest of the Mibirizi Catholic parish, whose name he did not reveal but who, according to him, was expected to pass by the roadblock in a vehicle. Siméon Nchamihigo had issued similar instructions at all the roadblocks that he supervised and he had threatened to kill the Interahamwe if they let the Tutsi priest through. In the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo, the Interahamwe killed the priest later that day at the roadblock erected at the entrance to Kamembe next to the residence of the accused and manned by the Interahamwe Habirora Nehemi and Patrick Nsengumuremyi.

27. On an unknown date in May 1994, at the Cyapa roadblock manned by the Interahamwe including Vincent Mvuyekure alias Tourné, Patrick Nsengumuremyi and the gendarmes, Siméon Nchamihigo took into the car he was driving two young Tutsi students, Uzier and Innocent, who were seeking a lift to go back home. Siméon Nchamihigo handed the two students over to the Interahamwe and ordered or instigated them to kill the Tutsi students, and they did so.

28. After President Juvénal Habyarimana's death on 6 April 1994, a large number of Tutsi and Hutu political opponents fleeing acts of violence and massacres, sought refuge in places considered safe in Cyangugu such as the main cathedral, Mibirizi parish, Hanika parish, Nkanka parish, Shangi parish, Nyamasheke parish, the Mibirizi hospital, the Gihundwe school and the Nyakanyinya school, among others. Other Tutsi and Hutu political opponents remained in their homes. Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza alias Bikomago, Sous-Préfet Theodore Muyengabe and Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe at the préfecture level, ordered or instigated the Interahamwe including Kamenero to launch attacks against Tutsi and Hutu political opponents who had sought refuge in safe places and also on individuals in their homes. Siméon Nchamihigo personally led all these attacks, except the attack at Nkanka parish. During these attacks, Siméon Nchamihigo and the Interahamwe killed many people, as described in paragraphs 29 through 37 of this indictment.

29. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe including Christophe Nyandwi among others in an attack on the residence of Doctor Nagafizi, a Tutsi regional chief medical officer of Cyangugu and member of the Parti Libéral, allegedly with RPF leanings, and an attack on the residence of a businessman called Kongo, a Hutu and member of the PSD political party. During the attacks, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, killed Doctor Nagazafi and Kongo.

30. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RPF. During the attack, the Interahamwe killed the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba and looted their house. The Interahamwe killed Trojean Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

31. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, including Habineza Joseph, alias Sekuse, to kill Theoneste Karangwa, an influential Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. Siméon Nchamihigo said that the Interahamwe should not to kill Karangwa's wife because she was not Tutsi. The Interahamwe then attacked and killed Theoneste Karangwa and his driver Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo seized Karangwa's vehicle and later took it to Bukavu in neighboring Zaire.

32 On or about 12 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, including Bizimungu Anasthase, and communal police, gendarmes and military reservists to attack the Nyakanyinka school and kill the Tutsi who sought refuge there. The attackers received from Siméon Nchamihigo grenades and rifles which were used during the attack and were thus aided and abetted by him in the attack. As a result, the Interahamwe and other attackers killed about 600 Tutsi.

33. On or about 12 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Samuel Imanishimwe, commander of Cyangugu military camp, and the Sous-Préfet Kamonyo, ordered or instigated the Interahamwe including Uwimana Jean Charles, alias Karoli, and a group of Hutu civilians, to attack the Hanika parish and kill all the refugees who were supposed to be Tutsi. As a result of Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the attackers killed about 1,500 people, including children and the aged.

34. On a day sometime between 14 and 15 April 1994, at about 8 o'clock in the morning, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi (the militiamen of the CDR political party) including Ndorimana Martin, in an attack against Tutsi of the Gihundwe Secteur, particularly targeting Tutsi of Kabugi, Ruganda, Murindi and Murangi Cellules. During the attack, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, killed a large number of Tutsi and destroyed their houses.

35. On or about 18 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Sergeant Major Marc Rubenziza, alias Bikomago and Sous-Préfet Theodore Muyengabe, led a group of Interahamwe which included Gendarme Mandela and Anathase Bizimungu, among others, that attacked Mibirizi convent and Mibirizi hospital, where many Tutsi had sought refuge. During the attacks, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, massacred the Tutsi refugees and looted their property. After the attacks, Siméon Nchamihigo rewarded the killers with beer.

36. In late April or early May 1994, three young Tutsi girls, Mukashema Josephine, Marie and Helene, sought refuge in the residence of a certain Hutu named Jonas. Siméon Nchamihigo accused Jonas and his brother Niyikiza Jonathan of hiding Inyenzi. Siméon Nchamihigo, assisted by one of his Interahamwe namely Banga Kaboyi Johnson, removed the three Tutsi girls from Jonas's house and took them away to an unknown place. On the same day, Siméon Nchamihigo told Niyikiza Jonathan that the Inyenzi had been killed and threatened Niyikiza Jonathan to kill him if he continued to hide Tutsi. By his actions, Siméon Nchamihigo committed, ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of these Tutsi girls.

37. Between 20 and 25 June 1994 or thereabouts, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe in his area, including Jean-Paul, Mvuyekure Vincent, alias Tourné, Nzeyimana, among others, to go to Kibuye together with Yusufu Munyakazi and his Interahamwe, and participate in a number of attacks to kill Tutsi who had sought refuge at Bisesero in Kibuye Préfecture. The Interahamwe travelled in an Onatracom bus to Bisesero and assisted the Kibuye Interahamwe in killing the Tutsi. Together, they killed many Tutsi. On the return of the Interahamwe from Kibuye after one or two days, Siméon Nchamihigo rewarded them with drinks and food at the Gihundwe school.

38. After President Juvénal Habyarimana's death on 6 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council, including Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki and Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, the Cyangugu military camp commander, decided to move refugees from their places of refuge and assembled them at Kamarampaka Stadium in Cyangugu, ostensibly with the purpose of providing the refugees with better security but with the aim of eliminating those who were suspected of being accomplices of the Inkotanyi.

39. On or about 14 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and other members of the préfecture security council including Emmanuel Bagambiki moved the refugees from the Gihundwe school to Kamarampaka stadium.

40. On or about 15 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and other members of the préfecture security council including Emmanuel Bagambiki moved the refugees from Cyangugu Cathedral and took them to Kamarampaka Stadium. The refugees transferred to the stadium that day included Baziruwiha Marianne, Nkusi Georges, Albert Twagiramungu, Jean Fidèle Murekezi, his wife Kanyamibwa Christine and their children, among others.

41. On the 16th of April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council, including Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Christophe Nyandwi, President of the Interahamwe at the Préfecture level, Major Munyarugerero, Theodeore Munyangabe, sous-préfet, Paul Ndorimana, Prosecutor, Simeon Remesh, Headmaster of Gihundwe Primary School, Ngagi, customs officer and Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza went to Kamarampaka Stadium. The commander of the gendarmerie camp, using a megaphone, called out names of civilians who were alleged to be Inkotanyi accomplices from a list that had been prepared by the préfecture security council, including Siméon Nchamihigo. The list included: Benoit Sibomana, Jean-Fidèle Murekezi, Apiane Ndorimana, Albert Mugabo, Albert Twagiramungu, Ibambasi, Bernard Nkara, Trojean Nzisabira, Rémy Mihigo, Dominique Gapeli, Albert Mugabo and Marianne Baziruwiha. All of the individuals named on the list were Tutsi, except for Marianne Baziruwiha who was a Hutu and an influential member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. The individuals were asked to come out, and were escorted out of the Stadium by Siméon Nchamihigo and the préfecture delegation. Outside the stadium, about four people of Tutsi origin, including Vital Nibagwire, Ananie Gatake, Jean-Marie Vianney Habimana alias Gapfumu, whom Siméon Nchamihigo and the other members of the préfecture delegation had brought from the cathedral, were waiting in vehicles. Siméon Nchamihigo and the préfecture delegation instructed soldiers to take the selected 16 people to the gendarmerie camp purportedly for questioning.

42. When, on or about 16 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council took the 16 selected persons to the gendarmerie camp, they removed Marianne Baziruwiha from the group and instructed the drivers to proceed with the remaining 15, all Tutsi, to a place near Cyangugu prison. Siméon Nchamihigo then ordered or instigated the Interahamwe whom he had brought along with him from Mutongo Centre earlier the same day, including Bizimungu Anasthase, to kill the 15 remaining Tutsi. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the Interahamwe killed the 15 Tutsi near Cyangugu prison and threw their dead bodies into a latrine in Gapfumu's compound

43. On or about 18 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went back to Kamarampaka Stadium in a delegation of the préfecture security council, comprising Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, Samuel Imanishimwe, and Sous-Préfet Emmanuel Kamonyo, among others. Bagambiki, using a megaphone, called out about 20 names from a list which the préfecture security council had drawn up. They took the listed people out of the stadium. Some people of Tutsi origin, such as Antoine Nsengumuremyi and Felicien, whose names had not been called out, were nevertheless taken out of Kamarampaka Stadium that day, together with the others. These people were subsequently killed and their bodies thrown into the Gataranga River or into mass graves. Siméon Nchamihigo and the préfecture delegation aided and abetted the killing of all those who had been taken out of the stadium.

Count 2: Crime against humanity : Murder

44. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo with murder, as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Article 3 (a) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17 July 1994 he was responsible for the murder of a number of Tutsi and of people considered as Tutsis, as well as Hutu opponents, particularly in Cyangugu Préfecture, as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on ethnic, racial or political grounds, as set out in paragraphs 45 through 55 of this indictment.

Concise statement of the facts relating to Count 2

45. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe including Nyandwi Christophe in an attack on the residence of Doctor Nagafizi, a Tutsi regional chief medical officer of Cyangugu and member of the Parti Liberal, with RPF leanings, and an attack on the residence of a businessman called Kongo, a Hutu and member of the PSD political party. During the attacks, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo and ordered, instigated or aided or abetted by him, killed Doctor Nagafizi and Kongo.

46. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba, a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RPF. During the attack, the Interahamwe killed the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba and looted their house. The Interahamwe killed Trojean Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

47. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo in collaboration with Nyandwi Christophe, an Interahamwe leader at the préfecture level, ordered or instigated Interahamwe including Joseph Habineza, among others to kill Zacharie Serubyogo, a Hutu trader and MDR political party member of Parliament, together with other people. The Interahamwe then killed Zacharie Serubyogo and many unknown people near Lake Kivu in the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo. After the killing of Zacharie Serubyogo, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered his Interahamwe to look for a Tutsi by the name of Theoneste Karangwa and kill him.

48. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated Interahamwe, including Habineza Joseph, alias Sekuse, to kill Théoneste Karangwa, an influential Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. Siméon Nchamihigo said that the Interahamwe should not to kill Karangwa's wife because she was not Tutsi. The Interahamwe then attacked and killed Théoneste Karangwa and his driver Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo seized Karangwa's vehicle and later took it to Bukavu in neighboring Zaire.

49. Deleted.

50. Between 15 and 17 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated a group of Interahamwe who included David Habanakwabo, Rusine and Nzeyimana, to kill a young Hutu student called Jean de Dieu Gakwandi, whom he had described as a traitor and an accomplice of the Tutsi. To this end, Siméon Nchamihigo gave a grenade to someone called David Habanakwabo, alias Vicky, and ordered him to join other Interahamwe in order to kill Jean de Dieu Gakwandi. The assailants hit Jean de Dieu Gakwandi with a club on the head. Jean de Dieu Gakwandi sustained serious injuries. The assailants left him there, unconscious, thinking he was dead.

51. On or about 28 or 30 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to a roadblock manned by Interahamwe, including Ndorimana Martin, and ordered or instigated them to kill the accountant of Cyangugu Préfecture, Canisius Kayihura, a Tutsi civilian, who had managed to obtain an identity card indicating that he belonged to the Hutu ethnic group.

52. In late April or early May 1994, three young Tutsi girls, Mukashema Josephine, Marie and Helene, sought refuge in the residence of a certain Hutu named Jonas. Siméon Nchamihigo accused Jonas and his brother Niyikiza Jonathan of hiding Inyenzi. Siméon Nchamihigo assisted by one of his Interahamwe namely Banga Kaboyi Johnson, removed the three Tutsi girls from Jonas's house, took them away to an unknown place. On his return the same day, Siméon Nchamihigo told Niyikiza Jonathan that the Inyenzi had been killed and he threatened Niyikiza Jonathan to kill him if he continued to hide Tutsi. By his actions, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of these Tutsi girls.

53. On an unknown date in May 1994, in execution of Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation issued at a road block in Kamembe on or about 15 April 1994, the Interahamwe including Christophe Nyandwi, found Emilien Nsengumuremyi and killed him. They continued to look for the other Tutsi whose names had been read out by Siméon Nchamihigo, in order to kill them because of their Tutsi origin.

54. On an unknown date in May 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to a roadblock in Kamembe and ordered or instigated the Interahamwe manning the roadblock to kill a Tutsi priest of the Mibirizi Catholic parish, Father Joseph Boneza, who was expected to pass by the roadblock in a vehicle. Siméon Nchamihigo had issued similar instructions at all the roadblocks that he supervised and he had threatened to kill the Interahamwe if they let the Tutsi priest through. Later that day and in the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo, the Interahamwe killed Father Joseph Boneza at the roadblock erected at the entrance to Kamembe next to the residence of the accused and manned by the Interahamwe Habirora Nehemi and Patrick Nsengumuremyi.

55. On an unknown date in May 1994, at the Cyapa roadblock manned by the Interahamwe including Nsengumuremyi Patrick and the gendarmes, Siméon Nchamihigo took into the car he was driving, two young Tutsi students, Uzier and Innocent, who were seeking a lift to go back home. Siméon Nchamihigo handed the two boys over to the Interahamwe and ordered or instigated them to kill the Tutsi students and they did so.

Count 3: Crime against humanity : Extermination

56. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo with extermination as a crime against humanity, a crime stipulated in Article 3 (b) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17 July 1994, particularly in Cyangugu préfecture, Siméon Nchamihigo was responsible for the large scale killing of Tutsi or of people considered as Tutsi and of Hutu opponents, as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds, as described below in the concise statement of facts relating to the charges in paragraphs 57 through 65 of this indictment.

Concise statement of the facts relating to Count 3

57. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, in particular from 7 April to the end of May 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, and Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe at the préfecture level, ordered or instigated the Interahamwe amongst whom was Kamenero, to launch attacks against Tutsi civilians and Hutu opponents refugees in Hanika parish, Mibirizi parish, Mibirizi hospital, Nkanka parish, Shangi parish and Nyamasheke parish among other places where those people had sought refuge including their homes. Siméon Nchamihigo personally led all of these attacks, except the attack at Nkanka parish. During the attacks, the Interahamwe and other Hutu civilians led by Siméon Nchamihigo killed many civilians who thus were targeted as described in paragraphs 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64 and 65 of this indictment.

58. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo arrived at a road block manned by a group of young Hutu in Kamembe and ordered or instigated them to look for all the Tutsi and RPF accomplices and hand them over to the Interahamwe and to set ablaze all the places where the opposition was well-established. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's orders or instigation, the Interahamwe tracked down and killed many civilians, mostly Tutsi men, women and children, after or around 7 April 1994.

59. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RFP. During the attack, the Interahamwe killed the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba and looted their house. The Interahamwe killed Trojean Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

60. On or about 12 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated Interahamwe, including Bizimungu Anasthase, and communal police, gendarmes and military reservists to attack the Nyakanyinka school and kill the Tutsi civilians who sought refuge there. The attackers received from Siméon Nchamihigo grenades and rifles which were used during the attack, and were thus aided and abetted by him in the attack. As a result, the Interahamwe and other attackers killed about 600 Tutsi civilians.

61. On a day sometime between 14 and 15 April 1994, at about 8 o'clock in the morning, Siméon Nchamihigo, leading a group of Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi (the militiamen of the CDR political party) including Ndorimana Martin, launched an attack against Tutsi of the Gihundwe Secteur, particularly targeting Tutsi of Kabugi, Ruganda, Murindi and Murangi Cellules. During the attack, the Interahamwe led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, killed a large number of Tutsi and destroyed their houses.

62. On or about 15 April 1994 in Kamembe, Siméon Nchamihigo arrived at a road block manned by about 20 people comprised of Interahamwe and young armed Hutu alike. He read out to these people names of Tutsi who were reportedly hiding in Kamembe town, and ordered or instigated that they be hunted down. The names read out from the list by Siméon Nchamihigo included Gasali Aloys, Emilien Nsengumuremyi, Isidore Kagenza and Judge Jean-Marie Vianney Tabaro. After reading out the names and before leaving the road block, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to look for Tutsi and to kill them and aided and abetted by providing them with two grenades. These Interahamwe then hunted down and killed the Tutsi.

63. On an unknown date in April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe, which included Anathase Bizimungu in their number, accompanied by Gendarme Mandela, in an attack on Mibirizi convent, where many Tutsi civilians had sought refuge. During the attack, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, massacred the Tutsi refugees and looted their property.

64. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo in collaboration with Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Yusuf Munyakazi and soldiers from the Rwandan armed forces, or FAR, targeted military detainees and civilians whom he accused of being accomplices of RPF and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of those military detainees as described in paragraph 65 of this indictment.

65. Thus, on or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo in collaboration with lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and Yusuf Munyakazi, went to Cyangugu prison and ordered the director of the prison to remove about 13 FAR soldiers who had been sent to jail for their alleged complicity with RPF. The detainees were taken to the Préfecture office. Siméon Nchamihigo then ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of the 13 FAR soldiers. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order, instigation or aiding and abetting, the 13 FAR soldiers who were no longer combatants, were killed and their dead bodies thrown into a garden of the Préfecture near the lake. Later on the same day, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated other prisoners, including Ndamira Damien, to remove the dead bodies of the 13 FAR soldiers from the garden and bury them along with the dead bodies of 8 unknown persons found at the same place.

Count 4: Crime against humanity : other inhumane acts

66. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo of other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, a crime stipulated in Article 3 (i) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17 July 1994, throughout Rwanda, particularly in Cyangugu Préfecture, Siméon Nchamihigo was responsible for committing inhumane acts against Tutsi civilians or of people considered as Tutsi, and of Hutu opponents, as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds, as outlined in paragraphs 67 through 70 of this indictment.

Concise statement of the facts relating to Count 4

67. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated Interahamwe, including Habineza Joseph, alias Sekuse, to kill Theoneste Karangwa, an influential Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. Siméon Nchamihigo said that the Interahamwe should not to kill Theoneste Karangwa's wife because she was not Tutsi. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the Interahamwe attacked and caught Theoneste Karangwa in his house. The Interahamwe then covered Theoneste Karangwa with his own mattress, poured fuel into the mattress and burnt Theoneste Karangwa, causing him great pain and suffering before his death. The Interahamwe also killed Theoneste Karangwa's driver by the name of Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo then seized Theoneste Karangwa's vehicle and later took it with him to Bukavu in neighboring Zaire, together with other vehicles and various items looted during the attacks.

68. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba, a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RFP. During the attack, the Interahamwe burnt the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba inside their vehicle causing them great pain and suffering before their deaths. The Interahamwe killed Trojean Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

69. Between 15 and 17 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated a group of Interahamwe which included in their number David Habanakwabo, Rusine and Nzeyimana, among others, to kill a young Hutu student called Jean de Dieu Gakwandi, whom he had described as a traitor and an accomplice of the Tutsi. To this end, Siméon Nchamihigo gave a grenade to someone called David Habanakwabo, alias Vicky, and ordered him to join other Interahamwe in order to kill Jean de Dieu Gakwandi. The assailants hit Jean de Dieu Gakwandi with a club on the head causing him pain and suffering. Jean de Dieu Gakwandi sustained serious injuries. The assailants left him there, unconscious, thinking he was dead.

70. On 16 April 1994 or thereabouts, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council, including Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and Christophe Nyandwi, removed from Karampaka Stadium about 15 Tutsi and 1 Hutu woman by the name of Marianne Baziruwiha, and took them to a place near the prison after dropping off Marianne Baziruwiha at the gendarmerie camp. Among the 15 Tutsi who were removed from the stadium by Siméon Nchamihigo and others, were Jean-Fidele Murekezi, Albert Twagiramumgu and Gapfumu. Siméon Nchamihigo then ordered or instigated the Interahamwe whom he had brought along with him from Mutongo Centre earlier the same day, including Bizimungu Anasthase, to kill the 15 Tutsi. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the Interahamwe killed the 15 Tutsi near Cyangugu prison and threw their dead bodies into a latrine in Gapfumu's compound; before doing so the Interahamwe removed the genitals of Jean-Fidele Murekezi and Albert Twagiramungu and the heart of Gapfumu.

The acts and omissions of Siméon Nchamihigo set out herein are punishable pursuant to Articles 22 and 23 of the Statute.

1. The Defence made an application today, 12 October 2006, for the Chamber to order the Prosecution to obtain the complete judicial records from the Rwandan government regarding Prosecution Witness LDB. After hearing the start of his testimony yesterday morning, it became apparent that LDB's judicial records were incompletely disclosed by the Prosecution. The Defence submitted that the Prosecution witness list contains 9 other detained witnesses whose judicial files are also likely to be incomplete. It further requests the Chamber to adjourn the proceedings and order the Prosecution not to call any of those detained witnesses until the complete judicial records have been disclosed.

2. The Prosecution claims that it has made its best efforts to obtain the judicial records, that it disclosed all the material it received, and that it could not force the Rwandan government to produce additional documentation.

3. Trial Chambers have concluded that disclosure of judicial records is not merely for the benefit of the preparation of the Defence but it is also required to assist the Trial Chamber in its assessment of witness credibility pursuant to Rule 90 (G) of the Rules.[1]

4. During Witness LDD's testimony earlier this week, evidence was adduced concerning judicial records that were not previously disclosed to the Defence. In response to the Defence's submission, on 10 October 2006, the Chamber ordered the Prosecution to request the judicial records regarding Witness LDD from the Rwandan authorities. If necessary, depending on the information in the documents disclosed, the Defence can move the Chamber to allow further cross-examination of the witness. As of today, the Prosecution has not yet made that request.

5. For the present application, the Chamber notes that the Defence has not specified, because it is not aware, for which witnesses the judicial records remain incomplete. The Defence has demonstrated that the file for Witness LDB is obviously incomplete, and has submitted that the same situation may exist for other detained Prosecution witnesses. Without a specific factual submission, it is purely speculation at this point as to which judicial records exist that have not been disclosed.

6. The Prosecution is in the best position to know what judicial records should exist for its witnesses and must review the information already disclosed and determine what is incomplete from the judicial files of its detained witnesses. The Defence has agreed to assist the Prosecution in this determination.

7. The Chamber therefore considers that it is appropriate to use its power pursuant to Rule 98 at this time and requires the Prosecution to use its best efforts to obtain the incomplete records from the Rwandan authorities and disclose them to the Defence. This action is also permitted by Rule 54, whereby a Trial Chamber may issue orders necessary for the preparation or conduct of the trial, either at the request of either party or proprio motu. The Chamber's order in no way minimizes the Defence's obligation to prepare its case.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DIRECTS the Prosecution and the Defence, as agreed, to meet tomorrow, Friday 13 October 2006, and consult on what judicial records should be requested from the Rwandan authorities;

ORDERS, pursuant to Rule 98 of the Rules, the Prosecution to submit a request to the Rwandan authorities for the required judicial records by Monday, 16 October 2006, a copy of the request shall be filed with CMS. In that request, the Prosecution shall require a response from the Rwandan authorities in one week's time, by Monday, 23 October 2006. If the Rwandan authorities require more time to comply with the request, it shall be asked to inform the Prosecution by which date it will be able to comply with the request. Any response shall be filed with CMS. If there is no response received from the Rwandan authorities, this shall also be communicated to the Chamber through CMS.

AMENDS its oral decision of 10 October 2006 and DIRECTS the Prosecution's request to the Rwandan authorities regarding the judicial records of Witness LDD to be included in the upcoming request of 16 October 2006.

1. The first trial session in this case took place from 25 September 2006 to 20 October 2006 with the start of the Prosecution's case. On 19 October 2006, the Chamber requested submissions from the Defence on whether its statements in court were in compliance with Rule 67 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence on providing a notice of alibi. A schedule for submissions was expressed by the Chamber but is reiterated below.

2. On 20 October 2006, a Status Conference was held with the parties in preparation for the next trial session. After discussions with the parties, and considering the rights of the accused to adequately prepare its Defence and to have a trial without undue delay, the Chamber:

i. ORDERS the Defence to file its written submission on its compliance with Rule 67 of the Rules by Friday, 3 November 2006; the Prosecution will file any response by Wednesday, 8 November 2006; the Defence will file any reply by Monday, 13 November 2006;

ii. REQUESTS the Registrar to assist in the arrangements for the next trial session to begin on Tuesday, 9 January 2007, for full-day sessions, until Friday, 9 February 2007, for the completion of the Prosecution case;

Siméon Nchamihigo – Transfer of detained witnesses – Rwanda – Conditions satisfied – Motion granted – Previous motion on the same issue denied

Rules of Procedure and Evidence, Rules 73 (A) and 90 bis

1. The first trial session in this case took place from 25 September to 20 October 2006. The next trial session is scheduled to begin on 9 January 2006 for the completion of the Prosecution's case. On 1 December 2006, the Prosecution submitted a Confidential Urgent Motion for an Order for the Temporary Transfer of Witnesses Pursuant to Rules 73 (A) and 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. It asked that the witnesses listed in Annex A, who are currently detained and awaiting trial in Rwanda, be transferred to the United Nations Detention Facilities ("UNDF") in Arusha so that they can testify as Prosecution witnesses in the next trial session.

2. In order for a detained person to be transferred to UNDF so that he/she can testify before the Tribunal, the Chamber must be satisfied that the requirements pursuant to Rule 90 bis have been met. The applicant must show that:

(i) The presence of the detained witness is not required for any criminal proceedings in progress in the territory of the requested State during the period the witness is required by the Tribunal;

(ii) Transfer of the witness does not extend the period of his detention as foreseen by the requested State;

3. In support of his Motion, the Prosecution filed two letters from the Rwandan Minister of Justice dated 22 November and 28 November 2006 confirming that the ten requested witnesses, currently detained in Rwanda will be available from 2 January to 28 February 2007 to testify in this case. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the standard pursuant to Rule 90 bis has been met insofar as these witnesses are not required for criminal proceedings in Rwanda during that time, and that the witnesses' presence at the Tribunal does not extend the period of their detention in Rwanda.

4. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution submitted a Motion for an Order for the Temporary Transfer of Detained Witnesses on 21 September 2006, which included one of the detainees who is subject to the present Motion. The letter from the Rwandan Minister of Justice in support of that Motion dated 20 September 2006, but only distributed to the Chamber and the Parties on 26 October 2006, confirmed the availability of the two named detainees only for the time-period referred to in the Prosecution's letter of request, being from 25 September to 20 October 2006. Consequently, the Chamber does not find that the requirements pursuant to Rule 90 bis have been met for that Motion.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. GRANTS the Prosecution Motion of 1 December 2006;

II. REQUESTS the Registrar, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules, to temporarily transfer the ten detained witnesses indicated in the letters from the Rwandan Minister of Justice dated 22 November and 28 November 2006 to the United Nations Detention Facilities (UNDF) in Arusha, at an appropriate time prior to their scheduled dates to testify. Their return travel to Rwanda should be facilitated as soon as practically possible for each witness after the individual's testimony has ended.

III. REQUESTS the Governments of Rwanda and Tanzania to cooperate with the Registrar in the implementation of this Order.

IV. REQUESTS the Registrar to cooperate with the authorities of the Governments Rwanda and Tanzania; Ensure proper conduct during transfer and during detention of the witness at the UNDF; Inform the Chamber of any changes in the conditions of detention determined by the Rwandan authorities and which may affect the length of stay in Arusha.

V. DENIES the Prosecution's Motion on the same issue of 21 September 2006.

I.C.T.R.: Trial Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Siméon Nchamihigo, Decision on Defence Motion on Defects in the Form of the Indictment, 27 September 2006 (ICTR-2001-63)

Introduction

1. The trial in this case began on 25 September 2006. The Prosecution filed an Amended Indictment on 18 July 2006 and its Corrigendum on 25 July 2006. On 27 September 2006, the Trial Chamber's Decision on the Defence Motion on Defects in the Form of the Indictment ("Decision on Defects") ordered the Prosecution to make additions and changes to the Amended Indictment. The Prosecution filed its Revised Amended Indictment on 29 September 2006. The Defence now asserts that this new version of the Indictment does not conform to the Chamber's orders and that the non-compliance violates the rights of the Accused to know the charges against him and prepare his defence.[1] It therefore requests the Chamber to order the Prosecutor to conform to the Decision on Defects, or to strike the paragraphs in question from the Indictment. The Prosecution submits that the Revised Amended Indictment conforms to the Decision on Defects, but proposes further amendments to it.

Discussion

2. Article 20 of the Statute provides for the minimum rights of the Accused. Subsection 4 (a) provides for the Accused to be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he understands and of the nature and cause of the charges against him. The Defence alleges that the Prosecution failed in three respects to comply with the Decision on Defects. The Chamber will review the merits of these alleged failures, and determine the appropriate remedy for any breach.

[1] The Prosecutor v. Simeon Nchamihigo, Case N°ICTR-2001-63-T, Requête de la Défense en Non Conformité de L'Acte D'Accusation Révisé Avec la Décision de la Chambre de Première Instance « Decision on Defence Motion for Defects in the Form of the Indictment » Rendue le 27 Septembre 2006, filed on 9 October 2006.

Clarifications in Paragraphs 10 and 20 (a)

3. The Defence complains that the Prosecution failed to comply with the Chamber's order to clarify certain dates in paragraphs 10 and 20 (a) of the Amended Indictment and resolve the doubt whether the meetings pleaded in those two paragraphs were the same or different meetings.[2]

4. In the Revised Amended Indictment, the Prosecution made no clarification in this regard to paragraphs 10 and 20 (a) in the Revised Amended Indictment but in its response to the Defence motion, the Prosecution stated that those paragraphs refer to different and separate events[3] and that there is no better information on the dates than already alleged. The Chamber specifically required the provision of information to the extent possible and, in the absence of further information, is satisfied that the Prosecution has now complied with this aspect of the Decision on Defects. The allegation in paragraph 10 is now under the heading of "The Accused" and is not included in the statement of facts supporting any of the charges in the Indictment. If that allegation is meant to support one of the charges in the Indictment, then it should be included in the facts of the relevant count(s).

Clarifications Concerning Alleged Roadblocks

5. The Prosecution contends that although it complied with the Chamber's order in the Decision on Defects which instructed the Prosecution to provide the best detail available in the Revised Amended Indictment concerning the roadblocks mentioned in paragraphs 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, it furnished "additional" details in its response to the Motion in order to assist the Defence.

6. The "additional" details on the roadblocks provide for their easier identification allowing the Accused to better understand the charges against him and are what the Prosecution was required to have originally included in the Revised Amended Indictment. In this respect, the Prosecution breached the Chamber's orders.

7. Under the circumstances, the Chamber does not find – and the Defence has not shown – any prejudice to the Accused which would justify the removal of these paragraphs from the Indictment and considers that the Prosecution should include the "additional" details in the Indictment.

Clarifications Concerning the Identities of Individuals

8. The Defence contends that the Prosecution failed to comply with the order to specify, to the extent possible, the identities of the individuals in paragraphs 26, 30, 32, 54, 60, 61, 64 and 65 of the Amended Indictment. The Prosecution responds that no further names are available for paragraphs 26, 30, 32, 60, 61 and 65.

9. In the absence of further evidence, the Chamber cannot conclude that its order has been breached in relation to these paragraphs. However, the Chamber notes that the Prosecution made no comment as to whether further details could be provided for paragraph 64 and directs the Prosecution to clarify, its position with respect to this paragraph and if more specific information exists, it should be provided.

10. With regard to paragraph 54, the Prosecution provided information in its Response clarifying the location of the roadblocks manned by Nchamihigo although not ordered to do so by the Decision on Defects, while asserting that it has no further information on the identities of individuals mentioned in the paragraph. Although the Chamber does not find that there was any breach of its order for this paragraph it directs the Prosecution to include the information on the roadblocks in the Indictment.

Conclusion

11. The Chamber conveys its concern as to how the Prosecution complied with the Chamber's Decision on Defects. Although it did not entirely act in accordance with the Chamber's orders in the Decision on Defects of 27 September 2006, the additional details provided in the Prosecution's Response to the Defence Motion remedy the deficiencies. The Chamber therefore directs the Prosecution to file a new Indictment including the additional information.

FOR THOSE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Motion in part;

I. ORDERS the Prosecution to file a new Revised Amended Indictment with the proposed additional details as submitted for paragraphs 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 54 of the Amended Indictment by 11 December 2006;

II. ORDERS the Prosecution to review its submission concerning paragraph 64 and make any appropriate additions to this paragraph in the new Revised Amended by 11 December 2006;

III. ORDERS that the Prosecution specify what crime or crimes, if any, the facts pleaded in paragraph 10 of the Indictment are meant to support in the new Revised Amended Indictment and include it, if appropriate, in the facts of the relevant count(s) by 11 December 2006.

IV. DENIES the remainder of the Motion.

Second Revised Amended Indictment (In conformity with Trial Chamber III Decision dated 7 December 2006) 11 December 2006 (ICTR-2001-63-I)

(Original : not specified)

I. The Charges

1. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, pursuant to the authority stipulated in Article 17 of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda ("the Statute") charges:

Siméon Nchamihigo with the following crimes:

Count 1 : genocide, pursuant to Articles 2 (3) (a) and 6 (1) of the Statute;

Count 2: murder as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Articles 3 (a) and 6 (1) of the Statute;

Count 3: extermination as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Articles 3 (b) and 6 (1) of the Statute and

Count 4: other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Articles 3 (i) and 6 (1) of the Statute.

II. The Accused

2. Siméon Nchamihigo was born on 8 September 1960 in Gatare commune, Cyangugu Préfecture (Rwanda). He was Substitut du Procureur [Assistant Prosecutor] at the Cyangugu Court of First Instance from sometime in 1991 until 17 July 1994.

3. Between 1 January and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo acted in his capacity of Substitut du Procureur in the Office of the Prosecutor of the Republic in Cyangugu on the basis of a forged diploma which he produced sometime in 1991 in support of his application for the post of Substitut du Procureur in Rwanda. He was investigated by the Deputy Prosecutor General Ntakirutimana Charles in connection with the forged diploma, but the investigation was stopped when a pro-MRND Deputy Prosecutor General, Musekura Jean Damascene, was appointed to replace Ntakirutimana Charles.

4. On an unknown date around mid-April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in his capacity of Substitut du Procureur, issued counterfeit warrants of arrest against Tutsi who had sought refuge at the Cyangugu Cathedral or at the Bishopric of Cyangugu, including Gapfumu, to enable and thus aid and abet officers from the office of the Prosecutor of the Republic, soldiers and Interahamwe to remove those refugees and kill them and they did so.

5. Similarly, on an unknown date around mid-April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in his capacity as Substitut du Procureur, issued counterfeit warrants of arrest against Tutsi who had been transferred to Kamarampaka Stadium from various places. On or around the same date, the members of the préfecture security council, including Siméon Nchamihigo, brought outside the stadium those Tutsi. Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to kill those Tutsi, or otherwise aided and abetted the killing of those Tutsi, resulting in the killing of those Tutsi by the Interahamwe.

6. From about 1992 until 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, although he was Substitut du Procureur, was also involved in political activities in Cyangugu Préfecture both for the MRND, President Juvénal Habyarimana's political party and the political party known as La Coalition pour la Défense de la République, or CDR. CDR was a Hutu extremist party and allied to MRND. It opposed parties that were in opposition to the MRND.

7. Between 1 January and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo was also a member of a clandestine group of Hutu civil servants working in Cyangugu, called Tuvindimwe, which was formed in 1991 or thereabouts. This group supported the MRND and CDR. Tuvindimwe recruited its members from the Préfecture, the Appeals Court, the parquet general [Public Prosecutor's office at the Appeal Court], the Court of First Instance and the parquet de la république [Public Prosecutor's office at the Court of First Instance]. Tutsi and moderate Hutu who opposed the MRND were excluded from Tuvindimwe because they were considered accomplices of the Inkotanyi, a term applied to the Tutsi-dominated Rwandan Patriotic Front, or RPF.

8. Between 1 February and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo was an Interahamwe leader in Cyangugu Préfecture. He recruited many young Hutu men as Interahamwe, including Jean de Dieu Utabazi, Janvier Borauzima, Faustin Sinashebeje and Joseph Habineza and he instructed Habimana Jean Bosco alias Masudi, a former soldier, in collaboration with Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Christophe Nyandwi and caporal Aimé, to train these, among other Interahamwe in Karambo military camp, to enable them to kill the Tutsi. In addition, Siméon Nchamihigo allowed Interahamwe to stay in his house in Cyangugu and he provided them with food and drink. He ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to kill the Tutsi, or otherwise, aided and abetted the killing of Tutsi, as described below in the concise statement of facts relating to the charges.

9. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo acted as a member of the préfecture security council of Cyangugu and participated in its meetings. The following persons, among others, were members of the préfecture security council: Emmanuel Bagambiki, Préfet of Cyangugu; Samuel Imanishimwe, commander of the Cyangugu military camp; Vincent Munyarugerero, commander of the Cyangugu gendarmerie; Bernadin Bayingana, President of the Cyangugu Court of First Instance; Paul Ndorimana, the Public Prosecutor of Cyangugu, who was often represented by Siméon Nchamihigo, and sous-Préfets Emmanuel Kamonyo, Théodore Munyangabe and François Nzeyimana. The préfecture security council met regularly to discuss matters relating to security in Cyangugu Prefecture. The préfecture security council was particularly active from 6 April 1994, following the death of President Habyarimana, until 17 July 1994. During this time it met more often and made decisions concerning the setting of roadblocks in Cyangugu, the transfer of refugees to Kamarampaka Stadium from locations where they had sought to escape the violence, the drawing of lists of Tutsi and moderate Hutu and the selection of individual refugees for removal from the Kamarampaka Stadium, as described below in the concise statements of the facts relating to the charges.

10. Paragraph moved to paragraph 20 (f).

III. General Allegations

11. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, and during all the periods referred to in this indictment, Rwandan citizens were identified according to the following ethnic or racial classifications: Tutsi, Hutu and Twa.

12. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, soldiers, Interahamwe and armed civilians attacked, killed or caused bodily or mental harm to members of the Tutsi ethnic group in Cyangugu Préfecture and throughout Rwandan, with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi ethnic group as such.

13. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, in Cyangugu Préfecture and throughout Rwandan, Interahamwe, soldiers and armed civilians murdered individually identified or targeted people or committed widespread killings, as part of widespread or systematic attacks against Tutsi civilians and/or Hutu opponents. As result of these attacks, Interahamwe, soldiers and armed civilians killed hundreds of thousands of Tutsi civilians and Hutu political opponents in Cyangugu Préfecture and throughout Rwanda.

IV Individual Criminal Responsibility

14, Pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, Siméon Nchamihigo is criminally responsible for the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, for planning, instigating, ordering, committing, or otherwise aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity. Siméon Nchamihigo ordered people over whom he had authority by virtue of his position described in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of this indictment, to commit the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, and instigated or otherwise aided and abetted those who were not under his authority to commit the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity.

15. In addition to his responsibility under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for having planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, Siméon Nchamihigo knowingly and willfully participated in a joint criminal enterprise, in his role as set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10 and 15 of this indictment. The purpose of the joint criminal enterprise was the destruction of the Tutsi racial or ethnic group in Cyangugu préfecture through the commission of the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity. This joint criminal enterprise came into existence on or about 6 April 1994 and continued until 17 July 1994.

16. Siméon Nchamihigo and the other members of the joint criminal enterprise shared the same intent to effect the common purpose. To fulfill the common purpose, Siméon Nchamihigo acted in concert with Interahamwe Christophe Nyandwi, Yusuf Munyakazi, Mubiligi Thompson, Pierre Munyandamutsa, alias Pressé, Mvuyekure Vincent, known as Tourné, Habimana Jean Bosco, alias Masudi, Bizimungu Anasthase, Nsengumuremyi Patrick, Sinashebeje Faustin, and Habirora Nehemi, among others, as well as other participants who were not Interahamwe, including Samuel Imanishimwe, commander of the Cyangugu military camp, Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Habimana Vedaste, and Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, among others.

17. In addition to his participation in a joint criminal enterprise as set out in paragraphs 15 and 16 above, Siméon Nchamihigo is responsible for the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity on the basis that these crimes were the natural and foreseeable consequences of the execution of the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise. Siméon Nchamihigo intended to further the common purpose of the joint criminal enterprise. In addition, it was foreseeable that the crimes of genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, extermination as a crime against humanity and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, might be perpetrated by one or other members of the group and Siméon Nchamihigo willingly took that risk.

18. The particulars that give rise to Siméon Nchamihigo's individual responsibility for the crimes charged are set out in this indictment as follows:
- For the crime of genocide in paragraphs 19 through 43;
- For the crime of murder as a crime against humanity in paragraphs 44 through 55;
- For the crime of extermination as a crime against humanity in paragraphs 56 through 69 and
- For the crime of other inhuman acts as a crime against humanity in paragraphs 67 through 70.

V Crimes charged and Concise Statement of Facts

Count 1: Genocide

19. The Prosecutor of the international Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo with genocide, a crime provided for in Article 2 (3) (a) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17 July 1994, in Cyangugu Préfecture (Rwanda), he was responsible for killing or causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the Tutsi population, with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, an ethnic or racial group as such, as described in the facts contained in paragraphs 20 through 43 of this indictment.

20. Following the death of the President of Rwanda, Juvenal Habyarimana, on 6 April 1994, the interim government formed on 8 April 1994 launched a national campaign aimed at mobilizing the government armed forces, civilian militia, Interahamwe, the local public administration and ordinary citizens to fight the Rwandan Patriotic Front, or RPF, a politico-military opposition group comprising mainly Tutsi. The Rwandan government armed forces and Interahamwe militia specifically targeted the Tutsi civilian population of Rwanda as domestic accomplices of an invading army, ibyitso, or categorically as a domestic enemy. Under the pretext of ensuring national defence, ordinary citizens of Rwanda, mainly Hutu, mobilized into action by the authorities, killed Tutsi and political opponents and looted their property. Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994 hundreds of thousands of Tutsi and moderate Hutu were killed as a result of this campaign. Siméon Nchamihigo participated in the organization and the implementation of this campaign as follows:

(a) On or about 14 April 1994, during meetings called by the Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki in the MRND office in Cyangugu, all zone supervisors, including Siméon Nchamihigo, were requested to report on the ongoing massacres in their zones. During the meeting, Siméon Nchamihigo reported that he was facing difficulties in attacking the Shangi parish as so many Tutsi had sought refuge there and that, according to him, it was not possible to kill all of them with traditional weapons. He claimed that he needed fire arms, such as rifles and grenades. These were later given to him by Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe in Karampo military camp Siméon Nchamihigo distributed the weapons to the Interahamwe and ordered or instigated them to attack the Shangi parish and to kill the Tutsi and they did so some time in April 1994 with Yussuf Munyakazi and others.

(b) In late April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo participated in a meeting at Gihundwe secteur office the purpose of which was to put in place security measures. Acting bourgmestre, Manase Buvugamenshi, presided over the meeting, which was attended by Védaste Habimana, Siméon Nchamihigo and Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe in Cyangugu préfecture, among others. During the meeting, Siméon Nchamihigo enquired about the security situation in the secteur and whether there were more Tutsi in hiding to be killed. Védaste Habimana replied that three days would suffice to "mop up" the secteur. In the context of the meeting, "to mop up" was understood to mean "to finish killing all the Tutsi." The "mopping up" of the secteur did in fact continue. By his enquiries regarding the remaining Tutsi to be killed, Siméon Nchamihigo instigated and aided and abetted the killing of these Tutsi.

(c) Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe at the préfecture level, Habimana Jean Bosco, alias Masudi, a former soldier and caporal Aimé, among others, organized and supervised military training for Interahamwe in Cyangugu préfecture namely: Jean de Dieu Utabazi, Janvier Borauzima, Faustin Sinashebeje, Joseph Habineza amongst others to enable and thus to aid and abet them to kill the Tutsi.

(d) On unknown dates in April and May 1994 Siméon Nchamihigo was involved with Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, Lieutenant Samuel Immanshimwe, and others, in the drawing up of lists of influential Tutsi and Hutu political opponents, on the basis of which the préfecture security council, including Siméon Nchamihigo, identified persons to be killed. As a result, Siméon Nchamihigo planned, ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the Interahamwe and other Hutu civilians in killing many Tutsi and Hutu political opponents, as described further below in paragraphs 20 (e), 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 40,41, 42 and 43 of this indictment.

(e) Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo kept a stockpile of weapons in his residence in Cyangugu. He distributed weapons to the Interahamwe who included David Habanakwabo and Jeremy Nsengiyumva and others and ordered or instigated them to go and kill specifically named people, Tutsi and Hutu political opponents, or launch large-scale attacks against Tutsi, who were sometimes assembled in specific places, such as parishes and schools as described in paragraphs 28, 32, 33, 34, 35 and 37 of this indictment.

(f) On or about 11 April 1994, a meeting was called by the préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki in the préfecture office which was attended by the Sous-Préfets, bourgmestres, religious authorities, prominent businessmen who financed the MRND political party, the Interahamwe leaders and political authorities of the MRND, CDR, MDR-power and PL-power parties. Civil servants, including Siméon Nchamihigo, were also present at the meeting. During this meeting, Siméon Nchamihigo and Callixte Nsabimana, manager of Shangasha Tea Factory, were appointed supervisors for the security of Gisuma and Gafunzo zones. At the end of the meeting, all zone supervisors, including Siméon Nchamihigo, went to Karambo military camp to receive weapons from Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe. Shortly thereafter, the zone supervisors, including Siméon Nchamihigo, distributed these weapons to Anasthase Bizimungu and other Interahamwe posted in their respective zones and ordered them to kill the Tutsi with those weapons.

21. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to erect several roadblocks in Cyangugu town and supervised the effective manning of these roadblocks. Such roadblocks included a roadblock near the Kamembe Market and the Pendeza roadblock on the road to the Airport as well as the Kadashya roadblock, manned by an Interahamwe leader, Pierre Munyandamutsa alias Pressé, an associate of Siméon Nchamihigo, the Cuyapa roadblock manned by Mvuyekure Vincent, alias Tourné, and the Gatandara roadblock, manned by an Interahamwe, Habimana Jean Bosco. The aim of the roadblocks was to stop the Tutsi and Hutu opponents from fleeing to safer areas and to kill them. Siméon Nchamihigo controlled and supervised the roadblocks by inspecting them several times a day, and he ordered or instigated the Interahamwe who manned the roadblocks to kill the Tutsi attempting to pass through. Siméon Nchamihigo's Interahamwe killed many Tutsi at the roadblocks, sometimes in the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo. The Préfet of Cyangugu, Emmanuel Bagambiki appointed people like Ndagijimana Shabani to remove dead bodies at the roadblocks and throughout the Cyangugu city in this period. At the Gatandara roadblock, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to kill many Tutsi who had been selected in the Karampaka Stadium. The Cyapa roadlock was erected just next to Siméon Nchamihigo's residence. Siméon Nchamihigo ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of Tutsi at that roadblock, including the catholic priest, Father Boneza Joseph.

22. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo spoke to Thomas Mubiligi and a group of young Hutu in Kamembe and ordered or instigated them to look for all the Tutsi and RPF accomplices and hand them over to the Interahamwe and to set ablaze all the places where the opposition was well-established. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's orders or instigation, the Interahamwe tracked down and killed many people, mostly Tutsi men, women and children, on or about 7 April 1994 and in the months that followed.

23. On or about 15 April 1994, in Kamembe, Siméon Nchamihigo arrived at a road block near the Banque de Kigali manned by about 20 people, comprised of Interahamwe and young armed Hutu alike. He read out to these people names of Tutsi who were reportedly hiding in Kamembe town, and ordered or instigated that they be hunted down. The names read out from the list by Siméon Nchamihigo included Gasali Aloys, Emilien Nsengumuremyi, Isidore Kagenza and Judge Jean-Marie Vianney Tabaro. After reading out the names and before leaving the roadblock, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to look for Tutsi and to kill them and aided and abetted by providing them with two grenades. These Interahamwe then hunted down and killed the Tutsi.

24. On an unknown date in May 1994, in execution of Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation issued at a road block near the Banque de Kigali in Kamembe on or about 15 April 1994, the Interahamwe including Mvuyekure Vincent alias Tourné found Emilien Nsengumuremyi and killed him. They continued to look for the other Tutsi whose names had been read out by Siméon Nchamihigo, in order to kill them.

25. On or about 28 or 30 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to a roadblock near Paul Ndorimana's house manned by the Interahamwe, including Ndorimana Martin, and ordered or instigated them to kill the accountant of Cyangugu Préfecture, Kayihura Canisus, a Tutsi, who had supposedly managed to obtain an identity card indicating that he belonged to the Hutu ethnic group.

26. On an unknown date in May 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to a roadblock in Kamembe and ordered or instigated the Interahamwe manning the roadblock who included Vincent Mvuyekure alias Tourné and Thomas Mubiligi to kill a Tutsi priest of the Mibirizi Catholic parish, whose name he did not reveal but who, according to him, was expected to pass by the roadblock in a vehicle. Siméon Nchamihigo had issued similar instructions at all the roadblocks that he supervised and he had threatened to kill the Interahamwe if they let the Tutsi priest through. In the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo, the Interahamwe killed the priest later that day at the roadblock erected at the entrance to Kamembe next to the residence of the accused and manned by the Interahamwe Habirora Nehemi and Patrick Nsengumuremyi. Later on the Catholic priest was known to be Father Joseph Boneza.

27. On an unknown date in May 1994, at the Cyapa roadblock manned by the Interahamwe including Vincent Mvuyekure alias Tourné, Patrick Nsengumuremyi and the gendarmes, Siméon Nchamihigo took into the car he was driving two young Tutsi students, Uzier and Innocent, who were seeking a lift to go back home. Siméon Nchamihigo handed the two students over to the Interahamwe and ordered or instigated them to kill the Tutsi students, and they did so.

28. After President Juvénal Habyarimana's death on 6 April 1994, a large number of Tutsi and Hutu political opponents fleeing acts of violence and massacres, sought refuge in places considered safe in Cyangugu such as the main cathedral, Mibirizi parish, Hanika parish, Nkanka parish, Shangi parish, Nyamasheke parish, the Mibirizi hospital, the Gihundwe school and the Nyakanyinya school, among others. Other Tutsi and Hutu political opponents remained in their homes. Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza alias Bikomago, Sous-Préfet Theodore Muyengabe and Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe at the préfecture level, ordered or instigated the Interahamwe including Kamenero to launch attacks against Tutsi and Hutu political opponents who had sought refuge in safe places and also on individuals in their homes. Siméon Nchamihigo personally led all these attacks, except the attack at Nkanka parish. During these attacks, Siméon Nchamihigo and the Interahamwe killed many people, as described in paragraphs 29 through 37 of this indictment.

29. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe including Christophe Nyandwi among others in an attack on the residence of Doctor Nagafizi, a Tutsi regional chief medical officer of Cyangugu and member of the Parti Libéral, allegedly with RPF leanings, and an attack on the residence of a businessman called Kongo, a Hutu and member of the PSD political party. During the attacks, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, killed Doctor Nagazafi and Kongo.

30. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RPF. During the attack, the Interahamwe killed the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba and looted their house. The Interahamwe killed Trojean Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

31. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, including Habineza Joseph, alias Sekuse, to kill Theoneste Karangwa, an influential Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. Siméon Nchamihigo said that the Interahamwe should not to kill Karangwa's wife because she was not Tutsi. The Interahamwe then attacked and killed Theoneste Karangwa and his driver Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo seized Karangwa's vehicle and later took it to Bukavu in neighboring Zaire.

32 On or about 12 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, including Bizimungu Anasthase, and communal police, gendarmes and military reservists to attack the Nyakanyinka school and kill the Tutsi who sought refuge there. The attackers received from Siméon Nchamihigo grenades and rifles which were used during the attack and were thus aided and abetted by him in the attack. As a result, the Interahamwe and other attackers killed about 600 Tutsi.

33. On or about 12 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Samuel Imanishimwe, commander of Cyangugu military camp, and the Sous-Préfet Kamonyo, ordered or instigated the Interahamwe including Uwimana Jean Charles, alias Karoli, and a group of Hutu civilians, to attack the Hanika parish and kill all the refugees who were supposed to be Tutsi. As a result of Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the attackers killed about 1,500 people, including children and the aged.

34. On a day sometime between 14 and 15 April 1994, at about 8 o'clock in the morning, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi (the militiamen of the CDR political party) including Ndorimana Martin, in an attack against Tutsi of the Gihundwe Secteur, particularly targeting Tutsi of Kabugi, Ruganda, Murindi and Murangi Cellules. During the attack, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, killed a large number of Tutsi and destroyed their houses.

35. On or about 18 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Sergeant Major Marc Rubenziza, alias Bikomago and Sous-Préfet Theodore Muyengabe, led a group of Interahamwe which included Gendarme Mandela and Anathase Bizimungu, among others, that attacked Mibirizi convent and Mibirizi hospital, where many Tutsi had sought refuge. During the attacks, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, massacred the Tutsi refugees and looted their property. After the attacks, Siméon Nchamihigo rewarded the killers with beer.

36. In late April or early May 1994, three young Tutsi girls, Mukashema Josephine, Marie and Helene, sought refuge in the residence of a certain Hutu named Jonas. Siméon Nchamihigo accused Jonas and his brother Niyikiza Jonathan of hiding Inyenzi. Siméon Nchamihigo, assisted by one of his Interahamwe namely Banga Kaboyi Johnson, removed the three Tutsi girls from Jonas's house and took them away to an unknown place. On the same day, Siméon Nchamihigo told Niyikiza Jonathan that the Inyenzi had been killed and threatened Niyikiza Jonathan to kill him if he continued to hide Tutsi. By his actions, Siméon Nchamihigo committed, ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of these Tutsi girls.

37. Between 20 and 25 June 1994 or thereabouts, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe in his area, including Jean-Paul, Mvuyekure Vincent, alias Tourné, Nzeyimana, among others, to go to Kibuye together with Yusufu Munyakazi and his Interahamwe, and participate in a number of attacks to kill Tutsi who had sought refuge at Bisesero in Kibuye Préfecture. The Interahamwe travelled in an Onatracom bus to Bisesero and assisted the Kibuye Interahamwe in killing the Tutsi. Together, they killed many Tutsi. On the return of the Interahamwe from Kibuye after one or two days, Siméon Nchamihigo rewarded them with drinks and food at the Gihundwe school.

38. After President Juvénal Habyarimana's death on 6 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council, including Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki and Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, the Cyangugu military camp commander, decided to move refugees from their places of refuge and assembled them at Kamarampaka Stadium in Cyangugu, ostensibly with the purpose of providing the refugees with better security but with the aim of eliminating those who were suspected of being accomplices of the Inkotanyi.

39. On or about 14 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and other members of the préfecture security council including Emmanuel Bagambiki moved the refugees from the Gihundwe school to Kamarampaka stadium.

40. On or about 15 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and other members of the préfecture security council including Emmanuel Bagambiki moved the refugees from Cyangugu Cathedral and took them to Kamarampaka Stadium. The refugees transferred to the stadium that day included Baziruwiha Marianne, Nkusi Georges, Albert Twagiramungu, Jean Fidèle Murekezi, his wife Kanyamibwa Christine and their children, among others.

41. On the 16th of April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council, including Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Christophe Nyandwi, President of the Interahamwe at the Préfecture level, Major Munyarugerero, Theodeore Munyangabe, sous-préfet, Paul Ndorimana, Prosecutor, Simeon Remesh, Headmaster of Gihundwe Primary School, Ngagi, customs officer and Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza went to Kamarampaka Stadium. The commander of the gendarmerie camp, using a megaphone, called out names of civilians who were alleged to be Inkotanyi accomplices from a list that had been prepared by the préfecture security council, including Siméon Nchamihigo. The list included: Benoit Sibomana, Jean-Fidèle Murekezi, Apiane Ndorimana, Albert Mugabo, Albert Twagiramungu, Ibambasi, Bernard Nkara, Trojean Nzisabira, Rémy Mihigo, Dominique Gapeli, Albert Mugabo and Marianne Baziruwiha. All of the individuals named on the list were Tutsi, except for Marianne Baziruwiha who was a Hutu and an influential member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. The individuals were asked to come out, and were escorted out of the Stadium by Siméon Nchamihigo and the préfecture delegation. Outside the stadium, about four people of Tutsi origin, including Vital Nibagwire, Ananie Gatake, Jean-Marie Vianney Habimana alias Gapfumu, whom Siméon Nchamihigo and the other members of the préfecture delegation had brought from the cathedral, were waiting in vehicles. Siméon Nchamihigo and the préfecture delegation instructed soldiers to take the selected 16 people to the gendarmerie camp purportedly for questioning.

42. When, on or about 16 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council took the 16 selected persons to the gendarmerie camp, they removed Marianne Baziruwiha from the group and instructed the drivers to proceed with the remaining 15, all Tutsi, to a place near Cyangugu prison. Siméon Nchamihigo then ordered or instigated the Interahamwe whom he had brought along with him from Mutongo Centre earlier the same day, including Bizimungu Anasthase and Jean Bosco Habimana to kill the 15 remaining Tutsi. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the Interahamwe killed the 15 Tutsi near Cyangugu prison and threw their dead bodies into a latrine in Gapfumu's compound

43. On or about 18 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went back to Kamarampaka Stadium in a delegation of the préfecture security council, comprising Préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki, Samuel Imanishimwe, and Sous-Préfet Emmanuel Kamonyo, among others. Bagambiki, using a megaphone, called out about 20 names from a list which the préfecture security council had drawn up. They took the listed people out of the stadium. Some people of Tutsi origin, such as Antoine Nsengumuremyi and Felicien, whose names had not been called out, were nevertheless taken out of Kamarampaka Stadium that day, together with the others. These people were subsequently killed and their bodies thrown into the Gataranga River or into mass graves. Siméon Nchamihigo and the préfecture delegation aided and abetted the killing of all those who had been taken out of the stadium.

Count 2: Crime against humanity : Murder

44. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo with murder, as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Article 3 (a) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17 July 1994 he was responsible for the murder of a number of Tutsi and of people considered as Tutsis, as well as Hutu opponents, particularly in Cyangugu Préfecture, as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on ethnic, racial or political grounds, as set out in paragraphs 45 through 55 of this indictment.

Concise statement of the facts relating to Count 2

45. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe including Nyandwi Christophe in an attack on the residence of Doctor Nagafizi, a Tutsi regional chief medical officer of Cyangugu and member of the Parti Liberal, with RPF leanings, and an attack on the residence of a businessman called Kongo, a Hutu and member of the PSD political party. During the attacks, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo and ordered, instigated or aided or abetted by him, killed Doctor Nagafizi and Kongo.

46. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba, a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RPF. During the attack, the Interahamwe killed the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba and looted their house. The Interahamwe killed Trojean Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

47. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo in collaboration with Nyandwi Christophe, an Interahamwe leader at the préfecture level, ordered or instigated Interahamwe including Joseph Habineza, among others to kill Zacharie Serubyogo, a Hutu trader and MDR political party member of Parliament, together with other people. The Interahamwe then killed Zacharie Serubyogo and many unknown people near Lake Kivu in the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo. After the killing of Zacharie Serubyogo, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered his Interahamwe to look for a Tutsi by the name of Theoneste Karangwa and kill him.

48. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated Interahamwe, including Habineza Joseph, alias Sekuse, to kill Théoneste Karangwa, an influential Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. Siméon Nchamihigo said that the Interahamwe should not to kill Karangwa's wife because she was not Tutsi. The Interahamwe then attacked and killed Théoneste Karangwa and his driver Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo seized Karangwa's vehicle and later took it to Bukavu in neighboring Zaire.

49. Deleted.

50. Between 15 and 17 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated a group of Interahamwe who included David Habanakwabo, Rusine and Nzeyimana, to kill a young Hutu student called Jean de Dieu Gakwandi, whom he had described as a traitor and an accomplice of the Tutsi. To this end, Siméon Nchamihigo gave a grenade to someone called David Habanakwabo, alias Vicky, and ordered him to join other Interahamwe in order to kill Jean de Dieu Gakwandi. The assailants hit Jean de Dieu Gakwandi with a club on the head. Jean de Dieu Gakwandi sustained serious injuries. The assailants left him there, unconscious, thinking he was dead.

51. On or about 28 or 30 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to a roadblock manned by Interahamwe, including Ndorimana Martin, and ordered or instigated them to kill the accountant of Cyangugu Préfecture, Canisius Kayihura, a Tutsi civilian, who had managed to obtain an identity card indicating that he belonged to the Hutu ethnic group.

52. In late April or early May 1994, three young Tutsi girls, Mukashema Josephine, Marie and Helene, sought refuge in the residence of a certain Hutu named Jonas. Siméon Nchamihigo accused Jonas and his brother Niyikiza Jonathan of hiding Inyenzi. Siméon Nchamihigo assisted by one of his Interahamwe namely Banga Kaboyi Johnson, removed the three Tutsi girls from Jonas's house, took them away to an unknown place. On his return the same day, Siméon Nchamihigo told Niyikiza Jonathan that the Inyenzi had been killed and he threatened Niyikiza Jonathan to kill him if he continued to hide Tutsi. By his actions, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of these Tutsi girls.

53. On an unknown date in May 1994, in execution of Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation issued at a road block in Kamembe on or about 15 April 1994, the Interahamwe including Christophe Nyandwi, found Emilien Nsengumuremyi and killed him. They continued to look for the other Tutsi whose names had been read out by Siméon Nchamihigo, in order to kill them because of their Tutsi origin.

54. On an unknown date in May 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo went to the roadblocks in Kamembe that he supervised, including the Cuyapa and the Banque de Kigali roadblocks, and ordered or instigated the Interahamwe manning the roadblocks, including Vincent Mvuyekure alias Tourné and Thomas Mubiligi, to kill a Tutsi priest of the Mibirizi Catholic parish, Father Joseph Boneza, who was expected to pass by the roadblock in a vehicle. Siméon Nchamihigo threatened to kill the Interahamwe if they let the Tutsi priest through. Later that day and in the presence of Siméon Nchamihigo, the Interahamwe killed Father Joseph Boneza at the roadblock erected at the entrance to Kamembe next to the residence of the accused and manned by the Interahamwe Habirora Nehemi and Patrick Nsengumuremyi.

55. On an unknown date in May 1994, at the Cyapa roadblock manned by the Interahamwe including Nsengumuremyi Patrick and the gendarmes, Siméon Nchamihigo took into the car he was driving, two young Tutsi students, Uzier and Innocent, who were seeking a lift to go back home. Siméon Nchamihigo handed the two boys over to the Interahamwe and ordered or instigated them to kill the Tutsi students and they did so.

Count 3: Crime against humanity : Extermination

56. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo with extermination as a crime against humanity, a crime stipulated in Article 3 (b) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17 July 1994, particularly in Cyangugu préfecture, Siméon Nchamihigo was responsible for the large scale killing of Tutsi or of people considered as Tutsi and of Hutu opponents, as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds, as described below in the concise statement of facts relating to the charges in paragraphs 57 through 65 of this indictment.

Concise statement of the facts relating to Count 3

57. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, in particular from 7 April to the end of May 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, in collaboration with Sergeant Major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, and Christophe Nyandwi, president of the Interahamwe at the préfecture level, ordered or instigated the Interahamwe amongst whom was Kamenero, to launch attacks against Tutsi civilians and Hutu opponents refugees in Hanika parish, Mibirizi parish, Mibirizi hospital, Nkanka parish, Shangi parish and Nyamasheke parish among other places where those people had sought refuge including their homes. Siméon Nchamihigo personally led all of these attacks, except the attack at Nkanka parish. During the attacks, the Interahamwe and other Hutu civilians led by Siméon Nchamihigo killed many civilians who thus were targeted as described in paragraphs 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64 and 65 of this indictment.

58. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo arrived at a road block manned by a group of young Hutu in Kamembe and ordered or instigated them to look for all the Tutsi and RPF accomplices and hand them over to the Interahamwe and to set ablaze all the places where the opposition was well-established. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's orders or instigation, the Interahamwe tracked down and killed many civilians, mostly Tutsi men, women and children, after or around 7 April 1994.

59. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RFP. During the attack, the Interahamwe killed the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba and looted their house. The Interahamwe killed Trojean Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

60. On or about 12 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated Interahamwe, including Bizimungu Anasthase, and communal police, gendarmes and military reservists to attack the Nyakanyinka school and kill the Tutsi civilians who sought refuge there. The attackers received from Siméon Nchamihigo grenades and rifles which were used during the attack, and were thus aided and abetted by him in the attack. As a result, the Interahamwe and other attackers killed about 600 Tutsi civilians.

61. On a day sometime between 14 and 15 April 1994, at about 8 o'clock in the morning, Siméon Nchamihigo, leading a group of Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi (the militiamen of the CDR political party) including Ndorimana Martin, launched an attack against Tutsi of the Gihundwe Secteur, particularly targeting Tutsi of Kabugi, Ruganda, Murindi and Murangi Cellules. During the attack, the Interahamwe led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, killed a large number of Tutsi and destroyed their houses.

62. On or about 15 April 1994 in Kamembe, Siméon Nchamihigo arrived at a road block manned by about 20 people comprised of Interahamwe and young armed Hutu alike. He read out to these people names of Tutsi who were reportedly hiding in Kamembe town, and ordered or instigated that they be hunted down. The names read out from the list by Siméon Nchamihigo included Gasali Aloys, Emilien Nsengumuremyi, Isidore Kagenza and Judge Jean-Marie Vianney Tabaro. After reading out the names and before leaving the road block, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe to look for Tutsi and to kill them and aided and abetted by providing them with two grenades. These Interahamwe then hunted down and killed the Tutsi.

63. On an unknown date in April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo led a group of Interahamwe, which included Anathase Bizimungu in their number, accompanied by Gendarme Mandela, in an attack on Mibirizi convent, where many Tutsi civilians had sought refuge. During the attack, the Interahamwe, led by Siméon Nchamihigo, and ordered, instigated or aided and abetted by him, massacred the Tutsi refugees and looted their property.

64. Deleted.

65. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo in collaboration with lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and Yusuf Munyakazi, went to Cyangugu prison and ordered the director of the prison to remove about 13 FAR soldiers who had been sent to jail for their alleged complicity with RPF. The detainees were taken to the Préfecture office. Siméon Nchamihigo then ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of the 13 FAR soldiers. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order, instigation or aiding and abetting, the 13 FAR soldiers who were no longer combatants, were killed and their dead bodies thrown into a garden of the Préfecture near the lake. Later on the same day, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated other prisoners, including Ndamira Damien, to remove the dead bodies of the 13 FAR soldiers from the garden and bury them along with the dead bodies of 8 unknown persons found at the same place.

Count 4: Crime against humanity : other inhumane acts

66. The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Siméon Nchamihigo of other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, a crime stipulated in Article 3 (i) of the Statute, in that between 6 April and 17 July 1994, throughout Rwanda, particularly in Cyangugu Préfecture, Siméon Nchamihigo was responsible for committing inhumane acts against Tutsi civilians or of people considered as Tutsi, and of Hutu opponents, as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds, as outlined in paragraphs 67 through 70 of this indictment.

Concise statement of the facts relating to Count 4

67. On or about 7 or 9 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated Interahamwe, including Habineza Joseph, alias Sekuse, to kill Theoneste Karangwa, an influential Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party in Cyangugu. Siméon Nchamihigo said that the Interahamwe should not to kill Theoneste Karangwa's wife because she was not Tutsi. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the Interahamwe attacked and caught Theoneste Karangwa in his house. The Interahamwe then covered Theoneste Karangwa with his own mattress, poured fuel into the mattress and burnt Theoneste Karangwa, causing him great pain and suffering before his death. The Interahamwe also killed Theoneste Karangwa's driver by the name of Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo then seized Theoneste Karangwa's vehicle and later took it with him to Bukavu in neighboring Zaire, together with other vehicles and various items looted during the attacks.

68. On or about 7 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated the Interahamwe, namely Mubiligi Thompson, to attack the residence of Trojean Ndayisaba, a Tutsi trader and member of the PSD political party and to kill him. Trojean Ndayisaba was accused of receiving money from the RFP. During the attack, the Interahamwe burnt the whole family of Trojean Ndayisaba inside their vehicle causing them great pain and suffering before their deaths. The Interahamwe killed Trojean Ndayisaba himself afterwards on an unknown date between the end of April 1994 and early July 1994.

69. Between 15 and 17 April 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo ordered or instigated a group of Interahamwe which included in their number David Habanakwabo, Rusine and Nzeyimana, among others, to kill a young Hutu student called Jean de Dieu Gakwandi, whom he had described as a traitor and an accomplice of the Tutsi. To this end, Siméon Nchamihigo gave a grenade to someone called David Habanakwabo, alias Vicky, and ordered him to join other Interahamwe in order to kill Jean de Dieu Gakwandi. The assailants hit Jean de Dieu Gakwandi with a club on the head causing him pain and suffering. Jean de Dieu Gakwandi sustained serious injuries. The assailants left him there, unconscious, thinking he was dead.

70. On 16 April 1994 or thereabouts, Siméon Nchamihigo and other members of the préfecture security council, including Lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe and Christophe Nyandwi, removed from Karampaka Stadium about 15 Tutsi and 1 Hutu woman by the name of Marianne Baziruwiha, and took them to a place near the prison after dropping off Marianne Baziruwiha at the gendarmerie camp. Among the 15 Tutsi who were removed from the stadium by Siméon Nchamihigo and others, were Jean-Fidele Murekezi, Albert Twagiramumgu and Gapfumu. Siméon Nchamihigo then ordered or instigated the Interahamwe whom he had brought along with him from Mutongo Centre earlier the same day, including Bizimungu Anasthase, to kill the 15 Tutsi. Following Siméon Nchamihigo's order or instigation, the Interahamwe killed the 15 Tutsi near Cyangugu prison and threw their dead bodies into a latrine in Gapfumu's compound; before doing so the Interahamwe removed the genitals of Jean-Fidele Murekezi and Albert Twagiramungu and the heart of Gapfumu.

The acts and omissions of Siméon Nchamihigo set out herein are punishable pursuant to Articles 22 and 23 of the Statute.

LE TRIBUNAL PÉNAL INTERNATIONAL POUR LE RWANDA (le « Tribunal »),

SIEGEANT en la personne du juge Erik Møse, désigné par la Chambre de première instance en vertu de l'article 73 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement ») du Tribunal,

SAISI de la Requête de la Défense aux fins de fixation de la date d'ouverture du procès, déposée le 6 mars 2006,

VU la Réponse du Procureur, déposée le 8 mars 2006,

STATUE CI-APRÈS sur la Requête.

Introduction

1. Le 29 juin 2001 a eu lieu la comparution initiale de l'accusé qui a alors plaidé non coupable des trois chefs figurant dans l'acte d'accusation. La Défense se plaint que, depuis lors, le dossier n'a pas progressé et demande la fixation d'une date pour l'ouverture du procès. Elle demande en particulier que le procès commence en septembre 2006 et qu'une conférence préalable au procès soit programmée en conséquence. Le Procureur indique sa volonté de faire avancer la procédure et propose de tenir une conférence de mise en état, étant donné qu'une conférence préalable au procès est prématurée.

Délibérations

2. Lors de la comparution initiale de l'accusé, le Président de Chambre a déclaré : « La date du procès sera fixée plus tard »[1]. Cette indication répond aux exigences de l'article 62 (A) du Règlement et est conforme à la jurisprudence du Tribunal[2].

3. La Chambre est consciente du droit de l'accusé d'être jugé sans retard excessif. La date de commencement de tout procès dépend de divers facteurs, dont certains ne peuvent être déterminés sans consultation avec les parties. Afin de faciliter ladite consultation, la Chambre a chargé le Greffe de s'assurer de la disponibilité des parties pour la tenue d'une conférence de mise en état. La Défense a fait savoir qu'elle pouvait être disponible à partir du 15 mai 2006, et la conférence a été prévue pour le 19 mai 2006. Fixer une date pour l'ouverture du procès avant cette consultation serait prématuré,

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

DIT la requête prématurée.

Arusha, le 21 avril 2006.

Décision sur la requête aux fins de prorogation du délai imparti pour répondre 28 juin 2006 (ICTR-2001-63-I)

(Original : Anglais)

Chambre de première instance I

Juge : Erik Møse, Président

Siméon Nchamihigo – Prorogation de délai – Importance des modifications proposées à l'acte d'accusation, Importance et complexité de l'affaire – Requête acceptée en partie

Instrument international cité :

Règlement de procédure et de preuve, Art. 73

LE TRIBUNAL PENAL INTERNATIONAL POUR LE RWANDA,

SIEGEANT en Chambre constituée du juge Erik Møse, désigné par la Chambre de première instance en application de l'article 73 du Règlement de procédure et de preuve du Tribunal,

SAISI de la « Requête de la Défense aux fins de demander l'extension du délai pour répondre à la requête du Procureur en modification de l'acte d'accusation », déposée le 11 mai 2006,

CONSIDERANT la réponse du Procureur déposée le 15 mai 2006,

STATUE A PRESENT sur la requête.

1. L'acte d'accusation établi contre l'accusé est daté du 29 juin 2001. Le 5 mai 2006, le Procureur a déposé une requête aux fins d'être autorisé à modifier l'acte d'accusation.[1] Dans sa requête, la Défense demande que le délai qui lui est imparti pour répondre à la requête du Procureur soit reporté au 17 juillet 2006. Elle a par la suite indiqué à la Chambre qu'elle serait en mesure de déposer une réponse le 2 juillet 2006.

2. La Défense se plaint également de ne pas avoir reçu la version française du projet d'acte d'accusation modifié. La Chambre note que le 17 mai 2006, le Procureur a déposé ladite traduction.

3. Au vu des modifications proposées, parmi lesquelles figure notamment un chef d'accusation supplémentaire, et étant donné l'importance et la complexité de l'affaire, la Chambre convient que le délai réglementaire de cinq jours est trop court pour préparer une réponse adéquate. En conséquence, la Défense aura jusqu'au 3 juillet 2006 pour déposer sa réponse.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE :

[1] Nchamihigo, Requête du Procureur aux fins d'être autorisé à modifier l'acte d'accusation (Chambre de première instance), 5 mai 2006.

FAIT DROIT en partie à la requête et prolonge le délai jusqu'au 3 juillet 2006.

Arusha, le 28 juin 2006.

Acte d'accusation modifié (Conformément à la décision rendue par la Chambre de première instance I le 14 juillet 2006) 25 juillet 2006 (ICTR-2001-63-I)

(Original : Anglais)

I. Accusations

1. Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda, en vertu des pouvoirs que lui confère l'article 17 du Statut du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda (le « Statut »), accuse

Siméon Nchamihigo

des crimes suivants :

Premier chef d'accusation : génocide, en application des articles 2 (3) (a) et 6 (1) du Statut ;

Deuxième chef d'accusation : assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, en application des articles 3 (a) et 6 (1) du Statut ;

Troisième chef d'accusation : extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité, en application des articles 3 (b) et 6 (1) du Statut ;

Quatrième chef d'accusation : autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité, en application des articles 3 (i) et 6 (1) du Statut.

II. L'accusé

2. Né le 8 septembre 1960 au Rwanda dans la commune de Gatare (préfecture de Cyangugu), Siméon Nchamihigo a occupé le poste de substitut du procureur de la République près le tribunal de première instance de Cyangugu de 1991 au 17 juillet 1994.

3. Entre le 1er janvier et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a exercé la fonction de substitut du procureur au parquet de la République de Cyangugu sur la base d'un faux diplôme qu'il avait produit en 1991 à l'appui de sa candidature au poste de substitut du procureur au Rwanda. Le procureur général adjoint Charles Ntakirutimana avait ouvert une enquête sur l'affaire de son faux diplôme, mais cette enquête a été arrêtée à la suite du remplacement de Charles Ntakirutimana par un procureur général adjoint proche du MRND nommé Jean Damascène Musekura.

4. À une date inconnue située vers la mi-avril 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, en sa qualité de substitut du procureur, a émis de faux mandats d'arrêt contre des Tutsis qui s'étaient réfugiés à la cathédrale ou à l'évêché de Cyangugu, notamment Gapfumu, afin de permettre à des fonctionnaires en service au parquet de la République, à des militaires et à des Interahamwe de les enlever pour les tuer et ils l'ont fait. Par cet acte, l'accusé entendait aider et encourager ces fonctionnaires, militaires et Interahamwe à enlever les réfugiés en question pour les tuer.

6. D'une date située vers 1992 au 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, en dépit de sa qualité de substitut du procureur, a participé à des activités politiques dans la préfecture de Cyangugu tant pour le compte du MRND, le parti du Président Juvénal Habyarimana, que pour celui du parti politique dénommé « Coalition pour la défense de la République » (CDR). Parti extrémiste hutu, la CDR était l'alliée du MRND et combattait les partis opposés au MRND.

7. Entre le 1er janvier et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo était également membre d'un groupe clandestin de fonctionnaires hutus en poste à Cyangugu, dénommé Tuvindimwe, qui avait été créé aux alentours de 1991. Ce groupe soutenait le MRND et la CDR. Il recrutait ses membres à la préfecture, à la cour d'appel, au parquet général, au tribunal de première instance et au parquet de la République. Les Tutsis et les Hutus modérés opposés au MRND n'étaient pas admis dans les rangs de Tuvindimwe, puisqu'ils étaient considérés comme complices des Inkotanyi, terme désignant les membres du Front patriotique rwandais (FPR) composé en majorité de Tutsis.

8. Entre le 1er février et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo était l'un des chefs des Interahamwe de la préfecture de Cyangugu. Il a recruté de nombreux jeunes hommes hutus comme Interahamwe et a demandé à un ancien militaire nommé Jean Bosco Habimana, alias Masudi, de former les Interahamwe au camp militaire de Karambo, en collaboration avec le sergent-chef Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Christophe Nyandwi et le caporal Aimé, pour leur permettre de tuer les Tutsis. En outre, il a hébergé des Interahamwe à Cyangugu et leur donnait de la nourriture et de la boisson. Il a ordonné à ces Interahamwe de tuer les Tutsis, les a incités à agir de la sorte ou les a de toute autre manière aidés et encouragés à le faire, comme le Procureur le précisera plus loin dans l'exposé succinct des faits incriminés.

9. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a joué le rôle de membre du conseil de sécurité préfectoral de Cyangugu et a participé aux réunions de ce conseil. Le conseil de sécurité préfectoral était composé des personnes suivantes, pour ne citer que celles-ci : Emmanuel Bakambiki, préfet de Cyangugu, Samuel Imanishimwe, commandant du camp militaire de Cyangugu, Vincent Munyarugerero, commandant de l'unité de gendarmerie de Cyangugu, Bernadin Bayingana, président du tribunal de première instance de Cyangugu, Paul Ndorimana, procureur de la République de Cyangugu souvent représenté par Siméon Nchamihigo, et les sous-préfets Emmanuel Kamonyo, Théodore Munyangabe et François Nzeyimana. Ses membres se réunissaient régulièrement pour délibérer sur les questions touchant à la sécurité dans la préfecture de Cyangugu. Le conseil de sécurité préfectoral a été particulièrement actif du 6 avril – après la mort du Président Habyarimana – au 17 juillet 1994. Au cours de cette période, il siégeait plus souvent et a pris certaines décisions concernant la mise en place de barrages routiers à Cyangugu, le transfert au stade Kamarampaka des réfugiés qui s'étaient mis à l'abri des violences dans tel ou tel lieu d'asile, l'établissement de listes de Tutsis et de Hutus modérés ainsi que le choix des divers réfugiés qui seraient enlevés du stade susmentionné, comme le Procureur le précisera plus loin dans l'exposé succinct des faits incriminés.

10. Le 11 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, le préfet Emmanuel Bakambiki a convoqué au bureau préfectoral une réunion à laquelle ont participé les sous-préfets, les bourgmestres, les autorités religieuses, les commerçants de premier plan qui finançaient le MRND, les chefs des Interahamwe ainsi que les autorités politiques membres du MRND, de la CDR, du MDR-Power et du PL-Power. Certains fonctionnaires, dont Siméon Nchamihigo, étaient aussi présents. Lors de la réunion, Siméon Nchamihigo et Callixte Nsabimana, directeur de l'usine de thé de Shangasha, ont été désignés pour contrôler l'évolution de la sécurité dans la zone de Gisuma et celle de Gafunzo. A la fin de la réunion, tous les contrôleurs de zone, dont Siméon Nchamihigo, se sont rendus au camp militaire de Karambo pour recevoir des armes du lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe. Peu après, les contrôleurs de zone, dont Siméon Nchamihigo, ont distribué ces armes aux Interahamwe de leurs zones respectives et ordonné à ceux-ci de s'en servir pour tuer les Tutsis.

III. Allégations générales

11. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994 et à toutes les autres époques visées dans le présent acte d'accusation, les citoyens rwandais étaient classés selon les catégories ethniques ou raciales suivantes : Tutsis, Hutus et Twas.

12. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, dans la préfecture de Cyangugu et toutes les autres régions du Rwanda, des militaires, des Interahamwe et des civils armés ont attaqué des membres du groupe ethnique tutsi, les ont tués ou ont porté atteinte à leur intégrité physique ou mentale, dans l'intention de détruire en tout ou en partie le groupe ethnique tutsi comme tel.

13. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, dans la préfecture de Cyangugu et toutes les autres régions du Rwanda, des Interahamwe, des militaires et des civils armés ont tué des personnes spécialement désignées ou visées ou ont commis des meurtres généralisés dans le cadre d'attaques généralisées ou systématiques dirigées contre les civils tutsis et/ou les opposants hutus. Par ces attaques, les Interahamwe, les militaires et les civils armés en question ont tué des centaines de milliers de civils tutsis et d'opposants politiques hutus dans la préfecture de Cyangugu et toutes les autres régions du Rwanda.

IV. Responsabilité pénale individuelle

14. En application de l'article 6 (1) du Statut, Siméon Nchamihigo est pénalement responsable des crimes de génocide, d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité et d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité pour avoir planifié, incité à commettre, ordonné, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé à planifier, préparer ou exécuter ces crimes. Il a donné aux personnes sur lesquelles il avait autorité en vertu de ses fonctions indiquées aux paragraphes 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9 et 10 du présent acte d'accusation l'ordre de commettre lesdits crimes et a incité ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé celles qui n'étaient pas placées sous son autorité à les commettre.

15. Outre la responsabilité susvisée qu'il encourt en application de l'article 6 (1) du Statut pour avoir planifié, incité à commettre, ordonné, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé été encouragé à planifier, préparer ou exécuter les crimes de génocide, d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité et d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité, Siméon Nchamihigo a participé sciemment et délibérément à une entreprise criminelle commune dans ses rôles exposés aux paragraphes 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10 et 15 du présent acte d'accusation. Cette entreprise criminelle commune avait pour but la destruction du groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi dans la préfecture de Cyangugu par la perpétration des crimes de génocide, d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité et d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité. Née le 6 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, elle a duré jusqu'au 17 juillet 1994.

17. Outre sa participation à l'entreprise criminelle commune évoquée plus haut aux paragraphes 15 et 16, Siméon Nchamihigo est responsable des crimes de génocide, d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité et d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité en ce que ces crimes étaient les conséquences naturelles et prévisibles de la réalisation du but assigné d'un commun accord à l'entreprise criminelle commune. Siméon Nchamihigo entendait faciliter la réalisation de ce but. Au demeurant, il était prévisible que les crimes de génocide, d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité et d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité pourraient être perpétrés par tel ou tel membre du groupe, mais Siméon Nchamihigo a délibérément pris ce risque.

18. Les faits détaillés pour lesquels Siméon Nchamihigo est individuellement responsable des crimes retenus sont exposés dans le présent acte d'accusation comme suit :

- aux paragraphes 19 à 43 pour le crime de génocide,
- aux paragraphes 44 à 55 pour le crime d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité,
- aux paragraphes 56 à 65 pour le crime d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité,
- aux paragraphes 66 à 70 pour le crime d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité.

V. Crimes reprochés à l'accusé et exposé succinct des faits

Premier chef d'accusation : Génocide

19. Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Siméon Nchamihigo de génocide, crime prévu à l'article 2 (3) (a) du Statut, en ce qu'entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, dans la préfecture de Cyangugu (Rwanda), il s'est rendu responsable du meurtre de membres de la population tutsie ou d'atteintes graves à leur intégrité physique ou mentale dans l'intention de détruire, en tout ou en partie, un groupe ethnique ou racial comme tel, comme l'illustrent les faits exposés aux paragraphes 20 à 43 du présent acte d'accusation.

Exposé succinct des faits relatifs au premier chef d'accusation

20. Après le décès du Président rwandais Juvénal Habyarimana survenu le 6 avril 1994, le Gouvernement intérimaire formé le 8 avril 1994 a lancé une campagne nationale visant à mobiliser les forces armées gouvernementales, les milices civiles, les Interahamwe, l'Administration publique locale et les citoyens ordinaires pour combattre le Front patriotique rwandais (FPR), groupe d'opposition à caractère politico-militaire composé en majorité de Tutsis. Les forces armées du Gouvernement rwandais et les milices Interahamwe ont en particulier pris pour cible la population civile tutsie du Rwanda accusée d'être une complice intérieure (ibyitso) d'une armée d'invasion ou carrément une ennemie intérieure. Sous prétexte d'assurer la défense nationale, des citoyens rwandais ordinaires appartenant essentiellement à l'ethnie hutue qui avaient été chauffés à blanc par les autorités ont tué les Tutsis ainsi que les opposants politiques et pillé leurs biens. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, des centaines de milliers de Tutsis et de Hutus modérés ont été tués à cause de la campagne en question. Siméon Nchamihigo a participé à l'organisation et à la mise en œuvre de cette campagne de la manière suivante :

(b) Vers la fin du mois d'avril 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a participé à une réunion au bureau du secteur de Gihundwe. Celle-ci avait pour objet la mise en place de mesures de sécurité et était présidée par le bourgmestre par intérim Manase Buvugamenshi. Y ont participé Védaste Habimana, Siméon Nchamihigo et Christophe Nyandwi, président des Interahamwe de la préfecture de Cyangugu, ainsi que d'autres personnes. Lors de la réunion, Siméon Nchamihigo a demandé si la sécurité régnait dans le secteur et s'il y avait encore des Tutsis cachés à tuer. Védaste Habimana a répondu que trois jours suffiraient pour « nettoyer » le secteur. Dans le cadre de la réunion, le terme « nettoyer » signifiait « achever de tuer tous les Tutsis ». Le « nettoyage » du secteur a effectivement continué. Par ses questions concernant le reste des Tutsis à tuer, Siméon Nchamihigo a incité des gens à tuer ces Tutsis et les a aidés et encouragés à le faire.

(c) Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec le sergent-chef Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Christophe Nyandwi, président des Interahamwe à l'échelon préfectoral, un ancien militaire nommé Jean Bosco Habimana, alias Masudi, et le caporal Aimé, pour ne citer que ces personnes-là, a organisé et supervisé la formation militaire des Interahamwe dans la préfecture de Cyangugu pour leur permettre de tuer les Tutsis et, partant, les aider et encourager à le faire.

(d) Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a participé avec le préfet Emmanuel Bakambiki, le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe et d'autres personnes à l'établissement de listes de Tutsis influents et d'opposants politiques hutus sur la base desquelles le conseil de sécurité préfectoral, dont Siméon Nchamihigo était membre, désignait les gens tuer. Il s'ensuit que Siméon Nchamihigo a planifié le meurtre de nombreux Tutsis et opposants politiques hutus, a ordonné aux Interahamwe et à d'autres civils hutus de le commettre, les a incités à agir de la sorte ou les a aidés et encouragés à le faire, comme le Procureur le précisera ci-après aux paragraphes 20 (e), 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 40, 41, 42 et 43 du présent acte d'accusation.

(e) Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo avait un stock d'armes chez lui à Cyangugu. Il distribuait ces armes aux Interahamwe et leur ordonnait d'aller tuer des personnes nommément désignées – Tutsis et opposants politiques hutus – ou lancer des attaques de grande envergure contre les Tutsis qui se rassemblaient parfois dans des lieux précis tels que les paroisses et les établissements scolaires ou les incitait à le faire, comme le précisent les paragraphes 28, 32, 33, 34, 35 et 37 du présent acte d'accusation.

21. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe d'établir plusieurs barrages routiers dans la ville de Cyangugu ou les a incités à le faire et vérifiait si ces barrages étaient bien tenus. Il s'agit, entre autres, du barrage routier de Kadashya tenu par un des chefs des Interahamwe nommé Pierre Munyandamutsa, alias Pressé, qui avait des liens avec Siméon Nchamihigo, du barrage routier de Cyapa tenu par Vincent Mvuyekure, alias Tourné, et de celui de Gatandara tenu par un Interahamwe nommé Jean Bosco Habimana. Les barrages routiers avaient pour but d'empêcher les Tutsis et les opposants hutus de se réfugier dans des zones plus sures, afin de les tuer. Siméon Nchamihigo avait la haute main sur ces barrages et veillait à leur bon fonctionnement en les inspectant plusieurs fois par jour. Il ordonnait aux Interahamwe qui les tenaient de tuer les Tutsis tentant de les franchir ou incitait les intéressés à le faire. Les Interahamwe placés sous ses ordres ont tué de nombreux Tutsis aux barrages routiers, parfois en sa présence. Emmanuel Bakambiki, préfet de Cyangugu, a désigné des gens comme Shabani Ndagijimana pour enlever les cadavres aux barrages routiers et dans toute la ville de Cyangugu à l'époque. Au barrage routier de Gatandara, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe de tuer de nombreux Tutsis qui avaient été choisis au stade Kamarampaka ou les a incités à le faire. Le barrage routier de Cyapa se trouvait tout près de sa maison. Il a ordonné de tuer des Tutsis à ce barrage, notamment le père Joseph Boneza, prêtre catholique, a incité les meurtriers à agir de la sorte ou les a aidés et encouragés le faire.

23. Le 15 avril 1994 ou vers cette date à Kamembe, Siméon Nchamihigo est arrivé à un barrage routier tenu par un groupe d'Interahamwe et de jeunes Hutus armés comptant une vingtaine de personnes. Il leur a donné lecture des noms de Tutsis qui, selon les informations qu'il avait reçues, se cachaient dans la ville de Kamembe et leur a ordonné de traquer ces Tutsis ou les a incités à le faire. Sur la liste des noms lus figuraient Aloys Gasali, Emilien Nsengumuremyi, Isidore Kagenza et le juge Jean-Marie Vianney Tabaro. Après la lecture des noms et avant son départ du barrage routier, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe de rechercher les Tutsis pour les tuer ou les a incités à agir de la sorte et les a aidés et encouragés à le faire en leur fournissant deux grenades. Par la suite, les Interahamwe ont traqué et tué les Tutsis.

24. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue, les Interahamwe ont retrouvé Emilien Nsengumuremyi et l'ont tué en exécution de l'ordre que Siméon Nchamihigo avait donné à un barrage routier à Kamembe ou par suite de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé à cet endroit le 15 avril 1994 ou vers cette date. Ils ont continué à rechercher les autres Tutsis dont Siméon Nchamihigo avait lu les noms en vue de les tuer.

25. Le 28 ou le 30 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu à un barrage routier tenu par des Interahamwe, dont Martin Ndorimana, et leur a ordonné de tuer un Tutsi nommé Canisius Kayihura, comptable de la préfecture de Cyangugu soupçonné d'avoir réussi à obtenir une carte d'identité indiquant qu'il appartenait au groupe ethnique hutu, ou les a incités à le tuer.

26. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue, Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu à un barrage routier à Kamembe et a ordonné aux Interahamwe qui tenaient le barrage de tuer un prêtre tutsi de la paroisse catholique de Mibirizi qui, selon lui, devait passer par ce barrage à bord d'un véhicule, sans révéler le nom du prêtre en question, ou les a incités à le tuer. Il avait donné des instructions similaires à tous les autres barrages routiers qu'il contrôlait et menacé de tuer les Interahamwe s'ils laissaient ce prêtre tutsi passer. En sa présence, les Interahamwe ont tué le prêtre visé dans le courant de la journée au barrage routier établi à l'entrée de Kamembe, près de la maison de l'accusé, et tenu par les Interahamwe Nehemi Habirora et Patrick Nsengumuremyi.

27. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue, Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu au barrage routier de Cyapa tenu par les Interahamwe et les gendarmes. Après avoir pris à bord du véhicule qu'il conduisait deux jeunes élèves tutsis nommés Uzier et Innocent qui faisaient de l'auto-stop pour rentrer chez eux, il les a remis aux Interahamwe et a ordonné à ceux-ci de tuer ces élèves ou les a incités à le faire. Les Interahamwe ont tué les deux jeunes élèves tutsis.

28. Après le décès du Président Juvénal Habyarimana survenu le 6 avril 1994, un grand nombre de Tutsis et d'opposants politiques hutus de la préfecture de Cyangugu fuyant les violences et les massacres se sont réfugiés dans des lieux jugés sûrs tels que la grande cathédrale, la paroisse de Mibirizi, la paroisse de Hanika, la paroisse de Nkanka, la paroisse de Shangi, la paroisse de Nyamasheke, l'hôpital de Mibirizi, l'école de Gihundwe et celle de Nyakanyinya, pour ne citer que ceux-là. D'autres Tutsis et opposants politiques hutus sont restés chez eux. Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, le sergent-chef Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, le sous-préfet Théodore Muyengabe et Christophe Nyandwi, président des Interahamwe à l'échelon préfectoral, a ordonné aux Interahamwe de lancer des attaques contre les Tutsis et les opposants politiques hutus qui avaient trouvé refuge dans les lieux sûrs susvisés et ceux qui étaient restés chez eux ou les a incités à le faire. Il a personnellement dirigé toutes ces attaques, à l'exception de celle perpétrée à la paroisse de Nkanka. Lors des attaques en question, Siméon Nchamihigo et les Interahamwe ont tué de nombreuses personnes, comme le précisent les paragraphes 29 à 37 du présent acte d'accusation.

29. Le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo, à la tête d'un groupe d'Interahamwe, a attaqué le domicile du docteur Nagafizi, directeur régional de la santé publique de Cyangugu appartenant à l'ethnie tutsie et membre du Parti libéral qui aurait été proche du FPR, ainsi que celui d'un commerçant hutu nommé Kongo qui était membre du PSD. Lors de ces attaques, les Interahamwe dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont tué le docteur Nagafizi et Kongo sur son ordre, à son instigation ou avec son aide et ses encouragements.

31. Le 7 ou le 9 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe, notamment Joseph Habineza, alias Sekuse, de tuer Théoneste Karangwa, commerçant tutsi influent et membre influent de la section du PSD de Cyangugu ou les a incités à le tuer. Siméon Nchamihigo a demandé aux Interahamwe d'épargner l'épouse de Karangwa, celle-ci n'étant pas Tutsie. Par la suite, les Interahamwe ont attaqué et tué Théoneste Karangwa ainsi que son chauffeur Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo s'est emparé du véhicule de Théoneste Karangwa et l'a emporté plus tard à Bukavu, au Zaïre voisin.

32. Le 12 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe, notamment à Anasthase Bizimungu, ainsi qu'aux agents de la police communale, aux gendarmes et aux réservistes de l'armée d'attaquer l'école de Nyakanyinka pour tuer les Tutsis qui s'y étaient refugiés ou les a incités à le faire. Il a fourni aux assaillants des grenades et des fusils qui ont été utilisés lors de l'attaque. Ainsi, il les a aidés et encouragés à perpétrer cette attaque. Par suite, les Interahamwe et les autres assaillants ont tué environ 600 Tutsis.

33. Le 12 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec Samuel Imanishimwe, commandant du camp militaire de Cyangugu, et le sous-préfet Kamonyo, a ordonné aux Interahamwe, notamment à Jean Charles Uwimana, alias Karoli, et un groupe de civils hutus d'attaquer la paroisse de Hanika pour tuer tous les réfugiés qui étaient présumés être des Tutsis ou les a incités à le faire. En raison de l'ordre que Siméon Nchamihigo avait donné ou de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé, les assaillants ont tué environ 1 500 personnes, y compris des enfants et des personnes âgées.

34. Le 14 ou le 15 avril 1994 vers 8 heures, Siméon Nchamihigo, à la tête d'un groupe d'Interahamwe et d'Impuzamugambi (miliciens de la CDR), a lancé une attaque contre les Tutsis du secteur de Gihundwe, visant en particulier ceux des cellules de Kabugi, Ruganda, Murindi et Murangi.

Lors de cette attaque, les Interahamwe dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont tué de nombreux Tutsis et détruit leurs maisons sur son ordre, à son instigation ou avec son aide et ses encouragements.

35. Le 18 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, le sergent-chef Marc Rubenziza, alias Bikomago, et le sous-préfet Théodore Muyengabe, était à la tête d'un groupe d'Interahamwe qui a attaqué le couvent et l'hôpital de Mibirizi ou de nombreux Tutsis s'étaient réfugies. Lors de ces attaques, les Interahamwe dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont massacre les refugiés tutsis et pillé leurs biens sur son ordre, à son instigation ou avec son aide et ses encouragements. Après les attaques, Siméon Nchamihigo a récompensé les meurtriers par de la bière.

36. Vers la fin d'avril ou au début de mai 1994, trois jeunes filles tutsies nommées Joséphine Mukashema, Marie et Hélène se sont réfugiées chez un Hutu répondant au nom de Jonas. Siméon Nchamihigo a accusé Jonas et son frère Jonathan Niyikiza de cacher des Inyenzi. Aidé de l'un des Interahamwe placés sous ses ordres, il a fait sortir les trois filles tutsies de la maison de Jonas et les a amenées à un lieu inconnu. Le même jour, il a dit à Jonathan Niyikiza que les Inyenzi avaient été tuées et a menacé de tuer celui-ci au cas où il continuerait de cacher des Tutsis. Par ses actes, Siméon Nchamihigo a commis, ordonné, incité à commettre ou aidé et encouragé à commettre le meurtre des filles tutsies en question.

39. Le 14 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo, le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe et d'autres membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral ont transféré au stade Kamarampaka les réfugiés qui se trouvaient à l'école de Gihundwe.

40. Le 15 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo, le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe et d'autres membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral ont transféré au stade Kamarampaka les réfugiés qui se trouvaient à la cathédrale de Cyangugu. Parmi les réfugiés transférés au stade ce jour-là figuraient Marianne Baziruwiha, Georges Nkusi, Albert Twagiramungu, Jean-Fidèle Murekezi, son épouse Christine Kanyamibwa et leurs enfants.

41. Le 16 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo et d'autres membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral, dont le préfet Emmanuel Bakambiki, le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe et Christophe Nyandwi, président des Interahamwe à l'échelon préfectoral, se sont rendus au stade Kamarampaka. A l'aide d'un mégaphone, le commandant du camp de gendarmerie a donné lecture des noms de civils accusés d'être complices des Inkotanyi. La liste des ces noms avait été établie par les membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral, dont Siméon Nchamihigo. Y figuraient Benoît Sibomana, Jean-Fidèle Murekezi, Apiane Ndorimana, Albert Mugabo, Albert Twagiramungu, Ibambasi, Bernard Nkara, Trojean Nzisabira, Rémy Mihigo, Dominique Gapeli, Albert Mugabo et Marianne Baziruwiha.

Toutes ces personnes étaient des Tutsis, à l'exception de Marianne Baziruwiha qui était Hutue et membre influent de la section du PSD de Cyangugu. Elles ont été invitées à sortir de la foule et escortées par Siméon Nchamihigo et la délégation préfectorale jusqu'à l'extérieur du stade où attendaient dans des véhicules quatre Tutsis, dont Vital Nibagwire, Ananie Gatake et Jean-Marie Vianney Habimana, alias Gapfumu, que Siméon Nchamihigo et les autres membres de la délégation préfectorale avaient amenés de la cathédrale. Siméon Nchamihigo et la délégation préfectorale ont demandé à des militaires de conduire les 16 personnes choisies au camp de gendarmerie, sous prétexte de vouloir les y interroger.

42. Après que Siméon Nchamihigo et d'autres membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral eurent amené au camp de gendarmerie les 16 personnes choisies le 16 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, ils ont retiré Marianne Baziruwiha du groupe et demande aux chauffeurs de conduire les 15 autres, tous des Tutsis, à un endroit situé près de la prison de Cyangugu. Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe qu'il avait amenés du centre de Mutongo le même jour, dont Anasthase Bizimungu, de tuer les 15 Tutsis ou les a incités à le faire. A la suite de l'ordre donné par Siméon Nchamihigo ou de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé, les Interahamwe ont tué ces 15 Tutsis près de la prison de Cyangugu et jeté leurs cadavres dans une fosse d'aisances chez Gapfumu.

43. Le 18 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo est rentré au stade Kamarampaka dans une délégation du conseil de sécurité préfectoral comprenant, entre autres, le préfet Emmanuel Bakambiki, Samuel Imanishimwe et le sous-préfet Emmanuel Kamonyo. A l'aide d'un mégaphone, Bakambiki a donné lecture d'une vingtaine de noms inscrits sur une liste que le conseil de sécurité préfectoral avait établie. La délégation a amené hors du stade les personnes inscrites sur la liste. Certaines personnes d'origine tutsie dont les noms n'avaient pas été lus, comme Antoine Nsengumuremyi et Félicien, ont néanmoins été emmenées du stade Kamarampaka ce jour-là avec les autres. Toutes les personnes retirées du stade ont été tuées par la suite et leurs corps jetés dans la rivière Gataranga ou dans des charniers. Siméon Nchamihigo et la délégation préfectorale ont aidé et encouragé les meurtriers à les tuer.

Deuxième chef d'accusation : Assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité

44. Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Siméon Nchamihigo d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, en application de l'article 3 (a) du Statut, en ce qu'entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, en particulier dans la préfecture de Cyangugu, il s'est rendu responsable du meurtre d'un certain nombre de Tutsis et de personnes considérées comme des Tutsis, ainsi que d'opposants hutus, dans le cadre d'une attaque généralisée ou systématique dirigée contre une population civile en raison de son appartenance ethnique, raciale ou politique, comme le précisent les paragraphes 45 à 55 du présent acte d'accusation.

Exposé succinct des faits relatifs au deuxième chef d'accusation

47. Le 7 ou le 9 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec Christophe Nyandwi, un des chefs des Interahamwe à l'échelon préfectoral, a ordonné aux Interahamwe de tuer Zacharie Serubyogo, commerçant hutu et député membre du MDR, ainsi que d'autres personnes ou les a incités à le faire. Par la suite, les Interahamwe ont tué Zacharie Serubyogo et de nombreuses personnes inconnues près du lac Kivu en présence de Siméon Nchamihigo. Après le meurtre de Zacharie Serubyogo, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe de rechercher un Tutsi nomme Théoneste Karangwa pour le tuer.

48. Le 7 ou le 9 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe, notamment à Joseph Habineza, alias Sekuse, de tuer Théoneste Karangwa, commerçant tutsi influent et membre influent de la section du PSD de Cyangugu ou les a incités à le tuer. Siméon Nchamihigo a demandé aux Interahamwe d'épargner l'épouse de Karangwa, celle-ci n'étant pas Tutsie. Par la suite, les Interahamwe ont attaqué et tué Théoneste Karangwa ainsi que son chauffeur Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo s'est emparé du véhicule de Théoneste Karangwa et l'a emporté plus tard à Bukavu, au Zaïre voisin.

49. Le 15 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo a formé le projet de tuer Marianne Baziruwiha et l'a recherchée ce jour-là, puisqu'il la considérait comme une complice des Inkotanyi. Hutue, Marianne Baziruwiha était le directeur régional de l'agriculture de la préfecture de Cyangugu et un membre influent de la section du PSD de Cyangugu.

50. Entre le 15 et le 17 avril 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné à un groupe d'Interahamwe de tuer un jeune élève hutu nommé Jean de Dieu Gakwandi qu'il avait qualifié de traître et de complice des Tutsis ou a incité le groupe à le tuer. A cet effet, il a donné une grenade à un certain David Habanakwabo, alias Vicky, et lui a ordonné de se joindre à d'autres Interahamwe pour tuer Jean de Dieu Gakwandi. Les assaillants ont frappé Jean de Dieu Gakwandi à la tête à l'aide d'un gourdin, le blessant grièvement. Ils l'ont laissé inconscient sur les lieux, pensant qu'il était mort.

51. Le 28 ou le 30 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu un barrage routier tenu par des Interahamwe, dont Martin Ndorimana, et leur a ordonné de tuer un civil tutsi nommé Canisius Kayihura, comptable de la préfecture de Cyangugu qui avait réussi à obtenir une carte d'identité indiquant qu'il appartenait au groupe ethnique hutu, ou les a incités à le tuer.

52. Vers la fin d'avril ou au début de mai 1994, trois jeunes filles tutsies nommées Joséphine Mukashema, Marie et Hélène se sont refugiés chez un Hutu répondant au nom de Jonas. Siméon Nchamihigo a accusé Jonas et son frère Jonathan Niyikiza de cacher des Inyenzi. Aidé de l'un des Interahamwe placés sous ses ordres, il a fait sortir les trois filles tutsies de la maison de Jonas et les a amenées à un lieu inconnu. Le même jour, à son retour, il a dit à Jonathan Niyikiza que les Inyenzi avaient été tuées et a menacé de donner la mort à celui-ci au cas où il continuerait de cacher des Tutsis. Par ses actes, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné, incité à commettre ou aidé et encouragé à commettre le meurtre des filles tutsies en question.

53. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue, les Interahamwe ont retrouvé Emilien Nsengumuremyi et l'ont tué en exécution de l'ordre que Siméon Nchamihigo avait donné à un barrage routier à Kamembe ou par suite de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé à cet endroit le 15 avril 1994 ou vers cette date. Ils ont continué à rechercher les autres Tutsis dont Siméon Nchamihigo avait lu les noms en vue de les tuer, en raison de leur origine tutsie.

54. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu à un barrage routier à Kamembe et a ordonné aux Interahamwe qui tenaient le barrage de tuer le père Joseph Boneza, prêtre tutsi de la paroisse catholique de Mibirizi qui devait passer par ce barrage à bord d'un véhicule, ou les a incités le tuer. Il avait donné des instructions similaires à tous les autres barrages routiers qu'il contrôlait et menacé de tuer les Interahamwe s'ils laissaient ce prêtre tutsi passer. En sa présence, les Interahamwe ont tué le père Joseph Boneza dans le courant de la journée au barrage routier établi à l'entrée de Kamembe, près de la maison de l'accusé, et tenu par les Interahamwe Nehemi Habirora et Patrick Nsengumuremyi.

55. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue, Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu au barrage routier de Cyapa tenu par les Interahamwe et les gendarmes. Après avoir pris à bord du véhicule qu'il conduisait deux jeunes élèves tutsis nommés Uzier et Innocent qui faisaient de l'auto-stop pour rentrer chez eux, il les a remis aux Interahamwe et a ordonné ceux-ci de tuer ces élèves ou les a incités à le faire. Les Interahamwe ont tué les deux jeunes élèves tutsis.

Troisième chef d'accusation : Extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité

56. Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Siméon Nchamihigo d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité, crime prévu à l'article 3 (b) du Statut, en ce qu'entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, en particulier dans la préfecture de Cyangugu, il s'est rendu responsable du meurtre de Tutsis ou de personnes considérées comme des Tutsis et d'opposants hutus, commis sur une grande échelle dans le cadre d'une attaque généralisée ou systématique dirigée contre une population civile en raison de son appartenance politique, ethnique ou raciale, comme le Procureur le précisera ci-après dans l'exposé succinct des faits incriminés figurant aux paragraphes 57 à 65 du présent acte d'accusation.

Exposé succinct des faits relatifs au troisième chef d'accusation

57. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec le sergent-chef Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, et Christophe Nyandwi, président des Interahamwe à l'échelon préfectoral, a ordonné aux Interahamwe de lancer des attaques contre les civils tutsis et les opposants hutus qui s'étaient refugiés à la paroisse de Hanika, à la paroisse de Mibirizi, à l'hôpital de Mibirizi, à la paroisse de Nkanka, à la paroisse de Shangi, à la paroisse de Nyamasheke et dans d'autres lieux, ainsi que ceux qui étaient restés chez eux, ou a incité les Interahamwe à le faire. Il a personnellement dirigé toutes ces attaques, à l'exception de celle perpétrée à la paroisse de Nkanka. Lors des attaques en question, les Interahamwe et les autres civils hutus dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont tué de nombreux civils qui avaient été ainsi pris pour cibles, comme le précisent les paragraphes 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64 et 65 du présent acte d'accusation.

58. Le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo est arrivé à un barrage routier tenu par un groupe de jeunes Hutus à Kamembe. Il leur a donné l'ordre de rechercher tous les Tutsis et les complices du FPR pour les livrer aux Interahamwe et d'incendier toutes les localités où l'opposition était bien établie ou les a incités à le faire. À la suite des ordres de Siméon Nchamihigo ou de ses actes d'incitation, les Interahamwe ont traqué et tué de nombreux civils qui étaient pour la plupart des hommes, des femmes et des enfants tutsis après le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date.

utilisés lors de l'attaque. Ainsi, il les a aidés et encouragés à perpétrer cette attaque. Par suite, les Interahamwe et les autres assaillants ont tué environ 600 civils tutsis.

61. Le 14 ou le 15 avril 1994 vers 8 heures, Siméon Nchamihigo, à la tête d'un groupe d'Interahamwe et d'Impuzamugambi (miliciens de la CDR), a lancé une attaque contre les Tutsis du secteur de Gihundwe, visant en particulier ceux des cellules de Kabugi, Ruganda, Mwindi et Murangi. Lors de cette attaque, les Interahamwe dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont tué de nombreux Tutsis et détruit leurs maisons sur son ordre, à son instigation ou avec son aide et ses encouragements.

62. Le 15 avril 1994 ou vers cette date à Kamembe, Siméon Nchamihigo est arrivé à un barrage routier tenu par un groupe d'Interahamwe et de jeunes Hutus armés comptant une vingtaine de personnes. Il leur a donné lecture des noms de Tutsis qui, selon les informations qu'il avait reçues, se cachaient dans la ville de Kamembe et leur a ordonné de traquer ces Tutsis ou les a incités à le faire. Sur la liste des noms lus figuraient Aloys Gasali, Émilien Nsengumuremyi, Isidore Kagenza et le juge Jean-Marie Vianney Tabaro. Après la lecture des noms et avant son départ du barrage routier, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe de rechercher les Tutsis pour les tuer ou les a incités à agir de la sorte et les a aidés et encouragés à le faire en leur fournissant deux grenades. Par la suite, les Interahamwe ont traqué et tué les Tutsis.

63. En avril 1994, à une date inconnue, Siméon Nchamihigo, à la tête d'un groupe d'Interahamwe, a attaqué le couvent de Mibirizi où de nombreux civils tutsis avaient trouvé refuge. Lors de cette attaque, les Interahamwe dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont massacré ces refugiés tutsis et pillé leurs biens sur son ordre, à son instigation ou avec son aide et ses encouragements.

64. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Yusuf Munyakazi et des militaires appartenant aux Forces armées rwandaises (FAR), a pris pour cibles des militaires placés en détention et des civils qu'il accusait d'être complices du FPR et a ordonné de tuer, incité à tuer ou aidé et encouragé à tuer les militaires détenus, comme le précise le paragraphe 65 du présent acte d'accusation.

65. Ainsi, le 7 ou le 9 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe et Yusuf Munyakazi, s'est rendu à la prison de Cyangugu et a ordonné au directeur de la prison de faire sortir 13 soldats des FAR qui avaient été incarcérés sous prétexte qu'ils étaient complices du FPR. Ces détenus ont été amenés au bureau préfectoral. Par la suite, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné de tuer, incité à tuer ou aidé et encouragé à tuer les 13 soldats des FAR. A la suite de l'ordre qu'il a donné, de l'incitation à laquelle il a procédé ou de l'aide et des encouragements qu'il a apportés, ces 13 soldats des FAR qui n'étaient plus des combattants ont été tués et leurs corps jetés dans l'un des jardins de la préfecture près du lac. Dans le courant de la journée, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné à d'autres prisonniers, dont Damien Ndamira, d'enlever les cadavres des 13 victimes du jardin pour les enterrer avec ceux de huit personnes inconnues trouvés au même endroit ou les a incités à le faire.

Quatrième chef d'accusation : Autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crime contre l'humanité

66. Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Siméon Nchamihigo d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité, crimes prévus à l'article 3 (i) du Statut, en ce qu'entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, sur l'ensemble du territoire rwandais, en particulier dans la préfecture de Cyangugu, il s'est rendu responsable d'actes inhumains commis contre des civils tutsis ou des personnes considérées comme des Tutsis et des opposants hutus dans le cadre d'une attaque généralisée ou systématique dirigée contre une population civile en raison de son appartenance politique, ethnique ou raciale, comme le précisent les paragraphes 67 à 70 du présent acte d'accusation.

Exposé succinct des faits relatifs au quatrième chef d'accusation

67. Le 7 ou le 9 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe, notamment à Joseph Habineza, alias Sekuse, de tuer Théoneste Karangwa, commerçant tutsi influent et membre influent de la section du PSD de Cyangugu ou les a incités le tuer. Siméon Nchamihigo a demandé aux Interahamwe d'épargner l'épouse de Karangwa, celle-ci n'étant pas Tutsie. A la suite de l'ordre qu'il avait donné ou de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé, les Interahamwe ont attaqué Théoneste Karangwa chez lui et l'ont attrapé. Après cela, les Interahamwe ont couvert Théoneste Karangwa de son propre matelas, versé de l'essence sur le matelas et brulé Théoneste Karangwa, lui faisant ainsi éprouver des douleurs et des souffrances atroces avant de mourir. Ils ont également tué son chauffeur nommé Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo s'est emparé du véhicule de Théoneste Karangwa et l'a emporté plus tard à Bukavu, au Zaïre voisin, avec d'autres véhicules et divers objets pillés durant les attaques.

68. Le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe – plus précisément à Thompson Mubiligi – d'attaquer le domicile de Trojean Ndayisaba, commerçant tutsi membre du PSD, pour le tuer ou les a incités à le faire. Trojean Ndayisaba était accusé d'avoir reçu de l'argent du FPR. Lors de l'attaque, les Interahamwe ont brûlé tous les membres de sa famille dans leur véhicule, leur faisant ainsi éprouver des douleurs et des souffrances atroces avant de mourir. Ils ont tué Trojean Ndayisaba lui-même par la suite à une date inconnue entre la fin d'avril et le début de juillet 1994.

69. Entre le 15 et le 17 avril 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné à un groupe d'Interahamwe de tuer un jeune élève hutu nommé Jean de Dieu Gakwandi qu'il avait qualifié de traître et de complice des Tutsis ou a incité le groupe à le tuer. A cet effet, il a donné une grenade à un certain David Habanakwabo, alias Vicky, et lui a ordonné de se joindre à d'autres Interahamwe pour tuer Jean de Dieu Gakwandi. Les assaillants ont frappé Jean de Dieu Gakwandi à la tête à l'aide d'un gourdin, lui faisant ainsi éprouver des douleurs et des souffrances. Jean de Dieu Gakwandi a été grièvement blessé. Les assaillants l'ont laissé inconscient sur les lieux, pensant qu'il était mort.

70. Le 16 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo et d'autres membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral, dont le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe et Christophe Nyandwi, ont retiré du stade Kamarampaka 15 Tutsis ainsi qu'une Hutue nommée Marianne Baziruwiha et ont amenés les 15 Tutsis à un endroit situé près de la prison après avoir déposé Marianne Baziruwiha au camp de gendarmerie. Parmi les 15 Tutsis retirés du stade par Siméon Nchamihigo et ses acolytes figuraient Jean-Fidèle Murekezi, Albert Twagiramungu et Gapfumu. Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe qu'il avait amenés du centre de Mutongo le même jour, dont Anasthase Bizimungu, de tuer ces 15 Tutsis ou les a incités à le faire. À la suite de l'ordre donné par Siméon Nchamihigo ou de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé, les Interahamwe ont tué les 15 Tutsis près de la prison de Cyangugu et jeté leurs cadavres dans une fosse d'aisances chez Gapfumu, après avoir enlevé les organes génitaux de Jean-Fidèle Murekezi, ceux d'Albert Twagiramungu et le cœur de Gapfumu.

Siméon Nchamihigo – Ordonnance de dépôt de documents, Transfèrement provisoire de témoins détenus – Levée de confidentialité

Instrument international cité :

Jurisprudence internationale citée :

T.P.I.R.: Chambre de première instance, Le Procureur c. Edouard Karemera et consorts, Décision relative à la requête demandant la levée de la confidentialité de certains écrits unilatéraux et la suppression des paragraphes 32.4 et 49 de l'acte d'accusation modifié, 3 mai 2005 (ICTR-98-44)

1. L'ouverture du procès en l'espèce est prévue pour le 25 septembre 2006. Le 24 juillet 2006, le Procureur a déposé une requête unilatérale intitulée « Prosecutor's Ex Parte Motion for an Order for the Temporary Transfer of Witnesses Pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ». En application de l'article 90 bis (B) du Règlement, pour rendre une telle ordonnance la Chambre de première instance doit s'assurer que les conditions suivantes sont remplies :

> (i) La présence du témoin détenu n'est pas nécessaire dans une procédure pénale en cours sur le territoire de l'Etat requis pour la période durant laquelle elle est sollicitée par le Tribunal;
> (ii) Son transfert n'est pas susceptible de prolonger la durée de sa détention telle que prévue par l'Etat requis.

2. Le Procureur fait valoir que les conditions de transfèrement énoncées à l'article 90 bis du Règlement de procédure et de preuve sont remplies. À l'appui de sa requête, il joint copie de la lettre adressée aux autorités compétentes pour leur demander de confirmer que les conditions susmentionnées sont réunies. Il ajoute qu'il attend cette confirmation, et, pour l'instant, la Chambre n'est pas en possession de cette information. Or pour pourvoir se prononcer sur la Requête, la Chambre doit disposer d'un complément d'information.

3. Le Procureur justifie le dépôt de sa requête unilatérale par la nécessité de protéger l'identité des témoins. En règle générale, les requêtes doivent être formées sous l'empire du contradictoire[1]. La Chambre relève qu'en l'occurrence, les seules informations permettant d'identifier les témoins figurent dans les annexes et conclut qu'il n'y a pas de risque de révélation de l'identité des témoins si la partie principale de la requête est communiquée à la Défense.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

I. ENJOINT au Procureur de présenter tous documents à l'appui de la Requête en vue du transfèrement provisoire de témoins détenus, II. PRIE le greffe de lever la confidentialité des pages 1 à 3 de la Requête tout en maintenant le caractère unilatéral des annexes A, B et C.

Ordonnance relative à la communication de dossiers judiciaires (Art. 98 et 54 du Règlement) 12 octobre 2006 (ICTR-2001-63-T)

(Original : Anglais)

Chambre de première instance III

Juge : Dennis C. M. Byron, Président; Gberdao Gustave Kam; Robert Fremr

Siméon Nchamihigo – Ordonnance, Communication de dossiers judiciaires, Témoins

Instrument international cité :

Règlement de procédure et de preuve, Art. 54, 90 (G) et 98

Jurisprudence internationale citée :

T.P.I.R.: Chambre d'appel, Le Procureur c. Elizaphan Ntakirutimana et Gérard Ntakirutimana, Reasons for the Decision on Request for Admission of Additional Evidence, 8 septembre 2004 (ICTR-96-10 et ICTR-96-17)

1. Ce jour, 12 octobre 2006, la Défense a prié la Chambre d'inviter le Procureur à demander au Gouvernement rwandais communication du dossier judiciaire complet du témoin à charge LDB. Dès le début de la déposition de LDB hier matin, il était apparu que son dossier judiciaire n'avait pas été communiqué dans son intégralité par le Procureur. La Défense fait valoir que sur la liste des témoins à charge figurent neuf autres témoins détenus dont les dossiers judiciaires seraient également incomplets. Elle demande en outre à la Chambre de suspendre la procédure et d'enjoindre au Procureur de n'appeler à la barre aucun de ces témoins détenus jusqu'à communication de l'intégralité de leurs dossiers judiciaires.

2. Le Procureur affirme qu'il a tout mis en œuvre pour obtenir les dossiers judiciaires en question, qu'il a communiqué toutes les pièces qu'il avait reçues et qu'il n'était pas en son pouvoir d'obliger le Gouvernement rwandais à fournir des documents supplémentaires.

3. Des Chambres de première instance ont jugé que la communication de dossiers devait non seulement permettre à la Défense de se préparer, mais aussi aider la Chambre à apprécier la crédibilité des témoins conformément à l'article 90 (G) du Règlement[1].

4. Lors de la comparution du témoin LDD en début de semaine, la Défense avait pu établir que des dossiers judiciaires ne lui avaient pas encore été communiqués. Aussi la Chambre a-t-elle, le 10 octobre 2006, invité le Procureur à demander le dossier judiciaire du témoin LDD aux autorités rwandaises. Le cas échéant, en fonction des renseignements contenus dans les documents qui seraient communiqués, la Défense pouvait prier la Chambre de lui permettre de procéder à un nouveau contre-interrogatoire du témoin. À ce jour, le Procureur n'a toujours pas formulé ladite demande.

5. S'agissant de la présente demande de la Défense [12 octobre 2006], la Chambre relève que la Défense n'a pas précisé, parce qu'elle l'ignore, pour quels témoins les dossiers judiciaires demeurent incomplets. La Défense a établi que le dossier du témoin LDB était manifestement incomplet et soutenu que ce pourrait être le cas des dossiers d'autres témoins à charge détenus. En l'absence de précisions, il est impossible à ce stade de déterminer quels sont les dossiers judiciaires existants qui n'ont pas été communiqués.

6. Le Procureur est bien placé pour savoir quels sont les dossiers judiciaires existants pour les témoins à charge. Il lui incombe de faire le point des renseignements déjà communiqués et de vérifier ce qui manque dans les dossiers judiciaires des témoins à charge détenus. La Défense a accepté d'aider le Procureur dans cet exercice de vérification.

7. La Chambre estime donc nécessaire d'user du pouvoir que lui confère l'article 98 du Règlement et demande au Procureur de tout mettre en œuvre pour obtenir des autorités rwandaises les pièces qui manquent aux dossiers, et de communiquer celles-ci à la Défense. Cette décision se fonde également sur l'article 54 du Règlement qui dispose qu'à la demande d'une des parties ou de sa propre initiative, une Chambre de première instance peut délivrer les ordonnances nécessaires aux fins de la préparation ou de la conduite du procès. L'ordonnance de la Chambre ne relève aucunement la Défense de son obligation de préparer sa cause.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

I. ENJOINT au Procureur et à la Défense de se réunir comme convenu demain, vendredi 13 octobre 2006, pour s'accorder sur les dossiers judiciaires à demander aux autorités rwandaises.

II. INVITE le Procureur, conformément à l'article 98 du Règlement, à adresser aux autorités rwandaises, d'ici au lundi 16 octobre 2006, une demande en vue de la communication des dossiers judiciaires requis et à déposer une copie de ladite demande à la Section de l'administration des Chambres. Il devra préciser aux autorités rwandaises que leur réponse est attendue d'ici au lundi 23 octobre 2006. Si celles-ci estiment avoir besoin de plus de temps pour se conformer à la demande, il leur sera demandé de préciser au Procureur quand elles seront en mesure de satisfaire à celle-ci. Toute réponse obtenue des autorités rwandaises sera déposée à la Section de l'administration des Chambres. En cas d'absence de réponse, la Chambre devra également en être informée par le canal de ladite Section.

III. MODIFIE sa décision orale du 10 octobre 2006 et INVITE le Procureur à inclure la demande qu'il devait adresser aux autorités rwandaises en vue de la communication du dossier judiciaire du témoin LDD dans celle qu'il leur adressera le 16 octobre 2006.

Fait à Arusha, le 12 octobre 2006.

Deuxième version revue et corrigée de l'Acte d'accusation modifié (Etablie conformément à la décision rendue par la Chambre de première instance III le 7 décembre 2006) 11 décembre 2006 (ICTR-2001-63-I)

(Original : Anglais)

I. Accusations

1. Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda, en vertu des pouvoirs que lui confère l'article 17 du Statut du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda (le « Statut »), accuse

Siméon Nchamihigo

des crimes suivants :

Premier chef d'accusation : génocide, en application des articles 2 (3) (a) et 6 (1) du Statut ;

Deuxième chef d'accusation : assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, en application des articles 3 (a) et 6 (1) du Statut ;

Troisième chef d'accusation : extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité, en application des articles 3 (b) et 6 (1) du Statut ;

Quatrième chef d'accusation : autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité, en application des articles 3 (i) et 6 (1) du Statut.

II. L'accusé

2. Né le 8 septembre 1960 au Rwanda dans la commune de Gatare (préfecture de Cyangugu), Siméon Nchamihigo a occupé le poste de substitut du procureur de la République près le tribunal de première instance de Cyangugu de 1991 au 17 juillet 1994.

3. Entre le 1er janvier et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a exercé la fonction de substitut du procureur au parquet de la République de Cyangugu sur la base d'un faux diplôme qu'il avait produit en 1991 à l'appui de sa candidature au poste de substitut du procureur au Rwanda. Le procureur général adjoint Charles Ntakirutimana avait ouvert une enquête sur l'affaire de son faux diplôme, mais cette enquête a été arrêtée à la suite du remplacement de Charles Ntakirutimana par un procureur général adjoint proche du MRND nommé Jean Damascène Musekura.

4. À une date inconnue située vers la mi-avril 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, en sa qualité de substitut du procureur, a émis de faux mandats d'arrêt contre des Tutsis qui s'étaient réfugiés à la cathédrale ou à l'évêché de Cyangugu, notamment Gapfumu, afin de permettre à des fonctionnaires en service au parquet de la République, à des militaires et à des Interahamwe de les enlever pour les tuer et ils l'ont fait. Par cet acte, l'accusé entendait aider et encourager ces fonctionnaires, militaires et Interahamwe à enlever les réfugiés en question pour les tuer.

6. D'une date située vers 1992 au 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, en dépit de sa qualité de substitut du procureur, a participé à des activités politiques dans la préfecture de Cyangugu tant pour le compte du MRND, le parti du Président Juvénal Habyarimana, que pour celui du parti politique dénommé « Coalition pour la défense de la République » (CDR). Parti extrémiste hutu, la CDR était l'alliée du MRND et combattait les partis opposés au MRND.

7. Entre le 1er janvier et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo était également membre d'un groupe clandestin de fonctionnaires hutus en poste à Cyangugu, dénommé Tuvindimwe, qui avait été créé aux alentours de 1991. Ce groupe soutenait le MRND et la CDR. Il recrutait ses membres à la préfecture, à la cour d'appel, au parquet général, au tribunal de première instance et au parquet de la République. Les Tutsis et les Hutus modérés opposés au MRND n'étaient pas admis dans les rangs de Tuvindimwe, puisqu'ils étaient considérés comme complices des Inkotanyi, terme désignant les membres du Front patriotique rwandais (FPR) composé en majorité de Tutsis.

8. Entre le 1er février et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo était l'un des chefs des Interahamwe de la préfecture de Cyangugu. Il a recruté de nombreux jeunes hommes hutus dont Jean de Dieu Utabazi, Janvier Borauzima, Faustin Sinashebeje et Joseph Habineza, comme Interahamwe et a demandé à un ancien militaire nommé Jean Bosco Habimana, alias Masudi, de former les Interahamwe au camp militaire de Karambo, en collaboration avec le sergent-chef Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Christophe Nyandwi et le caporal Aimé, pour leur permettre de tuer les Tutsis. En outre, il a hébergé des Interahamwe à Cyangugu et leur donnait de la nourriture et de la boisson. Il a ordonné à ces Interahamwe de tuer les Tutsis, les a incités à agir de la sorte ou les a de toute autre manière aidés et encouragés à le faire, comme le Procureur le précisera plus loin dans l'exposé succinct des faits incriminés.

9. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a joué le rôle de membre du conseil de sécurité préfectoral de Cyangugu et a participé aux réunions de ce conseil. Le conseil de sécurité préfectoral était composé des personnes suivantes, pour ne citer que celles-ci : Emmanuel Bakambiki, préfet de Cyangugu, Samuel Imanishimwe, commandant du camp militaire de Cyangugu, Vincent Munyarugerero, commandant de l'unité de gendarmerie de Cyangugu, Bernadin Bayingana, président du tribunal de première instance de Cyangugu, Paul Ndorimana, procureur de la République de Cyangugu souvent représenté par Siméon Nchamihigo, et les sous-préfets Emmanuel Kamonyo, Théodore Munyangabe et François Nzeyimana. Ses membres se réunissaient régulièrement pour délibérer sur les questions touchant à la sécurité dans la préfecture de Cyangugu. Le conseil de sécurité préfectoral a été particulièrement actif du 6 avril – après la mort du Président Habyarimana – au 17 juillet 1994. Au cours de cette période, il siégeait plus souvent et a pris certaines décisions concernant la mise en place de barrages routiers à Cyangugu, le transfert au stade Kamarampaka des réfugiés qui s'étaient mis à l'abri des violences dans tel ou tel lieu d'asile, l'établissement de listes de Tutsis et de Hutus modérés ainsi que le choix des divers réfugiés qui seraient enlevés du stade susmentionné, comme le Procureur le précisera plus loin dans l'exposé succinct des faits incriminés.

10. Ce paragraphe a été déplacé pour créer le paragraphe 20 (f).

III. Allégations générales

11. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994 et à toutes les autres époques visées dans le présent acte d'accusation, les citoyens rwandais étaient classés selon les catégories ethniques ou raciales suivantes : Tutsis, Hutus et Twas.

12. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, dans la préfecture de Cyangugu et toutes les autres régions du Rwanda, des militaires, des Interahamwe et des civils armés ont attaqué des membres du groupe ethnique tutsi, les ont tués ou ont porté atteinte à leur intégrité physique ou mentale, dans l'intention de détruire en tout ou en partie le groupe ethnique tutsi comme tel.

13. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, dans la préfecture de Cyangugu et toutes les autres régions du Rwanda, des Interahamwe, des militaires et des civils armés ont tué des personnes spécialement désignées ou visées ou ont commis des meurtres généralisés dans le cadre d'attaques généralisées ou systématiques dirigées contre les civils tutsis et/ou les opposants hutus. Par ces attaques, les Interahamwe, les militaires et les civils armés en question ont tué des centaines de milliers de civils tutsis et d'opposants politiques hutus dans la préfecture de Cyangugu et toutes les autres régions du Rwanda.

IV. Responsabilité pénale individuelle

14. En application de l'article 6 (1) du Statut, Siméon Nchamihigo est pénalement responsable des crimes de génocide, d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité et d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité pour avoir planifié, incité à commettre, ordonné, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé à planifier, préparer ou exécuter ces crimes. Il a donné aux personnes sur lesquelles il avait autorité en vertu de ses fonctions indiquées aux paragraphes 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9 et 10 du présent acte d'accusation l'ordre de commettre lesdits crimes et a incité ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé celles qui n'étaient pas placées sous son autorité à les commettre.

15. Outre la responsabilité susvisée qu'il encourt en application de l'article 6 (1) du Statut pour avoir planifié, incité à commettre, ordonné, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé été encouragé à planifier, préparer ou exécuter les crimes de génocide, d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité et d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité, Siméon Nchamihigo a participé sciemment et délibérément à une entreprise criminelle commune dans ses rôles exposés aux paragraphes 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10 et 15 du présent acte d'accusation. Cette entreprise criminelle commune avait pour but la destruction du groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi dans la préfecture de Cyangugu par la perpétration des crimes de génocide, d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité et d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité. Née le 6 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, elle a duré jusqu'au 17 juillet 1994.

16. Siméon Nchamihigo et les autres parties à l'entreprise criminelle commune partageaient l'intention de réaliser le but assigné d'un commun accord à cette entreprise. Pour l'atteindre, Siméon Nchamihigo a agi de concert avec les Interahamwe Christophe Nyandwi, Yusuf Munyakazi, Thompson Mubiligi, Pierre Munyandamutsa, alias Pressé, Vincent Mvuyekure, alias Tourné, Jean Bosco Habimana, alias Masudi, Anasthase Bizimungu, Patrick Nsengumuremyi, Faustin Sinashebeje et Nehemi Habirora, pour ne citer que ceux-là, ainsi que d'autres personnes qui n'étaient pas des Interahamwe, notamment Samuel Imanishimwe, commandant du camp militaire de Cyangugu, le sergent-chef Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Vidaste Habimana et le préfet Emmanuel Bagambiki.

17. Outre sa participation à l'entreprise criminelle commune évoquée plus haut aux paragraphes 15 et 16, Siméon Nchamihigo est responsable des crimes de génocide, d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité et d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité en ce que ces crimes étaient les conséquences naturelles et prévisibles de la réalisation du but assigné d'un commun accord à l'entreprise criminelle commune. Siméon Nchamihigo entendait faciliter la réalisation de ce but. Au demeurant, il était prévisible que les crimes de génocide, d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité et d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité pourraient être perpétrés par tel ou tel membre du groupe, mais Siméon Nchamihigo a délibérément pris ce risque.

18. Les faits détaillés pour lesquels Siméon Nchamihigo est individuellement responsable des crimes retenus sont exposés dans le présent acte d'accusation comme suit :

- aux paragraphes 19 à 43 pour le crime de génocide,
- aux paragraphes 44 à 55 pour le crime d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité,
- aux paragraphes 56 à 69 pour le crime d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité,
- aux paragraphes 67 à 70 pour le crime d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité.

V. Crimes reprochés à l'accusé et exposé succinct des faits

Premier chef d'accusation : Génocide

19. Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Siméon Nchamihigo de génocide, crime prévu à l'article 2 (3) (a) du Statut, en ce qu'entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, dans la préfecture de Cyangugu (Rwanda), il s'est rendu responsable du meurtre de membres de la population tutsie ou d'atteintes graves à leur intégrité physique ou mentale dans l'intention de détruire, en tout ou en partie, un groupe ethnique ou racial comme tel, comme l'illustrent les faits exposés aux paragraphes 20 à 43 du présent acte d'accusation.

Exposé succinct des faits relatifs au premier chef d'accusation

20. Après le décès du Président rwandais Juvénal Habyarimana survenu le 6 avril 1994, le Gouvernement intérimaire formé le 8 avril 1994 a lancé une campagne nationale visant à mobiliser les forces armées gouvernementales, les milices civiles, les Interahamwe, l'Administration publique locale et les citoyens ordinaires pour combattre le Front patriotique rwandais (FPR), groupe d'opposition à caractère politico-militaire composé en majorité de Tutsis. Les forces armées du Gouvernement rwandais et les milices Interahamwe ont en particulier pris pour cible la population civile tutsie du Rwanda accusée d'être une complice intérieure (ibyitso) d'une armée d'invasion ou carrément une ennemie intérieure. Sous prétexte d'assurer la défense nationale, des citoyens rwandais ordinaires appartenant essentiellement à l'ethnie hutue qui avaient été chauffés à blanc par les autorités ont tué les Tutsis ainsi que les opposants politiques et pillé leurs biens. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, des centaines de milliers de Tutsis et de Hutus modérés ont été tués à cause de la campagne en question. Siméon Nchamihigo a participé à l'organisation et à la mise en œuvre de cette campagne de la manière suivante :

(b) Vers la fin du mois d'avril 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a participé à une réunion au bureau du secteur de Gihundwe. Celle-ci avait pour objet la mise en place de mesures de sécurité et était présidée par le bourgmestre par intérim Manase Buvugamenshi. Y ont participé Védaste Habimana, Siméon Nchamihigo et Christophe Nyandwi, président des Interahamwe de la préfecture de Cyangugu, ainsi que d'autres personnes. Lors de la réunion, Siméon Nchamihigo a demandé si la sécurité régnait dans le secteur et s'il y avait encore des Tutsis cachés à tuer. Védaste Habimana a répondu que trois jours suffiraient pour « nettoyer » le secteur. Dans le cadre de la réunion, le terme « nettoyer » signifiait « achever de tuer tous les Tutsis ». Le « nettoyage » du secteur a effectivement continué. Par ses questions concernant le reste des Tutsis à tuer, Siméon Nchamihigo a incité des gens à tuer ces Tutsis et les a aidés et encouragés à le faire.

(c) Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec le sergent-major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, Christophe Nyandwi, président des Interahamwe à l'échelon préfectoral, un ancien militaire nommé Jean Bosco Habimana, alias Masudi, et le caporal Aimé, pour ne citer que ces personnes-là, a organisé et supervisé la formation militaire des Interahamwe dans la préfecture de Cyangugu, à savoir Jean de Dieu Utabazi, Janvier Borauzima, Faustin Sinashebeje, Joseph Habineza et d'autres personnes, pour leur permettre de tuer les Tutsis et, partant, les aider et encourager à le faire.

(d) En avril et mai 1994, à des dates inconnues, Siméon Nchamihigo a participé avec le préfet Emmanuel Bakambiki, le lieutenant Samuel Immanishimwe et d'autres personnes à l'établissement de listes de Tutsis influents et d'opposants politiques hutus sur la base desquelles le conseil de sécurité préfectoral, dont Siméon Nchamihigo était membre, désignait les gens à tuer. Il s'ensuit que Siméon Nchamihigo a planifié le meurtre de nombreux Tutsis et opposants politiques hutus, a ordonné aux Interahamwe et à d'autres civils hutus de le commettre, les a incités à agir de la sorte ou les a aidés et encouragés à le faire, comme le Procureur le précisera aux paragraphes 20 (e), 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 40, 41, 42 et 43 du présent acte d'accusation.

(e) Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo avait un stock d'armes chez lui à Cyangugu. Il a distribué ces armes aux Interahamwe, dont David Habanakwabo et Jeremy Nsengiyumva, et leur a ordonné d'aller tuer des personnes nommément désignées – Tutsis et opposants politiques hutus – ou lancer des attaques de grande envergure contre les Tutsis qui se rassemblaient parfois dans des lieux précis tels que les paroisses et les établissements scolaires ou les a incités à le faire, comme le précisent les paragraphes 28, 32, 33, 34, 35 et 37 du présent acte d'accusation.

21. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe d'établir plusieurs barrages routiers dans la ville de Cyangugu ou les a incités à le faire et vérifiait si ces barrages étaient bien tenus. Il s'agit, entre autres, d'un barrage routier établi près de la Banque de Kigali et tenu par Thomas Mubiligi, de celui mis en place près du marché de Kamembe, de celui de Pendeza sur la route de l'aéroport et de celui de Kadashya, tenus par un des chefs des Interahamwe nommé Pierre Munyandamutsa, alias Pressé, qui avait des liens avec Siméon Nchamihigo, de celui de Cuyapa tenu par Vincent Mvuyekure, alias Tourné, et de celui de Gatandara tenu par un Interahamwe nommé Jean Bosco Habimana. Les barrages routiers avaient pour but d'empêcher les Tutsis et les opposants hutus de se réfugier dans des zones plus sûres, afin de les tuer. Siméon Nchamihigo avait la haute main sur ces barrages et veillait à leur bon fonctionnement en les inspectant plusieurs fois par jour. Il ordonnait aux Interahamwe qui les tenaient de tuer les Tutsis tentant de les franchir ou incitait les intéressés à le faire. Les Interahamwe placés sous ses ordres ont tué de nombreux Tutsis aux barrages routiers, parfois en sa présence. Emmanuel Bakambiki, préfet de Cyangugu, a désigné des gens comme Shabani Ndagijimana pour enlever les cadavres aux barrages routiers et dans toute la ville de Cyangugu à l'époque. Au barrage routier de Gatandara, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe de tuer de nombreux Tutsis qui avaient été choisis au stade Karampaka ou les a incités à le faire. Le barrage routier de Cyapa se trouvait tout près de sa maison. Il a ordonné de tuer des Tutsis à ce barrage, notamment le père Joseph Boneza, prêtre catholique, a incité les meurtriers à agir de la sorte ou les a aidés et encouragés à le faire.

22. Le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo a parlé à Thomas Mubiligi et à un groupe de jeunes Hutus à Kamembe. A cette occasion, il leur a donné l'ordre de rechercher tous les Tutsis et les complices du FPR pour les livrer aux Interahamwe et d'incendier toutes les localités où l'opposition était bien établie ou les a incités à le faire. A la suite des ordres de Siméon Nchamihigo ou de ses actes d'incitation, les Interahamwe ont traqué et tué de nombreuses personnes, qui étaient pour la plupart des hommes, des femmes et des enfants tutsis, le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date et au cours des mois suivants.

23. Le 15 avril 1994 ou vers cette date à Kamembe, Siméon Nchamihigo est arrivé à un barrage routier établi près de la Banque de Kigali et tenu par Thomas Mubiligi ainsi qu'un groupe d'Interahamwe et de jeunes Hutus armés comptant une vingtaine de personnes. Il leur a donné lecture des noms de Tutsis qui, selon les informations qu'il avait reçues, se cachaient dans la ville de Kamembe et leur a ordonné de traquer ces Tutsis ou les a incités à le faire. Sur la liste des noms lus figuraient Aloys Gasali, Émilien Nsengumuremyi, Isidore Kagenza et le juge Jean-Marie Vianney Tabaro. Après la lecture des noms et avant son départ du barrage routier, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe de rechercher les Tutsis pour les tuer ou les a incités à agir de la sorte et les a aidés et encouragés à le faire en leur fournissant deux grenades. Par la suite, les Interahamwe ont traqué et tué les Tutsis.

24. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue, les Interahamwe, dont Vincent Mvuyekure, alias Tourné, ont retrouvé Émilien Nsengumuremyi et l'ont tué en exécution de l'ordre que Siméon Nchamihigo avait donné à un barrage routier établi près de la Banque de Kigali à Kamembe ou par suite de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé à cet endroit le 15 avril 1994 ou vers cette date. Ils ont continué à rechercher les autres Tutsis dont Siméon Nchamihigo avait lu les noms en vue de les tuer.

25. Le 28 ou le 30 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu à un barrage routier établi près de chez Paul Ndorimana et tenu par des Interahamwe, dont Martin Ndorimana. Il a ordonné à ceux-ci de tuer un Tutsi nommé Canisius Kayihura, comptable de la préfecture de Cyangugu soupçonné d'avoir réussi à obtenir une carte d'identité indiquant qu'il appartenait au groupe ethnique hutu, ou les a incités à le tuer.

26. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue, Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu aux barrages routiers mis en place à Kamembe, notamment à ceux établis près de Cuyapa et de la Banque de Kigali, et a ordonné aux Interahamwe qui les tenaient, dont Vincent Mvuyekure, alias Tourné, et Thomas Mubiligi, de tuer un prêtre tutsi de la paroisse catholique de Mibirizi qui, selon lui, devait passer par l'un de ces barrages à bord d'un véhicule, sans révéler le nom du prêtre en question, ou les a incités à le tuer. Il avait donné des instructions similaires à tous les autres barrages routiers qu'il contrôlait et menacé de tuer les Interahamwe s'ils laissaient ce prêtre tutsi passer. En sa présence, les Interahamwe ont tué le prêtre visé dans le courant de la journée au barrage routier établi à l'entrée de Kamembe, près de la maison de l'accusé, et tenu par les Interahamwe Nehemi Habirora et Patrick Nsengumuremyi. On a su par la suite que ce prêtre catholique était le père Joseph Boneza.

27. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue, Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu au barrage routier de Cyapa tenu par les Interahamwe, dont Vincent Mvuyekure, alias Tourné, et Patrick Nsengumuremyi, ainsi que les gendarmes. Après avoir pris à bord du véhicule qu'il conduisait deux jeunes élèves tutsis nommés Uzier et Innocent qui faisaient de l'auto-stop pour rentrer chez eux, il les a remis aux Interahamwe et a ordonné à ceux-ci de tuer ces élèves ou les a incités à le faire. Les Interahamwe ont tué les deux jeunes élèves tutsis.

28. Après le décès du Président Juvénal Habyarimana survenu le 6 avril 1994, un grand nombre de Tutsis et d'opposants politiques hutus fuyant les violences et les massacres se sont réfugiés dans des lieux de la préfecture de Cyangugu jugés sûrs tels que la grande cathédrale, la paroisse de Mibirizi, la paroisse de Hanika, la paroisse de Nkanka, la paroisse de Shangi, la paroisse de Nyamasheke, l'hôpital de Mibirizi, l'école de Gihundwe et celle de Nyakanyinya, pour ne citer que ceux-là. D'autres Tutsis et opposants politiques hutus sont restés chez eux. Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, le sergent-major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, le sous-préfet Théodore Muyengabe et Christophe Nyandwi, président des Interahamwe à l'échelon préfectoral, a ordonné aux Interahamwe, dont Kamenero, de lancer des attaques contre les Tutsis et les opposants politiques hutus qui avaient trouvé refuge dans les lieux sûrs susvisés et ceux qui étaient restés chez eux ou les a incités à le faire. Il a personnellement dirigé toutes ces attaques, à l'exception de celle perpétrée à la paroisse de Nkanka. Lors des attaques en question, Siméon Nchamihigo et les Interahamwe ont tué de nombreuses personnes, comme le précisent les paragraphes 29 à 37 du présent acte d'accusation.

29. Le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo, à la tête d'un groupe d'Interahamwe dont faisait partie Christophe Nyandwi, a attaqué le domicile du docteur Nagafizi, responsable régional de la santé publique de Cyangugu appartenant à l'ethnie tutsie et membre du Parti libéral qui aurait été proche du FPR, ainsi que celui d'un commerçant hutu nommé Kongo qui était membre du PSD. Lors de ces attaques, les Interahamwe dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont tué le docteur Nagafizi et Kongo sur son ordre, à son instigation ou avec son aide et ses encouragements.

30. Le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe – plus précisément à Thompson Mubiligi – d'attaquer le domicile de Trojean Ndayisaba, commerçant tutsi membre du PSD, pour le tuer ou les a incités à le faire. Trojean Ndayisaba était accusé d'avoir reçu de l'argent du FPR. Lors de l'attaque, les Interahamwe ont tué tous les membres de sa famille et pillé leur maison. Ils ont tué Trojean Ndayisaba lui-même par la suite à une date inconnue entre la fin d'avril et le début de juillet 1994.

31. Le 7 ou le 9 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe, notamment Joseph Habineza, alias Sekuse, de tuer Théoneste Karangwa, commerçant tutsi influent et membre influent de la section du PSD de Cyangugu ou les a incités à le tuer. Il a demandé aux Interahamwe d'épargner l'épouse de Karangwa, celle-ci n'étant pas Tutsie. Par la suite, les Interahamwe ont attaqué et tué Théoneste Karangwa ainsi que son chauffeur Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo s'est emparé du véhicule de Théoneste Karangwa et l'a emporté plus tard à Bukavu, au Zaïre voisin.

32. Le 12 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe, notamment à Anasthase Bizimungu, ainsi qu'aux agents de la police communale, aux gendarmes et aux réservistes de l'armée d'attaquer l'école de Nyakanyinka pour tuer les Tutsis qui s'y étaient refugiés ou les a incités à le faire. Il a fourni aux assaillants des grenades et des fusils qui ont été utilisés lors de l'attaque. Ainsi, il les a aidés et encouragés à perpétrer cette attaque. Par suite, les Interahamwe et les autres assaillants ont tué environ 600 Tutsis.

33. Le 12 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec Samuel Imanishimwe, commandant du camp militaire de Cyangugu, et le sous-préfet Kamonyo, a ordonné aux Interahamwe, notamment à Jean Charles Uwimana, alias Karoli, et un groupe de civils hutus d'attaquer la paroisse de Hanika pour tuer tous les réfugiés qui étaient présumés être des Tutsis ou les a incités à le faire. En raison de l'ordre que Siméon Nchamihigo avait donné ou de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé, les assaillants ont tué environ 1 500 personnes, y compris des enfants et des personnes âgées.

34. Le 14 ou le 15 avril 1994 vers 8 heures, Siméon Nchamihigo, à la tête d'un groupe d'Interahamwe et d'Impuzamugambi (miliciens de la CDR) dont faisait partie Martin Ndorimana, a lancé une attaque contre les Tutsis du secteur de Gihundwe, visant en particulier ceux des cellules de Kabugi, Ruganda, Murindi et Murangi. Lors de cette attaque, les Interahamwe dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont tué de nombreux Tutsis et détruit leurs maisons sur son ordre, à son instigation ou avec son aide et ses encouragements.

35. Le 18 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, le sergent-major Marc Rubenziza, alias Bikomago, et le sous-préfet Théodore Muyengabe, était à la tête d'un groupe d'Interahamwe comprenant le gendarme Mandela et Anathase Bizimungu, entre autres, qui a attaqué le couvent et l'hôpital de Mibirizi où de nombreux Tutsis s'étaient réfugiés. Lors de ces attaques, les Interahamwe dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont massacré les réfugiés tutsis et pillé leurs biens sur son ordre, à son instigation ou avec son aide et ses encouragements. Après les attaques, Siméon Nchamihigo a récompensé les meurtriers par de la bière.

36. Vers la fin d'avril ou au début de mai 1994, trois jeunes filles tutsies nommées Joséphine Mukashema, Marie et Hélène se sont réfugiées chez un Hutu répondant au nom de Jonas. Siméon Nchamihigo a accusé Jonas et son frère Jonathan Niyikiza de cacher des Inyenzi. Aidé de l'un des Interahamwe placés sous ses ordres, à savoir Johnson Banga Kaboyi, il a fait sortir les trois filles tutsies de la maison de Jonas et les a amenées à un lieu inconnu. Le même jour, il a dit à Jonathan Niyikiza que les Inyenzi avaient été tuées et a menacé de donner la mort à celui-ci au cas où il continuerait de cacher des Tutsis. Par ses actes, Siméon Nchamihigo a commis, ordonné, incité à commettre ou aidé et encouragé à commettre le meurtre des filles tutsies en question.

37. Entre le 20 et le 25 juin 1994 ou vers cette période, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe de sa zone, notamment à Jean-Paul, Vincent Mvuyekure, alias Tourné, et Nzeyimana, de se rendre à Kibuye en compagnie de Yusufu Munyakazi et des Interahamwe placés sous les ordres de celui-ci pour participer à un certain nombre d'attaques visant à tuer les Tutsis qui s'étaient réfugiés à Bisesero dans la préfecture de Kibuye ou les a incités à le faire. Ces Interahamwe se sont rendus à Bisesero à bord d'un des autobus de l'Onatracom et ont aidé ceux de Kibuye à tuer les Tutsis. Ensemble, ils ont tué de nombreux Tutsis. Lorsque les Interahamwe de sa zone sont rentrés de Kibuye après un ou deux jours, Siméon Nchamihigo leur a offert à boire et à manger à l'école de Gihundwe pour les récompenser.

40. Le 15 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo, le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe et d'autres membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral, dont Emmanuel Bakambiki, ont transféré au stade Kamarampaka les réfugiés qui se trouvaient à la cathédrale de Cyangugu. Parmi les réfugiés transférés au stade ce jour-là figuraient Marianne Baziruwiha, Georges Nkusi, Albert Twagiramungu, Jean-Fidèle Murekezi, son épouse Christine Kanyamibwa et leurs enfants.

41. Le 16 avril 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo et d'autres membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral, dont le préfet Emmanuel Bakambiki, le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe, Christophe Nyandwi, président des Interahamwe à l'échelon préfectoral, le major Munyamgerero, le sous-préfet Théodore Munyangabe, le procureur Paul Ndorimana, Siméon Remesh, directeur de l'école primaire de Gihundwe, Ngagi, douanier, et le sergent-major Marc Ruberanziza, se sont rendus au stade Kamarampaka. A l'aide d'un mégaphone, le commandant du camp de gendarmerie a donné lecture des noms de civils accusés d'être complices des Inkotanyi. La liste des ces noms avait été établie par les membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral, dont Siméon Nchamihigo. Y figuraient Benoît Sibomana, Jean-Fidèle Murekezi, Apiane Ndorimana, Albert Mugabo, Albert Twagiramungu, Ibambasi, Bernard Nkara, Trojean Nzisabira, Rémy Mihigo, Dominique Gapeli, Albert Mugabo et Marianne Baziruwiha. Toutes ces personnes étaient des Tutsis, à l'exception de Marianne Baziruwiha qui était hutue et membre influent de la section du PSD de Cyangugu. Elles ont été invitées à sortir de la foule et escortées par Siméon Nchamihigo et la délégation préfectorale jusqu'à l'extérieur du stade où attendaient dans des véhicules quatre Tutsis, dont Vital Nibagwire, Ananie Gatake et Jean-Marie Vianney Habimana, alias Gapfumu, que Siméon Nchamihigo et les autres membres de la délégation préfectorale avaient amenés de la cathédrale. Siméon Nchamihigo et la délégation préfectorale ont demandé à des militaires de conduire les 16 personnes choisies au camp de gendarmerie, sous prétexte de vouloir les y interroger.

42. Après avoir amené au camp de gendarmerie les 16 personnes choisies le 16 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo et les autres membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral ont retiré Marianne Baziruwiha du groupe et demandé aux chauffeurs de conduire les 15 autres, tous des Tutsis, à un endroit situé près de la prison de Cyangugu. Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe qu'il avait amenés du centre de Mutongo le même jour, dont Anasthase Bizimungu et Jean Bosco Habimana, de tuer les 15 Tutsis ou les a incités à le faire. A la suite de l'ordre donné par Siméon Nchamihigo ou de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé, les Interahamwe ont tué ces 15 Tutsis près de la prison de Cyangugu et jeté leurs cadavres dans une fosse d'aisances chez Gapfumu.

43. Le 18 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo est rentré au stade Kamarampaka dans une délégation du conseil de sécurité préfectoral comprenant, entre autres, le préfet Emmanuel Bakambiki, Samuel Imanishimwe et le sous-préfet Emmanuel Kamonyo. A l'aide d'un mégaphone, Bakambiki a donné lecture d'une vingtaine de noms inscrits sur une liste que le conseil de sécurité préfectoral avait établie. La délégation a amené hors du stade les personnes inscrites sur la liste. Certaines personnes d'origine tutsie dont les noms n'avaient pas été lus, comme Antoine Nsengumuremyi et Félicien, ont néanmoins été emmenées du stade Kamarampaka ce jour-là avec les autres. Toutes les personnes retirées du stade ont été tuées par la suite et leurs corps jetés dans la rivière Gataranga ou dans des charniers. Siméon Nchamihigo et la délégation préfectorale ont aidé et encouragé les meurtriers à les tuer.

Deuxième chef d'accusation : Assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité

44. Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Siméon Nchamihigo d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, en application de l'article 3 (a) du Statut, en ce qu'entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, en particulier dans la préfecture de Cyangugu, il s'est rendu responsable du meurtre d'un certain nombre de Tutsis et de personnes considérées comme des Tutsis, ainsi que d'opposants hutus, dans le cadre d'une attaque généralisée ou systématique dirigée contre une population civile en raison de son appartenance ethnique, raciale ou politique, comme le précisent les paragraphes 45 à 55 du présent acte d'accusation.

Exposé succinct des faits relatifs au deuxième chef d'accusation

45. Le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo, à la tête d'un groupe d'Interahamwe dont faisait partie Christophe Nyandwi, a attaqué le domicile du docteur Nagafizi, responsable

régional de la santé publique de Cyangugu appartenant à l'ethnie tutsie et membre du Parti libéral qui aurait été proche du FPR, ainsi que celui d'un commerçant hutu nommé Kongo qui était membre du PSD. Lors de ces attaques, les Interahamwe dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont tué le docteur Nagafizi et Kongo sur son ordre, à son instigation ou avec son aide et ses encouragements.

47. Le 7 ou le 9 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec Christophe Nyandwi, un des chefs des Interahamwe à l'échelon préfectoral, a ordonné aux Interahamwe, dont Joseph Habineza, de tuer Zacharie Serubyogo, commerçant hutu et député membre du MDR, ainsi que d'autres personnes ou les a incités à le faire. Par la suite, les Interahamwe ont tué Zacharie Serubyogo et de nombreuses personnes inconnues près du lac Kivu en présence de Siméon Nchamihigo. Après le meurtre de Zacharie Serubyogo, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe de rechercher un Tutsi nommé Théoneste Karangwa pour le tuer.

48. Le 7 ou le 9 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe, dont Joseph Habineza, alias Sekuse, de tuer Théoneste Karangwa, commerçant tutsi influent et membre influent de la section du PSD de Cyangugu ou les a incités à le tuer. Il a demandé aux Interahamwe d'épargner l'épouse de Karangwa, celle-ci n'étant pas Tutsie. Par la suite, les Interahamwe ont attaqué et tué Théoneste Karangwa ainsi que son chauffeur Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo s'est emparé du véhicule de Théoneste Karangwa et l'a emporté plus tard à Bukavu, au Zaïre voisin.

49. Paragraphe supprimé.

50. Entre le 15 et le 17 avril 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné à un groupe d'Interahamwe dont faisaient partie David Habanakwabo, Rusine et Nzeyimana de tuer un jeune élève hutu nommé Jean de Dieu Gakwandi qu'il avait qualifié de traître et de complice des Tutsis ou a incité le groupe à le tuer. Il a donné une grenade à David Habanakwabo, alias Vicky, et lui a ordonné de se joindre à d'autres Interahamwe pour tuer Jean de Dieu Gakwandi. Les assaillants ont frappé Jean de Dieu Gakwandi à la tête à l'aide d'un gourdin, le blessant grièvement. Ils l'ont laissé inconscient sur les lieux, pensant qu'il était mort.

51. Le 28 ou le 30 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu un barrage routier tenu par des Interahamwe, dont Martin Ndorimana, et leur a ordonné de tuer un civil tutsi nommé Canisius Kayihura, comptable de la préfecture de Cyangugu qui avait réussi à obtenir une carte d'identité indiquant qu'il appartenait au groupe ethnique hutu, ou les a incités à le tuer.

52. Vers la fin d'avril ou au début de mai 1994, trois jeunes filles tutsies nommées Joséphine Mukashema, Marie et Hélène se sont réfugiées chez un Hutu répondant au nom de Jonas. Siméon Nchamihigo a accusé Jonas et son frère Jonathan Niyikiza de cacher des Inyenzi. Aidé de l'un des Interahamwe placés sous ses ordres, à savoir Johnson Banga Kaboyi, il a fait sortir les trois filles tutsies de la maison de Jonas et les a amenées à un lieu inconnu. Le même jour, à son retour, il a dit à Jonathan Niyikiza que les Inyenzi avaient été tuées et a menacé de donner la mort à celui-ci au cas où il continuerait de cacher des Tutsis. Par ses actes, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné, incité à commettre ou aidé et encouragé à commettre le meurtre des filles tutsies en question.

53. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue, les Interahamwe, dont Christophe Nyandwi, ont retrouvé Émilien Nsengumuremyi et l'ont tué en exécution de l'ordre que Siméon Nchamihigo avait donné à un barrage routier à Kamembe ou par suite de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé à cet endroit le 15

avril 1994 ou vers cette date. Ils ont continué à rechercher les autres Tutsis dont Siméon Nchamihigo avait lu les noms en vue de les tuer, en raison de leur origine tutsie.

54. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue, Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu aux barrages routiers établis à Kamembe qu'il supervisait, dont ceux de Cuyapa et de la Banque de Kigali, et a ordonné aux Interahamwe qui les tenaient, dont Vincent Mvuyekure, alias Tourné, et Thomas Mubiligi, de tuer le père Joseph Boneza, prêtre tutsi de la paroisse catholique de Mibirizi qui devait passer par l'un de ces barrages à bord d'un véhicule, ou les a incités à le tuer. Siméon Nchamihigo a menacé de tuer les Interahamwe s'ils laissaient ce prêtre tutsi passer. En sa présence, les Interahamwe ont tué le père Joseph Boneza dans le courant de la journée au barrage routier établi à l'entrée de Kamembe, près de la maison de l'accusé, et tenu par les Interahamwe Nehemi Habirora et Patrick Nsengumuremyi.

55. En mai 1994, à une date inconnue, Siméon Nchamihigo s'est rendu au barrage routier de Cyapa tenu par les Interahamwe, dont Patrick Nsengumuremyi, et les gendarmes. Après avoir pris à bord du véhicule qu'il conduisait deux jeunes élèves tutsis nommés Uzier et Innocent qui faisaient de l'auto-stop pour rentrer chez eux, il les a remis aux Interahamwe et a ordonné à ceux-ci de tuer ces élèves ou les a incités à le faire. Les Interahamwe ont tué les deux jeunes élèves tutsis.

Troisième chef d'accusation : Extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité

56. Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Siméon Nchamihigo d'extermination constitutive de crime contre l'humanité, crime prévu à l'article 3 (b) du Statut, en ce qu'entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, en particulier dans la préfecture de Cyangugu, il s'est rendu responsable du meurtre de Tutsis ou de personnes considérées comme des Tutsis et d'opposants hutus, commis sur une grande échelle dans le cadre d'une attaque généralisée ou systématique dirigée contre une population civile en raison de son appartenance politique, ethnique ou raciale, comme le Procureur le précisera ci-après dans l'exposé succinct des faits incriminés figurant aux paragraphes 57 à 65 du présent acte d'accusation.

Exposé succinct des faits relatifs au troisième chef d'accusation

57. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, en particulier du 7 avril jusqu'à la fin de mai 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec le sergent-major Marc Ruberanziza, alias Bikomago, et Christophe Nyandwi, président des Interahamwe à l'échelon préfectoral, a ordonné aux Interahamwe, dont Kamenero, de lancer des attaques contre les civils tutsis et les opposants hutus qui s'étaient réfugiés à la paroisse de Hanika, à la paroisse de Mibirizi, à l'hôpital de Mibirizi, à la paroisse de Nkanka, à la paroisse de Shangi, à la paroisse de Nyamasheke et dans d'autres lieux, ainsi que ceux qui étaient restés chez eux, ou a incité les Interahamwe à le faire. Il a personnellement dirigé toutes ces attaques, à l'exception de celle perpétrée à la paroisse de Nkanka. Lors des attaques en question, les Interahamwe et les autres civils hutus dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont tué de nombreux civils qui avaient été ainsi pris pour cibles, comme le précisent les paragraphes 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64 et 65 du présent acte d'accusation.

58. Le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo est arrivé à un barrage routier tenu par un groupe de jeunes Hutus à Kamembe. Il leur a donné l'ordre de rechercher tous les Tutsis et les complices du FPR pour les livrer aux Interahamwe et d'incendier toutes les localités où l'opposition était bien établie ou les a incités à le faire. À la suite des ordres de Siméon Nchamihigo ou de ses actes d'incitation, les Interahamwe ont traqué et tué de nombreux civils qui étaient pour la plupart des hommes, des femmes et des enfants tutsis après le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date.

60. Le 12 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe, dont Anasthase Bizimungu, ainsi qu'aux agents de la police communale, aux gendarmes et aux réservistes de l'armée d'attaquer l'école de Nyakanyinka pour tuer les civils tutsis qui s'y étaient réfugiés ou les a incités à le faire. Il a fourni aux assaillants des grenades et des fusils qui ont été utilisés lors de l'attaque. Ainsi, il les a aidés et encouragés à perpétrer cette attaque. Par suite, les Interahamwe et les autres assaillants ont tué environ 600 civils tutsis.

61. Le 14 ou le 15 avril 1994 vers 8 heures, Siméon Nchamihigo, à la tête d'un groupe d'Interahamwe et d'Impuzamugambi (miliciens de la CDR) dont faisait partie Martin Ndorimana, a lancé une attaque contre les Tutsis du secteur de Gihundwe, visant en particulier ceux des cellules de Kabugi, Ruganda, Murindi et Murangi. Lors de cette attaque, les Interahamwe dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont tué de nombreux Tutsis et détruit leurs maisons sur son ordre, à son instigation ou avec son aide et ses encouragements.

62. Le 15 avril 1994 ou vers cette date à Kamembe, Siméon Nchamihigo est arrivé à un barrage routier tenu par un groupe d'Interahamwe et de jeunes Hutus armés comptant une vingtaine de personnes. Il leur a donné lecture des noms de Tutsis qui, selon les informations qu'il avait reçues, se cachaient dans la ville de Kamembe et leur a ordonné de traquer ces Tutsis ou les a incités à le faire. Sur la liste des noms lus figuraient Aloys Gasali, Émilien Nsengumuremyi, Isidore Kagenza et le juge Jean-Marie Vianney Tabaro. Après la lecture des noms et avant son départ du barrage routier, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe de rechercher les Tutsis pour les tuer ou les a incités à agir de la sorte et les a aidés et encouragés à le faire en leur fournissant deux grenades. Par la suite, les Interahamwe ont traqué et tué les Tutsis.

63. En avril 1994, à une date inconnue, Siméon Nchamihigo, à la tête d'un groupe d'Interahamwe comprenant Anathase Bizimungu et accompagné du gendarme Mandela, a attaqué le couvent de Mibirizi où de nombreux civils tutsis avaient trouvé refuge. Lors de cette attaque, les Interahamwe dirigés par Siméon Nchamihigo ont massacré ces réfugiés tutsis et pillé leurs biens sur son ordre, à son instigation ou avec son aide et ses encouragements.

64. Paragraphe supprimé.

65. Le 7 ou le 9 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo, en collaboration avec le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe et Yusuf Munyakazi, s'est rendu à la prison de Cyangugu et a ordonné au directeur de la prison de faire sortir 13 soldats des FAR qui avaient été incarcérés sous prétexte qu'ils étaient complices du FPR. Ces détenus ont été amenés au bureau préfectoral. Par la suite, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné de tuer, incité à tuer ou aidé et encouragé à tuer les 13 soldats des FAR. A la suite de l'ordre qu'il a donné, de l'incitation à laquelle il a procédé ou de l'aide et des encouragements qu'il a apportés, ces 13 soldats des FAR qui n'étaient plus des combattants ont été tués et leurs corps jetés dans l'un des jardins de la préfecture près du lac. Dans le courant de la journée, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné à d'autres prisonniers, dont Damien Ndamira, d'enlever les cadavres des 13 victimes du jardin pour les enterrer avec ceux de huit personnes inconnues trouvés au même endroit ou les a incités à le faire.

Quatrième chef d'accusation : Autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crime contre l'humanité

66. Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Siméon Nchamihigo d'autres actes inhumains constitutifs de crimes contre l'humanité, crimes prévus à l'article 3 (i) du Statut, en ce qu'entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, sur l'ensemble du territoire rwandais, en particulier dans la préfecture de Cyangugu, il s'est rendu responsable d'actes inhumains commis contre des civils tutsis ou des personnes considérées comme des Tutsis et des opposants hutus dans le cadre d'une attaque généralisée ou systématique dirigée contre une population civile en raison de son appartenance politique, ethnique ou raciale, comme le précisent les paragraphes 67 à 70 du présent acte d'accusation.

Exposé succinct des faits relatifs au quatrième chef d'accusation

67. Le 7 ou le 9 avril 1994 ou vers ces dates, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe, notamment à Joseph Habineza, alias Sekuse, de tuer Théoneste Karangwa, commerçant tutsi influent et membre influent de la section du PSD de Cyangugu ou les a incités le tuer. Il a demandé aux Interahamwe d'épargner l'épouse de Karangwa, celle-ci n'étant pas Tutsie. A la suite de l'ordre qu'il avait donné ou de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé, les Interahamwe ont attaqué Théoneste Karangwa chez lui et l'ont attrapé. Après cela, les Interahamwe ont couvert Théoneste Karangwa de son propre matelas, versé de l'essence sur le matelas et brulé Théoneste Karangwa, lui faisant ainsi éprouver des douleurs et des souffrances atroces avant de mourir. Ils ont également tué son chauffeur nommé Iyakaremye. Siméon Nchamihigo s'est emparé du véhicule de Théoneste Karangwa et l'a emporté plus tard à Bukavu, au Zaïre voisin, avec d'autres véhicules et divers objets pillés durant les attaques.

68. Le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe – plus précisément à Thompson Mubiligi – d'attaquer le domicile de Trojean Ndayisaba, commerçant tutsi membre du PSD, pour le tuer ou les a incités à le faire. Trojean Ndayisaba était accusé d'avoir reçu de l'argent du FPR. Lors de l'attaque, les Interahamwe ont brûlé tous les membres de sa famille dans leur véhicule, leur faisant ainsi éprouver des douleurs et des souffrances atroces avant de mourir. Ils ont tué Trojean Ndayisaba lui-même par la suite à une date inconnue entre la fin d'avril et le début de juillet 1994.

69. Entre le 15 et le 17 avril 1994, Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné à un groupe d'Interahamwe dont faisaient partie David Habanakwabo, Rusine et Nzeyimana, pour ne citer que ceux-là, de tuer un jeune élève hutu nommé Jean de Dieu Gakwandi qu'il avait qualifié de traître et de complice des Tutsis ou a incité le groupe à le tuer. Il a donné une grenade à David Habanakwabo, alias Vicky, et lui a ordonné de se joindre à d'autres Interahamwe pour tuer Jean de Dieu Gakwandi. Les assaillants ont frappé Jean de Dieu Gakwandi à la tête à l'aide d'un gourdin, lui faisant ainsi éprouver des douleurs et des souffrances. Jean de Dieu Gakwandi a été grièvement blessé. Les assaillants l'ont laissé inconscient sur les lieux, pensant qu'il était mort.

70. Le 16 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Siméon Nchamihigo et d'autres membres du conseil de sécurité préfectoral, dont le lieutenant Samuel Imanishimwe et Christophe Nyandwi, ont retiré du stade Kamarampaka 15 Tutsis ainsi qu'une Hutue nommée Marianne Baziruwiha et ont amenés les 15 Tutsis à un endroit situé près de la prison après avoir déposé Marianne Baziruwiha au camp de gendarmerie. Parmi les 15 Tutsis retirés du stade par Siméon Nchamihigo et ses acolytes figuraient Jean-Fidèle Murekezi, Albert Twagiramungu et Gapfumu. Siméon Nchamihigo a ordonné aux Interahamwe qu'il avait amenés du centre de Mutongo le même jour, dont Anasthase Bizimungu, de tuer ces 15 Tutsis ou les a incités à le faire. A la suite de l'ordre donné par Siméon Nchamihigo ou de l'incitation à laquelle il avait procédé, les Interahamwe ont tué les 15 Tutsis près de la prison de Cyangugu et jeté leurs cadavres dans une fosse d'aisances chez Gapfumu, après avoir enlevé les organes génitaux de Jean-Fidèle Murekezi, ceux d'Albert Twagiramungu et le cœur de Gapfumu.

Les actes et les omissions de Siméon Nchamihigo exposés dans le présent acte d'accusation sont punissables selon les dispositions des articles 22 et 23 du Statut.

BEING SEIZED of the "Deuxième Requête de l'Appelant en Présentation de Moyens de Preuve Supplémentaires – Article 115 du Règlement" filed confidentially on 28 February 2006 ("Motion"), in which counsel for Emmanuel Ndindabahizi ("Defence" and "Appellant", respectively) seeks to introduce evidence given by Mr. Fidèle Uwizeye on 14 April 2005 in the case of Prosecutor v. Bizimungu et al., Case N°ICTR-99-50-T, as additional evidence on appeal pursuant to Rule 115 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules");

NOTING the "Prosecutor's Response to 'Deuxième Requête de l'Appelant en Présentation de Moyens de Preuve Supplémentaires – Art. 115 du Règlement'" filed on 10 March 2006 ("Response"), in which the Prosecution requests that the Motion be dismissed in its entirety;

NOTING the "Réponse aux observations de l'intimé sur la deuxième requête de l'appelant en présentation de moyens de preuve supplémentaires – Article 115 du Règlement" filed by the Appellant confidentially on 20 March 2006 ("Reply") ;

NOTING that the confidential filing of the Motion and Reply does not serve the interests of justice and that the Defence orally confirmed that it does not object to the lifting of the confidentiality;

NOTING that according to paragraph 12 of the Practice Direction on Procedure for the Filing of Written Submissions in Appeal Proceedings before the Tribunal a reply may be filed within four days of the filing of the response;

NOTING that the Reply was filed untimely;

CONSIDERING that pursuant to Rule 115 of the Rules, an application for the admission of additional evidence on appeal shall be "filed with the Registrar not later than seventy-five days from the date of the judgement, unless good cause is shown for further delay";

CONSIDERING that the Defence filed the Motion far outside the time frame set out in Rule 115 of the Rules;

CONSIDERING that the good cause requirement obliges the moving party to show that it was not able to comply with the time limit set out in the Rule, and that it filed the motion as soon as possible after it became aware of the existence of the evidence sought to be admitted;[1]

CONSIDERING the reasons advanced by the Prosecution on the issue of good cause, in particular

- that the Appellant was in possession of the transcripts for nearly 10 months before he filed the Motion;[2]
- that the Appellant had already indicated in his appeal brief that he was going to "request that the trial record of this testimony be produced" and that he would "file a motion for the same witness to testify in the instant case";[3] and
- that the Pre-Appeal Judge, during the third status conference of 8 February 2006, advised the Appellant to pay particular attention to the admissibility criteria under Rule 115, should he seek admission of the transcripts under Rule 115;[4]

FINDING that the Appellant has failed to address the issue of good cause and that consequently good cause has not been shown;

Therefore

LIFTS the confidentiality of Motion and Reply; and

DISMISSES the Motion.

RECALLING that on 28 April 2006 Mr. Konitz, Appellant's lead counsel, confirmed in writing his availability for the hearing in this case on 6 July 2006;

PURSUANT to Rule 114 of the Rules;

HEREBY ORDERS that the hearing of the appeal shall take place on Thursday, 6 July 2006, in Arusha, Tanzania;

INFORMS the parties that a letter will be sent in due course to the parties specifying issues that the parties will be invited to address during the hearing, without prejudice to any matter relevant to the appeal the parties or the Appeals Chamber may wish to raise;

SPECIFIES that the identification of such issues can in no way be interpreted as an expression of the Appeals Chamber's opinion on the merits of the appeal;

INFORMS the parties that the timetable of the hearing will be as follows:

9:00 – 9:15	Introductory Statement by the Presiding Judge (15 minutes)
9:15 – 11:15	Submissions of the Appellant (2 hours)
11:15 – 11:45	Pause (30 minutes)
11:45 – 12:30	Response of the Prosecution (45 minutes; to be continued)
12:30 – 15:00	Pause (2 hours and 30 minutes)
15:00 – 16:15	Continued Response of the Prosecution (1 hour and 15 minutes)
16:15 – 16:45	Pause (30 minutes)
16:45 – 17:15	Reply Final Word (Personal Address) by Emmanuel Ndindabahizi (optional); and

ORDERS the Appellant to file a public version of his "Mémoire d'appel" as soon as practicable wherein all confidential information, including the identity of protected witnesses, is duly redacted.

I.C.T.Y.: Appeals Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Stanislav Galić, Decision on Defence's Request for Reconsideration, 16 July 2004 (IT-98-29)

THE APPEALS CHAMBER of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "International Tribunal", respectively) is seized of the "Requête de l'appelant en reconsidération de la décision du 4 avril 2006 en raison d'une erreur matérielle", filed by Emmanuel Ndindabahizi ("Appellant") on 24 April 2006 ("Motion for Reconsideration").

A. Procedural Background

17. On 4 April 2006, the Appeals Chamber rendered its "Decision on the Admission of Additional Evidence" ("Rule 115 Decision") in which it found that the Appellant had not shown good cause for his non-compliance with the time limit set out in Rule 115 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules"). Consequently, the Appeals Chamber dismissed the Appellant's motion to present additional evidence.[1] With his Motion for Reconsideration, the Appellant requests the Appeals Chamber to reconsider its Rule 115 Decision. The Prosecution filed the "Prosecutor's Response to 'Requête de l'appelant en reconsidération de la décision du 4 avril 2006 en raison d'une erreur matérielle'" on 26 April 2006 ("Second Prosecution Response"). The Appellant did not file a reply.

B. Standard for Reconsideration

18. The Appeals Chambers of both ICTR and ICTY have repeatedly held that they have an inherent discretionary power to reconsider a previous interlocutory decision "if a clear error of reasoning has been demonstrated or if it is necessary to do so to prevent an injustice".[2]

C. Discussion

19. The Appellant argues that the Appeals Chamber erred in noting incorrect filing dates of the following two filings:

[1] "Deuxième requête de l'appelant en présentation de moyens de preuve supplémentaires – Article 115 du règlement", confidentially filed by the Appellant on 28 February 2006.

[2] Kajelijeli v. Prosecutor, Case N°ICTR-98-44A-A, Judgement, 23 May 2005, paras 203-04; Nahimana et al. v. Prosecutor, Case N°ICTR-99-52-A, Decision on Jean-Bosco Barayagwiza's Request for Reconsideration of Appeals Chamber Decision of 19 January 2005, 4 February 2005, p. 2; Niyitegeka v. Prosecutor, Case N°ICTR-96-14-A, Decision on Defence Extremely Urgent Motion for Reconsideration of Decision Dated 16 December 2003, 19 December 2003, pp. 2-3; Prosecutor v. Galić, Case N°IT-98-29-A, Decision on Defence's Request for Reconsideration, 16 July 2004, p. 2.

- "Prosecutor's Response to 'Deuxième Requête de l'Appelant en Présentation de Moyens de Preuve Supplémentaires – Art. 115 du Règlement'", filed on 10 March 2006 ("First Prosecution Response"), and
- "Réponse aux observations de l'intimé sur la deuxième requête de l'appelant en présentation de moyens de preuve supplémentaires – Article 115 du Règlement", filed on 20 March 2006 ("Appellant's Reply").

The Appellant submits that his lead counsel Mr. Michel Konitz had not been notified of the First Prosecution Response until 13 March 2006, and that the Appellant's Reply had in fact been filed on 17 March 2006. He argues that consequently, the Appellant had complied with the time limit provided by paragraph 12 of the Practice Direction on Procedure for the Filing of Written Submissions in Appeal Proceedings before the Tribunal, i.e. four days. He further submits that the Appeals Chamber might have come to a different conclusion in the Rule 115 Decision had it considered the Appellant's Reply.

20. The Appellant submits in Annex 2 to his Motion for Reconsideration the "Fiche de Transmission Pour Dépôt de Documents à la S.A.C." which shows the date of 17 March 2006 (Friday). This transmission sheet, however, does not prove that the Appellant's Reply had indeed been received at the ICTR on that day, as the date on it was not filled in by the Registry.

21. Annex 2 also contains a lettre de transmission of Mr. Konitz in which he requests the Registry to file the Appellant's Reply. While the letterhead indicates that the letter was written on 17 March 2006, the stamp in the upper right corner of the letter shows that it was received in the UNICTR Fax Centre on 18 March 2006 at 9.49 am local time. Furthermore, as this day (Saturday) was a non-working day of the Tribunal, the filing of the Appellant's Reply must be considered as falling on the first working day thereafter, i.e. Monday, 20 March 2006.

22. It is not necessary to examine whether the Defence had been notified of the First Prosecution Response as late as on 13 March 2006, as the time limit for filing the Appellant's Reply has not been met. Consequently, the Appellant has not satisfied the Appeals Chamber of the existence of a clear error of reasoning in the impugned decision, or of particular circumstances justifying its reconsideration in order to prevent injustice.

D. Disposition

23. The Motion for Reconsideration is rejected.

Introduction

1. THE APPEALS CHAMBER of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31

December 1994 (the "Tribunal") is seized of requests for review by Eliézer Niyitegeka (the "Applicant") filed on 27 October 2004, 7 February 2005, 17 August 2005 and 10 October 2005.

2. The Applicant, the former Minister of Information in the Rwandan Interim Government in 1994, was tried and sentenced to life imprisonment by Trial Chamber I of the Tribunal on 16 May 2003 for genocide; conspiracy to commit genocide; direct and public incitement to commit genocide; and murder, extermination, and other inhumane acts as crimes against humanity.[1]

3. The Applicant appealed his conviction on the ground that the Trial Judgement was manifestly unfair and in breach of his statutory right to a fair trial, as well as on various other legal and factual grounds. On 9 July 2004, the Appeals Chamber dismissed his appeal in its entirety and affirmed the sentence of imprisonment for the remainder of his life.[2]

I. The Request for Review

4. The Applicant submits that transcripts of the radio broadcasts of the compte rendus of various Cabinet meetings in which he allegedly participated and an affidavit of one of his alibi witnesses as well as certain testimonies of witnesses in other cases amount to "new facts" within the meaning of Article 25 of the Statute and Rules 120 and 121 of the Rules, warranting review of the trial and appeal judgements in his case.

A. Applicable Law

5. The provisions of Article 25 of the Statute and Rules 120 and 121 of the Rules govern review proceedings before the Tribunal.

- Article 25 of the Statute: Review Proceedings

> Where a new fact has been discovered which was not known at the time of the proceedings before the Trial Chambers or the Appeals Chamber and which could have been a decisive factor in reaching the decision, the convicted person or the Prosecutor may submit to the International Tribunal for Rwanda an application for review of the judgement.

- Rule 120 of the Rules: Request for Review

> (A) Where a new fact has been discovered which was not known to the moving party at the time of the proceedings before a Trial Chamber or the Appeals Chamber and could not have been discovered through the exercise of due diligence, the Defence or, within one year after the final judgement has been pronounced, the Prosecutor, may make a motion to that Chamber for review of the judgement. If, at the time of the request for review, any of the Judges who constituted the original Chamber are no longer Judges of the Tribunal, the President shall appoint a Judge or Judges in their place.
> (B) Any brief in response to a request for review shall be filed within forty days of the filing of the request.
> (C) Any brief in reply shall be filed within fifteen days after the filing of the response.

- Rule 121 of the Rules: Preliminary Examination

> If the Chamber constituted pursuant to Rule 120 agrees that the new fact, if it had been proven, could have been a decisive factor in reaching a decision, the Chamber shall review the judgement, and pronounce a further judgement after hearing the parties.

6. Accordingly, in order for the Chamber to proceed to the review of its decision, the moving party must demonstrate that:

[1] Trial Judgement, paras. 481 et seq.
[2] Appeal Judgement, para. 270.

a – there is a new fact, which is defined as "new information of an evidentiary nature of a fact that was not in issue during the trial or appeal proceedings".[3] By the phrase "not in issue", the Appeals Chamber has held that "it must not have been among the factors that the deciding body could have taken into account in reaching its verdict";[4]

b – the new fact must not have been known to the moving party at the time of the proceedings before the Trial Chamber or the Appeals Chamber. However, "[I]t is irrelevant whether the new fact already existed before the original proceedings or during such proceedings. What is relevant is whether the deciding body and the moving party knew about the fact or not";[5] c – the lack of discovery of the new fact must not have been through the lack of diligence on the part of the moving party. By analogy to the jurisprudence relating to the admission of additional evidence in appeals proceedings, diligence shall mean that the party in question must show that it sought to make "appropriate use of all mechanisms of protection and compulsion available under the Statute and the Rules of the International Tribunal […] before the Chamber."[6] d – the new fact, if proved, could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.[7]

7. These criteria are cumulative.[8] However, the Appeals Chamber recalls that in "wholly exceptional circumstances", where the impact of a "new fact" on the decision would be such that to ignore it would lead to a miscarriage of justice, review might be possible even though the "new fact" was known to the moving party, or was discoverable by it through the exercise of due diligence.[9]

B. Analysis

8. The Applicant requests the Appeals Chamber to review the factual findings and legal conclusions in the Judgements of both the Trial and Appeals Chambers.[10] The Appeals Chamber recalls that review proceedings under Article 25 of the Statute and Rule 120 of the Rules are available only with respect to the final judgement.[11] As a result, the Appeals Chamber shall only consider whether its Judgement of 9 July 2004 should be reviewed.

9. The alleged "new facts" to be considered by the Appeals Chamber are, in principle, limited to those raised by the Applicant in his requests filed pro se on 27 October 2004,[12] 7 February 2005,[13] and 17 August 2005,[14] as elaborated in the Additional Submissions filed by Defence Counsel within the scope of the Appeals Chamber's Decisions of 20 June 2005 [15] and 28 September 2005. [16] Exceptionally, the Appeals Chamber will nevertheless consider the alleged "new fact" raised by transcripts AV/908 and RSFO112, raised for the first time in the Additional Submissions, as they are intrinsically linked to the transcripts of cassettes AV/906 and AV/907 which formed the substance of the original request of 27 October 2004. The alleged "new fact" based on video tape KV-00-0030-0043, despite the deficiencies in the manner in which it was introduced, will also be considered given the Appeals Chamber's Decision of 2 November 2005,[17] which directed the Prosecution to disclose the CD-Roms labelled KV00-0030 and KV00-0030B in order to assist the Defence in replying to the Prosecution's Response to Additional Submissions.

10. The Appeals Chamber will now examine the "new facts" alleged by the Applicant.

1. First alleged "new fact": Transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meeting of 10 April 1994

11. The Applicant relies upon transcripts of the cassettes (AV/906, AV/907, AV/908 and RSFO122) of his radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meeting of 10 April 1994 to prove that he was in Kigali that day,[18] contrary to the testimony of Prosecution Witness GGH,[19] and that, therefore, he could not have been 185 kilometers away in Rugarama, Gisovu commune, transporting arms, as the Trial Chamber found. The Applicant alleges that Prosecution Witness GGH gave false testimony within the meaning of Rule 91 of the Rules.[20] According to the Applicant, the transcripts amount to a "new fact" within the meaning of Article 25 and Rules 120 and 121.[21] Alternatively, the Applicant argues that the transcripts could be considered to be a "decisive factor" warranting substantive consideration of the application for review in order to prevent a miscarriage of justice.[22] The Applicant argues that the transcripts "could" or "would" have affected the original verdict. In response, the Prosecution submits that the transcripts do not amount to a "new fact" as they are merely new evidence of issues already discussed in the original proceedings, and that they "could" not have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.[23]

(a) Whether the transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meeting of 10 April 1994 constitute a "new fact"

12. The Applicant seeks to introduce the transcripts of cassettes in order to prove a fact that he already asserted, albeit without evidence, at trial: that he was in Kigali on 10 April 1994, attending a Cabinet Meeting.[24] This purported "new fact" was thus known to the Applicant at trial. The Appeals Chamber recalls that "(the) Jurisprudence of the Tribunal has elaborated on the difference between a new fact in the sense of Rule 119 [Rule 120 ICTR] and additional evidence in sense of Rule 115 of the Rules. In the Delić review, the Appeals Chamber held that: 'the distinction is thus between a fact which was not in issue or considered in the original proceedings (a 'new fact' within the meaning of Rule 119) and additional evidence of a fact which was in issue or considered in the original proceedings but which evidence was not available to be given in those proceedings ('additional evidence' within the meaning of Rule 115)." The Appeals Chamber in Delić further held that "(i)f the material proffered consists of additional evidence relating to a fact which was in issue or considered in the original proceedings, this does not constitute a "new fact" within the meaning of Rule 119, and the review procedure is not available."[25] The transcripts of the cassettes are information of an evidentiary nature concerning the Applicant's participation in the Cabinet Meeting of 10 April 1994. However, the transcripts relate to the alibi of the Applicant's participation in the Cabinet Meeting of 10 April 1994 in relationship with the credibility of Prosecution Witness GGH,[26] both being matters that were already considered at trial.[27] Accordingly, the transcripts cannot amount to a "new fact" for the purposes of a review application and the Appeals Chamber is not obliged to examine them further. Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber will consider whether, assuming the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meeting of 10 April 1994 could be characterized as a new fact", they could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

(b) Whether the transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meeting of 10 April 1994 could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision

13. The Applicant's assertion that he made the radio broadcast of the said meeting at 2 p.m.[28] conflicts with Applicant's Defence Counsel's assertion that the said radio broadcast took place at 7 p.m.,[29] reinforcing the credibility of Prosecution Witness GGH. Accordingly, the Applicant's allegation that the said witness gave false testimony, pursuant to Rule 91 of the Rules,[30] lacks foundation. Furthermore the particular factual finding of the Applicant transporting arms on 10 April 1994 was not critical to his conviction for any crime. It is briefly referenced in paragraph 411 of the Trial Judgement with respect to the crime of genocide, but no particular weight was placed upon it. The other evidence relating to the genocide count is overwhelming, such that the conviction on that count would stand even if the transcripts were credited and the factual finding on transport of arms on 10 April 1994 were quashed. Furthermore the finding on transport of arm was not at all relied upon with respect to the other counts.

14. In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber the Applicant has failed to establish that the contents of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meeting of 10 April 1994 are such that the transcripts of said radio broadcast could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

2. Second alleged "new fact": Transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meeting of 16 April 1994

15. The Applicant relies upon transcripts of a cassette AV/917 of a radio broadcast of the compte rendu of a Cabinet Meeting of 16 April 1994 to prove that he was in Murambi (Gitarama) on that day, and that he gave an account thereof on Radio Rwanda on three successive occasions.[31] Accordingly, he argues that he could not have been 100 kilometers away in Kibuye, where Prosecution Witness KJ[32] had testified to seeing him on that day at the Gendarmerie camp requisitioning arms and gendarmes in order to launch an attack at Mubuga church in Gishyita commune.[33] The Applicant insists that the relevant transcripts not only discredit Prosecution Witness KJ's testimony,[34] but also prove that Prosecution Witness KJ gave false testimony.[35] The Applicant submits that the transcripts constitute a "new fact" within the meaning of Article 25 and Rules 120 and 121,[36] or, alternatively, that they are a "decisive factor" warranting review of the findings of the Trial and Appeals Chambers on the credibility of Prosecution Witness KJ and the alibi for 16 April 1994[37] in order to avoid a miscarriage of justice.[38] The Prosecution responds that the transcripts do not constitute a "new fact", being evidence of a fact already in issue during the proceedings and that the transcripts "could" and "would" not have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.[39]

(a) Whether the transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meeting of 16 April 1994 constitutes a "new fact"

16. The Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that the transcripts of cassette AV/917 constitute information of an evidentiary nature, relating to the Applicant's alibi of participation in the Cabinet Meeting of 16 April 1994 and the credibility of Prosecution Witness KJ. Nonetheless, the alibi and the implications it may have for the credibility of Prosecution Witness KJ, are not new facts, having already been pleaded during the proceedings.[40] Accordingly, the transcripts of cassette AV/917 relating to the said meeting do not amount to a "new fact" for the purposes of a review application and the Appeals Chamber is not obliged to examine them further. Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber will consider whether, assuming the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meeting of 16 April 1994 could be characterized as a "new fact", they could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

(b) Whether the transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meeting of 16 April 1994 could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision

17. The identical contents of the radio broadcast transcripts presented by the Applicant suggest that he made only one radio broadcast regarding the said meeting, which radio broadcast was recorded and aired subsequently twice, without it being necessary for the Applicant to be present at the radio station each time to read out the same compte rendu.[41]

18. The Applicant's contends that, before the meeting in the morning of 16 April 1994, he gave an interview which, according to him, was transcribed into a 10-page document.[42] However, he indicates neither the starting nor finishing time or the duration of the interview, making it impossible to determine when he was at the Cabinet Meeting.

19. In the Appeals Chamber's view the Applicant has failed to demonstrate that the transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meeting of 16 April 1994 could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

3. Third alleged "new fact": Video footage KV00-0030 recorded on video tape KV-00-0030-0043 of the Cabinet Meeting/Press Conference presumably held on 13 May 1994

20. The Applicant submits BBC footage (recorded on video tape numbered KV-00-0030-0043) as proof that he was in a Cabinet Meeting/Press Conference on 13 May 1994 in Murambi (Gitarama). He argues that this confirms that he could not have been present on the same day at Muyira Hill (Kibuye), 100 kilometers away, participating in an attack, nor in Kucyapa, participating in a meeting. His presence at these events was alleged by Prosecution Witnesses GGY, HR, GGR, DAF, GGM and GGH.[43] The Applicant submits that the video not only discredits the testimonies of Prosecution

Witnesses GGY,[44] HR,[45] GGR,[46] DAF,[47] GGM[48] and GGH,[49] but confirms that their testimony was false.[50] The Applicant submits that, should the Appeals Chamber not find that the video tape amounts to a "new fact", it may consider it to be a "decisive factor", and review the findings concerning the attack on 13 May 1994 and the credibility of the relevant Prosecution witnesses, in order to prevent a possible miscarriage of justice.[51] The Prosecution responds that it remains unconvinced that the recorded meeting was held on 13 May 1994.[52] In the Prosecution's view, the video is of questionable value as alibi evidence, and does not disclose any "new fact" that would have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.[53]

(a) Whether the video footage KV00-0030 recorded on video tape numbered KV-00-0030-0043 constitutes a "new fact"

21. In the Appeals Chamber's view, the video footage represents information of an evidentiary nature relating to the Applicant's alibi of participation in a Cabinet Meeting/Press Conference of 13 May 1994, and a factor in considering the testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses GGY, HR, GGR, DAF, GGM and GGH. Nonetheless, the Applicant's attendance at the Cabinet Meeting/Press Conference of 13 May 1994, which the Applicant aims to prove with the video footage, cannot be considered a "new fact" as the issue was discussed at trial[54] and the Appeals Chamber is not obliged to examine it further. Nevertheless, the Appeals Chamber will consider whether, assuming the video footage could be characterized as a new fact", it could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

(b) Whether the video footage KV00-0030 recorded on video tape numbered KV-00-0030-0043 could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision

22. Even if the Cabinet Meeting/Press Conference[55] were held on 13 May 1994,[56] as testified to by Defence Witness TEN-10,[57] it does not imply that the Applicant could not have participated in the attack in Muyira and the meeting in Kucyapa on that day. Indeed the attack is supposed to have taken place on 13 May 1994 between 7:00 and 10:00 a.m.,[58] whereas according to Defence Witness TEN-10 the Cabinet Meetings were held usually from 8:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. or beyond.[59] The Applicant has failed to show that he participated in the said Cabinet Meeting/Press Conference from the beginning and that he could not have participated in the attack in Muyira and in the meeting in Kucyapa, and join the Cabinet Meeting/Press Conference at a later stage.

23. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Applicant has failed to establish that video footage KV00-0030 relating to the Cabinet Meeting/Press Conference allegedly held on 13 May 1994 could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

4. Fourth alleged "new fact": Affidavit of a potential Defence Witness TEN-3 in the Applicant's trial

24. The Applicant produces an affidavit signed on 13 August 2005 by the potential Defence Witness TEN-3 as proof that, on 20 May 1994, he was on a mission in Gisenyi and Goma and thus cannot be the person who, according to Prosecution Witness DAF, raped and murdered a girl on that day in Bisesero, 150 kilometers away.[60] The Applicant claims that Prosecution Witness DAF gave false testimony within the meaning of Rule 91 of the Rules.[61] The Applicant submits that it was intended that the author of the affidavit would be a Defence witness TEN-3 at trial but could not appear,[62] and that this affidavit was not available at the time in spite of due diligence.[63] The Applicant asserts that the affidavit constitutes a "new fact",[64] and, in any case, a "decisive factor" affecting the Trial and the Appeals Chambers' findings on the credibility of Prosecution Witness DAF and his testimony,[65] as well as the Trial Chamber's finding on the murder of the girl on 20 May 1994.[66] The Prosecution responds that the affidavit is not reliable,[67] that its author is not credible,[68] and that the Applicant failed to exercise due diligence to have Witness TEN-3 testify as a viva voce witness during trial.[69] The Prosecution concludes that the affidavit is not a "new fact"[70] and that it could not have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.[71]

(a) Whether the affidavit of the potential Defence Witness TEN-3 in the Applicant's trial constitutes a "new fact"

25. The Appeals Chamber finds that the affidavit constitutes information of an evidentiary nature, relating to the Applicant's alibi of having been on mission in Goma and Gisenyi on 20 May 1994 as well as to the credibility of Prosecution Witness DAF. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that although the affidavit is "new" material, having been signed on 13 August 2005, the Applicant's alibi of being on mission in Goma and Gisenyi on 20 May 1994, which it seeks to corroborate, is not new, having already been considered during the original proceedings. Equally the issue of the credibility of Witness DAF has been examined at trial and on appeal.[72] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Applicant himself acknowledges that the affidavit is not a "new fact", but rather additional evidence of his alibi, which had already been considered in the light of the testimonies of Witnesses TEN-9 and TEN-10.[73] While the Appeals Chamber is not obliged to examine it further it will nonetheless consider whether, assuming the affidavit of the potential Defence Witness TEN-3 in the Applicant's trial could be characterized as a "new fact", it could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

(b) Whether the affidavit of the potential Defence Witness TEN-3 in the Applicant's trial could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision

26. Even assuming that the alleged mission of the Applicant and of the potential Witness TEN-3 to Goma and Gisenyi lasted from 19 to 20 May in the afternoon, or even to 21 May 1994, it has not been established that the Applicant remained at all times with the potential witness and could not have travelled to Bisesero without the latter's knowledge before returning to Gisenyi. Likewise, Dr. Zilimwabagabo's testimony, which the Applicant recalls in this connection, that a reception was held to mark an agreement with SHABAIR on a day which he no longer recalls "around 10 a.m." at Hôtel Izuba in the presence of the Applicant[74] who, moreover, has never mentioned the said reception, is not sufficient to establish that the said reception was held on 20 May 1994, nor does it rule out the possibility that the Applicant could have travelled to Bisesero after the reception. Furthermore, the receipt from the Hôtel Méridien Izuba in Gisenyi for the period from 15 May to 1 June 1994, does not show that the Applicant actually stayed at the hotel on 20 May 1994 and did not leave it at any point on that day.[75]

27. The indication at point 7 of the affidavit that potential Witness TEN-3 returned to Gisenyi with the Applicant in the afternoon of 20 May 1994,[76] and the statement at point 9 of the same affidavit that the mission to Gisenyi and Goma lasted from 19 May until 8 a.m. on 20 May, constitutes an inherent contradiction which undermines the credibility of its author (potential witness TEN-3),[77] as well as the probative value of the affidavit itself. The Applicant's explanation that there is a typographic mistake at point 9, and that it should read "from 19 until the morning of 2[1] May"[78] is not only unpersuasive, but also reinforces Witness DAF's credibility, as it contradicts Defence Witness TEN-10's testimony that the mission lasted from 10 to 20 May 1994.[79] Moreover, what is at issue is not when the Applicant allegedly returned from mission, but rather his schedule on 20 May 1994. Accordingly, it is irrelevant for the Applicant to argue that point 8 of the affidavit cures the contradiction between points 7 and 9 thereof,[80] as point 8 only indicates that the Applicant returned on 21 May, but contains no details as to his schedule on 20 May 1994.

28. The Appeals Chamber concludes that the Applicant has failed to demonstrate that the contents of the affidavit of the potential Defence Witness TEN-3 in his trial relating to the events of 20 May 1994 could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

5. Fifth alleged "new fact": Transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meetings of 10 and 17 June 1994

29. The Applicant relies on the transcripts of cassettes AV/1040 and AV/1053 of the radio broadcast comptes rendus of the Cabinet meetings of 10 and 17 June 1994 to prove his presence in Murambi that day. He claims that he gave an account of the meetings on radio on 11 and 18 June 1994,[81] and thus he could not have been with the Interahamwe and bourgmestres in Kibuye, 200 kilometers away, planning an attack against the Tutsi refugees at Bisesero as testified by

Prosecution Witness GGV.[82] The Applicant contends that the said transcripts not only discredit Prosecution Witness GGV and his testimony, which is false,[83] but tend to corroborate the testimony of Defence Witness TEN-10. The Applicant submits that the transcripts constitute a "new fact" within the meaning of Article 25 of the Statute and Rules 120 and 121 of the Rules.[84] Alternatively, he requests the Appeals Chamber to consider them as a "decisive factor" of such import that they warrant the review of the findings on the credibility of Prosecution Witness GGV and the Applicant's activities of 10 and 17 June 1994[85] in order to prevent a miscarriage of justice.[86] The Prosecution responds that the transcripts do not represent a "new fact", but evidence of a fact already in issue during the proceedings, not capable of being a decisive factor in the original decision.[87]

(a) Whether the transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meetings of 10 and 17 June 1994 constitute a "new fact"

30. The Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that the transcripts constitute information of an evidentiary nature, relating to the Applicant's alibi of participation in the Cabinet Meetings of 10 and 17 June 1994 and, consequently, the credibility of Witness GGV. However, having been raised as such during the proceedings,[88] the Applicant's alibi based on his attendance at the Cabinet Meetings of 10 and 17 June 1994, in support of which the transcripts are introduced, is not a "new fact" within the meaning of Rule 120. Likewise, the contention that Prosecution Witness GGV's evidence was not credible is also not new as it was examined on appeal[89] and pleaded to some extent before the Trial Chamber.[90] While the Appeals Chamber is not obliged to examine them further it will nonetheless consider whether, assuming the transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meetings of 10 and 17 June 1994 could be characterized as a "new fact", they could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

(b) Whether the transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meetings of 10 and 17 June 1994 could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision

31. The transcripts of the radio broadcasts of 11 and 18 June 1994 reporting on Cabinet Meetings respectively held on 10 and 17 June 1994 do not prove that the Applicant effectively participated in the said meetings,[91] held a day preceding each radio broadcast. Accordingly, even assuming that Cabinet Meetings were held on 10 and 17 June 1994 in Muramba, and that the Applicant gave an account thereof on the radio, the transcripts do not prove that the Applicant physically participated in the cabinet meetings[92] or that if he was a participant, that he was present throughout the day. Furthermore, the transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the cabinet meeting held on 17 June 1994, indicating that the said meeting lasted from 9 a.m. or 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. or 6 p.m.,[93] discredit the testimony of Defence Witness TEN-10 that the meeting lasted from 10 a.m. or 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. or 7 p.m., thereby confirming the Trial Chamber's finding that the Witness is not credible.[94]

32. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Applicant has failed to establish that the contents of the transcripts of the radio broadcast of the compte rendu of the Cabinet Meetings held on 10 and 17 June 1994 could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

6. Sixth alleged "new fact": The agenda of the Cabinet Meeting of 22 June 1994, the testimonies of Witness PP in the Kayishema/Ruzindana case and the testimonies of Witnesses BE, BH, BB and AT in the Muhimana case

33. The Applicant states that, at 09:00 a.m. on 22 June 1994, he participated in a Cabinet Meeting in Muramba (Gisenyi).[95] Consequently, he could not have been at the scene of the murder, decapitation and emasculation of Assiel Kabanda, executed on the same day, in a location 240 kilometers away from Muramba, contrary to the testimony of Prosecution Witness GGO.[96] The Applicant further claims that Witness PP in the Kayishema and Ruzindana case, as well as Witnesses BE, BB, BH and AT in the Muhimana case, did not testify that he was among those involved in the killing.[97] Thirdly, the Applicant notes that the witnesses in the Muhimana case gave a description of the location of the murder contradictory to that given by Prosecution Witness GGO.[98] The Applicant argues that the agenda of the Cabinet Meeting of 22 June 1994, as well as the testimonies of the various witnesses, not only affect the credibility of the Prosecution Witness GGO,[99] but also corroborate the credibility of Defence Witness TEN-10.[100] The Applicant claims that Prosecution Witness GGO gave false testimony within the meaning of Rule 91 of the Rules.[101] The Applicant submits that the agenda and the various testimonies of witnesses amount to a "new fact" under Article 25 of the Statute and Rule 120 of the Rules. Alternatively, the Appellant submits that the Appeals Chamber may admit them as "decisive factors" warranting review of the Chambers' findings on the credibility of Witness GGO and the murder of Kabanda on 22 June 1994, in order to avoid a miscarriage of justice.[102] The Prosecution responds that the testimonies of Prosecution witnesses are not a "new fact" but evidence of a fact known at trial,[103] that the said testimonies do not suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the Applicant, or affect the credibility of Prosecution Witness GGO,[104] and that they could not have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.[105]

(a) Whether the agenda of the Cabinet Meeting of 22 June 1994 and the testimony of Witness PP in Kayishema/Ruzindana case and the testimony of Witnesses BE, BH, BB and AT in the Muhimana case constitutes a "new fact"

34. Regarding the alibi of the Applicant's participation in the Cabinet Meeting of 22 June 1994, and the credibility of Prosecution Witness GGO, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the agenda of the said meeting constitutes information of an evidentiary nature. However, the Applicant's attendance at the Cabinet Meeting of 22 June 1994, which the agenda seeks to establish, is not a "new fact", since it had been raised during the original proceedings.[106] Similarly, the credibility of

Prosecution Witness GGO, which the agenda is argued to impugn, was dealt with during the original proceedings and on appeal.[107]

35. While the testimony of Witness PP in the Kayishema and Ruzindana case could be seen as information of an evidentiary nature, the fact that the Applicant was not named as being among the persons present at the scene of the crime, which the testimony seeks to corroborate, does not raise a new issue, having been specifically considered during the proceedings.[108] The testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses BE, BH, BB and AT in the Muhimana case, which seek to corroborate this argument and which might be considered as information of an evidentiary nature,[109] fail to meet the requirements of Rule 120 for the same reason.

36. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that there is no merit in the Applicant's argument that both the agenda of the Cabinet Meeting of 22 June 1994 and the testimonies of witnesses in other cases constitute a "new fact".[110] While the Appeals Chamber is not obliged to examine them further it will nonetheless consider whether, assuming the agenda of the Cabinet Meeting of 22 June 1994 and the testimonies of witnesses in other cases could be characterized as a "new fact", they could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

(b) Whether the agenda of the Cabinet Meeting of 22 June 1994 and the testimony of Witness PP in the Kayishema/Ruzindana case and the testimony of Witnesses BE, BH, BB and AT in the Muhimana case could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision

37. Regarding the Applicant's attendance at the Cabinet Meeting of 22 June 1994, the entry "MININFOR" at point 4 of the agenda of the said meeting, which according to the Applicant, refers to the "Minister of Information"[111] is not unequivocal. The said entry in the agenda does not rule out the possibility that the Minister of Information may have sent a representative, or that the schedule of the meeting may have been subsequently amended to enable him to address the meeting earlier so that he could leave or that he did not attend the meeting at all. Even if considered to be of impeccable provenance, the agenda is not proof of anything other than the fact that a meeting was scheduled, but not that it actually took place with all anticipated participants present at all or throughout the meeting.

38. With regard to the issue of the Applicant's presence at the scene of Mr. Kabanda's murder, the Appeals Chamber has already ruled that the fact that Witness DAF, testifying in Kayishema/Ruzindana as Witness PP, did not specifically name the Applicant as being present at the scene of the murder[112] does not mean necessarily that he was absent.[113] The Applicant offers no reason why anything more should be inferred from the fact that Witnesses BE, BH, BB and AT in the Muhimana case did not say that he was present.

39. The letter convening the meeting of 22 June 1994, which was a Wednesday, cannot reinforce Defence Witness TEN-10's testimony that such meetings were usually held on Fridays.[114]

40. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Applicant has failed to show that the agenda of the Cabinet Meeting of 22 June 1994 and the testimony of Witness PP in the Kayishema/Ruzindana case and the testimony of Witnesses BE, BH, BB and AT in the Muhimana case could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

7. Supplementary arguments concerning other facts

[113] Appeal Judgement, para. 180.
[114] Prosecutor's Response, with Confidential Appendices, to Applicant's Additional Submissions, para. 65.

41. In the Additional Submissions, the Applicant's Counsel makes arguments concerning facts outside the scope of the Applicant's three original requests for review and the mandate given to her in the Appeals Chamber's Decisions of 20 June 2005 and 28 September 2005. One of these arguments relates, in particular, to the integrity of a certain Prosecution Counsel involved in the trial, the merit of which is addressed further down.[115] Defence Counsel also contests the findings of the Appeals Chambers on his participation in the attack on the Muyira Hill between 17 and 30 April 1994, as well as his participation in the meeting held on 3 May 1994 in the office of Kibuye Préfecture.[116]

42. The Appeals Chamber notes that the opportunity granted to the Defence to file Additional Submissions was limited to those alleged "new facts" raised by the Applicant in his requests filed pro se on 27 October 2004,[117] 7 February 2005,[118] and 17 August 2005.[119] Accordingly, any other alleged "new fact" invoked for the first time in the Additional Submissions exceeds the scope of the additional submissions as permitted in the Appeals Chamber's Decisions of 20 June and 28 September 2005. As explained above, the Appeals Chamber has exceptionally considered the alleged new facts raised by transcripts AV/908 and RSFO112 and video footage KV-00-0030-0043. However, the Appeals Chamber recalls that review proceedings may not be used to re-litigate issues considered in the original proceedings and declines to address on review matters that are outside the alleged "new facts" raised by the Applicant and in respect of which the Applicant or his Counsel did not bring any new evidentiary information.

II. The Request for application of Rules 89 (c) and 115 of the Rules as alternative to Article 25 and Rules 120 and 121

43. The Applicant suggests that Rules 89 (C) and 115 of the Rules can apply as alternatives to the provisions of Article 25 and Rules 120 and 121 governing the review proceedings.

A. Application of Rule 89 (C) instead of Article 25 and Rule 120

44. The Applicant requests the Appeals Chamber to issue an order admitting into evidence the materials submitted in support of his application,[120] pursuant Rule 89 (C) according to which "A Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value."

45. The Appeals Chamber considers that the general provision of Rule 89 (C) governing admission of evidence cannot supersede the lex specialis of Article 25 of the Statute and Rule 120 of the Rules in respect of review proceedings, for which the Statute and the Rules have set a different and more restrictive standard. It thus does not apply in this case.

B. Application of Rule 115 instead of Article 25 and Rule 120

46. In his submissions, the Applicant also referred to the provisions of Rule 115 of the Rules on the admission of additional evidence. Rule 115 of the Rules reads as follows:

> (A) A party may apply by motion to present additional evidence before the Appeals Chamber. Such motion shall clearly identify with precision the specific finding of fact made by the Trial Chamber to which the additional evidence is directed, and must be served on the other party and filed with the Registrar not later than seventy-five days from the date of the judgement, unless good cause is shown for further delay. Rebuttal material may be presented by any party affected by the motion.

(B) If the Appeals Chamber finds that the additional evidence was not available at trial and is relevant and credible, it will determine if it could have been a decisive factor in reaching the decision at trial. If it could have been such a factor, the Appeals Chamber will consider the additional evidence and any rebuttal material along with that already on the record to arrive at a final judgement in accordance with Rule 118.

(C) The Appeals Chamber may decide the motion prior to the appeal, or at the time of the hearing on appeal. It may decide the motion with or without an oral hearing.

47. The Appeals Chamber notes that there is a fundamental distinction between the admission of additional of evidence on appeal and a review based on a "new fact".[121] Rule 115 provides for the admission of additional evidence in appellate proceedings only, and is related to Article 24 of the Statute. Rule 120, on the other hand, pertains to review proceedings under Article 25 of the Statute and constitutes an "exceptional" procedure; it does not represent a second appeal.[122] Further, there is a distinction in the nature of the additional material which may be considered under Rule 115 and that which may be considered during a review proceeding.[123] While Rule 115 accepts any relevant and credible additional evidence of an issue which has already been considered at trial,[124] Article 25 and Rule 120 require a "new fact", defined as "new information of an evidentiary nature of a fact that was not in issue during the trial or appeal proceedings".[125] As noted above, the Appeals Chamber will only permit review on the basis of new evidence of a fact known at trial under exceptional circumstances.

48. The Appeals Chamber holds that it is incorrect for parties to rely on the provisions of Rule 115 for the purpose of review instead of relying on Article 25 of the Statute and Rule 120 of the Rules.

III. Alleged Rule 68 violations and related material prejudice

49. In an argument closely related to his submissions on the alleged "new facts", the Applicant further alleges that the Prosecution failed to disclose exculpatory evidence to the Defence, violating Rule 68 of the Rules and the Professional Code of Conduct to his prejudice within the meaning of Rule 5 of the Rules.[126]

A. Applicable Law

50. The relevant provisions are Rule 68 (A), (B), (D) and (E) read as follows:

Rule 68: Disclosure of Exculpatory Evidence (as amended in April 2004)

(A) The Prosecutor shall, as soon as practicable, disclose to the Defence any material, which in the actual knowledge of the Prosecutor may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the accused or affect the credibility of Prosecution evidence.

(B) Where possible, and with the agreement of the Defence, and without prejudice to paragraph (A), the Prosecutor shall make available to the Defence, in electronic form, collections of relevant material held by the Prosecutor, together with appropriate computer software with which the Defence can search such collections electronically.

(D) The Prosecutor shall apply to the Chamber sitting in camera to be relieved from an obligation under the Rules to disclose information in the possession of the Prosecutor, if its disclosure may prejudice further or ongoing investigations, or for any other reason may be contrary to the public interest or affect the security interests of any State, and when making such application, the Prosecutor shall provide the Trial Chamber (but only the Trial Chamber) with the information that is sought to be kept confidential.

(E) Notwithstanding the completion of the trial and any subsequent appeal, the Prosecutor shall disclose to the other party any material referred to in paragraph (A) above.

51. However, the Prosecution may be relieved of the obligations under Rule 68, if the existence of the relevant exculpatory evidence is known and the evidence is accessible to the appellant, as the appellant would not be prejudiced materially by this violation.[127]

52. Once the Defence has satisfied a Chamber that the Prosecution failed to comply with Rule 68, the Chamber, in addressing what is the appropriate remedy (if any), must examine whether the Defence has been materially prejudiced by the breach of Rule 68.[128]

B. Submissions of the Parties and Discussion

53. The Applicant submits that despite various orders of the Trial Chamber directing the Prosecution to disclose exculpatory materials pursuant to Rule 68, the Prosecution, notwithstanding its undertaking to comply,[129] withheld the transcripts of cassettes AV/906, AV/907, AV/908; purported to disclose the transcripts of cassettes RSFO122, AV/917, AV/1040, AV/1053 and video tape KV-0030-0043, but did so only partially;[130] and failed to disclose the testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses BE, BB, BH and AT in the Muhimana case. The Applicant contends that these failures[131] deprived him of exculpatory material supporting his alibis for 10 and 16 April, 13 May, 10, 17 and 22 June 1994, to his prejudice within the meaning of Rule 5 of the Rules.[132] According to the Applicant, the Prosecution violated the Prosecutor's Regulation N°2 (1999).[133] The Prosecution responds that failure to disclose the transcripts of cassettes AV/906, AV/907, AV/908 was not wilful,[134] and that other similar material, bearing upon the same alleged facts, was disclosed.[135] The Prosecution further submits that the transcripts of the other cassettes were disclosed to the Defence,[136] albeit in different versions or languages (Kinyarwanda), that there was no obligation under Rule 68 to communicate the testimonies of Prosecution witnesses in the Muhimana case to the Applicant, and that the Applicant did not suffer prejudice,[137] as none of the testimonies would have been a "decisive factor".[138] According to the Prosecution, the Applicant failed to demonstrate that the Prosecution did not adhere to the standard of professional conduct set out in the Prosecutor's Regulation N02 (1999).[139]

54. The Appeals Chamber will now examine the alleged violations of Rule 68.

1. Transcripts of cassettes AV/906, AV/907, AV/908 and RSFO122 relating to the Applicant's alibi for 10 April 1994

55. With regard to cassettes AV/906, AV/907 and AV/908, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to fulfil its obligations under Rule 68 (C) by its failure to make appropriate disclosure to the Applicant of material that was in its custody.[140] The Prosecution's argument that, as the Applicant possessed information regarding the meeting and its radio broadcast as indicated by the cross-examination of Witness GGH,[141] and there is no indication that the Defence prompted a search of Prosecution database, cannot excuse the Prosecution's breach of a fundamental obligation owed to the Applicant under the Rules.

56. The Applicant's allegation that the Prosecution made a tactical decision not to disclose the transcripts[142] is, however, unsubstantiated. It has also not been established that the Prosecution acted in bad faith in spite of the Trial Chamber's Decisions of 4 February 2000 and 27 February 2001, and the assurance given by the Prosecution itself to disclose any exculpatory evidence that came into its possession.[143] Accordingly, the Applicant's claim that the Prosecution violated paragraph 2 (a), (d) and (h) of the Prosecutor's Regulation N°2 as well as general standards of professional conduct,[144] lacks foundation. The allegation by the Applicant of a conspiracy to fabricate evidence against him[145] is similarly lacking in substantiation and merits no further consideration.

57. The Appeals Chamber recalls its finding above that the finding during the original proceedings of transport of guns by the Applicant on 10 April 1994, which the transcripts of cassettes AV/906, AV/907 and AV/908 are meant to contest, was not critical to his conviction for any crime.[146] Therefore the said transcripts would have been disclosed during the original proceedings and they would not have affected the convictions.

58. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Applicant has failed to show that the non-disclosure of the transcripts of cassettes AV/906, AV/907 and AV/908 caused him material prejudice.

59. Regarding the transcripts of cassette RSFO122, the Appeals Chamber finds the Applicant's allegation of non-disclosure[147] to lack foundation as the record shows that the transcripts were disclosed to him,[148] and that he also referred to them in his notices of alibi dated 25 September and 18 October 2002,[149] despite their being in Kinyarwanda.[150] The Appeals Chamber, therefore, does not find that non-compliance with the Rules has been established.

2. Transcripts of cassette AV/917 relating to the Applicant's alibi for 16 April 1994

60. On the basis of the record before it, the Appeals Chamber considers that an 11-page translation of the transcripts of cassette AV/917 was disclosed to the Applicant on 19 April 2000,[151] before the Applicant's key alibi witness testified. The Appeals Chamber notes that the same document was requested again by the Defence on 18 September 2002, and disclosed again on 25 October 2002.[152]

61. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution disclosed only the 11-page version of the translation and that it failed to disclose the full 29-page version of the transcripts, in its possession since, at the latest, 20 August 2001.[153] The Appeals Chamber notes the Prosecution's contention that, although the 29-page version may have been physically available at that time, it was not properly recorded in its database until 5 February 2004 and therefore could not have been discovered by an electronic search during the trial. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Rule 68 (B) requires the Prosecution to make available to the Appellant, "in electronic form, collections of relevant material held by the Prosecution, together with appropriate computer software with which the Defence can search such collections electronically" and as such the Prosecution cannot rely upon its failure to diligently update electronic records. Similarly, the Prosecution cannot prevail on its argument that the 11-page version of the transcripts disclosed to the Applicant is substantially the same as the 29-page version.[154]

62. In considering Rule 5, however, the Applicant does not satisfy the Appeals Chamber that material prejudice was caused by the failure to disclose the 29-page version of the transcript of cassette AV/917. The Applicant has not demonstrated that the difference in content between the shorter and longer versions was such that having possession of the longer one would have made a material difference in the preparation of his case.

63. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Applicant has failed to show that this Rule 68 violation caused him material prejudice.

3. Video footage KV-00-0030 relating to the Applicant's alibi for 13 May 1994

64. The Appeals Chamber notes that the material portion of the video tape relating to the Applicant's alibi for 13 May 1994 was disclosed to the Applicant as KV00-0030 and KV00-0030B.[155] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Applicant had requested the disclosure of a cassette identified as KV00-0030-0043. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Applicant invoked the said video tape in his notices of alibi dated 16 June, 25 September and 18 October 2002[156] and, therefore, the argument that it was not disclosed to him is not convincing. Given the similarity of names and content, and the prior notice provided by the Prosecution of when the relevant video would be disclosed, the Appeals Chamber finds unsustainable the Applicant's argument that neither he nor his Defence team would have recognised KV00-0030 and KV00-0030B to be the requested disclosure material. The Appeals Chamber considers that the Prosecution could have, as a matter of courtesy, alerted the Defence that the video footage disclosed under the names KV00-0030 and KV00-0030B is the relevant portion of the cassette requested as KV00-0030-0043. However, the Applicant's arguments that the Prosecution must have drawn his attention to the fact that the numbering and format of the video tape was different[157] or must have provided more specific guidance as to the importance of the said tape[158] is without merit, as there is no prima facie obligation for the Prosecution to identify the material being disclosed as potentially exculpatory.[159]

65. The Appeals Chamber concludes that the Applicant has failed to demonstrate a violation of Rule 68 of the Rules in this respect.

4. Transcripts of cassettes AV/1040 and AV/1053 of 11 and 18 June 1994 relating to the Applicant's alibi for 10 and 17 June 1994

66. Based on the submissions, the Appeals Chamber considers that Kinyarwanda transcripts of cassettes AV/1040 and AV/1053 were disclosed to the Applicant by 28 October 2002, before the Applicant's key alibi witness testified.[160]

67. The Appeals Chamber considers that, as the Applicant mentioned the transcripts of cassette AV/1040 in the notice of alibi dated 16 June 2002, and the transcripts of cassette AV/1053 in the notices of alibi dated 25 September, 16 June and 18 October 2002,[161] he must have been aware of their contents before they were disclosed to him by the Prosecution. Therefore, the Applicant's claim that cassette AV/1040 was blank[162] when it was first disclosed to him does not establish that he suffered material prejudice. Further, the Applicant's assertion that he received the transcripts of cassettes AV/1040 and AV/1053 only on 9 October 2004 thanks to another accused person to whom the cassettes had been disclosed, is also unpersuasive.[163]

68. The Appeals Chamber considers that even though the Applicant speaks Kinyarwanda as his mother tongue, and had chosen to rely on Kinyarwanda versions of transcripts in his notice of alibi,[164] the Prosecution is not justified in failing to disclose a translation in one of the official languages of the Tribunal as soon as it is available.[165] The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that the Applicant has not indicated that failure to supply a translation was an obstacle to making use of the transcripts. The fact that the transcripts were relied upon in the Notices of Alibi suggests that the Applicant and his defence team surmounted the difficulties of language and accordingly suffered no prejudice.

69. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Applicant has failed to show that this Rule 68 violation caused him material prejudice.

5. Testimonies of witnesses in the Kayishema and Ruzindana case and Muhimana case pertaining to the Applicant's alibi for 22 June 1994

70. The Appeals Chamber recalls its earlier finding that the failure of Prosecution Witness PP in the Kayishema and Ruzindana case to implicate the Applicant directly in Assiel Kabanda's murder did not foreclose the possibility of the Applicant's presence at the scene.[166] By the same analysis, the testimony of Prosecution Witnesses BE, BB, BH and AT in the Muhimana case, which also do not implicate the Applicant in the same event do not necessarily suggest an exculpatory factor and the Prosecution was under no obligation under Rule 68 to disclose the said testimonies to the Applicant.

71. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that, the Applicant has failed to demonstrate that Prosecution Counsel did not adhere to the standards of professional conduct set out under Prosecutor's Regulation N°2 and a material prejudice within the meaning of Rule 5 of the Rules has not been shown.

6. Integrity of a certain Prosecution Counsel involved in the Applicant's Trial

72. The Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that most of the arguments relating to the involvement in this case of a certain prosecuting Counsel who had been subject to professional discipline in her home jurisdiction were already raised by the Applicant and rejected at the appeals stage and the Appeals Chamber will not consider them de novo as review proceedings is not an opportunity simply to re-litigate unsuccessful appeals.

73. Therefore the Appeals Chamber will address the merit of the Applicant's arguments only insofar as they relate to the recently discovered communications showing that the said Counsel was not consistently supervised at trial – as was suggested by the Appeals Chamber – and insofar as they relate to the existence of disclosure violations that may have occurred as a result of the involvement of said Counsel in his case.

74. As to the supervision of the prosecuting Counsel, the Appeals Chamber notes that it was not critical to its disposition of this ground of the Applicant's appeal. The Appeals Chamber rather held that the attorney's suspension from the New York bar did not preclude the prosecutor from entrusting her with authority under Rule 37 (B) of the Rules, that she remained bound by the ethical constraints imposed on all counsel before the International Tribunal, that her suspension was for reasons unrelated to the Applicant's case and that the attorney's involvement in his case did not in any event compromise the Applicant's right to a fair trial. None of those conclusions of the Appeals Chamber at the appeal stage is put in question by the materials submitted at the review stage.

75. Regarding the prejudice which would have resulted from the disclosure violations, the Appeals Chamber recalls its above finding that they did not materially prejudice the Applicant.

IV. Disposition

76. The Appeals Chamber

DISMISSES all requests of the Applicant and the Prosecution;

REMINDS the Prosecution of its fundamental obligations in respect of disclosure of exculpatory material pursuant to Rule 68 of the Rules.

V. Declaration of Judge Shahabuddeen 30 June 2006 (ICTR-96-14-R)

1. I agree with the outcome of today's decision and with the greater part of its reasoning. I write to clarify my views on two interrelated points. First, the Appeals Chamber repeatedly states that, if evidence does not "amount to a 'new fact' for the purposes of a review application", "the Appeals Chamber is not obliged to examine [it] further".[1] Second, the Appeals Chamber holds that "in 'wholly exceptional circumstances', where the impact of a 'new fact' on the decision would be such that to ignore it would lead to a miscarriage of justice, review might be possible even though the 'new fact' was known to the moving party, or was discoverable by it through the exercise of due diligence."[2] These two positions are not reconcilable.

2. Article 25 authorizes review only "[w]here a new fact has been discovered which was not known at the time of the proceedings". In other words, it requires that a new fact be established, as well as that that new fact must have been unknown at the time of the proceedings. If the matter concerned does not meet these criteria, article 25 gives no power of review even if a miscarriage of justice would have been perpetrated. But since, as it seems to me, it is necessary to avert a miscarriage of justice however it arises, the power to do so must derive from a source other than article 25 where this provision does not reasonably cover the case. That power can only be the inherent jurisdiction of the Appeals Chamber.

3. The inherent jurisdiction is familiar to the Tribunal. It need not be thought that, because it is styled "inherent", it comes from nowhere: it is impliedly given by the Statute to the Tribunal as a judicial body, being an understood accompaniment of the jurisdiction which the Statute expressly grants. In exceptional circumstances, the Appeals Chamber ought to be able to correct its errors without artificially and awkwardly disguising what it is doing as an article 25 review. And it need not be feared that the floodgates will be opened: As stated in my declaration appended to a recent decision of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Žigić,[3] the ICTY Appeals Chamber's judgement in Čelebići (relating to sentencing) set appropriate limiting standards for evaluating requests for reconsideration of judgements on the basis of the Tribunal's inherent powers.

4. It bears noting that in Žigić, in which the ICTY Appeals Chamber disagreed with the rule established by it in Čelebići, the ICTY Appeals Chamber reasoned that article 25 alone provided a sufficient remedy for injustice because "the requirement of the existence of a 'new fact' has been interpreted broadly". Today's decision, however, neither invokes nor illustrates a "broad" interpretation of that requirement, which is instead rather strictly enforced. I do not object to strict enforcement that is consistent with article 25. What I do object to is the notion that, where the determination is that article 25 is inapplicable, that ends the Appeals Chamber's obligation to ensure that justice is done.

5. I do not suggest that the present decision is unjust in its actual consequences. I agree with the Appeals Chamber's analysis that none of the evidence the applicant now seeks to introduce could have been a decisive factor in the Appeals Chamber's judgement. I therefore support the outcome of the case. But I reaffirm my declaration in Žigić.

VI. Annex A - Procedural Background

1. On 27 October 2004, the Applicant personally, and without the assistance of Counsel, filed a "Requête en révision du jugement/réparation du préjudice causé par la violation, par le Procureur, du Règlement et des règlements internes" (the "Applicant's Request for Review"). In that filing he asserts that the transcripts of radio broadcasts concerning Cabinet Meetings in which he had allegedly participated on 10 and 16 April 1994, as well as on 10 and 17 June 1994, and which were not disclosed to him by the Prosecution, constitute "new facts" pursuant to Article 25 of the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and Rules 120 and 121 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal (the "Rules"). He also claims that these transcripts represent a "decisive factor" in that they impugn the credibility of various witnesses. He argues that to ignore the said transcripts "could" or "would" lead to a miscarriage of justice.

2. On 6 December 2004, the Prosecution filed the "Prosecutor's Response to Requête en Révision du Jugement/Réparation du Préjudice causé par la Violation, par le Procureur, du Règlement et des Règlements Internes" (the "Prosecution's Response to Applicant's Request for Review"), stating that some of the transcripts had been disclosed to the Applicant in the original proceedings and that, in any event, nothing in them amounts to a "new fact" or a "decisive factor". On 29 December 2004, the Applicant filed his "Réplique à la réponse du Procureur à la Requête en révision du jugement/réparation du préjudice causé par la violation, par le Procureur, du Règlement et des règlements internes" (the "Applicant's Reply to the Prosecution's Response to Applicant's Request for Review") in which he reiterates that the transcripts in question had not been communicated to him and that the facts in them amounted to "new facts". He submits that the transcripts "could" or "would" have been a "decisive factor".

3. On 7 February 2005, the Applicant filed his "Mémoire supplémentaire à la « Requête en révision du jugement/réparation du préjudice causé par la violation, par le Procureur, du Règlement et des règlements internes »" (the "Applicant's Additional Brief to Request for Review"). He claims that the testimony of Witness PP in the Kayishema and Ruzindana case, and of Witnesses BE, BH, BB and AT in the Muhimana case, also amount to a "new fact" warranting a review of the Trial Chamber's finding on his alibi for the murder of Assiel Kabanda on 22 June 1994. The Applicant alleges that these exculpatory materials had not been disclosed to him by the Prosecution. The Prosecution responded on 18 March 2005, in the "Prosecutor's Response to "Mémoire supplémentaire à la « requête en révision du Jugement/réparation du préjudice causé par la violation, par le Procureur, du Règlement et des règlements internes »" (the "Prosecution's Response to Applicant's Additional Brief to Request for Review"), stating that the relevant witness testimonies do not represent a "new fact" warranting review within the meaning of Article 25 of the Statute and Rules 120 and 121 of the Rules. The Applicant replied on 31 March 2005 in his "Mémoire en Réplique à la Réponse du Procureur du 18 mars 2005 au Mémoire supplémentaire à la « Requête en révision du jugement/réparation du préjudice causé par la violation, par le Procureur, du Règlement et des règlements internes »" (the "Applicant's Brief in Reply to Prosecution's Response to the Additional Brief to Request for Review"). He reiterates his original position that the testimonies do constitute a "new fact" warranting review.

4. On 6 May 2005, the Applicant filed pro se a "Requête urgente en assistance de l'équipe de la défense" (the "Applicant's Urgent Request for Legal Assistance"), pursuant to Article 20 of the Statute and Rules 54 and 107 of the Rules. He requested the Appeals Chamber to order that his Defence team be allowed to resume their representation of him at the preliminary examination stage of his Request for Review.[1] By its "Decision on Niyitegeka's Urgent Request for Legal Assistance" filed on 20 June 2005 (the "Appeals Chamber's Decision of 20 June 2005"), the Appeals Chamber granted the Urgent Request for Legal Assistance and instructed the Registry to assign Counsel, Ms. Geraghty, for a limited period for the purpose of assisting the Applicant at the stage of the preliminary examination. Therein, the Applicant was instructed, should he deem it necessary, to file additional submissions to his application no later than 20 days from the date of assignment of Ms. Geraghty. The Appeals Chamber further ordered the Prosecution to respond to the Applicant's additional submissions (if it chose to do so) no later than 15 days after the date of the Applicant's filing, and directed the Applicant to reply to any such response no later than 7 days subsequently.

5. On 15 August 2005, the Prosecution filed the "Prosecutor's Motion to Move for Decision on Niyitegeka's Requests for Review pursuant to Rules 120 and 121" (the "Prosecution's Motion to Move for Decision"). It stated that Counsel for the Applicant had not filed any additional submissions within the 20 day deadline and had also not moved for an extension of time by showing good cause pursuant to Rule 116 of the Rules.[2] It therefore requested the Appeals Chamber to render a decision, pursuant to Rule 121, on the basis of the record before it.[3] It also requested the Appeals Chamber not to consider the merits of a late filing unless good cause was shown pursuant to Rule 116 of the Rules, in which case it sought to file further submissions with regard to the issue of good cause.[4] On 18 August 2005, the Applicant filed the "Extremely Urgent Defence Motion Pursuant to Rule 116 for an Extension of Time Limit and Rule 68 (a), (b) and (e) for Disclosure of Exculpatory Evidence Both of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda and Response to Prosecutor's Motion of 15 August 2005 Seeking a Decision, in the Absence of any Legal Submissions from the Applicant" (the "Defence Extremely Urgent Motion for Extension of Time Limit and for Disclosure of Exculpatory Evidence"). It asserted that the terms of Counsel's contract with the Tribunal, dated 20 July 2005, varied or interpreted the 20 days granted to the Applicant by the Appeals Chamber's Decision of 20 June 2005 to mean working days,[5] that the opportune date for filing the additional submissions was thus 19 August 2005,[6] and that, accordingly, the Defence had not failed to comply with the Appeals Chamber's orders.[7] Counsel also requested the Appeals Chamber to order the Prosecution to make full and complete disclosure of exculpatory material, as well as to grant an extension of time for the filing deadline on the grounds, inter alia, of allowing the Defence to obtain an affidavit and English translation of all pleadings since 26 October 2004.

6. On 28 September 2005, by its "Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion to Move for Decision on Niyitegeka's Requests for Review pursuant to Rules 120 and 121 and the Defence Extremely Urgent Motion Pursuant to Rule 116 for [an] Extension of Time Limit and Rule 68 (A), (B) and (E) for Disclosure of Exculpatory Evidence Both of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda and Response to Prosecutor's Motion of 15 August 2005 Seeking a Decision, in the Absence of any Legal Submissions from the Applicant" (the "Appeals Chamber's Decision of 28 September 2005"), the Appeals Chamber instructed the Applicant to file, through Counsel, his additional submissions no later than ten days from receipt of the decision. The Defence motion was dismissed in all other respects, and the decision on the Prosecution's Motion to Move for Decision deferred. The Appeals Chamber further instructed the Prosecution to respond to the Applicant's additional submissions no later than 15 days from the date of filing, and the Applicant to make any reply within the following 7 days.

7. On 17 August 2005, the Applicant filed, pro se and confidentially, his "Requête de Monsieur Eliézer Niyitegeka aux fins de l'admission d'un élément de preuve nouveau" (the "Applicant's Request for Admission of New Evidence") pursuant to Rules 54, 89, 107 and 120 of the Rules, submitting an affidavit signed by a potential Defence Witness TEN-3 which he claims represents a "new fact", decisive with regard to the charge of murder of a 13-15 year old girl on 20 May 1994. On 26 September 2005, the Prosecution confidentially filed its "Réponse du Procureur à la «Requête de Monsieur Eliézer Niyitegeka aux fins de l'admission d'un élément de preuve nouveau»" (the "Prosecution's Response to Applicant's Request for Admission of New Evidence"), contesting the credibility both of the affidavit and of its author (potential Defence Witness TEN-3), and asserting that the said affidavit would not have affected the original verdict. On 11 October 2005, the Applicant filed pro se his confidential "Mémoire en réplique à la Réponse du Procureur à la « Requête de Monsieur Eliézer Niyitegeka aux fins de l'admission d'un élément de preuve nouveau »" (the "Applicant's Brief in Reply to Prosecution's Response to Request for Admission of New Evidence") in which he contests the Prosecution's arguments made in its Response.

8. Two confidential documents appended to the Applicant's Request for Admission of New Evidence prompted the Prosecution to file, on 26 August 2005, a "Motion to Request for an Investigation into Breach of Confidentiality pursuant to Rules 33 (A), 54, 73 (A) and 107" (the "Prosecution's Motion for Investigation into Breach of Confidentiality"). The Prosecution requested that the Appeals Chamber direct the Registrar to conduct an investigation into the manner in which the Applicant received the two confidential documents and to inform the Chamber and the Prosecution of the outcome of the investigation; the Prosecution also requested that the Appeals Chamber disregard the two documents in considering the merits of the Applicant's Third Request for Review (made in the Applicant's Request for Admission of New Evidence). The Applicant responded on 2 September 2005, again confidentially and pro se, in the "Réponse de Monsieur Eliézer Niyitegeka à la requête du Procureur intitulée 'Motion to Request [an] Investigation into Breach of Confidentiality Pursuant to Rules 33 (A), 54, 73 (A) and 107'" (the "Applicant's Response to the Prosecution's Motion for Investigation into Breach of Confidentiality"). By its confidential "Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion to Request an Investigation into Breach of Confidentiality Pursuant to Rules 33 (A), 54, 73 (A) and 107" filed on 2 November 2005 (the "Appeals Chamber Decision of 2 November 2005"), the Appeals Chamber directed the Prosecution to conduct an investigation into both the circumstances and extent of the breach of confidentiality, and requested the Registrar to provide the Prosecution with the cooperation required in the conduct of the investigations. The Appeals Chamber deferred its decision on whether to disregard the content of the two documents to its decision on the Applicant's Request for Admission of New Evidence and dismissed the remainder of the Prosecution's Motion.

9. On 10 October 2005, Defence Counsel filed "Additional Submissions of Applicant made pursuant to Appeals Chamber Decision dated 20 June 2005 in the Matter of an Application for Review and/or Reconsideration and for Receipt of Evidence Pursuant to Article 25 and Rule 120, Rule 89 (C), Rule 115, Rule 54 and Rule 107" (the "Applicant's Additional Submissions"). Defence Counsel elaborates extensively on the alleged "new facts" and the "violations of Rule 68" previously argued by the Applicant, and relies on various additional arguments to show that the alleged "new facts" would have been "decisive factors" in both the decisions of the Trial Chamber and the Appeals Chamber, and thus that to ignore them would lead to a miscarriage of justice. On 25 October 2005, the Prosecution filed its "Prosecutor's Response, with Confidential Appendices, to 'Additional Submissions of Applicant made pursuant to Appeals Chamber Decision dated 20 June 2005 in the matter of an Application for Review and/or Reconsideration and for Receipt of Evidence pursuant to Article 25 and Rule 120, Rule 89 (C), Rule 115, Rule 54 and Rule 107'" (the "Prosecution's Response with Confidential Appendices to the Applicant's Additional Submissions") further contesting the allegations of Rule 68 violations and noting that the additional submissions exceed the scope of the Appeals Chamber's decisions of 20 June and 28 September 2005.

10. On 31 October 2005, the Applicant filed an "Extremely Urgent Defence Motion Pursuant to Rule 116 of the Rules of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Seeking an Extension of Time" (the "Defence Motion for Extension of Time") to seek an extension of time to reply to the Prosecutor's Response with Confidential Appendices to the Additional Submissions. On 31 October 2005, the Prosecution filed the "Prosecutor's Response to Extremely Urgent Defence Motion pursuant to Rule 116 of the Rules of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Seeking an Extension of Time" (the "Prosecution's Response to Defence Motion for Extension of Time") in which it did not oppose the extension of time requested by the Defence. By the "Prosecutor's Motion for Filing of Additional Material" (the "Prosecution's Motion for Additional Material"), filed on the same date, the Prosecution sought to file video footage (labelled KV00-0030 and KV00-0030B) in response to a request from the Defence. In its "Decision on [the] Extremely Urgent Defence Motion Seeking an Extension of Time pursuant to Rule 116 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence and the Prosecution's Motion for Filing of Additional Material" filed on 2 November 2005 (the Second Appeals Chamber Decision of 2 November 2005), the Appeals Chamber granted the Defence motion and ordered the Defence to file a reply to the Prosecution's Response with Confidential Appendices to the Additional Submissions no later than 9 November 2005; secondly, it granted the Prosecution's Motion and directed the Prosecution to file two sets of the video footage referred to therein immediately upon receipt of the decision; and, thirdly, it requested the Registrar immediately to communicate to Defence Counsel, by an express courier, one set of the additional material. On the same day, the Defence confidentially filed its "Provisional Applicant's Reply to Prosecutor's Response [dated 25/10/2005] to 'Additional Submissions' of Applicant made pursuant to Appeals Chamber Decisions of 20 June 2005 and 28 September 2005 in the Matter of an Application for Review and/or Reconsideration and for Receipt of Evidence pursuant to Article 25 and Rule 120, Rule 89 (c), Rule 54 and Rule 107" (the "Provisional Reply to Prosecution's Response to the Additional Submissions").

11. On 10 November 2005, the Defence filed the updated "Applicant's Reply to Prosecutor's Response [dated 25/10/2005] to 'Additional Submissions' of Applicant Made Pursuant to Appeals Chamber Decision of 20 June 2005 and 28 September 2005 in the Matter of an Application for Review and/or Reconsideration and for Receipt of Evidence pursuant to Article 25 and Rule 120, Rule 89 (C), Rule 54 and Rule 107" (the "Applicant's Reply to Prosecution's Response to Additional Submissions"), as corrected on 18 November 2005, to replace the Provisional Reply to Prosecution's Response to the Additional Submissions. Defence Counsel further elaborated on the alleged disclosure failure by the Prosecution, alleging in particular that the Prosecution had still not disclosed a "true and full copy" of the video footage labelled KV00-0030 and further requesting that the Prosecution be directed to make continuing disclosure of all matters highlighted by the Applicant.

THE APPEALS CHAMBER of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994 ("International Tribunal"),

RECALLING that the Appeals Chamber rendered its Judgement in this case on 9 July 2004 ("Appeal Judgement"), in which it sentenced Eliézer Niyitegeka ("Niyitegeka") to life-imprisonment;[1]

RECALLING the "Decision on Request for Review" rendered on 30 June 2006 ("Impugned Decision"), in which the Appeals Chamber dismissed all requests submitted by Niyitegeka on 27 October 2004, 7 February 2005, 17 August 2005, and 10 October 2005 for review of the Appeals Judgement pursuant to Article 25 of the Statute and Rules 120 and 121 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Tribunal;[2]

BEING SEIZED OF the "Requête en reconsidération de la 'Decision on Request for Review' du 30 juin 2006" filed by Niyitegeka on 1 August 2006 ("Request for Reconsideration"), in which he: (1) seeks reconsideration of the Impugned Decision on grounds that he is a victim of a miscarriage of justice due to the existence of clear errors in the Appeals Chamber's reasoning in the Impugned Decision that have caused him grave material prejudice;[3] and (2) requests that, prior to the Appeals Chamber's full consideration of his Request for Reconsideration, it extend his Counsel's mandate to assist him in obtaining an Affidavit from Mr. Kambanda and in filing additional submissions that would provide further evidence of the persuasiveness of his alibi;[4]

NOTING the "Prosecutor's Response to Niyitegeka's 'Requête en reconsidération de la Decision on Request for Review du 30 juin 2006'" filed on 10 August 2006;

CONSIDERING that the Appeals Chamber recently held that: although it has inherent discretionary power to reconsider its own decisions in exceptional circumstances, "there is no power to reconsider a final judgement" because it is inconsistent with the Statute of the International Tribunal, "which provides for a right of appeal and the right of review but not for a second right of appeal by the avenue of reconsideration of a final judgement"; existing proceedings for appeal and review established under the Statute provide sufficient safeguards for due process and the right to a fair trial; and it is in the interests of justice for both victims and convicted persons who are entitled to "certainty and finality of legal judgements";[5]

CONSIDERING further that a final judgement is a decision which terminates the proceedings in a case;[6]

FINDING, by majority, that because the Impugned Decision rejected Niyitegeka's requests for review of the Appeal Judgement, it is a final decision closing the proceedings in this case;

HEREBY DISMISSES the Appellant's Request for Reconsideration; and DECLARES the request therein for extension of Counsel's mandate as moot.

Declaration of Judge Shahabuddeen
27 September 2006 (ICTR-96-14-R)

(Original : English)

24. On the merits, I agree with the dismissal of the request for reconsideration of the decision denying the appellant's request for review. However, I am not persuaded by the holding of the Appeals Chamber that it has no power to reconsider a decision on a request for review.

2. In Žigić, the Appeals Chamber, disagreeing with the rule established by it in Čelebići, held that "there is no power to reconsider a final judgement."[1] I disagree with the conclusion of the majority in this case that the Appeals Chamber's "Decision on Request for Review" of 30 June 2006 ("impugned decision") likewise is not subject to the Appeals Chamber's inherent discretionary power to reconsider its own decisions.

3. The impugned decision of the Appeals Chamber did not address, on the merits, the original findings in this case. The Appeals Chamber found that the test for review in Rules 120 and 121 had not been met by the applicant in that he had not presented a new fact that, if proven, could have been a decisive factor in reaching the appeal judgement. No other Chamber previously considered the question whether there was a new fact. This question was raised for the first time in the applicant's Request for Review and decided for the first time in the impugned decision.

4. In Žigić, the Appeals Chamber emphasized that the Statute of the Tribunal "provides for a right of appeal and a right of review but not for a second right of appeal by the avenue of reconsideration of a final judgement."[2] The rationale for the rule barring reconsideration of a final judgement is that an appellant, having had the opportunity to contest the original findings against him through appeal and review proceedings, is not entitled to a further bite at the cherry by way of a request for reconsideration. In this case, by contrast, the Appeals Chamber's decision marked the first time that any Chamber considered the applicant's arguments concerning the existence of new facts and their possible impact on the judgement. In my view, the Appeals Chamber has jurisdiction to reconsider such a decision, which is not subject to any further appeal or review proceedings, in order to correct a clear miscarriage of justice. This power should be exercised only in exceptional circumstances. However, consistent with the reasoning in Žigić and in the interests of justice, the exercise of this power should not be precluded altogether.

5. Nonetheless, the applicant has not demonstrated either a clear error of reasoning in the impugned decision or an injustice that warrants the exercise of the Appeals Chamber's inherent jurisdiction to reconsider the impugned decision. For this reason, I support the outcome of the case.

Separate Opinion of Judge Meron
27 September 2006 (ICTR-96-14-R)

(Original : English)

1. I agree with my learned colleagues that the Appeals Chamber must dismiss the Request for Reconsideration. I write separately, however, because I base my position solely on the fact that Niyitegeka has neither demonstrated a clear error of reasoning in the Impugned Decision nor shown that reconsideration is necessary in order to prevent injustice.[1]

25. In the Čelebići Judgement on Sentence Appeal,[2] the Appeals Chamber concluded that it "has an inherent power to reconsider any decision, including a judgment where it is necessary to do so in order to prevent an injustice."[3] Yet in a separate opinion, one colleague and I explained that to decide the matter then before the Appeals Chamber, there was no need to determine whether it has inherent power to reconsider its judgements.[4] We therefore reserved our position on whether the Appeals Chamber has such an inherent power.[5] Recently, the Appeals Chamber overturned the rule it established in the Čelebići Judgement on Sentence Appeal, holding instead that "there is no power to reconsider a final judgement."[6] I was not on the bench of the Appeals Chamber that departed from the holding of the Čelebići Judgement on Sentence Appeal. In the case where the Appeals Chamber so departed – Prosecutor v. Žigić – as in Čelebići, I therefore had no occasion to consider whether the Appeals Chamber has the power to reconsider a final judgement that it renders.

26. I continue to reserve my position on this question, as Niyitegeka's Request for Reconsideration must be dismissed regardless of whether the Appeals Chamber may reconsider one of its final judgements. A motion for reconsideration cannot succeed without "demonstrat[ing] the existence of a clear error of reasoning in the [impugned decision], or of circumstances justifying its reconsideration in order to avoid injustice".[7] The Request for Reconsideration raises one frivolous challenge to the manner in which, in one part of the Impugned Decision, the Appeals Chamber applied the requirement that a review request be based on a new fact.[8] Aside from this, the Request for Reconsideration never

[8] Request for Reconsideration, paras 24-25. Niyitegeka points to a paragraph of the Trial Judgement stating that his counsel tried to prove he "was at a government council meeting in Kigali the entire day on 10 April" 1994. Request for Reconsideration, para. 24 (quoting Prosecutor v. Niyitegeka, Case N°ICTR-96-14-T, Judgement, 16 May 2003 ("Trial Judgement"), para. 67). He then quotes the Trial Judgement's assertion that he adduced no evidence of this meeting, Request for Reconsideration, para. 24 (quoting Trial Judgement, para. 67), and contends that as "he is being compelled to prove the veracity of his alibi … the factual evidence of the meeting of 10 April 1994" that he sought to introduce in the review proceeding "does constitute a 'new fact'." Request for Reconsideration, para. 25. As the Impugned Decision explained, however, a new fact is "new information of an evidentiary nature of a fact that was not in issue during the trial or appeal proceedings". Impugned Decision, para. 6 (quoting Prosecutor v. Tadić, Case N°IT-94-1-R, Decision on Motion for Review, attempts to show error in the Appeals Chamber's conclusion that arguments raised in the Request for Review did not pertain to new facts,[9] and that these arguments therefore could not satisfy the four requirements – laid out in paragraph 6 of the Impugned Decision – for obtaining review of a judgement. Though Niyitegeka challenges the Impugned Decision's conclusions that different pieces of alleged "new evidence" could not – if they had been presented in time – have been a decisive factor in the original decision on an issue, the Request for Reconsideration fails to show that the Appeals Chamber clearly erred in reaching these conclusions,[10] or that failure to revisit them would lead to a miscarriage of justice. The Request for Reconsideration likewise fails to show any clear error in the rejection of Niyitegeka's Rule 68 arguments, or that failure to revisit them would lead to a miscarriage of justice.[11] Further, while making clear that Niyitegeka remains concerned about a Prosecution attorney in this case who was subjected to professional discipline in her home jurisdiction,[12] the Request for Reconsideration fails to suggest that in the Impugned Decision, the Appeals Chamber erred: (a) in considering only whether newly discovered communications would have led it to handle the issue differently in the Appeals Judgement, and (b) in determining that the newly discovered communications would not have had such an effect, as they relate to an issue the Appeals Chamber did not consider crucial when it addressed the import of the professional discipline to which the attorney was subjected.[13]

27. In sum, the arguments Niyitegeka now raises do not meet the requirements for obtaining reconsideration. I therefore concur in the outcome without joining in the majority's explanation for it.

30 July 2002, para. 25). The new evidence that Niyitegeka offers to show that the 10 April 1994 meeting occurred therefore does not constitute a new fact.

[9] The Request for Reconsideration encourages the Appeals Chamber to "endorse" the views on the "new fact" requirement expressed by Judge Shahabuddeen in a separate opinion in Prosecutor v. Barayagwiza. Request for Reconsideration, paras 14-15 (referring to Prosecutor v. Barayagwiza, Case N°ICTR-97-19-AR72, Decision (Prosecutor's Request for Review or Reconsideration), 31 March 2000, Separate Opinion of Judge Shahabuddeen, para. 47). The Request for Reconsideration, however, never explains how doing so might prompt the Appeals Chamber, when considering whether arguments raised in the Request for Review pertain to new facts, to reach results different from those reached in the Impugned Decision. In fact, in the cited paragraph, Judge Shahabuddeen explains the "new fact" requirement in a manner consistent with the way it was applied in the "Impugned Decision".

[10] Niyitegeka errs when he suggests that the Impugned Decision assumed an accused who raises the defence of alibi has the burden of proving the alibi. See Motion for Reconsideration, para. 15 (arguing that the Impugned Decision makes this assumption). Paragraphs of the Impugned Decision cited by Niyitegeka in making this argument do not suggest that an accused has the burden of proof when asserting an alibi defence. See Impugned Decision, paras 14, 19, 22, 23, 28, 32, 40.

[11] The Request for Reconsideration asserts that, contrary to what the Impugned Decision held, Niyitegeka was prejudiced by the Prosecution's improper failure to disclose transcripts of cassettes AV906, AV 907, and AV 908. Niyitegeka, however, does not explain how the Appeals Chamber might have erred in concluding, at paragraph 57 of the Impugned Decision, that the finding Niyitegeka sought to contest with these transcripts is not "critical to his conviction for any crime". See Motion for Reconsideration, paras 21-23. The Request for Reconsideration also challenges the conclusion that Niyitegeka was not prejudiced by the fact that the Prosecution improperly disclosed only 11 of the 29 pages of the transcript of cassette AV/917. Though Niyitegeka asserts that the remaining 18 pages would have helped him to better establish his whereabouts on 16 April 1994, he offers no coherent explanation for why it was clearly erroneous to conclude, on the basis of his submissions during the review proceeding, that these 18 pages would have provided no such assistance. Moreover, he does not explain why failure to reconsider the extent of his prejudice would lead to a miscarriage of justice. See Motion for Reconsideration, paras 30-31.

(ii) the Defence Answer to the Prosecutor's Response to the Defence Motion for Protective Measures for Defence Witnesses filed on 18 September 2006 (the "Defence Answer")

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and to the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), in particular Rules 69 and 75 thereof;

NOW DECIDES based on the written briefs filed by the parties pursuant to Rule 73 (A).

Submissions of the Parties

The Defence

1. The Defence relies on Articles 14, 19 (1) and 21 of the Statute and Rules 69 and 75 of the Rules to request that an order for protective measures in respect of Defence witnesses be issued as soon as possible.

2. The Defence submits that the witnesses in respect of whom protective measures are sought currently reside in Rwanda or are in exile, but certain members of their families are still in Rwanda and have not expressly waived their right to such protective measures. According to the Defence, most of them have stated that, for various reasons, they fear for their safety once they have testified before the Tribunal.

3. For the above reasons, the Defence requests that 18 witnesses be assigned pseudonyms and granted wide protective measures, ranging from denying the public and the press all access to their identity to restrictions on the circulation within the Prosecution team of information concerning them.

The Prosecution

4. The Prosecution does not challenge the Motion except with regard to measures relating to restrictions on the circulation of information among the various Prosecution teams. The Prosecution argues that its office is an indivisible whole,[1] and that such restrictions sought by the Defence are contrary to the provisions of Rules 68 and 75 (F), which place wide disclosure obligations on the Prosecution vis-à-vis the entire Defence.

The Defence Answer

5. The Defence contends that the restrictive measures sought to relate only to information and documents which might reveal the identity of the witnesses, and not to the content of their testimonies. It argues that the Prosecution may discharge its disclosure obligation by using information and documents provided by the Defence witnesses, with passages which might reveal witnesses' identity being redacted.

6. The Defence further submits that under Rule 75 there is no inconsistency between protective measures ordered in respect of a witness in first proceedings and the Prosecutor's disclosure obligation in second proceedings.

Deliberation

7. Article 21 of the Statute, taken together with Rules 69 and 75, provides that either party may request the Chamber, in exceptional circumstances, to order appropriate measures for the protection of victims and witnesses. The Chamber may also order such measures proprio motu.[2]

8. Case law established by ICTR and by the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia ("ICTY") provides that witnesses in respect of whom protective measures are sought must face a real threat to their own safety and to that of their family, and that their fear must be objectively justified.[3] The Chamber further recalls that "any fears expressed by potential witnesses themselves that they may be in danger or at risk are not in themselves sufficient to establish any real likelihood that they may be in danger or at risk. Something more than that must be demonstrated to warrant an interference with the rights of the accused which these redactions represent".[4]

[4] Prosecutor v. Radoslav Brdanin and Momir Talić, Decision on Prosecution Motion for Protective Measures, 3 July 2000, para. 26.

9. The Chamber notes that the Defence merely refers to vague fears said to have been expressed by most of its witnesses without adducing any evidence in support of such a claim. Moreover, the said witnesses are not identified, as opposed to those not having such fears; nor has the Defence clearly explained the objective reasons justifying the alleged fears. The Chamber therefore denies the Defence Motion in its entirety.

FOR THESE REASONS

THE TRIBUNAL

DENIES the Motion

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

NOW DECIDES as follows, based solely on the written Briefs of the parties, pursuant to Rule 73.

Submissions by the Parties

The Defence

1. The Defence submits that since the initial appearance of the Accused on 27 March 2002, the Chamber has not convened a status conference or set a date for the commencement of trial. The Defence contends that it is ready to go to trial and requests a date for a pre-trial conference and a date for trial.[1] In the alternative, the Chamber should set a date for a status conference.

2. In the event that the Tribunal is unable to set a date for trial, the Defence requests the provisional release of the Accused pursuant to Rule 65.[2]

3. The Defence further submits that pending the commencement of trial, the Accused may, upon his provisional release, reside in Belgium where he already enjoys refugee status, since he has an alien registration certificate in Belgium and his family resides there. The Defence defers to the Tribunal to work out the modalities for his provisional release with Belgium, his potential host country.

4. The Defence further argues that it is in the interest of justice to uphold the principle of freedom, which is the rule in criminal law, rather than the principle of pre-trial detention, which should be the exception. It also contends that the Accused has been in detention for almost five years, in breach of all international instruments guaranteeing the right to a fair trial.

[1] The Defence cites Articles 19 (1), 19 (3) and 20 (4) of the Statute and Rule 62 (A) of the Rules and other international instruments on the right of an accused to be tried without undue delay.
[2] The Defence also relies on certain international instruments and ICTY case law: Baskic [sic], Djukić and Simić.

The Prosecutor's Response

5. The Prosecutor raises no objection to the setting of a date for the commencement of trial, recalling that such matters fall within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal's Administration.

6. However, the Prosecution objects to the Motion for provisional release, arguing that the Accused has not demonstrated that if released, he will appear for trial and will not pose a danger to any victim, witness or other person, pursuant to Rule 65 (B). Nor has it been demonstrated that the Belgian authorities have agreed to host the Accused in their country.

The Defence's Reply

7. With regard to the Motion for the setting of a date for the commencement of trial, the Defence submits that even if the decision to set a date for trial is not within the Judges' jurisdiction, they should, in any case, uphold the right of the Accused to a fair trial and ensure that the Accused is brought to trial without undue delay.

8. With regard to the Motion for provisional release pending the commencement of trial, the Defence argues that the Accused will make a formal oral and written undertaking to appear for trial and to not pose a danger to any victims or witnesses; that the Accused has never refused to cooperate with the Prosecution; that the Prosecution has never demonstrated that the Accused poses a potential danger to victims and witnesses if released.

Deliberation

Request for setting a date for the commencement of trial, a pre-trial conference or a status conference

9. The Chamber recalls the Tribunal's case law on the setting of a date for the commencement of trial, as expounded in Rukundo and echoed in Nsengimana:

> As regards the issue of setting of a date for the commencement of trial, the Chamber notes that such would come under the authority of the Tribunal's Administration and would be determined by its judicial calendar. In setting its priorities on the judicial calendar, the Tribunal would take into account, inter alia, the gravity of the charges, the right of every accused person to a fair trial without undue delay and the Tribunal's facilities.[3]

10. The Chamber notes that it is difficult to set a date for the commencement of trial or for a pre-trial conference because of the institutional constraints of the Tribunal. Nevertheless, the Chamber acknowledges the need for the Accused to be tried without undue delay.

11. Thus, the Chamber orders that a status conference be convened immediately between the parties pursuant to Rule 65 bis so as to expedite the commencement of trial and, accordingly, directs the Registrar to contact the parties.

Provisional release of the Accused

12. The Chamber is aware of the length of the Accused's pre-trial detention but notes that it is not disproportionate in relation to the gravity of the crimes with which he is charged.[4]

13. The Chamber takes note of Rule 65 (B) laying down the conditions for provisional release and specifying that provisional release may be ordered by a Chamber "only after giving the host country and the country to which the accused seeks to be released the opportunity to be heard and only if it is satisfied that the accused will appear for trial and, if released, will not pose a danger to any victim, witness or other person". The Chamber also notes that these conditions are cumulative.[5]

14. The Chamber recalls that "it is not a prerequisite to obtaining provisional release to provide guarantees from the state to which the accused seeks to be released, or from anyone else, that he will appear for trial".[6] However, the Chamber finds that neither Tanzania, the host country, nor Belgium, the country to which the Accused seeks to be released, have been consulted on this issue, taking into account the arguments advanced in support of this Motion. But the Chamber notes that "the observance of such conditions as are necessary to ensure the presence of the accused at trial" necessarily implies that the Governments of both States have been consulted. As noted by the Appeals Chamber, "it is advisable for an applicant for provisional release to provide such a guarantee from a governmental body as the International Tribunal does not have the power to execute an arrest warrant in the event that the accused does not appear for trial". Considering the gravity of the charges against the Accused and the evidence adduced by the Defence, the Chamber is not persuaded that the Accused will appear for trial if released. Accordingly, the Chamber denies the Motion for provisional release.

FOR THESE REASONS,

THE TRIBUNAL

GRANTS the Motion partly;

DIRECTS the Registrar to consult the parties as soon as possible with a view to setting a date for a status conference;

DENIES the Motion for provisional release.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II, composed of Judge Arlette Ramaroson, Presiding, Judge William H. Sekule, and Judge Solomy Balungi Bossa (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the Confidential "Prosecutor's Request for Leave to Amend an Indictment Pursuant to Rules 72 [sic], 73, 50 and 51 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence," filed on 20 November 2006 (the "Motion");

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute"), specifically Articles 19 and 20, and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), in particular Rules 47 (E), (F), (G), 50, and 73;

NOW DECIDES the matter pursuant to Rule 73 (A), on the basis of the Parties' written submissions.

Introduction

1. Judge Navanethem Pillay confirmed the Indictment against the Accused Joseph Nzabirinda (the "Accused") on 13 December 2001 (the "Current Indictment"). In its Motion, the Prosecution seeks leave to amend the Current Indictment by withdrawing all four counts and substituting one new count. On 21 November 2006, the Defence indicated that it did not intend to respond to this Motion.

2. On 27 November 2006, the Chamber ordered the Prosecution to provide material in support of the new count of murder as a crime against humanity and to clarify certain aspects of the proposed Amended Indictment of 20 November 2006, within three days.[1] On 29 November 2006, the Prosecution requested an extension of time[2] which was granted until 4 December 2006.[3] On that date, the Prosecution filed supporting material and a new proposed Amended Indictment (the "proposed Amended Indictment").

3. The Defence indicated on 6 December 2006 that the Accused accepted the facts as set out in the proposed Amended Indictment, but not all elements of the supporting material filed together with that proposed Amended Indictment.[4] On 7 December 2006, the Prosecution stated that it would not reply.[5]

Submissions of the Parties

The Prosecution

4. The Prosecution requests the Chamber to grant leave for it to amend the Current Indictment by withdrawing the following four charges:
(i) Count 1 : genocide – Art. 2 (3) (a) and 6 (1);
(ii) Count 2 : complicity in genocide – Art. 2 (3) (a) and 6 (1);
(iii) Count 3 : extermination as a crime against humanity – Art. 3 (b) and 6 (1);
(iv) Count 4 : rape as a crime against humanity – Art. 3 (b) and 6 (1).[6]

5. The Prosecution also seeks to delete the factual allegations supporting these four counts and intends to lead no evidence in relation to these charges. It requests the Chamber to adjudge that such withdrawal is in conformity with the principle of non bis in idem.[7]

6. The Prosecution further seeks to retain the charge of Art. 3 (a), 6 (1).[8]

7. The Prosecution submits that Rule 50 of the Rules and the jurisprudence of the Tribunal allow for the amendment of an indictment after the initial appearance of the Accused.[9] The Prosecution adds that its request is justified in law and will not result in any delay in the commencement of trial, as no

[9] The Motion, para. 23.

new Defence investigation is necessary to prepare for it.[10] Additionally, the factual basis of the murder charge presents a lighter burden than was the case under the Current Indictment.[11]

8. The Prosecution also submits that the proposed amendment will allow for a more expeditious trial within a relatively shorter period of judicial time, and adds that as no trial date has been set, an amendment at this stage will not prejudice the Accused.[12]

The Defence

9. The Defence indicates that the Accused accepts the facts as set out in paras. 15, 19, and 20 of the proposed Amended Indictment. The Accused does not oppose the explicit mention made of the count of murder as a crime against humanity in the proposed amended Indictment.[13]

Deliberations

The Applicable Standard Under Rule 50

10. In considering the Motion, the Chamber notes the relevant provisions of Rule 50 and Rule 47 of the Rules, which indicate that an indictment may be amended after the initial appearance of the Accused, if the Prosecution discharges its burden of setting out the factual and legal justifications for such amendments.[14]

11. The Chamber recalls that as stated by this Chamber in the Renzaho case,[15] the fundamental question in relation to granting leave to amend an indictment is whether it will unfairly prejudice the accused.[16]

On the Request to Withdraw Four Counts and Delete All Factual Allegations Alleged in Support of the Withdrawn Counts

12. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution seeks leave to withdraw four counts and delete all factual allegations alleged in support of the withdrawn counts. Considering that the Defence does not oppose the Motion and that the withdrawal of four counts and the removal of factual allegations supporting them may result in a more expeditious trial that promotes judicial economy and the rights of the Accused, the Chamber grants this Prosecution request.

13. With regard to the Prosecution prayer that the Chamber declares the withdrawal of counts to be in accordance with the non bis in idem principle, the Chamber notes that this prayer is premature at this stage of the proceedings. The Chamber therefore denies this prayer.

On the Request to Add one Count and the Potential Prejudice to the Accused

14. The Chamber notes that "[n]ew charges do not prohibit a Chamber from granting the Prosecution leave to amend an indictment."[17] Rather, the most important consideration for the Chamber is the potential prejudice to the Accused.[18]

[16] Prosecutor v. Paul Bisengimana, Decision on the Prosecutor's Request for Leave to Amend an Indictment, 27 October 2005, para. 18.

15. As no material had been filed in support of the new count, the Chamber pointed out to the Prosecution in its Scheduling Order that while the Prosecution proposed to "retain" the charge of murder as a crime against humanity, there was no such count in the Current Indictment. Since the charge of murder was a new count, the Chamber ordered that the Prosecution file supporting material, pursuant to Rules 50 (A) (i), 47 (F) (i) of the Rules.

16. The Chamber has noted the supporting material the Prosecution filed with regard to the new charge of murder as a crime against humanity, and the clarifications that have been made in the proposed Amended Indictment in response to the Chamber's Scheduling Order. After carefully reviewing the proposed Amended Indictment and the supporting material, the Chamber considers that there is a prima facie case against the Accused for the charge of murder within the meaning of Rules 50 (A) (i), 47 (E) of the Rules. The Chamber is also of the view that the proposed Amended Indictment is sufficiently clear to allow the Accused to adequately prepare his Defence.

17. The Chamber observes that the Accused accepts the facts as set out in the proposed Amended Indictment.[19] Further, the Defence does not oppose the Motion.[20]

18. The Chamber notes that no trial date has been set and that there is thus no prejudice to the Accused caused by delay because of an amendment to the Current Indictment.[21] The Chamber therefore grants the Prosecution's request to substitute a new count, namely, murder as a crime against humanity.

19. Finally, the Chamber considers that a further appearance of the Accused should be scheduled as soon as practicable to enable him to enter a plea on the murder count, in accordance with Rule 50 (B) of the Rules. It therefore directs the Registry to undertake the necessary steps.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS leave to amend the Indictment by withdrawing all four counts and substituting a new count of murder pursuant to Art. 3 (a), 6 (1) of the Statute;

DENIES the prayer for an order that the withdrawal of counts is an application of the principle of non bis in idem;

ORDERS the Prosecution to file an Amended Indictment in both English and French with the Registry and the Chamber by Monday, 11 December 2006;

ORDERS that a further appearance of the Accused shall be held as soon as practicable and that the Registry make all necessary arrangements to that effect.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II, composed of Judge Arlette Ramaroson, Presiding, Judge William H. Sekule, and Judge Solomy Balungi Bossa (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the Confidential "Requête additionnelle en extrême urgence de la Défense aux fins de prescription de mesures de protection des témoins, " dated 5 December 2006 but filed on 11 December 2006 (the "Motion");

NOTING that the Prosecution does not oppose the Motion;[1]

[1] On 11 December 2006, Counsel for the Prosecution indicated that he does not oppose the Motion in an electronic mail addressed to the Chamber Coordinator.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute"), in particular Articles 14, 19 and 21 of the Statute, and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), specifically Rules 69 and 75;

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules on the basis of the written submissions of the Defence.

The Defence

1. The Defence relies upon Articles 14, 19 (1) and 21 of the Statute and Rules 69 and 75 of the Rules to request protective measures in favour of Witnesses LZI, LBH, LBG, CAN and LDK. It alleges that those witnesses will be called as character witnesses following the plea agreement between Joseph Nzabirinda and the Office of the Prosecutor.

2. The Defence submits that witnesses for whom such measures are sought expressly required protection as an essential condition for their testimony before the Chamber. Furthermore the Defence asserts that it fears for the safety of its witnesses in light of what has happened to some "genocide trial" witnesses or to their relatives, after having testified before the Tribunal.

3. The Defence submits that both Witnesses LZI and CAN currently reside in Rwanda and their relationship with the Accused could really jeopardize their security if they were to testify openly. As for Witness LDK, the Defence alleges that she resides outside Rwanda but most of her family members, including her mother still live within that country. This witness wishes to safeguard her privacy against potential threats and troubles that might occur in case her neighbours find out that she came to testify in Arusha. With regard to Witness LBH, the Defence argues that she belongs to a religious congregation which has expressed fears for the safety of the witness and that of the congregation itself if she testifies under her real identity and openly. Finally, Witness LBG fears for her safety and that of her children given the nature of relationship she has with the Accused.

4. Accordingly, the Defence requests the aforesaid witnesses be granted wide protective measures including the sealing of their identities from the public and the media.

Deliberations

5. Article 21 of the Statute together with Rules 69 and 75 of the Rules provide that any Party may move the Chamber, in exceptional circumstances, to grant appropriate protective measures for victims or witnesses. The Chamber may also do so proprio motu.[2]

6. The case law of both ICTR and ICTY provide that witnesses for whom protective measures are sought must incur a real threat for their own safety or for their family and that their fear must be objectively grounded.[3] The Chamber further recalls that "any fears expressed by potential witnesses themselves that they may be in danger or at risk are not in themselves sufficient to establish any real likelihood that they may be in danger or at risk. Something more than that must be demonstrated to warrant an interference with the rights of the accused which these redactions represent".[4]

7. The Chamber has reviewed the Defence arguments with respect to the need to safeguard the privacy and security of Witnesses LZI, LBH, LBG, CAN and LDK, and finds that the fears expressed by the concerned witnesses appear to be underscored by an objective basis. The Chamber will therefore consider if the measures sought are in conformity with the case law which governs the matter.

8. The Chamber observes that the measure referred to in Paragraph 25 of the Motion requesting that the identity of the character witnesses concerned, their addresses, whereabouts, or any other document which might reveal their identity, be placed under seal and not appear on any document of the Tribunal, is consonant with the current practice of both the Tribunal[5] and this Chamber.[6] Accordingly, the Chamber grants that measure with respect to Witnesses LZI, LBH, LBG, CAN and LDK.

9. The Chamber further observes that the sealing of identifying information sought in Paragraph 32 of the Motion is apparently similar to the measure referred to above. The Chamber further observes that once identifying information is put under seal, any document containing such information is inaccessible to the media and the public rendering the measures sought in Paragraphs 27 and 32 of the Motion moot.

10. The Chamber notes the measure indicated in Paragraph 26 of the Motion requiring the Registry to only communicate the identity of the witnesses concerned or any information that might reveal their identity to the Witnesses and Victims Support Section. The Chamber observes that this is consonant with the Tribunal's practice.[7] However, the Chamber also notes that the measure does not provide disclosure timeframes of the witnesses' identifying information to the Prosecution. The Chamber recalls that Rule 69 (C) provides that, "[s]ubject to Rule 75, the identity of the victim and witness shall be disclosed within such time as determined by the Trial Chamber to allow adequate time for the preparation of the Prosecution and the Defence." The Chamber grants that measure with respect to Witnesses LZI, LBH, LBG, CAN and LDK and orders that the disclosure of the identity of those witnesses to the Prosecution be carried out 21 days before the witnesses are scheduled to testify.

11. As for the measure indicated in Paragraph 28 of the Motion requesting that the Prosecution shall not communicate the identity of the witnesses concerned, as well as their addresses, whereabouts, or any other information likely to reveal their identity to anyone else; the Chamber understands that the communication of identifying information is limited to staff of the Office of the Prosecutor. The Chamber finds that this measure is consonant with the Tribunal's practice and therefore granted.[8]

12. The Chamber considers that the measure referred to in Paragraph 29 of the Motion, which requests that the Prosecution inform the Defence in writing of any request for authorisation to contact the witnesses is consonant with the Tribunal's practice[9] and thus grants that measure for Witnesses LZI, LBH, LBG, CAN and LDK.

13. The Chamber notes that the measure sought in Paragraph 30 of the Motion and which requests that the public and the media be prohibited from taking photographs and making sketches, or audio and/or video recordings of the witnesses concerned, unless authorised to do so by the Chamber, is consonant with the Tribunal's practice.[10] Therefore, the Chamber grants the aforesaid measure for Witnesses LZI, LBH, LBG, CAN and LDK.

14. As to the measure indicated in Paragraph 31 of the Motion allowing the Defence to designate each witness it intends to call with a pseudonym to be used in proceedings before the Tribunal, the communications and consultations between the Parties or with the public, until the Chamber decides otherwise, the Chamber is of the opinion that this measure corresponds to the Tribunal's practice[11] and is necessary for the protection of witnesses. It therefore grants that measure with respect to Witnesses LZI, LBH, LBG, CAN and LDK.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS,

THE TRIAL CHAMBER

GRANTS the measures requested in Paragraphs 25, 26, 28, 29, 30, and 31 of the Motion.

DECLARES MOOT the measures requested in Paragraphs 27 and 32 of the Motion.

Soumissions des parties

La Défense

1. La Défense s'appuie sur les articles 14, 19 (1) et 21 du Statut et sur les articles 69 et 75 du Règlement pour demander qu'une ordonnance de protection des témoins à décharge soit rendue le plus rapidement possible.

2. La Défense soumet que les témoins pour lesquels de mesures de protection sont demandées résident actuellement au Rwanda ou sont en exil mais certains membres de leur famille sont encore au Rwanda et qu'ils n'ont pas expressément renoncé à leur droit aux mesures de protection. Selon la Défense, la plupart d'entre eux ont fait savoir qu'ils craignaient pour leur sécurité pour de multiples raisons une fois qu'ils auraient déposé devant le Tribunal.

3. Il résulte de ce qui précède la Défense demande qu'il soit attribué des pseudonymes à dix huit témoins et que de larges mesures de protection leur soient accordées, variant de l'interdiction de tout accès du public et de la presse à leur identité à une circulation très limitée des informations les concernant au sein de l'équipe du Procureur.

Le Procureur

4. Le Procureur ne fait pas objection à la requête sauf en ce qui concerne les mesures relatives à la restriction de la communication de l'information entre les différentes équipes du Procureur. Il soutient à ce propos que son bureau forme un tout indivisible;[12] par ailleurs, les restrictions sollicitées par la Défense seraient contraires aux dispositions des articles 68 et 75 (F) du Règlement qui lui prescrivent de larges obligations de communication vis-à-vis de toute la Défense.

La réplique de la Défense

5. La Défense souligne que les mesures de restriction sollicitées ne concernent que les informations et documents de nature à révéler l'identité des témoins et non le contenu de leurs témoignages. Elle précise que le Procureur pourrait ainsi s'acquitter de son obligation de communication en utilisant les informations ou documents fournis par les témoins de la Défense expurgés des passages de nature à révéler leur identité.

6. La Défense soumet en outre que l'article 75 du Règlement n'emporte aucune contradiction entre les mesures de protection des témoins ordonnées dans une première affaire et l'obligation de communication du Procureur dans une deuxième affaire.

Délibérations

7. Les dispositions de l'article 21 du Statut, ensemble avec celles des articles 69 et 75 du Règlement, prévoient la possibilité pour toute partie de demander à la Chambre, dans des circonstances exceptionnelles, des mesures de protection appropriées des victimes ou des témoins. La Chambre peut aussi adopter de telles mesures de sa propre initiative.[13]

8. La jurisprudence établie du Tribunal de céans et du Tribunal pénal international pour l'ex-Yougoslavie (le « TPIY ») prévoit que les témoins pour lesquels les mesures de protection sont demandées doivent encourir une menace réelle pour leur propre sécurité ou celle de leur famille, et que leur crainte doit être objectivement justifiée.[14] Par ailleurs, la Chambre rappelle que la « crainte exprimée par des témoins potentiels qui pourraient courir un danger ou des risques ne suffit pas en soi

à établir que ce danger ou ces risques constituent réellement une probabilité. Il en faut plus pour justifier l'atteinte aux droits de l'accusé que représentent les expurgations en question ».[15]

9. La Chambre note que la Défense se contente d'évoquer de vagues craintes qui habiteraient la plupart de ses témoins sans offrir aucun élément de preuve au soutien d'une telle assertion. Lesdits témoins ne sont d'ailleurs pas identifiés par rapport à ceux qui n'auraient pas de telles craintes pas plus que la Défense n'a clairement spécifié les raisons objectives fondant la crainte alléguée. La Chambre rejette ainsi la requête de la Défense dans son entièreté.

VU le Statut du Tribunal (le « Statut ») et le Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »), STATUANT sur la base des mémoires déposés par les parties conformément à l'Article 73 du Règlement,

Arguments des parties

La Défense

1. La Défense soutient que depuis la comparution initiale de l'Accusé le 27 mars 2002, la Chambre n'a pas convoqué de conférence de mise en état, ni fixé de date pour l'ouverture du procès. La Défense s'estime prête et demande l'organisation d'une conférence préalable au procès et la fixation d'une date pour son commencement.[1] Alternativement, la Chambre devrait fixer une date pour une conférence de mise en état.

2. Si le Tribunal ne peut fixer de date pour l'ouverture du procès, la Défense demande la mise en liberté provisoire de l'Accusé en vertu de l'article 65 (A) du Règlement.[2]

3. La Défense ajoute que dans l'attente de l'ouverture de son procès, l'Accusé pourrait s'établir immédiatement en Belgique où il bénéficie du statut de réfugié ; que sa famille y réside et qu'il est titulaire d'un certificat d'inscription aux registres des étrangers. La Défense s'en remet au Tribunal pour circonscrire les conditions de la mise en liberté provisoire avec la Belgique, éventuel pays d'accueil.

4. La Défense rappelle qu'il y va de l'intérêt de la justice de garantir le principe de liberté qui prévaut en droit pénal sur celui de la détention provisoire qui doit rester l'exception. Elle ajoute que l'Accusé est en détention depuis près de cinq ans, en violation de toutes les normes internationales régissant le droit à un procès équitable.

La réponse du Procureur

5. Le Procureur ne s'oppose pas à la fixation d'une date pour le commencement du procès tout en rappelant qu'il s'agit d'une prérogative d'administration générale du Tribunal.

6. Le Procureur s'oppose par contre, à la requête en mise en liberté provisoire en arguant que l'Accusé n'a pas démontré que s'il était libéré, il comparaîtrait au procès et ne mettrait pas en danger une victime, un témoin ou toute autre personne, conformément à l'Article 65 (B) du Règlement. En outre, il n'est pas démontré que les autorités belges ont accepté d'accueillir l'Accusé sur leur territoire.

La réplique de la Défense

7. Concernant la demande de la fixation d'une date d'ouverture du procès, la Défense soutient que même si la décision de fixer la date du procès ne relève pas de l'autorité des juges saisis de l'affaire en dernier ressort, ces juges n'en demeurent pas moins les garants du droit de l'accusé à un procès

[1] La Défense cite les articles 19 (1), 19 (3) et 20 (4) du Statut et à l'Article 62 (A) du Règlement et autres instruments internationaux affirmant le droit de l'accusé à être jugé dans un délai raisonnable.
[2] La Défense s'appuie également sur certains instruments internationaux et la jurisprudence du TPIY : Affaires Baskic [sic], Djukic et Simic.

équitable et qu'il est du devoir de ces juges de veiller à ce que la mise en état de l'affaire se fasse sans trop de retard.

8. Concernant la demande de mise en liberté provisoire en attendant l'ouverture du procès, la Défense soutient que l'Accusé s'engagera solennellement, oralement et par écrit, à se présenter au procès et à ne pas faire pression sur les victime et les témoins ; que l'Accusé n'a jamais refusé de coopérer avec le Procureur ; que le Procureur n'a jamais donné aucune preuve du danger potentiel couru par les victimes ou les témoins si l'accusé était mis en liberté provisoire.

Après en avoir délibéré

Sur la demande de fixation d'une date d'ouverture du procès et d'une conférence préalable au procès ou d'une conférence de mise en état

9. La Chambre rappelle la jurisprudence du Tribunal concernant la fixation de la date d'ouverture du procès telle qu'énoncée dans l'affaire Rukundo et reprise dans l'affaire Nsengimana :

> Concernant la question de la détermination de la date d'ouverture du procès, la Chambre réaffirme qu'une telle question relève de l'administration générale du tribunal et de son calendrier judiciaire. Le Tribunal évalue les priorités en tenant compte notamment de la gravité des faits reprochés, du droit de tous les accusés à bénéficier d'un procès équitable dans des délais raisonnables et des disponibilités des services du Tribunal qui conditionnent la fixation du calendrier judiciaire.[3]

10. La Chambre estime que la fixation d'une date pour l'ouverture du procès ou la date d'une conférence préalable au procès est difficile au regard des contraintes institutionnelles du Tribunal. Il n'en demeure pas moins qu'elle garde à l'esprit la nécessité pour l'Accusé d'être jugé dans des délais raisonnables.

11. Par conséquent, la Chambre donne les instructions nécessaires pour qu'une conférence de mise en état soit rapidement convoquée en vertu de l'article 65 bis du Règlement afin de permettre des échanges de vues entre les parties de nature à favoriser un déroulement rapide du procès. À cet effet, elle instruit le Greffe de consulter les parties.

Sur la demande de mise en liberté provisoire de l'Accusé

12. La Chambre est consciente de la durée de la détention provisoire de l'Accusé mais estime qu'elle n'est pas disproportionnée par rapport à la gravité des crimes retenus contre lui.[4]

13. La Chambre rappelle l'article 65 (B) du règlement stipulant les conditions préalables à la mise en liberté provisoire et prescrivant qu'elle ne peut être ordonnée par une chambre « qu'après avoir donné au pays hôte, et au pays où l'accusé demande à être libéré, la possibilité d'être entendus, et pour autant qu'elle ait la certitude que l'accusé comparaîtra et, s'il est libéré, ne mettra pas en danger une victime, un témoin ou toute autre personne ». La Chambre rappelle également que ces conditions sont cumulatives.[5]

[5] Delalić et al., IT-96-21, Decision on Motion for Provisional Release Filed by the Accused Zejnil Delalić (TC), 25 September 1996, para. 1.

14. La Chambre rappelle que l'Accusé « n'est pas tenu comme condition préalable à l'obtention de sa mise en liberté provisoire, de fournir des garanties de l'État où il demande à être libéré ou de qui que ce soit d'autre qu'il se représentera ».[6] Néanmoins, la Chambre constate que ni la Tanzanie, le pays hôte, ni la Belgique, le pays où l'Accusé entend résider suite à sa mise en liberté, n'ont été approchées sur cette proposition, d'après les éléments apportés à l'appui de la requête. Or, la Chambre estime que l'observation de conditions nécessaires pour garantir la présence de l'Accusé au procès implique nécessairement que les gouvernements de ces deux États aient été consultés. Comme l'a rappelé la Chambre d'appel, « il est souhaitable que le requérant fournisse pareille garantie d'un organe gouvernemental, le Tribunal n'ayant aucun pouvoir pour exécuter son propre mandat d'arrêt si l'accusé ne se représente pas ».[7] Compte tenu de la gravité des accusations portées contre l'Accusé et sur la base des informations fournies par la Défense, la Chambre n'est pas convaincue que l'Accusé se présenterait au procès s'il était libéré. Par conséquent, elle rejette la demande de mise en liberté provisoire.

PAR CES MOTIFS,

LE TRIBUNAL

FAIT partiellement droit à la requête ;

INSTRUIT le Greffe de consulter les parties dans les plus brefs délais en vue de la fixation d'une conférence de mise en état ;

REJETTE la requête sur la demande de mise en liberté provisoire.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge Arlette Ramaroson, Presiding, Judge William H. Sekule, and Judge Solomy Balungi Bossa (the "Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the "Prosecutor's Application for Leave to Amend the Indictment Pursuant to Rule 50 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence", filed on 19 October 2005 (the "Motion");

NOTING that the Defence indicated by letter filed on 21 December 2005 that it did not wish to respond to the Motion;

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute"), specifically Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute, and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), in particular Rules 47 (E), (F), and (G), 50, and 73 of the Rules;

NOW DECIDES the matter pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules, on the basis of the Motion,

Submissions of the Prosecution

1. The Prosecution moves the Chamber for leave to further amend the Amended Indictment against Tharcisse Renzaho.[8] The Prosecution argues that the Second Amended Indictment, as shown in Annex A of the Motion, does not contain any new Counts or charges requiring a further appearance.[9]

2. The Prosecution submits that the amendment is sought for the following reasons:

(a) To specify, in accordance with the recent Appeals Chamber jurisprudence, which has developed since the previous Application for leave to amend, and for the benefit of both the Accused and the Trial Chamber, the legal basis for the factual allegations against the Accused;

(b) To extract from the existing Indictment irrelevant factual material and to clarify some of the remaining factual material;

(c) To extract from the existing Indictment inaccurate legal pleading;

(d) To correct errors of grammar and spellling.[10]

3. The Prosecution alleges that it intends to include in the proposed amended indictment, the modes of participation alleged under Article 6 (1) of the Statute in relation to individual factual allegations. The Prosecution submits that such exercise is required by the jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber in the Kvočka case.[11] Furthermore, the Prosecution submits that it seeks to make some small changes to the detail of some of the material facts already pleaded.[12]

4. The Prosecution argues that it seeks to remove material from the current Indictment which can no longer form part of its case because of the death or reluctance of some witnesses to testify.[13]

5. The Prosecution alleges that there are also a number of minor errors of grammar, spelling and nomenclature within the current Indictment which need rectifying.[14]

6. The Prosecution submits that the proposed amendments includes the withdrawal of certain paragraphs in the Indictment, which will not only reduce the workload of the Accused in preparing his Defence, but also reduce the Prosecution evidence at trial, thereby making the trial more expeditious.[15]

7. The Prosecution asserts that the proposed Amended Indictment sets out more precisely and concisely all the allegations against the Accused whilst at the same time withdrawing from it details which are irrelevant, legally inaccurate, or not within the power of the Prosecution to prove from the current Indictment.[16]

8. The Prosecution submits that the amendments are proposed for the purpose of clarifying the Prosecutor's case against the Accused both in terms of the facts alleged and the legal basis of the allegations. According to the Prosecution, such clarification will significantly reduce the length of the

9. The Chamber notes the relevant provisions of Rules 50 and 47 of the Rules. The Chamber notes that after the initial appearance of an accused, the Trial Chamber has discretion whether to grant leave to amend an indictment and that this determination must be made on a case-by-case basis.[18] The Prosecution has the burden to set out the factual and legal justifications for the proposed amendments.[19] In general, "amendments pursuant to Rule 50 are granted in order to (a) add new charges; (b) develop the factual allegations found in the confirmed indictment; and (c) make minor changes to the indictment."[20]

10. According to the Tribunal jurisprudence, the fundamental question in relation to granting leave to amend an indictment is whether the amendment will prejudice the accused unfairly. There is no prejudice caused to the accused if he is given an adequate opportunity to prepare a defence to the amended case. [21]

11. After having considered all the documents annexed to the Motion, specifically Annex B, the Chamber notes that the Prosecution's proposed amendments could be classified into two broad categories.

12. First, the Prosecution requests the deletion of some paragraphs. The Chamber is of the view that the proposed amendments on this point may "increase the fairness and efficiency of proceedings, and should be encouraged and usually accepted".[22] Such amendments may result in a more expeditious trial, particularly if there is a reduction in the number of witnesses and, thus, a reduction in the number of trial days, thereby promoting judicial economy and the Accused's right to be tried without undue delay.[23]

13. Second, the Prosecution intends to correct errors of grammar and spelling in the current Indictment and at the same time proposes to add some words or sentences. The Chamber is of the opinion that the proposed amendments on this point, only constitute "minor changes to the amended indictment" and/or "develop the factual allegations found in the confirmed indictment" and that they do not amount to any new Counts or charges against the Accused. Therefore, the Chamber finds that the proposed amendments on these points should be allowed.

14. In light of the foregoing and recalling that the Defence did not respond to the Motion, the Chamber finds that granting the Prosecution's request for a further amendment of the Indictment is unlikely to prejudice the Accused given that no date has been set for the commencement of the trial and that the Proposed Amended Indictment does not contain any new counts or charges within the

(D) A "combatant" pursuant to Articles 1 and 2 of Protocol II Additional to Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949.

(E) By virtue of his rank, office and links with prominent figures in the community, and his role as de facto Minister of the Interior in Kigali Préfecture, any person wishing to leave Kigali ville needed an authorization signed by him and therefore his authorization necessarily had influence in other préfecture.

III. Charges and Concise Statement of Facts

3. At all times referred to in this indictment there existed in Rwanda a minority racial or ethnic group known as Tutsi, officially identified as such by the government of Rwanda. The majority of the population of Rwanda was comprised of a racial or ethnic group known as the Hutu, also officially identified as such by the government of Rwanda.

4. Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994, throughout Rwanda, and in Kigali in particular, Interahamwe militias, soldiers of the FAR and armed civilians targeted and attacked the civilian population based on ethnic or racial identification as Tutsi, or perceived sympathies to the Tutsi. During the attacks some Rwandan citizens killed or caused serious bodily or mental harm to persons perceived to be Tutsi. As a result of these attacks, large numbers of ethnically or racially identified Tutsi were killed.

5. During the period of 7 April 1994 though 17 July 1994, there existed a non-international armed conflict throughout Rwanda, particularly in Kigali-ville préfecture. The belligerents in said non-international armed conflict were the FAR and the Rwandan Patriotic Front ("RPF"). During the relevant period of 7 April 1994 through 4 July 1994, the FAR occupied portions of Kigali-ville, trained and armed the Interahamwe; and were supported in the conflict by the Interahamwe, the gendarmerie and préfectural communal police. During this period the RPF occupied the eastern stretches of Kacyiru and parts of Kicukiro communes.

Alternatively,

Count II: Complicity in genocide

The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Tharcisse Renzaho with complicity in genocide, a crime stipulated in Article 2 (3) (e) of the Statute, in that on or between the dates of 7 April 1994 and 17 July 1994 throughout Rwanda, particularly in Kigali-ville Préfecture, Tharcisse Renzaho was responsible for killing or causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the Tutsi racial or ethnic group, including acts of sexual violence, with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a racial or ethnic group, as such, or with knowledge that other people intended to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi racial or ethnic group, as such, and that his assistance would contribute to the crime of genocide, as outline in paragraphs 6 through 43.

Concise Statement of Facts for Counts I and II

Individual Criminal Responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1)

6. Pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, the accused, Tharcisse Renzaho is individually responsible for the crimes of genocide or complicity in genocide because he planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of these crimes. With respect to the commission of those crimes, Tharcisse Renzaho ordered those over whom he had command responsibility and control as a result of his position and authority described in paragraph 2 and he instigated and aided and abetted those over whom he did not have command responsibility and control. In addition, the accused willfully and knowingly participated in a joint criminal enterprise whose object, purpose, and foreseeable outcome was the commission of genocide against the Tutsi racial or ethnic group and persons identified as Tutsi or presumed to support the Tutsi in Kigali Préfecture as well as throughout Rwanda. To fulfil this criminal purpose, the accused acted with leaders and members of the FAR, including Colonel Théoneste Bagosora and Colonel Ephrem Setako and Major Nyirahakizimana; the Presidential Guard; the Interahamwe, including Odette Nyirabagenzi, Angeline Mukandutiye and Ngerageza; the "Civil Defense Forces"; communal police; civilian militias; local administrative officials; other soldiers and militiamen; other known participants, such as Father Wenceslas Munyeshyaka and Bishop Samuel Musabyimana; and other unknown participants, all such actions being taken either directly or through subordinates, for at least the period of mid-1993 through 17 July 1994. The particulars that give rise to the accused's individual criminal responsibility including his participation in this joint criminal enterprise are set forth in paragraphs 7 though 23.

Roadblocks

7. From and after 7 April 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho instructed soldiers, gendarmes, militia, local citizens and demobilized soldiers and others to construct and man roadblocks throughout Kigali-ville including those at Gitega and near the Ontracom facility. These soldiers, gendarmes, militia, local citizens and demobilized soldiers and others were members of the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6 above, who used these roadblocks to intercept, identify and kill Tutsi from 7 April to 17 July 1994. In so doing, Tharcisse Renzaho planned, ordered, instigated, committed or otherwise aided and abetted genocide.

8. On or about 7 April 1994, and regularly thereafter, in broadcasts over Radio Rwanda, Tharcisse Renzaho instructed soldiers, gendarmes, militia, local citizens and demobilized soldiers, who were members of the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6 above, to construct and to man roadblocks, which, from 7 April to 17 July 1994, were used by them to intercept, identify and kill Tutsi, while allowing movement of commercial goods and the majority Hutu population. In so doing, Tharcisse Renzaho planned, ordered, instigated, committed or otherwise aided and abetted genocide.

9. On or about 10 April 1994, at a meeting at the Préfecture office of Kigali-ville, Tharcisse Renzaho ordered conseillers and responsables de cellule to set up roadblocks, which, from 10 April to 17 July 1994 were used by conseillers, responsables de cellule, Interahamwe, local citizens, gendarmes, soldiers and demobilized soldiers, who were members of the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6 above to identify and to kill Tutsi. In so doing, Tharcisse Renzaho planned, ordered, instigated, committed or otherwise aided and abetted genocide.

10. On diverse unknown dates in April and May 1994 Tharcisse Renzaho convened a meetings at which he instructed nyumbakumi, responsables de cellule, conseillers and bourgmestres to remain vigilant at roadblocks and to make sure that Inyenzi do not succeed in hiding among the population. As a consequence of these instructions, Tutsi were intercepted, identified and killed at the roadblocks in Kigali-ville. In convening these meetings and giving these instructions, Tharcisse Renzaho planned, ordered, instigated, committed or otherwise aided and abetted genocide.

The Killing Campaign in Kigali-ville

11. On diverse unknown dates between mid-1993 and 17 July 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho regularly permitted and encouraged Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi groups to meet at his house in Kanombe and elsewhere for the purpose of receiving military training. These Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi were members of the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6 above, who killed and/or caused serious bodily or mental harm to Tutsi between 6 April and 17 July 1994. By permitting and encouraging the training of Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi Tharcisse Renzaho planned, instigated, committed or otherwise aided and abetted genocide.

12. On diverse unknown dates between mid-1993 and 17 July 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho distributed weapons and ammunition to members of the Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi at his house in Kanombe and elsewhere. These Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi were members of the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6 above, who killed and/or caused serious bodily or mental harm to Tutsi between 6 April and 17 July 1994. In so distributing weapons and ammunition Tharcisse Renzaho planned, instigated, committed or otherwise aided and abetted genocide.

13. Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho provided and facilitated the provision of bonds, permits, laissez-passers, and food to enable the movement and equipping of the Interahamwe, militia, soldiers and gendarmes. These Interahamwe, militia, soldiers and gendarmes were members of the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6 above, who killed and/or caused serious bodily or mental harm to Tutsi between 6 April and 17 July 1994. By his actions described above Tharcisse Renzaho planned, committed or otherwise aided and abetted genocide.

14. On or about 8 April 1994 Tharcisse Renzaho planned, committed, ordered, instigated or aided and abetted the killing of the Director of the Banque rwandaise de développement. He confirmed this to Colonel Bagosora, who was a member of the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6 above, by radio on or about that same date.

15. On or about 9 April 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho, while dressed in the military uniform of a senior military official, led armed Interahamwe at Kajari in Kanombe. The Interahamwe, who were members of the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6 above, entered houses of Tutsi and killed the Tutsi who resided there. Tharcisse Renzaho thereby ordered, instigated, committed, or otherwise aided and abetted the killing of the Tutsi.

16. On or about 16 April 1994 at a meeting at the Kigali-ville prefectural headquarters, Tharcisse Renzaho ordered conseillers to obtain firearms from the Ministry of Defence to be distributed at the secteur level. These weapons were used by conseillers and militia, who were members of the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6 above, to kill Tutsi, and by so distributing firearms Tharcisse Renzaho planned, instigated, committed or otherwise aided and abetted genocide.

17. On or about 30 April 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho dismissed, among other people, secteur conseillers Jean-Baptiste Rudasingwa and Celestin Sezibera, because he believed they were opposed to the killing of Tutsi. By replacing the aforementioned persons with conseillers who supported the killing of Tutsi Tharcisse Renzaho aided and abetted this killing.

18. On an unknown date within the period between on or about 7 and 30 May 1994, while at a meeting at Bishop Samuel Musabyimana's residence, Tharcisse Renzaho agreed to supply guns to Musabyimana. Tharcisse Renzaho thereafter during the same period tendered several Kalashnikov rifles, which were delivered by Major Nyirahakizimana. Said rifles were distributed among the militias and were used to kill Tutsi, and by providing rifles Tharcisse Renzaho aided and abetted the killing.

19. In the month of June 1994 Tharcisse Renzaho, together with Colonel Ephrem Setako and Colonel Bagosora, who were members of the joint criminal enterprise referred to in paragraph 6 above, attended an impromptu meeting at a roadblock near Hotel Kiyovu in Kigali where they instructed those present to kill all Tutsi. A number of Tutsi were then killed.

On or about 15 June 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho's subordinates, Odette Nyirabagenzi and a Company of Interahamwe, found and killed André Kameya, a journalist who was critical of the Interim Government and Tharcisse Renzaho failed or refused to take the necessary or reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

Count IV: Rape as a Crime against humanity

The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Tharcisse Renzaho with rape as a crime against humanity, a crime stipulated in Article 3 (g) of the Statute, in that on an between 7 April and 17 July 1994 throughout Rwanda, particularly in Kigali-ville Préfecture, Tharcisse Renzaho, members of the Tutsi racial or ethnic group or persons identified as Tutsi were raped by subordinates of Tharcisse Renzaho as part of a widespread or systematic attack against that civilian population on racial and ethnic grounds, as set forth in paragraphs 52 through 55.

Concise Statement of Facts for Count IV

Criminal Responsibility as a Superior pursuant to Article 6 (3)

52. Pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute, the accused, Tharcisse Renzaho, is responsible for the rape as a crime against humanity because specific criminal acts were committed by subordinates of the accused and the accused knew or had reason to know that such subordinates were about to commit such acts before they were committed or that such subordinates had committed such acts and the accused failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof. These subordinates included leaders and members of the FAR; the Presidential Guard; the Interahamwe; the "Civil Defense Forces"; communal police; civilian militias; local administrative officials; other soldiers and militiamen; other known participants, such as Father Wenceslas Munyeshyaka; and other unknown participants. The particulars that give rise to the accused's individual criminal responsibility are set forth in paragraphs 53 through 55.

53. Tutsi women were raped by Interahamwe militia, soldiers and other individuals under the effective control of Tharcisse Renzaho on April 16 and diverse unknown dates during the months of April, May and June 1994. Conseillers under the direct command and authority of Tharcisse Renzaho reported on a regular basis about the rape of Tutsi women by Interahamwe militia, soldiers and other individuals under the effective control of Renzaho. Tharcisse Renzaho failed or refused to take the necessary or reasonable measures to prevent such rapes or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

54. Father Munyeshyaka and Interahamwe under the effective control of Tharcisse Renzaho compelled Tutsi women to provide them with sexual pleasures in exchange for the woman's safety at Ste. Famille in the period in which Tutsi sought refuge at Ste. Famille during the months of April, May and June 1994. Tharcisse Renzaho knew or had reason to know that these acts were being perpetrated against Tutsi women and he failed or refused to punish the perpetrators of these forced sexual acts at Ste. Famille.

55. Interahamwe soldiers and armed civilians under the effective control of Tharcisse Renzaho maintained Tutsi women at houses in central Kigali, where they compelled the women provide them with sexual pleasures in exchange for the women's safety on diverse unknown dates during the month of April, May and June 1994. Tharcisse Renzaho knew or had reason to know that these acts were being perpetrated against Tutsi women and he failed or refused to punish the perpetrators of these forced sexual acts.

Count V: Murder as a violation of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions

The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Tharcisse Renzaho with murder as a violation of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and Additional Protocol II of 1977, a crime stipulated in Article 4 (a) of the Statute, in that Tharcisse Renzaho was responsible for the killings of non-combatant Tutsi men and youths during the period 7 April through 17 July 1994 when throughout Rwanda, particularly in Kigali-ville Préfecture, there was a non-international armed conflict within the meaning of Articles 1 and 2 of Protocol II Additional to the Geneva Convention of 1949, and the killing of the victims was closely related to the hostilities or committed in conjunction with the armed conflict and the victims were persons taking no part in that conflict; all as is set forth in paragraphs 56 through 60.

Concise Statement of Facts for Count V

Individual Criminal Responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1)

56. Pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, the accused, Tharcisse Renzaho is individually responsible for murder as a violation of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and Additional Protocol II of 1977 because he planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of these crimes. With respect to the commission of those crimes, Tharcisse Renzaho ordered those over whom he had command responsibility and control as a result of his position and authority described in paragraph 2 and he instigated and aided and abetted those over whom he did not have command responsibility and control. In addition, the accused participated in a joint criminal enterprise whose object, purpose, and foreseeable outcome was the commission of war crimes against non-combatant members of the Tutsi racial or ethnic group in Kigali Préfecture as well as throughout Rwanda. To fulfill this criminal purpose, the accused acted with leaders and members of the FAR; the Presidential Guard; the Interahamwe; the "Civil Defense Forces"; communal police; civilian militias; local administrative officials; other soldiers and militiamen; and other known and unknown participants, all such actions being taken either directly or through their subordinates for at least the period of 6 April 1994 through 4 July 1994. The particulars that give rise to the accused's individual criminal responsibility including his participation in this joint criminal enterprise are set forth in paragraphs 57 and 58.

57. Between 16 and 17 June 1994 the RPF fought their way to St. Paul's in Nyarugenge in Kigali-ville and rescued a large number of non-combatant Tutsi.

58. Pursuant to the authority vested in Tharcisse Renzaho as described in paragraph 2, and in retaliation for the actions of the RPF described in paragraph 57, Tharcisse Renzaho on or about 17 June 1994 ordered, instigated or otherwise aided and abetted soldiers of the FAR and Interahamwe to take and kill at least seventeen non-combatant Tutsi men from Ste. Famille who had not been rescued by the RPF.

Criminal Responsibility as a Superior pursuant to Article 6 (3)

59. Pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute, the accused, Tharcisse Renzaho, is responsible for murder as a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and Additional Protocol II of 1977 because specific criminal acts were committed by subordinates of the accused and the accused knew or had reason to know that such subordinates were about to commit such acts before they were committed or that such subordinates had committed such acts and the accused failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof. These subordinates included leaders and members of the FAR; the Presidential Guard; the Interahamwe; the "Civil Defense Forces"; communal police; civilian militias; local administrative officials; other soldiers and militiamen; and other known and unknown participants. The particulars that give rise to the accused' individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (3) are set forth in paragraph 60.

60. In retaliation for the actions of the RPF described in paragraph 57, on or about 17 June 1994, soldiers of the FAR and Interahamwe, who were subordinates under the effective control of Tharcisse Renzaho, killed at least seventeen non-combatant Tutsi men from Ste. Famille who had not been rescued by the RPF and Tharcisse Renzaho failed or refused to take the necessary or reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

Count VI: Rape as a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949

The Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda charges Tharcisse Renzaho with rape as a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and Additional Protocol II of 1977, a crime stipulated in Article 4 (e) of the Statute, in that Tharcisse Renzaho was responsible for the rape of non-combatant Tutsi women during the period between 7 April and 17 July 1994 when throughout Rwanda, particularly in Kigali-ville Préfecture, there was a non-international armed conflict within the meaning of Articles 1 and 2 of Protocol II Additional to the Geneva Convention of 1949, and the raping of the victims was closely related to the hostilities or committed in conjunction with the armed conflict and the victims were persons taking no part in that conflict; all as set forth in paragraphs 61 through 65.

Concise Statement of Facts for Count VI

Criminal Responsibility as a Superior pursuant to Article 6 (3)

61. Pursuant to Article 6 (3) of the Statute, the accused, Tharcisse Renzaho, is responsible for rape as a violation of Article 3 common to Conventions of 1949 and Additional Protocol II of 1977 because specific criminal acts were committed by subordinates of the accused and the accused knew or had reason to know that such subordinates were about to commit such acts before they were committed or that such subordinates had committed such acts and the accused failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof. These subordinates included leaders and members of the FAR; the Presidential Guard; the Interahamwe, such as Odette Nyirabagenzi; the "Civil Defense Forces"; communal police; civilian militias; local administrative officials; other soldiers and militiamen; other known participants, such as Father Wenceslas Munyeshyaka; and other unknown participants. The particulars that give rise to responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (3) are set forth in paragraphs 62 through 65.

62. During the relevant periods of 7 April 1994 through 4 July 1994, the FAR occupied central areas of Kigali, including Nyarugenge commune and the area around the Ste. Famille Church. The FAR trained and armed the Interahamwe and were supported in the conflict by the Interahamwe, the gendarmerie, préfectural communal police, and armed civilians.

63. Tutsi women were raped by Interahamwe militia, soldiers and other individuals under the effective control of Tharcisse Renzaho on April 16 and diverse unknown dates during the months of April, May and June 1994. Conseillers under the direct command and authority of Tharcisse Renzaho reported on a regular basis about the rape of Tutsi women by Interahamwe militia, soldiers and other individuals under the effective control of Tharcisse Renzaho. Tharcisse Renzaho failed or refused to take the necessary or reasonable measures to prevent such rapes or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

64. Father Munyeshyaka and other Interahamwe under the effective control of Tharcisse Renzaho compelled Tutsi women to provide them with sexual pleasures in exchange for the woman's safety at Ste. Famille in the period in which Tutsi sought refuge at Ste. Famille during the months of April, May and June 1994. Tharcisse Renzaho knew or had reason to know that these acts were being perpetrated against Tutsi women and he failed or refused to prevent or punish the perpetrators of these forced sexual acts at Ste. Famille.

65. Interahamwe soldiers and armed civilians under the effective control of Tharcisse Renzaho maintained Tutsi women at houses in central Kigali, where they compelled the women provide them with sexual pleasures women's safety on diverse unknown dates during the months of April, May and June 1994. Tharcisse Renzaho knew or had reason to know that these acts were being perpetrated against Tutsi women and he failed or refused to prevent or to punish the perpetrators of these forced sexual acts.

The acts and omissions of Tharcisse Renzaho detailed herein are punishable in pursuant to Articles 22 and 23 of the Statute.

Signed at Arusha, Tanzania, this 16th Day of February 2006.

DECIDES on the basis of the briefs of the parties, pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules

Submissions of the Parties

The Defence

1. The Defence submits that the charges in the Amended Indictment are vague and imprecise, which is inconsistent with prevailing case law.[1]

2. The Defence prays the Chamber to order the Prosecution:

- To draw a distinction between the crimes charged pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute and the ones charged under Article 6 (3) of the Statute;
- To provide further particulars as to the nature and extent of the Accused's alleged control over the different organizations and administrations;
- To drop the charges in respect of joint criminal enterprise alleged in paragraphs 6 to 44 and 56 of the Amended Indictment;
- To specify the nature of the relationship between the Accused and the perpetrators of the acts for which he allegedly incurs superior responsibility;
- To provide details for identification of the alleged victims. Alternatively, to order the Prosecution to disclose information in its possession for proper identification of the victims and determination of their number. Otherwise, to order that where the Prosecution is unable to provide any of the above information, it should clearly state so in the Indictment;
- Lastly, to order the Prosecution to specify the dates and place of commission of the alleged crimes.

3. The Defence submits that the facts alleged with respect to the Accused's superior responsibility should be pleaded differently from those which form the basis of his individual responsibility; this, the Defence claims, has not been done in the instant case.[2] In this connection, the Defence cites, among others, Count 2 (paragraphs 7 and 25, 9 and 29, 10 and 27), Count 3 (paragraphs 45 and 49) and Count 5 (paragraphs 58 and 50).[3]

4. The Defence contends that no persons are named in the charge of conspiracy in respect of war crimes, but that only organizations are named, such as FAR, Presidential Guard and Interahamwe.[4]

[1] Paragraphs 38 and 39 of the Motion. The Defence refers to the Kupreškić Judgement of 23 October 2001, the Niyitegeka Judgement of 16 May 2003 affirmed by the Appeals Chamber on 9 July 2004, the Ntakirutimana Judgement of 19 February 2006, and the Bizimungu Decision of 15 July 2004.

[2] Paragraph 43 of the Motion.

[3] Paragraphs 50-52 of the Motion.

[4] Paragraph 54 of the Motion.

5. The Defence submits that the charges of participation in a joint crimina1 enterprise should be withdrawn from the Amended Indictment, arguing that it seems absurd to indicate that the supposed co-perpetrators or accomplices of the Accused participated in a joint criminal enterprise, whereas they have not been afforded the opportunity to defend themselves against such charges. The Defence further submits that participation in a joint criminal enterprise with unnamed persons is not provided for in the Statute nor any other legal system.[5]

6. The Defence submit that it is by virtue of his control and authority, as alleged in the Amended Indictment, that the Accused committed or ordered the commission of the crimes charged, adding that these is, however, no material fact underpinning such authority.[6]

7. With regard to the Accused's superior responsibility, the Defence submits, among others, that his superior position vis-à-vis the gendarmes is not specified, neither is the militia group he is alleged to have belonged to, or those who had control over him and those over whom he had control.[7] The Defence further submits that the Accused is alleged to have played the role of "de facto Minister of the Interior" during the events, whereas no material fact supports such allegation and it is not stated how he acquired this position.[8]

8. The Defence also avers that the allegations relating to the Accused's individual responsibility are vague and imprecise.[9]

9. The Defence submits that the adverb "about", whenever used to indicate a date in the Indictment, should be stricken, as it is synonymous with the adverb "around", the use of which has already been rejected in case law.[10] The Defence points out that the adverb "about" is used 25 times in the current Amended Indictment.[11]

10. The Defence submits that the Indictment contains numerous expressions that are considered to be too vague. It cites, for instance, such expressions as "from June 1994" in paragraphs 7 and 25, and "on an unknown date within the period between, on or about 7 and 30 May 1994 or around that period" in paragraph 18.[12] The Defence further avers that the adjective "unknown" is synonymous with "vague".[13]

11. The Defence contends that the Amended Indictment is imprecise as to the venue of some of the alleged crimes, citing as such examples as: "throughout Kigali-ville prefecture" in paragraphs 7 and 25 and "at Ste Famille parish, St Paul's, Kadaffi mosque and CELA, among other places in the Nyarugenge secteur" in paragraph 37. The Defence further contends that the locations where the crimes were committed are not specified in many paragraphs, including paragraphs 8, 9, 10, 53 and 63. [14]

12. It is the submission of the Defence that the Amended Indictment is imprecise, as it contains counts which do not mention the names of victims of the alleged crimes,[15] and that according to case law, the Prosecution is required to provide, to the extent possible, details as to the identity and number of victims of the crimes charged[16] or at least indicate their category or position as a group.[17] The Defence also submits that where, for objective reasons, the Prosecution is unable to meet the aforementioned requirements, it must state clearly in the Indictment that it is unable to do so and that it has provided the best information it can, which has not been done in the instant case.[18] The Defence also argues that simply referring to the victims as "Tutsi" is insufficient.[19] Lastly, the Defence submits that the use of the adverb "among others" in paragraphs 45 and 49 of the Indictment to identify the victims of a crime should be avoided as it may prejudice the Accused's preparation of his defence.[20]

[15] Paragraph 98 of the Motion. The Defence mentions paragraphs 7 to 13, 15, 16, 18, 19, 21 to 23, 25 to 29, 32 to 34, 38 to 43, 53 to 55, 58, 60, 63 to 65.

13. The Defence submits that all the alleged subordinates of the Accused are not identified in the introductory paragraphs of the counts relating to his superior criminal responsibility,[21] or are not identified at all.[22] In fact, the Indictment simply mentions "Interahamwe" in paragraphs 28, 29, 30, 32, 34, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 49, 50, 51, 53, 55, 60, 63, 64 and 65, and "soldiers" in paragraph 30.[23] The Amended Indictment equally uses even more imprecise expressions such as in paragraph 31, where the perpetrators are identified as "those under his effective control" or in paragraph 63, where they are identified as "other individuals".[24] The Defence underlines that such imprecise expressions are bound to impair the preparation of the Accused's defence,[25] adding that where the Prosecution cannot specify the identity of the perpetrators of the alleged crimes for objective reasons, it will be sufficient for the Prosecution to identify them by reference to the "category" or group to which they belong. The Defence further states that where the Prosecution is unable to identify them by name, it must clearly stare in the Indictment that it was unable to do so.[26] The Defence also contends that if any of these matters is to be established by inference, the Prosecution "must identify in the indictment the facts and circumstances from which the inference is sought to be drawn".[27]

14. In conclusion, the Defence submits that the Indictment is not sufficiently precise on certain points to enable the Accused to exercise his rights, and that the lack of precision as to dates, causes the Accused, among others things, serious prejudice, as it deprives him of the possibility of presenting a defence of alibi. Wherefore, the Defence concludes, the Indictment must be pleaded in sufficient detail to enable the Defence to exercise its full rights.[28]

The Prosecution

15. The Prosecution submits that it is a matter for the Trial Chamber, after hearing all the evidence, to conclude which, if any, of the alleged modes of responsibility pleaded is most appropriate. The Prosecution stresses that it is the duty of the Prosecution to prepare an indictment, setting out the facts which it considers it can prove together with the mode or modes of responsibility charged. The Prosecution therefore submits that the Defence claim that the Prosecution failed to distinguish allegations of the Accused's superior responsibility from those of his individual responsibility is unfounded.[29]

16. The Prosecution contends that the Amended Indictment and the Pre-Trial Brief (pp. 9-14) provide sufficient detail as to the alleged authority of the Accused.[30]

17. As to the alleged imprecision regarding the dates, places, victims and perpetrators of the crimes charged, the Prosecution states that the degree of precision sought by the Defence is excessive. The Prosecution states that it has included in the Amended Indictment as much detail as it is able, without pleading evidence or revealing the identity of protected witnesses.[31] The Prosecution further submits that the Indictment should be read as a whole.[32]

18. The Prosecution contends that in the context of the events which occurred in Rwanda during the period referred to in the Indictment, it is impossible to specify the identity of each of the Accused's co-perpetrator in the joint criminal enterprise, arguing that the alleged co-perpetrators very often belonged to large militia groups, or bands of soldiers or civilians whose members were not individually identifiable. The Prosecution submits that in any case, the Pre-Trial Brief contains information that sheds light on this issue. [33]

The Defence Reply

19. The Defence reiterates that in keeping with prevailing case law, the Indictment must clearly distinguish the facts relating to the Accused's criminal responsibility under Article 6 (1) of the Statute from those by which he incurs responsibility under Article 6 (3).[34]

20. The Defence submits that details regarding the dates, locations, victims and perpetrators of the alleged crimes must be provided in the Indictment to enable the Accused to make full answer and defence and that if the Prosecution is unable to provide such details with respect to the victims, it has to give the reason therefor.[35]

21. The Defence submits that it is possible to state with precision the circumstances of the events which occurred in a specific location in the presence of many persons, such as the events at Saint Paul, Sainte Famille or CELA. Lack of precision would be prejudicial to the Accused's rights, as he would be unable to present, among others, a defence of alibi. Lastly, the Defence submits that a Pre-Trial Brief cannot cure defects in the Indictment.[36]

Deliberations

22. The Chamber notes that the present Motion was filed within the time limits provided for in Rule 72 of the Rules and is therefore admissible.

23. The Chamber further notes that the issues raised by the Defence in the present Motion may be classified into three categories, namely, the need to distinguish between the crimes charged under Article G (3) and those charged under Article G (3); lack of precision as to the Accused's alleged authority; and lack of precision as to the dates and places of commission of the crimes, the identify of the victims, the Accused's subordinates and co-perpetrators in the context of the joint criminal enterprise.

Need to distinguish between the crimes charged under Article 6 (1) and those charged under Article 6 (3)

24. The Chamber notes that it is settled jurisprudence that an accused may be charged for the same crime under Articles 6 (1) and 6 (3) of the Statute, only if the Prosecution clearly specifies in the Indictment the manner in which the accused allegedly incurs criminal responsibility both as a perpetrator and as a superior under the aforementioned articles.[37]

25. After reviewing all the paragraphs of the Indictment referred to by the Defence in its Motion,[38] the Chamber finds that the Prosecution has sufficiently articulated, for each crime charged, the manner in which the Accused allegedly incurs criminal responsibility both as a perpetrator and as a superior. Accordingly, the Defence request is denied.

Lack of precision as to the Accused's alleged authority

26. The Chamber notes the Defence submissions, particularly the assertion that no material fact has been articulated in the Amended Indictment to establish the basis of the Accused's alleged authority.

27. The Chamber notes that paragraph 2 of the Amended Indictment sets out such particulars as the identity and duties of the Accused during the events of 1994. In the Chamber's opinion such details sufficiently inform the Accused of the position of authority he may have held. In particular, the Chamber finds that paragraph 2 (C) clearly mentions the persons over whom the Accused exercised control when he was a member of the crisis committee set up on the night of 6 April 1994, as well as groups of people placed under his authority, and that paragraph 6 specifically mentions such names as Angeline Mukandutiye, an alleged Interahamwe, and Father Wecenslaus who allegedly participated in the genocide.

28. With regard to the specific facts underpinning the Accused's alleged position of de facto Minister of the Interior, paragraph 2 (E) of the Amended Indictment states that any person wishing to leave the town of Kigali needed an authorization signed by the Accused. In the Chamber's view, such detail is sufficient to inform the Accused of the nature and cause of the charge against him in order for him to prepare a meaningful defence.

29. Accordingly, the Chamber denies the Defence request for more particulars as to the alleged authority of the Accused.

30. The Chamber further notes the Defence assertions on the imprecision of the allegations relating to the Accused's individual responsibility. The Chamber considers that the Defence has failed to demonstrate such imprecision. Accordingly, the Defence request is denied.

Lack of precision as to the dates and places of commission of the crimes, the identity of the victims, the Accused' subordinates and his co-perpetrators

31. As regards the determination of dates and places of commission of the crimes and the identity of victims, the Chamber refers to Kupreškić, where it was held that:

> The Prosecution's obligation to set out concisely the facts of its case in the indictment must be interpreted in conjunction with Articles 21 (2) and (4) (a) and (b) of the Statute. These provisions state that, in the determination of any charges against him, an accused is entitled to a fair hearing and, more particularly, to be informed of the nature and cause of the charges against him and to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence. In the jurisprudence of the Tribunal, this translates into an obligation on the part of the Prosecution to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the indictment, but not the evidence by which such material facts are to be proven. Hence, the question whether an indictment is > pleaded with sufficient particularity is dependent upon whether it sets out the material facts of the Prosecution case with enough detail to inform a defendant clearly of the charges against him so that he may prepare his defence.[39]

> The Appeals Chamber must stress initially that the materiality of a particular fact cannot be decided in the abstract. It is dependent on the nature of the Prosecution case. A decisive factor in determining the degree of specificity with which the Prosecution is required to particularise the facts of its case in the indictment is the nature of the alleged criminal conduct charged to the accused. For example, in a case where the Prosecution alleges that an accused personally committed the criminal acts, the material facts, such as the identity of the victims, the time and place of the events and the means by which the acts were committed, have to be pleaded in detail. Obviously, there may be instances where the sheer scale of the alleged crimes "makes it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity in such matters as the identity of the victims and the dates for the commission of the crimes".[40] *

32. The Chamber endorsers the above opinion in Kupreškić and considers that the "sheer scale of the crimes" alleged against the Accused in the instant case "makes it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity in such matters as the identity of the victims, dates and places of commission of the crimes". Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the details provided in the Amended Indictment on the said matters are sufficient to enable the Accused to prepare his defence.

33. With regard to the Defence claims on the lack of precision as to the identity of the other participants in the crimes charged, the Chamber endorses the finding in the Krnojelac Decision, namely that "if the Prosecution is unable to identify those directly participating in such events by name, it will be sufficient for it to identify them at least by reference to their 'category' (or their official position) as a group".[41]

34. In the light of the foregoing jurisprudence, the Chamber finds that the use of such expressions "Interahamwe", "militiamen", "soldiers", "gendarmes", "Impuzamugambi", "demobilized soldiers", "conseillers", "responsables of cellule", "nyumbakumi", "bourgmestres", "communal police", "armed civilians" or "other Interahamwe leaders" in the Amended Indictment is sufficient to describe the persons over whom the Accused exercised authority or who acted concomitantly with him during the period referred to in the Indictment. Furthermore, the Chamber is of the view that the other defects alleged by the Defence in paragraphs 115 to 117 of its Motion[42] are not prejudicial. Accordingly, the Defence request on this point is denied.

35. Lastly, the Chamber finds unfounded the Defence submission that the charges of participation in a joint criminal enterprise should be withdrawn from the Amended Indictment on the grounds that it is absurd to indicate that the purported co-perpetrators or accomplices of the Accused participated in a joint criminal enterprise, whereas they have not been afforded the opportunity to defend themselves against such charges.

Order for transfer of Five Prosecution Witnesses Pursuant to Rule 90 Bis 12 December 2006 (ICTR-97-31-I)

(Original : English)

Trial Chamber I

Judge : Erik Møse, Presiding Judge

Tharcisse Renzaho – Transfer of detained witnesses – Rwanda – Conditions satisfied – Motion granted

International Instrument Cited:

Rules of Procedure and Evidence, Rules 90 bis and 90 bis (B)

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA

SITTING as Trial Chamber I, composed of Judge Erik Møse, presiding;

BEING SEIZED OF the Prosecutor's "Request for an Order Transferring Detained Witnesses Pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence", filed on 30 November 2006;

CONSIDERING the Renzaho Response to the Prosecution Request for Transfer of Detained Witnesses under Rule 90 bis, filed on 4 December 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the motion,

1. The Prosecution requests an order for the temporary transfer of five of its witnesses, Witnesses ALG, AWE, BUO, GLJ and UB, currently detained in Rwanda, to the Detention Unit of the Tribunal in Arusha for the purpose of testifying in the present case before the Chamber. The Prosecution requests that the witnesses be ordered transferred until such time as they have completed their testimony, as a fixed period may prove too inflexible. The Defence does not oppose the Prosecutor's request.[1]

[1] Response, para. 25.

2. Rule 90 bis (B) sets two conditions for such an order: first, that "the detained witness is not required for any criminal proceedings in progress in the territory of the requested State during the period the witness is required by the Tribunal"; and second, that the "[t]ransfer... does not extend the period of his detention as foreseen by the requested State"

3. The trial against the Accused Renzaho is scheduled to begin on 8 January 2007. The Prosecutor states that it has taken the necessary steps to ensure that the five witnesses in question are not required for criminal proceedings in Rwanda during the proposed period of transfer.[2] The Prosecution further avers that the transfer of each of the witnesses will not extend the period of their detention.[3] Finally, annexed to its motion, the Prosecution filed a letter from the Rwandan Ministry of Justice, dated 28 November 2006, confirming that the five requested witnesses who are detained in Rwanda will be available from 2 January to 2 February 2007 to testify in this case. The Chamber is satisfied that the conditions of Rule 90 bis are satisfied.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Prosecution motion;

INSTRUCTS the Registrar, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence and conditional upon the agreement of the Government of Rwanda, to temporarily transfer the five detained witnesses indicated in the letter from the Rwandan Ministry of Justice dated 11 November 2006, and having the pseudonyms ALG, AWE, BUO, GLJ and UB, to the United Nations Detention Facilities (UNDF) in Arusha, at an appropriate time prior to their scheduled dates to testify. Their return travel to Rwanda should be facilitated as soon as practically possible for each witness after the individual's testimony has ended, but in any case, no later than 28 February 2007;

FURTHER INSTRUCTS the Registrar to:

(A) transmit this decision to the Governments of Rwanda and Tanzania;

(B) ensure the proper conduct of the transfers including the supervision of the witnesses in the Tribunal's detention facilities;

(C) remain abreast of any changes which might occur regarding the conditions of detention provided for by the requested State and which may possibly affect the timing of the temporary detention, and as soon as possible, inform the Trial Chamber of any such change; and REQUESTS the Government of Rwanda to facilitate the transfers in cooperation with the Registrar and the Government of Tanzania.

LE TRIBUNAL PÉNAL INTERNATIONAL POUR LE RWANDA (le « Tribunal »),

SIEGEANT en la Chambre de première instance II, composée des juges Arlette Ramaroson, Président de Chambre, William H. Sekule et Solomy Balungi Bossa (la « Chambre »), SAISI de la Requête du Procureur en modification de l'acte d'accusation conformément à l'article 50 (A) du Règlement de procédure et de preuve, déposée le 19 octobre 2005 (la « Requête »),

ATTENDU que la Défense a indiqué dans une lettre déposée le 21 décembre 2005 qu'elle ne souhaitait pas répondre à la Requête,

VU le Statut du Tribunal (le « Statut »), notamment en ses articles 19 et 20, et le Règlement de procédure et de preuve (le « Règlement »), notamment en ses articles 47 (E), (F) et (G), 50 et 73, STATUE sur la question dont il est saisi sur la seule base de la Requête, en vertu de l'article 73 (A) du Règlement.

Argument du Procureur

1. Le Procureur prie la Chambre de l'autoriser à modifier de nouveau l'acte d'accusation établi contre Tharcisse Renzaho[4]. Il fait valoir que le Deuxième acte d'accusation modifié qu'il a établi et joint à la Requête comme annexe A ne contient pas de nouveaux chefs ni de nouvelles accusations qui commanderaient une nouvelle comparution initiale de l'accusé[5].

2. Au dire du Procureur, l'autorisation de procéder à une nouvelle modification est sollicitée pour les raisons suivantes :

(a) Préciser, dans l'intérêt de l'accusé et de la Chambre, les bases juridiques des allégations factuelles portées contre l'accusé, conformément à la jurisprudence récente de la Chambre d'appel qui marque une évolution par rapport à celle qui était en vigueur au moment où la requête en modification antérieure a été formée ;

(b) Supprimer les éléments de fait énoncés dans l'acte d'accusation actuel qui ne présentent aucun intérêt et apporter des précisions sur certains des éléments de fait restants ;

(c) Supprimer les arguments de droit présentés dans l'acte d'accusation actuel qui ne sont pas exacts ;

(d) Corriger des fautes de grammaire et d'orthographe[6].

3. Le Procureur dit vouloir inclure dans le nouvel acte d'accusation modifié les modes de participation retenus en vertu de l'article 6 (1) du Statut pour chacune des allégations factuelles que l'acte contient. Il précise que la Chambre d'appel prescrit cette opération dans l'arrêt qu'elle a rendu en l'affaire Kvočka[7]. En outre, il tient à apporter quelques modifications mineures à l'exposé détaillé de certains faits essentiels déjà énoncés dans l'acte d'accusation[8].

4. Le Procureur dit vouloir aussi supprimer les éléments figurant dans l'acte d'accusation actuel qui ne peuvent plus faire partie de sa thèse parce que certains témoins sont décédés ou rechignent à comparaître[9].

5. Selon lui, l'acte d'accusation actuel contient également un certain nombre de fautes de grammaire, d'orthographe et de désignation mineures qu'il convient de corriger[10].

6. Le Procureur fait valoir que parmi les modifications envisagées figure le retrait de certains paragraphes de l'acte d'accusation, ce qui permettra non seulement d'alléger la tâche de l'accusé lors de la préparation de sa défense, mais encore d'écourter la présentation des moyens à charge, rendant ainsi le procès plus rapide[11].

7. Il affirme que dans le projet d'acte d'accusation modifié, il énonce de façon plus précise et plus concise toutes les allégations portées contre l'accusé tout en abandonnant les informations fournies dans l'acte d'accusation actuel qui ne présentent aucun intérêt, sont juridiquement inexactes ou ne peuvent être établies par lui[12].

8. D'après lui, les modifications envisagées visent à apporter des éclaircissements sur les accusations qu'il porte contre la personne poursuivie, tant sur le plan des faits allégués que sur celui du fondement juridique de ses allégations. Ces éclaircissements, estime-t-il, réduiront considérablement la durée du procès en aidant l'accusé et la Chambre à mieux comprendre les faits reprochés à celui-ci[13].

Délibérations

9. Relevant les dispositions pertinentes des articles 50 et 47 du Règlement, la Chambre rappelle que la Chambre de première instance a toute latitude pour autoriser ou ne pas autoriser la modification de l'acte d'accusation après la comparution initiale d'un accusé et qu'elle doit statuer sur la question au cas par cas[14]. Il incombe au Procureur de présenter les éléments de fait et de droit qui justifient les modifications envisagées[15]. [U]ne requête en modification d'un acte d'accusation originel confirmé est généralement formée [et accueillie] pour les motifs suivants : (a) pour ajouter de nouveaux chefs d'accusation à [l']acte d'accusation confirmé ; (b) pour étoffer et développer les allégations factuelles présentées à l'appui des chefs d'accusation initiaux déjà confirmés ; (c) pour apporter des changements mineurs à l'acte d'accusation »[16].

10. Selon la jurisprudence du Tribunal, la question fondamentale qu'il y a lieu de trancher pour autoriser la modification d'un acte d'accusation est de savoir si celle-ci portera injustement préjudice à l'accusé. L'accusé ne subit aucun préjudice des lors qu'on lui accorde dûment la possibilité de préparer sa défense contre les accusations modifiées[17].

11. De l'examen de toutes les pièces jointes à la Requête, notamment l'annexe B, la Chambre constate que les modifications envisagées par le Procureur pourraient être classées en deux grandes catégories.

12. Premièrement, le Procureur demande l'autorisation de supprimer certains paragraphes. La Chambre est d'avis que les modifications envisagées sur ce point peuvent « renforcer l'équité et la rationalité du procès [et] devrai[en]t être encouragé[es] et généralement admis[es]» [18]. Les modifications de cette nature peuvent contribuer à l'accélération de la procédure, notamment si elles entraînent une réduction du nombre de témoins et, partant, celle du nombre de jours d'audience, ce qui permettrait de mieux assurer l'économie des ressources du Tribunal et de préserver le droit d'être jugé sans retard excessif dont jouit l'accusé[19].

13. Deuxièmement, le Procureur entend corriger des fautes de grammaire et d'orthographe commises dans l'acte d'accusation actuel et y ajouter certains mots ou certaines phrases. La Chambre estime que loin d'être de nouveaux chefs d'accusation ou de nouvelles accusations, les modifications prévues sur ce point ne constituent que des « changements mineurs [apportés] à l'acte d'accusation » et/ou des éléments tendant à (« étoffer et développer les allégations factuelles présentées à l'appui des chefs d'accusation initiaux déjà confirmés ». Elle en conclut qu'il y a lieu d'autoriser les modifications envisagées sur le premier et le second point.

13*. Au vu de ce qui précède et rappelant que la Défense n'a pas répondu à la Requête, la Chambre conclut que l'accusé ne risque de subir aucun préjudice si elle autorise le Procureur à modifier de nouveau l'acte d'accusation, d'autant plus que la date de l'ouverture n'a pas encore été fixée et que le projet d'acte d'accusation modifié ne contient pas de nouveaux chefs ni de nouvelles accusations au sens des paragraphes (B) et (C) de l'article 50 du Règlement. Dans ces circonstances, la Chambre signale qu'une nouvelle comparution initiale de l'accusé ne serait pas nécessaire.

PAR CES MOTIFS, LA CHAMBRE

Deuxième acte d'accusation modifié 16 février 2006 (ICTR-97-31-I)

(Original : Anglais)

I. Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda, agissant en vertu des pouvoirs que lui confère l'article 17 du Statut du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda (le « Statut »), accuse des crimes énumérés ci-après :

Premier chef d'accusation - génocide, en application des articles 2 (3) (a), 6 (1) et 6 (3) du Statut, ou, à chef titre subsidiaire ;
Deuxième chef d'accusation - complicité dans le génocide, en application des articles 2 (3) (e), 6 (1) et 6 (3) du Statut ;
Troisième chef d'accusation - assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, en application des articles 3 (a), 6 (1) et 6 (3) du Statut ;
Quatrième chef d'accusation - viol constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, en application des articles 3 (g) et 6 (3) du Statut ;
Cinquième chef d'accusation - meurtre constitutif de violation de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève de 1949 et du Protocole additionnel II de 1977, en application des articles 4 (a), 6 (1) and 6 (3) du Statut ;
Sixième chef d'accusation - viol constitutif de violation de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève de 1949 et du Protocole additionnel II de 1977, en application des articles 4 (e) et 6 (3) du Statut.

II. L'accusé

1. Tharcisse Renzaho est né au Rwanda en 1944 dans le secteur de Gaseta, (commune de Kigarama, préfecture de Kibungo).

2. Durant toute la période visée dans le présent acte d'accusation, Tharcisse Renzaho était :

(F) Haut fonctionnaire :

(i) Exerçant les fonctions de préfet de Kigali-Ville ;

(ii) Exerçant les fonctions de Président du Comité de défense civile de Kigali-Ville ;

(G) Colonel au sein des Forces armées rwandaises (ci-après les « FAR ») et, à ce titre, haut responsable militaire exerçant un contrôle de droit comme de fait sur toutes les forces armées placées sous son commandement, en ce qu'il pouvait ordonner à ces personnes de commettre ou de s'abstenir de commettre des actes illégaux et les discipliner ou les punir de leurs actes ou omissions contraires à la loi.

(I) « Combattant » au sens des articles 1 et 2 du Protocole additionnel II aux Conventions de Genève du 12 août 1949.

(J) En raison de son rang, de son poste et des relations qu'il entretenait avec d'éminentes personnalités de la communauté, ainsi que du rôle de Ministre de l'intérieur de fait qu'il jouait dans la préfecture de Kigali, toute personne désireuse de quitter Kigali-Ville devait avoir une autorisation signée de lui et, de ce fait, son autorisation avait nécessairement une influence dans d'autres préfectures.

III. Accusations et relation concise des faits

3. Durant toute la période visée dans le présent acte d'accusation, il existait au Rwanda un groupe racial ou ethnique minoritaire connu sous le nom de « groupe tutsi » et officiellement identifié comme tel par les pouvoirs publics rwandais. La majorité de la population rwandaise était constituée d'un groupe racial ou ethnique connu sous le nom de « groupe hutu », lui aussi officiellement identifié comme tel par les pouvoirs publics rwandais.

4. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, sur l'ensemble du territoire rwandais et à Kigali en particulier, des miliciens Interahamwe, des militaires des FAR et des civils armés ont pris pour cible et attaqué la population civile identifiée comme appartenant au groupe ethnique ou racial tutsi ou considérée comme des personnes sympathisant avec les Tutsis. Au cours des attaques, certains citoyens rwandais ont tué des personnes soupçonnées d'appartenir au groupe ethnique tutsi ou porté gravement atteinte à leur intégrité physique ou mentale. Ces attaques ont entraîné la mort d'un grand nombre de personnes identifiées comme membres du groupe ethnique ou racial tutsi.

5. Durant la période allant du 7 avril au 17 juillet 1994, un conflit armé ne présentant pas un caractère international se déroulait sur l'ensemble du territoire rwandais, en particulier dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville. Il opposait les FAR au Front patriotique rwandais (« FPR »). Au cours de la période allant du 7 avril au 4 juillet 1994 qui rentre dans l'intervalle susmentionné, les FAR ont occupé des parties de Kigali-Ville, entraîné et armé les Interahamwe et mené la guerre avec l'appui des Interahamwe, de la gendarmerie et de la police communale de la préfecture. À cette époque, le FPR occupait les parties orientales de la commune de Kacyiru et certaines localités de la commune de Kicukiro.

Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Tharcisse Renzaho de génocide, crime prévu à l'article 2 (3) (a) du Statut, en ce que les 7 avril et 17 juillet 1994 ou entre ces dates, sur l'ensemble du territoire rwandais, en particulier dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville, Tharcisse Renzaho a été responsable du meurtre de membres du groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi ou d'atteintes graves à leur intégrité physique ou mentale, y compris d'actes de violence sexuelle, commis dans l'intention de détruire en tout ou en partie un groupe racial ou ethnique comme tel, ainsi qu'il est exposé aux paragraphes 6 à 43.

À titre subsidiaire

Deuxième chef d'accusation : Complicité dans le génocide

Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Tharcisse Renzaho de complicité dans le génocide, crime prévu à l'article 2 (3) (e) du Statut, en ce que les 7 avril et 17 juillet 1994 ou entre ces dates, sur l'ensemble du territoire rwandais, en particulier dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville, Tharcisse Renzaho a été responsable du meurtre de membres du groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi ou d'atteintes graves à leur intégrité physique ou mentale, y compris d'actes de violence sexuelle, commis dans l'intention de détruire en tout ou en partie un groupe racial ou ethnique comme tel ou en sachant que d'autres personnes avaient l'intention de détruire en tout ou en partie le groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi comme tel et que son aide contribuerait à la perpétration du crime de génocide, ainsi qu'il est exposé aux paragraphes 6 à 43.

Relation concise des faits relatifs aux premier et deuxième chefs d'accusation

Responsabilité pénale individuelle prévue à l'article 6 (1) du Statut

6. En application de l'article 6 (1) du Statut, l'accusé Tharcisse Renzaho est individuellement responsable du crime de génocide ou de celui de complicité dans le génocide pour avoir planifié, incité à commettre, ordonné, commis, ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé à planifier, préparer ou exécuter ces crimes. S'agissant de la commission desdits crimes, Tharcisse Renzaho a non seulement usé de ses fonctions et de ses pouvoirs décrits au paragraphe 2 pour ordonner aux personnes placées sous son commandement et son contrôle de les commettre, mais encore incité et aidé et encouragé des personnes qui ne relevaient pas de son commandement et de son contrôle à le faire. En outre, l'accusé a participé volontairement et en toute connaissance de cause à une entreprise criminelle commune dont l'objet, le but et le résultat prévisible étaient de commettre le génocide du groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi et des personnes identifiées comme appartenant à ce groupe ou présumées soutenir les Tutsis tant dans la préfecture de Kigali que sur le reste du territoire rwandais. Pour atteindre ce but criminel, l'accusé a agi de concert avec des dirigeants et des membres des FAR, dont le colonel Théoneste Bagosora, le colonel Ephrem Setako et le major Nyirahakizimana, les membres de la Garde présidentielle, les Interahamwe, notamment Odette Nyirabagenzi, Angeline Mukandutiye et Ngerageza, les « Forces de défense civile », la police communale, des milices civiles, les autorités administratives locales, d'autres militaires et miliciens, d'autres personnes connues, comme le père Wenceslas Munyeshyaka et l'évêque Samuel Musabyimana, et des personnes inconnues, tous les actes considérés étant accomplis directement ou par l'intermédiaire de subordonnés, pendant au moins la période allant du milieu de l'année 1993 au 17 juillet 1994. Les faits précis à raison desquels sa responsabilité pénale individuelle est engagée, notamment sa participation à l'entreprise criminelle commune, sont exposés aux paragraphes 7 à 23.

Barrages routiers

7. À partir du 7 avril 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné aux militaires, aux gendarmes, aux miliciens, à la population locale, aux soldats démobilisés et à d'autres personnes d'établir et de tenir des barrages routiers partout dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville, y compris à Gitega et près des installations de l'Ontracom. Ces militaires, gendarmes, miliciens, « locaux », soldats démobilisés et autres ont participé à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus et se sont servis de ces barrages routiers pour intercepter, identifier et tuer des Tutsis du 7 avril au 17 juillet 1994. Ce faisant, Tharcisse Renzaho a planifié, ordonné, incité à commettre, commis ou toute autre manière aidé et encouragé le génocide.

8. Le 7 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, et de façon régulière par la suite, sur les ondes de Radio Rwanda, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné aux militaires, aux gendarmes, aux miliciens, à la population locale et aux soldats démobilisés, qui participaient à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus, d'établir et de tenir des barrages routiers qui ont servi, du 7 avril au 17 juillet 1994, à intercepter, identifier et tuer des Tutsis, tout en laissant passer les marchandises et les membres de la population majoritaire hutue. Ce faisant, Tharcisse Renzaho a planifié, ordonné, incité à commettre, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé le génocide.

9. Le 10 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, à une réunion tenue au bureau préfectoral de Kigali-Ville, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné aux conseillers et aux responsables de cellule d'établir des barrages routiers que les conseillers, les responsables de cellule, les Interahamwe, les éléments de la population locale, les gendarmes, les militaires et les soldats démobilisés, qui participaient à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus, ont utilisé entre le 10 avril et le 17 juillet 1994 pour identifier et tuer des Tutsis. Ce faisant, Tharcisse Renzaho a planifié, ordonné, incité à commettre, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé le génocide.

10. À diverses dates indéterminées en avril et mai 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho a convoqué des réunions au cours desquelles il a ordonné aux nyumbakumi, aux responsables de cellule, aux conseillers et aux bourgmestres d'être vigilants aux barrages routiers et de veiller à ce que les Inyenzi ne réussissent pas à se cacher au sein de la population. Par suite de ces instructions, des Tutsis ont été interceptés, identifiés et tués aux barrages routiers établis dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville. En convoquant ces réunions et en donnant ces instructions, Tharcisse Renzaho a planifié, ordonné, incité à commettre, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé le génocide.

Campagne de massacre menée dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville

11. À diverses dates indéterminées durant la période allant du milieu de l'année 1993 au 17 juillet 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho a régulièrement autorisé et encouragé des groupes d'Interahamwe et d'Impuzamugambi à se réunir chez lui à Kanombe et ailleurs pour y recevoir une formation militaire. Ces Interahamwe et ces Impuzamugambi ont participé à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus et tué des Tutsis et/ou porté gravement atteinte à leur intégrité physique ou mentale entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994. En autorisant et en encourageant la formation dispensée aux Interahamwe et aux Impuzamugambi, Tharcisse Renzaho a planifié, incité à commettre, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé le génocide.

12. À diverses dates indéterminées durant la période allant du milieu de l'année 1993 au 17 juillet 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho a distribué des armes et des munitions aux membres des Interahamwe et des Impuzamugambi chez lui à Kanombe et ailleurs. Ces Interahamwe et ces Impuzamugambi ont participé à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus, et tué des Tutsis et/ou porté gravement atteinte à leur intégrité physique ou mentale entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994. En distribuant ainsi des armes et des munitions, Tharcisse Renzaho a planifié, incité à commettre, commis ou autre manière aidé et encouragé le génocide.

13. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho a assuré et facilité la délivrance de bons, permis et laissez-passer, ainsi que la fourniture de vivres, pour permettre aux Interahamwe, miliciens, soldats et gendarmes de se déplacer et de s'équiper. Ces Interahamwe, miliciens, soldats et gendarmes ont participé à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus, et tué et/ou porté gravement atteinte à l'intégrité physique et mentale des Tutsis entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994. Par ses agissements décrits ci-dessus, Tharcisse Renzaho a planifié, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé le génocide.

14. Le 8 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Tharcisse Renzaho a planifié, commis, ordonné, incité à perpétrer ou aidé et encouragé à perpétrer l'assassinat du directeur de la Banque rwandaise de développement. Il a confirmé ce fait par radiotéléphone, à la même date ou vers cette date, au colonel Bagosora qui participait à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus.

15. Le 9 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Tharcisse Renzaho, en tenue d'officier supérieur, a mené des Interahamwe amés à Kajari (commune de Kanombe). Ces Interahamwe, qui participaient à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus, ont pénétré dans les maisons de Tutsis et tué ceux qui s'y trouvaient. Tharcisse Renzaho a, de ce fait, ordonné, incité à commettre, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé le massacre des Tutsis.

16. Le 16 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, à une réunion tenue au bureau préfectoral de Kigali-Ville, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné aux conseillers de se procurer des armes à feu au Ministère de la défense pour les distribuer dans les secteurs. Ces armes ont été utilisées par des conseillers et des miliciens, qui participaient à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus, pour tuer des Tutsis. En distribuant ainsi des armes, Tharcisse Renzaho a planifié, incité à commettre, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé le génocide.

17. Le 30 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Tharcisse Renzaho a démis de leurs fonctions plusieurs personnes, dont les conseillers de secteur Jean-Baptiste Rudasingwa et Célestin Sezibera, parce qu'il les croyait hostiles au massacre des Tutsis. En nommant des conseillers favorables au massacre des Tutsis à la place des personnes démises de leurs fonctions, Tharcisse Renzaho a aidé et encouragé à commettre ce massacre.

18. À une date indéterminée, entre le 7 et le 30 mai 1994 ou vers période, Tharcisse Renzaho, qui participait à une réunion chez l'évêque Samuel Musabyimana, a accepté de fournir des armes à feu à celui-ci. Par la suite, durant la même période, Tharcisse Renzaho a fourni plusieurs pistolets-mitrailleurs kalachnikovs qui ont été livrés par le major Nyirahakizamana. Ces armes ont été distribuées aux miliciens et ont servi à tuer des Tutsis. En fournissant ces armes, Tharcisse Renzaho a aidé et encouragé à commettre le massacre.

19. En juin 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho, accompagné des colonels Ephrem Setako et Bagosora, qui participaient à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6, a assisté à une réunion impromptue au barrage routier situé près de l'hôtel Kiyovu à Kigali et ordonné aux personnes présentes de tuer tous les Tutsis. Un certain nombre de Tutsis ont été ensuite tués.

Lieux visés

20. Entre le 7 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, des milliers de Tutsis avaient trouvé refuge au Centre d'étude des langues africaines (le « CELA »), au Centre pastoral Saint-Paul (« Centre Saint-Paul ») et à l'église de la paroisse de la Sainte Famille (« Sainte Famille »). Le père Wenceslas Munyeshyaka était responsable de la paroisse de la Sainte Famille ; Odette Nyirabagenzi était conseillère de secteur et était placée directement sous le commandement et l'autorité de Tharcisse Renzaho ; Angeline Mukandutiye, inspectrice de l'enseignement, était aussi un des chefs des Interahamwe et exerçait un contrôle de fait sur le secteur de Bwahirimba. Elle relevait directement de Tharcisse Renzaho et rendait compte à celui-ci.

21. Le 22 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, accompagné d'Odette Nyirabagenzi, d'Angéline Mukandutiye et du père Munyeshyaka, ainsi que de militaires et d'Interahamwe, qui participaient à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus, Tharcisse Renzaho a donné l'ordre d'expulser du CELA une soixantaine d'hommes tutsis, qui ont été emmenés et tués par des soldats et des Interahamwe. Ce faisant, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné, incité à commettre, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé le génocide. À d'autres dates indéterminées, il a ordonné et incité à commettre le meurtre de nombreux autres Tutsis au CELA.

22. Le 14 juin 1994 ou vers cette date, accompagné d'Odette Nyirabagenzi et d'Angeline Mukandutiye, ainsi que d'Interahamwe, de militaires et de gendarmes, qui participaient à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné, incité à commettre, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé les Interahamwe, les militaires et les gendarmes à commettre l'acte consistant à expulser de Saint-Paul 60 garçons tutsis et à les tuer.

23. Le 17 juin 1994 ou vers cette date, accompagné d'Odette Nyirabagenzi et d'Angeline Mukandutiye, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné à des militaires, à des miliciens et à des agents de la police communale, qui participaient à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 6 ci-dessus, d'attaquer les Tutsis réfugiés à l'église de la Sainte Famille et les a incités à agir de la sorte. De nombreux Tutsis ont été tués.

Responsabilité pénale du supérieur hiérarchique en vertu de l'article 6 (3) du Statut

24. En vertu de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, l'accusé Tharcisse Renzaho est responsable du crime de génocide ou de complicité dans le génocide, en ce que ses subordonnés ont commis des actes criminels précis et il n'a pas pris les mesures nécessaires et raisonnables pour prévenir ceux-ci ou pour en punir les auteurs, alors qu'il savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que les subordonnés en question étaient sur le point de commettre ou avaient commis ces actes. Au nombre de ces subordonnés figuraient des responsables et des membres des FAR, notamment le major Nyirahakizimana, les éléments de la Garde présidentielle, des Interahamwe, dont Odette Nyirabagenzi, Angeline Mukandutiye et Ngerageza, les « Forces de défense civile », les agents de la police communale, des miliciens civils, les autorités administratives locales, d'autres militaires et miliciens, d'autres personnes connues, comme le père Wenceslas Munyeshyaka et l'évêque Samuel Musabyimana, ainsi que des personnes inconnues. Les faits détaillés par lesquels l'accusé a engagé sa responsabilité pénale individuelle en application de l'article 6 (3) sont exposés aux paragraphes 25 à 43.

Barrages routiers

25. À partir du 7 avril 1994, des barrages routiers tenus par des militaires, gendarmes, miliciens et soldats démobilisés relevant du contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho ont été établis partout dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville, y compris à Gitega et près des installations de l'Ontracom. Ces barrages routiers ont servi à identifier et à tuer des Tutsis, et Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

26. Le 10 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, à l'issue d'une réunion tenue au bureau préfectoral de Kigali-Ville, des conseillers et des responsables de cellule placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho ont établi des barrages routiers qui ont servi à identifier et tuer les Tutsis. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

27. À différentes dates indéterminées en avril et mai 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho a convoqué des réunions et y a donné pour instructions aux nyumbakumi, responsables de cellule, conseillers et bourgmestres qui étaient placés sous son contrôle effectif d'être vigilants aux barrages routiers et de s'assurer que les Inyenzi ne réussissaient pas à se cacher au sein de la population. Par suite de ces instructions, des Tutsis ont été interceptés, identifiés et tués aux barrages routiers dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

Campagne de massacres à travers toute la préfecture de Kigali-Ville

28. À différentes dates indéterminées durant la période allant du milieu de l'année 1993 au 17 juillet 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho a autorisé des groupes d'Interahamwe et d'Impuzamugambi à se réunir chez lui à Kanombe et ailleurs pour recevoir une formation militaire. Ces Interahamwe et ces Impuzamugambi étaient placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, ils ont tué des Tutsis ou porté gravement atteinte à leur intégrité physique et mentale. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

29. À différentes dates indéterminées durant la période allant du milieu de l'année 1993 au 17 juillet 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho a distribué des armes et des munitions à des groupes d'Interahamwe et d'Impuzamugambi chez lui à Kanombe et ailleurs. Ces Interahamwe et Impuzamugambi étaient placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, ils ont tué des Tutsis ou porté gravement atteinte à leur intégrité physique et mentale. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

30. Entre le 6 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho a assuré et facilité la délivrance de bons, permis et laissez-passer, ainsi que la fourniture de vivres, pour permettre aux Interahamwe, miliciens, soldats et gendarmes qui participaient aux massacres des Tutsis de se déplacer et de s'équiper. Il exerçait un contrôle effectif sur eux, en ce qu'il avait le pouvoir d'empêcher ou de sanctionner leurs actes.

31. Le 8 avril 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho a confirmé par radiotéléphone au colonel Bagosora que des personnes placées sous son contrôle effectif avaient tué le directeur de la Banque rwandaise de développement. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

32. Le 9 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Tharcisse Renzaho, en tenue d'officier supérieur, s'est rendu en compagnie d'Interahamwe armés à Kajari (commune de Kanombe). Ses subordonnés membres du mouvement Interahamwe ont pénétré dans les maisons de Tutsis et les y ont tués en sa présence et sans aucune objection de sa part. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

33. Le 16 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, à l'issue d'une réunion tenue au bureau préfectoral de Kigali-Ville, des conseillers placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho ont obtenu du Ministère de la défense des armes à feu à distribuer dans les secteurs. Ces armes ont servi à tuer des Tutsis. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

34. À de nombreuses dates indéterminées entre avril et juillet 1994, Tharcisse Renzaho a refusé ou s'est abstenu de punir des Interahamwe placés directement sous son contrôle, son commandement et sa supervision et dont il savait qu'ils avaient participé au massacre de Tutsis et de Hutus modérés à Kigali.

35. Le 30 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Tharcisse Renzaho a démis de leurs fonctions plusieurs personnes, dont les conseillers de secteur Jean-Baptiste Rudasingwa et Célestin Sezibera, parce qu'il les croyait hostiles au massacre des Tutsis. Il a remplacé ces personnes par des conseillers favorables au massacre des Tutsis, ce qui établit qu'il exerçait un contrôle effectif sur les autorités administratives locales de Kigali-Ville.

Lieux visés

36. Entre le 7 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, des milliers de Tutsis se sont réfugiés au CELA, au Centre Saint-Paul et à l'église de la paroisse de la Sainte Famille. Le père Wenceslas Munyeshyaka était responsable de la paroisse de la Sainte Famille ; Odette Nyirabagenzi, conseillère de secteur, était placée directement sous le commandement et l'autorité de Tharcisse Renzaho. Angeline Mukandutiye, inspectrice de l'enseignement, était aussi un des chefs des Interahamwe et exerçait un contrôle de fait sur le secteur de Bwahirimba. Elle était placée sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho et rendait compte à celui-ci.

37. Entre le 7 avril et le 17 juillet 1994, des subordonnés de Tharcisse Renzaho, dont le père Munyeshyaka, Odette Nyirabagenzi et Angeline Mukandutiye, pour ne citer que ceux-là, et d'autres responsables du mouvement Interahamwe ont planifié, préparé, ordonné, incité à commettre et mené des attaques contre des membres du groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi à Kigali. Ces attaques ont été perpétrées à la paroisse de la Sainte Famille, au Centre Saint-Paul, à la mosquée Kadaffi et au CELA, entre autres lieux, dans le secteur de Nyarugenge, dans l'intention de tuer les membres de l'ensemble ou d'une partie du groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi ou de porter atteinte à leur intégrité physique et mentale. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis.

38. Le 22 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, des subordonnés de l'occurrence Odette Nyirabagenzi, le père Munyeshyaka et Angéline Mukandutiye, ainsi que des militaires et des Interahamwe, ont enlevé et fait tuer 60 hommes tutsis au CELA. À d'autres dates indéterminées en avril, mai et juin 1994, ils ont enlevé et fait tuer de nombreux autres Tutsis au CELA Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires et raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

39. Le 14 juin 1994 ou vers cette date, des subordonnés de Tharcisse Renzaho, en l'occurrence Odette Nyirabagenzi et Angeline Mukandutiye, ainsi que des Interahamwe, des militaires et des gendarmes ont enlevé et fait tuer 60 garçons tutsis au Centre Saint-Paul. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

40. Le 17 juin 1994 ou vers cette date, des subordonnés de Tharcisse Renzaho, notamment Odette Nyirabagenzi et Angeline Mukandutiye, pour ne citer qu'elles, ainsi que des militaires, des miliciens et des agents de la police communale ont attaqué et tué des Tutsis qui s'étaient réfugiés à l'église de la paroisse de la Sainte Famille. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires et raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

Atteintes à l'intégrité sexuelle

41. Des femmes tutsies ont été violées par des miliciens Interahamwe, des militaires et d'autres personnes relevant du contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho le 16 avril et à différentes dates indéterminées en avril, mai et juin 1994. Des conseillers placés directement sous le commandement et l'autorité de Tharcisse Renzaho faisaient régulièrement état de viols commis sur des femmes tutsies par des miliciens Interahamwe, des militaires et d'autres personnes relevant aussi de son contrôle effectif. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher ces viols ou pour en punir les auteurs.

42. Le père Munyeshyaka et des Interahamwe placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho ont contraint des femmes tutsies à leur procurer des plaisirs sexuels, en échange de la sécurité de celles-ci, à la paroisse de la Sainte Famille pendant la période où les Tutsis y avaient trouvé refuge, en avril, mai et juin 1994. Tharcisse Renzaho savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que ces actes sexuels sous la contrainte étaient commis sur femmes tutsies à la paroisse de la Sainte Famille et s'est abstenu ou a refusé d'empêcher qu'ils soient commis ou d'en punir les auteurs.

Troisième chef d'accusation: Assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité

Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Tharcisse Renzaho d' assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité crime prévu à l'article 3 (a) du Statut, en ce que les 6 avril et 17 juillet 1994 ou entre ces deux dates, sur l'ensemble du territoire rwandais, en particulier dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville, Tharcisse Renzaho, animé de l'intention de tuer des membres du groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi ou des personnes identifiées comme appartenant à ce groupe ou présumées soutenir les Tutsis, a été responsable du meurtre de ces personnes commis dans le cadre d'une attaque généralisée et systématique dirigée contre cette population civile en raison de son appartenance raciale, ethnique et politique, ainsi qu'il est exposé aux paragraphes 44 à 51.

Relation concise des faits relatifs au troisième chef d'accusation

Responsabilité pénale individuelle prévue à l'article 6 (1)

44. En application de l'article 6 (1) du Statut, l'accusé Tharcisse Renzaho est individuellement responsable d'assassinat constitutif de crime contre l'humanité pour avoir planifié, incité à commettre, ordonné, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé à planifier, préparer ou exécuter ce crime. S'agissant de la commission dudit crime, Tharcisse Renzaho a non seulement usé de ses fonctions et de ses pouvoirs décrits au paragraphe 2 pour ordonner aux personnes placées sous son commandement et son contrôle de le commettre, mais encore incité et aidé et encouragé des personnes qui ne relevaient pas de son commandement et de son contrôle à le faire. En outre, l'accusé a participé volontairement et en toute connaissance de cause à une entreprise criminelle commune dont l'objet, le but et le résultat prévisible étaient de commettre des crimes contre l'humanité contre le groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi et les personnes soit identifiées comme appartenant à ce groupe, soit présumées soutenir les Tutsis ou politiquement opposées au « Hutu Power », tant dans la préfecture de Kigali que sur le reste du territoire rwandais, en raison de l'appartenance raciale, ethnique ou politique des victimes. Pour atteindre ce but criminel, l'accusé a agi de concert avec des dirigeants et des membres des FAR, les membres de la Garde présidentielle, des Interahamwe, comme Odette Nyirabagenzi, les « Forces de défense civile », la police communale, des milices civiles, les autorités administratives locales, d'autres militaires et miliciens, d'autres personnes connues, comme le père Wenceslas Munyeshyaka, et des personnes inconnues, tous les actes considérés étant accomplis directement ou par l'intermédiaire de subordonnés pendant au moins la période allant du 12 avril au 15 juin 1994. Les faits détaillés par lesquels l'accusé a engagé sa responsabilité pénale individuelle, y compris sa participation à l'entreprise criminelle commune, sont exposés aux paragraphes 45 à 47.

45. Le 22 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, en présence de tiers, Tharcisse Renzaho a choisi de faire tuer, ordonné de le faire et incité à tuer certaines personnes se trouvant au CELA, notamment James, Charles, Wilson et Déglote Rwanga ainsi qu'Emmanuel Gihana. Ces personnes ont été tuées par des Interahamwe, militaires et gendarmes qui participaient à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 44 ci-dessus. Par ses agissements, tels qu'ils sont décrits dans le présent acte d'accusation, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné, incité à commettre, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé ces meurtres.

46. Le 28 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné à des Interahamwe de se rendre dans la commune de Nyarugenge pour y rechercher et tuer neuf Tutsis, dont François Nsengiyumva, un homme du nom de Kagorora, de même que ses deux fils Émile et Aimable, et un homme du nom de Rutiyomba. Ces personnes ont été par la suite tuées par les Interahamwe qui participaient à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 44 ci-dessus en exécution des ordres de Tharcisse Renzaho. Ce faisant, Tharcisse Renzaho a planifié, ordonné, incité à commettre, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé à commettre ce meurtre.

47. Le 15 juin 1994 ou vers cette date, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné à Odette Nyirabagenzi de tuer André Kameya, journaliste qui critiquait le Gouvernement intérimaire. Le 15 juin 1994 ou vers cette date, en compagnie d'Interahamwe, Odette Nyirabagenzi, qui participait à l'entreprise criminelle commune visée au paragraphe 44 ci-dessus, a trouvé André Kameya et l'a fait tuer en exécution des ordres de Tharcisse Renzaho. Par ses agissements, tels qu'ils sont exposés dans le présent acte d'accusation, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné, incité à commettre, commis ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé à commettre ce meurtre.

48. En application de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, l'accusé Tharcisse Renzaho est responsable de meurtre constitutif de crime contre l'humanité en ce que ses subordonnés ont commis des actes criminels précis, et il n'a pas pris les mesures nécessaires et raisonnables pour prévenir ceux-ci ou pour en punir les auteurs, alors qu'il savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que les subordonnés en question étaient sur le point de commettre ou avaient commis ces actes. Au nombre de ces subordonnés figuraient des responsables et des membres des FAR, les éléments de la Garde présidentielle, des Interahamwe, dont Odette Nyirabagenzi, les « Forces de défense civile », les agents de la police communale, des miliciens civils, les autorités administratives locales, d'autres militaires et miliciens, d'autres personnes connues, comme le père Wenceslas Munyeshyaka, et des personnes inconnues. Les faits détaillés par lesquels l'accusé a engagé sa responsabilité pénale individuelle prévue à l'article 6 (3) sont exposés aux paragraphes 49 à 51.

49. Le 22 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, des Interahamwe et des militaires placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho ont tué certaines personnes qui avaient trouvé refuge au CELA, notamment James, Charles, Wilson et Déglote Rwanga ainsi qu'Emmanuel Gihana, pour ne citer que celles-là. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soit commis ou en punir les auteurs.

50. Le 28 avril 1994 ou vers cette date, des Interahamwe placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho se sont rendus dans la commune de Nyurugenge où ils ont trouvé et tué neuf Tutsis, dont François Nsengiyumva, un homme du nom de Kagorora, de même que ses deux fils, Émile et Aimable, et un homme du nom de Rutiyomba. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes soient commis ou en punir les auteurs.

51. Le 15 juin 1994 ou vers cette date, des subordonnés de Tharcisse Renzaho, en l'occurrence Odette Nyirabagenzi et un groupe d'Interahamwe, ont trouvé et tué André Kameya, journaliste qui critiquait le Gouvernement intérimaire. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soit commis ou en punir les auteurs.

Quatrième chef d'accusation : Viol constitutif de crime contre l'humanité

Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Tharcisse Renzaho de viol constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, crime prévu à l'article 3 (g) du Statut, en ce que les 7 avril et 17 juillet 1994 ou entre ces dates, sur tout le territoire rwandais, en particulier dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville, des membres du groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi ou des personnes identifiées comme étant des Tutsies ont été violés par des subordonnés de Tharcisse Renzaho dans le cadre d'une attaque généralisée et systématique dirigée contre cette population civile en raison de son appartenance raciale ou ethnique, ainsi qu'il est exposé aux paragraphes 52 à 55 ci-après.

Relation concise des faits relatifs au quatrième chef d'accusation

52. En application de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, l'accusé Tharcisse Renzaho est responsable de viol constitutif de crime contre l'humanité, en que ses subordonnés ont commis des actes criminels précis, et il n'a pas pris les mesures nécessaires et raisonnables pour prévenir ceux-ci ou pour en punir les auteurs, alors qu'il savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que les subordonnés en question étaient sur le point de commettre ou avaient commis ces actes. Au nombre de ces subordonnés figuraient des responsables et des membres des FAR, les éléments de la Garde présidentielle, des Interahamwe, les « Forces de défense civile », les agents de la police communale, des miliciens civils, les autorités administratives locales, d'autres militaires et miliciens, d'autres personnes connues, comme le père Wenceslas Munyeshyaka, et des personnes inconnues. Les faits détaillés par lesquels l'accusé a engagé sa responsabilité pénale individuelle sont exposés aux paragraphes 53 à 55.

53. Des femmes tutsies ont été violées par des miliciens Interahamwe, des militaires et d'autres personnes placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho le 16 avril et à différentes dates indéterminées en avril, mai et juin 1994. Des conseillers placés directement sous le commandement et l'autorité de Tharcisse Renzaho faisaient régulièrement état de viols commis sur des femmes tutsies par des miliciens Interahamwe, des militaires et d'autres personnes agissant aussi sous le contrôle effectif de Renzaho. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher ces viols ou pour en punir les auteurs.

54. Le père Munyeshyaka et des Interahamwe placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho ont contraint des femmes tutsies à leur procurer des plaisirs sexuels, en échange de la sécurité de celles-ci, à la paroisse de la Sainte Famille, pendant la période où des Tutsis y avaient trouvé refuge, en avril, mai et juin 1994. Tharcisse Renzaho savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que ces actes sexuels étaient commis sous la contrainte sur des femmes tutsies et s'est abstenu ou a refusé d'en punir les auteurs.

Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Tharcisse Renzaho de meurtre constitutif de violation de l'article 3 commun aux conventions de Genève de 1949 et du Protocole additionnel II de 1977, crime prévu à l'article 4 (a) du Statut, en ce que Tharcisse Renzaho a été responsable du meurtre d'adultes et de jeunes tutsis qui ne prenaient pas part aux combats pendant la période allant du 7 avril au 17 juillet 1994, à l'époque où un conflit armé ne présentant pas un caractère international, au sens des articles 1 et 2 du Protocole additionnel II aux Conventions de Genève de 1949, se déroulait sur l'ensemble du territoire rwandais, en particulier dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville, ce meurtre étant étroitement lié aux hostilités ou commis dans le cadre du conflit armé et les victimes des personnes qui ne jouaient aucun rôle dans ledit conflit, ainsi qu'il est exposé aux paragraphes 56 à 60.

Relation concise des faits relatifs au cinquième chef d'accusation

Responsabilité pénale individuelle prévue à l'article 6 (1)

56. En application de l'article 6 (1) du Statut, l'accusé Tharcisse Renzaho est individuellement responsable de meurtre constitutif de violation de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève de 1949 et du Protocole additionnel II de 1977 pour avoir planifié, incité à commettre, ordonné, commis, ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé à planifier, préparer ou exécuter ce crime. S'agissant de la commission desdits crimes, Tharcisse Renzaho a non seulement usé de ses fonctions et de ses pouvoirs décrits au paragraphe 2 pour ordonner aux personnes placées sous son commandement et son contrôle de les commettre, mais encore incité et aidé et encouragé des personnes qui ne relevaient pas de son commandement et de son contrôle à le faire. En outre, l'accusé a participé volontairement et en toute connaissance de cause à une entreprise criminelle commune dont l'objet, le but et le résultat prévisible étaient de commettre des crimes de guerre dans la préfecture de Kigali et sur le reste du territoire rwandais contre des membres du groupe racial ou ethnique tutsi qui ne prenaient pas part aux combats. Pour atteindre ce but criminel, l'accusé a agi de concert avec des dirigeants et des membres des FAR, les membres de la Garde présidentielle, les Interahamwe, les « Forces de défense civile », des agents la police communale, les milices civiles, les autorités administratives locales, d'autres militaires et miliciens, d'autres personnes connues et des personnes inconnues, tous les actes considérés étant accomplis directement ou par l'intermédiaire de subordonnés, pendant au moins la période allant du 6 avril au 4 juillet 1994. Les faits détaillés par lesquels l'accusé a engagé sa responsabilité pénale individuelle, y compris sa participation à la présente entreprise criminelle commune, sont exposés aux paragraphes 57 et 58.

57. Entre le 16 et le 17 juin 1994, les combattants du FPR ont réussi à atteindre le Centre Saint-Paul situé à Nyarugenge dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville où ils ont sauvé un grand nombre de Tutsis non-combattants.

58. Le 17 juin 1994 ou vers cette date, en vertu de ses pouvoirs décrits au paragraphe 2 et en représailles aux actions du FPR mentionnées au paragraphe 57, Tharcisse Renzaho a ordonné, incité à commettre ou de toute autre manière aidé et encouragé des militaires des FAR et des Interahamwe à extraire de la paroisse Sainte Famille pour les tuer au moins 17 hommes tutsis non-combattants qui n'avaient pas été sauvés par le FPR.

Responsabilité pénale du supérieur hiérarchique prévue à l'article 6 (3)

59. En application de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, l'accusé Tharisse Renzaho est responsable de meurtre constitutif de violation de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève de 1949 et du Protocole additionnel II de 1977 en ce que ses subordonnés ont commis des actes criminels précis et il n'a pas pris les mesures nécessaires et raisonnables pour prévenir ceux-ci ou pour en punir les auteurs, alors qu'il savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que les subordonnés en question étaient sur le point de commettre ou avaient commis ces actes. Au nombre de ces subordonnés figuraient des responsables et des membres des FAR, les éléments de la Garde présidentielle, des Interahamwe, les « Forces de défense civile », les agents de la police communale, des miliciens civils, les autorités administratives locales, d'autres militaires et miliciens, d'autres personnes connues et des personnes inconnues. Les faits détaillés par lesquels l'accusé a engagé sa responsabilité pénale individuelle prévue à l'article 6 (3) sont exposés au paragraphe 60.

60. Le 17 juin 1994 ou vers cette date, en représailles aux actions du FPR indiquées au paragraphe 57, des militaires des FAR et des Interahamwe, qui étaient des subordonnés relevant du contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho, ont tué au moins 17 hommes tutsis non-combattants réfugiés à la paroisse de la Sainte Famille qui n'avaient pas été sauvés par le FPR. Tharcisse Renzaho s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher que de tels actes ne soient commis ou pour en punir les auteurs.

Sixième hef d'accusation : Viol constitutif de violation de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève de 1949

Le Procureur du Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda accuse Tharcisse Renzaho de viol constitutif de violation de l'article 3 commun aux Conventions de Genève de 1949 et du Protocole additionnel II de 1977, crime prévu à l'article 4 (e) du Statut, en ce que Tharcisse Renzaho a été responsable du viol de femmes tutsies qui ne prenaient pas part aux combats pendant la période allant du 7 avril et 17 juillet 1994, à l'époque où un conflit armé ne présentant pas un caractère international, au sens des articles 1 et 2 du Protocole additionnel II aux Conventions de Genève de 1949, se déroulait sur l'ensemble du territoire rwandais, en particulier dans la préfecture de Kigali-Ville, ce viol étant étroitement lié aux hostilités ou commis dans le cadre du conflit armé et les victimes des personnes qui ne jouaient aucun rôle dans ledit conflit, ainsi qu'il est exposé aux paragraphes 61 à 65.

Relation concise des faits relatifs au sixième chef d'accusation

61. En application de l'article 6 (3) du Statut, l'accusé Tharcisse Renzaho est responsable de viol constitutif de violation de l'article 3 commun Conventions de Genève de 1949 et du Protocole additionnel II de 1977 en ce que ses subordonnés ont commis des actes criminels précis, et il n'a pas pris les mesures nécessaires et raisonnables pour prévenir ceux-ci ou pour en punir les auteurs, alors qu'il savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que les subordonnés en question étaient sur le point de commettre ou avaient commis ces actes. Au nombre de ces subordonnés figuraient des responsables et des FAR, les éléments de la Garde présidentielle, des Interahamwe, dont Odette Nyirabagenzi, les « Forces de défense civile », les agents de la police communale, des miliciens civils, les autorités administratives locales, d'autres militaires et miliciens, d'autres personnes connues, comme le père Wenceslas Munyeshyaka, et des personnes inconnues. Les faits détaillés par lesquels l'accusé a engagé sa responsabilité pénale individuelle prévue à l'article 6 (3) sont exposés aux paragraphes 62 à 65.

62. Au cours de la période allant du 7 avril au 4 juillet 1994 qui rentre dans l'intervalle susmentionné, les FAR ont occupé les zones centrales de Kigali, notamment la commune de Nyarugenge et la région environnant l'église de la paroisse de la Sainte Famille. Ils ont entraîné et armé les Interahamwe et menaient la guerre avec l'appui des Interahamwe, de la gendarmerie, de la police communale de la préfecture et de civils armés.

63. Des femmes tutsies ont été violées par des miliciens Interahamwe, des militaires et d'autres éléments placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho le 16 avril et à différentes dates indéterminées en avril, mai et juin 1994. Des conseillers placés directement sous le commandement et l'autorité de Tharcisse Renzaho faisaient régulièrement état de viols commis sur des Tutsies par des miliciens Interahamwe, des militaires et d'autres éléments placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho. Celui-ci s'est abstenu ou a refusé de prendre les mesures nécessaires ou raisonnables pour empêcher ces viols ou en punir les auteurs.

64. Le père Munyeshyaka et d'autres Interahamwe placés sous le contrôle effectif de Tharcisse Renzaho ont contraint des Tutsies à leur procurer des plaisirs sexuels, en échange de la sécurité de celles-ci, à la paroisse de la Sainte Famille, pendant la période où des Tutsis y avaient trouvé refuge, en avril, mai et juin 1994. Tharcisse Renzaho savait ou avait des raisons de savoir que ces actes sexuels étaient commis sous la contrainte sur des Tutsies à la paroisse de la Sainte Famille, et il s'est abstenu ou a refusé de les empêcher ou d'en punir les auteurs.

Les actes et les omissions de Tharcisse Renzaho exposés dans le présent acte d'accusation sont punissables conformément aux articles 22 et 23 du Statut.

Soumissions des parties

La Défense

1. La Défense soutient que les accusations portées contre l'Accusé dans l'acte d'accusation modifié sont vagues et imprécises, ce qui est contraire aux exigences de la jurisprudence en la matière.[1]

2. La Défense prie la Chambre d'ordonner au Procureur :

- de faire une distinction entre les faits reprochés à l'Accusé sous l'article 6 (1) et sous l'article 6 (3) du Statut, respectivement ;
- de fournir des précisions quant à la nature et à la réalité des pouvoirs de l'Accusé sur les différentes organisations et administrations sur lesquelles il est accusé d'avoir eu autorité ;
- de retirer les chefs d'accusation concernant l'entreprise criminelle commune contenus aux points 6-44 et 56 de l'acte d'accusation modifié ;
- de préciser la nature du lien entre l'Accusé et les auteurs des actes pour lesquels sa responsabilité de supérieur hiérarchique est mise en cause ;
- de fournir les informations permettant d'identifier les victimes alléguées. À titre subsidiaire, d'ordonner au Procureur de fournir des détails qui sont en sa possession permettant d'identifier au mieux les victimes et de déterminer leur nombre. Autrement, d'ordonner au Procureur de stipuler expressément dans l'acte d'accusation qu'il est dans l'incapacité totale de fournir ces renseignements ;
- finalement, de fournir des précisions quant aux dates et aux lieux de commission des crimes allégués.

3. La Défense soumet que les faits reprochés à l'Accusé en tant que supérieur hiérarchique devraient être différents de ceux qui sont à l'appui de sa responsabilité individuelle, ce qui n'a pas été fait dans le cas présent.[2] La Défense cite, entre autres, les paragraphes 7 et 25, 9 et 29, 10 et 27 du deuxième chef d'accusation, les paragraphes 45 et 49 du troisième chef d'accusation et les paragraphes 58 et 50 du cinquième chef d'accusation.[3]

4. La Défense affirme qu'aucun nom de personne n'est évoqué dans l'entreprise criminelle commune concernant les accusations pour crimes de guerre et que seuls des noms d'organisations sont donnés, à savoir, le FAR, la Garde Présidentielle et les Interahamwe.[4]

5. La Défense soumet que les accusations d'entreprise criminelle commune devraient être retirées de l'acte d'accusation modifié aux motifs qu'il est inconcevable que des prétendus coauteurs ou complices de l'Accusé soient désignés comme ayant participé à une entreprise criminelle commune sans que ces personnes aient été en mesure de se défendre contre de telles accusations. En outre, la Défense souligne que la notion d'entreprise criminelle commune avec des inconnus n'est prévue ni par le Statut, ni par aucun système juridique.[5]

6. La Défense soutient que d'après l'acte d'accusation modifié, c'est en raison de ses pouvoirs et de son autorité que l'Accusé a commis ou ordonné de commettre les faits qui lui sont reprochés. Cependant il s'avère qu'aucun fait matériel n'est avancé pour établir le fondement de cette prétendue autorité.[6]

[1] Paragraphes 38 et 39 de la requête. La Défense cite l'arrêt Kupreskič du 23 octobre 2001, le jugement de la Chambre de première instance dans l'affaire Niyitegeka du 16 mai 2003 confirmé par la Chambre d'Appel le 9 juillet 2004, le jugement dans l'affaire Ntakirutimana du 19 février 2006 et celui dans l'affaire Bizimungu en date du 15 juillet 2004.

[3] Paragraphes 50-52 de la requête.
[4] Paragraphe 54 de la requête.
[5] Paragraphes 55-57 de la requête.
[6] Paragraphes 59-60 de la requête.

7. En ce qui concerne la responsabilité de l'Accusé en tant que supérieur hiérarchique, la Défense affirme, entre autre, que sa position hiérarchique vis-à-vis des gendarmes n'est pas indiquée, ni la milice à laquelle il est supposé appartenir, ni de qui il dépendait et qui dépendait de lui.[7] La Défense soumet qu'il est également reproché à l'Accusé d'avoir joué le rôle de « Ministre de l'Intérieur de fait » pendant la période incriminée alors qu'aucun fait matériel ne l'étaye et que l'on ignore comment l'Accusé aurait acquis cette qualité.[8]

8. En ce qui concerne les accusations relatives à la responsabilité individuelle de l'Accusé, la Défense prétend qu'elles manquent tout autant de précision.[9]

9. La Défense affirme que l'utilisation de l'adverbe « vers » pour indiquer une date dans l'acte d'accusation modifié devrait être proscrite comme étant le synonyme d'« environ » qui est déjà interdit par la jurisprudence.[10] La Défense indique que le Procureur a utilisé à vingt-cinq reprises cet adverbe dans le présent acte d'accusation modifié.[11]

10. La Défense soumet que l'acte d'accusation comporte de nombreuses expressions qui sont jugées trop vagues. A titre d'exemple, elle cite les expressions « A partir de juin 1994 » qu'on retrouve aux paragraphes 7 et 25 et « A une date indéterminée entre le 7 et le 30 mai 1994 ou vers cette période » au paragraphe 18.[12] Par ailleurs, la Défense prétend que l'adjectif « indéterminé » est lui-même synonyme de « vague ».[13]

11. La Défense prétend que l'acte d'accusation modifié est imprécis quant à la détermination de certains lieux de commission des infractions alléguées. A titre d'exemple, aux paragraphes 7 et 25 il est écrit « partout dans la préfecture de Kigali Ville », ou encore « à la paroisse Sainte famille, au centre Saint Paul, à la mosquée Kadaffi et au CELA, entre autres lieux, dans le secteur de Nyarugenge » au paragraphe 37. En outre, de nombreux paragraphes ne précisent même pas les lieux de commission des infractions, entre autres, les paragraphes 8, 9, 10, 53 et 63.[14]

12. La Défense soumet que l'acte d'accusation modifié est imprécis en ce qu'il comporte des chefs d'accusations qui ne mentionnent pas les noms des victimes des crimes allégués.[15] Selon la jurisprudence, le Procureur est tenu de donner dans la mesure du possible tous les détails relatifs à l'identité et au nombre des victimes[16] ou tout au moins, d'indiquer la catégorie à laquelle lesdites victimes appartenaient ou leur situation en tant que groupe.[17] Si le Procureur ne peut remplir les conditions susmentionnées pour des raisons objectives, il doit le stipuler clairement dans l'acte d'accusation tout en indiquant qu'il a fourni les renseignements les plus précis dont il disposait, ce qui n'a pas été fait dans le cas présent.[18] La Défense indique en outre que définir les victimes comme « Tutsis » ne suffit pas.[19] Finalement, la Défense allègue que l'utilisation de l'adverbe « notamment » aux paragraphes 45 et 49 de l'acte d'accusation pour désigner les victimes d'un crime est à proscrire dans la mesure où elle est de nature à porter préjudice à la préparation de la défense de l'Accusé.[20]

[12] Paragraphe 88 de la requête.
[13] Paragraphe 90 de la requête.
[14] Paragraphes 91-95 de la requête.
[15] Paragraphe 98 de la requête. La Défense énumère les paragraphes 7 à 13, 15, 16, 18, 19, 21 à 23, 25 à 29, 32 à 34, 38 à 43, 53 à 55, 58, 60, 63 à 65.

[20] Paragraphes 104-105 de la requête.

13. La Défense soumet que les supposés subordonnés de l'Accusé ne sont pas tous identifiés dans les paragraphes introductifs des chefs d'accusation concernant sa responsabilité pénale en tant que supérieur hiérarchique,[21] ou bien que leur identité n'est pas du tout précisée.[22] Sur ce dernier point, l'acte d'accusation se contente de citer, à titre d'exemple, les « Interahamwe » dans les paragraphes 28, 29, 30, 32, 34, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 49, 50, 51, 53, 55, 60, 63, 64 et 65; ou encore des « soldats » au paragraphe 30.[23] L'acte d'accusation modifié utilise également des formules encore plus vagues, comme dans le paragraphe 31, où les auteurs sont cités comme « des personnes placées sous son contrôle effectif » ou comme « d'autres éléments », ainsi qu'il est indiqué au paragraphe 63.[24] La Défense souligne que les imprécisions de cette nature ne peuvent que porter préjudice à la préparation de la défense de l'Accusé.[25] Dans l'hypothèse où le Procureur ne serait pas en mesure d'identifier les auteurs des crimes allégués pour des raisons objectives, la Défense affirme qu'il suffit au Procureur de les désigner, en précisant la « catégorie » ou le groupe auxquels lesdites personnes appartiennent. S'il appert que le Procureur ne peut identifier les auteurs nommément, il doit stipuler clairement dans l'acte d'accusation qu'il n'était pas en mesure de le faire.[26] Finalement, la Défense soumet que si ces éléments ont été déterminés par déduction, le Procureur « doit identifier, dans l'acte d'accusation, les faits et circonstances censés conduire à cette déduction ».[27]

14. En guise de conclusion, la Défense soumet que l'acte d'accusation n'est pas suffisamment précis sur certains points pour permettre à l'Accusé d'exercer ses droits et que les imprécisions quant aux dates des faits, à titre d'exemple, lui sont extrêmement préjudiciables puisqu'elles l'empêchent de faire valoir une défense d'alibi. Par conséquent, l'acte d'accusation doit être précisé pour permettre l'exercice effectif des droits de la défense.[28]

Le Procureur

15. Le Procureur soumet qu'il appartient à la Chambre, après avoir entendu tous les moyens de preuve, de déterminer le mode de participation éventuel qui pourrait être retenu contre l'Accusé. Le rôle du Procureur est de confectionner un acte d'accusation étayé par des faits qu'il considère pouvoir prouver en y énonçant le(s) mode(s) de participation reprochés à l'Accusé. Ainsi, les soumissions de la Défense alléguant que les faits reprochés à l'Accusé en tant que supérieur hiérarchique devraient être différents de ceux qui sont à l'appui de sa responsabilité individuelle, sont mal fondées.[29]

16. Le Procureur allègue que l'acte d'accusation modifié ainsi que le mémoire préalable au procès aux pages 9 à 14 fournissent suffisamment de détails en ce qui concerne l'autorité alléguée de l'Accusé.[30]

17. Quant aux imprécisions alléguées relatives aux dates et aux lieux de la commission des faits, aux victimes et aux auteurs, le Procureur soumet que le degré de précision sollicité par la Défense est excessif. Le Procureur souligne qu'il a inclus dans l'acte d'accusation modifié tous les détails possibles y afférant sans pour autant plaider sa cause ni révéler l'identité des témoins protégés.[31] Le Procureur précise en outre que l'acte d'accusation devrait être considéré et lu dans son intégralité.[32]

18. Le Procureur prétend que compte tenu des événements qui se sont déroulés au Rwanda pendant la période incriminée, il lui est impossible d'apporter de plus amples informations concernant l'identification de chacun des co-auteurs de l'Accusé dans le cadre d'une entreprise criminelle commune. Ces prétendus co-auteurs appartenaient le plus souvent à d'importants groupes de miliciens, de militaires ou de civils qui n'étaient pas identifiables. Le Procureur soumet que dans tous les cas, le mémoire préalable au procès apporte plus de clarté sur ce point.[33]

[21] Paragraphes 111 de la requête. La Défense indique les paragraphes 24, 48, 52, 59 et 61 de l'acte d'accusation.

La Réplique de la Défense

19. La Défense réitère que selon la jurisprudence, le Procureur doit clairement distinguer dans l'acte d'accusation, les faits qui engagent la responsabilité pénale de l'accusé sur la base de l'article 6 (1) du Statut de ceux qui engagent sa responsabilité selon l'article 6 (3).[34]

20. La Défense ajoute que les détails relatifs aux dates, aux lieux de commission des faits, aux victimes et aux auteurs des crimes allégués doivent être apportés dans l'acte d'accusation pour permettre à l'accusé de faire valablement valoir ses moyens de défense. Dans le cas où le Procureur ne peut pas fournir lesdits détails en ce qui concerne les victimes, il est tenu d'en donner la raison.[35]

21. La Défense soumet que lorsqu'il s'agit d'événements ayant eu lieu à un endroit précis en présence de nombreuses personnes tels que les événements de Saint Paul, Sainte Famille ou du CELA, il est possible d'être précis quant aux circonstances. A défaut, le procès ne respecterait pas les obligations qui pèsent sur lui en matière de droits de la défense en empêchant l'accusé de se défendre notamment en faisant valoir des défenses d'alibi. Finalement, la Défense allègue que la communication d'un mémoire préalable ne peut pas pallier les carences de l'acte d'accusation.[36]

Délibérations

22. La Chambre note que la présente requête a été déposée dans les délais légaux conformément à l'article 72 du Règlement et qu'il convient de la déclarer recevable.

23. La Chambre note ensuite que les points soulevés par la Défense dans la présente requête peuvent être classés en trois catégories, à savoir, la nécessité de distinguer entre les faits incriminés sous les articles 6 (1) et 6 (3) du Statut; l'absence de précision relative à l'autorité alléguée de l'Accusé; et l'absence de précision relative à la détermination des dates et lieux de la commission des faits, à l'identification des victimes, des subordonnés de l'Accusé et de ses coauteurs dans le cadre de l'entreprise criminelle commune.

Sur la nécessité de distinguer entre les faits incriminés sous les articles 6 (1) et 6 (3) du Statut

24. La Chambre note qu'il est de jurisprudence constante qu'un accusé peut être poursuivi pour un même fait à la fois sous les articles 6 (1) et 6 (3) du Statut, à la seule condition que le Procureur ait clairement précisé dans l'acte d'accusation la manière dont l'accusé a prétendument engagé sa responsabilité pénale tant comme auteur des faits que comme supérieur hiérarchique, en conformité avec les articles susvisés.[37]

25. La Chambre a passé en revue tous les paragraphes de l'acte d'accusation invoqués par la Défense dans sa requête[38] et conclut que le Procureur a suffisamment précisé pour chacun des faits concernés dans le présent acte d'accusation modifié, la manière dont l'Accusé a prétendument engagé sa responsabilité pénale tant comme auteur des faits que comme supérieur hiérarchique et qu'il échet, par conséquent, de rejeter la demande de la Défense sur ce point.

Sur l'absence de précision quant à l'autorité alléguée de l'Accusé

26. La Chambre note les soumissions de la Défense, particulièrement celle qui allègue qu'aucun fait matériel n'est avancé dans l'acte d'accusation modifié pour établir le fondement de la prétendue autorité de l'Accusé.

27. La Chambre note que le paragraphe 2 de l'acte d'accusation modifié détaille l'identité et les fonctions de l'Accusé durant les évènements de 1994. La Chambre considère que ces indications sont suffisantes pour informer l'Accusé de la position d'autorité qu'il aurait occupée. En particulier, la Chambre note que le paragraphe 2 (C) indique précisément les personnes sur lesquelles l'Accusé aurait exercé une autorité lorsqu'il était membre du Comité de crise mis en place dans la nuit du 6 avril 1994 ainsi que les catégories de personnes placées sous son autorité et que notamment au paragraphe 6, figurent des noms précis comme celui d'Angeline Mukandutiye, membre supposé des interahamwe, ou du Père Wenceslas qui aurait participé au génocide.

28. Concernant les faits spécifiques à l'appui de l'allégation selon laquelle l'Accusé était Ministre de l'Intérieur de fait, il est précisé au paragraphe 2 (E) de l'Acte d'accusation modifié que toute personne souhaitant quitter la ville de Kigali devait en obtenir l'autorisation signée de l'Accusé. La Chambre considère qu'une telle indication est suffisante pour informer l'Accusé de la nature des allégations retenues contre lui afin de lui permettre de préparer effectivement sa défense.

29. En conséquence, la Chambre rejette la demande de la Défense demandant plus de précision quant à l'autorité alléguée de l'Accusé.

30. En outre, la Chambre a noté l'argument de la défense concernant l'imprécision des charges portant sur la responsabilité individuelle de l'Accusé. La Chambre est d'avis que la Défense n'a pas démontré que de telles imprécisions existent et rejette la requête de la défense sur ce point.

Sur l'absence de précision relative à la détermination des dates et lieux de la commission des faits; à l'identification des victimes, des subordonnés de l'Accusé et de ses coauteurs

31. S'agissant de la détermination des dates et lieux de la commission des faits et à l'identification des victimes, la Chambre rappelle ce qui a été énoncé dans l'affaire Kupreškić :

> L'obligation qui est faite à l'Accusation de faire dans l'acte d'accusation un exposé concis des faits de l'espèce doit être interprétée à la lumière des dispositions des articles 21 (2), 4 (a) et (b) du Statut, lesquelles précisent que toute personne contre laquelle des accusations sont portées a droit à ce que sa cause soit entendue équitablement, et, plus particulièrement, à être informée de la nature et des motifs des accusations portées contre elle et à disposer du temps et des moyens nécessaires à la préparation de sa défense. La jurisprudence du Tribunal impose dès lors à l'Accusation de présenter les faits essentiels qui fondent les accusations portées dans l'acte d'accusation, mais non les éléments de preuve qui doivent établir ces faits. Dès lors, pour qu'un acte d'accusation soit suffisamment précis, il faut en particulier qu'il expose de manière suffisamment circonstanciée les faits incriminés essentiels pour informer clairement un accusé des accusations portées contre lui afin qu'il puisse préparer sa défense.[39]
> La Chambre d'appel se doit d'abord de souligner que l'on ne peut décider dans l'abstrait qu'un fait est ou non essentiel. Tout dépend de la nature de la cause de l'Accusation. Un élément décisif pour déterminer le degré de précision avec lequel l'Accusation est tenue de détailler les faits de l'espèce dans l'acte d'accusation est la nature du comportement criminel reproché à l'accusé. Ainsi, lorsque l'Accusation reproche à un accusé d'avoir personnellement commis des

actes criminels, les faits essentiels, tels que l'identité de la victime, le moment et le lieu du crime et son mode d'exécution, doivent être exposés en détail. À l'évidence, il peut exister des cas où l'ampleur même des crimes exclut « que l'on [puisse] exiger un degré de précision aussi élevé sur l'identité des victimes et la date des crimes ».[40]

C'est le cas, par exemple, lorsque l'Accusation reproche à un accusé d'avoir participé, au sein d'un peloton d'exécution, au meurtre de centaines de personnes. La nature d'une telle affaire n'exige pas que chacune des victimes soit identifiée dans l'acte d'accusation. De même, une personne peut être accusée d'avoir participé, pendant longtemps, dans les rangs de l'armée à un très grand nombre d'attaques contre des civils, qui ont entraîné la mort ou le déplacement forcé d'un grand nombre de personnes. Dans ce cas, l'Accusation n'a pas besoin d'identifier chaque victime tuée ou expulsée pour s'acquitter de l'obligation qui lui incombe de préciser dans l'acte d'accusation les faits de l'espèce essentiels. Toutefois, dans la mesure où l'identité de la victime constitue pour l'accusé une information précieuse pour la préparation de sa défense, l'Accusation doit la lui révéler si elle est en mesure de le faire.[41]

32. La Chambre fait sienne cette jurisprudence et considère que « l'ampleur des crimes » reprochés à l'Accusé dans le cas présent exclut « que l'on [puisse] exiger un degré de précision aussi élevé sur l'identité des victimes, la date et le lieu des crimes ». Par conséquent, la Chambre conclut que les informations fournies dans l'acte d'accusation modifié en ce qui les concerne, sont suffisantes pour la préparation de la défense de l'accusé.

33. S'agissant des allégations soulevées par la Défense concernant l'absence d'informations sur les autres participants aux crimes, la Chambre reprend la conclusion énoncée dans la décision Krnojelac,[42] à savoir que, si le Procureur se trouvait dans l'impossibilité de désigner nommément les personnes ayant directement pris part aux événements « il suffirait qu'elle les identifie en précisant la « catégorie » à laquelle ils appartenaient en tant que groupe ou leurs fonctions officielles »

34. Partant de cette jurisprudence, la Chambre trouve suffisante l'utilisation des expressions « des Interahamwe », « des miliciens », « des militaires », « des gendarmes », « des Impuzamugambi », « des soldats démobilisés », « des conseillers », « des responsables de cellule », « des nyumbakumi », « des bourgmestres », « des soldats », « des agents de la police communale », « des civils armés » ou encore « d'autres personnes du mouvement Interahamwe » dans le présent acte d'accusation modifié, pour désigner les personnes qui étaient sous l'autorité ou de concomitance avec l'Accusé pendant la période incriminée. En se basant sur cette même jurisprudence, la Chambre est d'avis que les autres vices allégués par la Défense aux paragraphes 115 à 117 de sa requête[43] ne sont pas préjudiciables et qu'il convient de rejeter la demande sur ce point.

35. Enfin, la Chambre considère l'allégation que les accusations d'entreprise criminelle commune devraient être retirées de l'acte d'accusation modifié aux motifs qu'il est inconcevable que des prétendus coauteurs ou complices de l'Accusé soient désignés comme ayant participé à une entreprise

Introduction

1. Le 5 septembre 2006, la Chambre a rejeté la requête de la Défense en exceptions préjudicielles pour vices de forme de l'acte d'accusation. Dans sa décision, la Chambre avait conclu que le Procureur avait suffisamment précisé dans l'acte d'accusation la manière dont l'accusé a prétendument engagé sa responsabilité pénale comme auteur des faits et comme supérieur hiérarchique. La Chambre avait également rejeté les demandes de la Défense pour davantage de précision quant à l'autorité alléguée de l'accusé et celles relatives à la détermination des dates et lieux de la commission des faits, à l'identification des victimes, des subordonnés de l'accusé et de ses co-auteurs. La Défense souhaite contester cette décision et demande en conséquence l'autorisation d'interjeter appel. Le Procureur s'oppose à cette requête.

Soumissions

2. S'appuyant sur les articles 17-4 et 20-4 du Statut et l'article 47 (C) du Règlement, la Défense conteste la validité de l'acte d'accusation en raison des accusations vagues et imprécises portées contre l'accusé alors que le respect des droits de la défense requiert que l'accusé soit informé clairement des charges contre lui.[1] La Défense soutient que l'égalité des armes entre le Procureur et la Défense a été rompue et que la décision de la Chambre touche une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement l'équité du procès.

3. La Défense estime également que la décision contestée est susceptible de compromettre sensiblement la rapidité du procès ou son issue car les précisions de l'acte d'accusation réclamées par la Défense accéléreraient sensiblement la rapidité du procès.[2] La Défense en conclut que le règlement immédiat de cette question par la Chambre d'appel pourrait concrètement faire avancer la procédure car il emporterait une amélioration des garanties du procès sur le plan de l'équité et de la rapidité.

4. Le Procureur soumet que la Défense n'a pas démontré que les circonstances exceptionnelles de certification d'appel sont réunies.[3] Au contraire, la Défense s'est contentée de réitérer ou d'élargir les arguments avancés au soutien de la requête initiale. En particulier, la Défense n'a pas prouvé que la

La Défense s'appuie également sur l'article 10 de la déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, les jugements de la cour européenne des droits de l'homme dans l'affaire Neumeister c. Autriche (27 juin 1968) et dans l'affaire Dumbo Beheer Bv. Pays Bas (27 octobre 1993)

Chambre a commis une erreur lors de son appréciation du caractère approprié de l'acte d'accusation modifié.[4] En outre, la Défense n'a pas démontré en quoi une résolution immédiate de la question par la Chambre d'appel pourrait faire avancer la procédure, étant donné que rien n'empêche l'affaire d'être entendue en l'état.

5. En conclusion, le Procureur soutient que la Chambre a correctement identifié et analysé les questions soulevées par la Défense dans sa requête en exceptions préjudicielles et que les modes de participation de l'Accusé aux crimes allégués sont suffisamment précisés dans l'acte d'accusation.

Délibérations

6. La Chambre rappelle que les décisions rendues sur une requête en exceptions préjudicielles ne sont pas susceptibles d'appel d'après l'article 72 (B) du Règlement sauf pour les exceptions d'incompétence, auquel cas l'appel est de droit. Exceptionnellement, aux termes de l'article 72 (B) (ii), la Chambre peut accorder l'autorisation de faire appel d'une telle décision lorsque celle-ci « touche une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement l'équité et la rapidité du procès, ou son issue, et que son règlement immédiat par la Chambre d'appel pourrait concrètement faire progresser la procédure. » La Chambre rappelle que ce critère est similaire au critère de certification d'appel requis pour les requêtes déposées en vertu de l'article 73.[5]

7. La Chambre n'est pas convaincue par l'argument de la Défense suivant lequel la décision contestée touche une question susceptible de compromettre sensiblement l'équité et la rapidité ou l'issue du procès contre l'Accusé. En effet, la Chambre note que la Défense s'est contentée de réitérer les arguments développés au soutien de la requête initiale ayant abouti à la décision contestée. La Défense en a ensuite déduit que l'équité, la rapidité et l'issue du procès en seraient affectées. Or, la Chambre rappelle que les conditions de certification requièrent que les critères de l'article 72 (B) soient, en l'espèce démontrés d'une manière spécifique et qu'une simple référence aux arguments à l'appui de la décision contestée ne suffit pas.[6]

8. Les conditions de l'article 72 (B) étant cumulatives, la Chambre n'examinera pas les arguments de la Défense à l'appui de la deuxième condition et rejette par conséquent la requête dans son entièreté.

PAR CES MOTIFS

LE TRIBUNAL,

REJETTE la requête de la Défense.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA (the "Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber II composed of Judge Asoka De Silva, Presiding, Judge Taghrid Hikmet and Judge Seon Ki Park (the "Chamber");

BEING SEISED of the "Requête en Prescription de mesures visant à la protection des témoins à décharge" filed on 24 April 2006"[7] (the "Motion");

NOTING that the Prosecution has not filed a response;

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute"), in particular Articles 19, 20 and 21 and of the Statute, and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules"), specifically Rules 69 and 75 of the Rules;

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules on the basis of the written submissions of the Defence.

Submissions of the Defence

1. The Defence for Juvénal Rugambarara requests the Chamber to order protective measures for its potential witnesses pursuant to Articles 19 to 21 of the Statute and Rules 69 and 75 of the Rules.

[7] Motion for Protective Measures for Defence Witnesses (unofficial translation).

2. The Defence submits that the witnesses it intends to call reside in Rwanda, in other African nations, in Europe and in North America.

3. The Defence refers to the Chamber's Decision of 31 January 2006, in which protective measures for Prosecution witnesses were granted, and submits that the witnesses the Defence intends to call are in the same situation as the Prosecution witnesses and the witnesses of other accused persons.

4. The Defence submits that the witnesses it has contacted have expressed their fears to testify before the Tribunal if their identities are known or revealed.

5. The Defence requests that the Chamber grant eleven specific witness protection measures outlined on pages 2-4 of the Motion.

6. Finally, the Defence submits that if the Chamber wishes to see any supporting material or hear reasons orally in support of the present Motion, it should order a closed session.

Deliberations

7. The Chamber recalls that measures for protection of witnesses are granted on a case-by-case basis.[8] The Chamber further recalls its Decisions of 28 October 2005 and 31 January 2006 in this matter in which it held, inter alia, that witnesses for whom protective measures are sought, must have a real fear for their own safety or the safety of their family, and that this subjective fear must be objectively justified.[9] Finally, the Chamber recalls the ICTY decision in the Milosević case, where the Trial Chamber stated that "fears expressed by potential witnesses are not in themselves sufficient to establish a real likelihood that they may be in danger or at risk."[10]

8. The Chamber notes the Defence's submissions that its potential witnesses have expressed concerns over their fate if they testify before the Tribunal. The Chamber observes, however, that the Defence has not provided any independent material that demonstrates that the fears of its potential witnesses are well founded. The Chamber reiterates that without any such material, it is left to speculate about the security situation of potential witnesses and no reasoned decision on protective measures can be made.

9. As regards the Defence submission to order a closed session, the Chamber is of the opinion that an application for protective measures for witnesses can be dealt with on the basis of written submissions and reminds the Defence that any supporting material can be provided by way of confidential filing.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Motion as currently formulated without prejudice to the right of the Defence to file a fresh motion with the appropriate supporting material.

CONSIDERING the Statute of the Tribunal (the "Statute") and the Rules of Procedure and Evidence (the "Rules");

NOW DECIDES the Motion on the basis of the written briefs filed by the Parties pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules.

Introduction

1. On 25 November 2005, the Prosecution submitted a Motion for Leave to File an Amended Indictment, followed by a Support Brief and a translation into French of the proposed Amended Indictment. The Accused, working pro se, filed a Response, to which the Prosecution sent a Reply and the Accused then filed a Rejoinder. After her appointment as Counsel for the Accused, Ms Condé also made a Further Submission addressing the issue. The case was formally transferred from Trial Chamber III to Trial Chamber II on 14 September 2006[1] and the trial is scheduled to commence in November 2006.

Submissions of the Parties

The Prosecution

2. Relying on Rule 50 of the Rules, the Prosecution requests leave of the Chamber to file an Amended Indictment. It argues that since Rule 50 does not explicitly prescribe a time-limit within which the Prosecution may move to amend an indictment, this leaves open the possibility of amending the indictment at any time in light of the circumstances of each individual case.

[1] See Interoffice Memorandum from the President of the Tribunal to the Chief of the Court Management Section dated 14 September 2006.

3. The Prosecution submits that its Motion is justified in law and on the evidence and that the proposed Amended Indictment should be granted for the following reasons: it is based on the same charges and no substantial changes have been made to the initial counts of the current Indictment; it sets forth the facts and charges with greater particularity and captures the nature of the Accused's culpability with greater clarity; it brings the existing Indictment in accordance with the jurisprudence of the ICTR and current charging practices of the Office of the Prosecutor; it will not prejudice the rights of the Accused to a fair trial and it will, on the contrary, expedite the trial; it expands and elaborates on the factual basis of the existing charges against the Accused; it is based on a substantial volume of the evidence that has already been disclosed to the Accused under Rule 66 (A); any new allegations are supported by the same factual elements pleaded in the original Indictment thus mitigating any prejudice or surprise to the Accused; and it does not amount to a "substitution" of the existing Indictment.

4. The Prosecution further submits that it has deleted some paragraphs from the current Indictment and consolidated others, so that each charge is now pleaded with greater particularity and specificity in respect of the involvement of the Accused. It argues that the proposed Amended Indictment will give the Accused the ability to better prepare a defence and will allow the trial to proceed more expeditiously. Additionally, the Prosecution submits that in the proposed Amended Indictment there are new allegations that nevertheless do not alter the crimes charged, so the possibility of prejudice to the Accused is greatly reduced. Finally, the Prosecution argues that it is not acting maliciously and that the arguments raised by the Accused concerning this Motion are matters of evidence that will be dealt with at trial.

The Defence

5. The Accused submits, first of all, that the Amended Indictment dated 27 March 2003 has never been "ratified" by the Chamber. He further submits that the proposed amendment of 25 November 2005 does not add any clarity to the existing charges but substantially alters the spirit and the letter of the Indictment. According to the Accused, the Motion is merely an attempt by the Prosecution to reintroduce the charge of superior responsibility that had been rejected by the Confirming Judge in July 2001. He argues that as a chaplain he had no authority over any soldiers or armed civilians and therefore that it is unfair to hold him responsible for any crimes allegedly committed by them. Finally, the Accused submits that the repeated attempts to modify the Indictment suggest that there is no evidence against him. He therefore prays the Chamber not only to deny the Motion but also to order the Prosecution to withdraw the Indictment.

6. Counsel for the Defence endorses the Accused's submissions, but adds that should the Chamber be minded to grant the Motion, it should direct the Prosecution to specify which communal office in Gitarama préfecture is referred to at paragraph 10 (iv) of the proposed Amended Indictment.

Deliberations

7. The Chamber recalls the provisions of Rule 50 of the Rules, pursuant to which it may grant leave to amend an indictment. While the Rule does not establish the criteria for granting such leave, the jurisprudence of the Tribunal unambiguously places the onus on the Prosecution to demonstrate the factual and legal justifications for any amendment sought. In determining whether to grant leave to amend an indictment, a Trial Chamber may take the following factors into consideration: the interests of justice;[2] judicial economy;[3] the likely prejudice to an accused's right to a fair and expeditious trial;[4]

[2] The Prosecutor v. Tharcisse Muvunyi, Case N°ICTR-2000-55A-PT, "Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Leave to File an Amended Indictment", 23 February 2005, para. 26.

the existence of newly discovered evidence that was unknown to the Prosecution at the time the initial indictment was drafted and confirmed;[5] the nature and scope of the proposed amendment;[6] and whether the proposed changes more accurately describe "the totality of the criminal conduct of the accused."[7] The Chamber will evaluate the Parties' submissions on the basis of this jurisprudence.

8. Having compared the contents of the proposed Amended Indictment to those of the current Indictment, the Chamber finds that paragraphs 10 (ii), 10 (iii), and 10 (iv) of the proposed Amended Indictment contain new factual allegations that were not included in the current Indictment. The Chamber notes, for instance that whereas the current Indictment at paragraphs 9 through 12 makes a general reference to "attacks against the Tutsis" at various locations in Gitarama préfecture during the months of April and May 1994, the proposed Amended Indictment goes further by providing greater particulars on the venues, the criminal conduct alleged and the victims. Thus, while the substantive charge of genocide remains the same in both versions of the Indictment, the amendment provides more specifics. Under the Tribunal's jurisprudence, the Prosecution is required to plead the material facts upon which it relies to establish its counts or charges in the indictment. However, a failure to plead those material facts may, in certain limited circumstances, be remedied by clear and timely notice to the Defence.[8]

9. The Chamber is of the view that these allegations are merely additional material facts underpinning the already-existing charges against the Accused[9] and is therefore satisfied that no new charges have been added and that the proposed changes plead the facts with greater specificity and clarity. As the Appeals Chamber has stated,

> "There is a clear distinction between counts or charges made in an indictment and the material facts that underpin that charge or count. The count or charge is the legal characterisation of the material facts which support that count or charge. In pleading an indictment, the Prosecution is required to specify the alleged legal prohibition infringed (the count or charge) and the acts or omissions of the Accused that give rise to that allegation of infringement of a legal prohibition (material facts). The distinction between the two is one that is quite easily drawn."[10]

10. The Chamber notes that the Prosecution has charged the Accused for the same crimes in both the current Indictment and the proposed Amended Indictment, namely, genocide, murder as a crime against humanity, and extermination as a crime against humanity. In both versions of the Indictment, the Prosecution has charged the Accused with individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute for all three counts. In the Chamber's view, although the Accused is being charged with individual criminal responsibility for his alleged direct participation in the crimes or for aiding and abetting others in the commission of a crime, the language of the proposed Amended Indictment still makes reference to the Accused's "authority over soldiers and armed civilians". This is ambiguous and could be interpreted as if the Prosecution is also charging the Accused with superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6 (3). The Chamber therefore calls on the Prosecution to clarify this ambiguity by explicitly indicating the forms of responsibility with which the Accused is being charged.

11. At the same time, the Chamber observes that the Prosecution alleges criminal conduct falling outside the Tribunal's temporal and territorial jurisdiction. At paragraphs 5 through 8 of the proposed Amended Indictment, for instance, there are repeated references to events that occurred prior to 1 January 1994. Unless such passages fall within the recognised and applicable exceptions, the Chamber will consider them as background or context material and not as substantive charges against the Accused. Similarly, at paragraph 23, there is a reference to an event that allegedly occurred in Switzerland in 1996. The Chamber urges the Prosecution to delete that passage as it refers to events falling outside both the temporal and territorial jurisdiction of the Tribunal. Additionally, the Chamber agrees with the Defence that the Indictment needs to specify which one of the several communal offices in Gitarama préfecture is referred to at paragraph 10 (iv) of the proposed Amended Indictment.

12. Moreover, it is alleged at paragraph 15 of the proposed Amended Indictment that the Accused "and other authorities" instigated and ordered militiamen to kill several persons and to commit other crimes. However, it is not clear who those "other authorities" might have been and if the Accused is being charged with a form of joint criminal enterprise. The Prosecution should clearly state what form of responsibility is being pleaded under paragraph 15 of the proposed Amended Indictment. In particular, the Prosecution should ensure that no new charge against the Accused is being introduced.

13. Furthermore, at paragraph 18 of the proposed Amended Indictment, the Accused is being charged with genocide for denouncing one Father Alphonse Mbuguje who was later killed. In the same paragraph, it is alleged that Kangura newspaper and radio RTLM also denounced Father Alphonse Mbugeje (sic) thereby causing his death. The same allegations are repeated at paragraph 25 under the murder charge. It remains unclear to the Chamber if it is the same victim who is mentioned in both instances and whether it was the denunciation by the Accused or by the media outlets that led to the death of the victim. The Chamber instructs the Prosecution to clarify this ambiguity.

14. In a similar vein, the Chamber notes that the Prosecution frequently uses different terms to refer to apparently the same venue. For example, the terms "petit séminaire" and "minor seminary" appear to refer to the same place while "grand séminaire" and "major seminary", or "Collège Saint Joseph" and "St. Joseph College" also seem to indicate the same venue. In the interests of clarity and uniformity, the Chamber urges the Prosecution to harmonise the names of the various locations throughout the Indictment.

15. In conclusion, the Chamber is satisfied that the proposed Amended Indictment does not amount to a substitution of the current Indictment, does not introduce any new charges against the Accused, contains no substantial changes in comparison to the current Indictment, sets forth the facts and allegations with greater particularity, and will not prejudice the rights of the Accused to a fair and expeditious trial.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS in part the Prosecution's request for leave to file an Amended Indictment and:

ORDERS the Prosecution to specify which communal office of Gitarama préfecture is referred to at paragraph 10 (iv) of the proposed Amended Indictment;

ORDERS the Prosecution to delete from the proposed Amended Indictment the reference to an event that allegedly occurred in Switzerland in 1996;

ORDERS the Prosecution to clarify the ambiguity surrounding the reference to the Accused's alleged "authority over soldiers and armed civilians" and the presumed existence of a superior-subordinate relationship;

ORDERS the Prosecution to clearly indicate the form of responsibility being pleaded at paragraph 15 and throughout the proposed Amended Indictment;

ORDERS the Prosecution to clarify the allegations contained at paragraphs 18 and 25 of the proposed Amended Indictment;

ORDERS the Prosecution to harmonise the names of the various locations referred to in the proposed Amended Indictment";

ORDERS the Prosecution to file a new Amended Indictment in French and English reflecting the above Orders no later than Friday, 6 October 2006;

FURTHER ORDERS the Registry to immediately serve the new Amended Indictment, in French and English, on the Accused and his Counsel.

Arusha, 28 September 2006.

Amended Indictment
6 October 2006 (ICTR-2001-70-I)

(Original : not specified)

I. The Prosecutor of the United Nations International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, ("the Prosecutor") pursuant to the authority stipulated in Article 17 of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda ("the Statute") charges:

Emmanuel Rukundo

With

Count 1 : Genocide

Count 2: Murder as a crime against humanity

Count 3 : Extermination as a crime against humanity

II. The Accused:

A. Emmanuel Rukundo was born in 1 December 1959, at Mukingi, Gitarama prefecture, Rwanda.

B. At all material times referred to in this indictment, Emmanuel Rukundo was a priest and military chaplain in the Rwandan Armed Forces (hereinafler, the "RAF"), as follows:

(i) He was ordained a priest on 28 July 1991, and served as parish priest in Kanyanza Parish, in Gitarama Prefecture.

(ii) He was appointed as military chaplain in the RAF in February 1993. In May 1993, he was posted to Ruhengeri and Gisenyi military sectors.

(iii) Relying on the authority due to his position as a priest and military chaplain in the RAF, Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted soldiers, interhamwe and armed civilians, variously, in Gitarama Prefecture, notably at the Gitarama commune office at Nyabikenke; the Bishop's office of the Diocese of Kabgayi, otherwise called L'évêché; Saint Léon Minor Seminary; a place called TRAFIPRO, and otherwise known as CND; Saint Joseph College; Kabgayi Major Seminary; and two primary schools and other facilities in Kabgayi, in which Tutsi refugees sought protection in April – July 1994, to commit the crimes that are described below in this indictment. Similarly, he ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted gendarmes to do a killing in Cyangugu Prefecture, as described below in this indictment.

III. Charges and Concise Statement of facts

1. At all times referred to in this indictment there existed in Rwanda a minority ethnic or racial group known as Tutsis, officially identified as such by the government. The majority of the population was comprised of an ethnic or racial group known as Hutus, also officially identified as such by the government.

2. During the course of 1994, particularly between 6 April and 17 July 1994, there were throughout Rwanda widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification. During the attacks soldiers, Interahamwe militia and armed civilians targeted and attacked Tutsis on the basis that they were Tutsis, with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi ethnic group as such. As a result of the attacks, there were a large number of deaths of persons of Tutsi ethnic identification.

Count 1: Genocide

The Prosecutor charges Emmanuel Rukundo with genocide, a crime stipulated in Article 2 (3) (a) of the Statute, in that from 6 April through 17 July 1994, in Rwanda, notably in Gitarama and Cyangugu Prefectures, Emmanuel Rukundo was responsible for killing or causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the Tutsi racial or ethnic group with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a racial or ethnic group, as such, as outlined in paragraphs 3 through 22 below.

Concise Statement of Facts for Count 1

Individual Criminal Responsibility

Pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, the accused, Emmanuel Rukundo, is individually responsible for the crime of genocide because he planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of this crime, with the object, purpose, and foreseeable outcome being the commission of genocide against the Tutsi racial or ethnic group, and persons identified as Tutsis, in Gitarama and Cyangugu Prefectures, Rwanda. With respect to the commission of this crime, Emmanuel Rukundo, relying on the authority due to his position as a priest and military chaplain in the RAF, ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted soldiers, armed civilians and the interahamwe militia, for at least the period of 6 April through 17 July 1994, to do the acts described below in this indictment. The particulars that give rise to his individual criminal responsibility are set forth in paragraphs 3 through 22 below.

3. Emmanuel Rukundo was known as an extremist. He hated the Tutsi. Since about 1973, he fought against his Tutsi colleagues at the Saint Léon Minor Seminary in Kabgayi. He was expelled from this seminary in 1973, because of his racist tendencies and was known to be sectarian at Nyakibanda Major Seminary, in Butare, by several clergy.

4. After the attack by the Rwandan Patriotic Front (hereinafter, "the RPF") in Rwanda, in October 1990, Emmanuel Rukundo, while at the Nyakibanda Major Seminary, created and led a group of extremists called Ngarukiragihugu to collect money to purchase ammunition and compose songs with extremist passions to support the RAF in fighting the RPF. At that time he swore that he would take to the bush if the RPF won the war.

5. In spite of his attitude, he was ordained a priest in July 1991, by Monsignor Thaddée Nsengiyumva, and was appointed as priest of Kanyanza Parish in Gitarama.

6. From 1990 through 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo showed hatred for Tutsi priests and systematically denounced them as accomplices of the Inkotanyi, saying that the Nyakibanda Major Seminary was a bastion of the Tutsi, and that it was difficult to live in such a milieu as a Hutu, and as one who would become a priest.

7. In particular, in the months of April and May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo denounced as an Inkotanyi one of his colleagues, the priest Alphonse Mbuguje, declaring him an Inyenzi collaborator who contributed in funding RPF-Inkotanyi activities.

8. In February 1993, Emmanuel Rukundo was appointed army chaplain in the RAF, a function he exercised during 1994. As army chaplain from 1993 through 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo dressed in military uniform, bore arms and had armed soldiers as his escort.

9. During February 1994, in reaction to the Arusha Agreements, Emmanuel Rukundo took the Hutu extremist position and was involved in the campaigns for mobilization of the Hutu against the Tutsi and at that time he stated that Tutsi are a people to destroy and that he must fight against them by all means.

10. Beginning after 6 April 1994, there were widespread and systematic attacks against the Tutsis in Gitarama Prefecture. During this time many Tutsis of this prefecture left their houses to seek refuge in different places in Kabgayi, including those under the control of the Diocese of Kabgayi, such as Saint Léon Minor Seminary, Saint Joseph College, Kabgayi Major Seminary, Gitarama Parish, a place named "TRAFIPRO", otherwise called "CND", and two primary schools and other facilities. Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the hunting down and killing of Tutsi refugees at these locations, notably as follows:

(i) In April 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo moved around in Gitarama, dressed in military uniform, armed with a pistol and an R4 rifle, and escorted by four or five soldiers. Sometime in this month, Emmanuel Rukundo went to Gitarama Parish hunting for the parish priest Father Juvenal Bamboneyeho, accusing him of hiding Tutsis in his parish and threatening that their days were numbered, meaning that Tutsis were all soon to be killed.

(ii) Between 12 and 15 April 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo, dressed in military uniform, armed and accompanied by soldiers, stopped at a roadblock around Imprimerie de Kabgayi, near the St. Léon Minor Seminary, to talk to and observe the activities of soldiers who were checking the identity cards of persons who passed through the roadblock. Several Tutsis were arrested by soldiers and interahamwe at this roadblock and killed nearby. Emmanuel Rukundo's presence at this roadblock provided encouragement to these soldiers and interahamwe to carry on with the killing of Tutsis at this location. Emmanuel Rukundo thus instigated or aided and abetted the killing of Tutsis at the Imprimerie de Kabgayi roadblock.

(iii) Between 12 and 15 April 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo brought soldiers to St. Joseph's College, Kabgayi, and ordered or instigated a search of Tutsi refugees purportedly having links with the Inkotanyi. During this period, the soldiers killed refugees, including Madame Rudahunga, who was killed at her home. The soldiers also took away Tutsi refugees, including two of Madame Rudahunga's children; a young man named Justin; and a young woman named Jeanne, all Tutsis, to the home of the Rudahungas, where they had killed Madame Rudahunga, and grievously beat the two children, Justin, and Jeanne with machetes and left them for dead. Emmanuel Rukundo, who was at the location at all material times, ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the killing of Madame Rudahunga and the causing of grievous bodily harm to her two children, and to Justin and Jeanne.

(iv) On or about 15 April 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo went to the Nyabikenke Commune office in Gitarama where several Tutsis had taken refuge and ordered or instigated policemen to shoot at Tutsi refugees at that location resulting in several deaths. By so doing, Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the killing of Tutsis at the Nyabikenke Commune office.

(v) On or about 16 April 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo, dressed in military uniform, armed, and escorted by armed soldiers, moved about the Bishop's house at Kabgayi, yelling and asking if any Tutsi or "Inkotanyi" were hiding there. As a result, Tutsi priests, fearing for their lives, went into hiding. By so doing, Emmanuel Rukundo caused Tutsis who had taken refuge at the Bishop's house at Kabgayi serious mental harm.

11. During the months of April and May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo went regularly to the Saint Léon Minor Seminary at Kabgayi and to the place named TRAFIPRO, otherwise called CND, as he hunted for Tutsis to kill. Emmanuel Rukundo was dressed in military uniform, armed and had a military escort, and was often accompanied by other soldiers and the interahamwe who committed killings of Tutsis at these two locations. His particular actions are described in paragraphs 12, 13, 14 and 15 below.

12. During the months of April and May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo visited the Saint Léon Minor Seminary, and identified Tutsi refugees, who were then taken away by soldiers and killed, and on one such occasion he had a list of names of Tutsi refugees to be killed, which list was used by soldiers and interahamwe who had accompanied him, to remove and kill the victims. By so doing, Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the killing of Tutsis at this location.

13. On diverse dates during the months of April and May 1 994, immediately following Emmanuel Rukundo's departure on several occasions from the Saint Léon Minor Seminary, soldiers and interahamwe militiamen, as ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted by him, beat, kicked and whipped Tutsi refugees who had not been taken away to be killed. By subjecting these Tutsis refugees to such brutality, Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the causing of serious bodily and mental harm to these victims.

14. On one occasion on or about 15 May 1994, at the Saint Léon Minor Seminary, Emmanuel Rukundo, armed and escorted by an armed solider, took a young Tutsi refugee woman into his room, locked the door, and sexually assaulted her. These acts of Emmanuel Rukundo caused her serious mental harm.

15. During the months of April and May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo went several times to a place in Kabgayi named "TRAFIPRO", or otherwise called "CND", to kill Tutsis. On some of these occasions, he was seen in the Company of authorities, including Prime Minister Jean Kambanda, Bishop Thaddée Nsengiyumva of Kabgayi, and others unknown to the Prosecutor. Very soon after each of these visits, soldiers and interahamwe militiamen, as ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted by Emmanuel Rukundo, came back to the CND and killed several Tutsi refugees, and took away other Tutsi refugees and killed or inflicted serious bodily or mental harm upon them.

16. On a date sometime in the period between about 7 April and the end of May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo led a group of armed soldiers to Gitarama Parish, Diocese of Kabgayi, Gitarama Prefecture, in search of Tutsi refugees to kill. When Emmanuel Rukundo did not find the Parish priest whom he accused of being an accomplice of the Inkotanyi, he threatened a Tutsi man whom he met, saying that the days of the "Inkotanyi" (meaning all Tutsis) were numbered. By so doing, Emmanuel Rukundo caused this Tutsi man serious mental harm.

17. On or about 14 May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo spoke to the Bernadine Sisters, in Nyarugenge secteur and commune in Kigali-Ville Prefecture, describing Father Alphonse Mbuguje, as an Inkotanyi and saying that his whereabouts were known and indicating that Father Alphonse Mbuguje would be killed. Father Alphonse Mbuguje was killed on 30 May 1994 by gendarmes in Cyangugu Prefecture. As noted in paragraph 7 above, Emmanuel Rukundo denounced this victim as an Inkotanyi to the authorities, and this denunciation contributed substantially to the killing of the victim. Emmanuel Rukundo thus instigated or aided and abetted the killing of Father Alphonse Mbuguje.

18. During the month of May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo went several times to the Kabgayi Major Seminary, and met the priests staying there, including some Tutsi priests, named Védaste Nyiribakwe, Célestin Niyonshuti, Tharcise Gakuba, and one named Callixte Musonera. He publicly stated, within the hearing of the Tutsi priests, that the Major Seminary was full of inyenzi meaning Tutsis, and that they all must be killed. By his conduct, Emmanuel Rukundo inflicted serious mental harm on the priests, to whom he had spoken.

19. On or about 24 May 1994, a group of soldiers and interahamwe, led by Emmanuel Rukundo, launched an attack on the Kabgayi Major Seminary. The attackers, using a list, called out, removed and took away about twenty Tutsi clergy men and women and two Tutsi lay persons from the Kabgayi Major Seminary and then killed them. By his conduct, Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the killing of these Tutsis.

20. On a date sometime in the second half of May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo went to the Bernadine sisters' convent in Nyarugenge secteur and commune in Kigali-Ville Prefecture, and told them that certain Tutsi clergy, including Father Felix Ntaganira, Father Niyonshuti Celestin, Father Tharcisse Gabuka, Father Callixte Musonera, Father Martin, and Sister Bénigne, had been killed. (In fact, Father Felix Ntaganira had escaped death.)

21. Emmanuel RUKUNDO left Rwanda after the defeat of the Rwanda army by the RPF in July 1994, and went into exile in Switzerland.

Count 2: Murder as a Crime against humanity.

The Prosecutor charges Emmanuel Rukundo with murder as a crime against humanity*, a crime stipulated in Article 3 (a) of the Statute*, in that from 6 April through 17 July 1994, in Gitarama and Cyangugu Prefectures, Rwanda, Emmanuel Rukundo is individually responsible for the murder of the persons identified in paragraphs 22 and 23 below as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds.

Concise Statement of Facts for Count 2

Pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, the accused, Emmanuel Rukundo, is individually responsible for the crime of murder as a crime against humanity, because he planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of this crime, with the object, purpose, and foreseeable outcome being the commission of crimes against humanity against the Tutsi racial or ethnic group or persons identified as Tutsi in Gitarama and Cyangugu Prefectures, Rwanda, on racial, ethnic or political grounds. With respect to the commission of this crime, Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted soldiers, armed civilians and interahamwe for at least the period of 6 April through 17 July 1994, to do the acts described below. The particulars that give rise to his individual criminal responsibility are set forth in paragraphs 22 through 23 below.

22. Between 12 and 15 April 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo brought soldiers to St. Joseph's College, Kabgayi, and ordered or instigated a search of Tutsi refugees purportedly having links with the Inkotanyi. The soldiers took away Madame Rudahunga and shot and killed her at her home. Emmanuel Rukundo, who was at the location at al1 material times, ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the killing of Madame RUDAHUNGA, a Tutsi.

23. On or about 14 May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo spoke to the Bernadine Sisters, in Nyarugenge secteur and commune in Kigali-Ville Prefecture, describing Father Alphonse Mbuguje, as an Inkotanyi and saying that his whereabouts were known and indicating that Father Alphonse Mbuguje would be killed. Father Alphonse Mbuguje was killed on 30 May 1994 by gendarmes in Cyangugu Prefecture. As noted in paragraph 7 above, Emmanuel Rukundo denounced this victim as an Inkotanyi to the authorities, and this denunciation contributed substantially to the killing of the victim. Emmanuel Rukundo thus instigated or aided and abetted the killing of Father Alphonse Mbuguje.

Count 3: Extermination as a crime against humanity

The Prosecutor charges Emmanuel Rukundo with extermination as a crime against humanity, a crime stipulated in Article 3 (b) of the Statute, in that from 6 April through 17 July 1994, in Gitarama and Cyangugu Prefectures, Rwanda, Emmanuel Rukundo was individually criminally responsible for extermination as part of a widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds, as outlined in paragraphs 24 though 30 below.

Concise Statement of Facts for Count 3

Individual Criminal Responsibility

Pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, the accused, Emmanuel Rukundo is individually responsible for the crime of extermination as a crime against humanity, because he planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of this crime. With respect to the commission of this crime, Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted soldiers, armed civilians and interahamwe for at least the period of 6 April through 17 July 1994, in Gitarama and Cyangugu Prefectures, Rwanda, to do the acts described in paragraphs 24 through 30 below. The particulars that give rise to his individual criminal responsibility are set forth in paragraphs 24 though 30 below.

24. During February 1994, in reaction to the Arusha Agreements, Emmanuel Rukundo took the Hutu extremist position and was involved in the campaigns for mobilization of the Hutu against the Tutsi and at that time he stated that Tutsi are a people to destroy and that he must fight against them by all means.

25. Beginning after 6 April 1994, there were widespread and systematic attacks against the Tutsis in Gitarama Prefecture. During this time many Tutsis of this prefecture left their houses to seek refuge in different places in Kabgayi, including those under the control of the Diocese of Kabgayi, such as Saint Léon Minor Seminary, Saint Joseph College, Kabgayi Major Seminary, Gitarama Parish, a place named "TRAFIPRO", otherwise called "CND", and two primary schools and other facilities. Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the hunting down and killing of Tutsi refugees at these locations, notably as follows:

(i) In April 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo moved around in Gitarama, dressed in military uniform, armed with a pistol and an R4 rifle, and escorted by four or five soldiers. Sometime in this month, Emmanuel Rukundo went to Gitarama Parish hunting for the parish priest Father Juvenal Bamboneyeho, accusing him of hiding Tutsis in his parish and threatening that their days were numbered, meaning that Tutsis were all soon to be killed.

(ii) Between 12 and 15 April 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo, dressed in military uniform, armed and accompanied by soldiers, stopped at a roadblock around Imprimerie de Kabgayi, near the St. Léon Minor Seminary, to talk to and observe the activities of soldiers who were checking the Identity cards of persons who passed through the roadblock. Several Tutsis were arrested by soldiers and interahamwe at this roadblock and killed nearby. Emmanuel Rukundo's presence at this roadblock provided encouragement to these soldiers and interahamwe to carry on with the killing of Tutsis at this location. Emmanuel Rukundo thus instigated or aided and abetted the killing of Tutsis at the Imprimerie de Kabgayi roadblock.

(iii) Between 12 and 15 April 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo brought soldiers to St. Joseph's College, Kabgayi, and ordered or instigated a search of Tutsi refugees purportedly having links with the Inkotanyi. During this period, the soldiers killed refugees, including Madame Rudahunga, who was killed at her home. The soldiers also took away Tutsi refugees, including two of Madame Rudahunga's children; a young man named Justin; and a young woman named Jeanne, all Tutsis, to the home of the Rudahungas, where they had killed Madame Rudahunga, and grievously beat the two children, Justin, and Jeanne with machetes and left them for dead. Emmanuel Rukundo, who was at the location at all material times, ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the killing of Madame Rudahunga and the causing of grievous bodily harm to her two children, and to Justin and Jeanne.

(iv) On or about 15 April 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo went to the Nyabikenke Commune office in Gitarama where several Tutsis had taken refuge and ordered or instigated policemen to shoot at Tutsi refugees at that location resulting in several deaths. By so doing, Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the killing of Tutsis at the Nyabikenke Commune office.

(v) On or about 16 April 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo, dressed in military uniform, armed, and escorted by armed soldiers, moved about the Bishop's house at Kabgayi, yelling and asking if any Tutsi or "Inkotanyi" were hiding there. As a result, Tutsi priests, fearing for their lives, went into hiding. By so doing, Emmanuel Rukundo caused Tutsis who had taken refuge at the Bishop's house at Kabgayi serious mental harm.

26. During the months of April and May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo went regularly to the Saint Léon Minor Seminary, Kabgayi Major Seminar, and to the place named TRAFIPRO, otherwise called CND, as he hunted for Tutsis to kill. Emmanuel Rukundo was dressed in military uniform, armed and had a military escort, and was often accompanied by other soldiers and the interahamwe who committed killings of Tutsis at these two locations. His particular actions are described in paragraphs 27, 28, 29 and 30 below.

27. During the months of April and May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo visited the Saint Léon Minor Seminary, and identified Tutsi refugees, who were then taken away by soldiers and killed, and on one such occasion he had a list of names of Tutsi refugees to be killed, which list was used by soldiers and Interahamwe who had accompanied him, to remove and kill the victims. By so doing, Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the killing of Tutsis at this location.

28. During the month of May 1994, Emmanuel Rukundo went several times to the Kabgayi Major Seminary, and met the priests staying there, including some Tutsi priests, named Védaste Nytribakwe, Célestin Niyonshuti, Tharcisse Gabuka, and one named Callixte Musonera. He publicly stated, within the hearing of the Tutsi priests, that the Major Seminary was full of Inyenzi meaning Tutsis, and that they all must be killed. By his conduct, Emmanuel Rukundo inflicted serious mental harm on the priests, to whom he had spoken.

29. On or about 24 May 1994, a group of soldiers and Interahamwe, led by Emmanuel Rukundo, launched an attack on the Kabgayi Major Seminary. The attackers, using a list, called out, removed and took away about twenty Tutsi clergy men and women and two Tutsi lay persons from the Kabgayi Major Seminary and then killed them. By his conduct, Emmanuel Rukundo ordered, instigated, or aided and abetted the killing of these Tutsis.

(In fact, Father Felix Ntaganira had escaped death.)

The acts and omissions of Emmanuel Rukundo detailed herein are punishable pursuant to Articles 22 and 23 of the Statute of the Tribunal.

I.C.T.R.: Trial Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Emmanuel Rukundo, Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Protective Measures for Victims and Witnesses, 24 October 2002 (ICTR-2001-70)

Introduction

1. By its decision of 24 October 2002, Trial Chamber III granted protective measures to prosecution witnesses and victims residing in Rwanda and neighbouring countries. The Chamber denied protective measures for witnesses not living in Rwanda or neighbouring countries on the ground that the Prosecution failed to provide evidence of threats to their lives or to offer any explanation to justify their protection.[1] On 15 November 2006, the trial against Emmanuel Rukundo commenced. On 20 November 2006, the Prosecution filed a "Motion for Variation of Protective Measures for Witness CSH." The Prosecution submits that due to security concerns, and in order to avoid being identified by other witnesses, Witness CSH has indicated that he would only travel from Kigali to Arusha by way of commercial flight, that while in Arusha, he will not share accommodation with other witnesses at the UN-ICTR "Safe House", and further, that he is only willing to testify in closed session.

Deliberations

2. The Chamber will determine the request for closed session testimony upon oral application made by the Prosecution at the commencement of Witness CSH's testimony.

3. The Chamber considers that the remaining two orders sought by the Prosecution directly relate to the safe transportation and secure accommodation of Witness CSH, and that these are matters of an operational or logistical nature, which fall squarely within the competence of the Witnesses and Victims Support Section (WVSS). The Chamber's Decision on protective measures contemplates that

[1] The Prosecutor v. Emmanuel Rukundo, "Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion for Protective Measures for Victims and Witnesses", 24 October 2002, para. 16.

WVSS is fully competent to make judgements on the fine details relating to the day-to-day management of witnesses while in Arusha, as well as their mode of transportation to and from the Tribunal.

4. Furthermore, Rule 34 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence empowers the WVSS, under the authority if the Registrar, to recommend the adoption of protective measures for victims and witnesses.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Motion;

DIRECTS the Prosecution to bring this matter to the attention of the WVSS, who may recommend to the Registrar the adoption of necessary and appropriate measures for the safe travel and secure accommodation of Witness CSH while in Arusha, taking into account the security concerns expressed by the witness.

Introduction

1. On 13 November 2006, the Prosecution filed a Motion for the Trial Chamber to take Judicial Notice of Facts of Common Knowledge pursuant to Rule 94 (A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. The Defence did not file a Response.

2. The Prosecution identifies the following six facts and submits that they were recognised by the Appeals Chamber as facts of common knowledge within the meaning of Rule 94 (A):[1]

(i) Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994, genocide against the Tutsi ethnic group occurred in Rwanda;

(ii) Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994, citizens native to Rwanda were severally identified according to the following ethnic classifications: Hutu, Tutsi, Twa;

(iii) Between 6 April 1994 and 17 July 1994, throughout Rwanda, there were widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification. During the attacks, some Rwandan citizens killed or caused serious bodily or mental harm to persons perceived to be Tutsi. As a result of the attacks, there were a large number of deaths of persons of Tutsi ethnic identity;

(iv) Between 6 April and 17 July 1994, there was an armed conflict in Rwanda that was not of an international character;

(v) Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, Rwanda was a State Party to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (1948), having acceded to it on 16 April 1975;

(vi) Between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, Rwanda was a State Party to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and their Additional Protocol II of 8 June 1977, having acceded to the Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949 on 5 May 1964 and having acceded to Protocols Additional thereto of 1977 on 19 November 1984.

3. The Prosecution further submits that based on the Appeals Chamber's holding in respect of these six facts, the Trial Chamber shall not require that evidence be led to prove their existence and is bound to take judicial notice of them.

Deliberations

4. The Chamber has reviewed Rule 94 (A), the Judgement of the Appeals Chamber in Semanza, and the Decision on the Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal on Judicial Notice rendered in the case of Karemera et al.[2]

5. The Chamber notes that Rule 94 (A) imposes a mandatory requirement. This implies that once a certain fact is determined to be so notorious as not to be subject to reasonable dispute, it qualifies as a fact of common knowledge thereby dispensing with the need to lead evidence to prove its existence. With respect to such facts, the Trial Chamber's broad discretion under Rule 89 (C) to admit evidence which it deems to have probative value, is superseded by the specific, binding provision contained in Rule 94 (A).[3]

6. The Trial Chamber further notes that the practice of taking judicial notice of facts of common knowledge is well-established both under domestic and international criminal law, and that it is neither inconsistent with the presumption of innocence contained in Article 20 (3) of the Statute, nor does it relieve the Prosecution of its burden to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused is guilty of the specific criminal conduct alleged in the Indictment. Rather, taking judicial notice provides an alternative way of discharging the Prosecution's burden by obviating the need to lead evidence on

[1] The Prosecution relies on Laurent Semanza v. The Prosecutor, Judgement (A.C.), 20th May 2005; and The Prosecutor v. E. Karemera et al, "Decision on the Prosecutor's Interlocutory Appeal of Decision on Judicial Notice", 16 June 2006.

[3] Karemera et al. ; Decision on Judicial Notice", supra, para. 23.

facts of common knowledge.[4] In this manner, the doctrine of judicial notice advances judicial economy.

7. The Chamber notes that in the Semanza Judgement, the Appeals Chamber confirmed the Trial Chamber's finding taking judicial notice of the fact that between April and July 1994, Rwandan citizens were classified by ethnic group; that widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification occurred during that time; that between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, there was an armed conflict not of an international character in Rwanda; that on 16 April 1975, Rwandan became a State Party to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (1948); and that between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, Rwanda was a state party to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and their Additional Protocol II of 8 July 1977.[5]

8. The Chamber further notes that in the Karemera et al. Decision, the Appeals Chamber affirmed the Trial Chamber's holding taking judicial notice of "the existence of the Twa, Tutsi, and Hutu as protected groups falling under the Genocide Convention" and reasoned that when compared to the formulation in the Semanza Appeal Judgement, the Trial Chamber's formulation of this fact equally, or even more clearly, relieves the Prosecution's burden to introduce evidence proving protected-group status under the Genocide Convention.[6]

9. With respect to genocide, the Chamber recalls the reasoning of the Appeals Chamber in the Karemera et al. Decision that the fact that genocide took place in Rwanda in 1994 is now "a part of world history", that it is "a classic instance of a 'fact of common knowledge'", and that its notoriety is confirmed by various United Nations documents, by the Security Council resolution establishing the Tribunal, various government and non-governmental reports on the situation in Rwanda in 1994, multiple Appellate and Trial Chamber Judgements of the Tribunal, as well as countless books, articles, and media reports.[7] The occurrence of genocide in Rwanda in 1994 is therefore not subject to reasonable dispute and thus qualifies for judicial notice under Rule 94 (A).

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the Prosecution Motion; and TAKES judicial notice of fact (i), (iii), (iv), (v), and (vi) as formulated under paragraph 1 above. With respect to fact (ii), takes judicial notice that between 1 January 1994 and 17 July 1994, the Twa, Tutsi, and Hutu existed in Rwanda as protected groups falling under the Genocide Convention.

I.C.T.Y.: Trial Chamber, The Prosecutor v. Slobodan Milošević, Second Decision on Prosecution Motion for Protective Measures for Sensitive Source Witnesses, 18 June 2002 (IT-02-54)

Introduction

1. By decision of 24 October 2002, Trial Chamber III granted protective measures to Prosecution witnesses and victims residing in Rwanda and neighbouring countries. The Chamber denied protective measures for witnesses not living in Rwanda or neighbouring countries on the ground that the Prosecution failed to provide evidence of threats to their lives or to offer any explanation to justify their protection.[3701] On 15 November 2006, the trial against Emmanuel Rukundo commenced. On 21 November 2006, the Prosecution filed a "Motion for Protective Measures for Witnesses CCF, CCJ, BLC, BLS and BLJ." The Prosecution notes that these witnesses live in Europe and are therefore not covered by the protective measures granted by the Decision on protective measures dated 24 October 2004.[3702]

Deliberations

2. The Chamber recalls that Article 21 of the Statute empowers the Tribunal to make rules for the protection of victims and witnesses and provides that protective measures may include the conduct of in camera proceedings and the protection of personal identity. Rule 54 gives the Chamber a general power to issue orders necessary for the conduct of a trial; Rule 69 provides that either party may apply to the Chamber to order non-disclosure of the identity of witnesses who may be in danger or at risk. Finally, Rule 75 stipulates the power of the Chamber to order measures appropriate for the privacy or security of witnesses, and states that such measures must be consistent with the rights of the accused.

3. The Chamber recalls the jurisprudence of the Tribunal and of the ICTY that to justify the grant of protective measures on the basis of fear for the security of potential witnesses or members of their family, the witness' subjective expressions of fear must be underscored by objective considerations.[3703] In other words, the fears expressed by potential witnesses are not in themselves sufficient to establish a real likelihood that they may be in danger or at risk.[3704] In the practice of the Tribunal, the moving party has demonstrated such objective basis through affidavits attesting to the state of insecurity in the witness' place of residence, the presence at such place of individuals either related to, friends with, or otherwise supportive of the accused, or other circumstances demonstrating that if the identity of the witness(es) and the fact that they may testify before the Tribunal are known, such witness(es) may face danger to their lives or to the lives of their family members.

4. The Chamber notes the Prosecution statement that it has requested the WVSS to obtain the details of the security concerns of the relevant witnesses and that it will submit this information in due course. At the same time, the Prosecution seeks to rely on the supporting material annexed to its Motion for protective measures filed in 2002. The Chamber recalls that in deciding that Motion, Trial Chamber III reviewed the affidavit and other documents annexed to the Motion and concluded that while they show that a volatile security situation existed in Rwanda and neighbouring countries thereby justifying the grant of protective measures to witnesses living in those areas, the supporting material did not contain any evidence to show that witnesses not living in Rwanda and neighbouring countries faced threats to their lives. The Chamber further noted that the Prosecution failed to give any other explanation why protective measures should be granted to this category of witnesses under Rule 75.

5. The Chamber has again reviewed the material annexed to the Prosecution Motion of 2002 and concludes that it relates to insecurity and potential threats faced by witnesses and victims in Rwanda and the Great Lakes region. It does not address the situation of witnesses living outside those areas. By seeking to rely on the same supporting material in this Motion for protective measures for witnesses living in Belgium, France, Italy and Sweden, the Prosecution essentially calls upon the Chamber to engage in judicial speculation about the security situation of these witnesses. Such a course of action would be inapposite for the Trial Chamber.

6. The Chamber notes the Prosecution argument that certain trial chambers have granted protective measures for witnesses residing outside Rwanda and neighbouring countries on the ground that the same security situation would affect any potential witness even if residing outside of the Region.[3705] The Chamber considers that such decisions are explicable on their own particular facts and circumstances, and by no means lay down principles of general application.

7. The Chamber wishes to remind the Prosecution of its obligation to provide the Chamber with all the material necessary for it to make a reasoned decision. Witness protective measures are matters of great importance to the Tribunal requiring trial chambers to carefully weigh the dangers to prospective witnesses with a view to ensuring the highest levels of protection, without compromising the rights of the Accused to receive all information necessary to mount an effective defence. Such a balancing exercise cannot be done in a vacuum. The Chamber concludes that the Prosecution has failed to demonstrate an objective basis for the fears allegedly expressed by Witnesses CCF, CCJ, BLC, BLS and BLJ. The Motion, as currently presented, must therefore fail.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

DENIES the Motion.

28. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized with five requests, filed by Georges Rutaganda ("Mr. Rutaganda").

I. Background

29. In its Judgement of 26 May 2003, the Appeals Chamber confirmed Mr. Rutaganda's convictions for genocide and extermination as a crime against humanity, entered an additional conviction for serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions, and upheld his sentence of life imprisonment.[3706] In upholding the convictions of the Trial Chamber, the Appeals Chamber affirmed the Trial Chamber's findings that Mr. Rutaganda distributed weapons and aided and abetted killings in Cyahafi sector; ordered, committed, and aided and abetted in crimes committed in the area of the Amgar garage; participated in the massacres at École Technique Officiel ("ETO"); and participated in the forced diversion of refugees to Nyanza and the subsequent massacre there.[3707]

30. On 13 April 2006, Mr. Rutaganda filed a consolidated motion containing a request for reconsideration, review, and for assignment of counsel.[3708] The Prosecution filed a Consolidated

Response[3709] to the Request for Reconsideration, Request for Review, and Request for Assignment of Counsel on 23 May 2006, and Mr. Rutaganda filed a Consolidated Reply on 7 June 2006.[3710] In addition, on 17 August 2006, Mr. Rutaganda filed a Request for Disclosure,[3711] and the Prosecution filed its Response to the Request for Disclosure on 28 August 2006.[3712] Mr. Rutaganda filed his Reply to the Request for Disclosure on 8 September 2006.[3713]

31. In addition, on 26 October 2006, Mr. Rutaganda filed a Request for Clarification.[3714] The Prosecution filed a Response on 1 November 2006,[3715] and Mr. Rutaganda replied on 13 November 2006.[3716]

II. Discussion

A. Requests for Reconsideration and Clarification

32. In his Request for Reconsideration, Mr. Rutaganda requests the Appeals Chamber to reconsider its Judgement, arguing that the Appeals Chamber erred in its treatment of his arguments challenging the Trial Chamber's findings on: (1) his role in distributing weapons in connection with the killings in Cyahafi sector; (2) his role in the detention and killing of Tutsis at Amgar garage; and (3) his "humanitarian acts" which negate his genocidal intent and mitigate his sentence.[3717] In making this request, Mr. Rutaganda invokes the Appeals Chamber's inherent jurisdiction to reconsider its decisions in order to prevent manifest injustice.[3718]

33. While Mr. Rutaganda seeks to rely upon the Appeals Chamber's inherent power to reconsider its own decisions, that power does not extend to final judgements. This limitation on the power of reconsideration was clearly established by the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia in the Zigić Reconsideration Decision[3719] and followed by this Appeals

Chamber in the Niyitegeka Reconsideration Decision.[3720] In his Request for Clarification, Mr. Rutaganda argues that this precedent should not be applied to his case as to do so would be a retroactive application of law.[3721] The Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that Mr. Rutaganda's argument constitutes cogent reasons in the interest of justice for the Appeals Chamber to depart from the jurisprudence established in the Niyitegeka case.[3722] Existing procedures for appeal and review set forth in the Statute provide sufficient safeguards for due process and fair trial.[3723] Accordingly, Mr. Rutaganda's Request for Reconsideration and Request for Clarification are dismissed.

B. Request for Review

34. In his Request for Review, Mr. Rutaganda asks the Appeals Chamber for review of his final judgement based on several alleged new facts, which he claims undermine his convictions and his sentence.[3724] He submits alleged new facts related to the events in Cyahafi sector and near the Amgar garage, the findings of the Trial Chamber relating to his genocidal intent, and his sentence. With respect to his convictions for other events, including the massacres at ETO and in Nyanza, Mr. Rutaganda asks the Appeals Chamber to draw inferences from the alleged errors highlighted in his submissions that his convictions on the basis of those events are also questionable, and indicates his intent to file further requests for review when additional new facts are discovered.[3725]

1. Standard of Review

35. Review proceedings are governed by Article 25 of the Statute and Rules 120 and 121 of the Rules. Review of a final judgement is an exceptional procedure and is not meant to provide an additional opportunity for a party to remedy its failings at trial or on appeal.[3726] Review may be granted only when the moving party satisfies the following cumulative criteria: (1) there is a new fact; (2) the new fact was not known to the moving party at the time of the original proceedings; (3) the lack of discovery of that new fact was not the result of lack of due diligence by the moving party; and (4) the new fact could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.[3727] In wholly exceptional circumstances, the Appeals Chamber may grant review, even where the second or third criteria are not satisfied, if ignoring the new fact would result in a miscarriage of justice.[3728]

36. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a "new fact" refers to new information of an evidentiary nature of a fact that was not in issue during the trial or appeal proceedings.[3729] By the phrase "not in issue", the Appeals Chamber has held that "it must not have been among the factors that the deciding

2. Alleged New Facts relating to Cyahafi Sector

37. The Trial Chamber convicted Mr. Rutaganda, in part, for his role in distributing weapons to Interahamwe on 8, 15, and 24 April 1994 in Cyahafi sector.[3732] Mr. Rutaganda's role in distributing weapons and the subsequent attacks in Cyahafi sector forms part of his conviction for genocide and extermination as a crime against humanity.[3733] Mr. Rutaganda appealed the findings related to the distribution of weapons, challenging the notice provided in the Indictment for three separate incidents of weapons distribution as well as the credibility of witnesses.[3734] The Appeals Chamber rejected Mr. Rutaganda's ground of appeal against the Trial Chamber's factual findings.[3735]

38. In his Request for Review, Mr. Rutaganda points to several alleged new facts that came to light in a trial judgement of a Rwandan court in the case of Théogène Rutayisire ("Rutayisire Judgement") which, in his view, could have been a decisive factor in his case with respect to the three incidents of weapons distribution on 8, 15, and 24 April 1994 and the subsequent attacks in Cyahafi sector.[3736] The alleged new facts arising from the Rutayisire Judgement relate to the factual findings on the events in Cyahafi sector and the credibility of the witnesses in Mr. Rutaganda's case.

(a) Alleged New Facts Related to the Factual Findings on the Events in Cyahafi Sector

39. Mr. Rutaganda submits that the Rutayisire Judgement concerns the same events as considered in his case related to the Cyahafi sector but provides a starkly different account than his trial judgement of how and when these events unfolded and of who spearheaded them.[3737] According to Mr. Rutaganda, the Rutayisire Judgement refers to a single distribution of weapons and attack on 16 April 1994, and places blame for this on Michel Haragirimana, the former conseiller of Cyahafi sector.[3738] Furthermore, Mr. Rutaganda points to witness testimonies cited in the Rutayisire Judgement, which do not mention him distributing weapons in Cyahafi sector or the following attacks for which he was convicted.[3739]

40. The Rutayisire Judgement and the allegation that its factual findings are inconsistent with the findings of the Trial Chamber do not warrant review. In its Judgement, the Appeals Chamber considered and rejected Mr. Rutaganda's claim that only one distribution and attack occurred in Cyahafi sector in April 1994.[3740] Moreover, Mr. Rutaganda concedes that throughout his trial he maintained that local authorities were responsible for the distribution of weapons in Cyahafi sector.[3741] Though the Rutayisire Judgement was not before the Trial Chamber or the Appeals Chamber, the alleged factual errors in the Trial Chamber's Judgement, which Mr. Rutaganda claims are illustrated by it, were considered or could have been taken into account in rendering the verdict. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber does not consider the witnesses' alleged failures to discuss Mr. Rutaganda's activities in a separate trial involving a different accused to constitute new facts for the purposes of review. As the Appeals Chamber has previously stated, "to suggest that if something were true a witness would have included it in a statement or a confession letter is obviously speculative and, in general, it cannot substantiate a claim that a Trial Chamber erred in assessing the witness's credibility."[3742] Accordingly, these alleged factual inconsistencies do not constitute new facts which would allow review.

(b) Alleged New Facts Related to Witness Credibility

41. Mr. Rutaganda first points to alleged material inconsistencies between the accounts of Witnesses T, J, and AA, whose evidence underlies his conviction for these events, and their apparent statements before Rwandan authorities in the Rutayisire case.[3743] Mr. Rutaganda notes that, unlike in his trial, these witnesses implicated Théogène Rutayisire rather than him as the head of the Interahamwe and for distributing weapons and directing the attacks.[3744]

42. Second, Mr. Rutaganda refers to other credibility issues which surface from the Rutayisire Judgement, including findings on the general lack of credibility of these three witnesses, the possible perjury of Witnesses J and AA, and the possible role these two witnesses played in the crimes. In particular, Mr. Rutaganda notes that the Rutayisire Judgement held the testimony of these individuals to be contradictory and unreliable.[3745] Furthermore, Mr. Rutaganda highlights that in his case, Witnesses J and AA denied providing testimony before any other authority involving him or the crimes in Cyahafi sector.[3746] Mr. Rutaganda notes, however, that the Rutayisire Judgement reflects that these witnesses provided pro justitia statements to Rwandan authorities prior to their testimony in his case before the Tribunal.[3747] Finally, Mr. Rutaganda submits that the Rutayisire Judgement reveals that Witnesses J and AA were part of a crime syndicate during the period relevant to Mr. Rutaganda's convictions and thus were accomplices whose testimony should have been viewed with caution.[3748]

43. The Appeals Chamber notes that Mr. Rutaganda's arguments pertain to witness credibility, which was heavily litigated throughout the proceedings in his case.[3749] Nonetheless, the Prosecution does not dispute that the points raised by Mr. Rutaganda related to witness credibility are new facts or that he lacked awareness of them during the original proceedings. Rather it takes issue with Mr. Rutaganda's diligence in raising these matters and further asserts that none of these points could have impacted the outcome in his case.[3750] Additionally, it argues that the findings in the Rutayisire case are not binding on the Tribunal and that Mr. Rutaganda's assertion that Witnesses J and AA committed perjury is not supported by a review of the record.[3751]

44. In assessing the credibility of Witnesses T, J, and AA, the Trial Chamber and, subsequently the Appeals Chamber, were not aware that these witnesses apparently gave such statements to Rwandan authorities on the distribution of weapons and the criminal responsibility for attacks in Cyahafi sector. Therefore, these statements were not in issue during the trial or appeals proceedings, and thus constitute new facts. The Appeals Chamber also accepts that Mr. Rutaganda was not aware of these statements during the original proceedings given his undisputed submissions that he only recently discovered the Rutayisire Judgement.[3752]

45. Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that Mr. Rutaganda acted with the requisite diligence in discovering and bringing these issues forward. Mr. Rutaganda explains that he became aware of the Rutayisire Judgement only by chance when reviewing a volume of Rwandan trial judgements.[3753] Mr. Rutaganda submits that he could not have obtained the judgement earlier given security concerns, which prevented his counsel from undertaking investigations in Rwanda.[3754] Moreover, he notes that the Prosecution would have been fully aware of the Rutayisire case given the overlap in witnesses and events, and that it thus failed to disclose this information to him, preventing him from learning about it sooner.[3755]

46. The Appeals Chamber does not find Mr. Rutaganda's explanation concerning his diligence convincing. The Rwandan trial court conducted proceedings in the Rutayisire case from January 1998 and pronounced its judgement on 22 February 1999.[3756] At this same time, Mr. Rutaganda was engaged in trial proceedings before this Tribunal.[3757] The Rwandan trial court rendered the Rutayisire Judgement almost ten months before Mr. Rutaganda's trial judgement and nearly three and a half years before the Appeals Chamber heard oral arguments in his appellate proceedings.[3758] Mr. Rutaganda's explanation that security concerns prevented his counsel from traveling to Rwanda is both unsupported and unpersuasive. To the extent that there is any validity to Mr. Rutaganda's claims, it was incumbent on his counsel to request a stay of the proceedings until appropriate arrangements could have been made to undertake any necessary investigations in Rwanda. In other words, Mr. Rutaganda had the burden to exhaust all measures afforded by the Statute and Rules to obtain the presentation of this evidence.[3759] Mr. Rutaganda has not demonstrated that he has done so. At this late stage, the Appeals Chamber will not accept a claim that unspecified security concerns rendered the possible credibility issues arising from the Rutayisire case undiscoverable or inaccessible despite an exercise of due diligence. Moreover, Mr. Rutaganda has not demonstrated that the Prosecution was in possession or even aware of the Rutayisire Judgement.

47. In addition, the Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that this case presents wholly exceptional circumstances warranting review. In light of the finding of lack of due diligence, the Appeals Chamber may grant review only if ignoring the new facts would result in a miscarriage of justice.[3760] In this case, the Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that the Rutayisire Judgement can definitively establish the credibility issues advanced by Mr. Rutaganda. First, the Rutayisire Judgement results from a separate proceeding against a different accused.[3761] Second, the pre-trial statements, which these witnesses apparently provided to the Rwandan authorities, are only alluded to in the Rutayisire Judgement and are not relied upon as establishing its findings. As Mr. Rutaganda notes, the three witnesses did not in fact appear as witnesses in the Rutayisire case.[3762]

[3757] Mr. Rutaganda first appeared before the Tribunal on 30 May 1996. His trial opened on 18 March 1997. The defence case commenced on 8 February 1999. His trial ended on 17 June 1999. See Rutaganda Trial Judgement, paras 7, 8, 11; Rutaganda Appeal Judgement, para. 5.

[3762] Consolidated Request, para. 180. The Prosecution, however, seems to suggests that Witness T in fact appeared at the trial in Rwanda. See Consolidated Response, para. 129. The Prosecution's contention, however, does not appear to be supported by the text of the Rutayisire Judgement.

48. Moreover, even assuming that the Rutayisire Judgement could cast sufficient doubt on the evidence of Witnesses T, J, and AA, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that this would disturb the finding of Mr. Rutaganda's culpability for the distribution of weapons and subsequent attacks in Cyahafi sector. First, the Trial Chamber did not rely on the evidence of Witness AA in making findings on these events. Moreover, the testimonies of Witnesses J and T underlie the findings for the distributions of weapons on 15 and 24 April 1994, respectively.[3763] The Trial Chamber did not rely on any of these impugned witnesses, however, in support of its findings that Mr. Rutaganda distributed weapons on 8 April 1994[3764] and thus, the findings for this event would remain undisturbed. Second, the Appeals Chamber considers that Mr. Rutaganda's conviction and life sentence equally and independently rest on his role in the massacres at ETO and in Nyanza, which do not rely on the evidence of these witnesses. In particular, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it declined to revisit Mr. Rutaganda's life sentence, after quashing a conviction of murder in his appeal, noting in particular the gravity of the events in Nyanza alone.[3765] Therefore, granting review based on the alleged credibility issues related to Witnesses T, J, and AA relating to the distributions of weapons and attacks in Cyahafi sector would not alter the findings related to Mr. Rutaganda's role in the attacks at ETO and in Nyanza and, ultimately, his convictions and life sentence for genocide, crimes against humanity, and serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions.

49. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Mr. Rutaganda's Request for Review based on the new facts related to the events in Cyahafi sector.

3. Alleged New Facts Related to the Amgar Garage

50. The Trial Chamber convicted Mr. Rutaganda for genocide and crimes against humanity, in part, based on his role in the detention and killing of Tutsis in the vicinity of his offices at the Amgar garage.[3766] Mr. Rutaganda appealed these findings, primarily challenging the Trial Chamber's assessment of the underlying evidence of Witnesses Q, T, and BB.[3767] The Appeals Chamber rejected Mr. Rutaganda's appeal.[3768]

51. Mr. Rutaganda seeks review of his convictions based again on alleged new facts arising from the Rutayisire Judgement, which he submits could have been decisive in considering the factual findings for the events related to Amgar garage.[3769] In particular, Mr. Rutaganda points to the credibility issues impacting Witnesses T and AA, as discussed above.[3770] He also notes that no witness in the Rutayisire case, despite proximity and familiarity with the area, mentions the killing of Tutsis near the Amgar garage or Mr. Rutaganda's responsibility for crimes committed in that area.[3771]

52. In addition, Mr. Rutaganda points to affidavits supplied by Mr. Amadou Démé, a former intelligence officer with the United Nations Assistance Mission in Rwanda ("UNAMIR"),[3772] according to which the Amgar garage appeared to be an ordinary place of business.[3773] Mr. Rutaganda notes that Mr. Démé's observations concerning the Amgar garage further call into question the credibility of witness accounts about the crimes which occurred there.[3774]

[3763] Rutaganda Trial Judgement, paras 176-180, 193, 197, 199.
[3764] The distribution of weapons on 8 April 1994 is based on the evidence of Witness U. Rutaganda Trial Judgement, paras 188-192, 198. Moreover, the Trial Chamber also noted the evidence of Witness Q, which it found reliable, who testified that it was common knowledge that Mr. Rutaganda distributed weapons. Rutaganda Trial Judgement, paras 194, 195.
[3765] See Rutaganda Appeal Judgement, para. 592. In particular, the Appeals Chamber recalled that, of the 4,000 persons in Nyanza, only approximately 200 survived the massacre.

[3773] Consolidated Request, paras 204, 205.
[3774] Consolidated Request, paras 208, 209.

53. The Appeals Chamber does not consider that the alleged silence of witnesses in the Rutayisire case with respect to Mr. Rutaganda's activities at the Amgar garage or Mr. Démé's observations during a brief visit to the Amgar garage amount to new facts.[3775] The Appeals Chamber observes that Mr. Rutaganda presented similar evidence concerning the lack of prisoners at the Amgar garage during his trial.[3776] Thus, this is not a new fact, as it was in issue during his original proceedings.[3777] Moreover, for the reasons set forth above, the Appeals Chamber is also not satisfied that the alleged credibility issues advanced by Mr. Rutaganda with respect to Prosecution Witnesses T and AA warrant review.[3778]

54. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Mr. Rutaganda's request for review based on the alleged new facts related to the events at Amgar garage.

4. Alleged New Facts Related to Genocidal Intent

55. Mr. Rutaganda seeks review of the findings on his genocidal intent on the basis of the alleged new facts contained in several affidavits supplied by Mr. Amadou Démé and Ambassador Clayton Yaache, the former head of UNAMIR's Humanitarian Affairs Cell ("Démé Affidavits" and "Yaache Affidavit", respectively).[3779] Mr. Rutaganda submits that the new facts contained in these affidavits could have played a decisive role in the Trial Chamber's findings on his genocidal intent.[3780] The Démé Affidavits recount Mr. Rutaganda's role in negotiating the safe passage and evacuation of refugees from the Hôtel des Mille Collines to RPF held territory on 3 May 1994.[3781] According to his affidavits, Mr. Démé sought and received Mr. Rutaganda's urgent assistance to prevent an imminent massacre of the refugees by a mob of assailants during the evacuation at great personal danger to Mr. Rutaganda.[3782] The Yaache Affidavit corroborates Mr. Démé's account of Mr. Rutaganda's role during the transfer of refugees and concludes that Mr. Rutaganda played a "key role" in saving the lives of the evacuees.[3783] In addition, Mr. Rutaganda points to a statement, signed by him and broadcast on Radio Rwanda on 25 April 1994, wherein he appealed for calm.[3784]

56. In the Appeals Chamber's view, the Démé and Yaache Affidavits as well as the Radio Rwanda broadcast simply constitute additional evidence of issues previously considered and, therefore, fail to provide a basis upon which review may be granted.[3785] Mr. Rutaganda testified at length during his trial about his role in the evacuation of the refugees from the Hôtel des Mille Collines.[3786] In addition, Mr. Rutaganda challenged the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's findings on his genocidal intent on appeal pointing to evidence of his assistance to Tutsis during this period.[3787] The Appeals Chamber recalls that, in concluding that Mr. Rutaganda had genocidal intent, the Trial Chamber emphasized his direct participation in the widespread attacks and killings committed against Tutsis who were systematically selected for killing because of their ethnicity.[3788] The Appeals Chamber dismissed Mr. Rutaganda's challenge to the findings on his genocidal intent,[3789] bearing in mind the evidence and arguments related to his assistance to Tutsis during this period.[3790] The Appeals Chamber recalls the view it expressed at the time: "a reasonable trier of fact could very well not take account of some of the illustrations provided by the Appellant, which appear immaterial within the context of the numerous atrocities systematically and deliberately perpetrated against members of the Tutsi group."[3791]

57. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Mr. Rutaganda's assistance to UNAMIR on behalf of the refugees at the Hôtel des Mille Collines and his appeal for calm on 25 April 1994 do not constitute new facts for the purposes of review because the issues raised by this material were considered during his original proceedings.[3792]

5. Alleged New Facts Related to Sentencing

58. Mr. Rutaganda also seeks review of his sentence based on a number of alleged procedural irregularities which he submits could have impacted his sentence.[3793] The Appeals Chamber addresses each in turn.

(a) Alleged Illegal Detention

59. Mr. Rutaganda seeks review of his sentence based on an alleged 171-day period of illegal detention following his initial arrest in Zambia.[3794] He claims that, despite having received asylum in Zambia, Zambian authorities arrested him on immigration charges on 10 October 1995, verbally informing him at the time of his arrest of the Tribunal's interest in prosecuting him.[3795] He notes that on 22 November 1995, the Prosecutor filed a request under Rule 40 of the Rules to provisionally detain him for ninety days pending investigations and the confirmation of an indictment.[3796] Mr. Rutaganda explains that on 12 January 1996, a Zambian judge ordered the release of other Rwandans arrested with him, confirming the illegality of their arrest.[3797] Mr. Rutaganda submits, however, that he remained illegally detained until 29 March 1996, when the Prosecution provided him with his indictment.[3798]

60. Invoking the Appeals Chamber decisions in the Barayagwiza, Semanza, and Kajelijeli cases, Mr. Rutaganda submits that this violation would have had an impact on his sentence had it been adduced at trial.[3799] He argues that he has not raised this issue until now due to professional negligence on the part of his counsel who failed to challenge the illegal detention at the outset of the proceedings and who also failed to make sentencing submissions.[3800]

61. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Mr. Rutaganda first raised allegations of illegal detention in his Notice of Appeal,[3801] and accordingly this allegation does not constitute a new fact, as it could have been taken into account in the Appeals Chamber's judgement.[3802] However, while this allegation was raised in the Notice of Appeal, it was not addressed in his appeal brief. In addition, during the appeals hearing, Mr. Rutaganda's counsel confirmed that he had abandoned his appeal against the sentence.[3803] Accordingly, this argument has been waived.[3804] Moreover, Mr. Rutaganda has failed to demonstrate that his counsel's decision to withdraw this argument on appeal constitutes professional negligence that would result in a miscarriage of justice. In such circumstances, the Appeals Chamber declines to consider this issue further.

(b) Alleged Disclosure Violations

62. Mr. Rutaganda points to other procedural irregularities in his case, which in his view could impact on his sentence.[3805] He submits that the Prosecution failed to disclose the Rutayisire Judgement as well as interviews with Michel Haragirimana and Joseph Setiba, which are allegedly exculpatory.[3806] He argues that, according to information in his possession, the Prosecution had custody of this material.[3807] In addition, he complains that the Prosecution failed to disclose a transcript of his Radio Rwanda statement, dated 25 April 1994, in which he appealed for calm.[3808] As discussed above, Mr. Rutaganda claims that this transcript would have negated his genocidal intent.[3809]

63. To establish a violation of the Rule 68 disclosure obligation, the Defence must: (1) establish that additional material exists in the possession of the Prosecution; and (2) present a prima facie case that the material is exculpatory.[3810] Initially, as the Prosecution submits,[3811] Mr. Rutaganda has not demonstrated that the Prosecution was in possession of the Rutayisire Judgement at any relevant point or that it is in possession of exculpatory statements of Michel Haragirimana and Joseph Setiba. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Rule 68 does not impose an obligation on the Prosecution to search for material of which it does not have knowledge.[3812]

64. With regards to the Radio Rwanda transcript dated 25 April 1994, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to fulfill its obligation under Rule 68 to make appropriate disclosure of material in its custody. Mr. Rutaganda's submissions indicate that this transcript was transcribed on 21

The Appeals Chamber observes that Mr. Barayagwiza, Mr. Semanza, and Mr. Kajelijeli each challenged their unlawful detention at the earliest opportunity. See, e.g., *Jean-Bosco Barayagwiza v. However, the Prosecution must actively review the material in its possession for exculpatory material. See The Prosecutor v. Édouard Karemera et al., Case N°ICTR-98-44-AR73.7, Decision on Interlocutory Appeal Regarding the Role of the Prosecutor's Electronic Disclosure Suite in Discharging Disclosure Obligations, 30 June 2006, paras 9, 10 ("Karemera et al. Appeal Decision").

January 2000 and was disclosed by the Prosecution in several other cases before the Tribunal.[3813] The Prosecution does not dispute this or that the transcript could have included material tending to exculpate Mr. Rutaganda.[3814] The Prosecution offers no explanation as to why it failed to disclose this material to Mr. Rutaganda. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Prosecution has a positive and continuous obligation under Rule 68 of the Rules.[3815] The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution acted in violation of its obligation to disclose in this case. However, even when the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Prosecution has failed to comply with its Rule 68 obligations, it will examine whether the Defence has actually been prejudiced by such failure before considering whether a remedy is appropriate.[3816] For the reasons mentioned above in considering Mr. Rutaganda's request for review of the finding on his genocidal intent, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the Prosecution's failure warrants a remedy that would impact on Mr. Rutaganda's sentence. Thus, the Appeals Chamber denies Mr. Rutaganda's request for review of his sentence based on this disclosure violation. However, the Prosecution should take this as a clear warning that, in the future, the Appeals Chamber may impose appropriate sanctions should it be found to be in violation of its Rule 68 obligation.

(c) Alleged Presentation of False Evidence

65. Mr. Rutaganda also claims that the Prosecution presented false evidence in his case.[3817] He points to Prosecution exhibits related to the geographic and topographical aspects of the Amgar garage and its surrounding area, which he claims do not comport with reality.[3818] In addition, he also refers to an 11 January 1994 cable sent by General Roméo Dalliare to the United Nations headquarters in New York providing an assessment, based on his intelligence sources, that the Interahamwe was organized, armed, and prepared to kill up to one thousand Tutsis within a twenty minute period.[3819] Mr. Rutaganda explains that this evidence was tendered by the Prosecution through an expert witness Professor Filip Reyntjens.[3820] Mr. Rutaganda points to recent defence evidence in the Bagosora et al. trial, which he claims undermines the credibility of this exhibit.[3821] The Prosecution rejects Mr. Rutaganda's allegations as unsupported by evidence.[3822]

66. The Appeals Chamber considers that Mr. Rutaganda has failed to provide an evidentiary basis to support his allegations that the Prosecution presented falsified evidence at trial.[3823] The Appeals Chamber also notes that Mr. Rutaganda has not identified any finding related to his criminal responsibility implicated by these assertions. Additionally, Mr. Rutaganda's submissions seek to re-litigate the authenticity and credibility of evidence and do not present new facts upon which review may be granted. Accordingly, these arguments do not warrant review.

C. Request for Assignment of Counsel

67. In his Request for Assignment of Counsel, Mr. Rutaganda asks the Appeals Chamber to direct the Registrar to assign Ms. Sarah Bihegue as his counsel under the Tribunal's legal aid system in order [3816] See, e.g., Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement, para. 262; The Prosecutor v. Radislav Krstić, Case N°IT-98-33-A, Judgement, 19 April 2004, para. 153; Bralo Appeal Decision, para. 31.

[3821] Consolidated Request, paras 228-231.
[3822] Consolidated Response, paras 139, 140, 141, 142.
[3823] The Appeals Chamber notes that Mr. Rutaganda has submitted sketches, which he argues highlight the irregularities of the Prosecution exhibits. In the Appeals Chamber's view, Mr. Rutaganda's sketches are merely extensions of his argument and fail to provide evidentiary support for his claim.

to assist him in pursuing post-conviction relief.[3824] In support of this request, he argues that this assignment of counsel is in the interest of justice given the demands of his case.[3825] Furthermore, Mr. Rutaganda alleges that, in violation of Article 82 of the Rules of Detention, the Tribunal has frustrated his attempts to freely communicate with counsel of his choice, who has agreed to represent him on a pro bono basis, notwithstanding his repeated pleas to the Registrar and the President to grant access.[3826] In the alternative, he requests the Appeals Chamber to order the Registrar to allow him unimpeded access to counsel of his choice who has agreed to represent him on a pro bono basis.[3827]

68. The Appeals Chamber recalls that review is an exceptional remedy and that an applicant is only entitled to assigned counsel, at the Tribunal's expense, if the Appeals Chamber authorizes the review.[3828] Nonetheless, counsel may be assigned at the preliminary examination stage, normally for a very limited duration, if it is necessary to ensure the fairness of the proceedings.[3829] Mr. Rutaganda has already made extensive and detailed submissions supported by a number of exhibits in his Request for Review. The Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that additional briefing would be of assistance in the present inquiry. In such circumstances, Mr. Rutaganda's Request for Review does not warrant the assignment of counsel under the auspices of the Tribunal's legal aid system.

69. Nonetheless, as a general matter, Mr. Rutaganda may be assisted by counsel in connection with a request for review at his own expense or on a pro bono basis provided the counsel files a power of attorney with the Registrar and satisfies the requirements to appear before the Tribunal. The Registry informed Mr. Rutaganda of this in its letter dated 21 October 2004, explaining that his former counsel could contact him.[3830] Thereafter, Mr. Rutaganda filed a notice to the Deputy Registrar indicating that he had retained his former counsel to assist him.[3831] Even putting aside that Rule 44 (A) of the Rules refers to the counsel filing a power of attorney, Mr. Rutaganda has not pointed to any instance after that point where he was denied access to his counsel.[3832] The Appeals Chamber further observes that, in his request, he refers to the pro bono assistance which he received from his former counsel during this period.[3833] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber declines to consider further Mr. Rutaganda's alleged violations of his right to communicate with counsel. In any event, as a general rule, such matters should first and foremost be addressed by the Registrar.[3834]

D. Request for Disclosure

70. In his Request for Disclosure, Mr. Rutaganda seeks the disclosure of the full identity and unredacted statements of all Prosecution witnesses called in his case, which he submits was not done or, at least, not done in a timely fashion.[3835] In addition, he requests the Appeals Chamber to order the Prosecution to search for statements made by these witnesses before Rwandan judicial authorities and [3830] The Registry informed Mr. Rutaganda of as much in its letter to him dated 21 October 2004, explaining that his former counsel could contact him. See Consolidated Request, Annex XVI (Letter from Aminatta N'gum, Acting Chief of the Tribunal's Defence Counsel and Detention Management Section, to Mr. Rutaganda, dated 21 October 2004).

[3835] Request for Disclosure, paras 5, 11-35.

to disclose such statements to him.[3836] In this respect, Mr. Rutaganda notes that the Prosecution has carried out similar searches in other cases.[3837]

71. The Prosecution responds that it provided Mr. Rutaganda with unredacted copies of statements and the full identities of the witnesses at the time of their testimony in accordance with the Trial Chamber's witness protection order.[3838] Moreover, it submits that it does not possess any exculpatory statements made by witnesses in the Rutaganda case before Rwandan authorities. It further argues that it has no obligation to obtain such material from Rwanda.[3839]

72. The Appeals Chamber considers that Mr. Rutaganda's request for disclosure lacks merit. The Trial Chamber concluded that the Prosecution had fulfilled its obligations to disclose witness statements and identifying material.[3840] To the extent that this conclusion was erroneous or that the modalities for disclosure were objectionable, it was Mr. Rutaganda's prerogative to bring this issue to the attention of the Trial Chamber in the first instance and, if necessary, to raise it on appeal.[3841] The Appeals Chamber declines to consider such complaints in review proceedings. As the Appeals Chamber previously held, the Prosecution has no obligation to obtain judicial material related to its witnesses from Rwanda.[3842] Though the Prosecution has made such inquiries of its own accord in some cases, these voluntary efforts do not expand the nature of its disclosure obligations.

73. The Appeals Chamber notes that many Trial Chambers, in the exercise of their discretion, have requested the Prosecution to assist the defence and use its good offices in order to obtain such material in the interests of facilitating the trial proceedings.[3843] Mindful of the exceptional nature of review proceedings, the Appeals Chamber denies Mr. Rutaganda's request to order the Prosecution to obtain this material from Rwanda. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Mr. Rutaganda's Request for Disclosure in its entirety.

III. Disposition

74. For the foregoing reasons, Mr. Rutaganda's Requests for Reconsideration and Clarification, Request for Review, Request for Assignment of Counsel, and Request for Disclosure are denied.

Done in English and French, the English version being authoritative.

[3837] In this respect, Mr. Rutaganda points to the case of Hassan Ngeze where the Prosecution obtained statements made before a Gacaca proceeding of Witness EB. See Request for Disclosure, para. 39. In Annex D to the Request for Disclosure, Mr. Rutaganda submits the cover page of this confidential disclosure. The Prosecution argues that this constitutes a breach of the witness protection order in Mr. Ngeze's case and asks the Appeals Chamber to order the Prosecution to investigate this alleged breach for contempt. See Response to Disclosure Request, paras 20, 22. The Appeals Chamber, however, declines to issue such an order. The Appeals Chamber observes that Annex D, submitted by Mr. Rutaganda, is simply a cover page related to the disclosure and contains no identifying information. Mr. Rutaganda asserts that he did not receive any protected information. Reply to Disclosure Request, para. 27. Based on the material before it, the Appeals Chamber sees no reason to question this averment.

Rules of Procedure and Evidence, Rules 73 (A), 90 bis, 90 bis (A) and 90 bis (B)

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA ("Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber III, composed of Judges Dennis C. M. Byron, ("Chamber"), pursuant to Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules");

BEING SEIZED of the "Defence Motion for Order for Transfer of Witnesses Detained in Rwanda", pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Motion"), filed on 3 January 2006;

NOTING the resumption of the present trial scheduled on 16 January 2005;

NOW DECIDES the Motion pursuant to Rule 73 (A) of the Rules:

Introduction

1. The Defence requests the Chamber, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules, to order the temporary transfer of Witnesses with the pseudonyms 7.3, 4.16 and 9.22 from Rwanda, where they are currently detained, to the United Nations Detention Unit (UNDF) in Arusha, Tanzania, so that they can testify in the present case.

Deliberations

2. Rule 90 bis (A) of the Rules gives the Chamber power to make an order to transfer a detained person to the Detention Unit of the Tribunal if his or her presence has been requested. Rule 90 bis (B) lays out the conditions to be met, as shown by the applicant, before such an order can be made:

(i) The presence of the detained witness is not required for any criminal proceedings in progress in the territory of the requested State during the period the witness is required by the Tribunal;

(ii) Transfer of the witness does not extend the period of his detention as foreseen by the requested State;

3. The Defence has exhibited a letter from the Minister of Justice in Rwanda dated 28 December 2005 confirming the availability of Witnesses 7.3, 4.16 and 9.22, amongst others, to testify during the indicated period of the upcoming trial session, which is from 16 January 2006 to 10 February 2006. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that these witnesses are not required for criminal proceedings in Rwanda during that time and that the witnesses' presence at the Tribunal does not extend the period of their detention in Rwanda.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

ORDERS the Registar, pursuant to Rule 90 bis of the Rules, to temporarily transfer Detained Witnesses known by the pseudonyms 7.3, 4.16 and 9.22 to the UNDF facility in Arusha, at an appropriate time prior to their scheduled dates to testify. Their return travel to Rwanda should be facilitated as soon as practically possible for each witness after the individual's testimony has ended.

REQUESTS the Governments of Rwanda and Tanzania to cooperate with the Registrar in the implementation of this Order.

DIRECTS the Registrar to cooperate with the authorities of the Governments Rwanda and Tanzania; Ensure proper conduct during transfer and during detention of the witness at the UNDF; Inform the Chamber of any changes in the conditions of detention determined by the Rwanda authorities and which may affect the length of stay in Arusha.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL FOR RWANDA ("Tribunal"),

SITTING as Trial Chamber III, composed of Judges Dennis C. M. Byron, Presiding, Karin Hökborg and Gberdao Gustave Kam ("Chamber");

BEING SEIZED of the "Confidential ex parte Motion for subpoenas directed to Defence Witness" ("Motion"), filed by the Defence for the Accused ("Defence") on 17 January 2006;

HEREBY DECIDES the Motion pursuant Rules 73 (A) and 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules").

Introduction

1. The Defence case in this trial started on 7 November 2005. Respectively on 29 September 2005 and 16 December 2005, at the Defence's request, the Chamber ordered protective measures with respect to Defence Witnesses,[1] and issued subpoena orders directed to four Defence witnesses.[2] The Defence now seeks the Chamber to issue further subpoena orders regarding Witness 4.7., 4.18., 9.21. and 9.22.

Deliberations

2. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber considered whether or not the ex parte filing of the Motion is appropriate under the circumstances; recalling the reasoning in its previous decision on subpoenas in the present case, the Chamber concludes that ex parte applications are necessary when they respond to the interests of justice and where the disclosure of the information conveyed by the application to the other party in the proceedings would be likely to cause prejudice to an individual involved in or related to that application[3]. The Chamber therefore finds that in the particular circumstances of the case, disclosure of the present Motion to the other party risks causing prejudice to the witnesses.

3. As regards the content of the Motion, the Defence submits that the testimony of Witnesses 4.7, 4.18, 9.21 and 9.22 is relevant with regard to the charges against the Accused relating to his presence at Butare Hospital on or between 18 and 25 of April 1994. It contends that these four witnesses would not testify voluntarily due to major concerns for their security. The Defence further submits that the lack of cooperation of the Rwandan authorities and the spreading of allegations against the Defence team affected the preparation of the defence of the Accused and the presentation of evidence at trial, which became in part unavailable due to the witnesses' unwillingness to testify. Such evidence, according to the Defence, is not adequately replaceable and it would constitute corroboration of the evidence of other witnesses regarding the absence of the Accused from Butare during the period considered by the Indictment.

4. With regard to Defence Witness 9.21, the Chamber notes that in addition to the unwillingness of this Witness to come and testify in Arusha, the Witness stated that she does not know the Accused and therefore would not be able to testify either as Prosecution or Defence witness. Further, the Chamber is not convinced that the anticipated testimony of Witness 9.21, as indicated in her statement attached to the Motion, is material to the cause of the Accused.[4] The Chamber will therefore not order the attendance of this Witness. With regard to witness 4.7, the Chamber observes that the expected testimony of the Witness, as it appears from the Statement attached to the Motion, lacks materiality to the case.[5] For the same reason, the Chamber will not order the attendance of this Witness.

5. Concerning Defence Witnesses 9.22 and 4.18, the Chamber is satisfied that good reason has been adduced for their unwillingness to travel to Arusha and that their proposed evidence may be relevant to the Defence case.

6. However, after considering the specific circumstances surrounding Witnesses 9.22 and 4.18, the Chamber is of the view that issuing of subpoenas orders could be avoided, at this stage, if the witnesses would accept to give their testimony voluntarily by means of video-link testimony. The Chamber estimates that the taking of a video-link testimony can properly address the Witnesses' concerns and will also guarantee that the Witnesses will be heard during the time allocated for the Defence case. The Chamber recalls that video-link testimony has been authorized by this Tribunal on several occasions, including in the present case, as an additional measure for witness protection on the basis of Rule 75 of the Rules[6]. In addition, the Chamber notes that the Prosecution does not oppose in principle testimony via video-link.[7] Therefore the Chamber deems that, under the particular circumstances of the case, a video-link testimony would serve the interests of justice and would guarantee the rights of the Accused to be safeguarded by avoiding to delay the completion of the trial. Nevertheless, the Chamber reserves its discretion to issue subpoenas addressed to witnesses 9.22 and 4.18 in the event they should refuse to testify by video-link;

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

I. REQUESTS the Registry to enquire on the availability of witnesses 9.22 and 4.18 to testify by video-transmission and subsequently report to the Chamber, as soon as possible, on arrangements made to secure their testimony via video-link;

Introduction

1. The Defence of an accused in another trial before this Tribunal, Théoneste Bagosora, requests access to the closed session transcripts of Defence Witness 3/13, who testified on behalf of the Accused in the present case on 24 January 2006.[1] The Bagosora Defence indicates that Witness 3/13 is scheduled to testify on its behalf in the near future, and argues that the closed session transcripts would assist in deciding whether to actually call the witness and, if so, the preparation of his testimony. The Bagosora Defence agrees to be bound by the terms of the witness protection order applicable in the present case.[2]

Deliberations

2. The present application requires the Chamber to consider the balance of witness protection concerns, upon which the closed session hearings were based, and the legitimate needs of the Bagosora Defence for information which may be material to its preparations.

3. The authority to hear testimony in closed session derives from Rule 75 (A), which provides that a Chamber may "order appropriate measures to safeguard the privacy and security of victims and witnesses, provided that the measures are consistent with the rights of the Accused". The witness appears to have disclosed to the Bagosora Defence that he testified as a protected witness in the present case. Little if any security interest would be advanced by denying the Bagosora Defence access to the closed session testimony of a person who has agreed to testify on its behalf.

4. Rule 75 (F) does not automatically authorize disclosure in the present case. Rule 75 (F) permits the Prosecution to discharge its disclosure obligations notwithstanding the existence of witness protection measures, and requires the party in receipt of the confidential information to comply with the applicable witness protection order. No showing has been made that the Prosecution is subject to any disclosure obligation in respect of Witness 3/13. It is the Registry, not the Prosecution, which is in possession of, and controls access to, closed session transcripts.

5. Rule 75 (F) is relevant, however, to the extent that it codifies a consistent jurisprudence of granting Defence requests for the testimony of Prosecution witnesses in other trials.[3] Even though the present application concerns a Defence witness's testimony which is not the subject of any specific disclosure obligation, a "party is always entitled to seek material from any source to assist in the preparation of its case if the documents sought have been identified or described by their general nature and if a legitimate forensic purpose for such access has been shown".[4] Given that Witness 3/13 is scheduled to appear shortly as a witness on behalf of the Accused Bagosora, and that his testimony may overlap in substance with the subject-matter of his testimony in the present case, the closed session testimony of the witness is likely to be of material assistance. This interest significantly outweighs any witness protection concerns which might arise from disclosure to the Bagosora Defence. Furthermore, the parties have been consulted and do not object to the disclosure.

FOR THE ABOVE REASONS, THE CHAMBER

GRANTS the motion;

ORDERS the Registry to disclose the closed session transcripts of Witness 3/13 to the Bagosora Defence;

ORDERS that the Bagosora Defence, including the Accused, is bound by the terms of the Rwamakuba Defence Witness Protection Order in respect of Witness 3/13.

1. The Defence closed its case in the present proceedings on 9 February 2006. The Chamber will now deal with some pending legal matters before hearing the closing arguments of the parties scheduled on 21 April 2006.

2. First, during cross-examination of Prosecution Witness ALA, the Defence requested the witness to provide a list of the names of people who survived the killings at the Kayanga Health Centre. The witness wrote down a few names. This list has only been marked for identification as ID 2. The Prosecution did not oppose its admission.[1] The Defence also sought the admission into evidence of a statement given by Prosecution Witness XV to the Defence investigator.[2] The Prosecution objected to its admission on grounds of violation of protective measures. The Prosecution further moved the Chamber to admit into evidence a document prepared in July 1994 by Médecins Sans Frontières and entitled "Genocide in Rwanda, Witness Accounts", which was marked for identification as IP 7. At that time, the Defence did not oppose its admission but requested more time to analyze it.[3]

3. Pursuant to Rule 89 (C) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, the Chamber has the discretionary power to admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value, to the extent that it may be relevant to the proof of allegations pleaded in the Indictment.[4]

4. In the instant case, after reviewing the above-mentioned documents, the Chamber considers that they are relevant to the case and therefore should be admitted into evidence. It must be noted that the admissibility of evidence is not to be confused with the assessment of the weight to be accorded to the evidence, an issue to be decided by the Chamber at a later stage.

5. Second, on 28 October 2005, the Chamber reserved its ruling on two Defence requests seeking: (1) judicial notice of the fact that Joseph Nzirorera and Mathieu Ngirumpatse were not Ministers in the Interim Government of 8 April 1994, have not been accused of crimes in Butare in any other document before the Tribunal, and, up until the testimony of Witness XV in the instant trial, have never been associated with the Accused; (2) notice of the fact that the Kabakobwa massacre was on 22 April 1994 and that the Witness HF could not have been a victim of it as this witness testified during this trial.[5]

6. Rule 94 of the Rules provides that (A) a Trial Chamber shall take judicial notice of facts of common knowledge and (B) that a Trial Chamber may decide to take judicial notice of adjudicated facts or documentary evidence from other proceedings of the Tribunal relating to the matter at issue in the current proceedings. Trial Chambers have consistently defined facts of common knowledge as "facts of such notoriety, so well known and acknowledged that no reasonable individual with relevant concern can possibly dispute them".[6] "Adjudicated Facts" have been defined in the jurisprudence as "facts which have been finally determined in a proceeding before the Tribunal [and] […] one upon which it has deliberated, and thereupon made a finding in proceedings that are final, in that no appeal has been instituted therefrom or if instituted, the facts have been upheld".[7]

7. In the Chamber's view, the facts of which the Defence seeks judicial notice in the present case do not fall within the ambit of Rule 94 of the Rules. They are neither facts of such notoriety that no reasonable individual can dispute them nor facts which have been finally determined in a proceedings before the Tribunal. The Defence application falls therefore to be rejected.

THE CHAMBER HEREBY

I. DECIDES that the following documents should be admitted into evidence:

- A list of the names of people who survived the killings that were done at the Kayanga Health Centre written down by Prosecution Witness ALA and marked for identification as ID. 2;
- A statement given by Prosecution Witness XV to the Defence investigator;
- A document prepared in July 1994 by Médecins Sans Frontières, entitled "Genocide in Rwanda, Witness Accounts", which has been marked for identification as IP 7;

II. REQUESTS the Registry to enter the above-mention documents and provide them with the appropriate exhibit numbers;

Table of Contents

1. This Tribunal has the authority to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law, including genocide and crimes against humanity, committed in the territory of Rwanda and Rwandan citizens responsible for such crimes committed in the territory of neighbouring States, between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994.[1] Under Article 2 of the Statute, genocide is an act committed with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such.[2] The crime against humanity is defined as a crime committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds.[3]

* The text of the Indictment is reproduced in the 2005 Report.

[1] Statute, Articles 1 to 4.

[2] Statute, Article 2 (2): Genocide means any of the following acts committed with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such:
(a) Killing members of the group;
(b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;
(c) Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part;
(d) Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group;
(e) Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

[3] Statute, Article 3: The International Tribunal for Rwanda shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for the following crimes when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds:

2. The Appeals Chamber has held that genocide against Tutsi and widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification occurred in Rwanda between April and July 1994 are facts of common knowledge not subject to reasonable dispute.[4] As the Appeals Chamber recalled, this ruling does not lessen the Prosecution's burden of proof: it must still demonstrate that the specific events alleged in an Indictment constituted genocide or a crime against humanity and that the conduct and mental state of an Accused establishes his culpability for such crimes.

3. The Accused, André Rwamakuba, was born in 1950 in Nduba, Gikomero commune, Kigali rural préfecture. He is qualified as a doctor having studied at Butare University, Rwanda, in Zaïre (now the Democratic Republic of Congo) and in Belgium.[5] He was a public health specialist and in 1992 was appointed Director of the Kigali Health Region. In 1994, after the death of Rwandan President Juvénal Habyarimana, he was appointed Minister of Primary and Secondary Education in the Interim Government, and took oath on 9 April 1994. He was a member of the Mouvement démocratique du Rwanda (MDR) party.[6]

4. André Rwamakuba was first arrested on 2 August 1995 upon what appears to have been an independent initiative of the Namibian authorities. Once contacted, the Prosecution indicated that it had instructed its office in Kigali to take urgent steps to ascertain whether it was interested in the prosecution of Rwamakuba on charges within the Tribunal's jurisdiction.[7] A month later, the Prosecution notified the Namibian authorities that it did not possess evidence which would entitle it to request his detention.[8] Rwamakuba was subsequently released on 8 February 1996.

5. Three years after that initial arrest, the Prosecution did file an indictment against André Rwamakuba and seven other co-Accused.[9] Rwamakuba was arrested by the Namibian authorities on 21 October 1998, in compliance with a Tribunal warrant of arrest and Order for transfer and detention,[10] and transferred to the United Nations Detention Facilities ("UNDF") in Arusha the following day. Rwamakuba pleaded not guilty to all the charges against him.[11]

6. After four of his co-Accused were severed from the 1998 Indictment,[12] the trial against André Rwamakuba and the three remaining co-Accused, namely Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpaste and Joseph Nzirorera, commenced on 27 November 2003. Thirteen Prosecution witnesses were heard before the trial was interrupted in May 2004 as a result of the Presiding Judge's withdrawal from the case. A rehearing of the case with a different bench was then necessary.[13] The new Chamber subsequently granted the Prosecution's request for severance of Rwamakuba from the joined Indictment and ordered a separate trial pursuant to an Amended Indictment.[14] This Indictment filed 10 days later charges André Rwamakuba with genocide, or in the alternative complicity in genocide, and crimes against humanity.[15] At a further initial appearance held on 21 March 2005, the Chamber entered a plea of not guilty to all counts in the absence of the Accused.[16] The Defence for André Rwamakuba did not dispute that genocide occurred in Rwanda in 1994, but contested the Accused's participation in any of the crimes alleged in the Indictment.[17] Following the Chamber's rulings on the defects in the form of the Indictment, the Prosecution filed its final version on 10 June 2005.[18]

7. The trial in the instant case commenced on 9 June 2005. Eighteen Prosecution witnesses were heard, including one investigator and one expert witness, over 39 trial days.[19] Two Prosecution witnesses refused to testify. The Chamber was not requested to issue a subpoena order for these witnesses to appear before the Tribunal. Rather, the Prosecution moved for an adjournment of the proceedings until some unspecified time in October 2005.[20] After several opportunities were given to the Prosecution to clarify if and when these witnesses would testify, the Chamber denied the Prosecution's application considering the interests of justice and the right of the Accused to be tried without undue delay.[21] In its ruling, it found that the Prosecution demonstrated a lack of diligence and had failed to persuade the Chamber that these two witnesses were critical to the case against the Accused.[22]

8. The Defence case commenced on 7 November 2005 and 31 witnesses were called over 39 days.[23] The Chamber undertook a site visit in Rwanda with the parties in January 2006.[24] Key locations relevant to the charges against André Rwamakuba were viewed in Kigali, Gikomero and Butare areas.[25] The closing arguments of both parties were heard on 21 April 2006, approximately 10 weeks after the close of the Defence case.[26]

9. From the outset André Rwamakuba refused to attend court proceedings. According to his Counsel, this was due to the Accused's belief that the evidence against him was being manipulated.[27] The Chamber nevertheless regularly invited him to attend the proceedings, through the Registrar and his Counsel.[28] The trial proceeded in the absence of the Accused in accordance with Rule 82 bis of the Rules.[29]

10. The charges against the Accused are discussed in Chapter I. The Chamber then reviews the evidence adduced during the trial and will reach its findings in Chapter II. Chapter III pertains to the rights of the Accused and Chapter IV contains the verdict.

Chapter I – Charges Against the Accused

11. In its Closing Brief, the Prosecution contends that by his acts and omissions, André Rwamakuba is criminally responsible under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for having planned, ordered, instigated and committed the crimes of genocide, or complicity in genocide, murder and extermination as crimes against humanity in Gikomero commune and at Butare University Hospital during April 1994.[30] It also submits that as Minister of Primary and Secondary Education, Rwamakuba "did nothing, either to denounce the crimes committed against the Tutsi, [o]r to dissociate himself from the [Interim Government]". It submits that by these omissions, Rwamakuba directly failed to discharge the duties entrusted to him, which he had sworn to fulfil, and that he encouraged the genocidal activities.[31]

12. The Prosecution further contends that "a Trial Chamber may find an accused guilty when it is satisfied that the accused participated in a crime by committing any one of the acts covered by the Statute, even if the Chamber does not endorse the Prosecution's case".[32] It adds that "[a]s a Tribunal of fact and law, the Chamber may accept any argument that it finds relevant to the facts of the case, on condition that the said argument is consistent with the provisions of Article 6 (1) of the Statute".[33] In the Prosecution's view, the question of notifying the Accused of the charges against him in that respect does not arise, since he was informed of the forms of responsibility under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for which he was being prosecuted and which have been established by the Prosecution.[34]

13. Article 17 (4) of the Statute and Rule 47 (C) of the Rules require the Prosecution to set forth in the Indictment a concise statement of the facts of the case and of the crime(s) with which the suspect is charged. This obligation must be interpreted in light of the rights of the accused to a fair trial, to be informed of the charges against him, and to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence.[35] According to the jurisprudence of both ad hoc Tribunals, this translates into an obligation on the part of the Prosecution to state the material facts underpinning the charges in the Indictment, but not the evidence by which such material facts are to be proven.[36]

14. The Indictment, therefore, has to fulfil the fundamental purpose to inform the Accused of the charges against him with sufficient particularity to enable him to mount his defence.[37] Failure to set forth the specific material facts of a crime constitutes a material defect in the Indictment. This defect may nonetheless be cured, and a conviction entered, where the accused has received timely, clear, and consistent information from the Prosecution which resolves the ambiguity or clears up the vagueness.[38] In assessing whether a defective indictment was cured, the Chamber must determine whether the accused was in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him or her and to confront the Prosecution's case.[39]

15. In the present case, after a brief description of the Accused, his authority and legal duties,[40] the four counts of the Indictment charge André Rwamakuba pursuant to Articles 2, 3 and 6 (1) of the Statute, with genocide, or in the alternative, complicity in genocide, and extermination and murder as crimes against humanity regarding events that took place on or between 6 and 30 April 1994 in Gikomero commune and at Butare University Hospital.[41] These four counts set out the crimes for which the Accused is charged. The respective succeeding paragraphs set out the concise statement of facts on which the allegations are based.[42]

16. Paragraph 11 of the Indictment details how between 10 and 20 April 1994, in Gikomero commune, the Accused allegedly delivered machetes that were subsequently used in killing or attempting to kill Tutsi. Paragraphs 12, 13, 23 and 26 of the Indictment describe how during the same period and in the same commune, the Accused allegedly ordered and participated in the killing of three persons identified as Tutsi and in the massacre of Tutsi refugees at the Kayanga Health Centre. The alleged participation of the Accused in massacres at Butare University Hospital between 18 and 25 April 1994 is set forth at paragraphs 15 to 16, 23 and 26 of the Indictment.

17. The Indictment also describes André Rwamakuba's alleged political status and related political activities. It sets out how he conducted sensitization campaigns against Tutsi in Gikomero commune between 26 July 1993 and June 1994.[43] It alleges that as a Minister of Primary and Secondary Education of the Interim Government of 8 April 1994, he took part in the conception and the implementation of the Government's policies to exterminate the Tutsi throughout Rwanda.[44] The Accused is also defined as a member of the extremist wing of the Mouvement Démocratique du Rwanda, MDR "Hutu Power", which was allegedly created on or about 26 July 1993 and had a specific ideology of exterminating the Tutsi.[45]

18. The Indictment does not allege the Accused's criminal responsibility as superior for crimes committed by subordinates.[46] In addition to alleging complicity in genocide,[47] the Indictment includes only a general reference to Article 6 (1) of the Statute in relation to each of the four counts. In accordance with the settled jurisprudence, such general reference implies that the Accused is prosecuted for all forms of individual participation set out by Article 6 (1) of the Statute, namely planning, instigating, ordering, committing and aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime.[48] The Appeals Chamber and some Trial Chambers have stated that this provision is interpreted "[to cover] first and foremost the physical perpetration of a crime by the offender himself, or the culpable omission of an act that was mandated by a rule of criminal law."[49] In the present case, there is no allegation of any legal duty under which the Accused was mandated to act and which failure to do so would constitute a criminal act.

19. Reading the Indictment as whole, the Chamber concludes that the allegations describing the political activities of the Accused provide the context or background from which inferences could be drawn either concerning his intent, his disposition or other elements of his individual participation in specific crimes in Gikomero commune and at Butare University Hospital between 6 and 30 April 1994. This conclusion is in accordance with the clear and consistent notice given by the Prosecution throughout its representations of the case, its Pre-Trial Brief and Opening Statement, and its evidence adduced during the trial, as described hereinafter.

20. When André Rwamakuba was jointly indicted with three co-Accused, all were charged with conspiracy to commit genocide, direct and public incitement to genocide, genocide, or alternatively complicity in genocide, rape and extermination as crimes against humanity, and serious violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions.[50] That Indictment pleaded not only the direct criminal responsibility of the four Accused as perpetrators or accomplices but also as superiors for the crimes committed by their subordinates. The Prosecutor's theory alleged a "huge government conspiracy of State-sponsored genocide".[51]

21. In 2004, before the rehearing of the trial began, the Prosecution requested the severance of André Rwamakuba from the joint Indictment. It contented that "it [was] not necessary to support a joint trial to prosecute Rwamakuba effectively" and that it intended to focus the case entirely on Rwamakuba's "direct participation in crimes", thereby removing any allegation of conspiracy to commit genocide or joint criminal enterprise responsibility.[52]

22. The Prosecution reiterated this affirmation several times.[53] It stated in open court that the entire case was to be based on André Rwamakuba's own acts and omissions and that it was not going to "attempt to bring in proof of Rwamakuba's meeting and conspiring with other interim government ministers and other MRND leaders to commit genocide".[54] The Prosecution also indicated that any pleading of 'common purpose' implicating Rwamakuba as a co-perpetrator of crimes committed throughout Rwanda in furtherance of a government conspiracy to commit genocide had been removed from the Indictment.[55]

23. At first, André Rwamakuba opposed the Prosecution's application for severance.[56] Subsequently, his Defence altered its position on the premise of the Prosecution's stated new theory

[50] In 1998, the Prosecution filed an Indictment against Augustin Bizimana, Félicien Kabuga, Juvénal Kajelijeli, Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpaste, Callixte Nzabomimana, Joseph Nzirorera and André Rwamakuba. As a result of the severance of four of these co-Accused, the Prosecution charged André Rwamakuba jointly with Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse and Joseph Nzirorera (see: Amended Indictment filed on 18 February 2004).

[55] Prosecutor's Consolidated Motion of 20 December 2004, para. 15.

[56] At that stage, the Defence considered that a joint trial would assist the Chamber in placing in context the nature of Rwamakuba's activities as a Minister and would assist to controvert the prosecution's theory of a concerted government plan to which all Ministers were party. The Defence further expressed its concern that the proposed Separate Indictment at that time did not reflect the stated intent of the Prosecution in its severance motion. It contended that the proposed Separate Indictment did not in fact reduce the substance of the Prosecution case against the Accused. The Defence was therefore of the

against the Accused.[57] It stressed the significance of that understanding in determining its advice to the Accused and to his subsequent consent not to oppose severance.[58] The Prosecution replied that "it [was] evident that the Prosecutor [intended] to establish Rwamakuba's criminal responsibility under the Statute for commission of crimes in Gikomero and Butare and [would] not rely upon the doctrine of joint criminal enterprise or seek to establish his criminal responsibility for acts and omissions of the Interim Government throughout Rwanda".[59] The Prosecution further submitted that the question of what evidence it may adduce to establish his responsibility was different and that it intended to offer evidence of his ministerial appointment, "to prove elements of the Prosecution case such as mens rea for genocide".[60] The Chamber granted the severance of André Rwamakuba on the basis of the Prosecution's assertions and its stated revised theory against the Accused.[61]

24. Later, when replying to the Defence Motion on Defects in the Form of the Indictment, the Prosecution reiterated the same position.[62] In the light of these submissions, the Chamber ruled that one particular paragraph which could have raised ambiguities concerning the exact nature of the responsibility alleged against the Accused was to be struck from the Indictment.[63]

25. The Prosecution's Pre-Trial Brief also presents the factual allegations against the Accused divided between events in Gikomero Commune and at Butare University Hospital, and alleges his criminal responsibility under Article 6 (1) of the Statute for crimes committed in those specific locations.[64] The Prosecution Opening Statement was consistent with this theory.[65]

26. Until the submission made at the latest stage by the Prosecution in its Closing Brief, there was therefore no indication in the Indictment, the Pre-Trial Brief or the Opening Statement that the charges against the Accused included a responsibility, as a Minister of the Interim Government, for not having denounced the crimes committed against the Tutsi or for not dissociating himself from the Government, and for a failure to discharge the duties entrusted to him as a member of the Government. On the contrary, from the outset, the Prosecution gave clear and consistent information both to the Accused and to the Chamber that its case was limited to Rwamakuba's direct participation in criminal activities in two specific locations[66] within a specific time-frame.[67] Before and during the presentation of the evidence at trial, the Prosecution never claimed to revise this stated position.

27. The Chamber notes that in its closing arguments the Defence reiterated its understanding of the Prosecution's case against the Accused. It emphasised that it had conducted the Defence of André Rwamakuba on the plain understanding that "command responsibility, joint criminal enterprise, were out and that the relevance of his being a minister was confined to disposition and ideology".[68] view that the Accused's interests were best served within a joint trial, rather than dealt with in a less coherent manner to support indirect responsibility by virtue of his alleged influence and effective control as a Minister and so called "high ranking member of Hutu power" (Response on Behalf of Dr Rwamakuba to the Prosecutor's Motions for Separate Trials, filed on 24 November 2004, paras. 36-38).

[58] Ibid., pp. 2 and 4: [The Defence] have altered [its] position and provided advice to the Accused in the light of the increased clarity of the Prosecution position expressed in the renewed motion, and on the premise that the Prosecution will adhere to their expressed position. […] It is therefore [the Defence] understanding that the position is that, on severance, the Prosecution seeks to prove culpability solely through evidence of events in Gikomero and Butare that concern Rwamakuba […] [and] does not intend to rely on the doctrine of joint criminal enterprise.

28. It would therefore be contrary to the fundamental right of the Accused to a fair trial, including his right to defend himself and to know the charges against him, if the Chamber were to accede to a Prosecution request to find the Accused criminally responsible for omissions which were neither set forth in the Indictment nor subsequently notified by timely, clear, and consistent information from the Prosecution.[69] The Prosecution is expected to know its case before it goes to trial rather than seek to mould its case at the end of the trial depending on how the evidence unfolded.

29. The Chamber therefore considers that in the present case, the Prosecution charges André Rwamakuba, pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute,[70] with genocide, or alternatively, complicity in genocide, and crimes against humanity for acts allegedly committed between 6 and 30 April 1994 in Gikomero commune and at Butare University Hospital, as pleaded in Counts 1 to 4 of the Indictment. Any factual allegation related to André Rwamakuba's political activities or role as a member of the MDR party or as Minister of the Interim Government must be considered as context or background from which inferences could be drawn concerning, for instance, his intent, disposition or other elements of the crimes.[71]

Chapter II - Findings

30. Before addressing its factual findings (II), the Chamber briefly discusses two applicable rules on evidentiary matters (I).

I. Rules on Evidentiary Matters

31. In the Chamber's view, there are two principles especially significant in the assessment of the evidence: first, the presumption of innocence of each accused person (I.1.); and second, the Chamber's discretionary power concerning the assessment of the evidence in view of a fair determination of the matter (I.2.).

I.1. Presumption of Innocence

32. Each accused is presumed innocent.[72] Accordingly, the Prosecution bears the onus of establishing the accused's guilt beyond reasonable doubt.[73] The Defence does not have to adduce rebuttal evidence to the Prosecution's case. The Prosecution will fail to discharge its persuasive burden of proof if the Defence's evidence raises a reasonable doubt within the Prosecution's case.[74] This principle also applies when the accused denies commission of the crimes with which he is charged because he was not at the scene of the crime at the time of its commission: "the Prosecution's burden is to prove the accused's guilt as to the alleged crimes beyond reasonable doubt in spite of the proffered alibi".[75] According to the settled jurisprudence, if the defence is reasonably possibly true, it must be successful.[76]

[69] Compare with Ntagerura Judgement, para. 34, in which the Trial Chamber did not consider the Prosecutor's argument, which were advanced for the first time during the presentation of closing arguments, to hold the accused criminally responsible based on the theory of joint criminal enterprise. I.2. Chamber's Discretionary power in the Assessment of the Evidence

33. The Rules of Procedure and Evidence govern the proceedings. The Chamber is not bound by national rules of evidence and may, in cases not otherwise provided for in the Rules, apply rules of evidence which will best favour a fair determination of the matter before it and are consonant with the spirit of the Statute and the general principles of law.[77] A Chamber may also admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value.[78]

34. Considering these principles, corroboration of evidence is not necessarily required: a Chamber may rely on a single witness' testimony as proof of a material fact.[79] A Chamber also has a broad discretion to admit hearsay evidence, even when it cannot be examined at its source and when it is not corroborated by direct evidence.[80]

35. The probative value to be attached to testimony is determined according to its credibility and reliability. When a witness is found to be credible, a Chamber must also determine whether his or her evidence is reliable. When applying these criteria, a Chamber must consider the evidence as a whole, including other witnesses' testimonies and the exhibits admitted.[81]

II. Factual Findings

36. In the present case, the Prosecution's evidence consisted mainly of hearsay evidence concerning both the content of the allegations and also the identification of André Rwamakuba. Five of the 18 Prosecution witnesses claimed to have direct knowledge of Rwamakuba.[82] Two witnesses also gave uncorroborated evidence to support specific allegations in the Indictment.[83] The Prosecution did not specify why this was the case and it must be presumed that this was the best evidence available. The Defence called witnesses who had both direct and indirect knowledge of Rwamakuba and many of them claimed to have been eyewitnesses to events alleged in the Indictment.

37. The Chamber will assess the evidence in order to determine whether the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that any of the criminal acts pleaded in the Indictment[84] were planned, instigated, ordered, committed or aided and abetted by the Accused, or with respect to the genocide that he was complicit in these acts, in Gikomero commune and at Butare University Hospital in April 1994. If established, the Chamber will determine whether these criminal acts were committed with the specific intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi group, and whether these acts were committed as a part of a widespread or systematic attack against the Tutsi civilian population on political, ethnic, or racial grounds. Pursuant to the established jurisprudence, the criminal intent of an accused may be proved through inferences from the facts and circumstances of a case.[85] This approach does not relieve the Prosecution of its burden of proving each element of its case, including genocidal intent, beyond reasonable doubt.[86]

38. The case against the Accused revolves around two sets of events allegedly committed in Gikomero commune and at Butare University Hospital. They are reviewed in Sections II.1. and II.2. respectively.

39. For each allegation, the Chamber will bear in mind that the Indictment is the main accusatory instrument. As discussed in Chapter I, the Pre-Trial Brief and the Opening Statement may, in some circumstances, resolve any ambiguities in the Indictment, provided that the Accused was in a reasonable position to understand the charges against him and confront the Prosecution case.

40. The evidence will be assessed as a whole, although the different elements of the assessment of the evidence are divided into sub-sections in the interests of clarity. For each allegation, the Chamber discusses the identification of the Accused, and the credibility and reliability of the Prosecution and Defence witnesses, including the alibi evidence. The Chamber will use various criteria in its assessment of the evidence, such as internal discrepancies in the witness' testimony, inconsistencies with other witnesses' testimony, inconsistencies with the witness' prior statements, relationship between the witness and the Accused and other witnesses, the criminal record of the witness, the impact of trauma on a witness' memory, discrepancies in translation, social and cultural factors, and the demeanour of the witness. References to admitted exhibits will also be made where appropriate.

41. Most Prosecution and Defence witnesses were granted protective measures in order to prevent public disclosure of their identities.[87] The Chamber seeks to set forth the basis of its reasoning as clearly as possible, whilst avoiding disclosure of any information that may reveal the identity of protected witnesses.

II.1. Alleged Criminal Acts Committed by André Rwamakuba in Gikomero Commune

42. The commune of Gikomero, presently named Gasabo District, lies approximately 25 kilometres north of Kigali town.[88] In 1994, it was within the préfecture of Kigali Rural and was divided into ten secteurs, including the Bumbogo, Gasabo, Gicaca, Gikomero, Gishaka, Kayanga, Nduba, Rutunga, Sha and Shango secteurs.[89] Each secteur was divided into cellules. Gikomero commune was surrounded by the communes of Giti, Gikoro, Rubungo, Rutongo and Mugambazi.[90] The Chamber and the parties went to Gikomero commune in January 2006 and viewed specific locations relevant to the case including the Trading Centre, the secteur Office, the Protestant School site, Kayanga School, Kayanga Health Centre and the Ndatemwa Trading Centre.[91]

43. The Indictment alleges that from 26 July 1993 until June 1994, André Rwamakuba travelled around various secteurs of the Gikomero commune organizing and participating in meetings which called upon the Hutu majority to exterminate the Tutsi, recruiting members for "MDR-Hutu Power" and supporting the "Hutu Power" (II.1.1.). It further alleges that between 10 and 11 April 1994, after these sensitization campaigns, Rwamakuba delivered weapons that were to be used to kill the Tutsi to the homes of André Muhire, near Ndatemwa Trading Centre in Gasabo secteur, and Etienne Kamanzi, located in the Kayanga secteur (II.1.2.). He is also alleged to have instigated the killing of three unknown men, but identified as Tutsi, at the Gikomero secteur office (II.1.3.).[92] Finally, between 13 and 15 April 1994, Rwamakuba allegedly went to the Kayanga Health Centre where he signalled the beginning of the massacres against Tutsi refugees and witnessed their killing committed by soldiers and Interahamwe (II.1.4.).

44. The Chamber will address each of these allegations in turn, and assess the related evidence. Neither the Indictment nor the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief and Opening Statement are very explicit, but they seem to suggest, as does the evidence adduced, that for each event alleged, the Accused commuted between Kigali town and the various locations in Gikomero commune.[93]

45. The Prosecution and Defence witnesses agree that in April 1994, attacks and massacres were committed in Gikomero commune against the Tutsi population, and specifically at the Ndatemwa Trading Centre, Gikomero Protestant School, Gishaka Parish and the Kayanga Health Centre.[94] Prosecution and Defence witnesses also described an Interahamwe named Ephrem Nyirigera, the communal brigadier named Michel Nyarwaya and the communal accountant named Mathias Rubanguka as three of the main leaders of the attacks and massacres against Tutsi throughout Gikomero commune during the 1994 genocide.[95] The Defence denies that André Rwamakuba was involved in any of those attacks and massacres.

II.1.1. Alleged Public Instigation in Gikomero from July 1993 through June 1994

46. The Prosecution alleges at paragraphs 3 to 5 of the Indictment that

> 3. […] After the establishment of MDR "Power" on 26 July 1993 or thereabouts, André Rwamakuba, practically every weekend, up to and including January 1994, and often accompanied by local authorities and officials of MDR "Power", traveled about his home commune in Gikomero, Kigali-rural préfecture. He organized meetings and participated in rallies in Kayanga, Gikomero, Rutunga, Gasabo and Gicaca secteurs. During the rallies, André Rwamakuba distributed songs of the Parmehutu party. The Accused's objective at the time was to recruit members for MDR "Power" party and to support "Hutu Power". The Accused called upon the Hutu majority to oppose the Arusha Peace Accords and to exterminate the Tutsi.
> 4. During those "sensitization" campaigns in Gikomero commune, particularly in January 1994, André Rwamakuba occasionally went about in a vehicle equipped with a public address system exhorting Hutu to unite in order to get rid of Tutsi. His announcements, the objective of which was to exhort Hutu to unite in order to get rid of Tutsi, included repeated statements that "the time has come for you, Hutu, to get rid of the enemy".
> 5. During the period from January through June 1994, André Rwamakuba made statements at various meetings and public gatherings in Gikomero commune, or publicly associated himself with statements or acts by other persons at such gatherings. Thus, from January 1994 and during the entire period preceding the events of April 1994 in Sha, Nduba, Shango, Kayanga and Gikomero secteurs, and in the communes adjoining Gikomero, namely Rutungo, Rubungo and Kanombe, he publicly instigated participants to combat "the enemy", all the Tutsi being characterized as "the enemy", "accomplices of the enemy" or "accomplices of RPF". After these gatherings, during which the Accused called for the extermination of Tutsi, the participants became excited, aggressive and disposed to physically attack and destroy the Tutsi as a group. Such speeches by the Accused signaled the start of killings in the commune. Furthermore, after the killings began in early April 1994, André Rwamakuba often praised and congratulated militiamen publicly for and on having killed Tutsi, thereby instigating other militias and armed civilians to participate in further attacks and massacres against the Tutsi population.

[93] See also the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, Opening Statement and Prosecution Closing Brief.
[94] These events are discussed below.
[95] See Prosecution Witnesses GAB, GAC and GIN; Defence Witnesses 3/1, 4/16, 6/10, 7/18 and 9/20.

(1) Evidence Adduced

47. Six Prosecution Witnesses testified that between 1992 and March 1994, André Rwamakuba came to Gikomero commune several times.[96] Some of them attested that during that period, he participated in MDR party meetings at Kayanga Primary School (1.1.), and in political rallies in four secteurs (1.2.). It was also said that Rwamakuba was present at gatherings in bars, and used a vehicle equipped with a loudspeaker in order to call for the extermination of the Tutsi (1.3.) and to recruit members for the MDR extremist wing, "Hutu Power" (1.4.).

48. The Prosecution contends that the sensitization campaigns allegedly conducted by the Accused between 23 July 1993 and April 1994 were principally aimed at laying the groundwork for the struggle against the Tutsi in which André Rwamakuba personally involved himself.[97] This Tribunal is only competent to prosecute individuals for crimes committed between 1 January and 31 December 1994.[98] Evidence of events prior to 1994 that can establish a "pattern, design or systematic course of conduct by the accused" or provide a context or background to crimes falling within the temporal jurisdiction of the Tribunal is however admissible.[99] Moreover, in the light of the discussion under Chapter I regarding the charges against the Accused, the Chamber will consider the evidence on the alleged public instigation in Gikomero commune discussed hereinafter as circumstantial evidence that could be relevant concerning the alleged crimes committed by the Accused in the Gikomero commune in April 1994.

(1.1.) MDR Party Meetings at Kayanga Primary School

49. Prosecution Witnesses GIQ, GAC and GAB did not personally know André Rwamakuba, but testified that they saw him at an MDR party meeting or several such party meetings held at Kayanga Primary School. None of them could recollect the exact date of the meeting or meetings. Witness GIQ placed a meeting at the school in 1992 "before the split of the MDR party", GAC could not specify the year of the event,[100] and GAB testified that a meeting took place in 1993 at Kayanga Primary School.

50. Prosecution Witness GIQ testified that in 1992, he saw André Rwamakuba with MDR leaders Anastase Gasana, Faustin Twagiramungu and Aloys Munyangazu recruiting members for their party in the courtyard of Kayanga Primary School. The witness recognized Anastase Gasana and Aloys Munyangazu because he knew them prior to that event.[101] He also recognized Twagiramungu because he used to hear him on the radio and was able to recognize his voice.[102] Along with the other party dignitaries, Rwamakuba was introduced to the crowd by Gasana,[103] as a native of Gikomero. They were told that those dignitaries were united and that they all belonged to the MDR party. Rwamakuba did not make any public statement on that day.

51. Prosecution Witness GAC also testified about an MDR rally organized by Faustin Twagiramungu at an unspecified date in the courtyard of Kayanga Primary School, which MRND party members also attended out of curiosity.[104] According to the witness, Twagiramungu, the then Prime Minister Agathe Uwilingiyimana, Jean De Dieu Kamuhanda and André Rwamakuba were introduced at the rally by the person conducting the ceremony. The witness heard approximately five people giving speeches, including Twagiramungu, who made a long speech about the MDR in his capacity as chairman of the party.[105] He also heard Rwamakuba addressing the population using language which, in the witness' view, amounted to calling on the audience to attack and kill Tutsi.[106] GAC also attested that the objective of the Kayanga Primary School rally was to call on the people to accept the coalition between the MDR-Power, the MDR-PARMEHUTU and the MRND-Power. He further testified that "Twagiramungu taught the Hutu to kill the Tutsi", and that the participants, including Twagiramungu, implemented the killing of Tutsis.[107]

52. Prosecution Witness GAB also testified to an MDR Power party meeting held in the courtyard of Kayanga Primary School in 1993, where he saw André Rwamakuba and other authorities attending that meeting.[108] The witness asserted that Twagiramungu and Gasana were not present.[109] According to GAB, the main objective of the rally was to sensitize members of the MDR, Hutus in general, to the fact that their enemy was the Tutsi "who had attacked Rwanda".[110] The witness heard the MDR Power representative say that the enemy of the MDR and of the Hutu in general was "the Tutsi who collaborate with the Inkotanyi." As soon as the witness heard this statement, he left the meeting. He did not know whether Rwamakuba took the floor to make a speech on that day.[111] The witness testified that after this meeting, there was a conflict between the Hutu and the Tutsi in Kayanga.[112]

(1.2.) Political Rallies in Sha, Nduba, Shango and Kayanga secteurs

53. Prosecution Witnesses GLM and GIT claimed to know André Rwamakuba personally,[113] and testified to various rallies that took place between 1993 and March 1994 in Sha, Nduba, Shango and Kayanga secteurs where Rwamakuba was said to have been present. None of them attended any of those rallies, but rather learned of them from other persons present.[114] These witnesses further testified that prior to each rally they heard or saw a vehicle equipped with a loudspeaker which was used to invite the population to attend the rallies.

54. Around October 1993, on a Sunday "about two months after the Hutu Power wing of the MDR had been created", Witness GLM saw André Rwamakuba pass where the witness lived on his way to and from Nduba secteur. He saw him in a car equipped with a megaphone calling out to people to attend a rally.[115] The witness was not present at the rally in Nduba, but a man[116] later told him that Rwamakuba had been there.[117] According to that man, Rwamakuba spoke to the public at the rally and explained the political situation in the country, and specifically that "the Hutu needed to unite their forces so that they can exterminate the Tutsi." He is also alleged to have said that "all the evils that the country was faced with were due to the Tutsi; the Tutsi were at the origin of all these evils, so they [106] According to the witness, André Rwamakuba said: "According to you, who are those who are many more than the others: is it people who have tinned roofs or those who have thatched roof?" Rwamakuba added: "if you were asked to burn down the house of people, which houses are with thatched roofs would it take much time?" GAC explained that he understood it as "If I were to order today that Tutsis be killed from now, would you think - did you think that there would be survivors?" (T. 4 July 2005, pp. 6 and 45).

[113] GLM and GIT are brothers. They both stated that their family and Rwamakuba's family were well acquainted since they were neighbours. GIT knew Rwamakuba when he was a secondary school pupil. He would have visited Rwamakuba's parents several times and met the Accused on these occasions. GLM was also used to see André Rwamakuba on visits to Gikomero. In particular, he met him at a parents' meeting of the free secondary school in Nduba, the École Technique Libre (ETL), which had been created by Rwamakuba and in which GLM had registered one of his elder brother's children. needed to be exterminated so that the country could be governed properly after having gotten rid of that problem."[118]

55. The witness testified that a similar event occurred at the end of November 1993, also on a Sunday.[119] Witness GLM was standing close to his house and saw a passing vehicle equipped with loudspeakers calling on the people to attend an MDR Power meeting to learn about the ideals and program of the party.[120] He saw André Rwamakuba driving the vehicle while the person next to him was speaking into the loudspeaker. On the following day, a man[121] who had attended the meeting met the witness at his workplace[122] and told him that Rwamakuba had publicly addressed a meeting held in Shango secteur. According to this informant, the meeting was related to the extermination of the Tutsi. It was allegedly said that since the Tutsis were behaving like traitors to the country, they had to be exterminated. Party members were told that the MDR Power was the party which contained the word "power," representing the force or the strength of Hutu to be counted on to exterminate the Tutsi. Witness GLM asserted that it was Rwamakuba who addressed the population about the MDR Power and the party's program.[123]

56. In January 1994, GLM again heard a vehicle equipped with a loudspeaker pass on the hill opposite his house. The message from the loudspeaker called upon the people to attend a rally at Kayanga secteur. Slogans of MDR Power were diffused asking the Hutu to unite. GLM was not able to see the person driving the vehicle, because it passed too far away from him.[124] The witness did not attend the Kayanga rally, but again, a man[125] who had attended told him that André Rwamakuba and other people who had come from Kigali were introduced to the audience. During the rally, the ideals of the MDR Power – the extermination of the Tutsi in particular – were "taught". It was said that the Hutu should not scatter into several parties but should instead unite into one party in order to exterminate the Tutsi.[126]

57. Prosecution Witness GIT was told about rallies or meetings organized in the centre of Sha secteur, in the square near the Kayanga School of Kayanga secteur and on the football field of Nduba secteur between August 1993 and March 1994. He did not attend these meetings but he did see André Rwamakuba going to the rallies on five separate occasions, driving a red pick-up truck, the last occasion being in March 1994.[127] Witness GIT would see Rwamakuba passing because he lived at a distance of 15 meters from the road coming from Kigali and going in the direction of the rallies.[128] He saw other people in the vehicle with Rwamakuba but did not know their names. According to the witness, they were singing in praise of their party and wearing caps and small flags bearing the MDR Power emblem.[129] Two people informed the witness about the content of the meetings and Rwamakuba's participation at the various rallies.[130] The latter had allegedly taken the floor and said that the time had come to eliminate the enemy Tutsi who were causing problems throughout the country.[131]

(1.3.) Calls for the Extermination of the Tutsi

58. Prosecution Witnesses GLM and ALA testified that they once heard André Rwamakuba personally call for the extermination of the Tutsi. Witness ALA saw him during the third week of January 1994 in his cellule on a Sunday, around one o'clock in the afternoon.[132] The witness was in his house, which is near the commercial centre. He heard a voice coming from a megaphone and went to see what was happening. He saw a khaki coloured Peugeot model 505 equipped with a megaphone, which was idling near the commercial centre with three people on board.[133] As ALA was approaching the vehicle, he was called by one of its passengers, Anastase Gasana who knew the witness, and asked to repair the vehicle.[134] Gasana then introduced the witness to the other two people in the vehicle, Aloys Munyangazu and André Rwamakuba.[135] As the witness was attempting to repair the car, Rwamakuba took the megaphone and called out to the people saying several times that "it was time for the Hutus to get rid of the enemy". The witness asserted that a reasonable person would have understood that Rwamakuba was referring to the Tutsi when speaking about the enemy.[136] Witness GLM testified that in February 1994,[137] he saw Rwamakuba in Froduard Birasa's bar in Nduba Centre[138] and heard him say that the Tutsis were a big problem and it was time to get rid them.[139] Rwamakuba is alleged not to have gone into greater depth on the matter because of GLM's presence. The witness stated that this was the only time he heard Rwamakuba speak such words.[140] In GLM's view, the people present at the bar planned to exterminate the Tutsi and later implemented this extermination plan.[141]

(1.4.) Recruitment of Members for the MDR "Hutu Power"

59. Prosecution Witnesses GIQ and ALA testified that they saw or heard André Rwamakuba recruiting members for the MDR party. In January 1994, Witness GIQ saw him in Emmanuel Rubagumya's bar. Rwamakuba had bought people drinks and was telling them that they should join the MDR party, recruit other members and that they should kill anyone who refused to join the party.[142] GIQ also testified that he saw Rwamakuba in 1992 or in 1993 in a white vehicle which was equipped with loudspeakers playing songs glorifying the MDR-Power Hutu.[143] The songs were asking the Hutu to unite, and claiming that due to this unity, they would overcome. Rwamakuba was accompanied by the then Minister of Information, Pascal Ndengejeho. The vehicle was going slowly, ensuring that people could hear what was being said including GIQ who was standing close to where the vehicle passed.[144] Witness ALA testified that he saw Rwamakuba in the third week of October 1993, on or about 22 October 1993, in a vehicle passing by in Kayanga.[145] He was speaking to Mathias Rubanguka and Gérard Gakuba from his car.[146] Later, Rubanguka informed the witness that Rwamakuba was recruiting members for the "MDR power", and was looking for people whom he could trust to assist him with additional recruitment.

(2) Assessment of the Evidence

60. In the Chamber's view, the Prosecution witnesses' testimonies on the alleged sensitization campaigns led by the Accused in Gikomero are not consistent with certain allegations in the Indictment (2.1.). Furthermore, the Prosecution evidence is tainted by internal contradictions (2.2.) and directly contradicted by the defence alibi evidence (2.3.).

(2.1.) Lack of Consistency between the Indictment and the Prosecution Evidence

61. Testimony was given on eleven instances between 1992 and March 1994 during which André Rwamakuba allegedly came to Gikomero commune. It has not been shown that towards the end of 1993 and in early January 1994, the Accused went to Gikomero commune "practically every week-end", as alleged in paragraph 3 of the Indictment. None of the witnesses testified about meetings held in Gikomero, Rutunga, Gasabo and Gicaca secteurs, or in the adjoining communes of Rutungo, Rubungo and Kanombe, although one Prosecution witness testified that he saw Rwamakuba passing by in a vehicle in Rutunga and Gasabo secteurs at the beginning of 1994.[147] The Prosecution, therefore, failed to prove that during meetings in these secteurs and communes, the Accused instigated participants to "combat" and exterminate the Tutsi, as alleged in paragraph 5 of the Indictment.

(2.2.) Reliability Issues

62. The identification of the Accused raises a number of concerns. Witnesses GIT and GLM, who are brothers, are the sole witnesses claiming to know André Rwamakuba personally. They said they were neighbours of Rwamakuba's parents, and have known him for a long time. Neither of them, however, could give a satisfactory description of Rwamakuba nor much detail concerning how they came to know him.[148] It is interesting to note that Witness GIT claimed not to know whether his brother was testifying in this case, although they live near one another and both testified in this case within a short space of time.[149]

63. Both GAB and GAC testified that they saw André Rwamakuba for the first time at the stone-laying ceremony of a primary school in Rutunga, in the company of the then Minister of Primary and Secondary School, Faustin Munyanzesa.[150] GAB could not specify the exact date of this ceremony, except that it was before 1994, but GAC placed the event in 1992. Neither witness had any prior knowledge of Rwamakuba. The latter was pointed out to GAC by a young man who used to live in Rutunga.[151] He was also told that Rwamakuba was working in the Ministry of Health. GAB stated that the Accused was introduced to the assembly as "the doctor André Rwamakuba, a native of Gikomero commune."[152] It is noteworthy that GAB was only fifteen years old at that time and was not able to provide any details about the event. In contrast to Witness GAB's testimony, GAC did not specify that Rwamakuba was introduced during the alleged rally held in 1993 at Kayanga Primary School.

[147] Witness GIQ did not hear or see André Rwamakuba say anything and did not see him do anything (T. 15 June 2005, p. 32).

[148] Prosecution Witness GIT described André Rwamakuba as follows: "Someone who was of average size. Now, as for his complexion, his skin was between light complexion and dark complexion, the light complexion being the more dominant. He was not a fat man, nor was he thin; between the two. […] He was someone who was solid in build, and he was neither too big nor too thin." (T. 23 June 2005, p. 53).
Prosecution Witness GLM described Rwamakuba as follows: "a man of average size, his complexion was neither dark nor light, medium. He seemed to have a tendency to have chubby cheeks and very little hair." "He was a well built man and I would say that he wasn't thin." "His voice was deep and somewhat rough." (T. 20 June 2005, p. 4).

[151] T. 4 July 2005, p. 37.

[152] T. 5 July 2005, p. 43.

64. The lack of consistency between the Indictment and the testimonies adduced on this aspect of the case was compounded by witnesses who gave different and irreconcilable versions of the facts. Witnesses GAC, GAB, GIQ, GLM and GIT testified about various rallies held in Gikomero commune. The Prosecution seemed to present these as separate rallies held on different occasions.[153] It is however uncertain as to whether the witnesses testified to the same rallies or to different ones. Different dates were given for a meeting at Kayanga Primary School, which the same authorities were alleged to have attended and at which similar speeches were given. In his testimony, Witness GAC could not specify the year of the Kayanga School meeting, but in a previous signed statement, had attested that it took place at the end of 1993.[154] Witness GAB testified to the presence of Rwamakuba at a Kayanga meeting in 1993, and although Witness GIQ acknowledged the existence of a meeting in 1993 in Kayanga he specified that Rwamakuba was not in attendance.[155]

65. The Chamber recalls that the evidence of GIT and GLM is indirect and mostly hearsay in many respects. The source of Witness GIT's information casts doubt upon the reliability of his testimony. According to this witness, his informer was respectable and honest, but Witness GLM asserted that a man with the same name as GIT's informer was partial, biased and disrespectful towards others.[156]

66. Some major aspects of GLM's testimony are also vague and inconsistent. When the Prosecution asked who GLM thought had called for the extermination of Tutsi, the witness replied that the person usually there to speak about MDR Power was André Rwamakuba.[157] He also recalled the Nduba secteur rally as having been held on a Sunday, whereas later, he stated that he was told that it was on a Sunday.[158] Similarly, he first said that he saw André Rwamakuba holding the megaphone and calling on people to come and attend the Nduba rally,[159] but during cross-examination, stated instead that Rwamakuba was driving the car and that the person sitting beside him was speaking through the megaphone.[160] The witness placed the event at Birasa's bar in February 1994,[161] then at the end of the year in 1993, only to later reaffirm that it was in February 1994.[162] This important event at Birasa's bar, where Witness GLM allegedly heard Rwamakuba calling for the extermination of Tutsi, was mentioned for the first time in court. Also mentioned for the first time in court was Rwamakuba's alleged discussion about the split in MDR-Hutu Power. GLM claimed that he had already mentioned these details to the Prosecution, but that the first investigators recorded only a summary and the subsequent team of investigators made many mistakes in the document and did not return to him to enable the necessary corrections to be made.[163] The Chamber however notes that on 11 February 1998, GLM signed a statement describing Rwamakuba's political and anti-Tusti activities which mentioned Birasa as one of the extremists with whom Rwamakuba used to work.[164]

67. The testimony of these witnesses is also contradicted by other Prosecution witnesses' testimonies. Witness ALA described an incident where André Rwamakuba travelled with Anastase Gasana and called for the extermination of the Tutsi in Gasana's presence. GAC alleged that at the Kayanga Primary School meeting, Faustin Twagiramungu "taught to kill the Tutsi". Witnesses GIT, GIQ and Prosecution Expert Witness Alison Des Forges, however, testified that Anastase Gasana and

In the same statement, he declared that the meeting took place at the Kayanga secteur office and that he could no longer remember what André Rwamakuba said on that occasion. On the contrary, the witness testified in court that the meeting took place in the courtyard of the Kayanga School. He further stated the alleged speech made by Rwamakuba on that occasion.

Faustin Twagiramungu were all moderate MDR politicians.[165] Witness GIQ stated that he would have been surprised to see Rwamakuba and Gasana together.[166] GAC's placing of Jean de Dieu Kamuhanda at the MDR meeting in Kayanga was also contradicted by evidence that Kamuhanda was an MRND politician.[167]

68. GLM's testimony concerning a meeting in Nduba secteur around October 1993, "about two months after" the creation of the MDR-Power wing[168] is also inconsistent with the Prosecution expert witness' evidence. She described the process of division within the MDR as starting from February 1993 (when the Rwandan Patriotic Front ("RPF") violated the ceasefire and launched a massive military advance across the northern part of Rwanda causing the displacement of hundreds of thousands of people) until 23 July 1993 when Twagiramungu was expelled from the MDR party because he wished, inter alia, to maintain the party's collaboration with the RPF.[169] Twagiramungu's expulsion was confirmed by Defence Witness Jean-Marie Nkezebera, a former member of the MDR's political bureau and vice-president of the party in the Kigali area. Therefore, GLM's assertion that Twagiramungu attended an MDR-Power meeting around October 1993 appears inherently unlikely. In addition, the expert witness stated that, after the October 1993 assassination of the Burundian President – the first freely and fairly elected Hutu President – by Tutsi soldiers, Froduald Karamira introduced the concept of Hutu Power at a massive political rally at the Amohoro stadium in Kigali.[170] Although the expert witness was told that there was a meeting in Gitarama in September 1993 where the term "Hutu power" was used, she agreed that the term originated at the rally in October 1993. This testimony conflicts with GAC's testimony, who instead testified to the use of the term or slogan "power" at rallies in 1992 and in the earlier parts of 1993.

69. These inconsistencies cannot be justified by the time elapsed, translation discrepancies, or the manner in which the statements were taken. They become still more significant when viewed against the alibi evidence adduced by the Defence.

(2.3.) Alibi

70. The Defence alleges that André Rwamakuba could not have participated in the alleged public instigations in Gikomero between September 1993 and March 1994 because he was not in Rwanda for most of that time.[171] Evidence was adduced that between 23 September 1993 and 10 March 1994, the Accused was studying at the Prince Leopold Institute in Antwerp, Belgium, and that between 17 and 29 March 1994, he attended a World Health Organization (WHO) Conference in Aswan, Egypt. The Defence put the Prosecution on notice of the Belgian alibi at a preliminary hearing held in 2000.[172] In addition, the Defence served notice of the alibi to the Prosecution at the outset of trial and disclosed the names and addresses of witnesses and other evidence which it intended to rely upon in the presentation of this defence.[173]

71. To support the alibi, the Defence called six witnesses who mostly relied on their own diaries or personal documents to recollect the exact dates when they met André Rwamakuba during the time in question.[174] The Prosecution did not dispute and the Chamber accepts that the Accused was trained as a medical doctor, studying medicine in Belgium between 1970 and 1974 and then at Butare University between 1975 and 1978,[175] and had a career as a public health specialist, being appointed Director of the Kigali Health Region in 1992.[176]

72. Defence Witnesses Henri Van Balen and Pierre Mercenier are co-founders of the Prince Leopold Institute (Institute of Tropical Medicine) in Antwerp, Belgium.[177] Both of them have had long medical careers working with both Belgian authorities and international organizations such as the World Health Organization.[178] In 1993-1994, they were both professors of public health at the Antwerp Institute of Tropical Medicine. Relying on various documents,[179] both testified that André Rwamakuba participated in a training course at the Institute in Belgium between 27 September 1993 and March 1994. According to Professor Mercenier's attestation, the training course ended on 9 March 1994.[180] The report drafted by Rwamakuba and the attestation signed by Professor Van Balen, however, mentioned the end date of the course as 27 March 1994.[181] The explanation given for the discrepancy in this date was that since the training report submitted by Rwamakuba was made to the Belgian Technical Cooperation for scholarship purposes and had to cover a six months period, it did not correspond with the exact end date of the course.[182] Professor Van Balen explained further that in May 1995, Rwamakuba, who was in Namibia at the time, wrote him a letter requesting certification of his training in Antwerp. In his letter, Rwamakuba explained that he was looking for work in Namibia and had had to leave Rwanda where he abandoned all of his documents. Since Professor Mercenier was already retired when Henri Van Balen received the letter, the latter drafted the certificate on the basis of Rwamakuba's training report. The witness stated that as he had personal knowledge that Rwamakuba had completed the six-month scholarship, he therefore did not pay attention to the exact dates.

73. Professors Van Balen and Pierre Mercenier could not categorically attest to André Rwamakuba's presence every day in Belgium during the period of his training,[183] but they specified that it was a full-time course and that he would have had to stay in Belgium for its duration. Professor Mercenier testified that initially he would have seen Rwamakuba about once per week and later on, about once a fortnight. Both Professors also saw him from time to time in passing in the corridors of the Institute.[184] They further testified to specific dates when meetings had been arranged with him, as recorded in their diaries. Henri Van Balen noted that his diary mentions a meeting with Rwamakuba on 13 October 1993 to discuss a colloquium,[185] and Pierre Mercenier stated that he met Rwamakuba on 21 February 1994 in Belgium to discuss the end of the training and his prospective mission to Rwanda in April 1994.[186]

Due to the particularly close relationship between the Accused and Witness 3/A and the age of the witness at the time of the event, the Chamber is of the view that it will be more appropriate to set aside this evidence.

74. Doctor Francis Monet is a doctor specialized in tropical medicine who was working for the Belgian Technical Cooperation in Rwanda from 1990 to 1994.[187] He came to know André Rwamakuba when the latter was appointed as the Director of the Kigali Health Region in 1992. They used to meet on a daily basis when they were both in Rwanda.[188] Doctor Monet confirmed that he was present at the airport when Rwamakuba left Rwanda on 23 September 1993, between 6.30 and 7 a.m., for Belgium. The witness relied on his diary,[189] but could also recall that event because, on that occasion, he had been somewhat upset that Rwamakuba had arrived very late to the airport for his flight. He also testified that he was at the airport for Rwamakuba's return to Rwanda on the morning of 10 March 1994. According to the witness, Rwamakuba did not return to Rwanda between 23 September 1993 and 10 March 1994. While the witness did not recall receiving any news from the Accused during that period, he submitted that it was practically impossible for Rwamakuba to return to Rwanda without him knowing about it. Even if Rwamakuba had not contacted him directly, he was still certain that others would have told him of his return.[190]

75. Defence witness Edith Van Wynsberghe met André Rwamakuba during his medical studies in Belgium in 1973. She stated that she saw him approximately ten times while he was attending the training course at the Tropical Institute of Antwerp in Belgium, between September 1993 and March 1994. Relying on various receipts,[191] the witness was able to recollect specific dates when she met Rwamakuba during that period. She saw him sometime between the end of November 1993 and the beginning of December 1993, when she went to Antwerp to order a sewing machine.[192] She later visited him for his birthday on 27 December 1993, at his house in Antwerp.[193] She could not confirm where Rwamakuba was between about 1 December 1993 and 27 December 1993.[194] Around 6 January 1994, the witness and her daughter accompanied Rwamakuba to look for a used car in another town in Belgium.[195] On 2 March 1994, she took Rwamakuba to a pharmacy in Antwerp to buy medical supplies.[196] She also accompanied the Accused to the airport on 9 March 1994 when he left Belgium for Rwanda.[197]

76. Defence Witness 1/1, who is a close relative of André Rwamakuba, testified that he left Rwanda to pursue a program of study in Belgium between late September 1993 and March 1994.[198] Witness 1/1 confirmed that Rwamakuba never came back to Rwanda during that period. The witness further provided some correspondence received by Rwamakuba at an address in Belgium where Edith Vanwynsberghe testified having visited him for his birthday and Rwamakuba's diary from 1993 diary with references to his stay in Belgium.[199]

77. The Defence also adduced evidence concerning André Rwamakuba's presence in Egypt between 17 and 29 March 1994. Edith Van Wynsberghe saw Rwamakuba again on 18 March 1994, while he was in transit at the airport in Brussels.[200] Doctor Francis Monet testified that he met him in Kigali on the evening of his return from Egypt at the Regional Health Centre offices on 29 March 1994.[201] Professor Henri Van Balen testified that Rwamakuba was to attend an international conference organized by the WHO in Egypt upon completion of the course in Belgium. The secretary of the Institute told Professor Van Balen that she had made reservations for Rwamakuba to attend this conference, but that these were not final tickets. Finally, Witness 1/1 also testified that André Rwamakuba left Rwanda on 17 March 1994 and returned on 29 March 1994 from a seminar in Egypt.

78. Defence Witness Monet testified that between André Rwamakuba's return from Belgium and departure to Egypt, he saw him every day at the Regional Health Centre since they were working together. On 11 March 1994, they went together with a delegation of Belgian members of Parliament to Rutungo Hospital.[202] Witness 1/1 testified that during the same period, Rwamakuba visited his parents once in Gikomero to console them over the death of a relative who died in February.[203]

79. The Defence tendered into evidence the Rwandan passport of André Rwamakuba, which was in the custody of the UNDF and provided to the parties for inspection.[204] This passport was issued in Kigali in August 1993, with a visa for studies (as intern) issued by the Belgian Embassy on 2 September 1993, an entry stamp dated 23 September 1993 for Belgium and an exit stamp dated 9 March 1994 from Belgium, a single-entry visa for Egypt issued on 17 March 1994, entry and exit stamps for Egypt, a transit stamp for Kenya dated 28 March 1994, and an exit stamp from Kenya dated 29 March 1994.[205]

80. The Chamber finds these Defence witnesses individually credible and reliable. Henri Van Balen, Pierre Mercenier and François Monet were professors and colleagues of André Rwamakuba and nothing has emerged to indicate that they would have any particular interest in protecting him by providing false testimony. Their evidence is supported by various documents admitted into exhibit. Edith Van Wynsberghe, although closer to the Accused, also gave a fair and probable account of the facts, which was based on her analysis of the specific documents she had in her possession and which were tendered into exhibit. None of these documents admitted into evidence were rebutted by the Prosecution. The Chamber took particular care with the evidence of Defence Witness 1/1, as a close relative of the Accused; it is nonetheless satisfied that she was also reliable.

81. The Chamber accepts the explanation given by Professors Van Balen and Mercenier concerning the inconsistency between the dates of André Rwamakuba's attendance at the training program in Belgium on the certificates and in the report. It is noteworthy that the Accused requested Van Balen's confirmation of his attendance at the training program before his arrest by the Namibian authorities in 1995.[206]

82. The Chamber also notes that the Prosecution failed to rebut the alibi evidence. It acknowledged that the Accused was in Belgium between September 1993 and March 1994, but submitted that he must have come back to Rwanda at the times the witnesses testified to having seen him. The Prosecution was aware of the defence alibi a long time before the beginning of the trial and was therefore in a position to conduct a proper investigation,[207] it did, however, not adduce any evidence to support its theory, nor did it explain the fact that there were no records of these alleged trips in Rwamakuba's passport which was in the UNDF's possession.[208] The Prosecution did rely upon a copy of a page from another Rwandan passport belonging to Rwamakuba, containing a picture of the Accused and a description of his identity,[209] but it was not able to tender other pages failing to possess the entire document and was not able to provide any other information concerning its source.[210]

83. In the Chamber's view, the proffered alibi concerning André Rwamakuba's absence from Rwanda between 23 September 1993 and 29 March 2004 is sufficient to cast reasonable doubt upon the allegations regarding the Accused's participation in public meetings and gatherings during that period in Gikomero commune. The Chamber notes that paragraph 5 of the Indictment could be interpreted as alleging the participation of the Accused in sensitization meetings beyond 29 March 2004, extending through June 1994. This possible contention was not clarified, nor supported by the Prosecution evidence. Witnesses ALA, GAB, GAC, GIQ, GIT and GLM testified to meetings held only until March 1994, and not beyond. Other Prosecution witnesses testified to the Accused's participation in specific attacks against Tutsi in April 1994 during which he congratulated militiamen,[211] but their testimonies did not include any statements made by the Accused at various meetings or that he participated in any specific gatherings. This lack of clarity of the charges in the Indictment and the Prosecution's evidence cannot, for reasons of fairness, be interpreted to the disadvantage of the Accused.

84. In light of the earlier conclusions regarding inconsistencies in the Prosecution evidence and the unreliability of the Prosecution witnesses and considering the proffered alibi, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to prove, beyond reasonable doubt, the allegations set forth in paragraphs 3 to 5 of the Indictment.

II.1.2. Alleged Delivery of Machetes by André Rwamakuba in Gikomero Commune in April 1994

85. The Prosecution alleges at paragraph 11 of the Indictment that:

> Between 10 and 20 April 1994, André Rwamakuba delivered bags of machetes to the home of André Muhire, near Ndatemwa trading center in Gasabo secteur, in his home commune of Gikomero, Kigali-rural préfecture. On that occasion, between 10 and 11 April, André Rwamakuba held a meeting with several influential local members of MDR "Hutu Power" political party, including the persons known as Joas Habimana, Chairman of MDR "Power" in Rutunga secteur, Ndamage and André Muhire. Several days later, about 13 April, André Muhire distributed the machetes to local residents, who then used them to attack and massacre the Tutsi population. Following such attacks, many Tutsi were killed, including residents of Ndatemwa Centre, namely the wife of a man called Gakumba and her son, Kambanda, and the persons known as Kanuma, Rwihimba, Kankidi, Rutembya, Rutembesa, and many unidentified refugees from Rutongo, Nkuzuzu and Rutanga secteurs. Again, between 10 and 11 April 2004, André Rwamakuba delivered bags of machetes to the home of Etienne Kamanzi, the director of the Kayanga Health Center. The Accused knew, or had reasons to know, that the machetes would be used in attacks against the Tutsi in those areas, thereby aiding and abetting the killing campaign against the Tutsi population.

86. The Chamber will address first the delivery of machetes to André Muhire's home (II.1.2.1.) and then the one to Etienne Kamanzi's home (II.1.2.2.).

II.1.2.1. Alleged Delivery of Machetes to André Muhire and Subsequent Massacres of Tutsi at Ndatemwa Trading Centre

87. Despite the large time-frame pleaded at the beginning of paragraph 11 of the Indictment, "between 10 and 20 April 1994", the subsequent sentence of this paragraph specifies that the Accused delivered bags of machetes to the home of André Muhire "between 10 and 11 April"[212] and that the machetes were distributed "several days later, about 13 April". As confirmed in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, Opening Statement and Closing Arguments, there is no doubt that it was the Prosecution's case that this event took place "between 10 and 11 April 1994".[213] The Chamber will therefore take into consideration this more specific time-frame when dealing with the assessment of the evidence.

(1) Evidence Adduced

88. Ndatemwa Trading Centre is located in the Gasabo secteur of the Gikomero commune, approximately 36 kilometres from Kigali town,[214] where André Rwamakuba was living at the time of the allegations in the Indictment. Both Prosecution and Defence witnesses testified that between 9 and 11 April 1994, two Tutsi named Rutembya and Rutembesa, were beaten up at that Centre and then taken to Kayanga Health Centre where they were subsequently killed.[215] These witnesses also testified that an attack was led against the Tutsi population at Ndatemwa Trading Centre on 13 April 1994.[216] The detailed recollection of this event differs between Prosecution and Defence witnesses.

89. Prosecution Witness GII stated that, between 10 and 11 April 1994 in the afternoon, while he was standing on the road a few meters from Muhire's house in Ndatemwa Trading Centre, he saw five bags unloaded from the boot of a white car and taken into Muhire's house. André Rwamakuba had already come out of the car. Prosecution Witnesses AVD and AVC affirmed that they saw a car with a similar description arriving at Ndatemwa Centre,[217] although they placed this event on a different date than Witness GII: AVD asserted that this event occurred on 12 April 1994 in the afternoon; [218] AVC stated first that he saw the car between 10 and 13 April 1994, and during cross-examination he said that it could have been on 12 April 1994.[219] Witness AVD saw three bags being unloaded from the boot of the car and taken into Muhire's house. AVC testified that the vehicle stayed at Muhire's home for less than an hour,[220] but GII and AVD indicated that Rwamakuba remained at Muhire's house for approximately one to two hours in the company of other persons.[221] According to Witness GII, Joas Habimana, Ndamage and other people were also in Muhire's house; and Witness AVD placed Ndoli and Murangira at the house. Witness AVC was also told that Rwamakuba went to Muhire's house on that occasion with an Interahamwe named Ephrem.[222] The Prosecution Witnesses asserted that machetes were distributed by Muhire to young people from Rutungo and Gasabo secteurs[223] during the night of 12 April or the morning of 13 April 1994.[224] Witness AVD further stated that Muhire was assisted by Ndoli and Murangira on that occasion. The Prosecution witnesses testified that after that distribution, houses of Tutsi were attacked and destroyed. According to Witness GII, Tutsi from the commune but also Tutsi refugees from Rubungo and Kanombe were killed.

[215] Prosecution Witness AVC testified that Rutembya and Rutembesa were beaten up on 9 or 11 April 1994 (T. 27 June 2005, pp. 33-35); Prosecution Witness AVD said that this event took place during the same week of Habyarimana's death but before André Rwamakuba's arrival at the Ndatemwa Trading Centre (T. 28 June 2005, pp. 5-6); Prosecution Witness GII testified that this event took place on or about 11 April 1994 (T. 23 June 2005, pp. 43-44). According to Defence Witnesses 9/20, Rutembya and Rutembesa were beaten up on 11 April 1994 (T. 7 November 2005, p. 22); and Defence Witness 4/16 said that it happened between 11 and 12 April 1994 (T. 19 January 2006, p. 57).

[218] Witness AVD testified that the event took place "four or five days after Habyarimana's death". Responding to the Defence Counsel, the witness said that Rwamakuba arrived on 12 April 1994 in the afternoon (T. 28 June 2006, pp. 7 and 31).

[223] AVD specified that they were young Interahamwe, Hutus.
[224] AVC testified that the machetes were distributed after Rwamakuba's departure, in the night of 12 April 1994; GII stated that the machetes were distributed on 13 April 1994, around 9.40 am; AVD situated the distribution on the "morning of the third day" after the beating up of two people at the Centre (T. 28 June 2006, p. 30).

90. Defence Witnesses 9/20 and 4/16 gave very different accounts of the events at Ndatemwa Trading Centre. They stated that the events took place on13 April 1994 and, on that day, Ephrem Nyirigera, accompanied by three communal policemen, about fifteen Interahamwe from Ruhengeri as well as refugees from Gitega and members of the local population, looted houses belonging to Tutsi and threatened the people with machetes and clubs.[225] That attack was stopped by the intervention of the Conseiller from Gasabo secteur, named Ntamuhanga, who was assisted by soldiers. The Defence witnesses asserted that no killings occurred in Ndatemwa[226] or Gasabo secteur,[227] except for the two brothers, named Rutembesa and Rutembya, who were beaten on or about 11 April 1994 and then subsequently killed at Kayanga Health Centre.[228] They also asserted that André Rwamakuba never came to Ndatemwa during that period.

(2) Assessment of the Evidence

91. The Chamber notes that the testimonies of the Prosecution witnesses are not consistent with the allegations against the Accused (2.1.). In addition, they are generally unreliable, especially when considering the evidence adduced to support the Accused's alibi (2.2.).

(2.1.) Lack of Consistency between the Indictment and the Prosecution Evidence

92. Witnesses AVC's and AVD's testimonies that Rwamakuba delivered machetes to Muhire's home on 12 April 1994 are inconsistent with the allegation that this event took place between 10 and 11 April 1994.[229]

93. Witnesses GII, AVC and AVD also testified that two Tutsi named Rutembya and Rutembesa were beaten up on 9 or 11 April 1994 at the Ndatemwa Centre, before the alleged delivery of machetes at Muhire's house, and were killed later at the Kayanga Health Centre. This evidence, corroborated by testimony from Defence witnesses,[230] is inconsistent with the allegation that Rutembya and Rutembesa were killed as a result of attacks against some Tutsi after the delivery of machetes by Rwamakuba at Ndatemwa Trading Centre.

(2.2.) Reliability Issues

94. The identification of André Rwamakuba at the time of the alleged machetes delivery to Muhire's home is unreliable. AVC and AVD had no prior knowledge of him when he allegedly arrived at Ndatemwa Trading Centre. Their identification of the Accused is based on untested hearsay evidence. Witness AVC who was hiding in a clump of bushes and could not see the people in the car, was told by two men that the person who had arrived in the car was Rwamakuba.[231] AVD testified that he could not see the people in the car due to the crowd surrounding it. In court, AVC and AVD were not able to offer any physical description of the person they claim to be Rwamakuba.

95. GII is the sole Prosecution witness who claimed to have prior knowledge of André Rwamakuba. GII allegedly saw Rwamakuba when the latter came to attend a meeting at Muhire's house, on 4 or 5 April 1994, with the President of MDR-Power in Rutunga secteur, Joas Habimana, and the MDR-Power representative at Gasabo, Ndamage. On that occasion, people told GII that it was Rwamakuba who had come to attend this meeting. GII claimed that a few days later, when Rwamakuba came to deliver machetes at Muhire's place, he recognized him as the man who was identified to him on 4 or 5 April 1994.

96. The Chamber notes that GII identified André Rwamakuba from information given to him by unknown and unidentified people. The witness described him in very general terms[232] and was only able to specify that he wore spectacles. The Defence, however, challenged that Rwamakuba wore spectacles at that time and tendered into evidence a letter from the UNDF Commanding Officer stating that the Accused had "no spectacle in his possession upon his transfer to the UNDF". [233] In addition, Defence witnesses who had personal knowledge of Rwamakuba, testified that he never wore glasses.[234]

97. Alibi evidence from the Defence strengthens the doubt on GII's reliability to identify André Rwamakuba. According to Defence Witness François Monet, Rwamakuba spent the day of 5 April 1994 from 7.30 a.m. to 5.30 p.m. with himself and Pierre Mercenier.[235] Not only did he rely on his diary entries to confirm this date,[236] but the witness also asserted that he remembered very well Rwamakuba's presence on that day since the latter had been leading the delegation when they met with the Director General of Health. Although Pierre Mercenier could not actually remember whether the Accused was present on 5 April 1994, he claimed that he would have been surprised if he had not met him on that day. The other possible date given by Witness GII as having met Rwamakuba was 4 April 1994. That day was Easter Monday, and testimony was given that Rwamakuba spent the day with his family in Kigali. [237] Considering GII's untested indirect evidence on Rwamakuba's identification and the reliability of the Defence witness' testimony, the Chamber finds that there is some reasonable doubt that GII would have seen Rwamakuba on 4 or 5 April 1994 when the Accused allegedly came to attend a meeting at Muhire's place. This doubt is supported by the Defence evidence on the road access to Gikomero in April 1994.

(2.3.) Road Access to Gikomero

98. The Defence disputed that the Accused could have been present in Gikomero commune at the time of the alleged event. The parties agreed and the Chamber accepts that André Rwamakuba was sworn in as a Minister of the Interim Government on 9 April 1994, attended a governmental meeting held in Kigali at the Hotel des Diplomates on 11 April 1994,[238] and was living in Kigali until 12 April 1994 when he went to Gitarama with the convoy of the Interim Government.[239] The admission of these facts has a major impact on the Prosecution's theory since at the onset of this trial, the Defence challenged the accessibility from and to Gikomero commune due to geographical and military obstacles to road travel in April 1994. In its Closing Brief, the Prosecution submitted that the Defence did not show that it was impossible to move to Gikomero at that time.[240] It further contended that as a Minister, Rwamakuba could move more easily around the country than an ordinary citizen.[241] No evidence, however, was adduced in support of that submission. The Chamber recalls that, contrary to the Prosecution's assertion, the Accused is presumed innocent and does not have to prove anything. If the evidence adduced by the Defence raises reasonable doubt, the Prosecution has failed to establish the guilt of the Accused.

99. In the present case, the Prosecution decided not to call any witness to rebut the Defence allegation "but preferred to focus on the credibility and limited knowledge of Defence witnesses on this point".[242] It only called investigator Upendra Baghel who testified to a study he conducted in 2003, and who spoke of several routes between Kigali and Gikomero commune. According to his report, the average distance between Kigali and Ndatemwa Trading Centre is approximately 36 kilometres which would have taken one and a half hours to travel.[243] The Defence acknowledged that the routes and timing of journeys to Gikomero commune were reasonably reviewed in that document, "with the caveat that [the timings] were based on a journey in a good, four wheel drive vehicle, in the dry season, and in peace time".[244] The Prosecution investigator admitted that the routes were hilly and difficult, and that he had no knowledge of the conditions for travel in that area in 1994.[245] He also denied having knowledge of the positions occupied by the military between 8 and 30 April 1994. The weight of his evidence is therefore less than that of a witness who was present in the relevant area in 1994.

100. Defence witnesses, who were present in Gikomero or tried to get there in April 1994, testified that shortly after 7 April 1994, four main routes between Kigali and Gikomero commune were all effectively severed by military positions of the RPF.[246] According to Witness 9/20, it was impossible that André Rwamakuba came to Ndatemwa between 10 and 13 April 1994, because the people who lived there could not move about and were ordered to stay home.[247] The witness explained that the road from Kigali to Ndatemwa was impassable and that vehicles could only travel from Rutunga to Ndatemwa and could go no further.[248] The witness asserted that no Minister came to Gikomero in the days in leading up to 13 April 1994.[249] Defence Witness 6/10 stated that from 9 April 1994, roads, especially those from Rutongo, were not practicable because the RPF had already taken control of that area. He could not see how a vehicle would have left Kigali and come to the east.[250] Defence Witness 7/3 confirmed this evidence and stated that between President Habyarimana's death and 14 April 1994, it was not easy to travel from Gikomero to Kigali because the RPF had overrun strategic positions, especially on Gikomero hills.[251] According to Defence Witnesses 1/5, 3/13 and 3/4, several roads from Kigali leading up to Gikomero could not be used after 8 or 9 April 1994 because of the RPF's presence and ongoing fighting.[252] Defence Witness 3/22 also testified that it was not possible to get to and from Kigali after 12 April 1994 because there were soldiers on the roads.[253] He acknowledged that there were other secondary roads that might have been used to Gikomero, but those small roads were connected to the main road coming from Kigali, which was blocked.[254] His testimony was corroborated by Defence Witness 4/12 who lived close to the road. This witness asserted that,

Moreover, Defence Witness 2/18 said that after 13 April 1994, no one could leave Kigali to get to Gikomero because Kigali and Remera were captured at that time (T. 23 January 2006, p. 28), and Defence Witness 3/22 testified that Defence Witness 3/22 further testified that after 12 April 1994, it was no longer possible to get to and from Kigali because there were soldiers on the roads (T. 30 November 2005, p. 16).

after 12 April 1994, he did not see any other vehicle apart from the four vehicles carrying soldiers who were going to fight the Inkotanyi.[255] He claimed that the road was not safe and Rwamakuba would not have risked his life to get from Kigali to Gikomero at that time.[256] Defence witness 2/18 stated that after 13 April 1994, no one could leave Kigali to get to Gikomero because Kigali and Remera were already captured.[257]

101. It was also a major part of the Defence case that André Rwamakuba's name was not mentioned during the Gacaca proceedings in relation to the events that took place in Gikomero commune in April 1994. This was supported by the evidence given by several Defence witnesses who lived in the area in 1994, or were participating in Gacaca proceedings in the commune. Defence Witnesses 3/1, 3/22, 3/11 and 4/16 asserted that they never saw or heard of a Minister coming to Gikomero in the days leading up to 13 April 1994.[258] Defence Witnesses 7/18 and 9/31 said that Rwamakuba never came to Gikomero after 6 April 1994.[259] Witnesses 1/5, 4/12, 6/10 and 7/18 asserted that they never heard that Rwamakuba played any role in the genocide.[260] Particularly, several Defence Witnesses also contended that they did not hear any mention of the Accused's name in the Gacaca hearings concerning the 1994 massacres in Gikomero.[261] Defence Witness 3/10, however, testified that, in September or October 2005 after the beginning of the present trial, two of the Prosecution Witnesses mentioned André Rwamakuba's name in the Gacaca hearings in the witness' cellule.[262]

102. The Chamber finds that these Defence witnesses generally gave a consistent and objective account of the facts sufficient to levy a reasonable doubt on the Prosecution's case. Witnesses 9/20 and 3/1 had no personal relationship with the Accused: they do not know him personally and admit that they would not recognize him.[263] They are both Tusti, whose family members were killed during the genocide in 1994.[264] One of them is a coordinator of a local Gacaca court in Rwanda. Witness 1/5 did not know André Rwamakuba very well.[265] It was not shown that these witnesses would have any particular interest to defend him. For instance, the Prosecution did not attempt to question Witness 3/4 concerning his knowledge of Rwamakuba or the existence of any relationship with him.[266] The Chamber notes that Defence Witnesses 3/10, 6/10 and 7/18 knew Rwamakuba's family very well and that Witnesses 4/16 and 7/3 have criminal records. Due to these individual circumstances, the Chamber has taken particular care in assessing their testimonies.[267] The evidence adduced from these witnesses does corroborate the testimony of the other Defence witnesses. The Prosecution's cross-examination of Defence Witnesses 3/10, 6/10, 7/18, 4/16 and 7/3 did not raise any convincing element to show that they were unbelievable or unreliable, nor did the Prosecution adduce any evidence to rebut their testimonies on the above issues.

[267] Defence Witness 3/10 knew Rwamakuba's family very well; 4/16 is charged in his country with killings of four people but claims his innocence. Defence Witnesses 6/10 and 7/18 were very closed to the Accused's family; they are moreover relatives. Defence Witness 7/14 was Prosecution Witness GIN's relative and Defence Witness 7/3 has a criminal record related to the 1994 genocide.

103. Furthermore, the evidence given on the content of the alleged bags delivered and the subsequent massacres of Tutsi people was merely hearsay evidence. None of the Prosecution witnesses actually saw the content of the bags. They were told later that machetes were brought and the inhabitants were requested to start killing the Tutsi.[268] They also did not see the alleged massacres of Tutsi since they fled the area on 13 April 1994 and only learned about it when they returned to the Centre months later and when human skeletal remains were found. These witnesses did not mention the name of any particular victims of the 13 April 1994 attack at Ndatemwa Trading Centre. Their evidence was challenged by the Defence. There was direct testimony that André Muhire never distributed any machetes. Evidence was also adduced regarding the criminal charges against Muhire in Rwanda. It was specified that he was never prosecuted for distributing machetes and that André Rwamakuba's name was never mentioned in his Rwandan judicial records. Witness 9/20 furthermore stated that no new machetes were distributed at that time in Ndatemwa because individuals used their own weapons which they took from their own houses.[269]

104. The absence of any reliable identification of the Accused at the time and place of the alleged event, his undisputed presence to certain locations during the considered period, the evidence on the potential hazards of travel to and from Gikomero, the absence of any reliable evidence on the exact context of the alleged event, all cumulatively contribute to cast a reasonable doubt that the Accused delivered machetes to André Muhire at Ndatemwa Trading Centre as alleged in paragraph 11 of the Indictment.

II.1.2.2. Alleged Delivery of Machetes to Etienne Kamanzi Used in Attacks against Tutsi

105. The Prosecution alleges that, between 10 and 11 April 1994, the Accused delivered bags of machetes to the home of Etienne Kamanzi, director of the Kayanga Health Centre, and that he knew, or had reasons to know, that the machetes would be used in attacks against the Tutsi in the areas.[270] Kamanzi's home was located in Kayanga secteur, Gikomero commune, which is approximately six kilometres from the Ndatemwa Trading Centre and 30 kilometres northeast of Kigali town where André Rwamakuba resided until 12 April 1994. On that date, he moved to Gitarama which is 53 kilometres southwest of Kigali.[271]

(1) Evidence Adduced

106. Prosecution Witness GAC, who claimed to be an eyewitness of this event, was the sole witness called to testify on this allegation. He also claimed that he knew André Rwamakuba since he had already seen him on three occasions before that event.[272]

107. The witness testified that "on the day following the death of [President] Habyarimana"[273] or a few days after the President's death, between 10 and 13 April 1994,[274] he saw André Rwamakuba unloading bags containing machetes from a white car and giving them to Etienne Kamanzi.[275] The witness heard Rwamakuba blaming Kamanzi for continuing to provide medical treatment to Tutsi at the Kayanga Health Centre.[276] He saw Rwamakuba give machetes to Kamanzi indicating that it was the "medicine to treat them", namely to kill the Tutsi.[277] Witness GAC then saw a woman named Anatalie Mukarulinda telling Rwamakuba and Kamanzi that she had six "Abakigas"[278] who could work and she requested machetes for them. Kamanzi then gave, in the presence of Rwamakuba, six machetes to Mukarulinda.[279] GAC saw Mukarulinda distributing the machetes to the six Abakigas.[280] The witness did not see machetes being distributed to other persons, but he attested that when the killing began, everyone was provided with a new and recently sharpened machete.[281]

108. Witness GAC claimed to be "aware"[282] that the Abakigas used the machetes to kill Tutsi. The witness learnt from a conseiller that a policeman named Nyarwaya had taken part in a meeting in Nduba the day before the attacks, with Interahamwe, policemen and conseillers, where instructions were issued.[283] According to the witness, on or about 13 April 1994, the six Abakigas went toward Rutunga Trading Centre.[284] Then, Nyarwaya, who was standing at the Rutunga marketplace, shot his gun in the air and told the Abakigas to "begin".[285] The witness was not present at the market at that time.[286] After the gunshot, the Abakigas began burning down houses, looting and assaulting neighbouring persons, beginning with Mukarulinda's neighbours.[287] According to Witness GAC, the victims of the attacks were Tutsi and the perpetrators were Hutu. These attacks by the Abakigas marked the beginning of the massacres in Kayanga. The witness stated that the first person who was killed was an inhabitant;[288] then Tutsi patients of the Kayanga Health Centre were killed after 13 April 1994 and until the end of the week by Interahamwe from Gasabo.[289]

(2) Assessment of the Evidence

109. The Chamber notes that Witness GAC was a Prosecution witness in the Kamuhanda case. The Defence submits that his evidence should not be admitted since the Trial Chamber in the Kamuhanda case found him not credible.[290] It contends that once a Trial Chamber finds a witness not credible, in respect of significant and substantial testimony, it is only appropriate in the most exceptional circumstances for the Prosecution to tender him as a witness of truth in another trial. In the Defence's view, failure to follow such good practice is likely to bring the administration of justice into disrepute and the Chamber should refuse the admission of such evidence as an abuse of process.[291]

110. The Chamber has discretionary power to assess the evidence brought before it and cannot be bound by the assessment of Witness GAC's credibility made in the Kamuhanda case. The Chamber, however, already found his testimony unreliable concerning the political meetings in Kayanga.[292] Moreover, Witness GAC's testimony on the alleged delivery of machetes to Kamanzi also appears to be tainted with major internal inconsistencies which seriously challenge his credibility (2.1.). This challenge is reinforced by the Defence evidence on the road access to Gikomero at the time of the event (2.2.).

(2.1.) Credibility Issues

111. Witness GAC's testimony is not consistent concerning the date when the alleged event took place. The witness first testified that the delivery of machetes by the Accused to Kamanzi took place "the day following the death of Habyarimana". Later in his testimony, he asserted that the event had taken place a few days after the President was killed, around 10 and 13 April 1994.[293] Similarly, the witness stated that a conseiller, who was his neighbour, informed him about the meeting in which Nyarwaya participated the day before the attacks in Nduba. Later in his testimony, he denied that this conseiller was a neighbour and added that he is no longer alive.[294]

112. The witness' account of the event is also subject to concerns. After Witness GAC saw the alleged distribution of machetes, he did not directly inform his family but continued on his way and went off for a drink in a bar.[295] Such behaviour is odd when considering the particular insecure context of threats against the Tutsi people as described by the witness himself. The witness' testimony as to his presence when the massacres started at the Rutunga Trading Centre on 13 April 1994 also seemed unlikely: he both affirmed that he was present on the spot when massacres started and that he fled Kayanga on the same day.[296]

113. In addition to these internal inconsistencies and unlikely behaviours and actions, Witness GAC's testimony substantially differed from his statement to the Prosecution on 8 November 2004.[297] In that statement, the witness declared that Kamanzi opened the bag of machetes which had been unloaded on Rwamakuba's order, but in the courtroom, he testified that it was Rwamakuba who had opened his car and was giving machetes to Kamanzi himself.[298] In the same statement, the witness specified that he clearly heard Rwamakuba ask Kamanzi to give Mukarulinda the machetes, while in his testimony the machetes were given to her at her request. In 2004, he also gave the name of three companions, including Alexis Karekezi, who were present when he saw Rwamakuba giving the machetes. According to his statement, these three persons were then killed at the Kayanga Health Centre. In court, the witness testified that only Alexis Karakezi was with him on that occasion and that there were Interahamawe who were not far away.[299] The witness' statement does not contain any information concerning the alleged attacks of the six Abakigas against Tutsi at the Rutunga Trading Centre, the meeting held the day before the attacks where instructions to kill Tutsi were issued, and the incident with Nyarwaya firing his gun in the air and telling the Abakigas to begin the attacks, all of which he testified extensively about in court. The witness also qualified Etienne Kamanzi as the Head of the Kayanga Health Centre in his 2004 statement,[300] but in court he referred to him as a nurse at the Kayanga Health Centre.[301]

114. These discrepancies cannot be justified by the time elapsed since the event or translation discrepancies. They are significant in the assessment of the credibility of this witness who omitted any reference to André Rwamakuba in his early statements to the Prosecution investigators. Witness GAC gave a statement in 1999 to the Prosecution and testified in the Kamuhanda case in 2002 about the activities of Kamuhanda and Kamanzi in the distribution of weapons in Kayanga between 8 and 12 April 1994. He testified on the occasions where he saw Kamanzi prior to the massacres. It was not until he gave his statement in 2004 that he mentioned Rwamakuba for the first time. He explained the prior omission by the fact that he was not questioned about Rwamakuba at the time. Even if that were the case, the Chamber does not find this to be a satisfactory explanation, as the absence of certain questions would not preclude a witness, who wanted to give a credible picture of an event, from volunteering information.[302]

115. Witness GAC's demeanour in court supports the Chamber's conclusion that the witness cannot be found credible. Although the Chamber acknowledges that a witness' behaviour may be influenced by the fact that he or she is responding to the opposite party, in the present case, the witness was particularly reluctant or unwilling to respond to the Defence's questions in cross-examination.[303] He was also extremely disinclined to speak about or comment on his previous testimony in the Kamuhanda case.[304]

116. The defence evidence on the potential hazards of travel between Kigali and Gikomero commune at the time of the event reinforces the Chamber's doubts on GAC's credibility.

(2.2.) Road Access to Gikomero

117. Neither the Indictment nor the Prosecution's evidence seems to suggest that the delivery of machetes to Kamanzi's house took place on the same day as the alleged delivery of machetes at Muhire's place in Ndatemwa Trading Centre.[305] The Prosecution did not provide any chronology of the alleged four occasions when the Accused came to Gikomero over a period of five days. According to Witness GAC, André Rwamakuba met Kamanzi and decided to give him machetes by chance. There is no other explanation or account of that event. However, in the Chamber's view, the chronology of the facts was particularly relevant to the Prosecution case. As previously discussed, it was admitted that the Accused attended other activities in Kigali on 11 April 1994.[306] The Prosecution did not attempt to explain how the Accused moved from that town to deliver machetes in a location 30 kilometres apart or how he came over a period of two days to two different locations six kilometres apart,[307] whereas the Defence adduced evidence that it was hazardous to travel to and from Gikomero after 7 April 1994, that Rwamakuba never came to Gikomero commune in the days leading up to 13 April 1994 and that his name was never mentioned in relation to the massacres in the commune in April 1994.[308] The Chamber already found the Defence evidence consistent and objective enough to levy a reasonable doubt on the Prosecution's case.[309]

118. The lack of credibility of Witness GAC, the admitted presence of André Rwamakuba in other activities, the evidence on the potential hazards to travel, cumulatively contribute to reasonable doubt on the alleged presence of the Accused in Kayanga secteur, Gikomero commune between 10 and 13 April 1994. Since Witness GAC was the sole witness called and no additional evidence was adduced that between 10 and 11 April 1994, the Accused delivered bags of machetes to the home of Etienne Kamanzi, the Prosecution failed to prove this allegation.

[302] It is interesting to note that GAC gave his first statement as a result of a visit to the United Nations office in Kigali. As he was requesting free medical assistance, an investigator asked him whether he had information about the crimes committed by a man named André Rwamakuba in Gikomero in April 1994 (T. 4 July 2005, pp. 32-33).

II.1.3. Alleged Murder of Three Tutsi near Gikomero Secteur Office

119. At paragraph 12 of the Indictment, the Prosecution alleges that > Between 10 and 20 April 1994, André Rwamakuba went to Gikomero commune where, during a rally near the secteur office, accompanied by Rutaganira, bourgmestre of the commune, Brigadier Nyarwaya, Mathias Kabanguka, accountant of the commune, and two men unknown but who were identified as policemen, he asked persons in the crowd why the massacres had not started. He then seized documents belonging to two unknown youths, but who were identified as Tutsi, tore the documents and ordered the crowd to seize the youths and kill them. Persons present in the crowd armed with firearms, machetes and clubs, including Ngiruwosanga, a secteur inhabitant, Ngarambe and Kayibanda, and two communal policemen, immediately seized the two young men that André Rwamakuba had designated, led them away to a wooded area and killed them as the Accused, who was not far, looked on. Thereafter, this same crowd stopped an unidentified man on a motorcycle claiming to flee the massacres in Rutongo commune. André Rwamakuba, while speaking to the crowd, stated that the motorcyclist could not be a Hutu since only Tutsi were fleeing, and decided that the youth should be killed. At the instigation of and following orders from André Rwamakuba, the same armed crowd led him away to a wooded area to kill him. The Accused then told the crowd that it had just started the killings and that it was a good start. The same day, in the afternoon, Interahamwe militiamen, elements of the Presidential Guard, with the assistance of members of the population, following such orders and instigations, began to massacre Tutsi refugees, in Gikomero commune, notably at Kayanga Health Center, Gikomero Protestant School and Gicaca. Thousands were massacred, including refugees from Remera, in Kigali town centre, refugees from the neighbouring commune of Gikoro and Kabuga secteur, Rubungo commune.

(1) Evidence Adduced

120. The Gikomero secteur office is approximately 25 kilometres northeast of Kigali town, where André Rwamakuba was living until 12 April 1994; 11 kilometres from Ndatemwa Trading Centre and five kilometres from Kayanga secteur. From Kigali town it is 53 kilometres southwest to Gitarama where Rwamakuba moved to on 12 April 1994.[310]

121. To support the allegation at paragraph 12 of the Indictment, the Prosecution only called Witness GIN, who claimed to have been present at this event. This witness also asserted that she was introduced to André Rwamakuba for the first time in 1992 at a wedding in the family of a man named Karuyonga who, according to the witness, seemed to be Rwamakuba's friend.[311] She saw the Accused again at Nyamirambo, Kigali-ville, in 1992 when he came to visit her family.[312] The witness testified that she saw Rwamakuba a third time in Gikomero commune between 10 and 14 of April 1994, between 10.00 a.m. and 11.00 a.m. He was in the company of Bourgmestre Rutaganira, the accountant Mathias Rubanguka, the brigadier Nyarwaya, two commune policemen, Ngarambe and Kayibanda, and other members of the population such as François-Xavier Kamanzi, Ngiruwosanga and Mivumbi.[313]

122. According to Witness GIN, when André Rwamakuba got to the centre, the inhabitants had stopped two young people and were asking them to show their identity cards. As these young people showed their certificates instead of their identity cards, Rwamakuba tore them up[314] and said that these young people were Tutsi because they had refused to show their identity cards.[315] He then ordered that they be arrested and killed. The two young men were taken off to a wooded area by the same group, which included Rwamakuba, Ngiruwosanga, Murekezi, Runyota, Ngarambe, Kayibanda, Rubanguka and Rutaganira.[316] They were armed with machetes, clubs, and some carried guns.[317] There was a distance of 70 to 100 meters between the entrance to the yard of GIN's house where she was standing and the place in the woods where the two men were taken. They stayed in the woods for about one and a half hours.[318] GIN heard the two young persons screaming as they were beaten up and she concluded that they were killed because the people who took them away returned alone.[319] GIN cannot confirm whether Rwamakuba went right to the spot where the people were killed, but she asserted that he was there and he saw what was happening.[320]

123. After the two young people were killed, André Rwamakuba allegedly encouraged and gave instructions to members of the population to continue the killings. He is also alleged to have thanked them for starting the killings in the commune.[321]

124. Then, still according to GIN, while André Rwamakuba was still there, a young man showed up on a motorcycle. He was stopped and was required to show his identification documents. GIN heard Rwamakuba say that only Tutsis were fleeing and he then gave orders for the motorcyclist to be killed.[322] The witness saw that the same armed group took the motorcyclist into the same woods as the two young people. This time, Rwamakuba allegedly remained with the bourgmestre in an open area,[323] as the motorcyclist was killed. GIN testified that he left shortly thereafter.[324]

(2) Assessment of the Evidence

125. In the Chamber's view, GIN's evidence is not consistent with the Prosecution's allegation set forth in the Indictment (2.1.). It is also highly improbable that the alleged killing of three people at the Gikomero secteur office between 10 and 14 April 1994 would have occurred as described by Witness GIN (2.2.).

(2.1.) Lack of Consistency between the Dates in the Indictment and the Evidence

126. In addition to GIN's testimony, evidence has also been adduced by both parties that in April 1994, Tutsi refugees from Mbandazi and from Rubungo communes were attacked and killed by Interahamwe at Gikomero Protestant School. GIN was not present at the location but was informed that this massacre took place between 8 and 12 April 1994. She asserted that André Rwamakuba was not involved in that massacre.[325] Defence Witnesses 2/18, 3/1,[326] 3/11, 9/31 who were present at the time and location of the event, were more specific and all affirmed that the Tutsi refugees were killed on 12 April 1994, between 1.00 p.m. and 2.00 p.m. This date was confirmed by Defence Witnesses 3/22, 4/12 and 7/3 following information they received from others.[327] Prosecution Witnesses GAB and GII also testified that on 12 April 1994, Tutsi refugees were killed at the Gishaka parish in Gikomero commune.[328] Both parties accepted that this massacre took place at that time.[329]

127. Consequently, the suggestion made by GIN that the killings at the Gikomero secteur office could have taken place after 12 April 1994, on 13 or 14 April 1994, is inconsistent with the Prosecution's allegation that the day of the killings of three people at the Gikomero secteur office, after Rwamakuba's departure, in the afternoon, Interahamwe militiamen, elements of the Presidential Guard, with the assistance from members of the population, began to kill Tutsi refugees, notably at the Gikomero Protestant School.

(2.2.) Credibility Issues

128. GIN's evidence includes major discrepancies between her prior statements and testimony, and is also seriously challenged by facts admitted by both parties and the evidence adduced by the Defence.

129. A comparison between her testimony regarding the identification of André Rwamakuba, and her prior statements and testimony in the Kamuhanda case reveals important discrepancies. In her first statement of 3 February 1998,[330] she stated that her husband told her that it was Rwamakuba who came to Gikomero in April 1994, and that she recognized him as well because she used to see him driving his car in Gikomero commune. GIN confirmed this information in the investigator's report dated 13 February 2004,[331] but two months later, she stated that she met Rwamakuba for the first time at a wedding between 1991 and 1992.[332] She then specified that the wedding took place at Karuyonga's house who was her mother's neighbour in Gicaca, and not Rwamakuba's friend, as she declared in court.[333] In the Kamuhanda case, in 2001, prior to her amended statement, the witness gave a different account of her knowledge of Rwamakuba: she testified that she saw him for the first time in front of her house in 1994.[334]

130. Witness GIN's physical description of André Rwamakuba was also extremely vague[335] and contradictory. In her earlier statements, she described him wearing clothes with the colours and emblem of the MRND party.[336] Despite giving several other statements,[337] it was not until April 2004 that she changed her statement and specified that Rwamakuba was not wearing the MRND colours.[338] During her testimony, when confronted with the obvious discrepancy because of Rwamakuba's membership in the opposing MDR party, the witness explained that the investigator made a mistake when taking notes of her description of Rwamakuba's attire. She maintained, however, that he was wearing a cap with the MRND colours and emblem.[339] This explanation and comment are not satisfactory and raises further doubts on her credibility.

131. The witness' account of the event is also radically different from her prior statements made with the Prosecution and her testimony in the Kamuhanda case. In court, she testified that André Rwamakuba arrived at the Gikomero secteur office between 10 and 14 April 1994 and that three Tutsi people were killed on that occasion. She also testified that massacres took place at the Gikomero Protestant School between 8 and 12 April 1994. In 1998, however, the witness explicitly affirmed that the killing of the three people at Gikomero secteur office took place on 12 April 1994, a date on which according to the witness' statement, the killings had not yet started in the commune. In the same statement, she stated that Rwamakuba came to launch the beginning of the massacre in the commune and that as soon as he left, in the afternoon, Tutsi refugees were killed at the Gikomero Protestant School. In that statement, she asserted that she did not see him again after that massacre. In 2001 in the Kamuhanda case, the witness testified that the killings at the Protestant School were the first killings in the secteur. Later, in 2003, the witness stated that she did not see Rwamakuba exactly on 12 April 1994 but between 12 and 20 April 1994.[340] This declaration was amended again a year later when she stated that she saw him, after the killings at the Gikomero Protestant School between 6 and 20 April 1994.[341] In this case, GIN testified that Rwamakuba came with the crowd to the wooden area where the two young people were killed, but in 2003 she requested the investigator to amend her prior statement and indicated that the Accused did not follow the crowd to the wooded area but stayed by his car in front of the secteur office, from where he was able to see the killings. The witness also gave an inconsistent account of her whereabouts in April 1994. She admitted that she had gone to Kibobo with her sister in law to seek refuge, but she was uncertain on the dates.[342] This is a major matter of concern considering that Defence witnesses testified that GIN was not in Gikomero at the time of the alleged murders.[343] The Defence challenged GIN on her prior statements and testimonies. The Chamber found her answers to be inconsistent and unconvincing.

132. These major inconsistencies between GIN's testimony and her prior statements cannot be explained by the time elapsed, translation discrepancies, the manner in which the statements were taken or the impact of trauma inflicted upon the witness. Neither can they be considered additional details provided to the witness' prior statements.

133. Several Defence witnesses also gave testimony to Witness GIN's personality. The Chamber has considered and weighed this information with great caution due to the personal relationship between GIN and some of the Defence witnesses. During the genocide, the witness lost her mother and one of her siblings.[344] According to Defence Witness 3/22 who has known GIN since she was very young, and Defence Witness 5/15, who also has a close relationship to GIN, she has been greatly affected by her experience in 1994 and had changed since then. Witness 3/22 described GIN as someone who is highly emotional, dishonest,[345] and not trustworthy.[346] Witness 7/14 submitted that GIN was plotting with other people to fabricate evidence against key figures of Gikomero.[347] Witness GIN's criminal record indicating a conviction in Rwanda for the murder of a colleague, was also raised by the Defence to undermine her credibility.[348]

134. Her credibility is further challenged by the admitted fact that on 11 April 1994 the Accused was in Kigali,[349] and the day after was moving from there to Gitarama.[350] The Indictment and the Prosecution evidence did not provide a chronological account of the Accused's alleged activities in Gikomero in April 1994. GIN's testimony seemed to require that the Accused made a separate or third trip to the area in addition to the alleged delivery of machetes to Muhire and Kamanzi.[351] The evidence adduced by the Defence that travel between Kigali and Gikomero was difficult and hazardous at that time due to the presence of RPF troops reinforces the doubt on GIN's credibility.[352]

135. In view of the major inconsistencies in the witness' evidence, her particular personality and judicial record, the admitted presence of the Accused on other locations at the time of the alleged event, the potential hazards of access to the commune at the time of the event, Witness GIN cannot be found credible. Since no other evidence has been adduced to establish the allegation in the Indictment, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt André Rwamakuba's involvement in the killings of three Tutsi people in Gikomero commune between 10 and 20 April 1994.

II.1.4. Alleged Participation of André Rwamakuba to the Massacre at Kayanga Health Centre

136. The Prosecution alleges at paragraph 13 of the Indictment that > Between 13 and 15 April 1994, in the morning, André Rwamakuba, accompanied by local authorities, including Mathias Rubanguka, accountant of the commune, Callixte Kabarera, Inspector of Schools, Brigadier Nyarwaya, Rutaganira, bourgmestre of Gikomero commune, Thomas Mabango, conseiller of Kanyanga [sic],[353] and soldiers and Interahamwe militiamen, arrived at the Kayanga Health Center in Kayanga secteur, where many Tutsi fleeing the massacres that had started in their secteurs had sought refuge. At a man unknown but identified as the deputy director's request, they assembled in the courtyard of the Health Centre [sic][354]. Upon his arrival, André Rwamakuba stated that the killings had started everywhere else and that he realized that nothing had been done at the Health Centre. The Accused, stating that he was showing the example, then brandished a firearm, signaling the start of the massacres to soldiers and Interahamwe who began, in his presence, to attack and kill the Tutsi with firearms, machetes and clubs. Shortly after the beginning of the killings, while it was raining, André Rwamakuba, referring to the bodies of Tutsi, demanded that such filth be cleared. The Accused witnessed the killings until he left the Health Centre, while the soldiers and Interahamwe continued the killings for several hours. No one survived the massacre in which about a hundred people are alleged to have died. The bodies of the victims were thrown into a mass grave. These victims were mostly in-patients and Tutsi refugees fleeing the killings in the neighbouring secteurs, notably the killings in the Parishes of Gikomero and Gicaca.

(1) Evidence Adduced

137. Kayanga Health Centre is located in Kayanga secteur, Gikomero commune, which is approximately 80 kilometres from Gitarama where André Rwamakuba resided at the time of the event.[355]

138. There is no dispute in the present case that there were killings at Kayanga Health Centre in April 1994 and that the victims were murdered solely because they were Tutsi.[356] Both parties adduced evidence on this event. The alleged participation of the Accused, however, is disputed.

139. Five Prosecution witnesses gave evidence on this massacre,[357] including Witness GAB who said that he was the sole survivor and eyewitness of the event.[358] On 13 April 1994, after the massacres had started in his secteur, Prosecution Witness GAB began to flee.[359] He testified that he arrived at Kayanga Health Centre between 13 and 15 April 1994.[360] He spent the night in the courtyard between the rooms, the open space at the Centre.[361] The morning after his arrival, around 8.00 a.m., the Deputy Director of the Centre, Etienne Kamanzi, arrived with Interahamwe. The witness and the people who were in the wards as well as refugees were taken out with the Tutsis and collected in the big courtyard in front of the Centre.[362] They were told to sit down and not to move. Around 10.00 a.m., four vehicles arrived, including a military truck. The witness saw the Accused, Bourgmestre Rutaganira, the brigadier Nyarwaya, the accountant and the school inspector.[363] When he saw them, the witness hid in a nearby sorghum field near the Centre.[364] From that place, he heard Rwamakuba say "[e]verywhere I have been, they have began to work - and "work" meant to kill – so what are you waiting for?"[365] The brigadier Nyarwaya replied that they did not start to kill because they did not have enough materials for the task.[366] The witness then saw Rwamakuba take out a pistol, wave it in the air, and say "Here is the pistol; the Interahamwe are present. The material is available; I don't see why you continue to raise that question while everything is ready."[367] After that, many people, mostly Tutsi, were shot or attacked with machetes, clubs and bludgeons.[368] The witness also heard the Accused stating that the Tutsis should be killed "so that in [the] future, a Hutu who is born asks what a Tutsi look[ed] like".[369] Rwamakuba allegedly left with the other vehicles in the direction of Gikomero, around midday when people had already been killed.[370] After his departure, the Interahamwe and the soldiers went on killing, until everybody was killed.[371] According to GAB, around one hundred persons died in this massacre.[372]

140. Prosecution Witness GIN testified that "about four or five days" after the killing of the three young people in Gikomero centre between 10 and 14 April 1994,[373] she saw André Rwamakuba arrive at the trading centre in a white station wagon.[374] He stopped for a few minutes and spoke to some inhabitants from his vehicle. Some of the people who were present at that time included one person named Callixte, Twagirayezu, Drocella Mukayiranga, Ngiruwosanga, Mirumbi, a policeman by the name of Ngarambe, Gihanga and Gatinseyi.[375] Then, Rwamakuba allegedly went on his way towards Kayanga.[376] Later, two vehicles, with Mathias Rubanguka,[377] Nzaramba, and the brigadier Nyarwaya aboard, came to collect Interahamwe as well as communal policemen. They were carrying firearms, guns and grenades.[378] One of the vehicles stopped in front of GIN's house and the other stopped in front of Karekezi's house.[379] GIN's husband, Interahamwe and other people got into the vehicles and went off together to Kayanga. When GIN's husband came back from Kayanga, he told her that he had found Rwamakuba in the company of the person in charge of the Kayanga Health Centre, Kamanzi. He also told GIN that Rwamakuba ordered the massacre of the Tutsi people, that the massacre actually began and then Rwamakuba left Kayanga Health Centre.[380]

141. Prosecution Witnesses ALA and AVC were told that attacks against Tutsi people took place at Kayanga Health Centre.[381] ALA specified that the attack claimed about a hundred victims.[382] AVC said that this happened some time between May and June 1994.[383] He was told that people were killed there, including four of his brothers and other people who had sought refuge at Kayanga Health Centre.[384] Witness GAC testified that Tutsi patients of Kayanga Health Centre were killed after 13 April 1994 and until the end of the week by the Interhamwe from Gasabo.[385] He did not specify whether he was present at the time of the event.

142. Defence Witnesses 6/10, 7/18 and 7/3 testified that they were survivors of the Kayanga Health Centre massacre that, according to them, took place on 15 April 1994 and was led by the brigadier Nyarwaya.[386]

(2) Assessment of the Evidence

143. In the Chamber's view, the Prosecution's evidence is inconsistent with the allegation set forth in the Indictment (2.1.) and suffers major challenges as far as the witness' credibility is concerned (2.2.).

(2.1.) Lack of Consistency between the Indictment and the Prosecution Evidence

144. Witnesses ALA, AVC and GAC did not provide any evidence on the presence of the Accused at the Kayanga Health Centre massacre in April 1994. ALA and AVC gave hearsay evidence, and AVC's testimony that the massacre took place between May and June 1994 contradicts the other evidence adduced by both parties and does not support the charges against the Accused which place this event between 13 and 15 April 1994.

(2.2.) Credibility Issues

145. The Chamber has already found that Witness GIN was not a credible witness as far as her evidence concerned the alleged participation of the Accused in the murder of three Tutsi near the Gikomero secteur office.[387] For the present event, she provided hearsay evidence from her deceased husband. It is noteworthy that she mentioned the Kayanga Health Centre massacre of April 1994 and André Rwamakuba's participation in the massacre for the first time in April 2004,[388] in her fifth meeting with the Prosecution.[389] In particular, in her first statement dated 3 February 1998,[390] she asserted that she had not seen Rwamakuba after the killing of the three people at the Gikomero secteur office.[391] Such a major inconsistency seriously undermines GIN's credibility regarding her evidence of Rwamakuba's participation to the Kayanga Health Centre massacre.

146. Witness GAB is the only one who claims to be an eyewitness of the event. As already noted,[392] this Chamber is not bound by the prior finding made by the Trial Chamber in the Kamuhanda case where the witness was found not credible. However, after reviewing and assessing the evidence as a whole, this Chamber finds that there are serious doubts as to GAB's credibility in the present case.

147. The Chamber has already found that the identification of the Accused by the witness raises serious concerns.[393] In addition, his testimony contains several irreconcilable inconsistencies between his prior statement to the Prosecution, his testimony in the Kamuhanda case,[394] and also within his own testimony given in court.

148. GAB first testified that he arrived at Kayanga Health Centre in the night of 13 April 1994.[395] During cross-examination, however, he claimed that he did not give the exact date of his arrival at the Centre, but that he arrived between 13 and 15 April 1994.[396] In his statement of 4 November 2004, which was read into the record by the Defence Counsel, the witness provided a more specific date: he stated that he started fleeing on the night of 13 April 1994 towards Kayanga Health Centre, where he arrived in the morning.[397] A mere comparison of the witness' testimony and his prior statements shows other inconsistencies. In his 2004 statement, it is said that after 8.00 a.m., he, along with the other people at the Centre, was instructed to stay in the Centre's courtyard, and that prior to Rwamakuba's arrival, he lagged behind the rest of the people by creeping and was able to reach the rear of the building where he hid in an adjoining sorghum farm. In court, however, GAB testified that he hid after Rwamakuba's arrival at the Centre around 10.00 a.m. In his statement of 1999, which was read into the record by the Defence Counsel, the witness stated that a week after 13 April 1994, the RPF soldiers "arrived and assembled and took [them] to Rutare".[398] The witness gave a different account of this fact in court: he testified that he went to Rutare the night he left the Centre after hiding in the sorghum field, since Rutare was a secure place occupied by RPF.[399] This account also differs from GAB's evidence in the Kamuhanda case, where he said that he was moving from one hiding place to another, and around 15 April 1994, he surrendered to the attackers.[400]

149. Such inconsistencies in the chronology of facts cannot be explained by the time elapsed, translation discrepancies or considered as additional information provided by the witness. On the contrary, they directly challenge the truthfulness of his account. This challenge is reinforced by the disturbing similarities between GAB's testimony in this case and in the Kamuhanda case. In this trial, the witness described André Rwamakuba's behaviour and the account of the events in the same way as he described Kamuhanda's criminal acts when testifying as Prosecution witness in that case; he also attributed much of the same words to Kamuhanda and Rwamakuba.[401] GAB explained in court that he was not able to recall the contents or the purport of his evidence in the Kamuhanda trial,[402] and further submitted that Kamuhanda and Rwamakuba used almost the same words because these were statements that held the same logic.[403]

[401] In the Kamuhanda case, Witness GAB said that when Jean de Dieu Kamuhanda arrived on 12 April, he said: "Everywhere I went, even in Kigali, the Interahamwe and CDR have been killing people. What are you doing?" Nyarwaya and Rubanguka who were present, then said: "What we are doing at this time is detailing them and when we get the necessary instruments to accomplish our task, we shall accomplish our task." (see Extract read by the Defence, T. 6 July 2005, p. 13).
In the present trial, Witness GAB testified that André Rwamakuba said: "Everywhere I have been, they have began to work – and "work" meant to kill – so what are you waiting for?" Then, the Brigadier Nyarwaya took the floor and replied that they did not start to kill because they had not material enough for the task. Then the witness saw Rwamakuba taking out a pistol, waving it in the air, and saying that "Here is the pistol; the Interahamwe are present. The material is available; I don't see why you continue to raise that question while everything is ready." (T. 5 July 2005, pp. 25-26).

150. This explanation is not persuasive, especially since the witness only mentioned André Rwamakuba's name for the first time in November 2004 after making a statement to the Prosecution in 1999 and testifying in the Kamuhanda case in 2001. He explained his failure to mention Rwamakuba's name at an earlier time by stating he was not previously questioned about the Accused. Although this is a fairly common explanation provided by both Prosecution and Defence Witnesses, this is not a satisfactory explanation considering the fact that the Kayanga Health Centre massacre is the only one that Witness GAB allegedly witnessed. The witness' obvious reluctance to answer questions from the Defence,[404] particularly in relation to his testimony in the Kamuhanda case, further contributes to challenge his overall credibility.[405]

151. The Defence's evidence reinforces the Chamber's doubt on the Prosecution's case. The Prosecution did not provide a chronology of Rwamakuba's movement to and from Gikomero area over the five days-period, during which it is alleged that he delivered machetes at two different locations, ordered the killing of three Tutsi people and went to Kayanga Health Centre. The parties agreed that after 12 April 1994, the Accused moved to Gitarama with his family, along with the Interim Government.[406] The present allegation would therefore have required that the Accused made a fourth trip there. Such theory was seriously challenged by the Defence evidence on the hazardousness and difficulties to move from and to Gikomero commune after 7 April 1994.[407] There were also testimonies that the Accused never went to Kayanga Health Centre during the massacre. Defence Witnesses 6/10 and 7/18 testified that they were present at Kayanga Health Centre on 15 April 1994 when the massacres against the Tutsi took place. While they were hiding in a room in the maternity ward of the Centre,[408] they saw refugees dragged out, beaten up, taken out of the Centre and finished off by the brigadier Nyarwaya, who was with Mathias Rubanguka, the communal policeman Kayibanda, and other Interahamwe.[409] Both witnesses knew Rwamakuba very well. Witness 6/10 denied any Rwamakuba's involvement in the 1994 killings in Gikomero commune and Witness 7/18 stated that the Accused never came to Gikomero during the genocide.[410] Defence Witness 7/3 who admitted to having played a direct role in the killings which took place at Kayanga Health Centre on 15 April 1994 and claimed to know Rwamakuba very well,[411] also testified that the attack was led by the brigadier Nyarwaya in the company of policemen. He asserted that Rwamakuba was not involved in these killings.[412] Defence Witness 3/1 was told that patients were killed at Kayanga Health Centre and that the brigadier communal and communal officers were the ones responsible. She asserted that no one ever mentioned Rwamakuba as playing a part in the killings at Kayanga Health Centre[413] Defence Witness 7/14, who knew Witness GIN very well, stated that GIN's husband stayed in Gikomero and never went to Kayanga Health Centre.[414] Due to their individual circumstances, the evidence of Defence Witnesses 6/10, 7/18, 7/3 and 7/14 was assessed with great caution.[415] The Chamber, however, found their accounts consistent and objective enough to challenge the Prosecution's evidence.

152. In the Chamber's view, the major inconsistencies in Prosecution Witnesses GAB and GIN testimonies cast serious doubt on their credibility. This doubt is supported by the Defence evidence on the improbable presence of the Accused at the scene of the crimes. In addition to testimonies on the potential hazards of road access to Gikomero commune in April 1994, there was detailed and consistent evidence from other witnesses which identified the brigadier communal Nyarwaya and other communal officers as the leaders of this massacre. They denied Rwamakuba's involvement. The other Prosecution witnesses who mentioned Kayanga Health Centre massacre in their testimonies never spoke of Rwamakuba as playing a role in it. Considering the evidence as a whole, the Chamber finds that the allegations of the Accused's participation in the massacre at Kayanga Health Centre in April 1994 have not been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

Conclusion on the Alleged Criminal Acts Committed by André Rwamakuba in Gikomero Commune

153. The Chamber first notes that there was no evidence adduced on certain allegations concerning the events in Gikomero commune and that some of the Prosecution witnesses' testimonies were inconsistent with the Indictment. Specifically, no evidence was given about the alleged meetings or public instigations in which André Rwamakuba allegedly participated in Gikomero, Rutunga, Gasabo and Gicaca secteurs or in Rutungo, Rubungo and Kanombe communes. There was also no evidence on the various statements made by Rwamakuba at various meetings and gatherings in Gikomero commune between March and June 1994.

154. Then, the Prosecution evidence on the sensitization campaigns allegedly conducted by the Accused in Gikomero commune between 1992 and March 1994 was unreliable in many instances, including the Prosecution witnesses' identification of Rwamakuba at the time and place of the events. This conclusion is supported by the Defence evidence indicating that the Accused participated in two events in his capacity as a doctor during the time in question. A reasonable probability has been shown that between 23 September 1993 and 10 March 1994, Rwamakuba attended a training course at the Institute of Tropical Medicine in Antwerp, Belgium, and that between 17 and 29 March 1994, he attended an international colloquium organized by the WHO in Egypt. The Chamber therefore finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt the allegations set forth in paragraphs 3 to 5 of the Indictment.

155. Both parties adduced evidence that attacks and massacres took place against Tutsi in Gikomero commune in April 1994, including in Ndatemwa Trading Centre, at Gikomero Protestant School, Gishaka Parish and Kayanga Health Centre. The Prosecution called six witnesses to support its allegations that during a period of five days between 10 and 15 April 1994, André Rwamakuba went to four different locations in Gikomero commune to deliver machetes that were to be used in killings against the Tutsi, to encourage and give instructions to kill Tutsi, and to launch the beginning of the attacks against Tutsi in the commune.

156. The Prosecution witnesses' testimonies were tainted of major deficiencies which could not be justified by the time elapsed, translation discrepancies, the manner in which the prior statements were taken or the impact of trauma inflicted upon the witnesses. In the Chamber's view, these inconsistencies undermined the witnesses' credibility or reliability. Furthermore, the Defence disputed that the Accused could have been present in Gikomero commune at the time of the alleged event. The parties agreed and the Chamber accepted that André Rwamakuba was sworn in as a Minister of the [415] Defence Witnesses 6/10 and 7/18 seemed close to André Rwamakuba's family; they are moreover relatives. Defence Witness 7/14 was Prosecution Witness GIN's relative and Defence Witness 7/3 has a criminal record related to the 1994 genocide.

Interim Government on 9 April 1994, attended a governmental meeting held in Kigali at the Hotel des Diplomates on 11 April 1994,[416] and was living in Kigali until 12 April 1994 when he went to Gitarama with the convoy of the Interim Government.[417] The admission of these facts had a major impact on the Prosecution's case since the Defence challenged the accessibilities from and to Gikomero commune in April 1994. The Prosecution did not provide a chronological account of the Accused's alleged activities in Gikomero in April 1994, and seemed to suggest that on each event alleged, the Accused commuted between Kigali or Gitarama and the various locations in Gikomero commune.[418] There was, however, reliable evidence on the potential hazards to travel to and from Gikomero commune after 7 April 1994. Reliable testimonies were also given that Rwamakuba's name was not mentioned before Rwandan local courts in relation to the crimes committed in Gikomero commune in April 1994 and that he was not present at the scene of the crimes. This evidence, however, was not satisfactorily rebutted by the Prosecution.

157. The absence of any reliable identification of André Rwamakuba at the time and location of the alleged events, the lack of credibility or reliability of the Prosecution witnesses, the admitted facts that the Accused participated in other activities during the period alleged in the Indictment, the potential hazards of travel to the locations of the alleged crimes, cumulatively contribute to raise a reasonable doubt on the Prosecution's case.

158. The Chamber therefore finds that the Prosecution failed to prove at all or beyond reasonable doubt the charges against the Accused in Gikomero commune as pleaded at paragraphs 3 to 5, 10 to 13, 23 and 26 of the Indictment. The Chamber will now address André Rwamakuba's alleged participation in the killings at Butare University Hospital in April 1994.

II.2. Alleged Participation of André Rwamakuba to killings at Butare University Hospital in April 1994

159. Butare University Hospital is located in Butare town, Butare préfecture, approximately 136 kilometres from Kigali in south west Rwanda.[419] The Hospital has barely changed since the events of April 1994.[420] The site is not very large and is composed of six main buildings.[421] During the trial, various pictures and sketches of the Hospital were admitted into evidence and the Chamber visited the building premises with the parties on 15 January 2005.[422]

160. At paragraphs 15 and 16 of the Indictment, the Prosecution alleges that > 15. Between 18 and 25 April 1994, at Butare University Hospital, André Rwamakuba, along with Dr. Geoffroy Gatera, soldiers, militiamen and armed civilians, ordered, instigated, committed, or otherwise aided and abetted killings of Tutsi patients and displaced persons seeking refuge at Butare University Hospital with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi ethnic group. Thus, during an official delegation's visit to the Hospital, he asked a woman unknown but identified as the head of Doctors Without Borders not to treat Tutsi casualties, to get rid of them and not to admit any others. During the above-mentioned period, André Rwamakuba, armed with a small axe hung on his belt, and often accompanied by Dr. Gatera, armed soldiers, Interahamwe militiamen and civilians armed with machetes, axes and clubs, went around the hospital wards checking identity cards and identifying Tutsi refugees and patients, selecting them and putting them on board a vehicle manned by Interahamwe armed with clubs and machetes. The persons taken away were never seen again. During this period, in the morning or afternoon, during his rounds, André Rwamakuba regularly removed drips from patients, in particular, in a ward where sick women were admitted.

16. Concurrently with the events related above, André Rwamakuba directly caused the death of several persons identified as Tutsi. Thus, during his ward rounds, he caused the death of an unknown Tutsi patient by wounding him in the head with an axe. The militiamen subsequently took away the body of that person. Five of the patients referred to above as having been in the in-patients ward, and who were identified as Tutsi, died from axe wounds inflicted by André Rwamakuba. The Accused wounded Tutsi found in the corridors of the Hospital by striking them on the head with an axe. Some of them, including the persons called Rukara and Mutabazi, who suffered serious bodily harm caused by André Rwamakuba, were subsequently finished off by Interahamwe. As a result of such orders and instigation by the Accused, many Tutsi refugees and patients were massacred in Butare University Hospital. The victims included the persons known as Déogène, Placide and the parents of several survivors of the killings. The bodies of hundreds of victims of the massacres organized by André Rwamakuba at Butare University Hospital were gathered and buried in mass graves located behind the Hospital.

161. The Chamber will first provide a brief and general description of the evidence adduced on the Butare University Hospital massacre in April 1994 and the alleged involvement of the Accused (II.2.1.). The content of the evidence will then be more detailed in the second section when discussing the credibility and reliability of the witnesses (II.2.2).

II.2.1. Evidence Adduced

162. The existence of a massacre against Tutsi at Butare University Hospital in April 1994 was not a contentious matter and both parties adduced evidence on that event. The Defence, however, disputed any involvement of the Accused therein.

163. The Prosecution called six witnesses who asserted their presence at Butare University Hospital at the same time as André Rwamakuba allegedly committed the crimes outlined in the Indictment. Prosecution Witnesses ALV, ALW, GIO, HF and RJ placed the events on different dates between 21 and 25 April 1994, and Prosecution Witness XV, the only one who claimed to know Rwamakuba personally, testified that they took place in May 1994. The Prosecution witnesses generally stated that Rwamakuba came to Butare University Hospital at various times, during which he conducted the identification and injured some of the Tutsi patients with an axe, removed drips from Tutsi patients, which killed some of them, and gave orders to Interahamwe and soldiers to kill or take away to kill Tutsi patients in a pick-up truck. The witnesses specified that during those events, Rwamakuba was often in the company of Doctors Gatera, Twagirayezu and Jotham. In addition, Prosecution Witness XV testified that Rwamakuba took part in a government meeting at the Hospital on 15 May 1994, which was to assess whether the killings were being satisfactorily conducted in Butare. Prosecution expert witness Alison Des Forges also testified to reports of a massacre of about 170 patients and staff members at Butare University Hospital on 24 April 1994.[423] She did not give evidence on the presence of the Accused at the Hospital during the massacre, but commented on an extract from a Radio Rwanda news broadcast which said that "Doctor Rwamakuba refuse[d] the information that was being broadcast by a foreign radio station, talking about the massacres of 200 people by members of the national army who might have found the victims in the Butare Hospital".[424]

164. The Defence called six witnesses to testify on the same event. They confirmed that there were attacks on patients and meetings at Butare University Hospital,[425] and that criminal acts took place under the supervision of military and armed civilians or militiamen. They denied André Rwamakuba's presence or involvement in those acts.

II.2.2. Assessment of the Evidence

165. After reviewing the evidence adduced as a whole, the Chamber is of the view that the Prosecution evidence is inconsistent with some of the allegations against the Accused (1). The identification of André Rwamakuba at the time and place of the alleged event also raises serious doubt (2) and the internal discrepancies in the Prosecution witnesses' testimonies, notably when considering their prior statements and testimonies in Rwandan proceedings, cast doubt on their credibility and reliability (3). The Defence evidence supports this conclusion since it tends to show that Rwamakuba was not present at the scene of the crimes (4).

(1) Lack of Consistency between the Indictment and the Prosecution Evidence

166. None of the Prosecution witnesses testified, as alleged at paragraph 15 of the Indictment, that "during an official delegation's visit to the Hospital, [Rwamakuba] asked a woman unknown but identified as the head of Doctors Without Borders not to treat Tutsi casualties, to get rid of them and not to admit others". No evidence either was adduced on the allegation at paragraph 16 of the Indictment that persons known as Rukara, Déogène, Placide were massacred in the Butare University Hospital.

167. Since Witness XV asserted that André Rwamakuba committed crimes at Butare University Hospital in May 1994, his testimony cannot support the allegation in the Indictment that these offences took place between 18 and 25 April 1994.[426]

168. This witness also testified that André Rwamakuba attended a government meeting at the Hospital on 15 May 1994.[427] While paragraph 18 of the Indictment does plead a meeting held by the Prime Minister Kambanda at the Faculty of Medicine of the Hospital on that day, it does not allege the presence of the Accused.[428]

(2) Identification of André Rwamakuba

169. Witness XV was the only witness to the Butare University Hospital events who claimed prior knowledge of André Rwamakuba. In the Chamber's view, the witness gave an unsatisfactory account of when he actually met him. The witness allegedly knew Rwamakuba when the latter attended the Faculty of Medicine at Butare "from 1974 until he went to do his internship that concluded his studies".[429] He said that doctors studied for six years and then the seventh year was devoted to an internship. When Rwamakuba began his internship, Witness XV had not yet began to work at the Hospital but was at the University. He declared that he lived near the Hospital and used to go to the students' residence to do their washing or to sell cigarettes.[430] He allegedly saw Rwamakuba more than ten times over a period of one or two years, but never actually spoke to him. The witness said that Rwamakuba was already doing his internship when he, himself, started to work at the Hospital in 1981. Witness XV also testified that around 1973 or 1974, he saw Rwamakuba at the University, actively participating in unrest where Tutsi were chased away from the University.[431] The witness saw [427] T. 30 August 2005, pp. 52-54.

[428] Indictment, para. 18: "Massacres of Tutsi at Butare University Hospital continued and intensified through late May 1994, particularly after a meeting, held at the Faculty of Medicine on or about 15 May 1994, where Prime Minister Jean Kambanda addressed university authorities, encouraging them to "continue the fight until ultimate victory".
[429] T. 30 August 2005, p. 25. In his will-say statement dated 6 August 2005, XV also stated that he remembered André Rwamakuba from a strike at the University in around 1974 (Exh. D. 121 A and B, under seal).
[430] T. 30 August 2005, pp. 25-26. The Witness however did not do washing for Rwamakuba.
[431] T. 30 August 2005, p. 28.

Rwamakuba on two additional occasions before April 1994: towards the end of 1993 in a dancing bar in Butare, and in January 1994 during a rally organized at the Huye stadium.[432]

170. Witness XV testified to two occasions when he saw André Rwamakuba during the genocide. The first time was at a meeting of Government Ministers at the Faculty of Medicine at Butare University Hospital, and the second was at the maternity ward when Rwamakuba was giving instructions to some Interahamwe to get Tutsi people into the pick-up truck in order for them to be killed.[433] He claimed that, on that occasion, he was also put into the pick-up truck but was able to escape and went into hiding at the Hospital until he left on 6 June.[434] The witness asserted, on one hand, that he arrived at Butare University Hospital between 21 and 22 April 1994[435] and that the incident with the pick-up truck occurred two weeks after his arrival at the Hospital;[436] on the other hand, he testified that the meeting of Government Ministers was on 15 May 1994.[437] The witness' chronological account of the facts is mistaken and therefore unreliable because two weeks after 21 or 22 April – the alleged second occasion he saw Rwamakuba – would fall before 15 May 1994 – the alleged first occasion he saw the Accused.

171. Witness XV' identification of André Rwamakuba is contradicted by admitted facts and reliable Defence evidence. The parties agreed and the Chamber accepts that the Accused studied in Belgium between 1970 and 1974 and in Butare between 1975 and 1978.[438] Contrary to XV's assertion, Rwamakuba was not a student at the Faculty of Medicine of Butare University either before 1975 or after 1979. Further, the Chamber has already found that the Defence's evidence raised serious doubt that the Accused was in Rwanda between 23 September 1993 and 10 March 1994.[439] XV, therefore, could not have reasonably seen him chasing Tutsi students in 1973 or 1974, nor doing his internship after 1980, in a bar at the end of 1993 or at a meeting in Rwanda in the beginning of January 1994.

172. Witness XV's testimony in court was furthermore inconsistent with testimonies in other cases and prior statements. The witness testified in three cases in Rwanda between 1997 and 1999 where he never mentioned Rwamakuba's name. He was also interviewed by the Prosecution nine times between 1997 and 2005.[440] In his first statement in November 1997, XV gave a detailed statement about the events he witnessed at Butare University Hospital in 1994. In that statement, he referred to a man named Rwamakuba who was an Interahamwe leader, a native of Huye commune and who had also been a second lieutenant during the Kayibanda regime.[441] The description of that man was inconsistent with the Accused André Rwamakuba. In 2003, after six more signed statements which have no mention of Rwamakuba, in an interview to confirm his statements before his testimony in the first trial in this case, the witness specified that the mention of man named Rwamakuba in his 1997 statement was a mistake and that the right person was a man named Nkiramakuba. He then referred to meeting

These documents were not signed by the witness but, following the usual practice, drafted by Prosecution's representative.
[441] In his statement dated 25 November 1997 (Ex. D. 113), XV stated: "I also recall a man named Rwamakuba coming to the university hospital from Sovu hospital in an ambulance which he had requisitioned to transport Interahamwe. I no longer recall the date. He was dressed in civilian clothing and the Interahamwe accompanying him were armed with hoes and clubs. I recognized him because he was a native of Huye commune. He was a second lieutenant during the Kayibanda regime and a driver for a DGB project until the war broke out. He was a member of MDR Power and was very active in the meetings. He had even become the Interahamwe leader when the war started." (para. 9, emphasis added).

Rwamakuba as a student at Butare University in 1982, and to the meeting of Government Ministers of 15 May 1994, but he did not refer to the incident with the red pick-up truck nor did he specify that he had been a victim of Rwamakuba's actions. There was no mention of the attempted abduction which was meant to lead to his death, as he testified in court. This traumatic event was mentioned to the Prosecution for the first time, less than one week before XV gave evidence in this trial.[442] In court, the witness corrected himself again and stated that the man mentioned in his 1997 statement was actually Emmanuel Rekeraho.[443] He asserted that he only knew one man named Rwamakuba, but realized that the person he used to call Rwamakuba was in fact Rekeraho.[444]

173. Witness XV explained that the absence of any reference to the Accused in seven of his prior statements was due to the fact that "[he] could only think of [Rwamakuba] when it was the time of his trial".[445] The Chamber notes that in 2003, XV was on the Prosecution's witness list for the first trial against André Rwamakuba, and his reconfirmation statement was made in Arusha in preparation for his testimony in that trial. This reconfirmation statement, however, did not mention major elements of the evidence that he gave in this trial.

174. Witness XV did not appear to know what André Rwamakuba looked like. First, as acknowledged by the witness, he confused Rwamakuba with one Rekeraho. Then, when shown a picture in court, he confused Rwamakuba with a priest.[446] He also testified that Rwamakuba wore glasses. This assertion was seriously challenged by the Defence which provided a letter from UNDF Commanding Officer, who stated that the Accused had "no spectacle in his possession upon his transfer to the UNDF",[447] and called witnesses who had personal knowledge of the Accused and denied that he wore glasses at that time.[448] In view of these circumstances and the major inconsistencies in Witness XV's testimony, the Chamber is of the view that his evidence is subject to serious doubt and cannot be relied upon.

175. Except for Witness XV, none of the other Prosecution witnesses had prior knowledge of André Rwamakuba. Their identification of Rwamakuba is based on untested hearsay evidence or on XV's evidence which has already been found unreliable.

176. Witnesses ALV and ALW said that André Rwamakuba was identified him to them by refugees and students when they were at Butare University Hospital.[449] These people, however, are now dead.[450] Witness RJ was made aware of who Rwamakuba was by two persons: first by a Hutu lady who helped the witness at the Hospital and then, by XV while the witness was in the corridor of the surgery unit.[451] It is important to note that RJ was not able to recognize in court a picture of the priest who helped her during the genocide and took her to the Hospital in April 1994.[452] Witness GIO testified that Rwamakuba was first identified her by Witness RJ and then some students told her that his first name was André.[453] It is noteworthy that during her evidence, Witness GIO identified, on the basis of a picture showed by the Defence, the man named Rekeraho as probably being André

[449] Witness ALV stated that other refugees who knew Rwamakuba because some of them worked in the Hospital or knew him from when he was a student and intern identified him to her (T. 6 July 2005, pp. 28 and 46). Witness ALW said that she learned the identity of André Rwamakuba by other refugees and students (T. 25 August 2005, pp. 13-14, 26; T. 26 August 2005, p. 15).

Rwamakuba. Witness HF testified that while in the presence of Witness RJ, Witness XV pointed out Rwamakuba to them.[454] The Chamber also notes that the description of the Accused provided by Witnesses ALV, HF and RJ was particularly vague.[455]

177. In view of these circumstances, the identity of the person who the Prosecution's witnesses claim to have seen committing the alleged crimes raises serious doubt. Other elements, as discussed below, also contribute to the Chamber's doubt on Rwamakuba's involvement in the massacres at Butare University Hospital as alleged in the Indictment.

(3) Internal Discrepancies

178. Apart from Prosecution Witness XV, Prosecution Witnesses ALV, ALW, GIO, HF and RJ testified that they saw André Rwamakuba committing crimes at Butare University Hospital at different times and places between 21 and 25 April 1994. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber can accept that if found reliable, these testimonies are not necessarily contradictory since it is reasonably acceptable that the Prosecution witnesses saw Rwamakuba on different times and rooms while at the Hospital.

179. The Chamber will discuss the evidence for each of the Prosecution witnesses. For a clearer assessment, the discussion will be preceded by a brief summary of the relevant part of their testimony.

180. Witness ALV was 16 years old in 1994. Fleeing from Ngoma with her father, she arrived at Butare University Hospital on 20 April 1994.[456] She saw André Rwamakuba on two occasions at the Hospital. She first saw him on the evening of 21 April 1994 when he was pulling out drips from some of the Tutsi patients in the intensive care unit while in the company of Doctor Gatera, Colonel Muvunyi, Sister Theopiste, and Doctor Jotham.[457] She next saw him on 22 April 1994, about 11 a.m. when he was with the same people, including some soldiers, and he took away her father from his hiding place in the kitchen.[458] She testified that, as she followed the group to see where her father was being taken, Rwamakuba hit her on the back.[459] Witness ALV's account of this fact was particularly confused. She first testified that she did not see who struck the blow, but was told later that it was Rwamakuba.[460] Then, she explained that she lost consciousness after the hit, but not really,[461] and after a few moments, she turned and saw that it was Rwamakuba who had hit her.[462] ALV then testified that the refugees were forced to leave the Hospital and go the préfecture, where she met her two sisters. They stayed for two days and then went to her grandmother's house where they stayed for about one hour before they had to flee from assailants. They then returned to the préfecture from where they were taken to a centre at Rango where they stayed for a month and a half.

181. Witness ALV evidence substantially differs from her prior statements to the Prosecution investigators which she verified and signed.[463] Her first statement contains a detailed account of the events she suffered in 1994, particularly at Butare University Hospital, without any mention of André Rwamakuba.[464] In that statement, she described the abduction of her father from the Hospital

(T. 6 July 2005, p. 57). Witness HF said: "This is a man of average height, who has a nose like the nose of the Hutus. He has broad lips, with big cheeks." (T. 11 July 2005, p. 29). Witness RJ stated that Rwamakuba was "dark skinned with a large nose, of medium height, and he was somewhat quite corpulent, but not too fat (T. 2 September 2005, p. 25).

storeroom by Sister Theopiste and soldiers without any mention of the Accused, Doctor Gatera, Colonel Muvunyi, or Doctor Jotham being present or participating. She gave a detailed account of her stay at the Hospital for a week after that incident, and described how Doctor Jotham ordered the refugees to be removed from the préfecture as filth. In her second statement of 13 November 2003, she said she was forced to leave on the same day, under orders from Doctor Gatera and the soldiers just as in her testimony in court.[465] In her second statement, she also described with significant detail how she followed Rwamakuba and saw the atrocities he committed in the intensive care ward. She specified that he took away her father, and even hit her on the shoulder.[466] The statement described that she saw Rwamakuba and his entourage leave the ward where she stayed for another 20 minutes, in contradiction with her testimony in court when she claimed that she was in the unit for about 20 minutes and left before Rwamakuba.[467] Witness ALV's prior statements also present a different and irreconcilable account of the facts she presented of what happened after she had left Butare University Hospital. Specifically, in her first statement, the witness stated that after leaving the Hospital, she spent two weeks at the Butare préfecture office, giving details about her activities during that period, which included witnessing the murder of her brother by Interahamwe, but in her second statement and in her testimony, she said that she stayed there for only two days.[468] In the first statement she said that she was taken to Rango after two weeks at the préfecture. In the second statement, she stated that she left the préfecture and took refuge first in her grandmother's house, then with her aunt at Cyarwa, and asserted that they are both alive today and reside in Butare. There is no mention of going to Rango.

182. In view of these omissions and inconsistencies which cannot be explained by the passage of time, translation discrepancies or the way the statements were taken, the Chamber cannot find Witness ALV's evidence reliable, mainly when considering the witness' affirmation that "[André Rwamakuba's] image remained engraved in [her] memory" because he hit her at the Hospital.[469] The witness explained in court that she omitted his name from her first statement because she was suffering from "anterograde" amnesia. The Chamber is not satisfied by this explanation that is not supported by any medical or other report and that is inconsistent with a prior explanation she gave in her 2003 statement. In that statement, she stated that she did not mention Rwamakuba "because the investigators did not ask [her] any question about him".[470] In addition, were the witness' amnesia established, this would strengthen the Chamber's doubt on her reliability. ALV's testimony cannot support a conviction against the Accused in the present case.

183. Witness ALW arrived with her wounded aunt at Butare University Hospital on 21 April 1994.[471] About three days after her arrival, she saw André Rwamakuba for the first time when he was with Doctor Gatera; he was removing the drips from five Tutsi patients in the surgical ward and then striking them on the head with a small axe.[472] They were immediately removed and put on a red pick-up truck. On or around 27 April 1994, the witness also saw Rwamakuba strike two men named Mutabazi and Kazasumaho with the same axe.[473] He said that "there was no hiding place for snakes". The two men fell down from the blows and were immediately taken away by Interahamwe and put in a red pick-up tuck. During cross-examination, the witness confirmed that Rwamakuba in fact killed the seven people she saw him hit with an axe.[474]

184. Witness ALW's account of the event suffered from internal discrepancies,[475] and was mainly inconsistent with her evidence given in the Gatera case in Rwanda.[476] In that case, ALW testified

[474] T. 26 August 2005, p. 3.
[475] For instance, Witness ALW evidence was inconsistent on whether the five Tutsi patients hit by André Rwamakuba were actually killed by him, whether she saw that he killed them or blood on Rwamakuba's axe (T. 29 August 2005, p.17; T. 30 about the killing of Mutabazi and Kazasumaho. She said that Doctor Gatera, who was with soldiers, stabbed them with bayonets and beat them with a small club saying that their time had come. The soldiers then took them beside the medicine intern block in order to kill them. Rwamakuba is not mentioned as being present or participating. Before this Chamber, the witness explained that she did not mention Rwamakuba during the Gatera trial because she did not know where he was and because she was only asked about Gatera's participation.[477] She further asserted that her account was consistent because Rwamakuba was with Gatera and that they acted together.[478] In the present case, the witness did not mention Gatera's presence when Rwamakuba allegedly attacked Mutabazi and Kazasumaho, although she specifically testified that Gatera was with Rwamakuba when the latter was removing drips from Tutsi patients. Witness ALW's explanation of these contradictory accounts of the same event is not convincing. Evidence about the abduction of these two men, their female relative and a fourth man was given by Defence Witnesses 9/17 and 9/29, who are also Tutsi survivors and were present at Butare University Hospital in April 1994. Witness 9/17 explicitly denied any involvement of Rwamakuba in the attacks of Mutabazi and Kazasumaho,[479] and Witness 9/29 provided a complete description of the event with no mention of Rwamakuba's involvement at all.[480] The Chamber also notes that Witness ALW's evidence in this trial on when and how she left the Hospital differs from her testimony in the Gatera trial.[481] In the Chamber's view, the internal discrepancies in ALW's testimony and inconsistencies with her prior statements and testimonies cannot be explained by the time elapsed or translation discrepancies, and seriously undermine her credibility. ALW's evidence cannot support a conviction against the Accused in the present case.

185. On or about 22 or 23 April 1994, Witness GIO went to Butare University Hospital with her brother who was wounded.[482] The witness testified that two days after her arrival, André Rwamakuba, along with a group of five or six doctors and Interahamwe, was checking identity cards of the patients in the surgical ward, and identified that GIO's brother was Tutsi. Doctor Gatera then killed him by a blow on his head with an axe.[483] According to the witness, another patient was similarly attacked. Then, Rwamakuba, Doctor Gatera and some Interahamwe allegedly put those people they had killed in a pick-up truck that was parked near the maternity ward.[484]

186. Witness GIO gave substantially different accounts of the events at the Hospital both in her prior statements[485] and testimonies before both this Tribunal and Rwandan courts.[486] The core element of her evidence is the attack of her brother which description in court is the opposite of what she said

August 2005, p. 7). Likewise, ALW's account of the attack of two men by Rwamakuba contains contrary information. For instance, the witness said that she knew the two men very well but was not able to give their first name; she also placed the pick-up once opposite to the maternity, and then behind; she said first that she met the two men in the corridor, but also said that at that moment, she was standing close to the tents where the other refugees were.

[481] In court, the witness testified that the refugee's tents at the Hospital were removed towards the end of April, beginning of May, before she left the Hospital. On the contrary, in the Gatera trial, she testified that the tents had already been dismantled upon her arrival at the Hospital. The witness explained that she returned to the Hospital between May and June to find out whether her aunt was still alive and that at that time, she realized that the tents were dismantled. The witness also stated that her aunt was still alive when she left the Hospital, while in the Gatera trial she said that she left the Hospital after her aunt was killed, at the end of May. D. 74) and in the prior joint trial in the case Prosecutor v. Édouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse, Joseph Nzirorera, André Rwamakuba, Case N°ICTR-98-44.

previously. In a statement signed by the witness in 1997, she stated that her brother had been taken away in a pick-up truck and that she never saw him again.[487] There was no mention of an attack with an axe or her brother being killed in her presence. During her testimony in December 2003 in the prior joint case involving André Rwamakuba and three other Accused, she added that Doctor Gatera put her brother in a pick-up truck. She testified that she never saw her brother being killed by an axe and that she never said that Doctor Gatera killed her brother.[488] In a statement taken in 1998, by Rwandan authorities, prior to her first testimony before this Tribunal,[489] Witness GIO gave a third different account of this event: Rwamakuba was not present, and Doctor Gatera, who was inspecting the wounded patients, immediately struck her brother on the head with a small axe saying that he was an Inkotanyi.[490] This version of the facts is again modified a year later in a statement given by the witness in another case in Rwanda: GIO stated that Doctor Gatera ordered a man named "Athanas" to kill her brother, which he did; she fails to mention Rwamakuba's name.[491] These major inconsistencies cannot be explained by the time elapsed or translation discrepancies. It must be noted that, in her will-say statement, GIO directly addressed these inconsistencies.[492] She stated that she could not remember a meeting with the Prosecution's investigators in 1997 or whether the document was read to her, even if she signed it. She even denied her signature on some other documents. In light of the above-mentioned inconsistencies, these explanations are not convincing and, conversely, support the conclusion that Witness GIO lacks credibility as far as her evidence in this case is concerned.

187. Witness HF arrived at Butare University Hospital on 18 April 1994 because her sister had gone there to give birth, and left on 29 April 1994 for the Butare préfecture.[493] After three days, she allegedly saw André Rwamakuba with Doctor Gatera in the maternity ward ordering Tutsi patients to get up and then delivered them to the Interahamwe who took them away in a pick-up truck.[494] She then saw Rwamakuba on the same day in the afternoon, in the surgical ward with Doctors Gatera and Twagirayezu and some Interahamwe. On that occasion, Rwamakuba allegedly hit the head of a Tutsi patient with an axe, woke up another patient and stepped on his neck, and then proceeded to give them to the Interahamwe, who subsequently put them in a pick-up truck.[495] Witness HF saw Rwamakuba for the third time, on the next day, in front of the paediatrics ward while he was selecting people to be taken away in a pick-up truck. The witness however also said that on this third occasion, she saw Rwamakuba in the maternity ward, when he took away the witness' sister. This account was not consistent. HF identified her elder sister, her brother and a nurse as victims of the massacres at the Hospital.

188. During her testimony, Witness HF denied important factual elements that she consistently mentioned in her three prior statements.[496] The different accounts of the events the witness gave in her three successive interviews with the Prosecution and in court are also critical in the assessment of her credibility.[497] In a statement taken in 1997, Witness HF affirmed that she went to the Hospital to "seek refuge"; there is no mention of her sister or brother and she then stated that she did not recall the names of any victim.[498] She stated that she saw André Rwamakuba dressed in banana leaves. In 2001, she declared that she went to the Hospital "to take care of [her] sister […] who was sick"; she also specified that this sister and her brother who had come to seek medication were killed and taken away in a pick-up truck.[499] She again said she saw Rwamakuba dressed in banana leaves and when he passed by, people whispered that he was an Interahamwe leader. In her testimony, she denied all this, along with other matters recorded in those statements. In 2003, she stated that she was at the Hospital helping her "sister who had given birth to a premature baby"; this sister, her baby and her brother were then killed while lying "in their hospital beds".[500] During her testimony, Witness HF provided a fourth account of the same event, saying that, on two different dates, her wounded brother and her sister with her baby were both taken away by the Interahamwe while lying in their beds respectively in the surgical and maternity wards of the Hospital.[501]

I'm saying that we are testifying because we saw Mr. Rwamakuba and Gatera, but I never said Gatera used an axe to kill my brother. [496] Contrary to what she stated in 2001 and 2003 (see Exh, D. 55 and 54), in court she denied that she left the Butare University Hospital on 25 April 1994. As opposed to what she stated in 1997, 2001 and 2003 (see Exh. D. 56, 55 and 54) in court she denied that André Rwamakuba wore banana leaves and that he disembowelled a pregnant women.
[497] Witness HF gave a statement respectively on 11 September 1997, Exh. D. 56 A and B (under seal); on 6 and 8 February 2001, Exh. D. 55 A and B (under seal); and on 12 March 2003, Exh. D. 54 A and B (under seal). The witness also testified during the joint trial in the case the Prosecutor v. Edouard Karemera, Mathieu Ngirumpatse, Joseph Nzirorera and André Rwamakuba (Case N°ICTR-98-44) before the severance of André Rwamakuba in December 2003.

189. The Chamber notes that Witness HF's account of facts also differs from her evidence in Rwandan proceedings. In the Gatera case, the witness stated that she went to the Hospital to take care of her sister who was pregnant, but she gave a different name from the one provided in her statements and testimony in this case.[502] Doctor Gatera came into the ward selected the victims, including her sister and brother, and put them in a pick-up truck. There is no mention of André Rwamakuba being present. In another Rwandan case held in 1997, the witness testified that her sister was shot by a man named Rurangirwa in a specific secteur in Butare préfecture. The name of this sister was exactly the same Christian name as the one of her sister allegedly killed at Butare University Hospital.[503] In this trial, when confronted with the judgement in that case, the witness explained that she had twin sisters with the same Christian name. The Chamber is not convinced by this explanation. In that respect, it is noteworthy that the Rwandan court in the above-mentioned case denied the witness' claim against Rurangirwa for payment of pain and suffering because she could not provide any communal death certificate for the sister and brother who she said were abducted by Rwamakuba.[504] In December 2003, in the first trial in this case, the witness testified that she had never claimed that Rugangirwa had killed her sister and that she had never lodged any compensation claim nor was even aware of any claim being made in relation to her brother and sister.[505]

190. The Chamber is of the view that the above-mentioned inconsistencies in Witness HF's evidence cannot be explained by the time elapsed, translation discrepancies or mistakes in the way the statements were taken by Prosecution investigators. In addition to these major inconsistencies, the Chamber notes that Witness HF's evidence is contradicted by other Prosecution evidence. For example, the witness testified that after she left Butare University Hospital on 29 April 1994, she witnessed a massacre in the Kabakobwa. This evidence is in conflict with the testimony of Prosecution Expert Witness Alison des Forges, who placed the Kabakobwa massacre on 22 April 1994,[506] and also with the Prosecution's allegations in the Indictment against Joseph Kanyabashi, which plead that the Kabakobwa massacre took place on 21 or 22 April 1994.[507] If this massacre took place on 21 or 22 April 1994 and HF was there at that moment, she could not have been at Butare University Hospital to witness the events about which she testified. The Chamber also finds that the demeanour of Witness HF in court is relevant. She was extremely reluctant to answer questions on her prior statements and testimonies. The witness was disinclined to admit having given a statement in the Gatera case and denied that what was read in court was that statement. She even alleged that the document which had been received from the Rwandan authorities was false.[508] There were similar denials in relation to information in the statements taken by Prosecution investigators. In view of these circumstances, the Chamber finds that Witness HF is not credible and her evidence cannot support a conviction against the Accused in the present case.

HF admitted that she was a witness in that case and accepted the Judgement exhibited (T. 13 July 2005, pp. 3 and 8; T. 12 July 2005, p. 66); she however denied her signature on the Procès-Verbal of the Public Hearing dated 17 November 1997 (T. 13 July 2005, p. 15).

191. On 21 April 1994, Witness RJ arrived at Butare University Hospital where she was taken by a priest to receive medical assistance.[509] She testified that she saw André Rwamakuba three times at the Hospital in April 1994: at the tents, when a delegation of doctors, including Rwamakuba and some military inspected identification cards from the patients;[510] when Rwamakuba and Doctor Gatera came to the maternity ward; and when she saw Rwamakuba removing drips from patients in the surgical ward and ordering them to get onto a red pick-up truck. She allegedly saw him assault a man in plaster. She testified that her child was beaten by Doctor Gatera in the presence of Rwamakuba, but she could not remember whether this happened at the first, the second or the third instance when she saw him.[511] She fled from the Hospital and went to the préfecture office, and while she was there, she saw Rwamakuba and heard him say to the préfet that the Tutsi had to be killed.

192. Witness RJ's prior accounts of the events to which she testified were substantially different from her in-court testimony. In a statement taken by the Rwandan authorities in the Gatera case before her statement to the Prosecution in this case, she stated that Doctor Gatera was the person who ordered the soldiers to beat her and other Tutsi;[512] she did not mention André Rwamakuba.[513] Similarly, in a statement taken in June 1998 by the Rwandan authorities in the Kageruka case, Witness RJ failed to mention Rwamakuba in her recollection of the events that took place at the Hospital, and Doctors Gatera and Kageruka are described as the main perpetrators of the attacks. Particularly, she stated that Doctor Kageruka took identity cards of Tutsi patients and tore them up and together with Doctor Gatera, put the Tutsi patients in a vehicle and told them to "look at the world for the last time".[514] In a statement taken a year later in another Rwandan proceeding, Witness RJ presented Doctor Twagirayezu as the main perpetrator of the killings. She declared that Doctor Gatera was also present, but she did not mention Doctor Kageruka and described Rwamakuba as committing the same acts and saying the same words as were previously attributed to Doctor Kageruka in her Kageruka statement of 1998.[515] Witness RJ also made a statement in the Misago case in 1999 where she stated that she did not stay at Butare University Hospital at all because they refused to keep her there; she went then to Butare préfecture.[516] The same year, she also gave an interview published in a report by African Rights, where she described soldiers from the Ecole des Sous-Officiers (ESO) at the centre of the crimes committed at Butare University Hospital; she did not mention Rwamakuba; and she stated that the soldiers threw them out of the Hospital and told them to go to the office of the préfecture.[517]

[515] Statement in Twagirayezu case, 6 May 1999, Exh. D. 138 A, B and C (under seal). André Rwamakuba is described as arriving aboard a vehicle, where Tutsi patients were then put on and taken away. The witness stated that he told them "to look at the world for the last time". In the Kageruka statement, RJ said that her elder sister who had given birth to a boy at the Hospital was put on the vehicle by Dr. Gatera and Kageruka; but in 1999, she stated that her elder sister and her two twins whom she had just given birth, were taken away by Dr. Gatera and Twagirayezu.
[516] Statement in Misago case, 21 April 1994, Exh. D. 145 A, B and C (under seal). Witness RJ stated that when she arrived at Butare University Hospital, they refused to keep her there. She then went to the Butare préfecture.
[517] See Exh. D. 140 (under seal). In court, Witness RJ testified that she fled to a nearby sorghum field and then made her way to the préfecture office; in the African Rights Report, she stated: "the soldiers threw us out of the hospital and told us to go to the office of the prefecture" (emphasis added).

193. These various inconsistencies regarding the same events are not reconcilable and cannot be reasonably explained by the time elapsed or translations discrepancies. The Chamber notes that the witness was particularly reluctant to discuss her prior statements. She eventually denied the content of each of the Rwandan statements and of the African Rights Report, and she claimed that her words were distorted.[518] She even alleged that her signature must have been forged.[519] In view of these circumstances, the Chamber finds that Witness RJ lacks credibility.

194. The Chamber finds that the Prosecution witnesses on the alleged crimes committed by the Accused at Butare University Hospital lack credibility and reliability. This conclusion is supported by the alibi evidence.

(4) Alibi

195. It was also the Defence case that the Accused would not have been able to spend time in Butare to the extent suggested by the Prosecution witnesses because between 18 and 25 April 1994, the period during which André Rwamakuba is alleged to have committed crimes at Butare University Hospital, he was first staying in Gitarama and then, after 20 April 1994, in Gisenyi.[520]

196. The parties agreed and the Chamber accepted that on 12 April 1994, the Accused moved to Gitarama with the convoy of the Interim Government.[521] Prosecution investigator Upendra Baghel also gave evidence that the distance between Gitarama and Butare is approximately 83 kilometres and between Gisenyi and Butare 247 kilometres.[522] The Defence accepted these figures[523] and provided evidence that the Accused was not present at the scene of the crimes.

197. According to Defence Witnesses 1/1, André Rwamakuba was in Gitarama from 12 to 20 April 1994. During that period, the witness saw him each morning, at lunch, and again each evening starting from around 5.00 p.m. Defence Witnesses 1/1 and 9/1 testified to Rwamakuba's presence in Gisenyi from 20 April to 2 May 1994. They each gave an account of his daily activities including attempts to get air tickets for his family to leave Rwanda. Specifically, from 20 to 24 April 1994, they stated that Rwamakuba spent his days and nights at home with his wife and his family. Witness 1/15 also testified that he met with Rwamakuba in Gisenyi between 20 and 22 April 1994 as he assisted the witness to get a new passport and a visa to Zaïre.[524] Copies of that document were tendered into evidence by the Defence.[525]

198. The testimonies of Witnesses 1/1 and 9/1 are corroborated to a certain extent by Witnesses 5/16, 5/7, 9/17, 5/13, 5/15 and 9/29 who testified that they never saw André Rwamakuba at Butare University Hospital during the genocide in April and May 1994. Witnesses 5/16, 5/7, and 5/15 who were employees of Butare University Hospital in April and May 1994, said that they never saw Rwamakuba there and that they never heard any such allegation against him. They testified that they would come to work at the Hospital in the morning and find that people had been abducted and were told that the killings were done by soldiers during the night. Witness 5/13 was at Butare University Hospital in the surgical ward with his relative throughout the time Rwamakuba was alleged to have been there and confirmed that he did not see him. The witness stated that he was familiar with all of the doctors at the Hospital because they greeted each other as neighbours. He also never heard that a Minister was at the Hospital taking part in the genocide, except a woman named Nyiramasuhuko.

199. The Prosecution did not call any direct witness to rebut these testimonies. Only the Expert witness testified that on 19 April 1994, several members of the Government, including André Rwamakuba, went to Butare to publicly remove the Tutsi préfet who had attempted to stop the killings against the Tutsi.[526] A transcript of Prime Minister Kambanda's speech made on that date mentioning the presence of the Minister of Primary and Secondary Education was also admitted into evidence.[527] The Prosecution did not attempt to present a comprehensive chronology of the Accused's presence in Butare, particularly concerning his attendance at the government meeting of 19 April 1994 and then between 21 and 25 April 1994, as asserted by the Prosecution witnesses.

200. The Chamber assessed with particular caution the evidence given by Defence Witnesses 1/1 and 9/1 due to their close relationship with André Rwamakuba, but it should be acknowledged that these witnesses testified with great detail and answered questions on cross-examination in a steady demeanour. In addition, none of Witnesses 5/16, 5/7, 9/17, 5/13, 5/15 and 9/29 knew Rwamakuba personally. They did not appear to have any special interest in defending the Accused and their cross-examination by the Prosecution did not raise any convincing element to show that they were unbelievable or unreliable. In the Chamber's view, their testimonies were consistent and objective enough to levy an additional doubt on the Prosecution's case.

Conclusion on the Alleged Participation of André Rwamakuba to Crimes at Butare University Hospital

201. As discussed above, first, the Prosecution did not adduce evidence on some allegations at Butare University Hospital and adduced evidence inconsistent with some of the allegations in the Indictment.

202. Then, the identity of the person who the Prosecution witnesses saw committing the alleged crimes at Butare University Hospital in April 1994 raised doubt. Apart from Witness XV who claimed to have personally known André Rwamakuba, the identification of the Accused was either based on untested hearsay evidence or on Witness XV's identification. Specifically, Witness XV pointed out Rwamakuba to Witnesses HF and RJ, who in turn identified him to Witness GIO. In that respect, it is remarkable that Witness XV was confusing Rwamakuba with a man named Rekeraho. This confusion was also entertained by Witness GIO. As developed in detail above, Witness XV's evidence contained many inconsistencies that cannot be reasonably explained or reconciled. His personal knowledge and identification of Rwamakuba is therefore unreliable.

203. In addition to these identification issues, the credibility and reliability of the Prosecution witnesses also raised serious concerns. In the Chamber's view, the major inconsistencies between the witnesses' testimonies and their prior statements and testimonies in other cases cannot be explained by the time elapsed, translation discrepancies, the manner in which the prior statements were taken or the impact of trauma inflicted upon the witnesses. They undermine the credibility and reliability of the Prosecution witnesses. In addition, the Prosecution did not satisfactorily rebut the Defence evidence that Rwamakuba did not participate in the killings at Butare University Hospital or that, during the considered period, he was staying in Gitarama and Gisenyi, and could not have been in Butare to the extent suggested by the Prosecution witnesses.

204. The absence of any reliable identification of André Rwamakuba at the time and location of the event, the lack of credibility and reliability of the Prosecution witnesses and the Defence alibi evidence, cumulatively contribute to levy reasonable doubt on the Prosecution's case.

[527] Exh. P. 64.

205. Consequently, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove at all or beyond a reasonable doubt the allegations against the Accused at the Butare University Hospital, as set forth in paragraphs 15 to 16, 23 second and third limbs and 26 second to fourth limbs of the Indictment. The Chamber will now address the other allegations in the Indictment.

II.3. Other Allegations in the Indictment

206. In addition to the charges pertaining to events in Gikomero and Butare events, the Indictment contains allegations regarding André Rwamakuba's political status and related political activities. It alleges that as the Minister of Primary and Secondary Education of the Interim Government of 8 April 1994, he took part in the conception and the implementation of the Government's policies to exterminate the Tutsi throughout Rwanda.[528] It is said that between 27 and 29 April 1994, he was spokesman for the Interim Government.[529] On 17 May 1994, he was allegedly assigned to the Civil Defence Forces (CDF) program with other ministers.[530] This program would have been used to identify, search out and kill the Tutsi population.[531] The Accused is also described as a member of the MDR extremist wing, MDR "Hutu Power", which would have been created on or about 26 July 1993 and which would have had a specific ideology of exterminating the Tutsi.[532] He is alleged to have mobilized the physical and logistical resources of the MDR "Hutu Power", the other parties allied with the Mouvement Révolutionnaire National pour le Développement (MRND) and "Hutu Power", the Interim Government Ministries controlled by those parties and the military to execute a campaign sought to kill or destroy the Tutsi as a group.[533]

207. It is noted that no evidence was adduced concerning what the Accused could or should have done as Minister or what he failed to do. The Prosecution also did not bring any evidence to prove its contentions regarding the structures of the MDR "Hutu Power", André Rwamakuba's alleged authority over local administrative officials, his alleged mobilization of the physical and logistical resources of the other parties that were allied with MRND and "Hutu Power", the Interim Government ministries controlled by these parties and the military to execute the campaign of destruction of the Tutsi throughout Rwanda. No direct evidence was adduced concerning the responsibilities of Rwamakuba with regard to the program of civilian self defence or how he might have used it to kill Tutsi. There was also no evidence that on or about 28 April 1994 he announced on Radio Rwanda that "security had been restored in Butare because the Inyenzi had been suppressed".

208. As discussed under Chapter I, André Rwamakuba was not alleged to be criminally responsible as a member of the Interim Government for failing to denounce the crimes committed against the Tutsi, for not dissociating himself from the Government or for failing to discharge his duties as Minister. In view of the charges against the Accused set forth in the Indictment and according to the clear and consistent notice given by the Prosecution, the above-mentioned allegations pertaining to Rwamakuba's political role and activities are considered as context or background from which inferences concerning his intent, disposition or other required elements of the crimes could be drawn.

209. Since the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt the charges against the Accused pertaining to Gikomero commune and Butare University Hospital as detailed above, the Chamber need not to discuss the allegations and evidence concerning his criminal intent or disposition in relation to these alleged incidents.

Conclusion

210. That genocide against Tutsi and widespread or systematic attacks against a civilian population based on Tutsi ethnic identification occurred in Rwanda between April and July 1994 are notorious facts not subject to reasonable dispute,[534] and nor were they disputed by the Defence in the present case. This Tribunal was established to contribute to the process of reconciliation and to the restoration of peace and security in Rwanda.[535] The Tribunal's contribution in this area is by conducting impartial criminal proceedings where the burden of proving the guilt of an individual accused is on the Prosecution.

211. In the present case, André Rwamakuba was charged with specific acts committed in Gikomero commune and at Butare University Hospital between 6 and 30 April 1994. No charges were brought on the basis of his acts, omissions or duties as Minister of the Interim Government in 1994.

212. The Chamber heard 49 Prosecution and Defence witnesses, 94 Prosecution and 218 Defence exhibits were admitted into evidence over 78 trial days. The Prosecution case was largely circumstantial, and much evidence adduced was of hearsay character. Five of the 18 Prosecution witnesses claimed to have direct knowledge of André Rwamakuba. Two witnesses also gave uncorroborated evidence to support specific allegations in the Indictment. The Defence witnesses were mainly issued from different ranges of the Rwandan society, including victims of the genocide, they had both direct and indirect knowledge of Rwamakuba, and many of them claimed to have been eyewitnesses to events alleged in the Indictment.

213. The parties agreed that that Tutsi people were attacked and massacred in the Gikomero commune in April 1994, including at the Ndatewma Trading Centre, the Gikomero Protestant School, the Gishaka Parish and the Kayanga Health Centre, and at Butare University Hospital. Both the Prosecution and the Defence adduced substantial evidence on these massacres. The Defence, however, denied the Accused's involvement in any of them.

214. After assessing the evidence as a whole, the Chamber found that all of the Prosecution witnesses not to be credible or reliable. Their testimonies were either inconsistent with the Indictment or contained other discrepancies which could not be satisfactorily explained. The absence of any credible or reliable identification of André Rwamakuba at the time and place of the alleged crimes, the lack of credibility or reliability of the Prosecution witnesses, the participation of the Accused in other activities during periods alleged in the Indictment and the Defence alibi evidence, cumulatively raise a reasonable doubt regarding the Prosecution's case.

215. Consequently, in the Chamber's view, the Prosecution has failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that André Rwamakuba participated in sensitization campaigns in Gikomero commune from June 1993 up to and including June 1994; that between 10 and 11 April 1994, Rwamakuba delivered machetes to Muhire's house in Ndatemwa Trading Centre; that around the same period, he delivered machetes to Kamanzi's house in Kayanga Centre; that between 10 and 20 April 1994, at the Gikomero secteur office, he ordered the killings of three Tutsi people and encouraged the beginning of the massacres against Tutsi in the commune; and that between 13 and 15 April 1994, he participated in the massacre at Kayanga Health Centre. The Prosecution also failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused committed criminal acts against Tutsi people between 18 and 25 April 1994 at Butare University Hospital.

216. Before concluding on the verdict, the Chamber will address a particular issue concerning the violation of the rights of the Accused.

Chapter III – Rights of the Accused

217. In a Decision of 12 December 2000,[536] Trial Chamber II, composed of Judges Laïty Kama, presiding, William H. Sekule and Mehmet Güney, considered that the Tribunal had no jurisdiction over André Rwamakuba's conditions of detention by the Namibian authorities between 2 August 1995 and 7 February 1996 since he had not been arrested at the Tribunal's request. That same Chamber found that there was a violation of Rwamakuba's right to legal assistance during the first months of his detention at the UNDF, from 22 October 1998 until 10 March 1999, and that the delay in assigning him duty Counsel further caused a delay in his initial appearance.[537]

218. The Appeals Chamber held that "any violation of the accused's rights entails the provision of an effective remedy pursuant to Article 2 (3) (a) of the [International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights]."[538] The Appeals Chamber has previously ordered or decided the reduction of an accused's sentence where he was found guilty at trial.[539] In the Barayagwiza and Semanza cases, it also decided that "if the [accused] [was] not found guilty, he shall receive financial compensation."[540]

219. In the present case, the Appeals Chamber moreover considered that "it [was] open to [Rwamakuba] to invoke the issue of the alleged violation of his fundamental human rights by the Tribunal in order to seek reparation as the case may be, at the appropriate time".[541]

220. Since a violation of the Accused's right to legal assistance during the first months of his detention was found, André Rwamakuba is at liberty to file an application seeking an appropriate remedy after the time-limit to file an appeal against this Judgement has elapsed. The Prosecution and the Registry are also at liberty to file any related submissions.

Chapter V - Verdict

I. For the foregoing reasons, having considered all the evidence and the arguments of the parties, the Chamber FINDS André Rwamakuba, unanimously:

Count 1: Not Guilty of Genocide

Count 2: Not Guilty of Complicity in Genocide

Count 3: Not Guilty of Crimes against Humanity (Extermination)

Count 4: Not Guilty of Crimes against Humanity (Murder)

Accordingly, André Rwamakuba is ACQUITTED on all counts in the Indictment.

II. Pursuant to Rule 99 (A) of the Rules, the Chamber ORDERS the immediate release of André Rwamakuba from the Tribunal's Detention Facilities and REQUESTS the Registrar to make all necessary arrangements in the implementation of this decision. This order is without prejudice to any further order that may be made by the Chamber pursuant to Rule 99 (B) of the Rules.

III. The Defence is at liberty to file any application seeking appropriate remedy to the violation of his right to legal assistance between 22 October 1998 and 10 March 1999 no later than 23 October 2006; the Prosecution and the Registry to file their respective submissions no later than 30 October 2006; and the Defence to file any reply thereto no later than 6 November 2006. This order is subject to any appeal to be filed within a 30 days time-limit as set out in Rule 108 of the Rules.

Opinion individuelle du Juge Lattanzi

(Original : non spécifié)

1. Je regrette de ne pouvoir partager certains des arguments développés par la majorité des juges de la Chambre dans les paragraphes 21 à 35 du Jugement, à propos des différentes modalités par lesquelles les omissions peuvent engager la responsabilité de leurs auteurs selon les Statuts des deux Tribunaux pénaux internationaux. Je me limiterai ici à souligner seulement quelques arguments plus significatifs que je ne peux partager.

2. Les omissions engagent la responsabilité de leur auteur avant tout conformément aux articles 6 (3), 7 (3) desdits Statuts, où elles sont explicitement considérées pour ce qui concerne la responsabilité du supérieur au regard des agissements de leurs subordonnés. D'une telle forme de responsabilité forme de responsabilité n'est pas question dans la présente Affaire, comme la Chambre bien le souligne[1].

3. Comme il résulte clairement de la jurisprudence des Chambres de première instance[2] et d'appel[3], la responsabilité par omission peut être envisagée aussi selon les articles 6 (1), 7 (1), en particulier
